The King of Portugall beeing in want and greatly troubled in his mind, was at the ſame time ſounded by letters from the Cardinall of Spayne, vppon what conditions he would end that warre, who made anſwer, that if they would giue ouer to him Toro, Zamora, with the Kingdome of Gallicia, and readie money to pay his armie, hee would then with draw his forces, and pretend no more title: But Queene Izabella hauing notice thereof, ſayd, that ſhee would neuer ſuffer the Kingdome which was left by her predeceſſors to bee diſmembred of one poore Towne or Village: yet notwithſtanding if peace might bee bought with money, ſhee would conſent, that the King of Portugal ſhould receiue ſuch a ſumme as ſhould be agreed vppon, and thought fit, by any reaſonable and indifferent Iudges.

Queene Izabellas magnanimity.

The Caſtle of Burgos was at the ſame time in the keeping of Don Iohn of Eſtuniga, who held it for his Vncle the Duke of Arcualo, one of the King of Portugals faction, who did great hurt to the towneſ-men and inhabitants, aſſayling them on the ſudden, ſpoyling, killing, and taking all thoſe priſoners whome hee could lay hands on: D. Lewis of Acugna, Biſhoppe of the ſame Cittie, committed the like diſorders in the Countrey round about: Wherefore the King and Queene ſent thither to the ayde of the oppreſſed, Don Alphonſo of Areillan Earle of Aguilar, Don Pedro Manrique, Don Sancho de Rojas, and Don Stephano of Villacreces, who were followed ſoone after by the King, with great troupes of Biſcains, Guipuſcoans, Alauois, Aſturians, and others. There came vnto him alſo his baſtard-brother Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Duke of Villa-hermoſa: by theſe forces the caſtle was much diſtreſſed, and a Church neere to the ſame was taken, which was called Saint Mary the white, within the which the beſeeged kept their munition, wherein the king placed a companie of ſouldiers, whoſe Captain was Don Iohn of Gamboa, borne at Motrico in the Prouince of Guipuſcoa, the aſſaults continuing, the beſeeged ſent to demaund ayde of the Duke of Arcualo, who wrote to the King of Portugall by Iohn de Sarmiento, who was one of thoſe who had beene driuen out of the Church of Saint Mary the White, aduertizing him, that if that Caſtle, which was the fort of the chiefe

A Cittie of the Kingdome were loſt, he ſhould neuer hope to raigne in Caſtile, therefore it behooued him to come and ſuccour it: when the king of Portugal vnderſtood thus much, he gathered together as great forces as he could conueniently, and marched towards Arcualo, where the Arch-biſhoppe of Tolledo, and the Marquis of Villena did meete him with troupes of choſen ſouldiers, who againe did ſweare vnto him, not to acknowledge any other King in Caſtile but himſelfe. Queene Izabella was at the ſame time newly come to Vailliodolit out of Leon, where ſhee had diſplaced the Captaine of the towers of the ſame cittie, whome ſhe knew to haue intelligence with the Portugois, and placed an other in his roome; and hearing of King Alphonſo's comming to Arcualo,
B and that the aboue-named Lords were ioyned with him, ſhee ſpeedily ſent Don Iohn de Silua, Earle of Ciſuentes to Olmedo, and Don Guttiere of Cardegna to Medina del Campo, to the end to hinder the enemies from enterpriſing vpon thoſe places, and to wearie them.

The Earle of Ciſuentes, who was young, hotte, and deſirous to winne honour, would (contrarie to the aduice of the elder, and more experienced Captaines) needes runne to Arcualo, and there to lay an ambuſh for the enemie, but hee was diſcouered, and the enemie came foorth vppon him with greater forces, ſo as hee was conſtrayned with great diſhonour to returne backe to Olmedo, beeing defeated and aſhamed. After this victory The Earle of Ciſuentes defeated by the Portugois.
C the King of Portugall, the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo, the Marquis of Villena and other Lords marched towards Pegnafiel, a towne belonging to the Earle of Vregna, where they remayned, expecting ſome other companies which were to be ioyned to their army.

Vppon this occaſion Queene Izabella came to Palença, with the Cardinall of Spaine, the Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, and others, from whence ſhee ſent the Earle of Benauent with certaine men at armes, who lodged in Baltanas, a towne neere to Pegnafiel, and from thence made continuall roades, cutting off thoſe which carried victuals to the Portugals campe, who were greatly diſtreſſed thereby, wherefore the King of Portugall ſent to aſſayle the ſame place, where the Portugals fought ſo furiouſly, as notwithſtanding the great reſiſtance which the Earle and his ſouldiers made, they entred and tooke The Earle of Benauent taken priſoner.
D it, and brought away the Earle of Benauent priſoner, beeing wounded, to the campe lying at Pegnafiel, with diuers other braue Knights.

Theſe two ouerthrowes of the Earles of Ciſuentes and Benauent, did greatly trouble the Queen, who was aduiſed for the beſt to go to Burgos to the king her husband, where the caſtle ſtill held out, and made wonderfull reſiſtance. The king of Portugall in the meane time made no haſt to ſuccour it: for he was inferiour in forces to the armie of the Kings his aduerſaries, and withall hee greatly feared, that the cittie of Zamora ſtood not firme for his ſeruice, therefore hee choſe the ſafeſt way, which was to returne to Arcualo, with purpoſe to put greater garriſons into Zamora and Toro. Donna Leonora Pimentell Dutcheſſe of Arcualo, who was ſiſter to the Earle of Benauent, and a Ladie of great woorth, obtayned her brothers libertie of King Alphonſo, agreeing vppon his ranſome,
E and promiſed that he ſhould no more ſerue the King and Queene in thoſe warres: for aſſurance whereof, he gaue the townes of Portillo, Villalua and Majorga in pawne: and albeit the king promiſed great honours and rewards to the Earle of Benauent, to the end to draw him to his ſeruice, yet he would neuer conſent thereto, but in regard of this miſhap, he remayned as neuter.

The yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, ſeuenty ſixe, thoſe of Ocagna beeing kept An. 1476.
ſhort by the Garriſons of the Marquis of Villena, and tyred with their oppreſſions, returned to the ſeruice of the King and Queene, beeing ayded and fauoured by the Earle of Ciſuentes, and by Don Iohn de Ribera, who came thither with great troupes of ſouldiers: Queene Izabella gaue the gouernement of that place to the Earle of Paredes, enemie and competitor to the Marquis, who beeing by little and little diſpoſſeſt of what hee
F held, did greatly complaine thereof to the king of Portugall, ſaying, that he had ſuſtained thoſe loſſes by beeing in his ſeruice, and he did requeſt him to paſſe on with his forces to Madrid, aſſuring him that by the aſſiſtance of the Archb. of Toledo, the Maſter of Calatraua, and with the forces of the ſame kingdome of Toledo, which took his part, not onely in a ſhort time to recouer what was taken from him, but that his affaires would proſper A the better.

The King of Portugall hauing had therevpon the aduiſe of the Lords, and Captaines, of his army, was aduiſed not to leaue the hilly country on that ſide of Burgos: for whoſoeuer was poſſeſſed thereof, might boldly terme himſelfe Maiſter of Caſtill and Leon: and withall, if he ſhould ſeeme to march towards Toledo, the enemy would ſay, that he did run away from them: wherefore he entertayned the Marquis, with promiſe to aide him in all he could, and more-ouer to recompence him with great guifts, and honours, prouided that hee would take ſome good order for his affaires, and in ſome ſort prouide for the preſent danger.

The Marquis of Villena beginneth to incline to King Ferdinand & Queene Iſabel's ſide.

From that time, the Marquis, who felt his loſſes, and ſaw no hope of riſing B againe, began to thinke vpon fit meanes to returne to the King and Queenes ſeruice: At the ſame time, the Citty of Zamora did ſeeke ſome fit occaſion to rebell againſt the King of Portugal, whereof hee ſtood in ſome doubt, and vſed ſuch dilligence, for the diſcouery of their practizes, as hee had notice of a plot, which they had layd, for the which he cauſed foure of the chiefeſt Cittizens to be put to death. Yet notwithſtanding, Francis de valdez, Captaine of the bridge of Zamora, beeing ſolicited by Queene Izabell, did promiſe to deliuer that forte into her hand, and withall to giue her entry into the Citty, but that it behooued King Ferdinand to bee preſent in perſon at ſoe great an enterpriſe. C

The King was not ſlacke at ſuch an occaſion, but leauing his brother Don Alphonſo of Arragon, and the Conſtable at the ſiege of the Caſtle of Burgos, hee came thither in a diſguiſed habit, beeing accompanied with three horſſe-men, by the way of Valiodolit, cauſing it to be giuen out, that he was ſicke, and kept his chamber. Although this enterpriſe ſeemed to be kept cloſe, yet the King of Portugall had notice thereof, and did meane to put a new ſupply, of ſuch as he durſt truſt, into the bridge, vnder collour of ſending certaine ſoldiers forth in the night a boot haling: but the Captaine would not ſuffer them to paſſe, bidding them come in the day time, ſaying that the night is euer dangerous to ſtrong places, and paſſages of importance, as this was. The day following the King attempted the like, and finding the like reſiſtance, would by force haue taken D the paſſage, but thoſe of the guarde of the bridge did valiantly defend it, and did kill and hurt diuers Portugois: wherefore, King Alphonſo, by the Arch Biſhoppe of Toledoes councell, withdrew his forces from the fight, and hee with Donna Ioane, his bethrothed wife, left the Citty about midnight, ſuſpecting ſome treaſon, in regard that the bridge alone made ſuch reſiſtance, he being there in perſon.

The King of Portugall forſaketh the citty of Zamora.

The inhabitants at the ſame inſtant brought in Don Aluaro de Mendoza by an other gate, who tooke and ſpoyled the Portugois, which were left, excepting a few, who ſaued themſelues in the Cathedrall Church, who on the morrow after by breake of day yeelded themſelues, King Fernand, the Admirall, the Duke of Alua, and other Lords beeing there arriued. Theſe ſoldiers were ſent away without paying any ranſome, E and carried their baggage away with them to Toro, where their King remayned, who to encourage his people, ſayd, that the victory of a warre did not conſiſt in the gayne, or loſſe of a few townes, or Citties, but in the iſſue of a battaill, the which alone would decide the quarrell, about the ſucceſſion of Caſtile and Leon: for the which purpoſe hee did write to Prince Iohn his Sonne, to make as great a leuy of ſoldiers in his Kingdome as poſſibly he could, and with all ſpeed to bring them to his aide. King Fredinand beeing maiſter of Zamora, beganne to better the Caſtle, and cauſed the traytors to bee arraigned, and condemned, confiſcating the goods of Iohn de Porras, and others.

Whileſt theſe matters were handled at Zamora, Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Duke F of Villahermoſa, and the other Captaynes who beſeeged the Caſtle of Burgos, did continually batter it, and gaue it many daungerous and rude aſſaults, but they that were within it wanted no courage to defend themſelues. And as the ſentinells and thoſe of the garde, were reuiling one another, an Alcayde, or Sheriffe of Burgos, did

A called Alphonſo de las Cuenas, beganne to talke to thoſe of the Caſtle, and vſed ſuch perſwaſiue reaſons and arguments, as they were reſolued to hearken to ſome compoſition, eſpecially when they did ſee a great quarter of their wall beaten downe, by meanes whereof they lay open to their enemies aſſaults: therefore beeing ſollicited, they did capitulate about the yeelding of the caſtle, vppon condition, that all faults paſt ſhould be forgiuen, the which was granted by the Queene, who for that regard came from Vailliodolit to Burgos, and did receiue the Caſtle her owne ſelfe, whereof ſhee made Diego de Ribera Gouernour, who had beene tutor and bringer vppe of her brother the Prince Don Alphonſo: and hauing appoynted that which was requiſite for the peace and quiet B of the Cittie, ſhee returned to Vailliodolit, and from thence went to Tordeſillas, to the end to be neerer to the enemie, the better to haue an eye to his enterpriſes and proceedings. The Caſtle of Burgos yeelded.

Thither Don Pedro of Eſtuniga, eldeſt ſonne to the Duke of Areualo, did come to the Queene, whoſe part hee had ſtill taken, and had ſhewed himſelfe faithfull vnto her, in regard whereof he was vnkindly vſed by his father, and by Donna Leonora Pimentel his mother-in-law. He beſought the Queene to receiue the Duke his father into grace and fauour, promiſing to put all that hee did poſſeſſe into her hands, making an apologie, and excuſing the faults which hee had committed by reaſon of his decrepit age, beeing wholly poſſeſſed and ruled by his ſecond wife. It did greatly diſpleaſe the Queene to par-C don him, who had ſhewed himſelfe ſo mortall and hatefull an enemie to the King her husband, neuertheleſſe, for the ſonnes ſake ſhee did pardon the father, and the whole family. The title of the Dutchie was tranſpoſed from Areualo to the Cittie of Plaiſance, and euer afterward the Lords of the houſe of Eſtuniga became affectionate ſeruants to the King and Queene.

The warres continuing after this ſort in Caſtile, the French King inclining to the demaunds and perſwations of the King of Portugall, and bearing no great good will to the houſe of Arragon euer ſince the warre of Perpignan, ſent a great armie into the Prouince of Guipuſcoa, vnder the conduct and commaund of Aman Lord of Abrit or Albret, whoſe poſteritie hath raigned in Nauarre, as ſhall hereafter be declared. Diuers D Gentlemen and braue ſouldiers of the countrie of Guipuſcoa, vppon the report of the comming of this armie, did ſhutte themſelues vp in Fontaraby, others went to Irun, by which place the French-men were of neceſſitie to paſſe, who did burne Irun, and ſlue certaine men: there they went vp and downe for the ſpace of ſixe weekes ſpoyling the countrie, not once attempting or offering to beſeege Fontarabie, which was their chiefe deſſeigne. 6 Alliance betwixt France and Caſtile.

In the meane time Iohn Lopes de Laſcano, and Sancho del campo, entred the towne, being ſent from the Court with about fiftie horſe, at whoſe comming, the ſouldiers which were within the towne, made a ſalley, and came foorth vnto the very limittes of Irun, where they found about a thouſand French-foote of the fore-ward of their armie with E their Captaine Purguet of Bayonne, who beeing aſſayled and ſet vppon on the ſodaine, through want of good and prouident watch, and hauing no faithfull diſcouerers, were eaſily ouerthrowne, and put to a diſordered flight: ſome of them, in this confuſion, thinking to ſaue themſelues in a Tower of a mannor-houſe belonging to thoſe of Vrdaniuia, they were there beſeeged, and burnt with Purguet their Captaine, the Maſter of the ſame houſe being the firſt man that ſet fire thereunto. The poore diſtreſſed ſouldiers, to auoyde and eſcape the implacable torments of the mercileſſe fire, leaped out of the tower windowes in moſt deſperate manner, and were with ſcoffes and mockes receiued vppon the enemies pikes. The Spaniſh Authours ſay, that three hundred were there ſlayne and pittifully maſſacred, beſides diuers others that were captiuated and taken pri-F ſoners. Purguet a French Captaine defeated.

Soone after Don Diego Lopes de Sarmiento, Earle of Salinas, Captaine generall for the King and Queene, came into the Prouince with certaine troupes of horſe, bringing letters to the worthie perſons and chiefe Magiſtrates of Queene Izabella's country, who, with perſwaſiue admonitions exhorted the Guipuſcoans, to ſtand and continue faithfull to their Princes, for which they were renowned aboue all other Prouinces of Spaine. A

An. 1476. Now vppon the eighth day of Aprill this yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, ſeuenty ſixe, beeing Saint Denis day, the towne of Fontarabie was beſeeged by the French, where no matter of woorth was performed, ſauing ſome few light skirmiſhes with loſſe of men on either ſide, for the ſpace of fiue dayes onely, whileſt the ſeege continued: for they eaſily found, that in regard of the ſtrength of the place, it was to no purpoſe for them to tarrie there: yet the Lord of Albret did not intend to depart out of the countrie, without leauing ſome worthie markes behind him, and perceyuing his owne armie to be mighty, and that the King and Queene of Caſtile, by reaſon of their warres with the King of Portugall, and their owne ſubiects, could not readily ſend an armie againſt him, hee there- B

The French do waſt Guipuſcoa. fore determined to forrage and ſpoyle the countrey with fire and ſword: then hee entred into the valley of Ojarçun, two leagues from Fontarabie, where hee burned the pariſh Church, with fiftie men, who had with-drawne themſelues into the ſteeple: they likewiſe burned and deſtroyed diuers houſes in the ſame valley, and notwithſtanding that the Earle of Salinas endeauoured to defend the towne of Renterie, yet the French-men tooke and burned it, and ſlue fifteene men there, taking the Lord of Leſcan his ſon, and Martin Peres of Alcega priſoners.

The Earle of Salinas beeing not ſtrong enough to hinder thoſe ruines and ſpoyles, and hauing regard to his owne ſafetie, and beeing to looke to many other places, reti- C

Fontaraby beſeeged. red himſelfe in ſafetie to Saint Sebaſtians. The French-men returned the ſecond time to the ſeege of Fontarabie, where they beganne a ſharpe batterie. In the ſame cittie remayned at that time Don Iohn of Gamboa with a thouſand ſouldiers, who was a valiant man, and borne in the Cittie of Motrico in the ſame Prouince, vppon whome King Iohn of Arragon had beſtowed many fauours in recompence of his many yeares faithfull ſeruice, and had alſo ennobled him in Arragon, and made him of his priuie Councell, permitting him to beare in a quarter of his owne ſhield of Armes, thoſe of the kingdomes of Arragon and Sicill, for a noate or marke of his valour and proweſſe, and beſides that, had married him to Donna Leonora of Caſtro, giuing him meanes to maintaine his eſtate honorably, whereunto, his ſonne King Fernand, and Queene Izabella D haue added more honours, making him of their priuie Councell, and great Maſter of their horſe.

The beſeegers as well as they that were beſeeged, did not ſpare the Cannon, which wrought no other effect, but the death of ſome ſixtie perſons in the towne, and a Cap-

The ſeege of Fontaraby rayſed. taine named Fortunato Sarauz, and the number of the aſſaylants which were ſlayne with the Artillerie, was vncertaine: and this ſecond ſeege laſted little longer then the former, for the ſuccours by ſea which came to the towne from Saint Sebaſtians, beeing diſcouered, the French-men rayſed their ſeege, and hauing no hope at all to take it, they had begunne to make a great trench round about the Cittie, which came to none effect. E

In Caſtile King Fernand beſeeged the Caſtle of Zamora (as hath beene before-mentioned) and not beeing able, either by prayers, promiſes, or threatnings to bring the beſeeged to yeeld, he commannded certaine peeces of batterie to bee brought to enforce them thereunto: Whereof the King of Portugall hauing notice, and knowing that King Fernand had not forces ſufficient to maintaine the ſeege of Zamora, and to defend and guard his Artillerie, if it were aſſayled, hee foorth-with made an enterpriſe vppon it, hoping by that meanes, either to take his peeces of batterie by force of armes, or elſe, if the king his aduerſarie ſhould come to defend them, that then the beſeeged ſhould haue ſome time to eaſe and refreſh themſelues. Beeing come foorth to Toro with all his forces for the ſame intent, hee had intelligence that the Artillerie was F ſafely arriued at the Campe: Beeing diſappoynted of his purpoſe, he ſhewed himſelfe in order of battaile readie to fight, and hee ſent to defie king Fernand; who, if hee ſhould refuſe the fight, was aduiſed by him to returne into Arragon with his wife.

The

A The Caſtillian knights, and men at Armes, which were in the king Don Fernands armie, were exceeding glad of this challenge, deſiring nothing more than to come to blowes: the King likewiſe was of the ſame opinion, but the Earle of Alua de Liſta was of another mind, and perſwaded the contrarie, with diuers forcible reaſons: Whereuppon anſwer was made to the King of Portugall, that if hee had a deſire to fight, hee might come and rayſe the ſeege before the caſtle of Zamora, which the King meant not to giue ouer, till hee had taken it, and chaſtiſed the Rebelles. With this anſwer the King of Portugall returned to Toro, where hee expected the ſuccour which his ſonne Prince Iohn was bringing to him.

B In the meane time, Don Aluaro of Mendoza hauing met with the Earle of Pennamaçor, both of them leading certaine bands of ſouldiers, did charge one another, in ſuch ſort, as the Portugals were defeated and put to flight, with great effuſion of their bloud, the Earle beeing taken priſoner. Not long after, the Cardinall of Spaine came to king Fernands campe, bringing with him great ſupplies from the Queene his wife, to the end he might be able to giue the King of Portugall battaile, without diſcontinuing his ſeege at the Caſtle of Zamora, as alſo to animate and encourage the Kings ſouldiers who had heard the challenge. There came likewiſe from Gallicia, the troupes of horſe and foote, which the Earle of Lemos, and Don Pero Aluares Oſorio, Lord of Cabrera did ſend to the King and Queene, with thoſe of the Earle of Montroy, all of them beeing brauely C armed, and choice ſouldiers. The Portugals defeated.

King Fernands armie beeing ſtrengthened by this ſupply, hee left ſufficient forces before the Caſtle of Zamora, and marched towards Toro, where ſtaying within halfe a mile of the Cittie, in order readie to fight, hee ſent to the King of Portugall, who lay in the Towne, to preſent him battaile, offering him the like brauado, which not long before he had receyued from him at Zamora: but his expected forces out of Portugall being not yet arriued, hee refuſed it, and there was nothing performed, but a few light skirmiſhes, ſo as King Fernand brought backe his armie to Zamora. Not long after, the Prince Don Iohn arriued at Toro, bringing with him twenty thouſand fighting men, to the exceeding great ioy of the king his father, who did hide from him the Duke of Are- D ualo's reuolt, and did write to the Duke, and aduertiſed him of the mighty ayde, which the Prince his ſonne had brought him, exhorting him to come in perſon to the campe, and to bring his forces with him, or elſe to ſend them thither with all ſpeede. The Duke made him a free and plaine anſwer what hee meant to doe, and complayned of ſundrie of the kings negligences, by meanes whereof hee had loſt the caſtle of Burgos, and let ſlippe diuers fitt occaſions. King Alphonſo did in like manner ſollicite the Marquis of Villena and others, who excuſed themſelues, in regard they were to reſiſt their owne and his enemies: ſo as there remayned no more Lords of Spayne in his army, but the Archbiſhop of Toledo onely. The King of Portugal forſaken.

Theſe Portugall forces beeing ioyned together, made vp the maſſe of a great armie: E the king left the duke of Guimaranes within Toro, and marched towards Zamora, on the other ſide oppoſite to the Caſtle, the riuer beeing betwixt them, and hauing planted his campe round about the bridge, hee did thereby hinder all men from comming foorth of the cittie on that ſide. The placing of the campe ſeemed ſtrange to king Fernand, for the Portugals could no way from thence helpe thoſe of the Caſtle, nor yet hinder his armie, much leſſe could they come to battaile: and it ſeemed, that he did rather ſeeke vainly to be accounted bold and valiant by lodging ſo neere his enemie, than to perform any worthie act, as it appeared by that which hee did write to the French king, the Pope, and to diuers other Princes, as alſo by that which hee publiſhed throughout all Spaine. Queene Izabella ſent the Duke of Villa-hermoſa her brother-in-law, and the Conſtable F with two thouſand horſe to Fuente del Sabuco, and to Alaheyos, to keepe and cutte off the enemies campe from victualles, and to diſtreſſe it. In the meane time there wanted no mediatours for peace betwixt both the kings, but it was in vaine, and to no purpoſe. The King of Portugals vanity.

The Portugall armie hauing for the ſpace of fifteene dayes beene abroade in the fields in the dead time of cold winter, the king Alphonſo determined to returne to Toro. And to

to the end he might do it ſafely, he ſent Don Aluaro of Portugall, ſonne to the Duke of Bragança, and the Licentiate Anthonie Nugnes of Cité Roderigo to the King of Caſtile, to treate of a peace vppon certaine conditions, which beeing refuſed them, they had in charge to demaund a truce for a few dayes, thereby to bring matters to a finall agreement. A

This was but a pollicie to auoyd battaile, and to be able to bring his armie in ſafetie backe to Toro: There were ſundrie opinions thereuppon, and at the laſt, they were anſwered, that the truce which ſhould be graunted, ſhould bee but ſhort, and if there were nothing concluded betwixt the two Kings, hee of Portugall might bee well aſſured not to bee ſuffered to depart thence with ſo great eaſe, as hee imagined. King Alphonſo hauing vnderſtood this anſwer, beganne to diſlodge ſecretly the ſame night: the next day, the ſcoutes ſeeing the place emptie, aduertized the King, that the enemie was diſlodged, who foorth-with commaunded the Captaines to leade the armie foorth into the field, and to follow them: the preſſe was ſo great at the paſſage of the bridge, and at the going ouer the riuer of Duero, by boate and other-waies, as the ſoldiers could conuenientlie, as a good part of the day was ſpent before the armie could paſſe the riuer, and much time was afterward loſt in ranging the battaile into wings and ſquadrons, which was ordered after this manner: B

King Alphonſo of Portugal diſlodgeth frō before Zamora

They made a ſquadron of the kings Guard, and of the troupes of horſe of Lemos and Salamanca, of the Townes of Olmedo, Valiodolit, Medina del Campo, with others, which was commaunded by the great Maſter Don Henry Henriques. On the right hand of this ſquadron were ſixe battaillions, the firſt was conducted by Don Aluaro of Mendoza, who a little before that time was created Earle of Caſtro Xeris, and Don Guttiere of Cardegnas, and Rodrigo of Vlloa: the ſecond, by the two Alphonſo's of Fonſeca, the one Biſhoppe of Auila, and the other Lord of Coca and Alaexos: the third, by Pedro de Guzman, the fourth, by Bernard Franc, the fifth, by Don Pedro de Velaſco, and the ſixt by Vaſco de Biuar, brother to the Biſhoppe of Salamanca. On the left hand, the Cardinal of Spaine ledde the firſt battalion, the ſecond, the Duke of Alua, the third, the Earle of Alua de Liſta, the fourth, Don Garcia Oſorio, who brought thither the troupes of the Marquis of Aſtorga his Nephew: betwixt theſe two, the foote-men were placed, and in this manner the army marched on vnto the hilles which are betwixt Zamora and Toro, and there it ſtayed. It was thought that the Portugals making ſuch haſt, would bee at Toro before the Spaniſh armie ſhould paſſe theſe hilles: and a Councell beeing called to determine what was beſt to be done, the moſt part were of opinion to turne backe againe, and to content themſelues to haue gained the honour, that the enemies had fled from them: but the Cardinall of Spayne beeing a wiſe man, and of an exceeding great ſpirit, thinking that they did iudge amiſſe of the King of Portugals deſſeignes, intreated the king to ſuffer him to goe to the toppe of thoſe hilles with certaine troupes of horſe, for diſcouerie, who hauing obtayned leaue, and beeing gotten vp to a very high place, hee eſpyed the armie of Portugall in order of battaile, without any trouble or confuſion at all. Returning then to the king, he told him, that the enemies meant nothing leſſe then to flie, and that hee had ſeene them ſtanding in good and martiall order, wayting if any would follow to fight with them: Whereuppon, euery man beeing placed and ranked in his order and ſquadron, the armie, with great courage and reſolution, marched on. C D E

Battel betwixt the Spaniards and Portugois.

The king of Portugall deſcrying the Spaniards marching towards them, cauſed his people foorth-with to make a ſtand, and with great magnanimitie to turne their faces towards them, reſoluing rather to dye fighting, then to retirie with ſhame. Hee was at the ſame time ſtronger in horſe-men than king Ferdinand: wherefore after hee had diuided his ſquadrons, betwixt himſelfe, his ſonne the Prince, the Biſhoppe of Ebora, the Earles of Pharo, Villa-reall, and other Captaines, and encouraged the Knights, and ſouldiers with a large and well-compoſed ſpeech, putting them in mind of the victorie which King Iohn the firſt wonne from the Spaniards at Aljubarotta, he cauſed them to march forward to the fight. F

The chiefe ſtrength and flower of the Portugall Cauallerie lay in the ſquadron of Prince

A Prince Iohn, againſt whom King Fernand cauſed the ſixth battaillion on his right hand to aduance themſelues altogether, albeit that D. Alphonſo de Fonſeca firſt of all, and Don Aluaro de Mendoça Earle of Caſtro after him, had requeſted the honour to bee the firſt that might charge them.

The Portugals which were in that ſquadron ioyned with thoſe whom the Biſhop of Ebora conducted, made ſo braue a reſiſtance, as the Spaniards turned their backes: ſo as at this firſt incounter, the victory ſeemed to be on the King of Portugals ſide, the Spaniards being ſore hurt by the Artillery, and by the Croſſe-bowes of the Portugall footemen. Theſe being retired, the other ſquadrons gaue in vpon the reſidew of the Portugall
B army with better ſucceſſe. Notwithſtanding that the valor of either ſide made the fight doubtfull for three houres ſpace. In the end, the Portugalls not being able to hold out, beganne to giue backe, and were diſordred and put to flight, taking the high-way towards Toro as faſt as they could gallop, but being purſued, there was a great ſlaughter of them, and there died more of them drowned in the riuer, who thought to haue eſcaped by ſwimming, then were ſlaine by the enemies hands. King Alphonſo being not ſuccoured by his ſonne, and perceiuing that reſiſtance, without order, was to no purpoſe, did retire himſelfe to Caſtro Nugno, where hee was receiued by the Gouernor of the ſame place whoſe name was Abendagno de Villa-reall in Alaua, hauing once loſt his royall ſtandard (which neuertheleſſe was recouered againe) thorough the careleſneſſe of Don Pedro de C Velaſco, and Pedro Vaca, who for want of a good guard ſuffred the Portugals to take it from them: he which did beare it was taken, and beeing ſtripped out of his armor, the King and Queene cauſed it to be hanged vp in the Cathedrall Church of Toledo, in the Chappell of the laſt Kings. On King Fernands ſide likewiſe died a great number of ſouldiars, though vncertaine; and the Earle of Alua de Liſta purſuing his enemies ouer eagerly, and beeing not well followed and ſeconded by his people, was taken at the bridge of Toro.

The Prince of Portugall made his retreate towards night vpon a little hill, and as well as hee could did gather together his disbanded troupes, and then retired towardes Toro: and if the Spaniſh captaines had gathered and kept all their forces togither
D they might as eaſily haue defeated all as ſome: but diuerſe of them were buſied in ſtripping the dead bodies, and others in purſuing the runne-awaies, who beeing come to the gates of Toro, the Earle of Guimaranes, who was left there for the guard of the City, fearing that the Spaniards who purſued them, would haue entred pel mel with them, would not open the gates for no intreaty of the Archbiſhop of Toledo, who was the only Spaniſh Lord that was in that battaile, nor yet for the cries & lamentations which the poore hurt ſouldiars did make, vntill ſuch time as the Prince Don Iohn arriued with his troupes, and then they were all let into the City: but they were meruelouſly troubled, when they perceiued that the King was miſſing, but the Earle of Guimaranes beganne to make a moſt pittifull lamention, ſhedding aboundance of teares,
E and tare the haire from his head and beard; and beleeuing for a certaine that hee was either ſlaine or taken, hee did greatly reproach and raile vpon the Portugalls, ſaying, that they were traitors to their King, and that they had baſely and treacherouſly forſaken him.

But the Kings comming ſoone after, and newes from him by letters to the Prince his ſonne in the meane time, did greatly comfort this Earle and all the reſt of the army. It is reported that after the loſſe of the battaile, the King beeing at Caſtro Nugno, fell a ſleepe as hee ſate at meate, where at the Gouernor did greatly wonder, The King of Portugall doth little apprehend the loſſe of the battaile. who in regarde thereof reputed him a careleſſe man, and ſaid, that honourable Knights and ſouldiars did greatly wronge themſelues in aduenturing their liues for ſuch a F King, and yet this gouernour did ſtill ſhew himſelfe faithfull and conſtant in his ſeruice.

Queene Iſabell in the meane time did remayne at Tordſillas, who beeing aduertiſed by the King her husband of his victory, ſhee cauſed generall proceſſions to bee made, giuing thankes to God, after the accuſtomed manner, and ſhee he ſelfe went bare foote to the Abby of Saint Paule, without the towne, and as well there as in other Cities belonging longing to the Queene, great ſignes of ioy were made, The ſeege of the Caſtle of Zamora did ſtill continew after that without any empediment, till Alphonſo de Valence the Captaine thereof, who was ſonne in law to Iohn de Porras, obtained his pardon by the interceſſion of the Cardinall of Spaine his kinſman, and did yeeld it vp. There was found in the Caſtle great ſtore of ſiluer, treaſure, iewells, and other pretious mouables, belonging to the King of Portugall, which by King Ferdinands commandement were al reſtored vnto him, who made Sancho d' Caſtile Captaine of the Caſtle, & after that he had ordayned, and prouided all things requiſite for the ſafety of Zamora, hee came to Medina del Campo, where the Queene met him; This happy ſucceſſe did daunt the courrages of all the Kings, and Queenes enemies, in ſo much as the greateſt part of them, employed all their meanes, credit, and friends, to obtayne their grace and fauour.

The Caſtle of Zamora yeelded. King Ferdinands liberality.

The Conſtable obtayned pardon for the Maiſter of Calatraua, and for the Earle of Vregna his brother, vnto whom the Conſtable gaue one of his daughters in marriage. The Arch-Biſhoppe of Toledo, beeing daily diſpoſſeſſed of the townes, and places belonging to his Arch-Biſhopricke, tooke leaue of the King of Portugall, and withdrew him-ſelfe to Alcala de Henares, beeing accompanied with a gard and conuoy of horſemen, which did greatly hinder the Earle of Treuignoes enterpriſe, who was ſent by the King for to take him.

There remayned in Atiença a Captaine of the King of Portugalls ſide, which did great hurt to the country round about, who with his wife, family, and all his goods, was taken in a night by a Knight named Garcy Brauo, who had entry giuen him by one of the Captaines ſeruants. This prey, amounting to better then tenne thouſand ducats, was giuen by the King, and Queene, to this Knight, who did in like manner take Camarena, for their ſeruice, from which place Iohn de Touar, did commit infinite ſpoyles. The King of Portugall finding that all matters fell out contrary to his deſire, reſolued to returne into Portugall, with an intent to craue aide of the French King: Hee carried Donna Ioane his betroathed wife with him, and left good Garriſons in thoſe townes of Spaine which hee did poſſeſſe, eſpecially in Toro, where Don Franciſco Cotino Earle of Marialua was left for Gouernour, in Iohn de Vlloa his ſteed, who dyed not long before by a ſuddayne accident. Rodrigo of Caſtagneda, brother to the Earle of Ciſuentes, did hold Madrid for the Marquis of Villena, beeing aſſiſted by Iohn Sapata a Cittizen of the towne, and a violent and bitter enemy to all thoſe which tooke the King, and Queenes part, whome by all meanes he chaſed from thence. He was cheefe of that faction. In the number of thoſe that were baniſhed, was Pero Nugnes of Toledo cheefe, like-wiſe of thoſe on the King, and Queenes ſide, who had retyred himſelfe to the Duke of Infantago: this man with others, who were baniſhed from Madrid, hauing conferred with the Queenes people, did thinke to ſurpriſe the towne by intelligence, with ſome within the ſame. Iohn Sapata, at the firſt newes thereof, left the Citty, his owne conſcience accuſing him, and threatning him with death, for his many miſdemeanors: neuertheleſſe the commander Pedro of Ayala, a knight of the order of Saint Iames, being in the Citty, did defend it for a tyme, and then did deliuer it to the Duke. The Caſtle held two months for the Marquis, in which ſpace it was beſeeged by the Duke, ſent thither with certaine companies by the Queene. This ſame yeare, King Ferdinand and Queene Iſabell, (their affaires proſpering) did celebrate and keepe the aſſembly of the eſtates at Madrigall, where Donna Iſabell, there onely daughter, at that time, was ſworne vnto, and acknowledged, after the antient accuſtomed manner of Spaine, Princeſſe of the Aſtiuria's, and eldeſt lawfull heire to the Kingdomes of Caſtile, and Leon, and the dependances thereof, in caſe no male child were borne vnto them. And in regard of the great zeale and affection they did beare to iuſtice, which had greate neede of their aide and aſſiſtance, the whole ſtate of Spaine being ſo diſordered, and full of confuſion, as they which were ſtrongeſt, would without any feare of puniſhment exerciſe infinite kinds of cruelties vpon the weaker ſort, it was decreed, for the preuenting thereof, to renew and authoriſe the brother-hoods, and companies of the communalties. To the prouoſts and iudiciall ſeates whereof, authority ſhould be giuen to giue iudgement in fiue caſes, that is to ſay, for murther, inforced theft, or thoſe which ſhould be hurt in the country or places farre

Donna Iſabell, ſworne heire to the kingdomes of Caſtile.

In what caſes the prouoſts of Caſtle may giue iudgement.

A farre from any dwelling: Secondly, they might iudge the ſelfe ſame crimes committed in the townes, and villages, in caſe the offender ſhould flie away: Thirdly, the breaking open of doores and walles, ſcaling and burning of houſes: Fourthly, the rape and violence offered to women or maides; of what age or condition ſoeuer: And fiftly for rebelling againſt the Miniſters of iuſtice executing their charge: which brother-hoods ſhould haue their prouoſts and iudges in the townes, and their Miniſters in all places of their iuriſdiction, and whereas any controuerſie ſhould ariſe betwixt the ordinary Iudges and thoſe prouoſts vpon the enquiry and knowledge of offences, ſuch differences ſhould be iudged by the Kings Councell.

B Don Lope de Rbas Biſhop of Carthagena was choſen chiefe preſident of all thoſe brotherhoods, and it was decreed that an impoſition ſhould bee laide vpon the people, for the entertainement of the ſouldiars and officers of theſe Iudges, euery twentith houſe to finde one horſeman: ſo as by that meanes a power of two thouſand horſe was leauied, to aſſiſt the Iudges, and to purge and cleanſe the country from theeues and robbers. Of whom, Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Duke of Villahermoſa, the Kings brother, was captaine generall. Theſe things beeing thus ordered, did neuertheleſſe diſpleaſe ſundry of the great Lords of Spaine; but the Conſtable was well pleaſed therewith, who was the firſt that commanded his owne tennants, to contribute towards the payment of theſe companies, whoſe example diuers other great Lords did follow afterward.

C Now the King of Portugall had furniſhed Toro, Cantalapiedra, and Caſtro Nugno with good and ſtrong garriſons, which did greatly moleſt all the country there abouts, eſpecially that of Cantalapiedra where Alphonſo Peres de Biuero was gouernour, who made continuall courſes, vpon the territory of Medina, Salamanca, and other places: which to remedy, King Fernand reſolued to beſeege it, and ſent thither the Duke of Villahermoſa his brother, and Don Pedro Manrique Earle of Treuigno, with Artillery to batter it.

The ſeege being planted, and the Canon playing on either ſide, the beſeeged, who found themſelues ſhut in, demaunded aide of King Alphonſo, who did forrage and ouerrunne the territory of Salamanca, thinking by that meanes both to diuert the army
D from before Cantalapiedra, and to ſuccour the beſeeged, but it fell not out according to his deſſeigne; for the Earle of Treuigno marched againſt the forragers, and did beate them backe, and yet the beſeeged in Cantalapiedra were ſtill as much diſtreſſed as before. It was treated concerning the exchange of priſoners: wherefore the Earle of Benauent was freed from his oth, which hee made, not to beare armes for King Fernand in that warre, and ſo the Earle of Pegnamaçor was deliuered forth of priſon, the ſeege raiſed from before Cantalapiedra and the Licentiate Antonio Nugnes of Ciudad Rodrigo was reſtored to his goods, and the garriſons of that place were not to beare armes for a yeere afterward. The King and Queene gaue to the Earle of Benauent, foure millions of Marauedis, towards the charges hee had beene at, and confirmed his former E guift of the city of Corunna, or the Groine, but the Inhabitants taking armes, did reſiſt him, intending to maintaine themſelues vnder the demaines of the crowne, without acknowledging any ſubalterne Lord, and draue thoſe forth of the caſtle which held it for the Earl. The ſame time, king Fernand was ſent for into Arragon by King Iohn his father, whither he did make a ſhort iourney, & becauſe his wars in Caſtile, but eſpecially in Guipuſcoa, concerned him very nerely, he made a quick returne to victoria: for the Frenchmen remained ſtil in that Prouince burning the country, to driue whom away, the King and Queene raiſed an army of fifty thouſand men, the moſt part of them being footmen, out of the Prouinces of Guipuſcoa, Alaua, Biſcay, Aſturia, and from other places on the confines of Burgos. Vpon the report of this great preparation the French men retired to F Bayonne, with intent and threatning to returne againe the ſpring following.

At the ſame time, the faction of Beaumont and Grammont in the Kingdome of Nauarre, were at as deadly warre as euer, and the quarrell betwixt Don Lewis of Beaumont Earle of Lerin, and Pedro of Peralta the Conſtable, was purſued with all rigour and extremity: the Earle of Lerin beganne to treat with King Fernand to make him King of Nauarre, and to deliuer into his hands the city of Pampelona with with other fortreſſes of the ſame country: ſending certaine Knights of Nauarre vnto him to victoria, to offer him his ſeruice with all that hee did poſſeſſe: the King did curteouſly entertaine thoſe Knightes, & thanked both the Earle and them for their offers, and good will: but concerning the reſt, hee ſaid that hee would not lay claime to anothers right, for the Realme of Nauare did in right belong to his ſiſter the Princeſſe Leonora, and after her deceaſe, to her Sonnes Sonne, Francis Phœbus Earle of Foix and Lord of Bearne, and withall becauſe King Iohn his father did enioy the royall authority thereof, during his life: therefore, to enterpriſe any thing againſt the right of thoſe perſons, vnto whome hee did owe ſo much honour and reſpect, it would not onely be a ſinne, but impiety and ſacriledge, ſo as by no meanes hee would harken therevnto: ſaying moreouer that hee was much greeued, to ſee the inueterate hatred betwixt the Earle and the Conſtable, and that hee would willingly take the paines to make them friends, thinking it an office worthy of him, to procure the peace and quiet of that Kingdome, which was ruined by the confuſions of the ciuill warres, wherefore hee did inuite both of them to come to victoria, and to refere their controuerſies to his arbitrement: with theſe holy ſpeeches hee gaue content, and admiration to the Knights of Nauarre, at whoſe returne the Earle of Lerin, and the Conſtable came to Victoria, where if King Fernand could not wholy reconcile them, yet he procured a truce betwixt them, puting each of them in mind with great meekeneſſe mixed with grauity of their errors with the amendement thereof, to the good of the Kingdome, their own particular proffit and for the ſeruice of King Iohn their maiſter.

Nauarre. Lewis of Beaumont couets the Realme of Nauarre.

King Ferdinand mediates a peace betwixt the factions of Beaumont and Gramont.

The King of Arragon afterwards, perceiuing him-ſelfe at the graues brinke, and deſiring to leaue quietneſſe in that miſerable kingdome, where the factions had bred ſuch confuſions, as neither the feare of God, nor the reſpect of iuſtice, nor the loue of honeſty was able to containe men from executing all kinds of miſcheefes, murthers, ſacrileges, robberies, burnings, and horrible deſolations ouer the whole country, which were followed with the terrible, and fearefull iudgements of God, as plagues, famines, and other ſcourges of his wrath, all which were not onely encreaſed, but procured by the Kings ſecond marriage: King Iohn I ſay beeing mooued with theſe things, ſent the Earle of Lerin ſuch aſſurances, as hee cauſed him to to come to Saragoſſa, being well accompanied, where the King did gently receaue him, graunted him peace, and gaue a generall pardon to all offences paſt, proceeding from both factions, and for a greater confirmation of the whole, he gaue the Earle a baſtard daughter of his in marriage, called Donna Leonora of Arragon; by theſe meanes the Princeſſe Leonora, widdow to the Earle of Foix, and future Queene of Nauarre, recouered without force her townes and fortreſſes, and was euery where obeyed, except in the Citty of Caſeda, which was battered, at the taking whereof dyed that Valiant Captaine Sancho of Eruiti, ſurnamed the obſtinate in the ſeruice of the Princeſſe Leonora; about which time Alphonſo Carillo Biſhop of Pampelona called a Sinode at Eſtella, wherein they treated of ceremonies and other matters. After all theſe things, King Iohn beeing at reſt and quiet, in the Citty of Barcelona, notwithſtanding hee was very aged, and full of ſickneſſe, fell in loue with a yong Gentlewoman called Francina Roſa, with whoſe beauty and comlineſſe hee did comfort by imbraces, and fruteleſſe kiſſes, the waywardneſſe of his old age, leauing her concerning other matters free, and vntouched to him who after-ward married her.

King Iohns ſecond marriage ominous to the realme of Nauarre.

The Earle of Lerin marrieth a baſtard daughter of Arragon and becomes obedient to King Iohn.

King Fernand hauing (as hath beene already ſaide) made the pacification of Nauarre at Victoria, and by the renowne of his power, deliuered the country of Guipuſcoa from the French army, would in like manner order the affaires, of Alua, Biſcaie, and other places neere adioyning, where were many factions, and other diſorders: hee therefore entred Bicay, beeing attended on by Don Alphonſo Carillo Biſhoppe of Pampelona, Pedro Lopes de Padilla, great gouernor of the Frontiers of Caſtile, Don Henry Henriques, the Kings Vncle, brother to the Admirall, Don Pedro de Eſtuniga eldeſt Sonne to the Earle of Miranda, Doctor Iohn Dias de Alcocer one of the Kings Councell, Roderigo Vlloa his great Treſorer and Councellour, Don Diego de Acugna

John King of Arragon falls in loue in his extreme old age.

A Acugna ſonne to the Biſhop of Burgos, Don Fernand de Ayala ſonne to the Marſhall Don Garcia de Ayala, and by other Knights and Eccleſiaſticall perſons.

The Biſcains had an ancient cuſtome, which was, not to ſuffer any Biſhop to come within their country, by reaſon perhaps of the attempts and wrongs which they had in time before ſuſteined by the prelats and Churchmen, the which was vnknowne to King Fernand, who riding on with the Biſhop, hee was aduertized of their cuſtome, and was conſtrained to ſend him backe; the peaſants and poore country people thinking the ground to bee infected wherevpon this Prelat and his Mule did tread were buſied many daies after in ſcraping together the duſt of the high-waies, which they laide vp B in heapes, and threw it afterwards with curſes and imprecations into the ſea, the which certainely was not done without ſome miſtery, thoſe people not beeing voide of religion, but ſuperſtitiouſly deuout, as the reſt of the Spaniards are. The King viſited Bilboa, and afterward hee came to Guernica, where hee was receiued and reuerenced with all ceremonious duty. Hee called the Nobility of the country thither, and confirmed all their priuiledges by his letters patents, written by Gaſpar Arin his ſecretary, dated the thirtith day of Iuly, the yeere 1476. in the preſence of diuers Nobſe perſonages of name. 10

Biſhops excluded out of the Country of Biſcay.

Strange opinions of the Biſcaines concerning Biſhops.

The King beeing buſied about theſe matters, a famous French Pirate named Colora, came with foure veſſels to a place called the figge-tree of Fontarabie, to whom af- C ter that, fiue more ioyned: theſe nine ſhippes did ride there at an ankor for the ſpace of eleuen daies, in the view of the towne of Fontarabie, and ſundry times they landed their ſouldiars, who ranne vp and downe the country burning and ſpoyling all they met with; againſt whom the Garriſon went forth, and ſlew more then a hundred of them; wherevpon they ſet ſaile towards Galicia, where they burned the ſuburbes of the City of Ribadeo, then ſayling along the coaſt of Portugall, they met with certaine Carrakes of Genoa, with whom they grapled, and the fight betwixt them was ſo furious, as ſeuen veſſells were there burned, to weet two Genoueſes and fiue of the Pirates, who with the other foure, which remained were repared at Lisbone. The report of this Pirate, cauſed thirty ſhips of warre to bee ſet forth, as well from Saint Se- D baſtians as from other places on the coaſt of Biſcay, who met altogether at Laredo, and this ſea-army parted from Conſerua, and ſailed towards Galicia, where they tooke, partly by force, and partly by compoſition, certaine places vpon the ſea coaſt next to Portugall, which were reuolted from the Kings of Caſtile. Herevpon truce was granted and agreed vpon betwixt the French men and Guipuſcoans, by land onely, for the ſpace of three monthes, leauing the ſea free for euery man to doe the beſt hee could: the army aboue mentioned hauing done that exploite on the marches of Galicia, returned laden with ſpoiles. 11

Combate at ſeaie betwixt the Frenchmen & Genoueſes.

Amongſt other things, thoſe of Saint Sebaſtian brought away two yron peeces of ordonance, whereof one did carry a ſtone-bullet of a hundred and threeſcore pound E waight, taken from Bayon de Minio. The charges of this warre of Guipuſcoa, was heauy to the whole Prouince with great diſcommodity and loſſe of their bloud: which warre, after the retreat of the French, did continue ſtill at ſea, where the French loſt more then they did winne. King Fernand hauing diſcharged, honored, and praiſed the ſouldiars, and puniſhed certaine euill liuers in that country, and ouerthrowne certaine ſtrong houſes, he returned to Victoria.

The Cardinall of Spaine, in the meane time, who was a very wiſe and pollitike man, did trie by all meanes to draw away the French King from the alliance with Portugall, and to make him friend to his King: hee had in former time written ſundry letters vnto him to that purpoſe, and now hee continued it, ſending Alphonſo Ianes, treaſurer of F the Church of Siguença vnto him, to put him in minde of the inuiolable Friendſhip which had beene in times paſt betwixt the houſes of France and Caſtile, whoſe forces had beene ſo well vnited togither to the preiudice of the Engliſh, ancient enemies and competitors of the crowne of France: whereas the Portugalls on the contrary had alwaies fauoured, and followed them to the great hinderance and contempt of the French Nation, and then hee beſought him to conſider what occaſion hee had to bandy

The Cardinall of Spaine, ſeeks to renew the peace betwixt France and Spaine.

bandy againſt the King of Caſtile for Portugall, requeſting him henceforward to giue A place to that which reaſon, humanity and profit, did require, which was to cauſe the warre to ceaſe, and re-eſtabliſh the holy friendſhip and league betwixt France and Caſtile. This Treaſorer made diuerſe voyages into France for this purpoſe, and handled the matter ſo well, as hee obtained truce for a yeere, and there was a place appointed betwixt Bayon and Fontaraby for the two Kings Commiſſioners for to meet at.

About this time the Earle of Paredes, who called himſelfe Maiſter of Saint Iames, did beſeege Vcles, where hee found ſharpe reſiſtance, and doing his vttermoſt to take it, the captaine, who held it for the Marquis of Villena, certified his Maiſter what need B hee had of helpe: the Marquis beeing then at Alcara de Henares with the Archbiſhop of Toledo, brought him and as much power as they could raiſe betwixt them to Vcles, which were about three thouſand horſe. Yet notwithſtanding the Earle made no ſhew that hee ment to diſlodge, but againſt the opinion of all men hee maintained the ſeege, and hee had moreouer the courage to goe and affront the troupes of the Marquis and Archbiſhop, keeping them a whole day in alarumm, aking ſundrie charges with aduantage: at the laſt, with the loſſe of ſome of his owne people he inforced them to returne, not being able to driue him from the Caſtle, where ſoone after arriued men at armes to his ſuccor, who were ſent by the Duke of Infantaſgo, and conducted by Don Hurtado de Mendoza his brother, with the which forces, ioyned to ſome of his owne, hee C followed the Marquis and the Archbiſhop with great hope to haue defeated them if they would haue accepted the fight, but they wanted courage, albeit they were within a bow ſhot of them; but the Archbiſhop and the Marquis retired themſelues about mid-night to a caſtle called Arauia, deſpairing euer to ſuccor Vcles: which the beſeeged perceiuing, yeelded themſelues with ſafety of liues and goods.

Warre of Vcles againſt the Marquis of Villena.

12 Portugal.

As theſe men did thus trouble themſelues in Spaine, the King of Portugall beeing vexed, that his affaires ſucceeded ſo vnluckily, where as he was wont to triumph and bee victorious in Affrica, would once againe ſollicite King Lewis, and determined to goe in perſon into France: Hee therefore imbarked himſelfe, and hauing paſſed the Streights, hee came to Marſeilles, from whence hee went to the King who lay at Tours D of whom hee was kindly entertained: but concerning the affaires for which hee came, hee gaue him no hope at all, but delaied him from day to day, excuſing himſelfe by the great warres which hee had againſt the Engliſh and the Duke of Bourgondy, enterteyning him without any concluſiue anſwere: at the laſt hee told him, that it behooued him to haue a diſpenſation from Pope Sixtus the fourth then raigning, for to marry with his Neece Donna Ioane his ſiſters daughter, before hee could pretend any lawfull right to the Kingdome of Caſtile and Leon; wherevpon either King did write to Rome to that effect, where the Ambaſſador of King Fernand and Queene Iſabella, did mainely oppoſe himſelfe againſt it, alleadging the great troubles and miſeries which ſuch a diſpenſation might cauſe in Spaine: Yet notwithſtanding at the en- E treaty of King Lewis, the diſpenſation was graunted, the which did conteine that it was lawfull for Donna Ioane to marry any one within the fourth degree. It is reported that King Don Alphonſo beeing in talke with King Lewis, and labouring to induce him to purſue this warre, vſed many baſe entreaties, and kneeled to him with other like ieſtures ill beſeeming a King, who ought ſtill to ſhew himſelfe couragious, and conſtantly to reſiſt all aduerſities. And perceiuing that the controuerſies betwixt the King and the Duke of Burgondy were a great hinderance to his buſineſſe, hee tooke vpon him to reconcile and make them friends, to the end hee might the better procure helpe from both of them: for Duke Charles of Burgondy was his couſin germaine, F borne of a ſiſter to King Edward his father: but hauing made a iourney to him, and beeing returned to Paris, the Dukes ouerthrow and death did ſodainely follow, which happened before Nancy, in the yeere 1477. which did the more alienate the French King from giuing eare to the affaires of Spaine, beeing more attentiue to recouer both the Burgondies, with the lands and townes of Picardy, Flanders and Artois, which

King Alphonſo of Portugall doth in vaine ſolicite the French King to vndertake with him warre againſt Spaine.

The King of Portugalls abiect courage.

An. 1477.

A which were dependances of his crowne, Duke Charles hauing left no other heire of his great Dominions but his onely daughter Mary who was afterward married to Maximilian of Auſtria, ſhe was grand-mother to the Emperour Charles, heire to all Spaine after the death of King Fernand and Queene Iſabella, in the right of his mother Donna Ioane their daughter, as ſhalbe declared in his place. Vpon theſe pretences concerning Bourgondy, King Lewis found ſufficient occaſion to delay him: promiſing that thoſe buſineſſes being ended hee would doe whatſoeuer the King of Portugall would requeſt him, who being ſorrowfull and diſcontented, departed out of France, and was brought into ſuch deſpaire, as hee determined to goe to Ieruſalem, and there to become a
B Monke, without euer ſeeing Portugall any more: from which determination his friends and ſeruants diſſwaded him, putting him in minde of the great wrong hee ſhould doe to his honour and reputation thereby. In his abſence, Prince Iohn, by his fathers conſent, tooke vpon him the title of King, but vnderſtanding that King Alphonſo was arriued at Caſcaes, hee like an obedient ſonne gaue ouer the title and authority vnto him.

King Alphonſo of Portugall in deſpaire.

Queene Iſabella in this meane ſpace thought to haue ſurpriſed Toro by the meanes of the Admirall and the Earle of Benauent, who after a long and dangerous fight, were repulſed by the Earle of Marialua who was Gouernor. It happened in like manner, that the great Maiſter Andrew de Cabrera hauing taken the Lieutenancy, or Cap-
C taineſhip of the caſtle of Segobia from Alphonſo Maldonado to beſtow it vpon Don Pedro de Bouadilla his father in law, Maldonado beeing enraged thereat, went about to ſurprize the ſame place, there to recouer his former authority, and had intelligence with certaine dead paies of the caſtle, and feyning on a day to haue need of ſome certaine ſtones that were within the ſame, vnder collour of fetching them out, hee put foure ſouldiars into the fortreſſe beeing inſtructed what to doe, who at the firſt, ſlue the porter, and being followed by their Captaine, they tooke Don Pedro de Bouadilla, and conſtrained the reſt which were within it to ſaue themſelues in a tower. In the ſame caſtle the Princeſſe Iſabella, the King and Queenes onely daughter, was kept: wherevpon there aroſe a great tumult in the City of Segobia, which beeing vnder-
D ſtood by Don Iohn de Arias, the Biſhop thereof, who as then lay forth of the City, by reaſon of the diſſention betwixt him and Andrew de Cabrera, hee came thither and eaſily made himſelfe Maiſter of the gates which were held by thoſe of Cabrera's faction, beeing fauoured by diuers principall citizens. Queene Iſabella beeing aduertized of this inconueniencie came thither with the Cardinall of Spaine, and hauing made Gonçalo Chacon Captaine, ſhee enquired by way of Iuſtice of the Captaines behauiour, who hauing yeelded good account of himſelfe, his iuſtifications were allowed, and he reſtored to his gouernment.

Caſtile.

Tumult in Segobia.

The Archbiſhop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena, beeing not able any longer to reſiſt the King and Queene, made all the meanes they could for to obtaine
E their grace and fauour, and they practized with the old King Iohn of Arragon, that hee would bee a meanes to his children the King and Queene of Caſtile to receiue them as their faithfull ſeruants. The meſſengers that went about this buſineſſe were certaine religious perſons, who preuailed ſo much with King Iohn, as by great importunity they obteined their pardon, and cauſed whatſoeuer they had poſſeſſed in time before, to bee reſtored to them (the caſtles of Madrid and Trugillo excepted) which remained at the Kings diſpoſe and pleaſure. The citty of Hueta, which King Henry had giuen to Don Lope Vaſques of Acugna, with title of Duke, was at the ſame time yeelded vp and willingly ſurrendred to the King and Queene. The Archbiſhop was more in fault, and more worthy reprehenſion, then any one that had F reſiſted the Kings.

The Archbiſhop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena obtaine their pardon.

During theſe warres, the Caſtillan marriners made their firſt voyage into Guyeney where were mines of gold, wherevpon, as hath beene before mentioned, there grew a controuerſie betwixt the Caſtillans and Portugalls, who had moſt right and title vnto that nauigation.

13

The Spaniards firſt voyage to Guyeney.

14 Whileſt Queene Iſabella remained at Segobia, the Spaniards tooke Toro by meanes A of a ſhep-heard, who certified Don Alphonſo de Fonſeca Biſhop of Auila, that there was a certaine part of the City which the Portugals did alwaies leaue without any guard, becauſe by nature the ſcite thereof was ſtrong. The Biſhop ſent to diſcouer it, and finding the ſhep-heards report to bee true, ſent thither ſixe hundred men, and him for their guide, they giuing no great credit to the poore man, went on very lazily to that enterpriſe, but beeing incouraged by Pedro de Velaſco, and by an other young Toro ſurpriſed. man called Alphonſo de Fonſeca, who was the firſt that entred it, they all followed, not being diſcouered by any one, and hauing broken open a gate, they gaue entry to the reſt of their fellowes, the Biſhop hauing ſent a good troupe after them, and ſo they became Maiſters of the City, the Earle of Marialua and his people hauing ſcarce leiſure B to recouer the caſtle, from whence afterward hee went to Caſtro Nugno, abandoning the ſaid caſtle, within the which Donna Maria Sarmiento, widow to Iohn Vlloa, did fortifie her ſelfe with thoſe of her faction, who deſired by all meanes to returne to the Queenes ſeruice. The Queene hauing vnderſtood thoſe good newes, came ſpeedily to Toro, reſtored the banniſhed to their goods, did honorably recompence the poore ſhep-heard whom they called Bartlemew, enfranchiſing him and all his poſterity from tributes beſide the ready money and pentions which ſhe gaue him: and receiued Donna Maria Sarmiento into her fauour, who was ſiſter to Don Diego Sarmiento Earle of Salinas, for whoſe ſake and deſertes ſhe reſtored her vnto all her goods and poſſeſſions: and C by this meanes the caſtle of Toro came into the Kings power.

15 About this time Don Roderigo Manriques Earle of Paredes, the pretended Maiſter of Election of the Maiſters of Saint Iames, in the kings power. Saint Iames died in the City of Ocagna, whoſe competitor Don Alphonſo de Cardegna, great Commander of Leon did in all haſt with great troupes of horſe march towards Vcles, to the end he might be choſen there by the thirteene Electors: but the Queene pre-uented him, and delt in ſuch ſort as the thirteene, and the Commaunder himſelfe were contented to intreate the Pope to put the Maiſterſhip to the Kings diſpoſing, the which was graunted, and the ſame dignity was afterward beſtowed vpon the ſame Commaunder.

16 After that, King Fernand returning from Guipuſcoa by Toro and Ocagna, met the D Queene at Toledo, in which city they builded that famous Monaſtery of Saint Iohn of the Kings, which is a Couent of Franciſcan friers, and from thence they went to Madrid, where they were aduertiſed that the Portugals had entred Caſtile by the way of Ba-dajos, and Cite Rodrigo, with two armies, againſt whom were ſent as Generals, Don Lorenzo Suares de Figueroa Earle of Feria, and the great Commander of Leon: Theſe did not onely beat backe the enemies, but they entred into the country of Portugal putting the poore miſerable ſubiects to fire and ſword, who could not remedy their Kings ambition; to which place Queene Iſabella, who was a woman of a manly courage, did march, the better by her preſence to incourage, and fauour the enterpriſes of her army.
From Madrid the King went to Medina del Campo, where he tooke order with his bro- E ther the Duke of Villahermoſa, and the Conſtable, about forces ſufficient to aſſaile foure fortreſſes at one time: by meanes whereof, in a ſhort time hee brought vnder his obedience, Cantalapiedra Sept, Egliſes, and Cubillas: but at Caſtro Nugno, which was the fourth, hee found greater reſiſtance, his ſeege laſting long, ſo as all the forces which were diſperſed abroade in ſundry places, were faine to be drawne togither to that place, and the King himſelfe came thither in perſon, by meanes whereof the towne was taken, but the caſtle made obſtinate reſiſtance, before which hauing left his army, hee returned to Medina del Campo.

There he receiued letters from Garcia Oſorio, Corrigidor of Salamanca, who aduertized him of diuers outrages committed by a Knight named Roderigo Maldonado, who F was of the ſame citie, who held the caſtle of Monleon, and from thence did many robberies and inſolent attempts, as namely coyning of falſe and counterfeit money, with diuers others miſchiefes: in regard whereof the King would needs go thither, and found meanes to catch this wicked man, who thought to haue ſaued himſelfe

in

A in the Sanctuary of the Couent of Saint Francis, the which neuertheleſſe did ſaue his life, at the earneſt entreaty of the Friers; who deliuered him vpon that condition, as alſo that he ſhould deliuer vp the Caſtle of Monleon, otherwiſe the King would breake open their gates. Maldonado beeing taken, gaue his wife and ſubiects notice of his eſtate, and willed them to deliuer vp the Caſtle to the King, the which they refuſed to doe, ſaying, that they would haue ſome recompence of the King, otherwiſe they would deliuer it to the King of Portugall; and if hee were taken priſoner, he might thanke himſelfe. Then the King cauſed him to be carried to a place, in the ſight of thoſe which were in Monleon, and commanded that in their view his head ſhould be ſtrucken off: but being
B come to the place, hee made ſuch pittifull lamentation, as they compaſſionating him, yeelded the Caſtle and ſaued his life. From Salamanca, the King returned to the Campe before Caſtro Nugnes.

17 Reformation of the townes and ſtate of Andaluzia.

As Queene Iſabell went towards Badajos, ſhee ſent from Guadalupa, to Pedro de Baeça Captaine of the Caſtle of Trugillo, who held it for the Marquis of Villena, commanding him, following the agreement betwixt her and the Marquis, to deliuer vp the fortreſſe to Gonçall d' Auila, the which hee refuſed to doe, ſaying, that hee would neuer yeeld it whileſt hee had life in him: the Queene tryed by faire meanes and promiſes to drawe him to deliuer it, but all was in vaine: wherefore ſhee raiſed a power, and marched to Trugillo, whether the Maiſter of Calatraua came, and Don Alphonſo de Montroy, who called himſelfe Maiſter of Alcantara, with diuerſe other Lords and
C Knights: whileſt ſhee remained there, ſhee recouered diuerſe Caſtles of the ſame countrey, ſome of which ſhee razed. And knowing her ſelfe to bee ſtrong and well accompanied, ſhee gaue ouer all milde and gentle meanes, and began to vſe greeuous threatnings, ſo as Don Pedro de Baeça, became more tractable, and was willing to deliuer it, ſo as the Marquis would come thither in perſon, and bid him doe it. The Marquis was ſent for, who to auoyde farther quarrels with the Queene, cauſed it to be deliuered, and Gonçal d' Auila was made Captaine thereof.

After that, ſhee did chooſe certaine Arbitrators at Caceres to compoſe the controuerſies betwixt her and the Marquis, ſhee reformed the ſtate of the towne, and D made the officers thereof perpetuall: and from thence ſhee went to Siuill, the which Citty ſhee found in a miſerable eſtate, and diuided into factions; which cauſed infinite diſorders and villanies: for the inhabitants were of a long time bandied one againſt an other about the quarrells betwixt the houſes of Guzman and Ponce: and they were ſo grounded therein, as they fought for the ſame with incredible cruelties and impieties, the father againſt the ſonne, the brother againſt brother, the wife againſt the husband, with more furie and obſtinacie then the Guelphs and Gibelines in Italy, and the Gamboins and Ognazins in Biſcay, the Citty of Cordoua beeing likewiſe infected with the ſame peſtilence: Don Alphonſo d' Aguilar Lord of Montilla, beeing chiefe of the faction for the Marquis of Cales, his brother in lawe, and Don E Diego de Cordoua for the family of the Guzmans.

The Citty of Siuill euill entreated by the factions of Guzman, and Ponce.

The Queene was receiued into Siuill with great honour, where ſhee made ſome ſtay, and tooke the paines to heare all theſe controuerſies, with others, ſitting her ſelfe in councell, and giuing audience euery Friday, beeing accompanied with Prelats, Doctors, and other noble perſonages: whoſe example is to bee followed of all Chriſtian Kings and Princes, who in regarde they will not take the paines themſelues to harken vnto their affaires, doe ſee and heare by other mens eyes and eares, which cauſeth them to fall into greeuous errors, by not knowing truly what is done in their Realmes and dominions, through the pernicious diſſimulation, and damnable flattery of their Miniſters and officers.

A Queene careſull of doing iuſtice to her ſubiects.

F The Queene determining to puniſh all thoſe that were guilty of the maine miſeries which this ſtately Cittie had endured, the Biſhoppe of Cales, Suffragan to the Cardinall of Spaine, Archbiſhoppe of the ſame Church, did admoniſh her in a wiſe and learned Oration, of the difficultie and danger of that ſhee pretended to doe, ſaying, that it was the end of all good Princes, and of Iuſtice, to amend,

The end of all good gouernment is to amend and not deſtroy offenders.

and not to deſtroy; otherwiſe in ſteed of Kings, they would bee accounted barbarous A tyrants, greedy of humaine bloud, true Miniſters, not of the diuine clemencie, but of the deſtroying ſpirit, who had beene a murtherer from the beginning of the world, applying to his ſpeech many examples of old times, drawne out of the Holy ſcriptures: adding, that the number of the offendors was ſo great, that if all of them ſhould bee puniſhed according to their deſerts, the City would want people to dwell in it: the Gentle puniſhments whereby the ſeditions in Siuill are appeaſed.

Queene therefore beeing mooued with theſe reaſons, gaue a generall pardon for all matters paſt (apoſtacy onely and mens priuate intereſts excepted.) The Duke of Medina and the Marquis of Cales, who were the cauſes of all theſe euills, comming into the Queenes preſence with great ſubmiſſion, would haue laied the fault one vpon B other: in the end hauing deliuered vp into her hands the places and fortreſſes which they had vſurped, as well the one from the other, as thoſe which did belong to the City of Siuill, ſhee made peace betwixt them, and gaue to euery one his owne. The caſtle of Vtrera onely made reſiſtance, the captaine thereof ſaying, that hee would not deliuer it, becauſe it belonged to the Marſhall of Sahauedra vnto whoſe father Gonçalo Arias of Sahauedra the late King Henry had giuen it, for which contempt, the Queene cauſed it to bee beſeeged and furiouſly battered, in regard hee did defend it with ſuch obſtinacy: in the end, the place beeing taken by aſſault, himſelfe, with all thoſe that were within it, loſt their liues, the moſt part of them in the heate of the fight: the reſidew of them beeing brought to Siuill ſeruied for an example to others not to reſiſt a C greater power, and were publikely hanged.

King Don Fernand ſtaied not very long ere hee came vnto Siuill to the Queene, who about that ſame time was brought in bedde and deliuered of a ſonne, who was named Don Iohn; for the which, great ioy feaſtings and gladneſſe was made ouer all Spaine.

There came vnto the Kings, being at Seuill, an Ambaſſage from Muley Albohacen King of Granada, with whom they were at peace, notwithſtanding hee had not paied the tribute which his Predeceſſors did vſually doe vnto Caſtile, the which the warres of Portugall had conſtrained the Kings to diſſemble till a fitter time. Theſe Ambaſſadours craued confirmation of the truce betwixt the Realmes and Kings of Ca- D ſtile and Granado; the which was refuſed them, vnleſſe that Albohacen would ſend the arrerages due for the tribute: but the Moores anſwered (hauing expreſſe commiſſion ſo to doe) that the Kings of Granado, who had beene tributaries to Caſtile were dead, and their bondes buried with them, and that the money of Granado was no more coined of gold or ſiluer, but the iron of launces, dartes and many other ſuch like weapons, which they would turne vpon their enemies, and deliuer themſelues from all ſlauery and bondage.

Braue anſwere of the Mooriſh Ambaſſadors.

This braue anſwere cauſed the Kings to thinke (who were not yet freed from the Portugall warres) that it was not good to draw ſo many enemies vpon them at once, therefore they graunted them a truce, beeing ſufficiently aduertized that King Mu- E ley Albohacen was the beſt prouided of ſouldiers, armour, horſes, artillery and all other munition, and more abounding in treaſure, by reaſon of the long peace hee had enioyed, then any of the Kings of Granado his Predeceſſors. King Don Fernand beeing highly offended at the rebellion of the Marſhall Don Fernand Arrias de Sahauedra, would haue had his proces made, and haue puniſhed him as a contemner of the royall Maieſty: but diuerſe of his frends and kinſfolke who were in the Kings fauour, and their faithfull ſeruants did ſaue him from this daunger, and obtained his pardon, with reſtitution of all his offices and poſſeſſions.

The Admirall recouered the gouernment and captaineſhip of Tariffa with the ca- F ſtle thereof, the which was giuen to his brother Don Pedro Henriques Gouernor of the frontiers of Andaluzia, who placed therein Pedro de Godoy, from whom the three caſtles of Carmona had beene taken, and were giuen to Don Gutiere de Cardegna, who therewith was promoted to the great Commanderie of Leon, becauſe Don Alphonſo de Cardegna who had beene great Commaunder was elected and confirmed

A med Maiſter of Saint Iames alone, and the laſt that hath beene Maiſter of the ſame Order, the which dignity, with the reſt of the Maiſterſhips hath euer ſince continued in the hands of the Kings of Caſtile; the Princes and their prudent Councell hauing conſidered and well weighed with themſelues, that theſe Maiſters were ordinarily followed by great numbers of Knights of their Order, men of warre; who had for the moſt part made ſuch tumults and factions in the Realme of Spaine, as they haue not let for to make heads againſt their owne Kings. Queene Iſabella would willingly haue had the Maiſterſhip of Saint Iaimes to haue beene for euer after extinct, but ſhee could not obteine it. The King her husband leauing her at Siuill, returned to Trugillo, where he made
B Sancho de Auila captaine of the caſtle.

Theſe matters happened in the yeere 1478. in the beginning whereof Philip Archduke of Auſtria was borne, who was ſonne to Maximillian as then King of the Romaines, and to Donna Maria, the heire of Bourgondy, Flanders and other great Dominions, this Philippe was husband vnto Donna Ioane of Caſtile who, ſucceeded King Fernand and Queene Iſabella her father and mother in all their Kingdomes of Spaine. An. 1478. Birth of Philip of Auſtria.

At the ſame time, King Iohn of Arragon beeing laden with many yeeres and neere to his end, was deſirous to ſee and conferre with his ſonne King Fernand, con-
C cerning the affaires of Nauarre, Arragon, Sicill, and his other Dominions, hee therefore ſent to requeſt him, if the Portugall warres would permit it, to meete him at Victoria. King Fernand beeing wonderfull ioyfull to ſee his father, came thither before him, where the King of Arragon ſoone after arriued, accompanied with a great number of Lords and Gentlemen, choſen amongeſt the ancienteſt of Nauarre, Arragon, and his other countries, ſo as the beholding of ſuch a company of reuerend old men was very notable and to bee admired, for the youngeſt amongeſt them was aboue three ſcore yeeres of age, all of them in decent habits befitting their yeeres, and yet differing one from an other. The ſonne beeing gone forth to meet the father they did a great while ſtriue about complement and ceremonies, and the King of Arragon, would neuer ſuffer his ſonne of Caſtile to kiſſe his hand, neither would hee take
D the place of him, but they entred into Victoria, the father riding on the lower hand of the ſonne: and when they were come before the lodging which was prepared for the King of Arragon, and both of them on foote, as ſoone as the father perceiued that it was his owne lodging, hee ſeemed to bee very ſorry, as though hee had committed a great fault, and ſaid „ You my ſonne, who are Lord and head of the Royall houſe of Spaine, from whence wee are deſcended, ought to receiue from vs all honour, reuerence, and ſeruice due vnto you, in regard the obligation which in this reſpect wee owe vnto you, as to our King and ſuperior, is ſtronger then that of the ſonne towards the father, therefore take horſe againe, and I will accompany you to your lodging, for reaſon commaunds it to bee ſo „ And King Fernand was
E conſtrained ſo to doe thorough the great importunity of his father, who went with him to his lodging, where hee left him, and the olde King rode backe againe vnto his owne.

18 Arragon. and Nauarre. The laſt enterview of Don Io. of Arragon, and Don Fernand of Caſtile father and ſonne.

The King of Arragon the father giueth precedence to the King of Caſtile his ſon.

For the ſpace of twentie daies that theſe two Kings remained in Victoria, the father did ſtill giue the honour, vpper hand, and preheminence in all matters to the ſonne, were it in ſitting, or riſing vp, and in ſpeaking, walking and keeping of company in writing, and in euery other thing belonging to honour and dignitie, wherein great Lords vſe ceremony and complement to honour one an other with. Whereupon their aroſe a diſputation and controuerſie betwixt the Lords and Knights of the Court, to weet, whether it a were a ſeemely, and a decent matter for a father, to ſhew ſuch great F ſubmiſſion to his ſonne, who beſide beeing his father, was alſo his gueſt, being an vſuall thing alwaies to honour and giue the places to thoſe whom wee receiue into our houſes, albeit hee were of meaner quality then our ſelues, and whether the ſonne did well to receiue and accept of theſe honours. The Spaniards thought that either of them had done that which was fit. Now the chiefeſt communication betwixt theſe two Princes at this enterview was concerning the affaires of Nauarre, touching Donna Leonoras future ſucceſſion to the ſame, with her grand-child Francis Phœbus Earl of Foix: and ſome are of opinion, that the townes and fortes of Saint Vincent, Garda, Bernedo, Arcos, Larraga, and Miranda de Arga were at the ſame time wholy cut off from the crowne of Nauarre, in recompence of the charges which Don Fernand had beene at for the warre of Perpignan, with an agreement, that the cuſtomes rights and priuiledges which they had, ſhould for euer bee maintained: but ſeeing it is certaine, that a long time before this aſſembly, Saint Vincent, La Garde, and Arcos, were poſſeſſed by the King of Caſtile, it is moſt likely, that they were at that time onely confirmed vnto King Don Fernand. They did likewiſe intreate of many matters belonging to the Kingdoms of Arragon and Sicil, and then they returned each of them into his owne Dominions, and the King of Caſtile did neuer more after that ſee his father, who ſpent the ſmal remainder of his daies at Barcelona, afflicted with the goute and other diſeaſes which doe ordinarily accompany old men.

The father & the ſonne cut off diuers places from the kingdome of Nauarre.

Caſtro Nugno yeelded to king Fernand.

King Don Fernand returned vnto the campe before Caſtro Nugno, which was very faithfully and valiantly defended by the captaine Nicholas de Abendagno of Villareal, in the Prouince of Alaua, but the great want of victualls and of men (thoſe which were with him, beeing in part dead, and the others were ſo tired and weakened with watchings, wardings and hurts receiued at the aſſault as they could hold out no longer) did conſtraine him to yeeld vp the ſame place, and yet vpon very honorable conditions, for he carried away into Portugall all thoſe that were with him, without ranſome, with their armor, weapons and baggage, and their enſignes diſplaied, and drummes beating; and was greatly praiſed by the King, the fort was preſently razed downe to the ground: after the rendring whereof, the King returned to Siuill to the Queene, where order was taken for the well gouerning of the City, and expreſſe commaundement giuen to the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and the Marquis of Cales, not to remaine there. Don Iohn de Gamboa Gouernor of Fontaraby, and the Licenciat Iohn de Medina, both of them of the Kings Counſell were likewiſe diſpatched into Guipuſcoa, with inſtructions and authority, to treat and conclude the peace with the French Kings Ambaſſadors who were at Bayon. Theſe, came to Fontarabie, and after that, both ſides did meet, at Saint Iohn de Luz, where they conferred togither, and concluded the peace, renuing the alliances, leagues, and ancient friendſhip betwixt the two Kingdomes. The French Commiſſioners were the Lord of Leſcut, and the Abbot of Saint Denis: and ſo the warre ended betwixt France and Caſtile.

Peace betwixt France and Caſtile.

19 Nauigations and conqueſts of the Spaniards in the Ocean ſea.

The King and Queene before their departure from Siuil ſent an army to conquer the Canaries vnder the conduct of Pedro de Vera, where, for the ſpace of three yeeres, diuerſe notable exploits of warre were performed by the Caſtillans: Thirty fiue ſhips were likewiſe ſent to Guiney, Pedro de Cobides being their generall, from which place great quantity of gold was brought, with great proffit for the Kings, who had the fifth penny. In the firſt, the thing which was moſt eſteemed of that blacke Nation was cockelſhels, who were of opinion that they had great vertue againſt thunder and lightning, by meanes whereof they were ſold in Spaine at a great rate, ſo as men could hardly get any for money.

20 Inquiſition in Spaine againſt Iewes and Moores, did beget the negligences of the Biſhops and Paſtors.

This yeere 1478. the inquiſition beganne at Siuill, inſtituted at the firſt by the Councell of Don Pero Gonçales de Mendoza Archbiſhop of the ſame City, againſt the Iewes and conuerted Moores, which did returne to their ſuperſtitious ceremonies: this Prelate, and other, deputed for that ſearch, thinking that for to conteyne them in the profeſſion of Chriſtianity, rigour and ciuill puniſhment was more expedient then other milder meanes, or greater care: Beeing content for to take away the occaſion of ſeditions and troubles which grew in the Townes and Prouinces of the Realme, againſt theſe miſerable creatures, moſt commonly at the inſtigation of Preachers, and other Clergy men, inciting the people to mutine againſt them.

Whereas in deed, they ought to haue beene inſtructed by good and wholeſome examples: but the Biſhops and Paſtors had no great care of their ſoules health:

for

A for the affaires of State, and worldly greatneſſe hath ſo buſied them for many ages, as they haue not had leyſure to eleuate their eyes and minds higher then the earth. Since that time, the power of the Inquiſitions tribunall, which is diuided into diuers iuriſdictions thorough euery Prouince of Spayne, hath beene chiefly banded againſt thoſe who haue dared to ſpeake againſt the pompe and pride of the Sea of Rome, and the abuſes brought into the Church, for to entertaine the eaſe and wealth of the Clergie, a gulph which hath ſwallowed vp many good and honeſt families. Concerning this Inquiſition, which within awhile made it ſelfe knowne for a fruitleſſe inuention, more ample mention ſhall be made hereafter.

B The King and Queene hauing pacified and ordered the cittie of Seuile, left Diego de Merlo there, who was a good Knight, in qualitie of an aſſiſtant, and went themſelues to Cordoua, which was in like manner afflicted by the factions of Don Pero Fernandes of Cordoua, Earle of Cabra, and that of Don Alphonſo d'Aguilar, who in the laſt tumults had driuen the Earles forces out of the cittie, and had taken the forts and places thereof, which were in the keeping of the Earle, detaining them, with other places alſo belonging to the gouernement and iuriſdiction of the cittie: they and their followers beeing moreouer charged with ſo many robberies, thefts, and murthers, as the King and Queene had much ado to chaſtiſe the offendours, and to reſtore euery man to his owne. Alphonſo of Aguilar was driuen foorth of the cittie, and the fortreſſes taken from him. Vpon com-

The cittie of Cordoua pacified.

C plaint made againſt the Iudges and Officers of the legall Courts, who did greatly exact, the King and Queene cauſed their fees and ſtipends to bee rated, more then which, they were not permitted to take vpon payne of forfeiting ſeuen-fold as much, which was executed vppon ſome, who neither feared God, nor reuerenced the lawes.

The Archb. alway diſloyall and ſeditious.

As theſe buſineſſes were mannaged in Andaluſia, the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo, who was euer turbulent and deſirous of innouation, had ſecret intelligence with the King of Portugall, vnto whome hee vndertooke to deliuer the Cittie of Toledo, and to kill Don Gomes Manriques aſſiſtant there: and to the ſame purpoſe he had practiſed with the common people of Toledo, and had executed it, if the aſſiſtant had not been a prouident and polliticke man, who hauing diſcouered the plot tooke order for it; ſtanding on his guard

D and by puniſhing ſome of the Conſpirators, hee cauſed the reſt to containe themſelues within their bounds for feare of the like puniſhment. The Arch-biſhop who remayned at Alcala de Henares had inuited the King of Portugall to come vnto his houſe of Talauera, aſſuring him, that hee would put him into Toledo: who was in a readineſſe to haue come thither, had not the Prince his ſonne, with his friends and ſeruants, told him what ſmall profite hee ſhould receiue, and how great danger hee ſhould incurre by ſuch an enterpriſe.

The Kings, Don Fernand and Donna Izabella beeing aduertiſed of the Arch-biſhops dealings, were iuſtly incenſed againſt him, they cauſed all his temporalities to bee ſeized on, ſending the Duke of Villa-hermoſa to Madrid, to bridle that cittie, commanding all

E his tenants and ſeruants to forſake him, and no more to obey him, vpon payne of depriuation of their goods: and for a terrour to the reſt, they did cauſe the houſes of diuers of the Rebels, who had contemned their commaundement, to bee razed downe to the ground.

Wherefore the Arch-biſhoppe within a few dayes was left alone, and his great friend Hernand Alarcon did forſake him and fled preſently into France, not daring any longer to tarrie in Spaine. Don Tello de Buendia, Arch-deacon of Toledo, and a learned man, did vndertake to bring the Arch-biſhoppe to his dutie, he vanquiſhed him by reaſon, and perſwaded him to humble himſelfe to the King and Queene, of whome by his meanes he obtayned pardon: but hee gaue all the ſtrong caſtles of his Arch-biſhoppricke in ho-

The Archb. enforced to his dutie.

F ſtage for his future fidelitie. The Marquis of Villena on the other ſide hauing entred into the Marquiſate, began to picke quarrels with the Gouernor placed there by the Queen, concerning the limits of his power and iuriſdiction, ſaying, that he did vſurpe more then the couenants would permit him, and would haue letted him from puniſhing thoſe of Cinchilla, with other rebellious and diſobedient people, ſo that a power was ſent thither vnder the conduct of Don George Manrique, and Pedro Ruis Alarcon.

Great

Great was the King and Queenes toyle, in ordering the peace and quiet of the coun- A trey of Andaluſia, for the people thereof were ſo giuen ouer to all manner of villanies, as if they had not vſed their meekeneſſe and clemencie, the citties and towns would haue beene voyd and empty of people: for it is moſt certaine, that this yeare and the former, there went out of Seuile and Cordoua aboue eight thouſand men, tainted of notorious crimes, who left the country for feare of puniſhment.

Offenders forſake the country to auoyde puniſhment.

22 It happened about the ſame time, that Don Rodrigo de Vergara Biſhoppe of Leon, borne at Logrogno (it is not knowne vppon what occaſions) cauſed Pedro Vaca Treaſurer of his Church, to be ſlayne in the ſame Cittie, beeing a Knight of a great parentage, whoſe death his friends and kinsfolkes reuenged by the death of the Biſhoppe, who B aſſayled him in his owne houſe, and purſued him, as he thought to haue fled for ſafetie to the houſe of Diego Fernandes Quignones, Earle of Luna, where they murthered him in the boſome of the Counteſſe, who intreated them to ſpare the ſpilling of his bloud for her ſake.

A murtherous Biſhop, murthered.

In the town of Fonteouejuna, the Inhabitants did kill with ſtones D. Hernand Gomes de Guzman, great Commaunder of Calatraua, for outrages and tyrannies which hee had done to them, for the which fact the Iudges which were ſent by the King to informe of the matter, could neuer find any one witneſſe, which would charge any one particular man with that murther, and they could haue no other anſwer, than this, that Fonteoue-juna had ſlaine him, which paſſed for a Prouerbe thorough Spaine. This ſame yeare the C inhabitants of Saint Helizes de los Galegos, a place neere to Trugillo did in like maner ſtone their Lord Gratian de Seſe to death, who as it hath beene heretofore ſayd, had bene Captaine of Trugillo.

Petty tyrants ſtoned to death by the common people.

An. 1479. In the beginning of the yeare, one thouſand, foure hundred, ſeuenty nine, the King and Queene left Cordoua, and came with great deuotion to the Monaſterie of Guadalupa, and alſo to take order for the Portugall warre, which they daily feared. From Gua-dalupa they ſent the duke of Villa-hermoſa their brother to Almorox nere to Eſcalona, in which place were Don Iohn de Luxan, and Don Iohn de Pacheco the Marquis of Villena's brother, who ranne vppe and downe burning and ſpoiling the countrey round about. D

The Marquis on the other ſide remayning in Garcy Nugnos, did violently reſiſt the the Kings ſouldiers, and defeated the troups of Don George Manrique, who within a few dayes after, dyed of the hurts which he had receyued in that encounter: By meanes wher-of, others of the Kings Captaines, beeing iuſtly mooued againſt him, did hang vp ſixe of his ſeruants whome they had taken, to ſerue for a terrour to the reſt: the Marquis in like manner would not be indebted to them for reuenge: but cauſed as many heads to bee ſtricken off, caſting lots among the priſoners, which fell vpon a ſouldier who dwelt at Villa-noua de Laxara, neere to Alarcon, who amongſt others was to bee beheaded, but a younger brother of his did beſeech the Marquis, that he might dye in his brothers ſtead, who had wife and children, and did ſo much importune the matter, as hee redee- E med him from death, giuing his owne life for him: a notable example of brotherly loue, and well worthie to haue beene conſidered by thoſe who did cauſe the execution, if they had beene poſſeſſed with a noble and generous diſpoſition. The names of theſe two breethren are vniuſtly ſuppreſt by the negligence of the authors. The Marquis yet not-withſtanding ſent Rodrigo of Caſtagneda to Court to excuſe him to the King and Queen, and to lay the fault vppon their Lieutenants and Officers, whoſe pride and inſolencie had prouoked him to thoſe courſes, the King anſwered that the Marquis ſhould be heard according to lawe: but beeing aduertiſed, that Don Roderigo had intelligence with the king of Portugall, they ſent him away priſoner to Talauera, where hee quickely ended his dayes. F

Notable loue of one brother towards another

Whileſt the King and Queene remayned at Guadalupa, Donna Maria de Pacheco Counteſſe of Medelin, the Marquis of Villena's baſtard-ſiſter, beeing a proud and haughtie woman, who held the towne of Merida, and had driuen her owne ſon out of all his poſſeſſions, preſented a petition to the King and Queene, the effect whereof was,

that

A that ſhee might enioy the Earledome of Medellin, during her life, with the commandery of the ſame citty. An other petition came from Don Alphonſo de Montroy, treaſorer of Alcantara, who called himſelfe Maiſter of the ſame order, and held moſt part of the fortreſſes belonging to the ſame, who requeſted that he might be confirmed in that dignity, notwithſtanding any pretence that Don Iohn de Eſtuniga Sonne to Don Aluaro Duke of Areualo could make, vpon whom the Pope had beſtowed it. Both of them were anſwered, that vpon hearing of the parties, they ſhould haue ſpeedy iuſtice. The Counteſſe and the Treaſurer not contented therewith, became enemies to the King and Queene, and did cleaue to the King of Portugall: Don Alphonſo hauing forgotten,
B how that when he was taken priſoner by the Captaine of Magançala in Extremadura, the King had deliuered him and paide his ranſome, beſtowing diuers other benefits vpon him.

Vſurpers, in regard they might not be authoriſed in their outrages do abandon themſelues againſt the king

Ambaſſadors from the French King Lewis the eleuenth, arriued at Guadalupa to ſee the peace agreed vpon by the Commiſſioners at Saint Iohn de Luz to bee ſworne and ratified. There the Popes Bull was ſeene, which diſpenſed with the King of Portugall about the marriage of Donna Ioane his Neece, not without excuſes on the Popes part, who ſaid, that he had bin circumuented, and ſiniſterly informed, concerning that matter. And to the end the French King ſhould on his part ſweare, and ratifie the articles of the peace, the ſame comiſſioners, who had firſt treated thereof were ſent into
C France, to weet, Don Iohn de Gamboa, and the licenciat Don Iohn de Medina both of them of the Kings Councell. It was likewiſe agreede vppon with the French Ambaſſadors, that the towne of Perpignan, with other fortreſſes of the Earledome of Roſſillion, ſhould bee deliuered as hoſtages, into the Cardinall of Spaines hands, and that with in fiue yeares following, arbitrators ſhould decide, whatſoeuer king Lewis could pretend to be due vnto him.

Whileſt the Spaniſh Court remayned at Guadalupa, God (being willing to make peace, betwixt Chriſtian Princes in Spaine, to the end they might haue leaſure to vndertake more worthy enterpriſes,) did inſpire Donna Beatrice Dutcheſſe of Viſeo, widdow to the Infant Don Ferdinand of Portugall, Duke of Viſeo, and Mother to D Donna Leonora, marryed to Prince Iohn the eldeſt Sonne and heire of the Crowne of Portugall, with a deſire to imploy her vttermoſt credit, and meanes for the effecting thereof, This Princeſſe hauing ſounded King Alphonſos mynde, and finding him to be inclined to an agreement, ſent word to her neece Queene Iſabell (for ſhee was ſiſter to her Mother Queene Iſabell, widdow to King Iohn yet liuing,) that if it would pleaſe her to come to the frontiers of Portugall, ſhee did hope that ſome good agreement would be made betwixt them; wher-vnto the Queene diſpoſed her ſelfe with the conſent of King Fernand her husband.

King Iohn of Aragon dyed about this time at Barcelona beeing foure ſcore and one yeares of age, hauing reigned in Nauarre fifty three yeeres and foure moneths, and
E one and twenty yeares and ſixe moneths in Arragon: hee was buried in the monaſtery of Pobleta. By his laſt will and teſtament hee left his Sonne Don Fernand, heire to his Kingdomes of Arragon, and Sicill, and his daughter Princeſſe Leonora, widdow to Earle of Foix, heire to the realme of Nauarre: and ſoone after deputies were ſent from the ſtates of Arragon, Cattalogne, and Valencia to the Court of Spaine, to requeſt King Fernand, to come and take poſſeſſion of his dominions; they came vnto him in an vnſeaſonable time, by reaſon the Portugall warre was hotly beganne, by the practiſes of the counteſſe of Medelin, and Don Alphonſo de Montroy, the pretended maiſter of Alcantara.

Arragon.
The death of Iohn King of Arragon.

The King and Queene were aduertiſed that the army of Portugall was in a redineſſe
F to inuade the country of Extremadura: by reaſon whereof they called the Conſtable, and other Spaniſh Knights to Court, and ſent forces to the frontiers, with great garriſons to Badajos, and other fortes of the ſame marches, where Don Alphonſo de Cardegna Maiſter of Saint Iames was generall, who lodged his army at Lobon betwixt Badajos, and Merida, wherein the Treſorer of Alcantara remayned, attending for the Portugalls, and the Biſhoppe of Ebora, their Generall, who came with an intent

Caſtille.

The Portugall army defeated at Albuhera.

intent to ioyne with him: to preuent which, the Maiſter of Saint Iames did march a- A gainſt the Biſhoppe, and gaue him battaile, in the fieldes of Albuhera, the which was fierce, and bloudy, on either ſide: but the Portugalls were ouerthrowne, and the Biſhop taken, (although afterward he eſcaped away) hauing loſt their enſignes, bagage, and all the equigage and munition: the maiſter of Saint Iames, and all the King of Caſtiles Captaines were hurt: but aboue the reſt the valour and proweſſe of Don Martin de Cordoua Sonne to the Earle of Cabra, of Sancho del Aquila, of Alphonſo Henriques and of Rodrigo de Cardegna, Coſin to the Maiſter of Saint Iames, was admirable: the Battell of Albuhera.

which Maiſter by his Iudgement and valour, hauing gotten the King, and Queene this victory, was ſo charitable, as with his owne mony, hee releeued the dearth and famine B which at that time, did oppreſſe the country of Extremadura, in regard whereof the King and Queene, did acquit him of three Millions of Marauedis, which he was to pay, as a penſion vnto them out of the reuenew of his place. After this battaile the Treaſorer of Alcantara, went to Deleitoſa, which had beene taken by Roderigo de Monroy his brother, and the Biſhoppe of Ebora went to Medellin to encourage the Counteſſe, who perhaps, was valianter than him-ſelfe. Gods will was, that the King of Portugall, in recompence of this loſſe, ſhould by his army at ſea, take the fiue and thirty Spaniſh ſhippes which came from Guiney wherein was great ſtore of gold, which ſerued well to pay his ſoldiors, and the priſoners, to exchang for thoſe which were taken at the land Battaile of Albuhera. After this manner are the euents of ioy, and ſorrow, C mixed in this miſerable world.

Deſcate of the Spaniſh army by ſea.

King Fernand beeing importuned to goe into Arragon, and conſidering the notable vnion of thoſe two Kingdomes, being at that time at Trugillo, where after hee had celebrated the obſequies of King Iohn his father, hee treated with the Queene his wife, and thoſe of her councell about the forme of precedency, and the order which ſhould bee kept in the letters, and writings concerning the titles of the realmes, and dominions, which he commanded: diuers of them were of opinion, that they ſhould intitle themſelues Kings of Spaine, in regard the greateſt part thereof did obey them: but they not beeing willing to exceed the bounds of modeſty, nor yet to preiudice in that behalfe, the Kings of Nauarre and Portugall, with whome they were conioyned in bloud, did D place their titles after this manner. Frenand and Izabell, by the grace of God, King and Queene of Caſtile, of Leon, of Arragon, of Sicill, of Toldedo, of Valencia, of Galicia, of Majorque, of Siuill, of Sardinia, of Cordoua, of Corſica, of Murcia, of Iaen, of Algarbes, of Algezire, of Gibraltar, Earles of Barcelona, Lords of Biſcay and Molina, Dukes of Athens and of Neopatria, Earles of Roſſillon, and of Cerdaigne, Marquis of Oriſtagni, and of Gocian. After this manner, were the titles of theſe Kingdomes and dominions, ordered according to their ranke and dignity: and in the ſhieldes of their armes, and deuices, it was appointed that the armes of Caſtile and Leon, ſhould bee firſt drawne, and after them thoſe of Arragon and Sicill.

Titles of King Fernand and Queene Iſabell

The Court beeing come from Trugillo to Caceres, Queene Izabell was great- E
24 ly ſolicited by Donna Beatrice Ducheſſe of Viſeo, to come to Alcantara, where ſhee promiſed to meet her, and to conferre about the meanes of a peace betwixt Caſtile and Portugall: the King and Queene departed the one from the other, ſhee towards Alcantara, which for the ſame purpoſe was committed to the keeping of Don Guttiere de Enterview of of Queene Iſabell, and the Dutcheſſe of Viſco, for to treat of peace.

Cardegna the great commander by Don Aluaro de Eſtuniga Duke of Playſance or Arcualo, who held it as lawfull adminiſtrator of Don Iohn de Eſtuniga his Sonne, who pretended him-ſelfe Maiſter of that order: and King Fernand went into Arragon to take poſſeſſion of his new Kingdomes. Theſe Princeſſes beeing arriued at Alcantara, were lodged in one houſe, namely in the Caſtle, where they ſpent thirty daies in conference, and agreeing at the laſt vpon certaine Articles, the Dutcheſſe beeing highly honored, F by the Queene Iſabella of Caſtile, and rewarded with many rich preſents, and Iewells, returned into Portugall, carrying Roderigo Maldonado, one of Fernand the King of Caſtiles councell with her, to communicate more at large with the King of Portugall, concerning them.

In

A In the meane ſpace whileſt theſe matters were conferred on, the Treaſurer of Alcantara ſurprized the fortreſſe of Montanches on the one ſide, and thoſe of the Counteſſe of Medellins part made ſharpe warre in Extremadura on the other: the which countrey beſides the miſeries which it endured by the warre, it was oppreſſed with extreame famine: ſo as euery one perſwaded the Queene to go backe to Toledo: but her haughtie courage, would not ſuffer her to leaue ſuch places where ſhee knew trouble and danger to bee, beeing able by her wiſedome, ſpeedily to redreſſe it. Shee then gaue order to beſeege diuers places at one time, from whence the enemies made ſundrie roades with incredible ſpoyles, euen to the gates of Trugillo.

Queene Izabella purſueth the Rebels in Extremadura.

B The Maſter of Saint Iames was ſent againſt Merida, Don Lewis Fernandes de Porto Carrero, Lord of la Palma beſeeged Medellin, Rodrigo de Monroy d'Eleitoſa, and Don Lorenzo Suares of Figueroa, oppoſed himſelfe againſt thoſe which moleſted the countrey of Badajos. The Treaſurer of Alcantara ranne vppe and downe, and tooke booties now from one place, then from another, hauing his retreat at Piedra nueua, Caſtro nueuo, Majorga, Azagala, and other forts, and not contented therewith, hee went into Portugall, animating King Alphonſo, not to giue ouer that warre, but couragiouſly to purſue it with great hope, and not bee carried away by the perſwaſions of the Dutcheſſe of Viſeo: and hee did chiefly vrge him to come with a mighty armie, to raiſe the ſeege before Montanches, that place beeing the ſtrength and importance of the warre: which D.

C Pero Fernandes de Velaſco the Conſtable fearing, fortified his campe with trenches and walles of ſtones, ſo as he could not eaſily bee aſſayled on the ſodaine. Don Lewis Fernando Porto Carrero, beſeeging Medellin, where the Counteſſe, and the Biſhop of Ebora remayned, ſuſtained infinite difficulties: for beſides the continuall ſallies and skirmiſhes of the beſeeged, who were very ſtrong, his campe was troubled with a horrible number of Flies, which conſtrained him to change his ſeat, and to retire halfe a mile from thence.

At the end of the ſeege, which laſted three moneths, thoſe of Deleitoſa yeelded, ſauing their liues and goods, and with-drew themſelues to Montanches. Great was the paine and toyle which the beſeegers and beſeeged of this place did indure, with thoſe likewiſe of Merida and Medellin, where the Biſhoppe of Ebora ſpared no care nor diligence, to

D recouer his honour, and to couer the loſſes which he had ſuſtayned at Albuhera, and alſo at the battell of Toro.

Hunger, ſickneſſe, and other inconueniences were the chiefe enemies, that either partie had to warre againſt: although Queene Izabella to her power had prouided for the neceſſitie of her people, who from time to time receiued letters from Maldonado her Ambaſſador in Portugall, putting her out of hope of peace, by reaſon of King Alphonſo's obſtinacie, who could not bee brought to any reaſonable conditions: ſhe therefore willed him to returne into Caſtile. The Ambaſſadour beeing readie to depart, came to take his leaue of King Alphonſo, who was at the ſame time accompanied with the Prince his ſonne, and the Lords of his Councell, who did perſwade him by diuers reaſons and ex-

E amples of things fallen out lately in Spayne to condiſcend to a peace: which perſwaſion of his, beeing better taken and apprehended by the Prince and the other Lords, then by the King himſelfe, were of ſuch force, as he was drawne by them to receiue the peace which the Dutcheſſe of Viſeo had concluded at Alcantara: Whereuppon the Ambaſſadours departure was prolonged, and the morrow after he aſſembled his Councel, where the Articles were againe peruſed and conſidered of, which the King allowed, confirmed, and ſwore to obſerue, after this manner.

Peace betwixt Portugall and Caſtile.

Articles.

Firſt, that the King of Portugall ſhould lay aſide the title of King of Caſtile and Leon, and ſhould wipe out of his ſhield the armes and deuiſes of the ſayd kingdomes.

Secondly, that he ſhould ſweare not to marrie Donna Ioane his Neece, who called her

F ſelfe Queene of Caſtile and Leon.

Thirdly, that ſhee beeing at that time eighteene yeares of age, ſhould chooſe one of theſe things within ſixe moneths, that is to ſay, to forſake the Realme of Portugall without hauing ayde, meanes, or any aſſiſtance from king Don Alphonſo, or if ſhee would tarrie there ſtill, then to marrie with Prince Iohn of Caſtile, who was newly borne, when he ſhould come to age, or elſe to enter into one of the fiue Orders of Religion of Saint

Clare

Clare in Portugal, and if ſhe would conſent to marrie Prince Iohn, ſhee ſhould liue and remaine in the meane time, in the company of Donna Beatrix Dutcheſſe of Viſeo. A

Fourthly, that the Infanta Donna I*zabella*, eldeſt daughter to the King and Queene of Caſtile, ſhould marrie the Infant Don Alphonſo, eldeſt ſonne to Prince Iohn, heire to the Kingdome; the which Infant and Infanta ſhould likewiſe be committed to the keeping of the Dutcheſſe of Viſeo in the fort of Mora in Portugall.

Fiftly, that the Kings of Caſtile ſhould in no ſort let or hinder the king of Portugalls, nor the Prince his ſonnes voyage into Guiney, and that the States and people of Caſtile ſhould bee bound to performe and maintaine that poynt inviolably.

Sixtly, that all crimes and offences, layde to their charge, who had fauoured and taken the King of Portugals part in thoſe warres, ſhould be aboliſhed, and a generall pardon graunted to them all, eſpecially to the Counteſſe of Medellin, and to Don Alphonſo of Monroy, Treaſurer of Alcantara, and euery of them to be reſtored to their goods, liuings, and dignities. B

Seuenthly, that this peace ſhould be kept betwixt the Kings of Caſtile and Portugall for an hundred and one yeares.

This peace thus concluded, was proclaymed in the Court of Portugal, to the great contentment of all men, and preſently the Licenciate Figueroa, one of the kings Councell, and his Confeſſor, named Friar Martin, were ſent Ambaſſadours to Queene Izabella, who lay at Trugillo: who on her her part, did likewiſe ſweare to ratifie it, the Caſtillans beeing no whit diſpleaſed thereat; for they were all tyred with that pernitious warre. The which warre did wholly ceaſe, and the ſeeges, from the aboue-mentioned places, were rayſed. Merida which belonged to the Order of Saint Iames, was yeelded to the Maſter thereof: Medellin was committed to the keeping of Don Lewis Fernand Porto Carrero, vntil the controuerſie betwixt the Counteſſe and Don Pedro Porto Carrero her ſon, were decided by order of lawe. Newes hereof was carried to Barcelona to King Fernand, the which was moſt welcome vnto him, who gaue thankes vnto God therefore, cauſing great ſignes of ioy to bee made euery where, and did worthily recompence the meſſenger which brought tidings of ſo deſired a peace: by meanes whereof thoſe two kingdomes haue beene encreaſed and maintayned in the greatneſſe whereunto they are riſen in the dayes of our fathers, and in our time alſo. C D

25 Vnion of Caſtil and Arragon.

In king Fernand, the two kingdomes of Caſtile and Arragon with their dependancies, were ioyned together, which had beene ſeparated foure hundred, fortie, and fiue yeares, euer ſince that the two States of Earledomes, became Kingdomes, after the death of Don Sancho the Great, King of Nauarre, who was the laſt Earle of Arragon and Caſtile.

Now King Fernand hauing taken order for all things belonging to ſo great a ſucceſſion, wherein hee found no difficultie nor reſiſtance, hee came to the Queene his wife, who lay in the citty of Toledo, where with great ſollemnitie he ſwore the peace in the preſence of the Portugall Ambaſſadours: and for a greater confirmation thereof, there were ſent Ambaſſadours to the king of Portugal, Friar Hernand of Talauera, the king of Caſtiles Confeſſor, of the Order of Saint Hierome, great Prior of Saint Marie du Pré of Vailliodolit, who was afterward Biſhoppe of Auila, and ſucceſſiuely firſt Arch-biſhoppe of Granado after the conqueſt, and with him Doctor Alphonſo Manuel of Madrigall, one of the kings Councell, to reiterate and ſweare the peace the ſeeond time. Donna Ioane, who till then was called Queene of Caſtile and Leon, and by a particular ſurname the Excellent, beeing queſtioned vppon the Article of peace, which concerned her marriage with Prince Iohn, did rather chooſe a Monaſticke life, who therefore was ſhorne and vailed in the Monaſterie of Saint Clare the royall, at Coimbra, and caſting off hir royall habits, ſhee tooke the Order of Saint Francis, not without great griefe to king Don Alphonſo, to ſee ſo great a Ladie in ſuch manner to abaſe her ſelfe, where if ſhe had ſo pleaſed, might haue raigned in Caſtile, Leon, Arragon, and Sicill. E F

D. Ioane, called, the Excellent, contemneth the marriage with the heire of Caſtil, Arragon, &c. and becomes a Nunne.

The Ambaſſadours of Caſtile hauing executed their commiſſion with the king of Portugall, went to the cittie of Coimbra, where they did ſee this Princeſſe to profeſſe her ſelfe a Nunne, with proteſtation to ſpend her dayes in ſuch humilitie, notwithſtanding

that

A that they brought her King Fernand and Queene Iſabella's honourable word and promiſe, to accompliſh in her behalfe, all that which had beene agreed vppon in the treaty of peace, and to marrie her to their ſonne when time ſhould ſerue: but ſhe with an incredible conſtancie refuſed all theſe dignities, and ſpent the whole time of her life (which was very long) in religion, and was euer after called, (in ſtead of royall titles which had had beene offered vnto her by the King and Queene) Donna Ioane the Nunne.

The troubles beeing thus appeaſed in Caſtile, Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena, who in his Marquiſate had made warre vppon the Kings Lieutenants and Captaines, came to the Court at Toledo to iuſtifie himſelf concerning the ſame: and to ſpeak
B truth, the matter beeing well weighed, hee was not found to bee the principall cauſe of thoſe miſchiefes, nor yet to haue any intelligence with the King of Portugall, ſince his laſt agreement made with the Queene, in regard whereof, the King and Queene receyued him to grace and fauour, vnto whome afterwards in the warres of Granado, hee did many notable ſeruices.

Marquis of Villena reconciled to the King and Queene.

This yeare, 1479. in the moneth of Nouember, Queene Izabella was brought to bed in the Cittie of Toledo, in a houſe belonging to the Earle of Cifuentes, of a daughter named Ioane, who in proceſſe of time came to ſucceed in all the kingdomes, as by the progreſſe of this Hiſtorie ſhall appeare. This Infanta did in all poynts ſo reſemble queen Ioane of Arragon her grandmother, as when the King her father did play with her, hee
C called her his mother. In like manner the Infanta Izabella, becauſe ſhe was in lineaments like to Queene Izabella her Grandmother, mother to the queene then raigning, was by her called her mother: the reſt of queene Izabella's children were commonly called her Angels. At the ſame time that theſe things happened in Spayne, the armie of Mahomet the ſecond of that name, Emperour of the Turkes, did houer about the Iſle of Rhodes, the ſeate of the Knights of Saint Iohn of Hieruſalem, Peter d'Aubuſſon a French-man, beeing great Maſter of that Order: the Sicillians fearing leſt the Turkes would haue landed in their Iſle, ſent meſſengers to king Fernand, to obtaine of him ayde and ſuccour, vnto whome certaine ſhippes laden with munition, armour, and other prouiſion, were ſent.

D

Donna Leonora Queene of Nauarre, and 33. in order.

AS King Fernand ſucceeded in the kingdomes of Arragon, Valencia, Sicill, Majorca, and principalitie of Cattalonia, with other dominions and dependancies therof by the deceaſe of the late king Don Iohn his father: the Princeſſe Leonora in like manner,
E daughter to him and to his firſt wife Donna Blanche, queene of Nauarre, did inherite the ſame kingdome, nine yeares after the death of the Earle of Foix her husband, remaining all that time a widow. She was crowned queene in the cittie of Tudela, where ſhe did ſweare and promiſe to maintaine the rights, lawes, priuiledges, franchiſes, and liberties of the country, in the ſame manner as her predeceſſors had done before her. Her raigne was ſo ſhort, as we haue no matter affoorded to ſpeake of, but onely her death, which happened by a ſudden ſickneſſe fifteene dayes after ſhe was crowned, in the ſame citie of Tudela: ſhe was buried in the couent of S. Sebaſtian of the Order of S. Francis, neere to the citty of Tafalla, which was ſince ruined by the commandement of Cardinall Franciſco Ximeenes, Archbiſhoppe of Toledo, and Gouernour of Caſtile, who thought that F the ſtrong building of that Monaſterie, was no good neighbour to ſuch a towne. Albeit we haue alreadie in the precedent booke ſpoken of this Princeſſes children, yet wee will ſomewhat more amply enlarge the diſcourſe thereof in this place. Their eldeſt ſonne was Gaſton, who bearing the title of Prince of Viana, was married to Donna Magdalene of France, and dyed at Libourne, beeing misfortunately hurt with the ſplinter of a Launce, as hee there ranue at Tilt: hee was father of two children, that is to

26 Nauarre.

Genealogie of Nauarre.

ſay, Francis Phœbus and Katherine, who were King and Queene of Nauarre, and Earles of Foix, ſucceſſiuely the one after the other. Their ſecond ſonne was Iohn, who had the Vicounty of Narbonne for his portion, purchaſed by his father for readie money, and married Marie, who was daughter to Lewis, Duke of Orleance, who was French king, and the twelfth of that name. Paradin ſayes more truly, that ſhe was daughter to Charles, Duke of Orleance, of whome were borne, Gaſton of Foix, Duke of Nemours, who dyed in the battaile of Rauenna, and Germaine, who was ſecond wife to Fernand, the Catholicke King, and after that ſhee was ſecondly married to Fernand of Arragon, Duke of Calabria, lawfull ſon to Fredericke king of Naples, who dyed being Viceroy of Valencia. A

This Iohn Vicount of Narbone, was Gouernour of Daulphiné, and afterwards of Guyenne, a hardie and valiant Knight, renowned in the warres againſt the Engliſh, and in thoſe of Italy, whither hee went with King Charles the eighth, in great credite and authoritie, and afterwards dyed in the raigne of King Lewis the twelfth at Eſtampes where he lies buried. B

The third ſonne of Earle Gaſton, and Donna Leonora, was Peter borne at Pau in the countrey of Bearne, the yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, forty nine, who gaue himſelfe to ſtudie, and did chooſe an eccleſiaſticall life, vnder the gouernement of his great Vncle, the Cardinall of Foix, Biſhoppe of Leſcar, and the Popes Legate in Daulphiné and Prouence: after whoſe death hauing profited at the Vniuerſities of Tholouſa, Pauia, and Ferrara, in the ciuill and canon Lawes, hee was alſo by Pope Sixtus the fourth, made Cardinall of the title of Saint Coſmo and Damian, beeing before Biſhop of Vannes, and prouided of many rich Benefices, by the fauour of Francis Duke of Brittaine his brother-in law, who had married his ſiſter Ladie Margaret of Foix, mother to Queene Anne. C

The fourth ſonne of the Earle of Foix, and of Donna Leonora, was called Iames, hee onely of all their children was borne in Nauarre, and was a Knight highly eſteemed, and honoured by King Lewis the twelfth, with the Order of Saint Michaell, and with the leading of an hundred men at armes: in the warres of Lombardie and elſewhere; he purchaſed the commendation of a valiant and wiſe Captaine, but hee dyed young, hauing not attayned to the age of thirtie yeares, and was neuer married. Hee left certaine baſe children, who profeſſed an eccleſiaſticall life, and did poſſeſſe rich benefices, euen till the later dayes of King Francis the firſt. D

Beſides theſe foure ſonnes, Earle Gaſton and Donna Leonora had fiue daughters, the firſt whoſe name was Mary, was married to William Marquis of Montferrat, who, by the Popes authoritie, erected the church of Caſall into a Biſhops Sea: this Ladie was brought to her husband, the yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, ſixtie ſixe, by her brother Peter of Foix, by Bernard the Baſtard of Foix, Godfrey Baſileac, Biſhoppe of Riues, by the Biſhop of Conſerans, and Peter of Sobreuille, and by diuers other Lords and Knights: Of this marriage no male children were borne, but daughters onely, the eldeſt of whom was married to Lewis, ſonne to Thomas Marquis of Saluſſes, and theſe daughters did not ſucceed their father in the Marquiſat, but a brother of his. Ioane ſecond daughter of Earle Gaſton, and Donna Leonora, was married to the Earle of Armagnac, ſonne to him who was ſlaine by the commaundement of King Lewis the eleuenth: with which marriage, the King beeing diſpleaſed, the Earle was ſo perſecuted, as hee was conſtrained to flie for ſafetie into Caſtile, where truſting to the faire ſpeeches, oathes, and promiſes of the Cardinall of Albi, the French Kings Ambaſſadour, in the ſayd kingdome, beeing returned into France, hee was there cruelly ſtabbed to death with daggers. Whereuppon his wife Donna Ioane of Foix, returned into Bearne, hauing had no children by him: The third daughter was Marguerite, wife to Francis the laſt Duke of Brittaine, by whome hee had two daughters, Anne and Izabella; Izabella dyed young, but Anne was married to two French Kings ſucceſſiuely, Charles the eighth, and Lewis the twelfth: by Lewis ſhe had two daughters Claude and Rene; Claude who was firſt promiſed to Charles, who was ſince king of Spain, and afterwards Emperor, the fifth of that name, did marrie Francis of Valois then duke of Angouleſme, and afterwards French king, firſt of that name. Rene was married to Hercules of Eſté duke of Ferrara: the Earle Gaſton and his wife D. Leonora, had beſides theſe, Catherine, married to the Earle of Candale, and mother of 3. children, E F

the

A the eldeſt of whome was Lord of Candale, the ſecond Arch-biſhoppe of Bourdeaux, and the third who was a daughter named Anne, Queene of Hungarie and Bohemia, wife to Vladiſlaus, ſon to Caſimir King of Polonia. This Vladiſlaus firſt king of Bohemia, had before married Donna Beatrix of Arragon, widdow to King Mathias of Hungarie, for whoſe ſake the Hungarians choſe him for their King: but he was diuorced from her in regard of her looſe life, and afterwards maried this Ladie Anne of Foix, who was brought to her husband thorough the Dutchie of Milan, at that time poſſeſſed by the French, and by the cittie of Venice, the great friend and ally of this King, Leonardo Lauredan being at that time Duke thereof. Of this marriage was borne Lewis, who ſucceeded his fa-
B ther in the kingdomes of Bohemia and Hongarie, husband to Queene Marie of Caſtile, who was ſiſter to the Emperour Charles, and a daughter named Anne married to Ferdinand of Auſtria, afterwards Emperour and Brother to Charles, and by her, king of Bohemia and Hungarie, after the death of his father-in-law King Lewis, of the which Fernand and Anne, the Emperour Maximilian was borne, and many other children: the fifth daughter of Earle Gaſton, and Donna Leonora of Nauarre, dyed vnmarried, beeing onely promiſed to the Duke of Medina Celi, iſſued from the ſame houſe of Foix, and was called after her mothers name Leonora. This houſe of Foix and Nauar hath brought foorth this of-ſpring of great and illuſtrious Princes, giuing to Chriſtendome at one time foure Queenes, who were couſin-germaines, namely, Catherine Queene of Nauar, C Germaine Queene of Caſtile and Arragon, Anne Queene of France, and Anne Queene of Bohemia and Hungary.

Francis Phœbus, the foure and thirtith King of Nauarre.

LEt vs now go forward with our Hiſtorie: after Queene Leonora's deceaſe, her ſonnes ſonne Francis Phœbus of the age of twelue yeares, ſucceeded by right to the Crowne
D of Nauarre, the yeare, one thouſand, foure hundred, ſeuenty nine, beeing brought vp in his Earledome of Foix, and Lordſhip of Bearne, vnder the gouernement of Donna Magdaleine of France his mother, and the Cardinall his Vncle: but three yeares were expired before hee durſt paſſe into his Kingdome, by reaſon of the ſeditions which ſuddenly after the Queene Leonora's deceaſe, were renewed betwixt the Beaumontois, the Earle of Lerin beeing their head, who held the Cittie of Pampelona, and thoſe of Grammont, who followed Pedro of Peralta the Conſtable, and Philip of Nauarre the Marſhall, who had for their forts the places of Eſtella, Sangueſſa, Olita, and a great part of the cittie of Tudela.

Seditions attacked by thoſe of Beaumont and Grammont in Nauarre.

The young Kings mother made a iourney thither, as appeareth by letters graunted
E by her this ſame yeare, dated at Pampelona; where ſhee laboured (though in vaine) to ſettle peace and quietneſſe in the Countrey: diuers Prelates and great Lords of Caſtile and Arragon did in like manner, but to none effect, go about to appeaſe theſe obſtinate ſeditious perſons, who were hardened in their wickedneſſe. The Faction of Grammont was much diſcontented, to ſee the Earle of Lerin married to a Ladie of the bloud royal, ſiſter to King Fernand of Caſtile, and for that hee was poſſeſſed of the cittie of Pampelona, the chiefe of the Kingdome, they ſayd, that hee thought to make himſelfe king of Nauarre. Theſe quarrels beeing ſharpely purſued by either ſide, it happened that Philip of Nauarre, ſucceſſour to his father in the office of Marſhall, and in hatred to the Earle of Lerin, did ſurprize the cittie of Viana, but he could not get the caſtle, wherein a knight
F of the houſe of Gongora was captaine for the Earle: and beeing out of hope of beeing able to keepe the towne, ſo great was his hatred towards the Earle, as hauing complotted with Don Iohn of Riuera, Gouernor of Logrogno for the king of Caſtile, Captaine Mudarre, and other Spaniſh knights, he deliuered the towne into their hands: the which deed of his, the Earle of Lerin greatly reſenting, endeauored to recouer that loſſe, which did not ſo much touch him nor his faction, as the whole Realme in generall, and hee, did Viana ſurpriſed by the Marſhall Philip.

Exploites of the Earle of Lerin.

ſo well beſtirre himſelfe, as he did not onely recouer Viana, but Larraga likewiſe, which had beene before that time poſſeſſed by the king of Caſtile, and if he had beene as ſtrong as hee was couragious and skilfull in martiall affaires, he would, without all doubt, haue recouered the places of Saint Vincent, la Garde, and Arcos, the which hee attempted: but hee was too weake: with this good happe, yet neuertheleſſe hee tooke the towne of Miranda vppon Arga, and cauſed thoſe which held it, to leape into the riuer. In theſe troubles was the Realme of Nauarre, when this young King, Francis Phœbus, came to the Crowne, in danger vppon ſuch like occaſions, to haue the kings of Caſtile attempt ſome thing to his preiudice, as well thorough the euill offices of the chiefe of the Factions, as by the ſuperfluous duties of the Captaines of the frontiers, who to bee accounted good and profitable ſeruants, do oftentimes draw their maſters into vniuſt quarrels, contrarie to their owne minds and diſpoſitions.

28 Caſtile.

Parliament at Toledo.

The Court of Caſtile remayned yet at Toledo, in the which cittie in the beginning of the yeare, one thouſand, foure hundred, eightie, the kings had called a Parlament: there the Deputies of the citties, who were accuſtomed to haue voyces, hauing well weighed and conſidered the diſpoſition of the royall reuenue, which was alienated to particular perſons, in recompences, perpetuall rents, ſuperfluous gifts, and other ſuch like waſtes, which were not well digeſted, did craue reformation thereof, and demaunded to haue thoſe things which had beene giuen from the Crowne, to be reſtored to the ſame: and they were the more inſtant therein, becauſe they did fore-ſee, that if the kings did not looke to it, neceſſitie would conſtraine them, to ſeeke money in another nature, and to charge the people with new tributes and taxes.

Conſultation touching the reunion of the royall reuenue.

The matter beeing conſulted on by the kings, the Cardinall of Spaine, and by other Prelates, Lords, and Knights, it was determined, that regard ſhould bee had to the peoples admoniſhment: but concerning the manner how, the opinions were diuerſe: ſome thought it fit, that whatſoeuer had beene alienated ſhould be vnited againe: others were of opinion, to call that onely in queſtion which had beene euill employed: others ſayd, that no diſtinction ought to be made in that point, but either to take all, or leaue all. Vpon this diuerſitie of opinions, the Kings knew not what to reſolue; but wrote their letters to the great Lords of Spaine to come to Toledo to giue their opinions concerning that buſineſſe, and if ſome of them could not come thither in perſon, that they ſhould ſet downe in writing, what they thought was fit to be done, and to ſend it. The moſt part of them thought it requiſite, that the whole reuenew of the Crowne ſhould be reunited.

Whereupon the Cardinall did ſecretly aduiſe the Kings, to make this difference in the matter: namely, to take away from thoſe vppon whom the late King Henry had beſtowed any thing, that is to ſay, from the Lords and Knights which had beene the cauſe of the troubles, and had followed the Prince Don Alphonſo: and not to mention thoſe gifts which they themſelues had giuen vnto ſuch as had ſerued them. In theſe difficulties the Kings made this concluſion: That all thoſe who had gifts, reuenues, and other ſuch like penſions out of the ordinarie reuenue of the Crowne, ſhould by a certaine prefixed time come and ſhew cauſe, how and wherefore they had obtayned ſuch graunts: and Friar Fernand of Talauera was appoynted to ſearch out the truth, and ſet downe an order, vppon whoſe good conſcience and integritie, all men repoſed great truſt, and to ſatisfie euery man according vnto right and reaſon; who with other aſſiſtants did ſo order the matter, as hee brought backe three millions of reuenues into the kings coffers, and diuers men had their graunts confirmed, others were cut off in part, others had all taken from them, and others enioyed their penſions during their liues. The Eſtates were likewiſe very much buſied about other matters, and euery day was a Councell held, in fiue ſeuerall chambers: one was for the State, another for the adminiſtration of iuſtice, another for the affaires of Arragon and Sicill, another for the buſineſſes of the commons, and for the iuriſdictions of the Hermandades or brotherhoods, and the fift and laſt, for the treaſure and royall reuenue.

At the ſame time iuſtice, which had a long time beene baniſhed out of Spayne, was called home againe and reuerenced, and diuers wicked perſons puniſhed, among whome

Hernand

A Hernand Alarcon, the familiar friend and inſtigator of the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo, a ſeditious and turbulent perſon, was beheaded, by meanes of which example, euery man ſubmitted himſelfe to law, and framed himſelfe to a ciuill and honeſt life: then did the tyrannies of great men ceaſe, the thefts and robberies of their followers were ſuppreſſed, in ſuch ſort, as the fields were as ſafe as good townes, thoſe things which were vſurped were reſtored to the right owners: the ſeates of iuſtice were well ordered, and diuers good lawes and Edicts were made. Hernand Alarcon conſpicuous.

It was there enacted, that the Iewes and Moores in townes and citties, ſhould dwell in ſtreetes and places by themſelues. All Noblemen were forbidden to carrie Guards a-B bout with them, to place Crownes vppon their ſhields and armes, or to haue vſhers to carrie maces or roddes before them, vnleſſe they were Magiſtrates, nor to vſe titles in their letters, belonging to Princes and Soueraigne Lords. And for that the Kings felt their conſciences burthened with the death of many poore people, who had followed them in their laſt warres, whoſe widowes and children were in great neceſſitie, they appoynted a ſumme of twentie millions of Marauidis to bee diſtributed vnto ſuch people by Friar Hernand of Talauera, as he ſhould thinke it meete and conuenient, thinking by laying this charge vppon him, to diſcharge themſelues. Charity of K. Fernand and Queene Iſabel.

In this aſſembly of the Eſtates in the moneth of May, the Infant Don Iohn was, accor-
C ding to the cuſtome of Spayne, ſworne vnto, as Prince of the Aſturia's, and heire to the Kingdomes of Caſtile and Leon, in the preſence of the Prelats and Lords, whoſe names follow: The Cardinall Don Pedro Gonçales of Mendoza, Arch-biſhoppe of Siuill, and withall, Biſhoppe of Siguença: Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, Biſhoppe of Palence, Friar Alphonſo of Burgos, Biſhop of Cordoua, with others of the Clergie. For the Nobilitie and State militarie, Don Alphonſo of Cardegna, Maſter of Saint Iames, Don Pero Fernandes of Velaſco, Conſtable of Caſtile, and Earle of Haro: Don Alphonſo Henriques great Admirall of Caſtile, and the Kings Vnkle: Don Pero Aluares Oſorio, Marquis of Aſtorga, and Earle of Tranſtamara: Don Aluaro of Mendoza, Earle of Caſtro: Don Lorenzo Suares of Mendoza, Earle of Crugna: Don Iniego Lopes of Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla, Don Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, Earle of Miranda: Don Fernand Aluares of Toledo,
D Earle of Oropeſa, Don Guttiere de Sottomajor Earle of Benalcaçar: Don Bertrand de la Cueua, Earle of Ledeſma, Don Diego Fernandes of Quignones, Earle of Luna, Don Iohn de Ribera, Lord of Montemajor, Don Aluar Peres of Guzman, Lord of Saint Eulalia: Don Guttiere of Cardegna, great Commaunder of Leon, with diuers others of name and place: For the third eſtate, the Deputies of the Citties on this ſide, and beyond the mounts, did take the accuſtomed oath, to wit, for old Caſtile, Burgos, Leon, Segobia, Auila, Soria, Zamora, Toro, and Salamanca: and for the other part, Toledo, Guadalajara, and Cuenca: and for Andaluſia, Siuill, Cordoua, and Iaen, and the Cittie of Murcia for that Countrey: Diuers Lords likewiſe of the Realme Arragon were preſent at this ſolemnitie, as Don Raymond Biſhoppe of Vrgell, and Don Philip of Arragon
E baſtard-ſonne to the late Prince Charles, Nephew to the King, and couſin germaine to Prince Iohn. Prince Ioane ſworne vnto with great ſolemnitie.

At this aſſembly, Don Andrea de Cabrera, and Donna Beatrix of Bouadilla his wife were created Marquiſes of Moya, with graunt of twelue hundred vaſſals neere to Segobia for the good ſeruices which they had done to the kings Don Ferdinand, and Donna Iſabella, at whoſe table, the more to honour them, they did eate, the ſame day. The Parlament or aſſembly of States being ended, the Court came to Medina del campo, where they began to take great paines to haue the ordonances of the Eſtates executed, and put in practiſe, vppon the vſurpations, tyrannies, quarrels, and enmities which were paſt. In the ſame towne a knight, whoſe name was Aluar Ianes of Lugo, was put to death, who
F being couetous to adde to his owne great wealth the goods of a certaine Cittizen, hired a certaine Notarie or Scriuener to make ſome falſe and counterfeite contracts, and to the end the deceit might not be knowne, hee foorth-with payed him his hire, cutting his throate, and burying him ſecretly in the back-ſide of his owne houſe: the which murther was diſcouered by the diligent inquirie of the poore widdow, whoſe husband was neuer ſeene abroade, ſince hee was ſeene to go into the Knights houſe.

A murtherous gentleman executed.

This Gentleman was taken, conuicted, and beheaded notwithſtanding his great friends and kindred, who offered fortie thouſand Duckets for to ſaue his life, which was a great ſumme in thoſe dayes, which ſundrie of the Councel wiſhed the Kings to take: but theſe Princes beeing great Iuſticers, would not hearken to it: but the Knight was executed according to his deſerts. A King Fernand and Queene Iſabell zealous of Iuſtice.

The yeare 1481. the Kings departed from Medina, and did take leaue the one of the other for a certaine time, the Queene went to Vailliodolit, and the King made a voyage into Arragon with intent to haue the like oath made, there to his ſon Prince Iohn, as the States of Caſtile had done at Toledo, and to order the State of his owne patrimoniall Kingdome, as alſo to demaund a certaine ſubſidie of money of his ſubiects there.

29 Nauarre.

The King beeing at Sarragoſſa, the Cardinall of Foix, and his brother Don Iames, Vnkles to the young King Francis Phœbus of Nauarre, came thither to him, to beſeech him to ayde him with forces and meanes to ſuppreſſe his audacious ſubiects, which did diſturbe the peace of his Kingdome, who contemning his youth, did commit infinite tyrannies there, whom king Fernand did moſt louingly receiue as his Nephewes, ſonnes to Queene Leonora his ſiſter, and did promiſe concerning their demaunds, to performe the office of a Chriſtian Prince, friend, and neere kinſman to the young king. During his aboade at Sarragoſſa, the Marſhall of Nauarre, who was at Tudela, had ordinarie intelligence with diuers Caſtillan Lords, ſome of whome knowing their maſters will, did beginne to treate of meanes for the pacification of the factions of Beaumont and Grammont, by whome the kingdome was ſpoiled. Amongſt thoſe which did moſt earneſtly employ themſelues therein, was a Friar, Preacher to king Fernand, whoſe name was Abarca, who dealt in ſuch ſort, as hee agreed vpon a marriage betwixt Philip of Nauarre the Marſhall, and a daughter of the Earle Lewis of Lerin, which he thought would bee a meanes, that theſe two Lords would forget all former hatred, and become heartie and affectionate friends, by whoſe example, the reſt of the factions would do the like, but the poore Friar was deceyued in his hope: for thoſe of the Grammontois faction, rejecting this marriage, as hurtfull to their ſide, and fearing to loſe ſo mighty a Captaine, did ſo preuayle with the Marſhall Philip, as notwithſtanding that matters were in ſuch forwardneſſe, as neither of the parties could go backe with honour and credit, the Marſhall neuertheleſſe refuſed that allyance, and went wholly backe from his former promiſes: whereat the Earle of Lerin beeing extreamely enraged, and beeing of a haughtie and proud ſpirit, was ſore reuenged, by killing the Marſhall, as hee rode from Sangueſſa to Villa-franca to ſpeake with Don Iohn de Ribera, the Earle hauing attended for him vpon the way, as well for to chaſtiſe his lightneſſe and inconſtancie, as for iealouſie that hee had, concerning the buſineſſe that the Marſhall went about in conferring with that Caſtillan, doubting ſome treaſon as well towards himſelfe as the kingdome, like to that of Viana which he ſtill remembred, and could by no meanes forget. B C D

The Eſtates of Nauarre at Taſulla.

In this manner, the father and the ſonne, both of them Marſhals of the Realme of Nauarre, did periſh by one ſelf ſame hand: in which Office Peter of Nauarre ſucceeded, who was younger brother to Philip, and the fourth of that family, who had held the ſame dignitie. The Conſtable Pedro de Peralta was at the ſame time out of the Realme, who hauing with great labour obtayned abſolution from the Pope, for the murther committed on the perſon of Don Nicholas of Echauarri, Biſhop of Pampelona, did publikely acknowledge his fault in the cathedrall Church of Valencia, and liued not long after, leauing one onely daughter who was called Ioane of Peralta, heire of his houſe, who was wife to Don Troilo Carillo of Acugna, ſonne to the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, of whome we haue often ſpoken in this Hiſtorie. E Biſhop of Pampelona ſlaine by D. Pedro de Peralta.

This houſe of Peralta, deſcended from the royall ſtocke of Nauarre, and by the death of Pedro of Peralta, the office and dignitie of Conſtable ended in that family, the ſucceſſors whereof were called Earles of Saint Steephen, and great Chamberlaines to the Kings of Nauarre. Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin, entring into that Office was afterward diſpoſſeſſed thereof, and the Conſtableſhip fell ſince to Don Alphonſo, grandchild to Pedro of Peralta, the heires of whoſe houſe, in proceſſe of time, were called Marquis of Falſes, a towne in Nauarre. F

Marquis of Falſes.

Ciuill

A Ciuill warres ſpoyling after this manner the poore Kingdome of Nauarre, the young Kings vncles returned into the Realme, accompanied with diuers Lords and Knights of the King of Caſtiles Court, who promiſed them that if by faire meanes, they could not bring the Kings rebellious ſubiects to his obedience, the which hee wiſhed them in any caſe to trie, that he would then furniſh him with men, munition and money for the warres: theſe Lords being come to the towne of Tafalla, they did forthwith aſſemble the generall Eſtates, by vertue of a commiſſion which they had from the King, the Cardinall and Lord Iames of Foix promiſing free and ſure acceſſe and ſafe conduct to all men. The Eſtates of Nauarre at Tafalla.

B The Deputies of the three Eſtates of the Kingdome being aſſembled, and hauing vnderſtood by the Cardinall the cauſe why they were come into Nauarre, wherevnto were ioyned the French King Lewis the eleuenths letters, which did exhort the Nauarrois to continue obedient to their King, and to acknowledge and ſerue him as faithfull ſubiects ought to doe, prouiding thereby, for the welfare, reſt and quiet, of their country: they did all with one generall conſent make anſwere, that the Lords and people of Nauarre, did neuer meane to forſake their obedience towards Francis Phœbus the young King, whom they did acknowledge for their naturall and lawfull Prince, but that on the contrary they had euer till now beene iealous and fearefull, in regard of his youth and abſence from the Realme, leaſt ſome ſtranger ſhould haue made himſelfe
C Maiſter thereof, and therefore they did no leſſe deſire his comming then himſelfe, and they humbly beſought him to make haſt as a thing moſt neceſſary: and if his comming had beene hindred by meanes of the ambition and tiranny of a few priuate perſons, they gaue him to vnderſtand, that it was to the great griefe of others, and in no ſort occaſioned by common conſent; therefore they intreated him to come in a lucky hower, ſeeing they were ready to receiue and honour him, accordingly as it did become them. The Cardinall and his brother vnderſtanding ſo pleaſing and deſired an anſwer, did forthwith write thereof to the young King Francis Phœbus, and to King Fernand his great vncle. And becauſe whatſoeuer was done, was to no purpoſe vnleſſe thoſe two great houſes of the Earle of Lerin and the Marſhall Don Pedro were reconciled,
D the Cardinall did vſe the beſt meanes hee could to make them friends: but by reaſon of their inueterate quarrels hee found matter enough whereon to ſet his iudgement and induſtry a worke, and alſo incredible reſiſtance againſt his brothers authority and his owne, ſo as diuers times they were in deſpaire of the matter: neuertheleſſe, knowing that by perſeuerance, all difficulties are ſurmounted, and that in ſuch holy and laudable actions we ought to vſe our beſt endeauors, they laboured ſo earneſtly therein, as in the end they thought that they had wholy reconciled them. And for a greater and more ſtrict band of this alliance, this aſſembly of the Eſtates beeing in the time of Lent, the Cardinalls would needs haue the Conſtable and the Marſhall to receiue the Sacrament togeather, in an hoſtie parted betwixt them in the Monaſtery of Sr. Sebaſtian in Tafalla. Perſeuerance ouer-commeth all difficulties. Feigned reconciliation betwixt the Earl of Lerin and the Marſhall of Nauarre

E But as the heart of man is oftentimes different from the outward ſhew, ſo this reconciliation prooued but feigned and counterfeit; for notwithſtanding promiſes, oths, and all reſpect to Religion which are oftentimes but maskes to euill intents, the Earle of Lerin thinking with theſe ceremonies to haue ſuffitiently ſecured his aduerſary, did determine to kill him vpon the firſt proffered occaſion, perſwading himſelfe that if he could diſpatch this man, as hee had done his father and brother in time before, that then in Nauarre, hee ſhould haue no more great enemies left to make head againſt him. Therefore vpon the very next day after their reconcilement which was good Friday, he hauing intelligence that the Marſhall rode from Tafalla towards Tudela, or elſe to the Monaſtery of Oliua, hee came with a great troupe vnder the hill of Agnorba and there lay in F ambuſh intending to aſſaile him on the ſodaine as hee ſhould paſſe that way. The Marſhall who feared no ſuch matter, came riding in the company of the Earle of Saint Steuens the Conſtable of Peraltas ſucceſſor with their traine, and beeing come neere to the place where his death was prepared, Gods will was that hee had ſome inckling of the Earles treachery, wherevpon on a ſodaine hee galloped backe againe as faſt as hee could, beeing ſo hardly purſued by his enemy, as without the aſſiſtance of Arnaud Treachery of the Earle of Lerin againſt the Marſhall.

Gouernor

gouernour of Vnçul, who ſpeedily thruſt him into a Church, he had beene there ſlaine. A
The Earle beeing madde that the Marſhall had eſcaped, did the very ſame day execute his furie vpon other Gramontois, for with his owne hand hee ſlew Leon de Garro the baſtard, the Arch-prieſt Mendigorria left Iohn de Velez of Medran for dead, with diuerſe others ſlaine and hurt, and then returned home to his houſe: not long after that, certaine of the family of Artieda, hauing murthered ſome of the houſe of Ayanz, the murtherers were vpheld and receiued by the Conſtable the Earle of Beaumont, by reaſon whereof, thoſe of the family of Arane, who had euer followed the Beaumontois faction, reuolted from their ſide to thoſe of Grammont. Theſe things are ſet downe by ſome, to bee more likely to haue beene done after the aſſembly of the eſtates, and they ſay, B that it is not to bee beleeued that the Conſtable would ſo much forget himſelfe, as to commit ſuch an act the next day after his reconcilement, which was made in ſo religious a manner, eſpecially ſeeing the Cardinall and his brother were in the realme, and the eſtates of the kingdome there aſſembled, and they rather beleeue, that this quarrell was renewed a long time afterward in the reigne of Queene Catherine, vppon ſome new wrongs offered betwixt theſe Lords.

Murther committed by the Earle of Lerin.

30 Caſtile. The decrees of the Eſtates executed.

The peace of Caſtile, according to the determination of the States at Toledo, was vertuouſly procured by Queene Iſabell, who in her husbands abſence remained at Valiodolit, beeing accompanied and councelled by the Cardinall of Spaine, the Earle of Benauent and others; by whoſe aduiſe were ſent into Galicia, to order the affaires of C that Prouince, which had been greeuouſly ſhaken by the fore-paſſed tempeſts, Don Ferdinand d' Acugna a good and a vertuous Knight, ſonne to the Earle of Buendia, with title of Gouernor, vnto whom the Licenciat Garci Lopes de Chinchilla of the Kings councell, and a man of great integrity, was ioyned in qualitity of Corrigidor, or Iudge, who found much to be reformed there; for diuerſe tyrants oppreſſed their neighbours, vſurped the temporall and ſpirituall patrimony and reuenews of the Church, not caring for God, the King, nor Iuſtice, nor acknowledging any ſuperiority, and did keepe backe the Kings tribute. The citties of Lugo, Orenſe, Mondognedo, nor the townes of Biuero and Corunna were exempted from ſuch calamities, in regard whereof the Gouernour and the Corrigidor, accompanied with two hundred horſe, went to the citty of S. Iames, D there to make their reſidence, and to begin to order the affaires according to the forme of law: The inhabitants of Saint Iames ſeeing their company ſo ſmall, were afraide that they were too weake to take in hand to bridle ſo many tyrants as were in that countrey, did make ſome difficultie to let them into the citty: but at the laſt being ſatiſfied by the reaſons of the Licenciat, they opened their gates, and promiſed to their power to aide and aſſiſt them to execute iuſtice: wherefore they began to fall to worke, and they made ſuch executions, without partialitie or reſpect of perſons, as they were not afraide to ſtrike off the head of the Marſhall Pero Parâo, who had committed infinite miſchiefes, ſo as in leſſe then three moneths, more then one thouſand fiue hundred perſons, attainted with notorious crimes worthy of death, went out of the countrey of Galicia: and theſe E Commiſſioners did raze downe to the ground diuerſe ſtrong houſes, which ſerued for places of retreate to theeues and robbers: by meanes of which executions, euery one did acknowledge his dutie, and there were many, who without any conſtraint by iuſtice, did reſtore that which they held of other mens, by meanes whereof Don Ferdinand de Acugna, and Garci Lopes de Chinchilla got much honor and credit.

Iuſtice eſtabliſhed in Galicia.

31 Spaniſh Army in Sicilie.

This yeare, fiftie ſhips of warre, with men and munition, were ſet forth out of Biſcay, Guipuſcoa and Caſtile, vnder the title of warre againſt the Turkes, wherevnto the people of Biſcay did contribute, not preiudicing their priuiledges and exemptions, onely for the preſent occaſion of ſo holy a warre, the Armie met together at Laredo, and was ſent into Sicill, vnder the conduct of Don Franciſco Henriques, ſonne to the Admirall F of Caſtile, and ſerued at the taking of Ottranto, which the Turkes had taken from Don Ferdinand the baſtard of Arragon, who at the ſame time reigned at Naples: Before the Armie departed from Laredo, the ſtandards and banners of the ſhips were bleſſed, Don Iohn de Ortega Pouruoier of Villafranca, ſinging a ſollemn maſſe: then they ſailed alongſt the coaſt of Spaine, and ioyned with other twenty veſſels that came from Galicia, ſo as the

A the whole army of Caſtile conſiſted of three ſcore and tenne ſhips gallantly rigged and furniſhed, who ſayling towards Ottranto perceiued the army of Portugall to be there before them. By this ſuccor the towne was recouered from the Turkes, who yeelded it vp vpon the newes of the death of their Emperour Mahumet, which happened at the ſame time. The Turkes being gonne forth of Italy, and the ſuſpition of other enterpriſes ceaſing, the Spaniſh and Portugall ſhips returned home into their owne country.

Rigor of the Spaniſh Inquiſition moderated.

The firſt acts of the new Inquiſition in Spaine were at that time ſo ſharpe and violent, as this yeere 1481. Don Pero Gonçales de Mendoza Cardinall of Spaine vpon the B extreame complaints which the Conuerts did make, by reaſon of their vniuſt perſecutions were enforced to take ſome milder and gentler courſe: for there were already more then three thouſand houſe-holds deſtroied and rooted out, onely in Siuill, and the Dioceſſe thereof. For theſe cauſes the Cardinall and other Prelats met together to moderat the cruelty and violence of the pittileſſe Inquiſitors. Then friar Thomas of Torquemada, a Iacobin, was choſen chiefe inquiſitor: who by the Kings leaue did appoint diuers Iudges in the Prouinces of Spaine, which by the Popes authority did enquire of euery ones faith and manners. This iuriſdiction hath beene oftentimes ſince then amplified and reformed vntill that the tribunalls and ſeates were eſtabliſhed in manner following. Valiodolit, and Calaorra on that ſide of the C mounts towards Burgos, and Toledo and Cuença on the other ſide, Murcia in her owne iuriſdiction: Siuil and Cordoua in Andaluzia: and Erena in Extremadura: then after the conqueſt of Granado in the ſame city.

Frier Thomas of Torquemada.

Power of the Inquiſitors.

The Inquiſition was ſucceſſiuely receiued into Arragon, at Saragoſſa, and Valencia, and at Barcelona for Cattalognia: All which Prouinces are twelue in number. Nauarre anſwereth to Calaorra, the ſeate whereof was tranſported to Logrogno for better eaſe and commodity. The knowledge of theſe Iudges Inquiſitors did at the ſame time chiefely extend to the Iewes, and Moores, which were conuerted, and yet neuertheleſſe did ſecretly adhere to their old ſects: then to heretikes, and ſuch as were reuolted from the Catholike faith, to Magitians, Blaſphemers, and thoſe that were attainted
D with the ſinne againſt nature. The generall Inquiſition remayning at Court neere to the Kings perſon did rule and were chiefe ouer all theſe other Tribunalls. At the ſame time Pope Sixtus the fifth, did allow and authorize all that the Cardinall and his Councell had decreed concerning that matter, and he did confirme the election of frier Thomas of Torquemada of the order of the Preachers, and Prior of the Monaſtery of Santa Cruz in Segobia, vnto whom Diego de Merla the Aſſiſtant of Siuill, and Pero Martines Camagno the Kings Secretary were ioyned as coadiutors. The firſt effect of the Inquiſition after that it was ordained, was to ſet downe an edict that all Heretikes and Apoſtotaes ſhould appeare, and re-unite themſelues to the Church of Rome, acknowledging their offences: More then ſeuenteene thouſand perſons, did appeare
E at this commaundement, who were enioyned what to ſay and doe; then they proceeded againſt the obſtinate and rebellious, more then two thouſand of them were burned and their goods confiſcated, and taken from their children and heires: the ſame ſentence was executed vpon thoſe that were abſent and dead, digging vp their bones and burning them: in ſuch ſort as the Inquiſition continuing thus rigorous, great numbers did leaue Caſtile, and with-drew themſelues into the Kingdomes of Nauarre and Portugall; others went into France, England and to other farre Countries.

Sharpe and rigorous executions of the Inquiſitors.

Let vs now returne vnto the Court, which was then at Valiodolit where the Queene of Caſtile was accompanied after the accuſtomed manner with a greate
F traine of Ladies and Gentlewomen, the Nobility (who in theſe latter times giue themſelues wholie to the exercize of armes, and doe for the moſt part contemne all other courſe of life which cauſeth them and not without cauſe to be eſteemed of all men as people very vnproffitable in time of peace) did in this Court thinke vpon nothing elſe then for to ſerue and court the Ladies and Gentlewomen, and gaue themſelues to ſuch other like vaine and idle pleaſures, accuſtomed in Princes Courts, and moſt

of

of all in that of Spaine from whence did ſpring ſuch fruites as vice doth produce, A namely quarrels and diſhonour and loſſe, which euills had almoſt ſpred themſelues from the particular to the generall, corrupting the publike peace, by troubles, ſeditions and mutinous wars.

Quarrel betwixt D. Frederike Henriques and Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman.

Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman, ſonne to Don Gonçall de Guzman Lord of Torall, being in an euening in talke with Donna Maria Manuel in the Queenes preſence Chamber, was interrupted in his ſpeech by Don Frederike Henriques eldeſt ſonne to the Ad-mirall, who either thorough the inſolency of his youth, or elſe to content Don Gut- tiere de Sottomajor his brother-in-law, who made loue to that Lady, and was loath to haue an other man walke in his purlewes, cauſed Don Ramir to ariſe as hee ſate by B her, making as though he would haue gonne by him to haue ſpoken with Don Marine Zapate, and ſodainely ſate downe in his place by her, whereat Don Ramir beeing offended, beganne to murmure againſt Don Frederike, ſo as they threatned to baſtinado one an other, and fell to bitter and reproachfull ſpeeches: in ſuch manner as Don Ramir Nugnes his honour was greatly intereſſed: for Don Frederike going forth of the Queenes lodging called him drunkard, and baſe fellow, with many ſuch like bitter termes.
The Queene hauing notice of this quarrell, commaunded both of them to depart forth of the pallace, then ſhee confined Don Frederike to the Admirall his fathers lodgings and committed Don Ramir Nugnes to the keeping of Garci Laſo de la Vega, Maiſter of the Hall, vntill it were knowne who was in the fault, as alſo to keepe them from C hurting one an other in action as they had done a little before in words. Hauing vnderſtood afterwards that Don Frederike had committed the greateſt inſolency, her will was to haue them ſtill to keepe their Chambers till ſuch time as ſhee had made them friends.

Notwithſtanding which commaundement of the Queenes Don Frederike went abroad to a turnament which was held the next day following, by reaſon whereof the Queene was extreamely mooued againſt him and the Admirall his father, and told them that if they went about to vſe their power againſt Don Ramir Nugnes, hee ſhould finde thoſe to take his part as would not ſuffer him to ſuſteine any wrong or iniury at their hands. The Admirall finding the Queene to bee much diſpleaſed, did beginne D to humble himſelfe, and did aſſure her that Don Ramir needed not to feare any wrong either from himſelfe, his ſonne, or any of their followers; wherewith the Queene being contented did permit Don Ramir freely to goe out and come into the palace, acquainting him with what the Admirall had promiſed her, bidding him to relie vpon her word, and to walke abroade vnder her royall ſafe-gard and protection. Don Ramir was well aſſured by her Princely and comfortable words, and. Don Frederike had ſaluted him, and talked familiarly with him and met diuerſe times for the ſpace of three daies togither, yet notwithſtanding this outward ſhew of reconcilement, Don Ramir was vp-on a day baſtonaded as hee walked in the ſtreetes by certaine perſons vnknowne vnto him, who preſently after hauing their horſes ready, galloped away. E

The Queene beeing aduertized of this diſgrace offered to Don Ramir, contrary to the Admirals promiſe, and her owne royall aſſurance, did rigorouſly purſue the Ad-mirall, and did not leaue (hauing ſeized vpon two of the chiefeſt places that he had namely the caſtle of Simancas and Iofecco) vntill ſhee had his ſonnes perſon in her power, ſaying that thoſe blowes lighted vpon her ſelfe, and that ſhe had felt them, and that ſhee would know whether it were the manner of Spaine, that Kings ſhould bee ſo contemned and deſpiſed by their ſubiects. The Admirall notwithſtanding that hee was the Kings vncle, was conſtrained to deliuer his ſonne Don Frederike to the Queene; with promiſe that he ſhould receiue no harme in his perſon, who by the Queenes commaunde-ment (who would not ſee him) was ſent priſoner to the caſtle of Areualo. Don Ramir F

Effects of immoderate choller.

hauing receiued this diſgrace went to Torall with an intent to bee reuenged in a moſt rigorous manner, and was very glad to heare of his Aduerſaries impriſonment: but not contenting himſelfe with the right which the Queene ment to doe him, he inuen-ted meanes how to bee reuenged on him with his owne hands, wherefore diuers nights togither he cauſed the caſtle of Areualo to bee watched whether that he might finde any

A any meanes to enter the ſame, and to kill Don Frederike, who was to narrowly garded: ſo as hatred daily encreaſing in Don Ramir, who not being able to execute that which his choller had pretended, he did reſolue to kill the Admirall Don Alphonſo Henriques, father to his aduerſary, and in the ſame minde he rode ſecretly towards the Court, whether he had firſt of all ſent Aluaro de Valderas one of his confederats to obſerue the Admiralls actions, and to eſpy a fit time when hee might execute his deſeigne, that hee might aduertize him of the time and place. Aluaro de Valderas cunning enough in other matters, communicated the buſineſſe to Garci Franco, repoſing truſt in him, becauſe that his eldeſt ſonne had married not long before Don Ramir Nugnes ſiſter, but
B he found himſelfe deceiued, for Garci Franco did forthwith aduertize the Admirall thereof, to the end that hee might ſtand vpon his guarde: therefore Don Ramir loſt his labour, and had no other recompence for that painefull iourney, but onely daunger to bee drowned, as hee did inconſiderately and haſtily paſſe ouer a riuer neere to Saldaigne. The Admirall did not faile to complaine that the Queene, how that, notwithſtanding they were vpon termes of law, Don Ramir had practized againſt his life: this was done in the preſence of the Cardinall of Spaine, who afterward purſued the matter in his behalfe: wherevpon ſhee did write to Don Ramir Nugnes, commaunding him by no meanes to attempt any thing againſt the perſons of the Admirall, his kinſfolkes and ſeruants; and Pedro Mercado, who brought the Queenes letters, did demaund letters
C of aſſurance from him to performe that which the Queene commaunded him. Don Ramir anſwered the meſſenger that hee would ſend his brother to the Court with his anſwere, and hauing conſulted therevpon with his friends and kinsfolkes, within a few daies after, he did write to the Queene that hee did aſſure the Admirall and all his followers vntill her returne from Arragon, whither ſhe was then going, and for fiue and twenty daies after her returne, the which did content the Queene, who gaue the Admirall that letter.

D Frederike Henriques confined into Sicill where he marrieth with the counteſſe of Modica.

In the meane time Don Frederike was deliuered out of the caſtle of Areualo, and confined into Sicill, whether he was to haue gonne how-ſoeuer, to marry the Counteſſe and heire of Modica, who was one of the greateſt Ladies in the Iſland, and of D whom Queene Iſabella in time made more account, then of any other whatſoeuer, and it is reported that before King Fernand was married to her, his father King Iohn had thought to haue married him to this Counteſſe of Modica. When Don Ramir vnderſtood what they ment to doe with his Aduerſarie, hee thought that the puniſhment was not ſufficient for the offence which he had committed, therefore he ſent to beſeech the Queene, that it might pleaſe her to permit him to endeauour to repaire his loſt honour, and reputation, by taking vengeance on Don Frederike, or elſe to grant them the ſingle combate againſt him now whileſt ſhe held him in her power: The Queene anſwered that theſe combats were no matters belonging to women, and that therefore he ſhould content himſelfe till the King were returned, who would ſee that right ſhould
E be done vnto him, and that his honour and reputation ſhould bee maintained. Don Frederike went into Sicill, paſſing by Saragoſſa, and accompliſhed his marriage. Don Ramir Nugnes being continually ſollicited by the ſpirit of reuenge, perceiuing that hee could haue none other remedy, did purſue his former enterprize againſt the Admirall Don Frederikes father, and was with great difficulty conteined by his friends and kinsfolkes from killing of him, but at the laſt hee determined onely to crie quittance with him, and to entertaine him with baſtonadoes as they had ſerued him; the which hee executed after the Queenes returne from Arragon; ſo ſoone as the fiue and twentie daies were expired within the which terme he had promiſed not to touch him, the Court being at Medina del Campo: hee aſſailed the Admirall as he came out of the Queenes
F houſe in the company of the Marquis of Aſtorga, which being done Don Ramir fled away hauing men and horſes ready in the ſtreete and at the gates to further his eſcape, and tooke the ready way towards Tordeſillas, the bridge of the which place vpon Duero he paſſed by night, the gate being opened to him by one that had beene ſometime his ſeruant, and as then did ſerue the porter and kept the keyes. When he was paſſed ouer and the bridge locked againe, they tooke the keyes from the poore fellow and threw them them into the riuer, fearing to bee purſued by the Queenes people, and by the breake of A day he arriued at Villalobos, where he changed horſes and kept on for his greater ſuerty the way of Benauent though it were the longeſt, and paſſing the bridge of Caſtro Gon-çalo, he turned on his left hand towards Saint Ciprians Church into the which he en-tred, as triumphing of his victory, with his vncle Don Pedro de Guzman, and his brother Don Pedro Nugnes de Guzman, who waited for him there, and from thence, they came altogither to Torall, the which place they beganne to fortifie fearing that the Ad-mirall, who was a great Lord, and the Queene likewiſe would ſend thither to beſeege him. Ramir Nugnes leauing his vncle and his brother at Torall, came to Leon, where diuerſe of his friends met him, reioycing with him for what he had done. It is reported B that entring into the Church of Saint Dominike in the ſame city, where diuers of his predeceſſors were buried, after that he had ſaid his praiers he ſaid openly before all men, that ſince the time he had beene diſgraced, hee durſt not come into that Church, being aſhamed to be found in a place where the memories and remembrances of ſo many illuſtrious and honourable perſons did remaine: but hauing now recouered his owne honour, his fathers, and that of their whole family, he was boldly come to viſit them. Hauing afterward viſited his mother, and his betrothed Lady Donna Maria de Quignones youngeſt daughter to the Earle of Luna, and tarried a while in the city, he withdrew him-ſelfe by his vncles counſell to the caſtle of Auiados, where he told him that he ſhould be in greater ſafety then at Torall. Now after that this outrage was committed at Medina C del Campo, the Marquis of Aſtorga, beeing preſent thereat, did enforme the Queene who commaunded Alphonſo Oſorio to purſue Don Ramir Nugnes and his people with fifty horſe, who hauing rode all that night and the next day without finding any of thoſe whom he ſought for, he came and lodged at Villademor, a place not farre diſtant from Torall, where afterward, other captaines and ſouldiars ſent from the Queene did meet together, who made a ſhew as if they would beſeege the towne. The Bachelor La Font, came thither likewiſe to commaund Pedro de Guzman in the Queenes name to yeeld the place, hee receiued this anſwere, that if Don Ramir Nugnes had done any thing for the recouery of his honour, it was not a fault that did deſerue to haue him ſpoiled of his patrimony and goods, left him by his predeceſſors, therefore he beſought the Queene D to proceed in this buſineſſe by order of law, and if that Don Ramir ſhould be found guil-33 ty, then to puniſh him: with theſe ſpeeches they entertained La Font, and gained time Quarrell betweene D. Ramir Nugnes de Guzman and D. Frederike Henriques. to the end that Don Ramir might haue leaſure to fortifie himſelfe. Whileſt La Font went to the Court, the ſouldiars did much hurt in the country neere to Torall, and prouoked the Inhabitants and ſouldiars which were within the towne, to come forth and skirmiſh with them, albeit that Don Pedro de Guzman with-held them from ſo doing, as much as in him lay: for hee would not giue that aduantage to Don Ramires aduerſa-ries, to ſay that thoſe of Torall had fought againſt the Queenes forces, who commaunded Alphonſo de Quintanilla to vſe all fit meanes that hee could to take the towne and caſtle of Torall, Alphonſo hauing demaunded to ſpeake with Don Pedro de Guzman and E Pero Nugnes his Nephew, acquainted them with the Queenes reſolution, exhorting them not to delay the time till they brought the canon, they anſwered that they would in no ſort ſhew themſelues rebellious to the Queenes commaundement, but they onely entreated that Don Ramir might be proceeded againſt by the ordinary means of Iuſtice, which beeing graunted they were ready not onely to yeeld vp Torall, but the caſtle of Auiados in like manner, and namely if need required to put Don Ramirs perſon into the hands of the Duke of Medina Sidonia in hoſtage, or to Don Gomes Suares de Figueroa Earle of Feria: the which was agreed vpon betwixt them and ſigned by a Notarie, and a truce made betwixt the beſeegers and beſeeged whileſt that Alphonſo de Quintillana might goe and come from the Court. The Queene was at the ſame time gone F to Cordoua, wherefore Alphonſo being come to Valiodolit, and hauing conferred with the Admirall, ſent the diſpatch to Cordoua to the Queene, who appointed for depo-ſitor of D. Ramirs lands and perſon the Earle of Feria who had married D. Conſtance, D.

Ramirs Aunt; the Earle accepted it vpon condition, that he ſhould be aduertized fiue and twenty daies before the ſentence ſhould bee pronounced, and that the Kings ſhould

promiſe

A promiſe him by writing, not to demaund Don Ramirs perſon during the time of the proceſſe, for he would aſſure him whileſt he was in his power: On the other ſide, Don Ramir ſent to the King of Portugall to know, whether that if it ſhould happen, that a ſentence ſhould be pronounced againſt him which might touch his life and honour, hee would permit him to come into his Kingdome and Court in ſafety. Theſe things being graunted, Don Ramir was brought to the caſtle of the towne of Feria, for greater ſurety, and there kept in priſon, vntill his proceſſe was ready to be iudged, and then the Kings according to their promiſe, did aduertize the Earle of Feria thereof at the appointed time, who ſent Don Ramir well accompanied into Portugall, where King Iohn the ſecond of that name did then reigne, who entertained him very curteouſly, as ſhalbe
B hereafter declared.

Queene Iſabella as hath beene ſaid made a voyage into Arragon, and carried thither with her her husband Iohn Prince of the Aſturia's, and was receiued into the city of Calatajub with great and magnificent triumph, whether the King came not long after, who at the ſame time was at Barcelona with the Lords and Deputies of the States of Arragon, by whom Prince Iohn was likewiſe ſworne vnto and acknowledged for Prince of Girona, heire vnto Caſtile and Arragon, and true ſucceſſor in theſe Kingdomes, the Kings in like manner did ſweare and promiſe to maintaine the rights, priuiledges and exemptions of the country: That being done they went to Saragoſſa, where they made as triumphant an entry as at Calatajub. Thither was newes brought of the death of C the great Turke Mahumet, of the ſucceſſion of his ſonne Bajazet in that Empire, and of the diſcord betwixt him and his brother Zemin, and alſo how that King Fernand of Naples had recouered the towne of Ottranto which Acomat Baſcia had taken from him the yeere before. For all which deſired newes, the Kings yeelded thankes vnto God by generall proceſſions after the accuſtomed manner. The Kings did in like manner aſſemble the Eſtates at Barcelona and Valencia, where the like othes were made vnto Prince Iohn as next future heire: but touching the ſubſidies they demaunded, it was impoſſible to obtaine any, and they were faine on the contrary to grant many things to the people, and in diuerſe ſorts to ſupply their wants, being but poore euer ſince the laſt warre that the Cattelans made againſt the King Don Iohn.

The States of Arragon ſweare to Prince Iohn.

Eſtates at Barcelona and Valencia.

D

Don Iohn the ſecond of that name, and 13. King of Portugall.

ABout the ſame time died Alphonſo King of Portugall at Sintra, who ſince the laſt warres betwixt him and Caſtile, had euer led a melancholy and diſcontented life: he lay ſicke fiue and twenty daies, and deceaſed the three and fortith yeere of his reigne,
E being of the age of nine and forty yeeres and ſeuen monthes: his body was buried with great ſolemnitie and funerall pompe in the royall Monaſtery of the battaile, of the Order of the Friers preachers: the Catholike Kings remayning ſtill at Barcelona did there celebrate his obſequies. After him reigned his ſonne D. Iohn, father to D. Alphonſo who did not ſucceed him, becauſe he died before his father, as hereafter ſhalbe mentioned.

34 Portugal.

King Fernand hauing ordered the affaires of Arragon, Cattalonia and Valencia, returned with the Queene his wife into Caſtile, where, during her abſence, the Conſtable and the Admirall were appointed Viceroys, who committed the Earles of Luna and Valence to priſon, in regard of certaine tumults and ſeditions which they had raiſed in the Kingdome of Leon. The Court remayning at that time at Medina del Campo, F happened, as hath beene heretofore declared the reuenge of D. Ramir Nugnes de Guzman againſt the Admirall.

Caſtile.

There aroſe at the ſame time a new contention betwixt the Kings of Caſtile and the Pope, wherein they ſhewed no want of courage. The Epiſcopall Sea of Cuença was vacant by the deceaſe of the Biſhop, Pope Sixtus gaue it to a Nephew of his borne in Genoa, Cardinall of the title of Saint George, without the knowledge or conſent of the Kings, who being highly diſpleaſed that the Biſhoprikes and great beni- A fices of Spaine ſhould be poſſeſſed by ſtrangers, againſt the ancient decrees of the Eſtates of the Kingdome, obſerued from time to time, did hinder this Cardinall from taking poſſeſſion of the Biſhoprike, and gaue the Pope to vnderſtand how preiudiciall it might be to the Realmes of Spaine, whereof the Pope making no account and continuing in his former purpoſe, the Kings commanded all their ſubiects that were in the Court of Rome, to depart from thence, and made proteſtations to the Pope that they would procure a generall Councell to bee called to redreſſe theſe and other ſuch like diſorders.

35

Generall counſels abhorred by the Popes.

The Pope who abhorred that more then any thing in the world, ſent a Gen- B tleman of Genoa, whoſe name was Dominico Centurion for his Ambaſſador into Spaine, who being come to Medina del Campo, and crauing audience, it was refuſed him, and he was told from the Kings, that becauſe their Ambaſſadors were euill intreated and contemned at Rome, they would not entertaine nor harken to the Popes, therefore he ſhould doe well and wiſely, ſpeedily to depart from thence, and concerning his owne perſon, they would no farther aſſure it in their dominions, then whileſt he could returne towards Italy. The Ambaſſador being amazed at this commandement, did forthwith reiect the name and priuiledge of an Ambaſſador, and beſought them to hold him as their ſubiect, for he was borne in their Kingdome. The Kings in regard of this humillity, committed him priſoner to the fort of Medina, from whence ſoone after he was C deliuered, by the meanes of the Cardinall of Spaine. When the Pope vnderſtood what the Kings had done, hee was content to let them enioy their antient rights, and they made couenants and agreements together, by the which it was decreed, that the Kings of Spaines preſentations to the Biſhoprikes, ſhould from thence-forth bee admitted in the Court of Rome, and they ſhould be beſtowed vpon ſuch as had well deſerued of the Spaniſh common-wealth: and by this meanes it hath beene oftentimes ſeene that diuers good religious perſons haue beene, againſt their willes, conſtrained to become Biſhops, as Don Pedro de Maluenda, generall of the Order of Saint Ieroſme, who was enforced to take the Biſhoprike of Coria, and Doctor Don Tello de Buendia that of Cordoua.

Couenants betwixt the Pope and the King of Spaine.

D

36 Nauarre.

Before we end this booke, it ſhall not be amiſſe to returne to Nauarre where wee left the Cardinall of Foix, and his brother Iames of Foix, much buſied to ouer-rule the chiefe of the factions in that Kingdome. They hauing had an anſwere of the States ſuch as they deſired, and ordered the affaires of the country as well as they could, came backe into Arragon before King Fernand went thence, with whom hauing conſulted, they concluded that it was expedient, that King Francis Phœbus ſhould come into his Kingdome, and enter it in armes and military Order as ſoone as conueniently he could, before the peoples mindes and affections ſhould be changed by any occaſion that might happen; wherefore as ſoone as they were returned into France, they declared to the King and to Donna Magdaleine his mother, what they had effected, as well E in Nauarre, as in Arragon, ſignifying vnto them that the chiefeſt hope conſiſted in in dilligence: wherefore they ſodainely aſſembled their friends and ſeruants from all partes, and gathered togither a thouſand or fifteene hundred horſe, and like number of footmen, with which forces, this young Prince, accompanied with his mother, and the Cardinall his vncle entred into Nauarre, where hee was receiued by the Nobillity and townes, without any difficulty or reſiſtance at all, namely the Earle of Lerin albeit he was not pleaſed with his comming, did deliuer vp the city of Pampelona vnto him, conſidering that if he ſhould doe otherwiſe, the young King had the King of Caſtile on one ſide, and the French King on the other, mighty Princes and his neere kinſmen, who would conſtraine him to doe his duty.

King Francis Phœbus entreth into his Realme of Nauarre.

F

King Francis Phœbus in the month of Nouember the yeere 1482. made his en-trie into the City, where the three Eſtates were aſſembled, he was there crowned, and did giue and receiue the othes of fidelitie, and good gouernment, in the Cathedrall Church after accuſtomed manner, in the preſence of the Cardinall his vncle, the Lords of his Kingdome, the Princeſſe his mother accompanied with

A with Ladies and Gentlewomen, and by the Ambaſſadors of Caſtile, France, and from [illegible] other potentates being at that time not aboue fifteene yeeres of age: and the ſame day and many daies after, tilts, turneys, and other royall feaſts were there made in magnificent manner. Theſe matters being ended, he went in perſon to viſit the townes, cities and fortreſſes, as well to ſee the manner of the gouernment of the country, as to receiue the particular othes of the captaines and gouernors, to ſee iuſtice adminiſtred, and to marke how firme and conſtant euery one was in his ſeruice: and the better to prouide for the publike peace and quiet, he commanded proclamation to be made by ſound of trumpet both in his owne Court and euer the whole Kingdome, that no man vpon paine B of death ſhould any more vſe the ſeditious names of Beaumont and Grammont. And the more to gratifie the Earle of Lerin and to binde him more ſtrictly to his ſeruice, hee confirmed the office of high Conſtable vnto him which Peter de Peralta deceaſed had held in time before and gaue him moreouer Sarraga and other places which he had won from the Spaniards, Viana excepted, becauſe it was the chiefe of the principallity, and the title of the eldeſt ſonne of Nauarre. In the Cathedrall Church, where hee was crowned, he gaue guifts, and graunted priuiledges, namely to be free from lodging, the letters whereof were dated at Tafalla in the month of Ianuary, the ſame yeere: he did gratifie in like manner other Lords, Knights, Churches, Townes, and particular perſons with ſuch moderation and equity, as all men did admire ſo great wiſdome in ſuch young C yeeres, and did praiſe God that had giuen ſo good a King vnto Nauarre: In all which matters, he was ruled by the wiſdome of the Princeſſe his mother, of the Cardinall his vncle, and other perſons of State and experience which were in his Court and neere his perſon. Whileſt in his nonage his mother the Princeſſe did gouerne the Kingdome, ſhee vſed theſe titles in her letters. We Magdalene daughter and ſiſter to the French King, Princeſſe of Viana, gouernor and protectreſſe of our deere and beſt beloued ſonne Francis Phœbus by the grace of God King of Nauarre &c. This Prince was ſurnamed Phœbus becauſe he was faire as the ſunne among the ſtarres, and alſo in regard diuers of his race were of the ſame name. Diuers marriages were procured for him, but none was accompliſhed: for he died fifteene monthes after he was crowned, hauing but ſhewed D himſelfe to the world, and ſodainely vaniſhed in the prime of his youth. King Fernand his great vncle, would haue married him to his ſecond daughter Donna Ioane, who was ſince heire to all his Kingdomes: but the Princeſſe his mother following the counſell of King Lewis the eleuenth, who did not greatly affect the affaires of Caſtile, did hinder that match. The like hinderance was miniſtred by her and King Lewis in the marriage of his ſiſter Catherine who was Queene of Nauarre and the Prince Don Iohn of Caſtile heire to the ſame crowne: for King Lewis who had great deſeignes in his head, did goe about to marry this King Francis Phœbus to Donna Ioane the Nun at Coimbra the pretended Queene of Caſtile: and by that pretended right, and the forces of his owne Kingdome, to caſt King Fernand and Queene Iſabella out of the Realmes of Ca- E ſtile and Leon, and for euer to keepe the Earledome of Roſſillion to himſelfe, with other purpoſes which vaniſhed into aire: and the better to effect what hee had determined ſent Ambaſſadors into Portugall to King Alphonſo, whoſe death happening this yeere with that of the King of Nauarres ſoone after, did quite fruſtrate theſe practizes: to the which, King Iohn of Portugall, who ſucceeded his father Alphonſo, would by no meanes harken.

Rules and orders for the tranquillity of the Kingdome of Nauarre.

Titles of Lady Magdaleine of France.

The end of the two and twentith Booke.

THE THREE AND TVVENtith Booke of the Generall Hiſtory of Spaine.

The Contents.

1 THe beginning of the long warre of Granado againſt King Muley Albohacen.
2 Death of King Francis Phœbus. Marriage procured by the Kings of Caſtile for their ſonne D. Iohn with Queene Catherine of Nauarre.
3 Continuance of the warre of Granado. Conqueſt of that great Canaries: Switzers hired for this warre againſt the Moores.
4 Cauſes of ſuſpition of King Fernand and Queene Iſabella againſt the heire of Nauarre. Intelligences and practizes with the factious to get that Kingdome.
5 Continuance of the warre of Granado.
6 The reigne of King Iohn the ſecond of Portugall. Diſcouery of Manicongo: the King intitles himſelf Lord of Guiney: Conſpiracies: Death of the dukes of Bragança and Viſeo, with other tragicall acts in the ſame Court.
7 Continuance of the warre of Granado againſt Muley Boabdellin the one and twentith King of that Country: The Pope helpeth forward the warre of Granado: Pollitike acts of the Kings of Caſtile.
8 Chriſtofer Columbus his firſt comming to the Court of Caſtile: his diſpoſition and qualities.
10 Seege of Malaga.
11 Hermandades or brother-hoods: Inquiſition in Arragon.
12 Iohn d' Albret, and Catherine of Nauarre the fiue and thirtith in Order of the Kings of Nauarre: The vicount of Narbonne quarrels about the Earledome of Foix: Enterpriſes of Caſtile againſt Nauarre by meanes of the factions.
13 King Fernands fauours towards Amand d' Albret: aide graunted by him to the Princes and Lords confederate againſt the French King Charles the eight.
14 Death of the duke of Alua, and other Lords of Caſtile. Exploits done againſt the Moores.
15 Nauigations of the Portugalls into the Ocean ſea: ſearch and diſcouery of vnknowne lands, and great dilligence of King Iohn of Portugall about theſe matters.
16 Treaties of marriage, and other domeſticall acts in the Court of Caſtile, oppreſſion of the Conuerts.
17 Continuance of the warre againſt the Moores of Granado. Seege of Baça.
18 Maſterſhip of Calatraua incorporated to the Cowne of Caſtile, with other matters belonging

A longing to the ſame Order.
19 Purſute of the Mooriſh warre, Baça yeelded vp.
20 Purſutes againſt Mahomet the Little, the laſt King of Granado, to diſpoſſeſſe him of the ſame city, vnder colloure of right.
21 Marriage of Prince Alphonſo of Portugall with Donna Iſabella the Infanta of Caſtile.
22 Seege of Granado, and yeelding vp of the ſame city.
23 Pollitike acts of King Fernand and Queene Iſabella of Caſtile.
B 34 D. Alphonſo of Portugall his pittifull death.

In this three and twintith Booke, for continuance C of the Kings reigning in Spaine, mention is made of.

---

35. Iohn D' Albret, and Catherine his wife, King and Queene of Nauarre, himſelfe
D the ſecond of that name.

A

THe warre which King Fernand began and ended againſt the Moores of Granado, was one of his moſt memorable acts: for the Kingdome of Granado did floriſh more at that time, then it had done in many yeeres before, being full of men, riches and armor, and gouerned by one of the wiſeſt and pollitike Kings that euer reigned ouer that Nation: namely Muley Albohacen, if hee had beene a little more faithfull, and leſſe ambitious and proud, which qualities did plunge him into troubles, and miſerable diuiſions as well againſt his ſubiects in the bowels of his owne country as againſt the Caſtillians his neighbours. Hee had enioyed a long peace, and as it were with pride B and brauing he pulled vp the aſſurance thereof by the rootes from the Kings of Caile, hauing freed and diſcharged himſelfe from the tribute which his predeceſſors were accuſtomed to pay them. And albeit the ſame was greeuous to King Fernand and Queene Iſabella, which were magnanimous and impatient of all loſſe and diminution of their royall Eſtate: who beſides that, were pricked forward as well by their owne zeale to Chriſtian Religion, as by the perſwaſion of the Popes and Prelates to vndertake the ſame warre: yet notwithſtanding, the truce agreed vpon, the charge and diſcommodities of the warres which they had newly ended againſt the King of Portugall, the preſent confuſion wherein the Realme of Caſtile was at the ſame time, did counſell them to waite for a fitter opportunity. Now when it pleaſed God (vnto whom all times C and occaſions are ſubiect) that this Mahometan ſuperſtition ſhould take an end, and that this race of Moores ſhould bee rooted out of Spaine by armes, ſeeing that other more conuenient meanes could not bee vſed by the Church, the warre which was conſtantly purſued againſt them, and wholy ended in the ſpace of tenne yeeres, did beginne in this manner.

Qualities of King Muley Albohacen.

1 Nauarre.

King Muley Albohacen hauing beene aduertized that the city of Zahara was negligently kept by the Chriſtians, and preſuming vpon the truce, cauſed it to be taken in the night by ſcaladoe, togither with the fort and caſtle; he carried away the men, cattaile, and all the riches that he could finde therein, and manned it with a good and ſtrong garriſon of Moores. The taking thereof being knowne in Granado, one of their Philoſo- D phers which they call Alphaquies cried out publikely: Either mine Oracles deceiue mee, or the end of the ancient reigne of the Moores in Spaine is at hand: the which in deed came to paſſe, the ſurpriſing of this towne giuing King Fernand occaſion to lay hand vpon this conqueſt, with all his forces and meanes, and with incredible perſeuerance: The newes that the truce was broken by the Moores being vnderſtood at Medina del Campo where the Court then was, diuerſe companies were diſpatched to the frontiers of Murcia and Andaluzia, vnder the charge of Don Alphonſo de Cardenaz Maiſter of Saint Iames, who lay in garriſon at Eccia, Don Roderigo Telles Giron Maiſter of Calatraua, remained at Iaen and others in other places, beſides the ordinary garriſons and forces of Don Pedro Henriques Gouernor generall of the frontiers of Andaluzia E aſſiſted by Don Pedro Ponce de Leon Marquis of Cales, the Duke of Medina Sidonia and others: the King commaunded all of them to make ſharpe warre in the country of Granado with fire and ſword, the which they beganne to execute with all violence; for hauing ouer-runne and ruined a great part of the country, they did winne by the induſtry of Diego Merlo aſſiſtant of Siuill, the city of Alhama, as careleſly guarded by the Moores as Zahara had beene by the Chriſtians: by reaſon that it was almoſt in the middeſt of their country: the caſtle was the firſt that was taken; being ſcaled, a valiant ſouldiar of Carmona called Iohn de Ortega a great ſcaler of walles beeing the firſt man that entred it, being neerely followed by Martin Galindo a Knight borne at Eccia, Iohn of Toledo and others to the number of thirty, who cut the next Court of garde F in peeces, whom they found faſt a ſleepe, then they breake open a poſterne gate, and gaue entrance to the reſt of the army.

Alhama taken by the Caſtillians.

The Moores which were reſident in the towne, hearing the noyſe and clamour of this ſurpriſe, ranne confuſedly and in great diſorder (and not yet thorowly awaked) to ſuccour the caſtle: but they ſoone perceiued that it was paſt all remedie:

therefore

A therefore they fortified themſelues in the Meſquites or Churches, and in the towers of the walles, with all ſorts of armes and engines for defence: giuing notice to their next neighbours of what had befallen them, and craued ſpeedie ayde, which they expected alſo from Granado, which was ten miles diſtant from thence. The Chriſtians who in like manner made account, that if they did not driue the enemies foorth of the towne the ſame day, they themſelues ſhould be ouer-runne with the multitudes which wold come thither, did reſolue valiantly to aſſaile them, by the perſwaſion and example of Sancho d'Auila Captaine of Carmona, and of Nicholas de Rojas Gouernor of Areos: but finding great reſiſtance, the opinion of thoſe was almoſt followed, who would haue the caſtle
B razed downe to the ground, and ſo to returne: yet for all that the Marquis of Cales, nor the Aſſiſtant of Siuil not conſenting thereunto, they began onely to ouerthrow that part of the caſtle which looked vppon the towne, and the ſouldiers beeing againe brought to the fight, did behaue themſelues ſo valiantly, as, notwithſtanding the Moores braue reſiſtance, before the latter end of the day, all the churches and forts were taken, and the towne wholly wonne, which was eſteemed the goodlieſt prize, that they could haue wiſhed, for the importance of the warre. Three thouſand Genets or light-horſe were brought to this expedition, and as many foot-men by Diego Merlo, Don Pedro Henriques, and the Marquis of Cales, who for the hatred which he did euer beare to the duke of Medina Sidonia, would not haue him made acquainted with this enterpriſe. The C Moores of Granado beeing greatly aſtoniſhed for the loſſe of Alhama, beganne to make euill preſages of the end of the warre, and to murmure againſt King Muley Alboacen, not ſparing to ſay, that his taking of Sahara would ſticke to him and to his poſteritie to the worlds end. He did ſpeedily ſend a thouſand horſe to their ayde, but they could not come time enough.

Euill preſages of the Moores.

In the meane ſpace he gathered together all his men at armes from all parts of his kingdome, and came in perſon to beſeege Alhama, not bringing any artillerie with him, imagining that the Chriſtians not beeing yet fortified therein, would quickely leaue it, but he was deceiued; for hee found them ſowre and ſtubborne aduerſaries, but chiefly there was a bloudie incounter at ſuch time as the Moores went about to turne away the D riuer which paſſeth by the towne, where diuers of both ſides loſt their liues: and it is to be doubted, that without the ayde of God ſent to the beſeeged, they had beene ouercome by ſo great a power, as then fought againſt them, for they began to be out of hope and beganne to ſpoile all that they could not carry away, and were reſolued to yeeld it, when Don Henry de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, arriued with a ſufficient armie of his owne tenants, friends, and followers, with others entertained with his owne money, which (they ſay) amounted to three thouſand horſe, and forty thouſand foot, with whom were ioyned the Earle of Cabra, and Don Alphonſo of Aguilar, and his brother Don Gonçal Hernandes of Cordoua, who was afterward called the great Captaine in the warres of Italy, bringing with him the troupes of Seuile, Eccia, Cordoua, and other places. All
E theſe forces, which were great and wonderfull, for the ſhort time wherein the were gathered together, did march towards Alhama.

The king of Granado before Alhama.

King Fernand hauing notice of the taking thereof, made himſelfe foorthwith readie for to come into Andaluſia, hauing in his company Don Bertrand de la Cuena, Duke of Albuquerque, and the Earles of Treuigno and Tendilla, with many other knights, the Earle of Cifuentes meeting them at Toledo, and then they altogether paſſed the mount called Sierra Morena, to ioyne with the armie which the king commanded to attend him there: but the Commanders knowing the neceſſitie of thoſe of Alhama, went forward with great diligence to deliuer them, the which they did onely by the noyſe of their comming: the Moore King beeing retired in the night with his whole armie. The king who
F followed, paſſed on to Anteguera, and there receyued newes, that the ſeege before Alhama was rayſed, wherefore he returned to Cordoua to meet the Queene whom he had left to leauie ſouldiers.

Now the Marquis of Cales, who was beſeeged with great danger in Alhama, conſidering the generoſity of his aduerſarie the Duke of Medina, who for the weale-publike and ſeruice of the king, hauing forgotten all enmitie, had come to his ayde, he did highly eſteeme

D. Henry de Guzman comes to the ſuccour of his aduerſarie.

eſteeme of him, and caſting away all euill will and hatred, he ranne to him and embraced him with great loue, giuing him infinite thankes for ſo great a fauour: and theſe two Lords had ſuch louing and pleaſing conference together, as euer after they liued in ſtrict and vnfained friendſhip, this Mooriſh warre hauing brought foorth effects contrarie to the ſeditions in Caſtile. The Chieftains beeing agreed, there aroſe contention betwixt the ſouldiers, thoſe which came to their ayde did ſay, that they ought to haue their part of the ſpoyle of the towne, the others gaine-ſayed it, in ſuch ſort, as if the wiſedome of their Captaines, and their new reconciliation had not preuented it, they had fallen into tumult. The ſpoyle remayned to thoſe who had defended the place, and the new come ſouldiers were appeaſed with reaſon and good words, and they all diſlodged with the Duke and the Marquis, and returned euery man to his home: after the garriſons were refreſhed, and the towne well manned, where Diego de Merlo, Don Martin of Cordoua, and Hernand Carillo remayned Captaines. After that the armie was gone, the King of Granado hauing notice thereof, he did foorth-with returne backe to aſſayle Alhama, and brought at this time no more engines of batterie with him, than at the former, but only a great number of ladders, thinking in regard it was not yet thoroughly fortified nor rampired, to take it by the multitude of his ſouldiers: and at laſt hauing aſſayled it day and night without ceaſſing, he earely in a morning ſcaled it in a place which was not thought vppon: ſo as he put three-ſcore and ten Mooriſh ſouldiers into it, and had cauſed greater numbers to haue entred, had not a ſouldier perceyued them, and giuen the alarme: wherefore the Chriſtians running to that place, did cut in peeces thoſe that were entred, and repulſed the reſt who endeauoured to follow them. The ſucceſſe of thoſe aſſaults was not according to king Maley Albohacens expectation, therefore he went thence once againe, with an intent to returne thither with artillerie. In the meane ſpace Queene Iſabella hauing left the Admirall Viceroy of Caſtile, marched with thoſe forces which ſhe had leauied, towards Cordoua, to meete the King, being attended on by the Conſtable, who refuſed to be Viceroy of Caſtile, ſaying, that warre and armes were the proper offices belonging to an high Conſtable of Spaine. The Kings Councell did determine and almoſt conclude to raze the Cittie of Alhama, in regard it ſtoode in the middeſt of the Realme of Granado, and therefore very hardly to be kept: but the Queene, who was deſirous to preſerue it, as the firſt conqueſt of her raigne, did perſwade the contrarie, ſo as it was not ruined: and order was giuen to aſſayle, and take in all the forts and caſtles nere adioyning.

Debate betwixt the beſeeged, and thoſe that came to their ayde.

Alhama preſerued at the inſtance of Q. Iſabel.

Death of Don Alphonſo Carilla.

The Kings came after that to Eccia, where they receyued newes of the deceaſe of D. Alphonſo Carillo of Acugna, Arch-biſhop of Toledo, who dyed at Alcala de Henares: they procured the election to the ſame dignitie for the Cardinall Pero Gonçales of Mendoza, the ſeuentith Arch-biſhop of that Sea and Primate of Spaine, and the Arch-biſhoppricke of Siuile was giuen to Don Inigo Manriques Biſhop of Iaen. There were at the ſame time with the King, Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza Biſhop of Palence, the Maſters of Saint Iames and Calatraua, the Conſtable, the Dukes of Villa-hermoſa, Infantaſgo, Medina Celi, Albuquerque, the Marquis of Villena, and Cales, the Earles of Vregna, Cabra, Treuigno, Tendilla, Cifuentes, and Benalcaçar, Don Alphonſo d'Aguilar, Don Henry Henriques great Maſter, and the Kings vncle, Iohn Chacon, Roderigo of Vlloa, Don Frederick of Toledo, ſonne to the Duke of Alua, Don Iohn de Ribera Lord of Montmajor, Don Alphonſo of Cardenaz. Don Antonio Fonſeca, Hernand of Vega, with other Lords and Knights of great name: Don Iohn of Eſtuniga, maſter of Alcantara, by reaſon of his young yeares was abſent, with his father the Duke of Plaiſance. With this companie the king departed from Eccia, with eight thouſand horſe, and great numbers of foot, and came to Alhama, the which they fortified with rampars, bulwarkes, and other ſufficient defences, and the king made Don Lewis Fernandes Porto Carrero, Lord of Palma, Gouernor thereof, leauing him foure hundred horſe: the Cardinall did purifie and bleſſe the three Meſquites or churches with the accuſtomed ceremonies, and dedicated them to other vſes: then the army began to ouer-run the country on euery ſide, whilſt the queene buſied her ſelfe in prouiding victuals, armes, munition, and other neceſſaries for the wars.

The Chriſtian army being ſtrengthened with new ſupplies, did preſently beſeege Loxa and

A and was lodged amongſt the Oliue trees, vallies, and little hils neere to the riuer of Guadaxenil. The Moore king on his part loſt neither time nor courage, but fortified and deſended the paſſages and ſtreights, by the which the enemies might aſſayle him, and approch towards Granado: ſending to the Kings and Potentates of Affrica, to aduertize them of the dangerous warre wherein he was ingaged, intreating them for the religion common betwixt them, for the honour of their nation, for the equall danger which threatned them, if Granado ſhould be loſt, that they would come or ſend to his ayde: and he did in the meane time oppoſe his owne forces againſt the Chriſtians, and on either part there were valiant incounters and skirmiſhes performed, where neuertheleſſe Don

B Rodertgo Telles Giron Maſter of Calatraua's happe was hard, who dyed beeing ſhot thorough the bodie with two poyſoned arrowes, and Don Garcia Lopes of Padilla was promoted to his place, and was the laſt Maſter of that Order. King Fernand beeing deſirous to change and alter the ſeate and lodging of his armie to a more conuenient place, there were ſharpe skirmiſhes in the remooning of the campe, where the Conſtable receyued two wounds in his face: the beſeeged, who were not aboue three thouſand, made continuall ſallies vppon the Chriſtians with ſuch furie and braning, as it was to be wondred at: and did oftentimes put the great Lords and Captaines which kept thoſe quarters which they aſſayled, in great danger of their liues: committing notable ſpoyles vppon their troupes, and the Duke of Medina Celi, and the Earle of Tendilla, did hardly eſcape with

C their liues, beeing reſcued by the forces of the Earle of Playſance, which his ſonne Don Franciſco of Eſtuniga brought to their ayde: the Kings owne perſon was likewiſe ſuccored by Don Iohn de Ribera, Lord of Montmajor, aſſiſted greatly by Don Fredericke of Toledo, ſonne to the Duke of Alua, Don Antonio de Fonſeca, Don Alphonſo of Cardenaz, and Hernand of Vega. Such was the enraged hardineſſe of the Moores, as notwithſtanding that they were beaten backe and ſtreightly ſhut in by the valour and induſtrie of the Marquis of Cales, yet they conſtrayned King Fernand to raiſe his ſeege and returne to Cordoua.

The Moores make furious ſallies vppon the Chriſtians.

The ſeege of Loxa raiſed.

The ſouldiers which lay in Alhama hauing notice of what had happened, and of the Kings retreate from before Loxa, fearing that the Moores would returne to beſeege

D them, cryed out to haue the towne razed and ouerthrowne, and to returne home to their houſes: but Don Lewis Fernandes Porto Carrero, and Pero Ruis of Alarcon, with others, did oppoſe themſelues againſt it, and hindred it. The king of Granado came thither the third time, and did greatly annoy them: but they valiantly defended themſelues vntill K. Fernand came with ſuccour to deliuer them from the ſeege, who changed both the garriſon and the Gouernour, and left other ſouldiers there, vnder the commaund of Don Lewis Oſorio Arch-deacon of Aſtorga, and brother to the Marquis of the ſame place. That beeing done, the Chriſtian armie did forrage, burn and ſpoyle the countrie of Granado, from whence they carried away much ſpoile, and many priſoners to Cordoua.

E

Mahomet Boabdellin called the Little, and the twentith king of Granado.

THe Chriſtian ſouldiers found ſmal reſiſtance in this latter roade, in regard the Mores were greatly diuided among themſelues, by meanes whereof King Muley Alboacen was diſpoſſeſſed and driuen away; for hee was much feared and hated, becauſe of his tyrannies which extended chiefly to the Nobilitie, and he had namely euill intreated the family of Abencaraxes, one of the moſt illuſtrious houſes among the Granadins.

Seditions betwixt the father and ſonne.

F Theſe men with their complices and allyes conſtrayned Muley Alboacen to giue place, and they deliuered the cittie with the Alhambra or fort thereof, to his ſonne Mahomet Boabdellin ſurnamed the Little, who was fled to Guadix for feare of beeing ſlaine by his father, who was carried away with vnreaſonable amorous paſſions, and falſe ſuggeſtions of a ſecond wife, a renied Chriſtian, whom hee had married for her rare and excellent beautie, in regard whereof ſhe was called Zoraya, which ſignifieth Morning-ſtarre. This woman

woman beeing deſirous to aduance her children which ſhee had by the King, did indeauour by all meanes to roote out thoſe which hee had begotten on the Queene Aixa his wife, a Ladie of a great and illuſtrious houſe, and his neere kinſwoman, who becauſe ſhe would not ſee her eldeſt ſonne murthered, which was this Boabdellin, ſhe cauſed him on a night to be let downe out of the window of the caſtle with the helpe of her woman by a rope made of their vailes, and night tyres, and thereby gaue him meanes to ſaue himſelfe in the cittie of Guadix, where the Abenceraxes his kinſmen, who were of great power there, did kindly receeiue him, and dealt in ſuch ſort with their friends of the citty of Granado, as they acknowledged him for their king. The father hauing retired himſelfe ſomewhere elſe, made fierce and ſharpe warre vpon his ſonne, which cauſed the loſſe of their Crowne, and totall ruine to the raigne of the Moores in Spaine.

The Moores take Cagnette.

Albeit that thoſe barbarous people were at ſuch diſſention among themſelues, yet when there was any cauſe they wold agree together to annoy the Chriſtians, ſo as they tooke the towne of Cagnette, ſpoyled it, and carried away all the inhabitants and ſouldiers for ſlaues, and afterwards razed it downe to the ground. Theſe things were done in the yeare 1482. wherein is to be noted, that foure ſeuerall Chriſtian armies entred in a few moneths ſpace into the kingdome of Granado. King Fernand and Queene Izabella appointed Captaines for the frontiers, namely, for Iaen Don Pedro Manrique Earle of Treuigno, who was newly made Duke of Nagera: the Maſter of Saint Iames for Eccia, and Don Iohn de Silua Earle of Ciſuentes for Siuill, the aſſiſtant Diego Merlo beeing lately dead. Towards the end of the yeare, the Queene in the cittie of Cordoua was deliuered of a daughter, called the Infanta Maria, who was afterward Queene of Portugall, and after ſhe was churched, the Court remooued to Madrid.

An. 1482.

Donna Mary borne.

Nauarre.

The beginning of the yeare 1483. was ſorrowfull to the Nauarrois, by reaſon of the death of their king Francis Phœbus, whome the Princeſſe his mother had carried backe into France, to auoyde the importunate ſolliciting of marriages which they would haue procured in Spaine both for him and his ſiſter Donna Catherina, wherewith King Lewis the eleuenth was not contented: hee dyed not without ſuſpition of poyſon: for without any apparance at all of ſickneſſe, he felt himſelfe to be ſtricken with a deadly pricking, as he was playing vppon a flute, which was preſented vnto him, in which, and all other inſtruments of muſicke, he did greatly delight. Beeing neere to his end hee repeated theſe words taken out of the Goſpell: My kingdome is not of this world, therefore I leaue the world: trouble not your ſelues, for I go to the Father. He dyed in Bearne, in the caſtle of Pau the fourth yeare of his raigne, if we reckon from his grand-mothers death, Queene Leonora, being but fifteene yeares of age fully compleat: hee lyes buried at Leſcar in the Cathedrall Church of S. Mary.

Francis Phœbus poyſoned.

Caſtile.

King Fernand and Queene Izabella receiued newes of his death at Madrid, where they had called a Parlament, and becauſe the Crowne of Nauarre deſcended to the Infanta Donna Catherine ſiſter to the deceaſed king, they ſent the Licenciate Rodrigo Maldonado of Talauera, one of their Councell Ambaſſador into Bearne, to the Princeſſe Magdalen her mother, to demaund the Infanta in marriage, for the Prince Don Iohn their ſonne. The mother Princeſſe notwithſtanding that ſhee would willingly haue condeſcended thereunto, made anſwer that ſhee could not beſtow her without the conſent of his brother the French king. Vppon this anſwer, the Catholike kings ſent Iohn de Ribera with troupes of men at armes towards the frontiers of Nauarre, to haue intelligence with the Earle of Lerin, who had married King Fernandes baſtard ſiſter, to the end to hinder the French-men from enterpriſing any thing, and from entring into that kingdome. The Eſtates aſſembled at Madrid granted a ſubſidie to the King, towards the warre of Granado: and beſides that, the Pope permitted them to leauie one hundred thouſand Crownes vpon the Clergie of Spayne, and ſent them a Croizado, to gather contributions and gifts for the ſame purpoſe: and in this Parlament, the power, authoritie and iuriſdiction of the Hermandades and vnions of the Communalties was ordered and reformed. Afterwards the Kings diuided the affaires betwixt them, that they might the better prouide for all matters: ſhee remayned in Caſtile, and he prepared himſelfe to returne into Andaluſia, but the troubles which were raiſed in Gallicia, by the meanes of D. Pero Aluares Oſorio,

A Oſorio, Earle of Lemos did call him into thoſe parts. The Earle dyed there before the Kings arriuall, and by that meanes ſaued the King a labour, who otherwiſe would haue had him arraigned by order of lawe. Another contention arole betwixt a baſtard ſonne of the late Earles called Rodrigo Oſorio, whome his father had appointed heire in the Earledome of Lemos, to the preiudice of his lawfull daughter, who was married to the Earle of Benauents ſonne: ſhe ſayd, that in regard Rodrigo was a baſtard, he was incapable to inherite: he on the contrarie alleaged his legitimation by the Pope: the king impoſed ſilence and peace to both parties, and referred the cauſe to his Councell to bee ordered according to iuſtice: and in the meane time did commit the towne of Ponferrada, and the Lordſhip thereof, beeing a parcell of the litigious inheritance, to the keeping of his B Vncle Don Henry Henriques great Maſter, excepting one ſtrong hold of the ſame Lordſhippe, which he gaue in keeping to Don George d'Abendigno his countri-man, and a Knight of the Kings houſe. Theſe matters thus ordered, the king returned to Madrid, from whence he diſpatched Ambaſſadours to procure the peace of Italy, which flamed with inteſtine warres, the Pope and the Venetians hauing ioyned, to the preiudice of King Fernand of Naples and the Florentines, drawing all the Potentates of Italy to their Factions: who by the diligence and good meanes of Don Iohn Biſhoppe of Girone, chiefe of that Ambaſſage, and by the fauour and authoritie of the Kings of Caſtile were reconciled: albeit the Venetians did alwaies nouriſh a ſecret hatred and contempt of King Fernand and Queene Izabella, and did not greatly care to obſerue the peace.

Sedition in Gallicia.

Warres of Italy appeaſed.

C In this meane ſpace the Captaines, which lay vppon the frontiers of Granado, made inroades and incredible ſpoyles vppon the Moores, eſpecially thoſe of the Garriſon of Alhama, from whence a craftie and cunning Squire, whoſe name was Iohn de Corrall, of Diego Lopes d'Ayala his companie, came foorth by meanes of a ſafe-conduct, to conferre with the King of Granado, giuing him to vnderſtand, how that hee of himſelfe could vſe meanes to cauſe Alhama to bee reſtored vnto him, wherewith the Moore king was ſo pleaſed, as he offered readily on his part to yeeld vp Zahara, and to ſet all the Chriſtian priſoners at libertie, giuing a great quantitie of gold, and beſides that, to pay tribute, and for euer to become vaſſall to the kings of Caſtile. Iohn de Corrall with theſe promiſes, came to the Kings, and declared to them in part what he had treated with the King of Granado, his chiefe drift beeing onely to get gifts and rewards, whereuppon D the Kings giuing credite vnto him, gaue him limited authoritie to contract with the Moore.

Beeing returned to Granado, the Moore King, who thought that the principall Article of his Commiſſion, was for the reſtitution of Alhama, had not the patience to conſider and looke vppon Iohn de Corral his authoritie, but beganne readily on his part to performe what hee had promiſed, cauſing diuers Chriſtian priſoners to be ſet at liberty. Then Iohn de Corall contenting himſelfe with that which was done, came to Iaen and told the Duke of Nagera how he had deceiued the king of Granado, who preſently ſent to the Duke to complaine of this deceipt. The Duke ſent Iohn de Corrall to the Court, aduertiſing the Kings what he had done, whereat they were highly diſcontented, and they did commaund that the priſoners ranſomes ſhould bee payed, and that Iohn de Corrall ſhould pay backe the money, iewels, and other preſents that hee had receiued of the King of Granado, and that hee ſhould bee kept priſoner in Antequera, vntill hee had made full reſtitution, and that the warre ſhould ſtand vppon the ſelfe-ſame tearmes as before.

Integrity of K. Fernand, and Q. Izabel.

Notwithſtanding that the Kings had begunne the warre of Granado, and did greatly ſuſpect the French on the ſide of Nauarre, yet for that they did not giue ouer to vndertake matters of great importance, either of them beeing of an haughtie and magnanimous courage.

Of the ſeauen Ilands called the Canaries, which are girdled with the Atlantick Ocean, foure of them were alreadie conquered by the valor and induſtrie of certaine inhabitants of Seuill, euer ſince the raigne of King Iohn the ſecond, and there remayned yet the great Canarie, Thenerif, and the Ile of Palmes to be brought vnder the ſubiection of the kings of Caſtile: therefore this yeare 1483. they ſent thither Alphonſo of Muxica, and Pedro de

Canaries made ſubiects to the Kings of Caſtile.

Vera.

Vera, valiant Captaines, and no leſſe skilfull in ſea-fights than at land, who landed in the great Canaries, where they found two kings ſtriuing for the principalitie thereof: they fauoured one of them, and dealt in ſuch ſort, as hauing rooted out the other, they obtained the gouernement of the Iſland: the Cittie was erected into a Biſhops Sea, and tranſlated from the Iſle of Lançarot. A

In Andaluſia the Maſter of Saint Iames, the Marquis of Cales, the Earle of Ciſuentes, Gouernour of Siuill, Don Alphonſo d'Aguilar, Don Pedro Henriques, Captaine of the frontiers, and others, came to Antequera with an intent to ſpoile the countrey of las Lomas de Malaga, called Axarquia, a territorie abounding in cattell: of the which enterpriſe the Moores had notice, who made themſelues readie to charge them on the ſudden, when they ſhould leaſt looke for it, hauing driuen their cattell into ſtreights and ſtrong places. The Chriſtians beeing entred into the countrey beganne to ſpoyle, and they ſoone found ſharpe reſiſtance: wherefore in regard of the ſtreightneſſe of the countrey, and becauſe they found not ſuch booties as they expected, they thought to turne backe: but beeing ignorant of the wayes, and ouertaken by the night, they fell into ſtreight and narrow places betwixt certaine hilles, which were filled with enemies, at the laſt they came into a valley, where with great labour and diſaduantage, they were enforced to fight all that night with the Moores, the which did greatly amaze the whole army. The Maſter of Saint Iames beeing valiant and couragious, in ſtriuing to aſcend an hill, loſt his Enſigne-bearer, and a kinſman of his owne called Iohn d'Oſorno, Iohn Baçan, and other Commaunders, who ſold their liues at a deare rate: the Marquis of Cales did in like manner follow the Maſter of Saint Iames, but the victorious Moores ouerthrew his troupes likewiſe, and ſlue Don Diego, Don Lope, and Don Bertrand his brethren, and Don Lorenzo, and Don Manuel his nephewes euen in his ſight: yet notwithſtanding, himſelfe, the Maſter of Saint Iames, and Don Pedro Henriques did eſcape with great danger. The Earle of Ciſuentes making meanes to eſcape among the reſt, was taken priſoner, with Don Bernardin Manrique, the Captaines of Antequera, and Moron, and diuers others: great was the ſlaughter of the ſouldiers at this deſeate, the which was notable and of great conſequence.

The Chriſtians deſeated.

B

C

The Moores carried away the Earle, and the reſt of the priſoners to Granado: but they did not long reioyce in the good hap of their victorie; for the Chriſtians ſoone after tooke a ſharpe vengeance on them: for King Mahomet Boabdellin, ſurnamed the Little, hauing with great troupes of horſe and foote ouer-runne and ſpoyled the territorie of Lucena and Aguilar, at his returne backe beeing peſtred with great heards of cattaile and other booties, Don Diego of Cordoua Earle of Cabra, who lay in garriſon at Beana to reſiſt ſuch enterpriſes, and Don Diego Fernandes of Cordoua, on the one ſide, did purſue him to cauſe him to leaue his bootie behind him, and Don Alphonſo of Aguilar on the other ſide with his troupes placed themſelues in ambuſh in a narrow ſtreight, thorough which they were to paſſe at their returne with intent to charge them on a ſudden. Now the King who had tenne Moores for one Chriſtian of the Earle of Cabra's band which followed him, made no difficultie to ſtay for them, yet they charged one another with great furie, where the Moores notwithſtanding their multitudes prooued the weaker: and thinking to make a ſafe retreate, they fell into Don Alphonſo d'Aguilars ambuſh, who ſlue a thouſand of them vpon the ſame place: the reſt, leauing their prey behind them, fled away as faſt as they could, forſaking their king, who was there taken priſoner. There were taken at this encounter nine hundred mules, fiue hundred horſe, and nine Mooriſh Standards, beſides other ſpoiles, which were diſtributed among the ſouldiers, and the Kings perſon fell to the Earle of Cabraes ſhare: in token of which victorie the Earles of Cabra, by the aduice and grant of the Kings of Caſtile, do beare for their armes a Mores head in priſon, tyed with a chaine of gold, with a bend ouerthwart their ſhield, wherein nine ſtandards are painted. By this ouerthrow king Mahumet the Little loſt much of his reputation, and many ſtrong Caſtles reuolted from him to his father Muley Albohacen: during his impriſonment he was honorably vſed and like a king.

D

E

The Moores deſeated, and their King taken priſoner.

The Earle of Cabraes armes.

F

King Fernand beeing ioyfull for this victorie did thinke it fit to follow the occaſion, and with a great armie to aſſayle the Moores, who were aſtoniſhed with their loſſe:

wherefore

A wherefore he tooke order that the Affrican Moores ſhould not come by ſea into Spaine to their ayde: and then hee entred into the Countrey of Granado with an army of tenne thouſand horſe, and thirtie thouſand foote: among whome there were great numbers of Switzers, with a great trayne of Officers, victuallers, Merchants, and other people who ſerued and followed the campe: before which the Earle of Cabra and Don Alphonſo of Aguilar did march with troupes of auantcourrers, who burned the country round about Illora and Montefrio: the armie paſſed by Illora which was not eaſie to be taken without great Artillerie: but they tooke the towne and caſtle of Tagara, which lies betwixt Alhama and Loxa; the King would not take thoſe of the Caſtle to his mercie, becauſe they
B did not yeeld at the firſt aſſault, which together with the town was razed to the ground.

Switzers in the wars of Granado.

Diuers valiant men of the Chriſtian campe were hurt at the taking thereof, as namely, Don Henry Henriques the Kings Vncle, and Lord great Maſter of his houſe. Being come to Alhama, the King cauſed it to be well fortified, and left Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla Gouernour there, who was a very vertuous Knight: then he led his armie farther into the countrie of Granado, ouerthrowing and deſtroying all that ſtood before him, but for want of victuals, he returned to Cordoua. The Moores beeing thus perſecuted and afflicted, did beginne to intreate for peace, and offered to pay the King tribute, and ſome Moore children of Noble houſes for hoſtages: Wherewith King Fernand acquainted the Queene his wife, who then lay at Victoria to looke to the affaires of C Nauarre, which ſhee feared would ſhortly ſtirre, who was of opinion to haue the hoſtages to be townes and caſtles, and not children, whereunto the Moores not conſenting, the warre ſtood at that ſame ſtay as it was before. Thereuppon the Moore Queene, mother to the King, made meanes for her ſonnes deliuerie, and ſent to offer King Fernand perpetuall homage, twelue thouſand Duckets for yearely tribute, and a great ſumme of readie money for his ranſome, and beſides, to ſet three hundred Chriſtian priſoners at libertie, ſuch as he would pleaſe to name, and ſhee offered ſufficient hoſtages for the performance of what ſhee promiſed.

The King commaunded the Earle of Cabra to deliuer the priſoner vnto him; the which he did, and deliuered him to Martin Alarcon, Captaine of Porcuna, whether King Fer-
D nand ſent to viſite and comfort him, for the which, Mahumet gaue him infinite thankes, ſaying, that he could not be in care, ſo long as he was in the hands of ſo great and courteous a King, whome he had euer deſired to ſerue beeing at his full libertie, and to receiue the Crowne of Granado at his hand, in the ſame manner as king Iſmael his Grandfather had done from King Iohn. And becauſe the King had occaſion to go into Caſtile, and alſo to Arragon, he did determine to deliuer the Moore King: the opinions concerning his deliuerie were diuers, ſome agreeing thereunto, and others, not, wherein the maſter of Saint Iames, and the Marquis of Cales were contrarie one to the other: Wherefore they ſent to haue the Queenes opinion in the matter, who therein agreed with the Marquis, that he ſhould bee deliuered: the priſoner was brought to Cordoua, where he wold
E haue kiſſed king Fernands hand, but he would not permit it, the better thereby to oblige him to himſelfe: hee did there ſweare to accompliſh whatſoeuer was agreed vppon, and he was ſet at libertie hauing beene honoured with rich preſents. King Fernand after that went to Victoria, from thence he paſſed into Arragon, and going by Guadalupa, being a deuout Prince, he there performed a vow.

King Mahomet deliuered.

The Frontier was well furniſhed and prouided of all things neceſſarie againſt the aſſaults of the Moores: yet notwithſtanding, they hauing notice of the Kings departure out of Andaluſia, did make diuers roades into the countrey, beeing extreamely mooued againſt King Mahumet, in regard he had beene ſo well intreated by the Catholicke King, and was become his vaſſall, and of whom, beſides other benefites, he had promiſe of aide
F and aſſiſtance againſt Muley Albohacen his father, and they ſayd, that it was a matter diſpleaſing to God, and againſt all right for the Mahometan Kings to beg any aſſiſtance of Chriſtians againſt the Princes of their owne religion: wherefore diuers forſaking him, they tooke part with Muley Albohacen, and brought him with fiue hundred Knights into the Caſtle of Alhapubre, where he ſlue all ſuch as were of his ſonnes faction, who retired himſelfe to Almeria.

Now the army of the Moores beeing ſtrong and reſolute to do their worſt, entred into the marches of Andaluſia, the Garriſons and chiefe Commanders of the warre being in the cities, were foorth-with aduertiſed thereof by the ſouldiers called Almogaraues, or ordinarie watches of the frontiers: therefore Don Lewis Fernandes Porto Carrero, Lord of Palmes, who was afterward made Earle thereof, with the forces of the Maſter of Saint Iames, of the Marquis of Cales, thoſe of Eccia, Xeres, Arcos, and others which were gathered together, did march againſt the enemies, whome hee found disbanded, ſpoyling and deſtroying the territorie of Vtrera: whome he charged with ſuch reſolution and courage, as in an inſtant they were all defeated and put to flight, with loſſe of diuers of their captaines, great numbers of ſouldiers, fifteene enſignes, and all their ſpoyle: of which victorie the Queene beeing aduertiſed, ſhee cauſed generall proceſſions to bee made in the cittie of Victoria: and becauſe this encounter happened vppon the ſixth day of Ianuarie beeing Twelfth day, ſhee ſent a gowne of cloath of gold to the Lord of Palmas wife, to the end ſhee ſhould weare it euery yeare vppon that ſollemne feſtiuall day.

The Moores defeated at Vtrera.

Zahara ſurprized by the Chriſtians.

The Chriſtians in Andaluſia hauing this good hap, the Marquis of Cales was aduertiſed, that Zahara was ill furniſhed of ſouldiers and victuals, wherefore hauing communicated his deſſeigne with the Lord of Palmas, they went foorth on a night beeing accompanied by the troupes of Xeres, and hidde themſelues in couert places neere the towne, whither they ſent tenne men, who in great ſilence lodged themſelues at the foote of the wall, towards the Caſtle: theſe were ſeconded by three-ſcore and tenne other ſouldiers. At the breake of day, the Marquis ſent certaine light horſe to runne about the towne, againſt whome three-ſcore and ten Mooriſh horſe-men came foorth, (and with them alſo, the Sentinels and Guard leauing their places) to skirmiſh, then the ten men did ſet vp ladders againſt the Caſtle, and beganne to make a ſhew, as if they would haue skaled the walles, to the defence whereof as many as ſtayed within came running: in the meane ſpace the three-ſcore and tenne ſouldiers which were hidden, did ſeize vpon one of the gates: beſides that, thoſe which were come forth againſt the Chriſtian light-horſmen, perceiuing themſelues to be charged by others, who came to their ayde, turned their backes and fled towards the towne, and were ſo narrowly purſued, as they all entred pel mel together: and beeing in this ſort ſurprized on euery ſide, they loſt the town. The caſtle would haue made reſiſtance if it had beene well victualled, but for want thereof they yeelded, compounding for their liues.

The Earle of Tendilla who kept Alhama, would not ſuffer the Moores his neighbors to reſt, but he oftentimes annoyed them, ſo as he was feared like lightning ouer all the Countrey. The winter this yeare was very rainie, by meanes whereof a great part of the wall of Alhama fell to the ground, making a large breach for the enemies, if they had then aſſayled it: whereat the ſoldiers which were within were greatly amazed and thought vppon nothing but flight, but the courage and valour of the Captaine, which is euer of much woorth, contayned them in their duties, who delt in ſuch ſort by hanging of painted cloathes againſt the breach with ſuch art and cunning, as the enemies neuer knew, that the wall was fallen downe, till it was made vp againe ſtronger then before. The Earle Don Inigo, true ſonne to the Marquis of Santillana, cauſed the tower of Alcala la reale to bee repayred, on the toppe whereof euery night a burning lampe was ſet, which ſerued to direct the poore ſlaues that fled from Granado. His ſouldiers beeing diſobedient for want of pay, (money beeing very dangerous to bee ſent vnto them without the conuoy of an armie) the Earle inuented a certaine kind of counterfeit money, and of diuers ſtampes, the which hee named and prized according to the coynes of gold and ſiluer which were currant in Spayne, and with the ſame hee payed his ſouldiers, promiſing them to change all that falſe money into good, according to the value of euery coyne, and by this meanes hee did appeaſe them.

Counterfeit money.

4 Nauarre.

Whileſt theſe matters fell out in Andaluſia, King Fernand and Queene Izabella were in great doubt to bee diſturbed on that ſide of Nauarre by the French: it may bee that this ſuſpition came from their owne conſciences touched with their ſiniſter proceedings

A proceedings with the Earle of Lerin, and with the treaties of marriage of theſe poore Princes of Nauarre, and matters happened vppon thoſe occaſions. Now Queene Catherine, who was newly come to the Crowne of Nauarre, beſides her beeing wholly at the deuotion of France, and vppon the poynt of her marriage with Iohn d'Albret, ſonne to the Earle Alaine, King Lewis his death happened a little before, which had openly troubled and hindred the allyance betwixt theſe two great kingdomes of France and Spayne: for Ambaſſadours beeing ſent from one to another, as well for to make the accuſtomed condolements, and conſolations ordinarie at ſuch accidents, as for to treate of the allyances, and moreouer, about the reſtitution of the Earldome of Roſſillon which the French held, the Ambaſſadours of Spayne receyued no pleaſing anſwer from the E young King Charles the eighth, who ſucceeded King Lewis his father, nor from his tutors and councellors, ſo as they made the proteſtations and declarations which Princes vſually do make, when they are vppon the point of making warre one againſt another: therefore Queene Izabella had furniſhed the frontier of Caſtile ioyning to Nauarre with ſtrong garriſons, and ſent forces to Tudela a towne in Nauarre which held their partie, vnder the conduct of Iohn de Ribera.

After the death of King Francis Phœbus, his mother the Princeſſe fearing, and not without cauſe, the reuolt of that nation, which was an enemie to reſt and quiet, had ſent thither the Cardinall of Foix, and the Lord of Abenas, brother to the Lord of Albret, who did call a Parlament, to receyue a new oath of fidelitie for Queene Catherine, and com-
C maunded them moreouer to receiue the ſayd Lord of Abenas for Viceroy, notwithſtanding that the Conſtable Earle Lewis of Beaumont did reſolutely oppoſe himſelfe againſt it, hauing ſecret intelligence with his brother-in-law King Fernand for the ſame purpoſe. The Lord of Abenas was a graue, wiſe, and modeſt Knight, who by theſe qualities and vertues had well gouerned the Realme of Nauarre, and maintained it in peace and quiet, vntill ſuch time as Queene Katherine, hauing married his Nephew Iohn d'Albret, came her ſelfe in perſon to rule and gouerne the ſame. The Conſtable in the meane time, who held the Cittie of Pampelona vnder his power, and many other places beſides, did rayſe troubles, and brought the Caſtillan men at armes into the Kingdome, vnder colour of D the Factions of Beaumont and Grammont, during all theſe actions they ſtill pourſued the marriage, ſo that after King Lewis his death the Princeſſe Magdalen beeing continually ſollicited to marrie her daughter Queene Katherine to Prince Iohn of Caſtile, ſhee was aduiſed to make a finall anſwer, and to ſay, that the inequalitie of their yeares would not permit it to be done, in regard her daughter was marriageable, and the Prince a little child in his cradle: and that in the meane time, before hee ſhould come to age, there might bee great troubles and combuſtions in the Realme of Nauarre, which ſtoode in need of men to gouerne it, and to ſuppreſſe the vſuall contentions and quarrels which thoſe people did naturally entertaine: and that without this let, her ſelfe, and her daughter would thinke themſelues happie in ſo great an allyance; for they eſteemed no match in the world like to that of Prince Iohn, who was preſumptiue heire to ſo many rich and E mightie Kingdomes. All this notwithſtanding, Queene Iſabella perſwading her ſelfe to effect this marriage in deſpite of all theſe hinderances, tarried ſtill at Victoria, the moſt part of this yeare 1484. at which time (as hath beene ſayd) ſhee ſent Don Iohn de Ribera with forces into Nauarre, who hauing intelligence with the Earle of Lerin, tooke Viana, the Caſtle of Saint Gregorie, that of Irureta and others: which diſorders the Viceroy ſought to redreſſe with great prouidence, and kept the people in their obedience to the Queene their naturall Princeſſe. About this time Pope Sixtus the fourth dyed, in whoſe place ſucceeded Iohn Baptiſta Cibo, Cardinall of the title of Saint Laurence in Lucina, and Biſhop of Malfetta, who was called Innocent the eighth. The yeare before King Lewis
F the eleuenth dyed, who (as it is reported) had ordayned by his laſt will, that the Earledome of Roſſillon ſhould bee reſtored to King Fernand the lawfull Prince thereof: but his ſonnes Councellours thought it not conuenient. This King beeing very deuoute and greatly honouring Saint Iames, had giuen tenne thouſand Crownes, and ſent great ſtore of mettall and worke-men to make the greateſt bell there in all Chriſtendome.

Don Lewis of Beaumont who ly affectionate to the Kings of Caſtile.

Caſtile. Now for the cauſes heretofore declared, the Kings of Caſtile did enterpriſe againſt A Nauarre and France, notwithſtanding the warre of Granado, the which they would in no ſort giue ouer, but did earneſtly ſollicite it, and prouided ſufficiently for it.

Moores. King Fernand beeing yet in his Kingdome of Arragon, there were aſſembled in the cittie of Cordoua, and afterwards in Antequera, the number of ſixe thouſand horſe, and twelue thouſand foot-men, which ouer-ranne and ſpoiled the Countries of Alora, Coin, Caçaranouella and Carthama,, where diuers notable skirmiſhes were made: the Maſter of Saint Iames, the Marquis of Cales, and Don Alphonſo d'Aguilar were Captaines of them. This armie was refreſhed with victualls from Siuill and Xeres, and then returned to Antequera laden with ſpoyles. The Queene in the meane time viſited the B Prouinces of Guipuſcoa and Biſcay, and at her returne to Victoria, the King arriued there out of Arragon, where he found much to do, for the Arragonois were not ſo eaſi-

Eſtates of Arragon. ly gouerned, nor ſo ready to pleaſe their Kings appetites, as the Caſtillians, both of them left Victoria, and came to Taraſſone, where the Eſtates of Arragon were appoynted to meet; whoſe Deputies, did ſet downe ſuch difficulties and delayes, as they would by no meanes contribute money towards the warres of Granado, nor againſt France for the Earledome of Roſſillon, ſo as they were at the point to diſſolue the aſſembly: for the time of making warre beeing come, it behooued them either to aſſayle or defend on the frontiers of Granado.

The Kings Councell made long diſputations vppon the difficultie of making this C double warre: for King Fernand was deſirous to aſſayle the French for the recouerie of the Earledome of Roſſillon, and the Queenes mind was to pourſue the Moores, euen to the totall ruine of their State, and expulſion out of Spaine. The moſt part of the voyces fauoured the Queenes deſire, and ſhee, to pleaſe her husband, was of opinion, that hee with the forces of Arragon, Valencia, Cattalonia, and ſome part of Caſtile ſhould war vppon the French, and her ſelfe with the reſt of the armie would pourſue the Moores. Hereuppon they ſeuered themſelues, the Queene went towards Toledo, and the King ſtayed to make an end of the aſſembly. The Cardinall of Spaine did accompanie the

The Cardinall entreth Toledo as Archb. The king giues him place that day. Queene, and hauing not yet made his entrie into the cittie of Toledo, ſince hee was Arch-biſhop thereof, he entred the ſame in great pompe, in which ſollemnitie vpon that D day by an auncient cuſtome the Arch biſhop of Toledo was preferred in all honors and ceremonies, aboue the Soueraigne Magiſtrate: neuertheleſſe the Cardinall gaue place to the Queene, albeit ſhee would haue had the old cuſtome obſerued. From thence they went to Andaluſia, where they ordered and reformed certaine cuſtomes which the people of Iaen, Baeça, Vbeda, Caſlona, Andujar, and others had concerning feaſts and plaies nothing profitable to the common-wealth. When they came to Cordoua the great Lords did there meete to conferre about the warres: there came alſo diuers French and Almaine Gunners; for Cannons and Bombards were not as yet much vſed in Spaine. There was likewiſe a great army by ſea ſeuſoorth, Don Aluaro of Mendoza, Earle of Caſtro beeing Generall. The Queene would haue made the Cardinall Generall ouer all her E land and ſea forces: but the kings vnlookt-for returne, who could do no good with the States of Arragon, gaue end to his commiſſion. They were determined to beſeege Loxa: but for the eaſier execution thereof, they firſt of all did aſſayle Alora, the which they took hauing beaten downe two towers with the Cannon: The Moores fledd into the Caſtle, and did afterwards by compoſition ſaue their liues and goods.

Ceremonies vſed after the taking of any towne from the Moores. The King and Queenes cuſtome was, ſo ſoone as they had taken any towne from the Moores, to ſend three enſignes thither which were conſecrated or bleſſed, (as they tearm it) the which were to be ſet vp on the higheſt tower or place of the ſame towne: the firſt, was of the Crucifixe for a ſigne and token of the redemption of mankind, the which was carried to the higheſt toppe of the towne or fort, and there by an enſigne-bearer diſplayd F and flouriſhed in the ayre: the whole army kneeling downe, and giuing thankes to God in diuers prayers: but this prayer was chiefly rehearſed with a loud voyce, as followeth:

Deus qui per crucem tuam, populo in te credenti triumphum contra inimicos tuos concedere voluiſti, quæſumus, vt in tua pietate adorantibus crucem, victoriam ſemper tribuas & honorem. Others did ſay: Exaudi nos Domine ſalutaris noſter, et per Triumphum ſanctæ

Crucis

A Crucis a cunctis nos defende periculis. The Clergy and Miniſters of the Church did afterwards ſing, Te Deum laudamus.

The ſecond ſtanderd was that of the Apoſtle Saint Iames the Sonne of Zebedé, whom the Spaniards acknowledge for Patron, and protector of their Country and ſtate, and for guide and defender of their Kings of Caſtile and Leon: at the ſight wherof the army and the people cried out with great ioy, Santiago, Santiago. Saint Iames, Saint Iames, And the third was the King and Queenes royall Banner, wherein were pictured the armes of all their realmes, and dominions; and when that was lifted vp and diſplaied, they all cried aloude Caſtile, Caſtile, for King Fernand, and Queene Iſabell. After all
B this, the prelats, and Clergy did expiate, and purge the meſquites, or Churches, which had ſerued for the reprobate vſe of the Mahometan religion, bleſſing and dedicating them to ſome Saint or other; and if in the towne or Citty taken, any Chriſtian Captiues were found, as vſually there were ſome, they after the Prieſts had ſung Te Deum laudamus, were made to anſwere, Benedictus dominus Iſraell, quia viſitauit et fecit redemptionem plebis ſuæ. Theſe were the ceremonies, vſed by King Fernand, and Queene Iſabell, at the taking of any towne from the Moores.

Alora beeing taken and fortified, Don Lewis Fernandes Lord of Palma had the keeping thereof, then the royall army paſſed on to the valley of Carthama, the Marquis of Cales led the vantgard with two thouſand horſe and as many choſen foote-men. Thoſe
C of Alozagra yeelded vpon condition, they might bee mayntayned in their conſciences, and religon, the which the King graunted; then they beſeeged the towne of Caçaranouelle where the Moores made incredible reſiſtance, killing in diuers skirmiſhes greate numbers of Chriſtians, as namely Don Guttires de Sottomajor Earle of Benalcaçar, a young Noble-man, of foure and twenty yeares of age, hardy and valiant, who was ſhot throw the body, with a poyſoned arrow, for whoſe death the king and the whole army were very ſorry, becauſe theſe braueries of the Moores, did make them become obſtinate, and encouraged others, which would haue yeelded, to make reſiſtance. The Army, with this loſſe, & without performing any other exploit, then burning the country, did returne backe to Antiqera, where the King receaued letters from the Queene his
D wife, which cauſed the whole army to bluſh for ſhame; for ſhee let them vnderſtand how that ſo goodly an army, ought not to liue vnprofitably, nor returne without doing ſome notable exployt: wherefore, being incourraged by a woman, they retired againe into the enemies country, and ſpoyled it euen to the mountaine called, Sierra Neuada: the King beeing lodged with a great body of an army, within halfe a mile of the Citty of Granada, to oppoſe him-ſelfe againſt the ſallies, which they of the towne might make vpon thoſe that did forrage, the Duke of medina, and the Earle of Cabra, being in an other place, where as much as in them lay, they ſpoyled the country, and made it vnfit to beare frute, the ſooner therby to ſtarue them. The Queene had laden 5000. beaſts of carriage with victualls which by the helpe of this army, entred into Alhama where the King
E left Don Guttiere de Padilla gouernour, who was nephew to Don Garcia Lopes de Padilla, Maiſter of Calatraua, in regard the Maiſter had promiſed to defend that place, with the forces of his iuriſdiction. After-wards the army returned to Cordoua, where the Queene being demaunded if ſhee were pleaſed with what they had donne, ſhee anſwered, that it was not fit they ſhould ſpend the reſt of the yeare in idleneſſe: where-vpon the King returned, and marched againſt Septenil, which for three daies ſpace was batered, and afterwards the Moores yeelded it vpon compoſition, that they might depart with their liues, goods and liberty; the place was committed to the keeping of D. Franciſco Henriques: from thence the army went to ruine the country of Ronde, and becauſe winter did draw neere, it did attempt nothing elſe, and was brought backe to F Siuill, whether the Queene came. The garriſons of Alhama, Alora, and Septenill, were commanded by the King and Queene to aide King Mahomet the little with all their power againſt Muley Albohacen his father.

King Fernand promiſeth the Moores, liberty of their conſcience.

A couragious woman and conſtant in her enterpriſes.

6

Portugal.

King Iohn a greate iuſticer, namely againſt the nobility, with other of his qualities.

Wee will here for a while lay by the affaires of Caſtile and Arragon, and ſpeake of Portugall, and of the raigne of Iohn the 2. who ſucceeded Alphonſo 1481. beeing ſixe and twenty yeares of age. This Prince was a great Iuſticer, and it may be, ouer rigorous in the execution thereof, eſpecially againſt the Nobilitie and great Lords of his king- A dome, whome he did puniſh, and reclaymed from many oppreſſions which his father had tolerated: this cauſed him to be hated, and gaue cauſe vnto ſome who were very neere vnto him in bloud, to practiſe againſt his life and ſtate.

He was of a quicke and ſharpe iudgement, and of an excellent memorie, he could diſcourſe eloquently of all matters, and would haue thoſe that did talke with him, to conſider how and what to ſpeake, and he would ordinarily ſay, that it was impoſſible but that Kings ſhould be wiſe men, becauſe euery one that ſpake to them, whether they were fooliſh or wiſe, did ſtriue to ſpeake well and wiſely. He ſhewed great wiſedome in all his actions, not ſuffering himſelfe to be carried away by Court-flatterers, and if hee did fauour B any one, hee would aduance him but to a certaine meane and no further, giuing authoritie to no man more than was needfull: hee was a louer of good councell, very true, firme, and conſtant in whatſoeuer he graunted or denyed, liberall aſwell to ſtrangers as to his owne ſeruants: he was religious according to thoſe times, and charitable towards the poore, for whoſe eaſe and comfort, hee builded the royall Hoſpitall of Lisborne, in the honour of all Saints: he ſhewed himſelfe very obedient towards his father, and had the good hap, to haue the kingdome of Manicongo diſcouered in his raigne, at which time with great care and diligence, the nauigation for ſpices did beginne, for which things, hee was ſurnamed the Great. When hee beganne to raigne, hee was already father to the Infant Don Alphonſo begotten on Queene Elenor, daughter to Don Fernand C
Duke of Viſeo his Vncle, and to the Infanta Donna Beatrix, ſhee who had procured the peace betwixt Spaine and Portugall: the Infant was ſeauen yeares old when his father came to the Crowne, who the yeare 1481. had a ſonne by a Miſtris of his called Donna Anne de Mendoza, whoſe name was George, Maſter of Saint Iames and Auis, Duke of Coimbra, Lord of Auero and Montemajor the old, who was brought vp openly as the Kings ſonne, by his Aunt the Infanta Donna Ioane, a Nunne in the Monaſterie of Ieſus d'Auero: hee was father to Don Iohn Duke of Auero, a worthie Prince in our age.

Mediocritie is to be obſerued in the aduancement of Princes ſeruants.

Diſcouery of Manicongo.

Genealogie of Portugal.

This King Iohn of whome wee ſpeake, was the firſt King of Portugall that entitled himſelfe Lord of Guiney, the nauigation into which countrey hee mayntained and con- D tinued, and builded the Cittie and Caſtle of Saint George, the fort of Tanger and others. Hee called a Parlament in the Cittie of Ebora, there to receiue the oath of fealtie and homage due to the Kings his progenitors: at the ſame time it happened, that Don Fernand Duke of Bragança, beeing at his houſe of Villa-vicioſa, did ſearch for certaine records and titles of lands with other letters of priuiledge, to haue them renewed and confirmed by the new king: his Secretarie whome hee employed in this buſineſſe, found certaine letters of intelligence and practiſe in a cheſt, betwixt the Duke his maſter, and the King and Queene of Caſtile, contrarie to his allegeance to King Iohn: Wherefore this Secretarie, whoſe name was Lope de Figueredo, beeing mooued either with zeale towards his Prince, or with hope of ſome good reward, did embezil thoſe writings, and gaue them E to the King, who hauing copied them, re-deliuered the originall to Figueredo, who layd them among the reſt of the papers which hee had found, his Lord not perceyuing it: the Duke neuertheleſſe was ſtill fauoured and welcommed by the King, who in matters of weight could very well diſſemble, and was continually at Court accompanying and ſeruing the King and Queene; vntill vppon a time the Court beeing at Almerin, where the Queene was brought a bed before her time, and in great danger of her life: the Duke of Bragança came to viſit her, with Don Dominicke Duke of Viſeo, one of his complices, who was brother to the Queene; the King entertained them with a pleaſant countenance, and vppon a certaine day hee tooke the Duke of Bragança aſide into his chappell, within the with-drawing Curtaines, and did brotherly admoniſh him of his fault in theſe F
tearmes:

The Duke of Braganzaes practiſes diſcouered by his Secretarie.

A gentle admoniſhment made by King Iohn to the Duke of Braganza.

„Couſin, I haue vnderſtood a matter, which I muſt acquaint you with in this holy place, where I ſtand in the preſence of God, before whom I will not diſſemble: therefore beleeue it, I ſpeake nothing but truth: I heare that you haue ſecret intelligence and practiſe with the Kings of Caſtile, againſt my State and ſeruice, greatly forgetting therein

the

A the honour faith and loyaltie which you owe vnto mee: in regard whereof, conſide- " ring the reaſons on both our ſides, I for my part hauing giuen none occaſion to your " ſelfe or any other, and ſeeing no cauſe why you ſhould hope for more honour and fa- " uour of any other Prince then of me, I can not but be very much troubled, and I know " not whether I may firmely beleeue it or no: yet notwithſtanding, howſoeuer it is, I " thought good to admoniſh you, that if vpon any falſe ſurmiſe, you haue entred into " this vnreaſonable imagination, to giue it ouer: proteſting to you that I meane to for- " get, and graciouſly to pardon your offences, requeſting you, ſeeing it hath pleaſed God " to make me heire to his crowne to ſtand ſtedfaſtly to me, and to acknowledge this fauors " E towards you, and the place and rancke which you hold in this Kingdome, wherein by " your owne deſerts, and thoſe of your anceſtors, you are the chiefe perſon next vnto my " ſelfe, the which ſhould ſtirre you vp to maintaine and procure the ſafety and great- " neſſe thereof, eſpetially conſidering, that God hath as it were parted the faculties and " riches of this royall patrimony betwixt vs two: and that of two ſiſters borne of the " noble race of the Infants Don Fernand and Don Beatrice, Dukes of Viſeo, I haue mar- " ried the one and you the other. It may be that I am taxed with ſome fault, common to " Kings newly come to their crownes, as to proceed ouer rigorouſly againſt ſome per- " ſons, and to ſhew ſmall liberality and meekeneſſe in certaine matters, which could not " be otherwiſe managed: but if it were ſo that ſome bee offended with my new gouern- " C ment; you before all men, ought to tollerate it, and to be a ſingular preſident of loyal- " tie and obedience vnto others. If my Iudges and Commiſſioners ſent into your iuriſ- " diction haue exceeded the bounds of modeſty in their charge, you know very well that " they haue had great cauſe ſo to doe, and that they haue many reaſons on their ſides to " iuſtifie their proceedings, in reſpect of the preſent ſtate; but if they were in fault, ſhould " not you greatly binde me vnto you for bearing with thoſe things? and for your owne " part you may be aſſured, that in regard of your place, wiſedome and deſerts, I can not " refuſe you any thing that you ſhould craue of mee. Now, you are bound, in regarde I " am planted in the royall ſeate of Portugall, to aide mee both with counſell and armes if " need were, and whenſoeuer I ſhall craue it; therefore I intreate and commaund you "
D both in heart and will to diſpoſe your ſelfe therevnto euer hereafter. "

When the Duke heard theſe words, he would haue excuſed himſelfe, and entreated the King not to beleeue thoſe reports, which (he ſaid) were contrary to his meaning, and that whileſt hee had a heart, a hand and meanes, they ſhould all bee imployed in his ſeruice. And ſo the King left of, hoping that the Duke would amend, and that he ſhould no more neede to ſpeake vnto him concerning it. But the Court being not longe after remooued from Almerin to Saint Iren, Iaſper and Peter de Iubartes brethren and ſeruants to the Duke of Bragança, came to the King, and certified him that the Duke their Maiſter did continue his practizes with Caſtile, and that Iaſper had beene twice ſent as meſſenger to the Kings of Caſtile, and that the Marquis of Montemajor, and the Earle
E of Faro the Dukes bretheren, were conſenting to thoſe practizes. The King did largely recompence theſe two bretheren for their aduertiſement, and did reſolue to puniſh the Duke of Braganҫaes treachery, and hauing a fit occaſion by his comming to the court, which lay then at Ebora, whether hee accompanied the Prince Don Alphonſo, hee cauſed him to bee arreſted of high treaſon and to bee committed to priſon in May the yeere 1483.

The Kings Aturney General pleaded againſt him, & he was found guilty of treaſon, and was iudged and condemned by the Lords, to haue his head cut off, and al his goods to be confiſcate to the crowne: the which ſentence was executed; and Fernand Duke of Bra- The Duke of Braganſa beheaded at Ebora.
gança was brought to the publike place of execution in the city of Ebora, where he was F beheaded and made a pittifull ſpectacle to all men. Six other gentlemen were likewiſe beheaded with him, and diuers baniſhed, in which number, was the Conſtable of Portugall. The Dutcheſſe Iſabella the Queenes ſiſter, as ſoone as ſhe heard of her husbands impriſonment, ſent her three children Don Philip, Don Iames, and Don Denis into Caſtile who were kindely receiued and welcomed by Queene Iſabella their Aunt: the poore Lady their mother, hauing no other comfort in her widdow-hood but a little daughter

daughter called Margueríte, whoſe company ſhe enioyed not long, for within a while after ſhe died. D. Philip her eldeſt ſonne died in Caſtile: the ſecond Don Iames returned into Portugall, and Don Denis this third ſonne, did marry the Counteſſe of Lemos in Caſtile. A

The Marquis of Montemajor, and the Earle of Faro, the Dukes brethren, did likewiſe flie into Caſtile, where they ſpent the remainder of their daies beeing honoured and maintained by King Fernand and Queene Iſabella. Now Don Dominico the Queenes brother, was one of the conſpiracy as hath beene already ſaid; and the King the next day after the Duke of Bragança his execution called him into his preſence, and knowing him to be young both in yeeres and diſcretion, he did admoniſh him as a father, to behaue himſelfe diſcreetly, and told him diuers things which concerned his honour and wel-fare, and did freely pardon him all offences paſt: to which ſpeech of the Kings, Don Dominico could not anſwere one word but onely kiſſed the Kings hand in ſigne of thankes. This young Prince had aſpired to reigne, and being young and inconſiderate, he did oftentimes permit his hand to bee kiſſed, and would receiue other honours belonging to a ſoueraigne Prince, the which in the end bred his ruine. B

The Kings fatherly aduertisement to D. Dominico Duke of Viſeo.

After all theſe things the King being gon to viſit the townes and fortreſſes vpon the frontiers of Galicia and countries neere adioyning, Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman arriued in Portugall, of whoſe quarrell to the Admirall of Caſtile and his ſonne we haue amply ſpoken heretofore. This Lord came to the Court at Saint Iren, where hauing a time appointed him to come into the Kings preſence, as hee was going to maſſe in Saint Iames his Church, he kneeled downe at the great doore with his traine and ſeruants; the King preſented him his hand to kiſſe with his gloue vpon it, but Don Ramir thinking that the King did either contemne or ſcorne him, and being a knight of an high and couragious ſpirit, he did plucke the Kings gloue off, and ſo, kiſt his bare hand, then the King ſaid, I could haue done that my ſelfe if it had pleaſed me; but Don Ramir did not heare him in regard he was ſome-what deafe: for this cauſe he was called euer after in Portugall El de la luba, which is as much to ſay, as He of the gloue. Yet neuertheleſſe the King vſed him very graciouſly; and did aſſure him that he was in a place of ſafety, and therefore willed him to be merry and not to feare any daunger at all. Don Ramir gaue him many humble thankes, and excuſed his boldneſſe in plucking off his gloue, beſeeching him not to take it as done vnreuerently, in regard it was the cuſtome of Spaine to kiſſe the Kings bare hand. Not long after, done Ramir, had ſome iealouſie of the Marquis of Villareall a friend and kinſman to the Admirall of Caſtile, King Iohn hauing notice thereof, called the Marquis before him, and told him that his pleaſure was, that Don Ramir ſhould liue ſafe and ſecure in Portugall, free from feare either of the King of Caſtile or any elſe, and therefore if any euill did happen to him, his life ſhould anſwere it: the Marquis anſwered, that for him Don Ramir ſhould liue in all ſafety, and that he neither had nor would procure him any diſpleaſure. C D

D. Ramir Nugnes de Curman commeth into Portugal.

But the Duke of Bragançaes death did diſpleaſe diuers great Lords of the Kingdome of Portugall, in regard whereof, new conſpiracies were made againſt the Kings life. The chiefe of the conſpirators were Don Garcia Meneſes Biſhop of Ebora, and Don Fernand de Meneſes his brother, Don Lope de Albuquerque Earle of Pegnamaçor, and Don Pedro de Albuquerque his brother, Don Aluaro de Atayde, and Don Pedro d' Atayde the father and ſonne, Don Guttiere Coutino Commaunder of Cezimbra ſonne to the Marſhall, and Fernand Selueyra, who againe did draw Don Domingo the Duke of Viſeo into their practiſes, determining to make him King, and they watched for a fit time and occaſion to kill King Iohn, who being at Setuball did diſcouer the treaſon, by the relation of one called Diego Tinoco, who knew it by the meanes of a ſiſter of his who was concubine to the aboue named Biſhop no leſſe ſecret then chaſt and faithfull, and this Tinoco came of purpoſe diſguiſed in a Friers habit, to diſcloſe it to the King, who in recompence of his good ſeruice, gaue him fiue thouſand Cruzados in ready money and ſixe hundred thouſand Marauedis of yeerely rent, the which hee did not long enioy, for ſoone after, he died. Within few daies after, the King receiued the ſame aduertizement from Don Vaſco Coutino, vnto whom Don Guttiere his brother, one of the E F

A the confederats had reuealed it, thinking that without any danger he might haue ſpoken it to him by reaſon that he was in diſgrace with the King, and ment to haue fled into Caſtile: but he was therein deceiued; for Don Vaſco by this meanes made his owne peace, was created Earle of Barba with hereditary right, and beſide the Caſtle of Eſtremos, hee receiued many other aduancements. The ſame day that the confederats ſhould meete the Duke of Viſeo at the Court, the King hauing viſited a Church neere to Setuball, he went a boord of a little fiſher-boot to ſee them take fiſh, hauing with him onely foure of his faithfull ſeruants, namely Fernand Martines Mazearenas captaine of the genets or light-horſe, Diego d' Almeida, Don Iohn de Meneſes, and Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman: In the euening, as he was returning to Setuball, thirty of the confede-
B rates ſtood vpon the banke of the riuer, with intent to haue executed their treaſon, whereof the King being aduertized at his landing, by a Groome of his Chamber named Anthony Faria, who told him in his eare that it behoued him at that time to diſſemble, and to ſhew his Kingly courage, expecting a fitter time and opportunity to puniſh them according to their deſerts: the King who could very well diſſemble, being leapt on horſe-backe, called the Duke of Viſeo to him with a ſmiling and pleaſing countenance, and gaue him and the reſt of the conſpirators, many gratious and louing words, ſo as for that preſent they had not the hearts to proceed in their determinations: in the meane time, the King who was weakely accompanied, went into a Church called Our Lady the Old, wayting for his guardes arriuall, and beganne to talke with them leaning
C his back againſt the wall, the better to keepe his enemies from comming behinde him, among whom was D. Vaſco Coutino, whom he called vnto him and made a ſhew to diuert him from going into Spaine, the better thereby, vnder collour of this talke, to draw the whole conſpiracy from him. By theſe meanes it was Gods pleaſure that the King ſhould eſcape that daies daunger, and returne in ſafety to his pallace. Certaine daies after, the King being more ſuffitiently aduertized of theſe Lords conſpiracy againſt his perſon, ſent to commaund the Duke of Viſeo, who was then at Palmela with his mother the Infanta Beatrice, to come to him to Setuball, who forthwith did ſo, not doubting any thing, and he was no ſooner arriued and come into King Iohns preſence, but hee was ſtabd to death with a poniard by the Kings owne hand, in the night, in a Chamber The yong duke of Viſeo ſlaine by King Iohns owne hand.
D in Don Nugno d' Acugnas houſe where the King then lay, in the preſence of Don Pedro Deça, Diego d' Açambuya and Lopes Mendez, with no other words but theſe, Ton ſhall die, and goe carry newes to the duke of Bragança in what ſtate the treaſon ſtands which he beganne.

In this manner the Duke of Viſeo died a young Prince of twenty yeeres old, by following naughty counſell, and giuing credit to the vaine predictions of Aſtrologers, The Duke of Viſeo ſeduced by Aſtrologians.
who had aſſured him that hee ſhould bee King. The Dutcheſſe his mother was by the King certified of what had happened, who excuſed himſelfe, in regard that hee was con-E ſtrained by neceſſity to commit ſo ſodaine an execution, and intreated her to beare it patiently: and in ſome ſort to comfort her, the very ſame night he called Don Manuell her other ſonne into her preſence, who was more wiſe and diſcreet then his brother vnto whom hauing told the Dukes death, and the cauſes wherefore he died, hee gaue all that his brother did poſſeſſe and more, and conferring with him, with a fatherly affection, hee promiſed to cauſe him to be ſworne and acknowledged for Prince and heire to the crowne of Portugall, after his death and Don Alphonſo his ſonne: but hee would not permit him to name himſelfe Duke of Viſeo as his brother had done, but Duke of Beja, Lord of Viſeo, and Maiſter of the Order de Chriſtus, and hee made him Lord of the Iſle of Madera, and gaue him other lands.

The Duke was at the ſame time onely ſeauenteene yeeres of age, and the King gaue A Spheare vpon the armes of Portugall.
F him a Sphere for a diuiſe to beare in his armes, the which the Kings of Portugall doe yet at this day beare in their armes and royall ſcutcheon: the ſame was a lucky preſage vnto him of the conqueſts and diſcoueries which were afterward made in his reigne and name vnder both the Poles: the ſame was likewiſe fore-told by the Biſhop of La Garde a great Mathematicien; in regard of his Horoſcope, and poſition of the heauens at his Natiuity, being in the yeere 1468. albeit that ſuch iudgments are deceiuable and vnlawful, full,for the actions of Kings, and the euents of all other matters depend vpon Gods A onely Ordonance.

Now when the confederates vnderſtood of the Duke of Viſeos death, and that their practizes were diſcouered,each of them thought to ſaue one, but all of them were not quicke enough: for Don Pedro d' Albuquerque was taken as he fled towards Liſbone, and Don Pedro d' Atayde at Saint Iren who were brought to the Court. The like happened to the Biſhop of Ebora,and to Don Fernand de Meneſes his brother,and to Don Gutierre Coutino, As for D' Aluaro D' Atayde who remained at Saint Iren accompanied with men at armes attending the ſucceſſe of their buſineſſe,meaning to haue taken Donna Ioane ſurnamed the Excellent, who was a Nunne,from the Monaſtery of B
Saint Clare at Coimbra,and to haue lodged her in the caſtle, he fled away into Spaine, and ſo did Don Lopes d' Albuquerque Earle of Pennamaçor with all his family. D.Fernand de Silueyra hauing beene hidden by one of his father ſeruants, who neither for grieuous threatnings nor for promiſes of reward from the King could euer be drawne to diſcloſe him did likewiſe eſcape,and fled into Spaine. The King,to iuſtifie the Duke of Viſeos death,and to giue notice thereof to all men, cauſed his proceſſe to be made after that he had ſlaine him,and condemned the reſt. D.Fernand de Meneſes and D.Pedro were beheaded and quartered as traitors. As for D.Guttiere Coutino he was committed to the tower of Auis,for D.Vaſco his brother who had reuealed much of the conſpiracy to the King, did a while prolong his life, neuertheleſſe hee did not eſcape, nor is it certainely C knowne how he died. D.Garcia de Meneſes Biſhop of Ebora, beeing priſoner in the caſtle of Palmela,was found dead vpon the ceſterne of the ſaid fort, and there is great preſumption that his daies were violently ſhortned. At the ſame time, the Kings of Caſtile were at Siuill,where receiuing newes that the conſpiracy was diſcouered,and imagining that the Duke of Viſeo ſhould bee committed to priſon,and that King Iohn would not haue proceeded againſt him ſo indiſcreetly, they hauing no notice of his ſodaine death, did ſend D.Inigo Manriques Biſhop of Leon,and Gaſpar Fabro a Knight of Arragon Ambaſſadors into Portugall,with inſtruction to entreate the King to ſaue the Duke of Viſeos life,if he were yet liuing,and if he were dead, to comfort the Dutcheſſe his mother, who had beene the cauſe of the peace betwixt Spaine and Portugall. The Ambaſſa- D dors perceiuing the Duke of Viſeo to bee dead, did their beſt to comfort the ſorrowfull mother, and ſo returned into Spaine without ſpeaking to King Iohn, who neuer ceaſſed to purſue Don Fernand de Silueyra, vntill hee had driuen him out of Spaine: He was afterward ſlaine in Auignon by an Earle of Cattalonia, who was likewiſe baniſhed from his country, but the French King had like to haue taken his head from his ſhoulders in requitall of his paines. This Earle was afterward liberally rewarded by king Iohn,for that he had rid him of an enemy. The Earle of Pegnamaçor died in Caſtile,D. Aluaro of Atayde liued a baniſhed man during the life of King Iohn, and in King Manuels time returned into Portugall. By theſe ſeuerities King Iohn was feared of all his ſubiects, in regard he had not ſpared thoſe two great Lords who were of the greateſt parentage in E Portugall.

A Seruants faithfulneſſe.

The Duke of Viſeos complices and conſederates are executed.

An. 1485. Caſtile. The yere 1485.the commons of Caſtile ſent their Deputies and Commiſſioners to Orgas where D.Alphonſo of Arragon,Duke of Villahermoſa lay,who was captaine generall of their Hermandades or brotherhoods,and with him D.Alphonſo de Burgos Biſhop of Cuenca,preſident of the royall Councel, and Alphonſo de Quintanilla, who hauing propounded the great coſts and charges which the Kings were at in following the Mooriſh wars, did demãd a ſubſidy,the which was very readily granted,in regard they did ſee that it ſhould be emploied in matters ſo worthy and proffitable for the commonwealth.

7 Moores. The Gouernors and captaines on the frontiers of Andaluzia would loſe no fit occaſion that might anoy the Moores,who did all of them in a manner follow King Muley Albohacen,and had almoſt reſtored him to all his lands in Granado,reuolting from Mahumet the Little,becauſe he had beene aided by Chriſtian Kings; ſo that they left him no other place of retreat,but only the city of Almery, from whence hee made cruell warre vpon the Moores which tooke his fathers part: they meaning altogether to deſpoyle him of all rule and gouernment in Granado, and perceiuing King Muley Albohacen to bee F already

A already old and vnfit for warre, did elect, a brother of his, one of King Iſmaels ſonnes for their gouernour in Granado, who was likewiſe called Muley Boabdalin, who thinking it moſt neceſſary for the eſtabliſhing of his Kingdome to ridde his Nephew Mahomet out of the world, hee had ſecret intelligences, with the chiefe men of his faction which were neere in credit about his perſon in Almery, whom he induced by promiſes to deliuer their Prince and City into his hands at a certaine time appointed, before which place Muley Boabdellin ſhewing himſelfe, they failed not to open him the gates, & they let him in vpon ſuch a ſodain, as Mahumet hardly eſcaped with life, but God gaue him meanes to eſcape, leauing a young brother of his behinde him, who was cruelly
B murthered by his enemies: after the taking of which towne, Muley Boabdellin openly and without contradiction was choſen King of Granado both againſt the father and the ſonne, who were driuen away, in the yeere 1485. and the 868. yeere of the reigne of the Arabians there; Muley Albohacen hauing reigned nineteene yeeres. Now theſe two Princes of one name did make ſuch cruell warre vpon each other for the crowne of Granado as is not almoſt to bee beleeued. Boabdellin is a corrupted word, thoſe which ſpeake it better, call both of them Aben Abdileha, but the trueſt is Aben Abdella. The Moores to make a difference betwixt them by ſome ſurname, called King Albohacens brother, Zagall, which ſignifieth valorous, and Mahumet the little his Nephew, Zagois, that is to ſay, the vnhappy.

C

Muley Boabdelin 21. King of Granado.

IN the beginning of the reigne of Muley Boabdelin el Zagal, hee had to doe with the Earle of Cabra, with Martin Alphonſo de Corduba, Lord of Montemajor, Diego del Caſtillo great Commander of Calatraua, Pedro Ruis d' Alarcon, Diego Lopes d' Ayala, Franciſco de Bouadilla, and other, braue captaines and Knights, who ouer-ranne the D country neere to Nixar and Guejar beyond the City of Granado neere to the hilles called Sierra Neuada, where they tooke great booties, and made their retreate by meanes of the good guarde which they had left at the difficult paſſages, by the aduiſe of Pedro Ruis d' Alarcon, albeit the new King had drawne great numbers of Moores out of the city of Granado and elſe-where to encloſe and defeat them.

King Fernand and Queene Iſabella did then lie at Siuill where Don Inigo Manriques the Archbiſhop being dead, the Pope by his full power and authority gaue that Archbiſhoprike to the Cardinall Don Roderigo Borgia, who was afterward Pope Alexander the ſixth: theſe holy fathers being not able to abſtaine from breaking the concordats which did in ſome ſort reſtraine their power, the which they pretend to bee abſolute: but E theſe couragious Kings, brideled them at this time likewiſe, and delt in ſuch ſort as the Cardinall hauing reſigned that Archbiſhoprike, and put it into the Popes hands, it was giuen at the Kings entreaty to Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoça Biſhop of Palence, and his Biſhoprike of Palence reſigned to Don Alphonſo de Burgos Biſhop of Cuenca, that of Cuenca to Don Alphonſo de Fonſeca Biſhop of Auyla, and that of Auyla to Frier Hernando of Talauera, and Oropeſa, Prior of the Monaſtery of Pré of Valiodolit and the Queenes Confeſſor: In this ſort did euery one affect good Biſhoprikes in recompence of their ſeruices: I call them good, in reſpect of their reuenues.

Caſtile.

Popes cannot keepe themſelues from breaking the concordats which reſtrain their power.

Whileſt the Kings remained this yeere at Siuill, they made diuers good Edicts and Ordonances for Iudges, and for the adminiſtration of Iuſtice, as alſo for the mannaging
F of the future warre: and the time drawing neere when as armies vſe to march into the field, and diuerſe companies of horſe and foote being already arriued from all parts of Spaine vpon the frontiers of Andaluzia, they left Siuill and came to Cordoua: diuerſe great Lords, Knights and people of all ſorts did come thither, who ſuted themſelues the beſt they could, which made a gallant ſhew, wherein great coſt and ſuperfluity was vſed, as likewiſe, in feaſts, games and other military ſports: in regard whereof,

the

Profitable waies for to redreſſe ſuperfluous expences.

the Kings thought to redreſſe thoſe matters by two courſes both profitable and milde, namely, by admoniſhments which they themſelues made to the nobleſt, and to others by religious perſons of credit, and afterwards by their owne example ſhewing in their apparrell, traine and manner of life great modeſty, wherein neuertheleſſe ſome Maieſty did appeare, as was fitting for their degree. A

As concerning the warre the opinion was, that Malaga ſhould be beſeeged, and by the way they laboured (but in vaine) to take the caſtle of Montefrio. Paſſing forward, they did ouer-runne, ſpoile and deſtroy the country neere to Carthama, where the common opinion was to ſeeke to take Carthama and Coin before they did attempt any thing againſt Malaga, to the end to haue the country more at their commandement, the which was not the worſt counſell: and becauſe the army was great, part thereof was ſent to beſeege Carthama vnder the conduct of the Maiſter of Saint Iames, the Conſtable, and D. Alphonſo D' Aguilar, and the other part to Coyne which was commanded by the Marquis of Cales, the Earle of Crugna, and D. Hurtado de Mendoza, with the Cardinalls people. The King with ſome part of his forces was lodged betwixt both theſe ſeeges, to ſuccor either of them as need ſhould require. In the mean time the towne of Benamexi yeelded as it had done in time before: but it did reuolt when the Earle of Benalcaçar was ſlaine, into the which fault it fell againe after it had yeelded, and was now taken by aſſault, the Inhabitants were taken or ſlaine, and the place razed to the ground: the King did chooſe out one hundred of the principall priſoners and cauſed them to be hanged for a terror to the reſt, chiefly for an example to them of Carthama, Coin and Ronde; yet notwithſtanding they were not negligent in their owne defence. Certaine Affrican Moores of Velez de la Gomera, being mooued with zeale to their religion, came ouer into Spaine, and eſpied a fit occaſion whereby to enter into Coin, which they did at ſuch time, as a great and large breach was made, which the Chriſtians did aſſaile, who by this new aide were rudely repulſed with great ſlaughter: there were ſlaine Pero Ruis Alarcon, a moſt wiſe and valiant captaine, and Tello d' Aguilar likewiſe, whoſe death did greatly greeue King Fernand, wherevpon hee cauſed the battery to bee redoubled and did ſo preſſe the beſeeged, as they beganne to talke of compoſition. The King being highly diſpleaſed for his loſſe receiued at that aſſault, would not receiue them at the firſt vpon any condition, but at the laſt he graunted them their liues and goods, and ſo the towne was yeelded vp. Coin was a great towne and very hard to bee kept, wherefore it was razed. Thoſe of Carthama hauing notice that Coin was yeelded, did compound in like manner, whoſe example was followed by Curiana, Puxiana, and others. The garde and defence of Carthama was committed to the Maiſter of Saint Iames vpon his entreaty, who left there for Lieutenant vnder him a Gentleman of his owne, named Iohn de Ceſpedes. About the ſame time, Don Alphonſo Henriques high Admirall of Caſtile died at Valiodolit, in whoſe place and dignity Don Frederike Henriques his ſonne ſucceeded. The Queene beeing at Cordoua tooke care to prouide the army of money and victualls, wherein ſhe vſed incredible dilligence and dexterity.

Rigorous punishment of the reuolted.

Coin, Carthama, and other places taken by compoſition from the Moores.

D. Frederike Henriques Admirall of Caſtile.

After the taking of the places aboue mentioned, the King paſſed on with a great number of men at armes and came within ſight of Malaga, a ſtrong towne and exceeding well furniſhed with men and all things neceſſary for a towne of warre. The Moore King who lay within it made a ſally with a thouſand horſe, which were the floure of his cauallery, where they skirmiſhed valiantly on both ſides, where D. Fernand D' Ayalos the eldeſt of that family was ſlaine. And becauſe the army wanted water, the King went backe to Carthama; where ſitting in counſell what was beſt to bee done, it was concluded to goe and beſeege Ronde. D. Pedro Henriques Marquis of Cales and captaine of the frontiers of Andaluzia with other captaines marched on before with three thouſand horſe and eight thouſand foot to inueſt the place, and the King followed them at the heeles with the reſt of the army. The towne was ſtronge and defended by very warlike Moores, being beſeeged and furiouſly battered, the Chriſtians in a few daies won the ſuburbes thereof, where Alphonſo Fayardo ſhewed great proofe of his worth and valor. The battery continuing againſt the towne albeit the Moores which were ſent to the ſuccor therof, did

B C D E F

A did their beſt to enter into it and did put the campe in continuall alarmes, the Chriſtians neuertheleſſe did ſo preſſe them as the beſeeged were faine to yeeld, vpon condition that their goods and liues might be ſaued, with liberty to liue in their owne ſect in any place of Caſtile where they pleaſed. The King entred into the towne of Ronda vpon Whitſunday; D. Bernardin de Velaſco, ſonne to the Conſtable hauing firſt ſeized vpon a tower of the caſtle, and as ſoone as the Moore gouernor was gonne forth of it with his people to retire himſelfe into the King of Caſtiles country to a place in the territory of Siuil, the towne was repeopled with Chriſtians drawne from the ſame city, from Cordoua and other places of Andaluzia. The Queene made prouiſion for the ornaments of the Churches, and things neceſſary for their ſeruice, and the gouernment of the towne B was giuen to Antonio de Fonſeca. The Moores of that country hauing made themſelues Mudejares, that is to ſay, vaſſals to Chriſtians, were at that time religiouſly maintained and preſerued, according to the capitulations and promiſes, by meanes whereof, diuers other townes did voluntarily yeeld themſelues to the Kings, namely, Burga, Iunquera, Monda, Ganſin, Caſeres, Montija, with other caſtles and fortreſſes of the mountaines of Ronda, Villalonga, and Carthema, who were permitted to liue in their owne religion, paying the ſame tribute which they were wont to giue to the Moore Kings. The places which did yeeld were more then forty in number. And becauſe Caçaranouella did make delaies, King Fernand cauſed the Inhabitants thereof to bee ſummoned to yeeld, vpon paine of taſting of all the rigour of warre: wherevpon they ſubmitted, vpon the ſame C conditions as the reſt had done, and the garriſon thereof was giuen to D. Sancho de Rojas. Thoſe likewiſe of Marbela, a ſea towne, being ſommoned to yeeld, made anſwere that they were contented ſo to doe, and they ſent their gouernor or Alguazil Major to the King, who deſiring to bee preſent at the yeelding thereof, brought thither his army by the way of Antequera, fetching a long circuit but eaſie and commodious: By the way he receiued letters from the Moores of Marbela, who demaunded new capitulations, the which were not anſwered till the army was in ſight: wherewith they being amazed, deliuered vp the town, and retired themſelues, ſome into Affrica, and others into the Kingdome of Caſtile: Montemajor and other places of the country of Marbela did likeD wiſe yeeld. And becauſe the army beganne to want victualls by reaſon that the tempeſts and ſtormes at ſea did hinder the ſhips of burthen from ſayling, the King was aduiſed to make retreate to Cordoua, ſo the army marched within ſight of Malaga once againe, from whence the Moores came forth and skirmiſhed, but to no purpoſe, the ſeege whereof had not beene in vaine nor without effect, if victuals had not wanted. The army being returned neere to Antequera, it was aboundantly refreſhed with victuals ſent thither by the Queene. The King afterward entred into Cordoua with great ioy and applaud of the Queene, Prince and Infantas of the Court, the people, Clergy, and ſundry Ambaſſadors: there were ſollemne proceſſions made, where the King in manner of a triumph cauſed great number of Chriſtians to bee led in pompe, and in a glorious ſhew, which were redeemed from captiuity, whoſe ſhackles and irons were afterward ſent E to Toledo, and there hung vp againſt the wal of the Monaſtery of Saint Iohn of the kings, which are to be ſeene at this day.

Ronda taken, and the Moores liues, goods, and religion granted vnto them.

Equity of the King and Queene of Caſtile.

For the maintenance and preſeruation of what had beene wonne and conquered, Iohn de Torres, a knight of the Kings houſe, was ſent vnto the frontiers with a Prouoſt or Alcayde of the Court, named the Licenciate La Font, who deſtributed the lands to the new Inhabitants, for the ordinary garriſons were vp in the country of the Moores more then twenty leagues; and becauſe diuers Pirates had robbed ſundry Moores as they paſſed out of Spaine into Affrike, contrarie to the capitulations, informations beeing made therevpon, the Licenciat recouered all that had beene taken away, who de-F maunding a ſafe-conduct for his paſſage ouer into Affrica to reſtore to euery one what was his owne, the Moores made him anſwere that hee needed none other ſafe-conduct then the greatneſſe and renoune of the Kings of Caſtile his Maiſters: wherevpon the Licenciate made himſelfe ready to paſſe ouer, yet diuers of his friends counſelled him not to giue ouermuch credit to the light faith of the Moores, wherevnto with great boldneſſe and conſtancy hee replied, that God forbid, that the power and greatneſſe of his Kings honor ſhould be impaired or diminiſhed thorow his feare: a A couragious ſpeech of a moſt faithfull and affectionate ſubiect and ſeruant. And ſo he paſſed ouer and reſtored the Moores their goods, and promiſe was kept with him. In the meane time the garriſons of Alhama hauing ouer-runne the country neere to Granado, as they returned with great quantity of cattaile and other booties, they met on a ſodaine and vnlooked for the King of Granado who came from Malaga thither, accompanied with great numbers of horſe, by whom they were charged and purſued vnto the very gates of Alhama with great loſſe of their people, beſide the ſpoiles which were recouered from them. There remained yet ſome ſmall ſeaſon of this yeere 1485. fit to make warre in, the which the Kings would not haue vnproffitably ſpent, without enter- B prizing ſome matter of worth: therefore they cauſed the forces of Andaluzia, Extremadura, and the Marquiſate of Villena to bee aſſembled (for they had licenced the men of warre of the farthermoſt prouinces of Spaine to depart as ſoone as they returned to Cordoua) whereafter diuers conſultations, they reſolued, at the perſwaſion of the Earle of Cabra to goe and beſeege Moclin: the Earle with Martin Alphonſo de Cabra Lord of the houſe of Montemajor, was ſent before to ſhut in thoſe of the towne with the forces which he had in Baena, then their followed him with foure thouſand horſe and other forces the Maiſter of Calatraua, the Earle of Buendia and other Knights; the King with the reſt of the forces came after, and the Queene with the whole Court came to Baena. C

Equity of the Kings of Caſtile.

Thoſe that went firſt with the Earle of Cabra beeing arriued on a morning neere to Moclin fell vnawares vpon the King of Granadoes army which was come to Moclin conſiſting of twenty thouſand Moores as well horſe as foote, who neuertheleſſe began to flie as ſoone as they did ſee the Chriſtians whom they thought to bee farre more in number then they were: but hauing better viewed them they returned and charged them ſo brauely as they diſordered and put them to flight: diuers were there ſlaine and taken, the Earle eſcaped being hurt in the hand with a Harquebuze ſhot, his horſe hauing receiued foure wounds with a launce, his brother D. Gonçall de Cordoua was ſlaine, the Moores following the chaſe were ſtaied and conſtrained to turne their backes, by the troupes of the Maiſter of Calatraua and the Earle of Buendia. This newes did greatly D diſpleaſe the Kings, who altering their determination left Moclin and turned their forces againſt Cambill and Alhabar, very ſtrong places on the confines of Iaen, and within three leagues of the city, alwaies well kept and defended by the Kings of Granado. The Marquis of Cales with the vantgard did approach neere vnto their forts, whether the Artillery was brought with great difficulty, and the battery made with all dilligence: but they yeelded forthwith and the Moores which were within it were ſent away free with their goods into Granado: the Queene gaue theſe two forts to the city of Iaen, where the King with the Maiſter of Saint Iames did determine to ſtrengthen Alhama with foure thouſand horſe and fiue thouſand foot which were appointed for the ſame purpoſe. The Treaſorer of Calatraua beeing gouernor of Alhama was ſollicited by a E
Moore of the garriſon of Salea, to come thither with his forces, and hee did aſſure him that he would finde meanes to cauſe him to enter into it: the Treaſorer hauing firſt of all well examined the Moore, and being aſſured that he ment no deceite went on a night to Salea, where the traitors brother did let downe a rope from the walles, and helped to erect the ſcaling ladders by which the Chriſtians mounted, who after a dangerous fight made themſelues Maiſters of the place, the Inhabitants whereof were all made ſlaues.

The Chriſtians defeated at Moclin.

Pope Innocent the eight being daylie aduertized of theſe goodly victories, graunted this yeere to the Kings to raiſe greater ſubſidies vpon the Clergy, the which were moderated by the Cardinall of Spaine to one hundred thouſand golden florins of the F coine of Arragon. About the end of the yeere the Court leauing Andaluzia, came to Alcala de Henares, where Queene Iſabell was brought in bed of a daughter named Catherin who was wife to Arthur Prince of Wales heire to the crowne of England, and afterward married to his brother King Henry the eight of that name.

Birth of the Infanta Catherine.

In Alcala which was a place belonging to the Archbiſhop of Toledo, the Alcaides and Prouoſts

A Prouoſts of the Court executing their offices, were hindered by the Cardinall, who was Archbiſhop of Toledo, who made greeuous complaints to the Queene, how her Officers did vſurpe vpon his authority: the Queene told him, that ſhee being Soueraigne in Caſtile, and in all other her realmes, might execute iuſtice in any place. The matter being debated on both ſides, it was referred to the compromiſe and iudgment of fiue perſons of the counſell, whom the Queene would name, and to fiue Channons of the Chapter of Toledo for the Cardinall: but the other affaires of Court, the ſhort ſtaye thereof at Alcala, with other hinderances, did end this ſtrife, the which remained vndecided. Then were the Iudges of the Court diſcharged of part of the Proceſſes which did
B abound in all places where the King and Queene went, the which were turned ouer to the Chancery at Valiodolit, where Don Alphonſo de Fonſeca Archbiſhop of Saint Iames was made Preſident, with eight Doctors for his Councell.

Contention betwixt the Archbiſhop of Toledo and the Queene.

During all theſe warres and buſineſſe Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman, of whom wee haue often ſpoken heretofore, had remained in Portugall, greatly honoured by King Iohn. Hee vnderſtanding of the Admirall of Caſtils death, his ancient enemy, procured his friends to obtaine his pardon of King Ferdinand and Queene Iſabell, but beeing aduertiſed that the matter was now harder to bee effected then before, by reaſon that Don Frederick, ſonne to the deceaſed Admirall, who had begunne the quarrell, was made Admirall in his Fathers place, and highly fauoured, hee deſperately reſol-
C ued to kill him: and to effect his purpoſe, hee departed with leaue from the Court of Portugall, and came to Braganca. Don Frederick Henriques beeing aduertiſed by his friends what his enemy did intend, hee thought, like a wiſe man, that it was not good to hold him ſtill in diſpaire, and therefore hee ſent to Mary Oſorio, Don Ramir Nugnes mother, to let her vnderſtand, that if ſhee would come to Valiodolit to ſue for her ſonnes reſtitution, hee would aſſiſt her therein, prouided that ſhee would take order that Don Ramir ſhould returne back from Bragança, to the Court of Portugall.

This Lady beeing deſirous to haue her ſonne reſtored to his lands and goods, did not looſe ſo fit and vnlookt for an occaſion, but came to the Admirall, with whom after long conference, ſhe went to the court being at Alcala de Henares, where ſhe obtained,
D but not without difficulty, the goods of Don Ramir, as depoſitarie, and that hee might returne into Spaine, vnder the keeping of the Earle of Feria. Don Ramir hauing notice heereof, tooke his leaue of the King of Portugall, and came to the Earle of Ferias houſe, where hee remained three yeares, vntill his buſineſſe were brought to his concluſion; that hee might enioy his goods, and marry with his promiſed wife, the daughter to the Earle of Luna: but that hee might not goe to his owne lands, vntill the King and Queene gaue him leaue. Afterward hee was permitted to come into his owne houſes, vpon condition, that during his life he ſhould not come ouer the riuer of Duero: ſuch was the end of the quarrell cauſed by the Ladies of the Court, betwixt Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman, and Don Frederick Henriques.

Sentence of the quarrell betwixt Don Ramir Nugnes de Guzman, and Frederick Henriques.

E Before the Court departed from Alcala de Henares, Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza Earle of Tendilla, and Doctor Iohn de Medina, both of them of the Kings Councell, were ſent Ambaſſadors into Italy, about the warre which was betwixt Ferdinand King of Naples, and Pope Innocent; the which Ambaſſage they performed ſo wiſely, as they made peace betwixt thoſe great Potentates. Theſe Ambaſſadors did in open Conſiſtorie performe the obedience and ſubmiſſions due to the Pope. King Ferdinand and Queene Iſabell did in the meane time cauſe diligent ſearch and puniſhment to bee made, vpon conuerted Iewes and Moores, which did returne to their old ſuperſtition. In the beginning of the yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, eighty and ſixe, the Court remooued to Medina del Campo, with intent to puniſh Don Rodrigo Oſorio Earle of F Lemos, who did diſquiet the countrey of Galicia, and had ſurpriſed the Caſtle of Ponferrada, driuing thence the garriſon which Captaine George Abendagno held for the King, and had broken in all ſorts the truce which the King had made betwixt him and the Earle of Benauent. In regarde whereof hee was commanded to repaire in perſon to the Court, but hee durſt not, and adding crimes to crimes, hee committed ſundry exceſſes and robberies in Galicia.

The Queene being buſied about the warres of Granado which ſhe ſo much affected, and not being able to goe in perſon into Galicia, gaue commiſſion to the Earle of Benauent his vtter enemy to repreſſe this inſolent Earle of Lemos. A

The ſpring time drawing neere, the city of Cordoua began already to be filled with ſouldiars ſent for by the Kings out of all the Prouinces of Spaine for the Mooriſh wars: wherefore the Kings parted from Medina, and paſſing along by Toledo came to Cordoua. There, did hourely arriue many troupes, not onely of Spaniards, but of Frenchmen, Engliſh and other forraine nations. Amongſt the Lords of Caſtile, D. Inigo Lopes de Mendoza Duke of Infantazgo made the braueſt and gallanteſt ſhew. The army being muſtered amounted to the number of twelue thouſand horſe, and forty thouſand able fighting foormen, great number of Cannoniers and peeces of Ordinance of all ſorts, thirty thouſand beaſts of carriage, two thouſand waggons with their equipage and ment to driue them. With theſe forces Loxa was beſeeged. Into this towne King Mahumet the Little had ſhut him ſelfe, breaking his faith giuen to the Kings of Caſtile, for to reconcile himſelfe to his vncle: for the Moores perceiuing, though to late, that their ordinary diuiſions and ſtrifes had plunged them into extreame ruine, they did ſo handle the matter, as they made theſe two Priences friends, who diuided the ſoueraigne autho ity betwixt them, the citty of Granado remayning neuertheleſſe to King Muley Boabdellin el Zagal: in ſuch ſort as communicating their counſels and forces together to annoy the Chriſtians, Mahumet the Little, did vndertake to defend Loxa, from whence diuers ſallies and hot skirmiſhes were made vpon the Kings vantgard, ſo as King Mahumet receiuing two wounds there, the Moores were ſhut in, the place was beſeeged, and the battery furiouſly begunne. The Duke of Infantazgo being one day vpon the guarde, did take certaine Moores of Granado who would haue entred into Loxa, by whom he had notice that King Muley Boabdellin came with a great power to the aide of the beſeeged, wherevpon the guardes were doubled in all places of the campe, and preparation was made for whatſoeuer might happen. The ſuburbes being opened with the Canon, they were ſharpely aſſailed and well defended, neuertheleſſe they were taken, with great effuſion of Chriſtian bloud, where the Lord Scales Generall of the Engliſh was hurt. There was found in the ſuburbes a Moore that was a Weauer, who was ſo obſtinate, as ſeeing the place to bee taken, and that the other Moores with-drew themſelues into the towne, would not for all that leaue his owne houſe, ſaying, that hee had rather die by iron then die in irons, ſeeing that Loxa which was wont to defend the Moores and offend the Chriſtians, was now the repaire of the enemies, and the graue of her owne citizens, and in this obſtinacy hee was ſlaine. The ſuburbes being wonne, they beganne to batter the towne in ſuch ſort as in a ſhort time, the walles, towers, and defenſes were ouerthrowne, ſo as the Moores which defended them, lay open and expoſed to the Cannons mouth, which did ſo terrifie and diſcourage them as they craued parley and compoſition vpon theſe conditions: That King Mahumet the Little ſhould be pardoned for his diſobedience paſſed: that hee ſhould giue ouer the title of King of Granado, and intitle himſelfe thence forward Marquis of Guadix, if ſo bee that hee could recouer the place within ſixe monthes next enſuing, and that it might be lawfull for him to goe into Affrica, or to liue in the country of Granado or elſe in Caſtile as ſhould ſeeme beſt vnto him, and that the Moores which were within Loxa might doe the like. Theſe things agreed vpon, Loxa was yeelded, and the gouernment thereof committed to Don Aluaro de Luna Lord of Fuente Duegna, proceſſions and ſignes of ioy were made at Cordoua and elſe-where for the taking of this towne. The Meſquites being purged, the Queene prouided them of ornaments after the accuſtomed manner.

The King of Caſtiles army at the ſiege of Loxa. B C D E

Loxa yeelded.

From thence the King ſent the Maiſter of Saint Iames and the Marquis of Cales, with foure thouſand horſe, and twelue thouſand foot to beginne the ſeege of Illora a very ſtrong place and well defended, diſtant three leagues from Granado: whither the reſt of the army being come, the quarters and lodgings appointed, and well fortified hauing ſet watches, and ſentinells in the fields, vpon towers and high eminent places, to diſcouer from a farre off, (for being ſo nere Granado, they feared ſome ſodaine and vnlooked for F

A for aſſault of the Moores) the ſuburbes were beaten and aſſailed, where the Duke of Infantazgo with his troupes, had the honour of the firſt aſſault: but he perceiuing his ſouldiars, who at the muſter made the gallanteſt ſhew in bravery of armor and apparell aboue all others, to goe coldly to the fight, cried out vnto them, How now my fellowes, " ſhall men ſay of you, that you are of the number of thoſe braggarts which are of no o- " ther worth then to make a ſhew in the ſtreetes and in a muſter, where men are out of " danger and farre from blowes; and that you are couragious in nothing but ſpending of " your money in bravery like vnto women, no, no, ſouldiars, your honor conſiſteth in be- " ing valiant in fight, and therefore if you be men, preferre it before your liues, and doe " B not endure, that being beaten backe from this place with double ſhame, other men " ſhould carry away the glory from you: for mine owne part rather then I will bluſh at " your baſeneſſe and cowardize, I am reſolued not to ſuruiue ſuch a ſhame, but forgetting " the place which I hold, I will caſt my ſelfe into the breach amid the greateſt throng of the " enemies; and whoſoeuer loue their honour let them follow me. "

The ſouldiars being aſhamed, at this ſpeech reiterated by the Earle of Cabra and others, they tooke courage, beſeeching their captaine to command them what they ſhould doe, and they marched with ſuch fury againſt the enemies, as entring into the ſuburbes, they made a pittifull ſlaughter of all thoſe which could not ſoone enough get into the city; againſt the which, the cannon beeing planted, the flankes and curtines were ſoone ouerthrowne and infinite numbers of houſes perced thorow: ſo as the
C Moores fearing to bee ſooner forced by the enemies, then ſuccoured by their friends, yeelded themſelues and went forth of the towne with bagge and baggage, and without their armes. The King gaue the garriſon of Illora, to Don Gonçalo Hernandes de Cordoua brother to Don Alphonſo d'Aguilar, who was afterward ſurnamed the great captaine. Illora yeeldeth to king Fernand.

The army after that, marched to Moclin, whether Queene Iſabella came to ioyne with the campe at Loxa. The towne had beene newly fortified with towers and bulwarkes, more then in former times, but the battery was made with ſuch ſtore of ordinance, as nothing could reſiſt it: the Chriſtians beſides did vſe diuers kindes of artifi-
D ciall fiers, the which did great hurt to the beſeeged, and burnt all their ſtore of gunpoulder, by meanes of a pot of this wild fire which flew in the ayre, and did ſtick faſt in a tower where the ſaid poulder lay, which was blowne vp into the ayre; wherewith the Moores being amazed, they did compound to depart with their liues and goods ſaued. Moclin being taken, part of the army was ſent to beate Montefrio, they were the troupes of Stuill, Xeres, and Carmona, whileſt the King with the reſidew thereof made ſpoile vpon the confines of Granado, not without diuers incounters and ſharpe skirmiſhes with the Moores, who came forth of the head city. The King being returned to Moclin, the captaines of Montefrio and Colomera preſented themſelues vnto him demanding compoſition, which was granted them, and the Moores went forth of thoſe two places to Granado with their goods, but they left their armor, weapons and victuals behind them. Moclin taken.
E All theſe places which were taken were rampired and fortified with good garriſons, victuals, and other neceſſaries, and hauing left D. Frederike de Toledo, ſonne to D. Garcy Aluares of Toledo Duke of Alua, captaine generall of the who country newly conquered, the King and Queene returned to Cordoua.

Not long after, they marched towards Leon, to order the affaires of Galicia, which was greatly troubled, by the inſolency of the Earle of Lemos, who neuertheleſſe appearing before the Kings, did humbly craue his pardon and obtained it, being fauoured by diuers great Lords of the Court: Hee was notwithſtanding enioyned not to enter into Galicia for a certaine time, and the places of Ponferrada, Sarria and Caſtro-real
F were taken from him and were applied to the crowne, the Kings neuertheleſſe giuing a certaine ſumme of money for the marriage of his aunts.

Theſe things thus ordered, the Kings went to viſit Saint Iames his Church, in the which city they builded a goodly Hoſpitall, for the releeſe of the poore and of pilgrims, from thence fetching a circuit round about the country of Galicia, they redreſſed diuers tyranies which were there committed, reſtoring diuers monaſteries and Churches, which The Hoſpitall of Saint Iames, built by King Fernand and Queene Iſabel for the releeſe of pilgrims.

were by force diſpoſſeſſed of their goods, lands, and reuenewes by certaine Knights and Gentlemen. To containe whom and all others in their duties, they eſtabliſhed a Iudgement ſeate of foure Auditors, which was the beginning of the Royall Audience of Galicia, and they confirmed Don Diego Lopes Earle of Haro in his dignity of Viceroy of the country, as he had beene in time before. And the better to procure the peace of the countrey, they cauſed diuerſe ſtrong houſes to be ouer-throwne and razed to the ground which ſerued for the repaire of theeues and robbers, and carried away with them out of Galicia diuerſe mutinous and quarrellous Gentlemen, to the end they ſhould employ their ſtrength and courage in the warre againſt the Moores. The Court beeing returned to Benauent, the Earle ſhewed himſelfe very liberall and magnificent in the entertainment of the Kings and the great Lords: from thence they came to Salamanca, where they ſpent the remainder of this yeare 1486.

Mutinous and quarrelſome perſons ſent forth of the Country vnder cooller of other employment.

It hapned this yeare in the towne of Trugillo, that the Iudge or Corrigidor of the place, hauing laide hands vpon a Prieſt for committing ſome notorious crime, and not ſending him ſoone enough to his ordinary Iudge, the priſoners kinſ folke hauing taken a Croſſe in their hands, ranne vp and downe the Citty crying out for helpe, and ſaid that the holy Catholicke faith was trodden vnder foote, the which did ſo ſtirre vp the brutiſh multitude, as they ranne to take Armes, and came in tumultuous manner to the Corrigidors lodging, who was glad to make haſt to deliuer the priſoner, whereof the King and Queene had notice, who were greatly diſpleaſed with ſuch ſeditions, and ſent certaine Iudges and Commiſſioners to Trugillo with forces, who executed diuerſe of the mutiners according to lawe.

Mutiny vnder ſhew of religion.

This yeare, Chriſtopher Colombus borne at Cugurco vpon the riuer of Genoa, came to the Court of Caſtile, who made offer to ſearch the Occidentall Ocean, where hee did vndertake to diſcouer a great land, riche and aboundant in gold and other commodities, crauing ayde of the King and Queen of money and ſhippes, to furniſh him out on ſuch a voyage. Colombus was a man very expert in Nauigation, and vntill that time hee had gotten his liuing by making Sea Cardes. Hee beeing married, and dwelling in the Iſle of Madera; a ſhippe of Biſcay, which had for many dayes beene driuen vp and downe by tempeſts, and caſt vpon the ſame coaſts, whereof hee did then ſpeake, did happen to arriue in the Iſland, Colombus brought the Pilot thereof and three other Marriners home to his houſe, who hauing endured much miſery at ſea, did there dye, and in recompence of their kinde entertainment, they did amply informe their hoaſt, whereabout theſe lands lay, and with what windes a man might ſaile thether. Colombus being a man of a quick apprehenſion, and great courage, came to King Iohn of Portugall, hoping to perſwade him to vndertake that Nauigation, offering him his ſeruice therein, and after that to King Henry the ſeauenth of England; in the end to Don Henriques de Guzman Duke of Medina Sidonia, and to Don Lewis de la Cerde Duke of Medina Celi, who held commodious Hauens in Caſtile, beſeeching them to ayde him in ſo worthy an enterpriſe: but all his trauaile was to no purpoſe, for they eſteemed him as an Italian, who by bragges and vaunts of matters which hee knew not, endeuoured to releeue his pouerty. Now this yeare hee came to Court with letters from Frier Iohn Peres de Marchena, one excellently learned in all humane learning, who dwelt at Rauida, which gaue good teſtimony of Colombus skill, yet all this was to ſmall purpoſe: and without the aſſiſtance of Alphonſo de Quintanilla, hee was at the point to haue giuen ouer all: Quintanilla hauing brought him to his houſe, and well founded him, gaue him acceſſe to the Cardinall of Spaine, and after that, to diuerſe of the Kings ſpeciall fauourites, by whoſe meanes hee was ſundry times heard diſcourſe, in ſo much as his ſpeech beganne to pleaſe, and the Kings promiſed him ayde and employment for the diſcouerie of a new world, ſo ſoone as the warres of Granado were ended: In this manner Colombus, full of hope and courage, did conſtantly purſue, for the ſpace of ſixe whole yeares, the effects of the Kings promiſe, till at laſt it was performed. Hee was a man firme and conſtant in what hee vndertooke, ſtrong and able in trauaile, ſeuere, and chollerick, bigge of limbes and ſtature, redde faced and full of pimples.

The firſt comming of Chriſtopher Colombus, to the King and Queene of Caſtile.

Qualities of Chriſtopher Colombus.

The

A The Court lying at Salamanca, the Kings cauſed the Court of Chancerie to remoone from Valliodolit into their owne pallace there, which was the Biſhops houſe, to the end they might be eye-witneſſes, after what manner they ended ſuites, and did adminiſter iuſtice, in regard many complaints were made of them. And beeing aduertiſed that the Marſhall Don Pero d' Ayala had cauſed a Scriueners head to be cut off, who was one of his tenants, for giuing his mother Donna Maria, with whom hee was at ſtrife, a coppie of his fathers will, they ſent to take him priſoner, and to ſeize vpon his goods. Prince ſo eare full of iuſtice.

When he was brought to Court, the Conſtable, who was allyed vnto him, (for hee had married a Neece of his, daughter to the Earle of Miranda) would haue departed, ſaying, that he would not be preſent at the iudgement of one ſo neere vnto him: but the B Queene aſſuring the Conſtable, that the Marſhall ſhould not bee touched neither in life nor member, ſtayed him there. The controuerſie betwixt the mother and the ſonne, was referred to the Kings Councell, as alſo the difference betwixt the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and the Earle of Alua de Liſta, about the Earledome of Niebla, which the Earle ſaid did belong vnto him in right of his mother; which controuerſie remaynes at this day vndecided. The countrey of Biſcay beeing at this time ſomewhat troubled, in regard the Kings Officers did ſeeme to incroach vppon their priuiledges, the Licenciate Garcy Lopes of Chincilla, one of the Kings Councell, was ſent thither, who did iuſtice, and reformed many matters: but he could neuer obtaine of the people, that the Biſhops ſhould C come into the countrey to viſit the Churches, who ſayd, that it was againſt their priuiledges. In regard of the warre againſt the Moores great leauies of ſouldiers were made as well in Biſcay, Alaua, Guipuſcoa, Aſturia's, as Gallicia, who marched into Andaluſia towards Cordoua. Biſhops baniſhed from Biſcay.

The ſtate of the Moores, which was the other day vnited, became on a ſudden diuided, it beeing an impoſſible matter for two Soueraignes to commaund in one country. King Muley Boabdellin el Zagal, which poſſeſſed the cittie of Granado, with a great part of the countrie, began a freſh to purſue his Nephew Mahomet the Little; putting all thoſe Moores to death which tooke his part, confiſcating the goods of ſuch as he could catch: and he laboured by all meanes to procure King Mahomets death by poyſon or o- D therwiſe, who after the taking of Loxa, had withdrawne himſelfe into the towne of Velez the white. To that place there came to him a very dangerous Ambaſſage from his vncle Muley, fayning to treate of peace and concord, with too great ſubmiſſions, the better to diſguiſe his intent, which was to kill Mahomet, and the Ambaſſadours had expreſſe charge ſo to do, who brought him ſome poyſoned preſents, to the end that if they fayled in the execution of the one, yet the other might take effect. King Mahumet beeing aduertiſed by his friends of the Ambaſſadours intents, would by no meanes heare or ſee them, nor yet receiue their gifts, but ſent them word to tell his Vncle Muley Boabdellin, that he was ſufficiently warned of his proceedings, and that he would accept of no other conditions from him, but onely to throw him out of the royall throne of Granado, E which was his true inheritance, and did in no ſort belong vnto him, who was a tyrant and a murtherer of the Princes of his bloud, for the which he did hope ſhortly to chaſtiſe him, and to cut off his head. Moores.

Now was King Mahomet ayded and aſſiſted by the commandement of the kings of Caſtile, by Iohn de Benauides, Gouernour of Lorcia, and by Don Frederick of Toledo, Gouernor of the new-conquered countreys, and other Chriſtian Captaines, who did often enter into the lands and territories of Granado, and were ſundrie times conſtrayned to beate backe the enemies, and to defend their owne gouernements from their inuaſions. This aſſiſtance notwithſtanding, King Mahomet the Little was euill intreated by the contrarie partie, diſpoſſeſſed almoſt of all, and brought into deſpayre, by which he was dri- F uen to a marueilous hazard, either to loſe all, or winne all: for hee went ſecretly to Granado, not hauing any intelligence there, and arriuing in the night at the gate of the Albaycin, he called to the guards, by whom he was knowne and brought in, hauing but foure or fiue men in his company: there he aſſembled diuers of the inhabitants of the Albaycin, and did ſo well lay open the tyrannies and wrongs which King Muley his Vncle had done to him, and did ſo perſwade them by forcible reaſons to fauour his right to the Reſh enterpriſe of K. Mahumet the Little.

Crowne

Crowne of Granado, as euery one beeing mooued with pitty towards him, and rage A Great ſedition in Granado. againſt the tyrant, did take armes in his behalfe, and raiſed a great tumult in the Citty, crying out, that Mahomet was lawfull King. In the morning King Muley Boabdelin, who lay in the Forte of Alhambra, vnderſtanding that his Nephew had ſeazed on the Albaycin, cauſed his people to arme themſelues, and came forth into the Citty, where hee likewiſe had many partakers, where this curſed nation made ſuch hauock and ſpoile one vpon an other, as imagining the ſtreetes not to bee ſpacious enough for their furie, they went forth into the fields, and fought a fierce combate, wherein dyed multitudes of men, and then returning euery one into his owne Forte, they renewed the skirmiſhes and aſſaults a freſh: but Mahomet the little, perceiuing his party to be the weaker, hee B ſent to Don Frederick de Toledo, eldeſt ſonne to the Duke of Alua, who was Generall of the Chriſtians in the next garriſons, to entreate ayde and ſuccour from him. Don Frederick who was wiſe and diſcreet, gathered together all the forces hee could, and came neere to Granada, but would by no meanes enter into it, to meete whom King Mahomet ſent a Moore Captaine named Aben-Comix with certaine troopes of horſe, hee himſelfe remaining in the Citty, fortifying himſelfe in certaine places. King Muley vnderſtanding of Don Fredericks comming, ſent to offer him battaile, but hee would not accept thereof, ſaying, that the Moores feigned to haue quarrels among themſelues, by that meanes to entrappe him and his ſoldiours, and to encloſe them: wherefore keeping his forces in good order without ſtirring, hee placed the Moores horſemen C ledde by Aben-comix in the Front to ſuſtaine the enemies skirmiſhes, which were furious and bloudy. King Muley Boabdelin el Zagal, perceiuing that the Chriſtians kept themſelues in order, and that by no meanes they would come to battaile, hee did reenter the Citty, and began to aſſaile the Albaycin, which was couragiouſly defended, in regarde that Don Frederick ſtayed more then an houre after, in order of battaile before the Citty: but afterward hee returned into his Forr, leauing the Moores to murther one another; and becauſe hee knew that vpon Mahomet the littles victory, King Ferdinands and Queene Iſabels content and profit did depend, hee ſent him certaine Harquebuziers vnder the conduct of Ferdinand Aluares Gouernour of Colmera, by whoſe valour the Albaycin held out, and the aſſaults and combates continued fifty dayes after, D
King Boabdelins people beeing vexed within by King Mahomet, and abroad, by the Chriſtians of the next garriſons.

Caſtile. Whileſt theſe troubles continued in Granado betwixt the two factions, King Ferdinand hauing aſſembled and reuiewed the troopes, which from all parts were arriued at Cordoua, hee went to field with an Armie of twenty thouſand horſe, as well men at Armes, as Genets, and of fifty thouſand foote: the chiefe Commanders were the Maiſters of Saint James and Alcantara, the Duke of Nagera, the Marquis of Cales, and Villena, the Earles of Benauent, Vregna, Cabra, Oropeſa, Feria, Cifuentes, Oſorno, Medellin, and Ribadeo. Don Alphonſo d' Aguilar, the Treaſurer of Calatraua, with the Captaines generall of the Frontiers of Andaluzia and Murcia. Thoſe which ſent their E forces thether, were the Cardinall of Spaine Archbiſhop of Toledo, the Archbiſhop of Siuill, the Biſhops of Burgos and Cuenca, the Dukes of Medina Sidonia, Alua, Playſance, Medina Celi, and Albuquerque, the maiſter of Calatraua, the Marquis of Aſtorga, and Aguilar, the Earles of Caſtro, Gragna, Saint Steeuens, Miranda, Nieua, Priego, Fuenſalida, Alua de Liſta, Montagu, the Conſtable, the great Commanders of Calatraua and Leon, with other Lords and Knights of Caſtile. There came likewiſe from Arragon diuers great Lords, among whom was Don Phillip of Nauarre, baſtard ſonne to the late Prince Charles of Viana, whom King Ferdinand his Vncle had newly made maiſter of the order of Monteſa in the Realme of Valentia, hauing obtained it of the Pope, and depoſed Philip Boyll from the ſame dignity, who had beene elected maiſter thereof con- F uentually. Don Lewis Borgia Duke of Gandia was likewiſe there, with many others of Arragon, Valentia, Sicill and Sardinia. With theſe great forces they vndertooke to goe and beſeege Malaga, but firſt of all it was thought fit to remooue all letts and impediments that Velez Malaga might do vnto them, the which place was beſeeged in Aprill 1487.

1487. Velez Malaga beſieged.

And the king being deſirous to lodge certaine companies of footmen vpon a riſing hill, which

A which did greatly import the ſaftie of the armie, the Moores making a furious ſalley foorth of the cittie, did beate them from thence, and the King was the ſame time armed with a Cuiraſſe, his ſword in his hand, expoſing himſelfe that day to the enemies arrowes and ſhot, which fell round about him as thicke as haile, beeing in great danger of his perſon: neuertheleſſe his people by his preſence were encouraged, and forced the Moores to turne their backes, and to ſhut themſelues into the towne.

Albeit, that this valour of the kings be prayſe-worthie, and highly to bee extolled as a ſingular example, yet notwithſtanding it may be reproued, in regard of the conſequence of a miſchiefe which might haue happened, therefore they beſought him, no more to ha-
B zard his perſon in ſuch dangerous attempts. The next day they aſſayled the ſuburbes, where the Moores had barricadoed themſelues, who defended it for the ſpace of ſixe whole houres with ſuch obſtinacie, as the Chriſtians could not get one foote of ground from them, vntill that the Duke of Nagera, and the Earle of Benauent came with freſh ſuccours, who cauſed the enemies to leaue the place, but to the coſt of diuers: for Nugno d'Aquila, and Don Martin of Acugna were ſlayne there, Don Carlo of Gueuara, Garcy Lazo de la Vega, Fernando de Vega, Iohn de Merlo, with diuers other men of note were hurt. The Artillerie was not yet come to the campe, therefore King Fernand cauſed diuers forts to be made againſt the citie, wherein he lodged diuers companies of ſouldiers, and being well acquainted with the Mores pollicies, he placed in all the wayes that led to
C the campe, in the mountaines and vallies, which might any way be an hinderance to the armie, diuers watches and ſentinels, with places for them to retire vnto, which were well furniſhed and defended by valiant ſouldiers; vppon which occaſions, ſundrie profitable things were ordained neceſſarie for martiall diſcipline, the Moores neuer ceaſing from comming downe from the Mountaines, and making many enterpriſes vppon the armie which they kept in continuall alarme.

King Muley Boabdallin on the other ſide, beeing importuned by the Affricane Captaines, and old Moores of Granado to ſuccor Velez Malaga, he went to field with great numbers of horſe and foote, and paſſing thorough ſharpe and narrow places, hee ſent part of his forces from Bentomnix againſt the Maſter of Alcantara, who conducted the D artillerie; but hauing intelligence, that king Fernand had ſent the great Commaunder of Leon for his conuoy, he called backe the Moores, and with all his forces he beganne the very ſame night to come downe from the hilles, and preſented himſelfe in order of battell in the view of the Chriſtian armie, making ſhew as if they would ſuccour the beſeeged, or elſe dye in fight. This ſudden and vnlookt-for arriuall of the enemies, made diuers at their wits end, and did in a manner terrifie them: wherefore it behooued king Fernand to vſe his beſt skill and diſcretion, ſo to order matters, as he might not receiue a diſgrace: but Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, brother to the Cardinall of Spaine, a braue and reſolute knight, beeing in the fore-ward with the Cardinals forces, did put them out of feare: for he gallantly oppoſed himſelfe againſt the front of the Mores bat-
E talions, and made them to ſtand ſtill. They perceiuing the Chriſtians valour and boldneſſe, did diſlodge by breake of day, like runawayes in ſuch amazement, as many of them flung away their weapons and armor, to be the lighter to run. This notwithſtanding, the king would not be ouer confident, but cauſed euery man to ſtand ſtill in his order the whole day long and the night following, vntill he had certaine notice that the Moores flight was not fained but true.

Shamefull retreate of the Moores.

King Muley Boabdellin by this ſhamefull retreate loſt his reputation amongſt his own Moores.
people, ſo as they beganne to deteſt him, and to incline to his aduerſarie Mahomet the Little. This Mooriſh armie did diſperſe it ſelfe into ſundrie places, and Muley with-drew himſelfe to Alnumeçar, and then to Almerie, from whence he went to Guadix. By this F diſgrace of his, King Mahumet the Little found meanes to recouer the Alhambra, and all the ſtrong places of the Cittie, where hee cut off the heads of foure Mooriſh knights of the noble family of Aben Carrax, becauſe they had oppoſed themſelues againſt him at his returne from priſon. By this meanes he remayned King of Granado alone, and making vſe of the king of Caſtiles friendſhip, hee obtained two truces for his vaſſals, and ſufferance to go and trafficke in their dominions, and to buy all kind of merchandizes, Muley Boabdellin vanquiſhed, & Mahomet the Little receiued by the Granadins.

armor,

armor, and victuals excepted: and hee did not not onely obtaine it for thoſe Moores, A which were now obedient vnto him, but for all thoſe that would ſubmit themſelues to his Crowne hereafter, and beſides that, ſouldiers, artillerie, and all other prouiſion to purſue his Vncle, and to annoy thoſe places which were vnder his ſubiection, publiſh-ing declaratorie letters of his loue and good will towards all ſuch as within ſixe moneths after would ſubmit themſelues to him, and threatning grieuous puniſhment to the ob-ſtinate and rebelllous.

Caſtille. The Moores within Velez Malaga hauing ſeene the flight of their King Muley Boabdel- lin el Zagal were out of all hope to receiue any ſuccour from him, and fearing that as ſoone as the artillerie was come, they ſhould be enforced to yeeld, they compounded by B the meanes of the Earle of Cifuentes, and yeelded vp the place, their liues and goods beeing ſaued, their victuals and armor excepted: and they had licence to depart into Af-fricke, or elſe-where, or if it pleaſed them, they might remaine in Caſtile. The towne of Bentommix followed the example of Velez Malaga, and the gouernement thereof was giuen to Pietro Nauarro, who from a poore youth, (although a gentleman) and from being a marriner, as it is reported, attained to the degree of a Captaine, and afterward became one of the moſt famous men of his time, as well in the warres of Spaine as Italy, and was created Earle of Albeto. The towne of Comares, and diuers other Caſtles of the Countrey called las Alpuxares, hearing of the Kings of Caſtiles good ſucceſſe, did at the firſt ſummons without any reſiſtance ſubmit themſelues to their obedience, pay- C ing the ſame tribute to them which they did vſe to pay to the Moore kings; and vppon other conditions which were impoſed vppon them, to the end to be the better aſſured of them, till ſuch time as they did become Mudejares, whereby they might liue in their vain ſuperſtion. The gouernement of Velez Malaga was giuen to the great Commaunder Don Guttiere de Cardegna, Superintendent or high Treaſurer to the Kings.

Malaga beſeged. The neighbour Countries beeing thus cleanſed of the enemies places of retreate, the armie marched to the ſeege of Malaga, a cittie, as hath beene ſayd, exceeding ſtrong, and well prouided of men, victuals, and all other neceſſaries: within the which a valiant Captaine called Hali Duax, had the commaund of diuers valiant Moores, as well of the Realme of Granado, as of Affricane Gomeres, but vnderneath a Generall, or Alcayde D major, who was as Conſtable to the King el Zagal, whoſe name was Amet-zeli, who was then at Guadix, from whence the King made warre vppon his Nephew, and from thence, at the earneſt entreatie of his ſubiects, hee intended to ſuccour Malaga, if neede were; which the Kings of Caſtile ſent to ſummon, promiſing libertie to the Moores, and aſſurance of their liues and goods: but they anſwered that their king had placed them there, not to giue the towne to the Kings of Caſtile, but valiantly to defend it, whereof they meant to ſhew ſufficient proofes.

This anſwer beeing made, they conſulted whether it were beſt to batter it, or elſe to beſeege it a farre off, cutting off their victuals, and annoying them by the neighbour gariſons, vntill they were enforced to yeeld: the king remained firme in his opinion, which E was to beſeege it roundly neere hand, notwithſtanding, that they prayed him to conſider the great ſtrength thereof, as well by nature as by art: for the cittie of Malago ſtands vpon a plaine on the ſea ſide, which beates vppon the walles, wherewith it is well round-ded: and it was flanquered with ſtrong towers according to thoſe times, hauing two Ca-ſtles ſeated vppon a little hill, one of which is called Alcaçaua, and the other Gibraltar, which is the higheſt of the two, whereunto men go from the one to the other, by a way about ſixe foote broade, betwixt two great walles, wherewith it was couered, and theſe two fortreſſes were likewiſe compaſſed with ſtrong walls and high towers, furniſhed with Artillerie, engines of defence, and great numbers of valiant ſouldiers, who were all of them determined rather to dye then to yeeld. F

Now for the more eaſie and commodious lodging of the armie, it was needfull to winne a little hill, ſeated a ſtones caſt from the fort of Gibralfar, betwixt the ſame and an high hill: there the Moores made great reſiſtance, notwithſtanding it was wonne, and foureteene thouſand footmen, and fiue and twenty hundred horſe were placed there, vnder the commaund of the Marquis of Cales: the next day after, they diſpoſed the quarters

A ters round about the towne: the Marquis had the firſt, with whome were Don Gattiere of Sottomajor, Don Aluaro Baçan, Fernand de Vega, and the Pourveyor of Villafranca, Don Pedro Vaca, and Garcy Brauo Captaine of Atiença, with other Captaines and Knights, namely, Charles Areillan, Hernand Carillo, Don Franciſco of Bouadilla, Don Diego Lopes d Ayala, George de Veteta, Gouernour of Soria, and Michel d'Abaſſa. The next quarter belonged to Don Diego Fernand of Cordoua, hauing charge of the forces of the Dukes of Albuquerque, and of Medina Sidonia, and ſo conſequently euery man had his quarter diſpoſed to him round about the cittie, the Earle of Ciſuentes, Captaine of the men of Siuill, Don Lorenzo Suares Figueroa, Earle of Feria, and Don Guttiere of
B Padilla, Treaſurer of Calatraua with the forces of Eccia, thoſe of the Earle of Benauent, thoſe of Pero Carillo of Albornos, and of the Arch-biſhop of Siuill, then the companies of the Earle of Vregna, thoſe of Don Alphonſo of Aguilar, of the Duke of Nagera, of Don Fredericke of Toledo, of Iohn Aluares, and of Alphonſo Oſorio: Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza followed after with the forces of the Cardinall his brother, the Earle of Cabra, the great Commaunder of Leon, with the men of Cordoua, thoſe of Don Garcy Lopes of Padilla, Maſter of Calatraua, of Don Antonio of Fonſeca, of Antonio d'Aguilar, of Don Alphonſo of Cardegna, Maſter of Saint Iames, thoſe of Don Lewis Fernand Porto Carrero Lord of Palma, and of Don Iohn of Eſtuniga Maſter of Alcantara.

Malaga beeing thus beſeeged, the Kings tent was knowne by the Moores, who beſtowed many cannon ſhot vpon it from the cittie, ſo as they were conſtrayned to re-
C mooue it behind a little hil. The batterie planted to the moſt conuenient places was great and furious from the Marquis of Cales quarter againſt the Caſtle of Gibralfar, the which in many places was pierced and ouerthrowne in many places, and as ſoone repayred by the Moores. The Marquis hauing taken away the towers which did offend him, aduanced his lodging a ſtones caſt nearer to the fort, but hee was conſtrained to returne to his former quarter by the continuall ſallies which the Moores made vpon him and his people, fighting with ſuch furie, as they came to the poynyard, and ſlue the Captaine of Atiença, and Inigo Lopes of Medran, Lord of Cauagnillas, Gabriel of Sottomajor, and o-
D ther valiant men, beſides diuers hurt, in the number of whome was the Marquis, who was ſhot into the arme with an arrow, for the Moores fought from a place of great aduantage. At this ſeege, two great ſhippes of warre arriued on the coaſt of Malaga, commaunded by Don Ladron de Gueuara ſent from Flanders by Maximilian of Auſtria king of the Romaines, husband to the heire of Bourgondie, and father to Philip which was ſonne-in-law to the Kings of Caſtile, who for the ſeruice of this warre did ſend theſe two veſſels laden with diuers peeces of braſſe Ordonance, and barrels of powder, bels for the vſe of the Churches of the places newly conquered, great ſtore of mettall, with workmen to worke it, with other inſtruments and things neceſſarie for the warre, beeing deſirous for his part to partake in ſome ſort the honour of this great conqueſt which his poſteritie enioyeth at this day. A tower of the cittie beeing wonne with great toyle and effuſion of E bloud, was quickly recouered againe by the Moores, who grew more obſtinate in their defence, by meanes of a falſe rumor raiſed by certaine cowards of the campe, which deſired to returne home againe, who ſayd, that Queene Izabella did ſollicite the King her husband to rayſe his ſeege, becauſe the plague was within and about diuers places of the Cittie, and in this hope the Barbarians did valiantly reſiſt all aſſaults. The King to let them vnderſtand, that his intent was otherwiſe, ſent for the Queene to come to the campe, who was accompanied thither by great numbers of voluntarie Knights: and then hee ſent word to the beſeeged, that if they would yeeld, he would vſe them gently as hee had done others, if not, he gaue them to vnderſtand, that he would not depart thence, till the cittie were taken, and that then they ſhould expect nothing but rigor; to the which they
F made no anſwer, but did ſtreightly commaund that not any one amongſt them ſhould dare, vpon paine of life, to talke of any agreement or compoſition with the kings of Caſtile: and they did indeed kill diuers vppon the ſame occaſion, being reſolued to hold out till their laſt breath, the which did greatly prolong the ſeege, where powder beginning to fayle, the gallies were ſent to Valencia, Barcelona, yea into Sicill, which brought thither great quantitie.

The Emperor Maximillian ſends Artillery and powder from Flanders to the king of Caſtile.

The

The King of Portugall beeing entreated to ſend ſome thither likewiſe, did it willingly, A & with great ſpeed. There was no part of the day almoſt, which was free from skirmiſhes, where many men of either ſide dyed daily: wherefore certaine Moores of the Cittie bee-ing diſpleaſed with the loſſe of their friends, and fore-ſeeing the danger whereinto they were likely to fall, yet not daring to ſpeake of compoſition, did ſecretly ſend a meſſenger to the campe, to tell king Fernand, that if he would promiſe to ſaue their liues and goods, they would giue him entrance, whereunto the king conſented, and as this Moore returned, he was taken by certaine Gomeres of Affricke, who aſſayled him with their ſwords in ſuch ſort, as he returning hurt to the campe, dyed there, and ſo the treaty ended.
As the land skirmiſhes were continuall, ſo were thoſe at ſea, where the armie of Caſtile B did hinder, as much as in them lay, any entrance of comming foorth of the cittie, and to redreſſe the ſallies by land, there were by the diligence of Garcy Lazo de la Vega, Iohn d'Eſtuniga, and Diego of Tayde, diuers forts made, and great trenches drawne, where diuers great Corps de gard were placed, ſo as the Moores in that manner ſhutte in, could not do ſo much hurt, nor vexe the armie as before it had done, the Moores beeing neuertheleſſe conſtant in their reſolution to hold out to the laſt man, nothwithſtanding that victuals did greatly decreaſe in the cittie: for they were aduertiſed by diuers traitors of the campe of whatſoeuer was done there good or bad, and oftentimes they told them, that which was falſe, in ſuch ſort as they were not diſcouraged, but did beleeue, that the king and Queene would ſhortly bee conſtrained to depart thence, and there were ſome C that left the cittie, vnder color of yeelding themſelues to the King, and to become Chriſtians, who falſely reported, that there was great and incredible aboundance of victuals, and all other neceſſaries in the cittie, to the end thereby to cauſe the Chriſtians to leaue the ſeege, the which report did put the King and his Councell into a ſtudie, whether they ſhould ceaſe the batteries and aſſaults, and keepe the ſeege by ſea with certaine gallies, or elſe by land with certaine forts to ſtarue them by little and little: but weighing the na-
The Arabians liue with a little. ture of that nation, who liue with ſo little meate, as it is to be wondered at, this counſell was reiected as vnfruitfull, wherefore the batteries were renewed, and to that end diuers artificiall engines were made of excellent inuention, and mynes were wrought in diuers places, which beeing diſcouered by the induſtrious and vigilant Moores, were cauſe of D the death of a great number of braue ſouldiers. King Boabdellin el Zagal beeing daily ſol-licited to ſuccour Malaga, went foorth of Guadix, with certaine troupes of horſe and foote, but beeing met and encountred by the army of his nephew Mahomet, which came foorth of Granado for the ſame purpoſe, hee was vanquiſhed and put to flight, whereof King Fernand had ſpeedie intelligence, to his great contentment. Within the beſeeged cittie were certaine Moores that were eſteemed holy men, who with mad and idle prattle went about to encourage the ſouldiers, ſaying, that the dead did greatly de-ſire to riſe againe, for to helpe them to driue the Chriſtians thence, with other ſuch like words, which were of great force to animate that ſuperſtitious race. There arriued at the campe freſh ſupplies of horſe and foote from Arragon, Valencia, and Cattalognia, E which did much encourage the aſſaylants, who had this aduantage, not to want victuals.
The K. of Tremeſſen being aduertiſed by the Mores which daily paſt into Affricke vnder the Kings ſafe-conduct of their great good ſucceſſe in thoſe warres of Granado, ſent his Ambaſſadours to them with rich preſents, who did requeſt their friendſhip and protection, and permiſſion for their Kings ſubiects to ſaile vpon the ſeas without hurt or feare of the Spaniſh gallies, the which was graunted them, ſo as the King their maiſter did not giue ayde and aſſiſtance to thoſe of Malaga, and other Mores of Granado their enemies.
Matters ſtanding at a ſtay, a certaine Moore borne at Tunis, leading a ſolitarie life neere to Guadix, called Abraham Alguerri, a man of a low ſtature, and aged, began to preach how that their Prophet Mahumet had reuealed to him, that if Malaga were this one time F releeued, it ſhould neuer more be in danger to be taken: therefore vnder the conduct of this Hermite, who was reputed a holy man, foure hundred horſemen did hazard to enter the towne, who making way thorough the guards and trenches of the campe, two hundred of them paſſed into the cittie, and the reſt of them were cut in peeces.

The Hermite in the meane time had withdrawne himſelfe aſide, and looking as if hee had

A had beene rauiſhed in ſpirit, was at his prayers in great deuotion: the Chriſtian ſouldiors which purſued the Moores did finde him, and brought him before the Marquis of Cales, who askt him what he was, hee made anſwer that hee was an holy man, vnto whom God reuealed his great ſecrets, which ſhould happen in that ſeege, and end by the taking of Malaga, whith the number of ſeauen; and what ſignifies ſeauen ſayd the Marquis, are they yeares or moneths? they are neither yeares nor monthes, quoth the Hermit but weekes, daies, or howers, but enquire no farther of mee: for Alla (that is God) hath commanded mee, to tell the reſt in ſecret to the King and Queene, and to none others. The Marquis although hee made a ieſt of that hee heard the Moore ſay,
B did neuertheleſſe ſend him to the King, by a reuolted Moore; for hee would not leaue his owne quarter, eſpecially ſo ſoone after the fight: when hee arriued, the King was a ſleepe, and the Queene taking no delight to behold ſuch manner of fooliſh people, hee was brought into a tent, where Don Beatrix de Bouadilla was in talke with Don Aluaro Son to the Duke of Bragança who was fled from Portugall, and Ruy Lopes de Toledo the Queenes Treaſorer. The Marchiones looking vpon this old Hermit, bad them giue him ſome meate: hee ſeeing her to bee richly appartelled, and they that were with her in like manner, aſked thoſe that were next him, if it was the King, and Queene, they to mocke him, told him it was they. Then the villaine, who of purpoſe came from his cell with an intent to kill them, layd hand vpon a ſhort Cimetar, that hee wore vnder his habit, and C therewith gaue Don Aluaro, ſuch a ſtroake vpon the head, as he had well neere ſlaine him, and being ready to doe as much to the Marquis, the Treaſorer there preſent did hold him backe, and the reſt runne out of the tent, yet at the noyſe diuers of the Marquis ſeruants, came running in and hewed the wicked Hermit in peeces. The King beeing awakte and hearing what was done, did greatly wonder at his boldneſſe, and was afterward better guarded. The peeces of the Moores body, were with engines throwne into the Citty, in reuenge whereof the Moors did kill a Chriſtian priſoner, who was a man of note, and ſetting him vpon an aſſe, they draue it towards the campe, where at the ſame inſtant Don Henriques de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia with his trayne did arriue, who beſides the ſupply of ſoldiours, which hee brought, did lend the King twenty thou-
D ſand golden doubles, and the very day of his comming, more then a hundred ſhippes loden with victualls and munition did arriue in the roade neere to Malaga, where-with the army was greatly refreſhed, and the Duke highly honored and eſteemed, for ſuch a ſeruice: Soone after, there arriued other ſuccors from the Duke of Infantaſgo. The Moores being againe ſummoned to yeeld, and not to attend the miſeries, which a victory gotten by force doth bring with it, being ſtill obſtinate, and hauing notice of certaine diſeaſes in the campe, they would by no meanes harken there-vnto: wherefore they were aſſayled a freſh, and did as valiantly defend them-ſelues, killing many Chriſtians. The citty beeing in great want of victualls, the Moores did already beginne to eate roſted ſkins, and other ſuch like things, but they had ſtill ſome idle Prophet or other which con-E firmed them in there obſtinacy: yet notwithſtanding, two of the cheefeſt Moores in the citty, whoſe names were Amet-Aben-Amar, and Ali Dudux, and with them an Alfaqui called Abraham Alharis; with diuers Marchants, officers, and men of quality, being ioyned together, came and beſought the gouernour to take ſome order, for the people of the Citty, which dyed for hunger, who without any hope of releeſe, could not auoyd the enemies rigor, and that hee needed not to thinke it a diſgrace to him to yeeld the citty of Malaga, ſeeing that other places as ſtrong as it in the realme of Granado had yeelded to the Chriſtians: if hee thought to better their eſtate by a battayle, they wiſht him to march forth to the fight, for they were not able any longer to liue, in ſo great neceſſity: but all this ſerued to no purpoſe. The King perceauinge the obſtinacy of F this wretched people, cauſed certaine peeces of ordonance to bee bent againſt the towers of the bridge, the firſt of which was wonne by aſſault, Franciſco Ramiers of Madrid Captaine of the artillery, haſting and increaſing the battery to prepare entrance for the ſoldiours was by the king made knight the ſame day for his good ſeruice. The beſeeged being brought to the laſt diſpaire, a great troupe of horſe and foote animated by one of their Prophets, made a furious ſally vpon the quarters of the maſters of Saint Iames, and Alcantara, where at the beginning they cauſed great diſorder comming vnlook't for, but at the laſt they were repulſed and beaten back with great ſlaughter, and the Moore Prophet was the firſt man that was ſlaine. By this ouerthrow the Alcaide or Gouernor beeing excuſed from making any more reſiſtance, gaue the inhabitants leaue to capitulate as well as they could with the Kings of Caſtile: wherefore they ſent Amet-Aben-Amar, and Ali Dudux, and three other principall Moores to the Campe, who beſought the Kings to receiue them for Mudejares or vaſſals, and to giue to them and the reſt of the Cittizens, the towne of Coin to dwell in, and to permit thoſe that would, to paſſe into Affrick with their goods: the King told them that the great Commander of Leon ſhould make them an anſwer, the which was, that for as much as the extremity of hunger had conſtrained them to yeeld, and not any good will to the Kings, it behooued them to yeeld to their mercy. Thoſe of the towne hauing vnderſtood the Kings reſolution by their deputies, did ſay, that in regarde they went about to take away the liberty of their perſons, they were reſolued to hang fiue hundred Chriſtian priſoners on the walls, and then to come forth euery man with his ſword in hand, and to dye fighting: the King ſent them word that if they did put one Chriſtian to death, hee would without any mercy, put them all to the edge of the ſword. Thoſe of Malaga once againe ſent foureteene Moores of euery quarter of their Citty to the Campe, who brought with them a writing which they ſhewed for an example of the deceaſed Kings of Caſtiles clemencie vſed to the ſubiugated Moores, and with great humillity they begged for mercy. Diuers of the Lords and Captaines were of opinion to put all that raskally obſtinate nation to death, who were enemies to the name of a Chriſtian: but the Queenes more iuſt and Chriſtian-like opinion was followed, which was to ſaue all their liues. Then the King wrote back to them, that their liues were onely granted, and no more: whereat the Moores being much aſtonied, were at ſtrife amongſt themſelues, ſome beeing of opinion to make a deſperate ſally vpon the Chriſtians with their weapons, and to ſet fire on the Citty, and all the wealth thereof, following the examples of certaine townes of Spaine in antient times; but they who thought it better to become ſlaues, did preuaile. Thus was the Citty of Malaga yeelded: the great Commander of Leon entring firſt into it with his troopes in armes, by meanes of hoſtages, who ſeazed vpon the Citty, towers and Fortes thereof, and hauing diſarmed the Moores of all their weapons and munition, all people of both ſexes and of all ages were aſſembled in the two baſe Courts of the Caſtle of Alcaçauo, where moſt lamentable cryes of Moriſh men and women were heard, lamenting their liberty, and goodly Citty loſt, with their Fortes, Towers and Caſtles, which could not defend her Cittizens liues, nor giue them buriall after their death. Among the multitude, twelue renegades Chriſtians were found, who ſerued as ſpyes for the Moores, who were ſtricken thorow with Darts, and ſo ſlaine: the Chriſtian priſoners were deliuered and ſent home to their houſes, fauoured and rewarded by the Kings. Two other Sea townes neere to Malaga, were likewiſe taken, and the Moores made ſlaues, by Pedro de Vera whom the King had ſent thither.

A Mahometan Hermite ſlaine.

Superſtitions Moores.

The Citty of Malaga yeelded.

After that all things were ſurely poſſeſſed by the Chriſtians in Malaga, the Biſhops and Clergie made their entrance, who performed the accuſtomed ceremonies, purifications, dedications, with ſuch other ſolemnities, as wee haue heretofore written: and the Kings hauing at the ſame time receiued a Bull from Pope Innocent, by the which hee granted them and their ſucceſſors, authority to name and appoint Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſticall dignities needfull in the Realme of Granado, it was thought fit to reſtore the Biſhops Sea to the Citty of Malaga, as it had beene in times paſt, and Don Pedro de Toledo was choſen Biſhop of the ſame, who was a Channon of Siuill, a man of great learning and merit, who was confirmed therein by the Pope, vnto whom the Kings ſent a hundred Moores Gomeres of Affrick for a preſent, and to Queene Ioane of Naples the Kings ſiſter, fifty Moriſh maides, and thirty to the Queene of Portugall: of all the other ſlaues, the third part of them was diuided among the Lords, Knights, Gentlemen, and Captaines of the Campe: an other third part was imployed for the redemption and exchange of Chriſtian Captiues: and an other third part remained to the Kings, towards their great coſts and charges ſuſtained in that ſiege, the which laſted three moneths and one day, which was the eighteene of Auguſt this yeare 1487.

Don Pedro de Toledo Biſhop of Malaga.

The

A The order and gouernement of the Cittie beeing diſpoſed, the commaund thereof was giuen to Don Garcia Fernandes Manrique, who had beene Corrigidor of Cordoua. The Iudges, Rectors, and Iurates, with other Officers of iuſtice, beeing eſtabliſhed, the goods were diſtributed to ſuch as were receiued for new inhabitants, who were prouided of good and wholeſome lawes, though fit and neceſſarie for thoſe times.

Theſe matters with others beeing diſpatched, the King and Queene returned victorious and triumphant to Cordoua; where they were no ſooner arriued, but they began to thinke vppon neceſſarie prouiſions for the next yeares warre: for, ſeeing they had had ſo happie ſucceſſe alreadie, they were very loth to giue it ouer by any interruption whatſoeuer.

B In the interim of theſe great buſineſſes, the ſtrifes of diuers Arragonois did ſtill trouble the Kings eares, for that in regard of his long abſence, all appeales comming before the Magiſtrate, whom they call Iuſtice of Arragon, all euident wrongs, exceſſes, and outrages committed by the great ones, were with partialitie drawne out in length. The Kings left Cordoua and came to Sarragoſſa, where they aſſembled the Eſtates to redreſſe thoſe inſolencies which were complayned of. The Eſtates beeing perſwaded by the Vicechancellor of the Kingdome, whom the King had appoynted to ſpeake vnto them, did relinquiſh diuers poynts of their pretended rights and liberties, and did ſuffer many things to be reformed, and namely, they were content to eſtabliſh the Courts of iuſtice of the Hermandades or brotherhoods, after the manner of Caſtile, a moſt profitable and Hermandades in Arragon.
C neceſſarie matter for the whole countrie, and did beſides that obtaine great ſubſidies of money for the King towards the wars of Granado. And becauſe the Inquiſition brought Inquiſition in Arragon. great profite to the Kings coffers in Caſtile, of the goods of the Iewes and Moores, which were reuolted to their fooliſh ſuperſtitions: it was decreed, that like proceeding ſhould be vſed againſt them in Arragon, and Iudges appointed to make their definitiue ſentence. One of the ſayd Commiſſioners had like to haue beene ſlayne, by thoſe manner of people, on a morning in the Church of Sarragoſſa, which gaue them occaſion to enquire more diligently of ſuch as were faulty: wherein, choller, greedineſſe of gaine, and deſire to fill the kings coffers, made them greatly to exceed, the which the practiſe of D their ſucceſſours at this day can very well witneſſe: the obſtinate were burned, and thoſe which did reconcile themſelues, or were in any fault at all, were fleeced to the very quicke.

The Kings paſſing into the Realme of Valencia, which was troubled with the ſame diſeaſes, did call the Eſtates to Orihuela, where they made diuers goodly Edicts. Whileſt the Court lay at Valencia, there entred into Cattalonia an Ambaſſador from the French king Charles the eighth, ſent to King Fernand, who ſent to meete him, and to let him vnderſtand, that vnleſſe he brought with him the reſtitution of the Earledome of Roſſillon, 8 he might returne from whence hee came, and for ought that the Ambaſſadour could ſay King Fernand refuſeth to heare or ſee the French Ambaſſadour. or do, he could not be ſuffered to come to Valencia, but was enforced to returne without beeing heard or ſeene. King Charles at the ſame time was troubled with ciuill warres
E againſt the Duke of Orleance, Duke Francis of Brittaine, and the Lord of Albret, who was diſpoſſeſſed of his lands, father to Iohn of Albret who was king of Nauarre, and with others.

A

Iohn of Albret, and Katherine of Nauarre, Kings of Nauarre, accounted for the 35. in the order of the Kings.

Nauarre.

IOHN of Albret, the ſonne of Alain, of whom we haue made mention heretofore, was married to Catherine the heire of Nauarre: but before we come to the declaration thereof, it ſhall be neeedfull to ſpeake of the ſtate wherein the late King Francis Phœbus left the ſucceſſion to his ſiſter Katherine who raigned after him. Iohn, Vicount of Narbone, vnkle to her, and to the deceaſed King, did foorth-with quarrell with the Lords of Foix and Bearne, ſaying, that for thoſe lands, lying vpon the limits of the Realme of France, where women do not ſucceed, that Queene Catherine his Neece was incapable of enioying them, and therefore ſhee ought to content her ſelfe with her inheritance of Nauarre, which is gouerned by other lawes, and to leaue thoſe two Lordſhips to him. Vppon this ſtrife great warre aroſe betwixt the parties the Vicount of Narbonne, beeing fauoured by Iaſper of Villemur, Seneſhall of Foix, and the Lord of Calmont, Iohn of Caſtel Verdun, and others; who the yeare 1484. leading with them forces of horſe and foot, tooke, through the trecherie of one called Romengas, the towne of Maçeres, and then they ſeized on Monthault, and in the end they came to aſſayle Pamiers, where the cittizens would willingly haue receiued the Vicount, whom they acknowledged to be a ſon of the houſe of Foix, but not his ſouldiers, whereat the Vicount being enraged, went to S. Antonies, which is the Cathedral church, and the Biſhops place of reſidence, from whence he draue away Paſchal, who was Biſhop and poſſeſſor thereof, and enthronized Mathew Artigalu therein, who pretended and pleaded the ſayd Biſhopricke againſt the other: the Vicount moreouer, doing his beſt to enter into Pamiers, but the inhabitants perſiſting in their reſiſtance, he was conſtrayned to retire to Maſeres, from which place he continued the war againſt his Neece, and the princeſſe Magdalen her mother, who ſent in the yeare 1485. Iohn of Lautrec to keepe and defend the countrey of Foix with diuers troupes leauied in Bearne, and in the Earledome of Bigorre, as alſo to recouer that which Iohn of Foix Vicount had vſurped. Lautrec marching on to execute his commiſſion, was preuented by the way by Raymond Lordat, Lord of Rodel, who intreated him, from thoſe of Sauardun, who ſome few dayes before had yeelded to the Vicount, to pardon them, in regard they did it to auoyd the preſent danger, and to appeaſe the Vicounts furie, againſt whom they were not ſtrong enough to reſiſt, they being deſirous with all their hearts to ſerue queene Catherine their naturall Princeſſe, and that if her pleaſure were to receiue them, they wold obey her, and moſt willingly would caſt off the Vicounts yoake: therefore the Lord of Rodell intreated him to make all the haſt he could to Sauardun, aſſuring him that hee ſhould be kindly welcomed, and let into the towne. Lautrec accepting this offer marched thither, and arriued at the bridge gate, at the ſame inſtant, when as the Vicount of Narbone, who was aduertiſed of all their practiſes entred at another gate called Vlmet. Theſe two Lords being met together in this ſort, did in ſtead of aſſayling one another, performe offices of complement, and they fell into diſcourſe of peace, which grew to this concluſion, that Iohn of Foix ſhould enioy Sauardun, Maſeres, Monthault, and S. Eſpartio, with the church of S. Anthony, the caſtle of Heremen and Montagu, with other places and forts, the which agreement, as being vnlawfull, was not obſerued: for within a few dayes after, Odet Cardinall of Carcaſſon, recouered Montagu and S. Anthonies, and reſtored them to Queene Catherine. Lautrec likewiſe on the other ſide took Montagu, S. Eſpartio, with the caſtle of Heremen, which he ouerthrew. In thoſe buſineſſes was queen Catherine entertayned in the beginning of her raigne, to the great contentment of the chief Lords of the factions in Nauar, who in the meane time managed their owne affaires by the intelligences which they had in Caſtile, notwithſtanding any impediment that the Lord of Aubenas was able to giue them, who was Viceroy in that Kingdome.

Iohn Vicount of Narbon quarrels for the Earledome of Foix, and Seigneury of Bearne.

B C D E F

The yeare following, which was 1486. Iohn Vicount of Foix in recompence of the loſſes he had ſuſtained, did by intelligence with certaine of the Inhabitants ſurprize the towne

A towne of Pamiers, and left the Lord of Lauellane with certaine companies of ſouldiers there: but Captaine Peter Bunfiere, did, by the ſelfe ſame meanes, and by the helpe of a Locke-ſmith who made falſe keyes to the gate of Conſerans, beeing ſent thither by the Princeſſe Magdalen, and the Queene her daughter, recouer the ſayd towne, ſlew diuers of the Garriſon with Lauellanet their Captaine, and carried thence whatſoeuer hee found: yet for all this, the warre ended not, but continued to the great hinderance and preiudice of the countries of Foix and Bearne: during which turmoyles, the Princeſſe Magdalen reiecting the great and profitable match which was offered by the Prince of Caſtile, married her daughter to Iohn of Albret, which cauſed many troubles in the B Realme of Nauarre: For it was no eaſie matter to bring the factious to any reaſon. Thoſe which had any intelligences with Caſtile, were ſo farre off from deſiring this marriage with Prince Iohn of Caſtile, as they hindered it to their vttermoſt power, becauſe they would not be ſubiect to a Prince that was mightie, and had means to puniſh their crimes, and yet neuertheleſſe, they could make vſe of the occaſion, why that match was not accompliſhed, by reſiſting their Princeſſe and Iohn of Albret her husband, and by that meanes vpheld themſelues in their tyrannies. The abſence of the Cardinall of Foix, the Queenes Vnkle, was a great hinderance to her affaires: For this yeare 1486. he was ſent for to Rome by Pope Innocent the eighth, to be employed for the pacification of Naples, which was troubled with ciuill wars betwixt the Barons and their King Fernand, the C ſame king beeing at great ſtrife with the Pope, who ſent this Cardinall to Naples with power as Legate à latere, where in ſome ſort, he compoſed thoſe differences: but he dyed at Rome, and neuer returned more into Nauarre: the ſtate of which Kingdome beeing thus miſerably diſtracted, Amand, Lord of Albret, father to the new king, did reſolue to enter into Nauarre, where hauing had conference with the Lord of Aubenas his brother, who was Viceroy there, and then with Iohn de Ribera, who ſpoiling the countrie for the King of Caſtile at the ſame time, vnder color of defending and vpholding the Conſtable D. Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin, and who had taken certaine townes, he delt in ſuch ſort, as he perſwaded him to go with him to Valencia to king Fernand, where be-D ing arriued, the Lord of Albret beeing welcomed and kindly entreated, did beſeech the King to accept of the deſire he had to do him ſeruice, in ſtead of the effect, for ſo much as he was a poore Knight, vniuſtly expelled from his countrie by the French King, who was mooued againſt him, and Iohn of Albret his ſonne, whoſe perſon with his kingdome of Nauarre, hee came to offer vnto him, requeſting him to receiue them into his protection: and alſo that he had commiſſion to make the like requeſt for the Dukes, Francis of Brittaine, and Lewis of Orleance, purſued and afflicted by the ſame King Charles, each of whom promiſed him ſeruice and ayde for the recouerie of his Earledome of Roſſillon, and in all other occaſions. The Lord of Albrets ſpeech was fauourably and attentiuely heard by King Fernand, who graunted all that which hee demaunded in the behalf of the king his ſon, commanding Iohn de Ribera to reſtore to him or his Lieutenants Viana, with E all the reſt of the places, which he held in the Realme of Nauar. And did moreouer giue order for the rigging forth of an army by ſea in Guipuſcoa and Biſcay, againſt the French King for the aide of the aboue-named Princes, who had likewiſe ſollicited Henry the ſeuenth King of England to take their part, who inclined thereunto, ſo as a great number of Spaniſh ſhippes did lye vppon the coaſts of Brittaine, whoſe Admirall was Monſieur Gralla, with whom Alain of Albret returned, and an armie out of England was likewiſe ſent, conducted by the Lord Scales to the hurt of the French-men, who by meanes of a victorie obtained by K. Charles or his Lieutenants, at S. Aubin, did deliuer themſelues from F all danger, the D. of Orleance, and Monſieur Gralla being taken priſoners: the Lord of Albret eſcaped, and the D. of Brittaine died for griefe of mind, leauing two daughters, Anne the eldeſt, albeit that ſhe was promiſed to Maximilian King of the Romains, who was of the D. of Orleance faction, was won by King Charles to be his wife, who was deſirous by ſuch a marriage to vnite the Dutchie of Brittaine to his Crowne. And becauſe he was betrothed to Marguerite of Auſtria, daughter to the king of the Romaines, who beeing very young, was brought vp in France, in hope of the future marriage, he ſent her home againe, and ſhe was afterwards married to Prince Iohn of Caſtile.

The factious of Nauarr hinder their Princeſſe marriage.

Caſtillans ſpoile the Realme of Nauarr.

Amand of Albret, ſucceeds the K. of Caſtile in warre vpon K. Charles the eight.

King Fernand fauours Amand of Albret againſt King Charles.

K. Charles his victorie at S. Aubin.

The Britons oppoſe themſelues againſt the French King.

The Bretons euer hating the French gouernment, keeping their Princeſſe in the Caſtle of Nantes, made new practiſes with the Kings of Caſtile and England, and obtained great ayde from both of them, Don Diego Peres Sarmjento Earle of Salinas, beeing Generall of the Spaniſh Armie on the coaſt of Brittaine, with Don Pero Carillo de Albornos, and other renowned Captaines, hauing two hundred men at armes, and great numbers of footmen, Crosbowes, Pikes, and Harquebuziers, who were called in thoſe dayes Eſpingardiers. King Charles in the meane time came with a mighty Armie, and beſieged Nantes, and by intelligence with ſome, hee obtained the Citty, Caſtle, and the Dutcheſſe whom hee married in the yeare 1489. and made her French Queene, making himſelfe Maiſter of her inheritance, in deſpight of the Britons. This faire and gratious Princeſſe Anne, was daughter to Dutcheſſe Marguerite, and grand-child to Queene Leonar of Nauarre, as hath beene already ſaid, and cooſin germaine to Queene Catherine of Nauarre, of whom we now treate. A B

Caſtile.

Wee will now returne to the Kings of Caſtile. After the aſſembly of the ſtates of the Realme of Valencia at Orihuela, where diuerſe ancient cuſtomes were reformed, and many notable orders receiued and eſtabliſhed, they came to Murcia, with an intent to warre vpon the Moores from that part. There did Don Frederick de Toledo Captaine of the Kings guards, aske leaue to viſit Don Garcy Aluares de Toledo his father, who lay deadly ſick; in woſe dignities, to wit, the Dutchie of Alua, the Marquiſat of Coria, and Earledome of Barco, his ſonne ſucceeded him. This yeare likewiſe dyed Don Aluaro d'Eſtuniga Duke of Playſance, leauing his ſonne of the ſame name ſucceſſor in his Dutchie. The Biſhop of Aſtorga likewiſe dyed, in whoſe place Bernardin de Caruajall was ſubſtituted, who was afterward Cardinall of the Sea of Rome, of the title of the holy Croſſe. The companies from all parts of the kingdome made their Rendez-vous at Lorca, whether King Ferdinand marched, hauing in his company the Duke of Albuquerque, the Marquis of Cales, the Earles of Lemos, Saint Steeuens, Caſtro, Cabra, Montagu, Buendia, and Don Henry Henriques the great Maiſter, Don Pero Lopes de Padilla Captaine of the frontiers of Caſtile, Don Iohn Chacon, Captaine of the frontier of Murcia and others. The Army beeing ready to march, the Marquis of Cales, and the Captaine of the frontier of Murcia leading the foreward, marched againſt the Cittie of Vera, the inhabitants whereof, who were Moores, beeing aſſured that they came towards them, would not fall into the like miſchiefe as thoſe of Malaga, wherefore they ſent out before to the Marquis, offering to yeeld their Citty to King Ferdinand, if hee were there in perſon: wherefore the King made haſt, and the Citty ſubmitted vnto him on condition that their liues, liberties and goods might bee ſaued, with promiſe to liue in their religion in the next townes, or elſe where they ſhould thinke good. Garcy Laſo de la Vega Maiſter of the Kings Hall, was made Gouernor of Vera. Diuers others ſtrong townes and caſtles on thoſe marches, beeing mooued by the reports of the Kings clemency, and fearing likewiſe their great power, ſent their Alfaquins or wiſe Councellors and deputies, to offer them obedience and tribute, as they were accuſtomed to pay to the Moore Kings, and namely the two Velez, the white and the redde, Muxicar, Cueuas, Teleſique Hueſcar, and Porchena, Tabara, Alborca, Serena, Torilla, Monjacar, Tabernas and Benamaruel: the inhabitants of which places and diuers others, made themſelues Mudejares or vaſſals to king Ferdinand and Queene Iſabell, keeping their ceremonies and ſect. The Armie after this marched towards Almerie, the which towne was then onely lookt vpon by certaine light skirmiſhes with the Moores of the garriſon: then part of the army marched on forward within the view of Baça, where King Muley Boabdelin was then in perſon, who came forth with certaine troopes of horſe and foote, and made a great skirmiſh, where D. Philip of Nauarre and Arragon dyed, who was maiſter of Monteza, nephew to the King, and ſonne to Prince Don Charles of Viana, by vs oftentimes heretofore mentioned, with other men of note, the which cauſed the Chriſtians to make their retreate, who were inſolently purſued in the Rere by the Moores, who notwithſtanding were afterward beaten back by the Captaine of the frontier of Murcia. King Ferdinand leauing for that time Almerie and Baça, two ſtrong places, marched towards Hueſcar which yeelded, and Don Rodrigo Manrique was made Gouernor thereof. C D E F

Death of Don Garcy Aluares and of D. Aluaro de Eſtuniga.

Vera yeelded by compoſition.

Places yeelded to the King and Queene of Caſtile.

Whileſt

A Whileſt the warre continued in theſe quarters, the Captaine of Alua de Tormes, and the gouernor of the Duke of Aluas lands, did Baſtonado one of the Kings Collectors of his rents, which the King hauing notice of, the Licentiate Lewis de Polanco Prouoſt of the Court was ſent thither to doe Iuſtice therevpon, who tooke the Captaine of Alua in his owne Caſtle, and cauſed him to bee hanged in the ſame place where hee had done the deed: As for the Gouernour of the Countrey, hee was brought to the Chancery at Valiodolit, and there condemned to haue his hand ſtricken off, and to bee for euer baniſhed out of the Kings dominions. In the which place of Valiodolit the Court came and wintered: there was an Edict made concerning the moneys, that the ſiluer
I coyne ſhould bee thence-forth made of the ſame ſterling as that of Paris.

Iniury done to one of the kings Receiuers of his money, and puniſhment of the offenders.

Moneys.

It was enacted not long before in Portugall, to coyne certaine kindes of gold of two and twenty Carates, of the golden mine of Guiney, and likewiſe certaine ſiluer money, called, Twenties, of the worth of twenty Res, which were equiualent to the Marauedis of Caſtile: for thirty ſix Res, were at that time worth a Real, as thirty ſixe Marauedis in Caſtile and Nauar: The affaires of which kingdome ſince the execution of the Lords made by King Iohn were quiet and peaceable; for euery one ſeeing that hee had not ſpared his owne bloud, kept himſelfe ſtill, and this King was not onely reuerenced in Portugall, but likewiſe in Affricke, where hee poſſeſſed much land: in ſo much as the Moores of Azamor, who had beene in times paſt vnder the ſubiection of Portugall, and
C were now reuolted, did againe this yeare ſubmit themſelues vnto it: about which time he built the Fountaine at Setuball. And hauing no buſineſſes to hinder him, hee went about to purſue new enterpriſes, no leſſe profitable for mankinde, than honorable to the houſe of Portugall: Hauing had the opinion and aduiſe of diuerſe great perſonages skilfull in Coſmographie, and all other Mathematicall ſciences, and eſpecially good Marriners, hee ſent away Bartholmew Dias, with a certaine religious Frier, named Anthony, inioyning them to coaſt the ſhoares of Affrick of the Ocean ſea, till they could bee able to relate vnto him how farre that land ſtretched, and how the voyage which hee conceiued in his owne vnderſtanding, might bee made by the South into the Eaſt, to the countreys and Iſlands where the ſpices growe: Bartholomew Dias and the Fryer arri-
D ued at the Cape of Bona ſperanza, or good hope, which is the fartheſt ſtretched out point of Affricke beyond the Equinoctiall winter Tropick, and doubling againe the Eaſt, they came to the mouth of the Iland termed by them, of the Infant, which is a hundred and fifty leagues farther then the Cape of good hope. There Fryer Anthonie with the conſent of Bartholmew Dias landed, and trauailed with ſuch turnings vp and downe this vnknowne world, as hee brought himſelfe with great labour and danger, as it is credible, into Paleſtine to the Citty of Ieruſalem, taking a carefull note of all things.

15 Portugal.

Nauigations of the Portugals into the Ocean ſea, purſued by the commandement of King Iohn.

Cape de bona Speranza.

River of the Infant.

Fryer Anthonies long and dangerous iourney.

Bartholmew Dias returned by ſea into Portugall, the ſame way hee came, and informed the King of all that hee had ſeene or knowne of the ſhoares and ſea coaſts: as E Fryer Anthony did the like of his land voyage, beeing returned a good while after, the which encreaſed King Iohns deſire to execute his praiſe-worthy enterpriſe, eſteeming, and not without reaſon, that by the knowledge and practiſe of that Nauigation great profit might redound to his kingdome. Now the better to vnderſtand the coſts and charges of this trafficke for Spices brought from the Iſlands of the Moluccoes, and to bee able to reckon what the commoditie thereof might come to, following the paſſage of the Ocean ſea: hee ſent Pedro de Couanilla and Alphonſo de Payua into the Eaſt, who were wiſe and diſcreete perſons, and very skilfull in the Arabian tongue, to bring him word of the traffick of theſe countries: Hauing then furniſhed them with money, credit, and other neceſſaries for ſo long a voyage, they went to Naples,
F and from thence by Rhodes to Ieruſalem, from whence they paſſed by Alexandria to Caire, then they went to Aden, to Ormuz, and at laſt came to Calicut, and other places of the Indies, carrying with them for their conduct, a Carde or Compaſſe made by the licenciate Calſadilla Biſhop of Viſeo, the Doctor Rodrigue, Pero d'Alcaçaba, and Moyſes a Iew, who had drawne it after the deſcription of Martin of Boheme the great Mathematician, taking information of all the parts of Ethiopia, Arabia, Perſia, King Iohns dilligence to learne the voyage to the Eaſt by the Ocean ſea, and the Iſland of Moluccoes.

Perſia, and of the Indies where there is any trafficke, faires or aſſemblies of people. A Alphonſo Payua died in this voyage: Pedro de Couanilla was deteined by Preſter Iohn Emperour of Ethiopia, ſo as the King could haue no relation from any of them concerning their voyage: yet Couanilla found meanes to write a diſcourſe of what hee had learned, and ſent it afterward to the King, by one Rabi Abraham, and Ioſeph de Lamego, who hauing beene already in Perſia, were ſent backe againe by King Iohn to heere ſome newes of the ſaid Pedro de Couanilla. This diſcourſe did whet on the Kings deſire to effect this voyage, for the which purpoſe he did arme certaine Carauels this yeere 1488. at the ſame time the marriage of his ſonne Prince Alphonſo, and the Infanta Iſabella eldeſt daughter to the King of Caſtile, whereof mention was made in B the treaty of peace betwixt Spaine and Portugall, was wholy agreed vpon, albeit the Prince was then but thirteene yeeres of age: For the charges of which marriage the Eſtates of the Kingdome gaue to King Iohn the ſum of a hundred thouſand golden cruſadoes: at which time the King being deſirous to aduance to wealth and honor D. Pedro de Meneſes Earle of Villareal and Lord of Almeyda beeing at Beja, he created him Marquis of Villareal, and Earle of Oren.

Caſtile. There came now into Caſtile a great Ambaſſage from Maximillian of Auſtria King of the Romains, who in the city of Valiodolit propounded to King Fernand and Queene Iſabella, the deſire which that Prince had to ally himſelfe more ſtreightly with them by marriages, demaunding the Infanta Iſabella for himſelfe, and the Infanta C Ioane their daughters for his ſonne Philip, ſetting downe diuers commodities which ſuch a coniunction might bring with it, namely in making warre vpon the French. Theſe Ambaſſadors beeing come by ſea, their charges borne thorow the Kings countries, and highly honoured, they did returne with an anſwere, conteyning very gracious and pertinent excuſes: to wit, that the Infanta Donna Iſabella was promiſed to Prince Alphonſo of Portugall, but as for the Infanta D. Ioane, who was a young child, conſidering that the long attendance for ſuch a marriage might weary the Archduke Philip, they could ſay nothing, but that as ſoone as ſhe ſhould be of age, if the occaſion ſhould ſerue, they would eſteeme the alliance and friendſhip of ſo great Princes as moſt honourable and highly to bee deſired, and that they beeing at that inſtant greatly buſied in the D warres of Granado, could hardly thinke as yet vpon the French warres. Whileſt the Court ſtaied at Valiodolit, Iſabella cauſed the city of Playſance to bee ſurprized and taken from Aluaro d'Eſtuniga who bare the title of Duke thereof, where ſhee eſtabliſhed officers of the crowne: and becauſe the caſtle made ſome reſiſtance, ſhee cauſed it to be beſeeged by thoſe of Salamanca, Ciudad-Roderigo, and the men of Extremadura: but the Duke knowing it to be to no purpoſe to make reſiſtance did forth-with commaund to yeeld it vp: ſo this city was reunited to the crowne this yeere 1488. The Dukes of Playſance did then and afterwards intitle themſelues Dukes of Bejar. Thoſe of the family of Caruajall did chiefely aſſiſt the Queene in this enterpriſe. The ſame yeere died Donna Beatrice Pimentell, who was wife to Don Aluaro de Luna Conſtable of Caſtile and Maiſter of Saint Iames, who was executed by order of law, ſhee liued fiue and thirty yeeres in honeſt widdow-hood, and lies buried in the Cathedrall Church of Toledo in the Chappell of Saint Iames neere to her husband. The Kings paſſed this yeere in the aboue named buſineſſes about prouiſion of neceſſary things for the future warre of Granado, doing iuſtice, and in perſecuting the new conuerts returned to Iudaiſme, who were oftentimes ouerthrowne by falſe and ſlanderous accuſations, whereof inquiry was principally made at Toledo, where diuers falſe witneſſes were puniſhed.

Plaiſance taken from D. Aluaro da Eſtuniga.

Iewes and conuerted Moores oppreſſed by ſlanderous reports.

Moores. During this ſtay in old Caſtile farre from the Moores, they taking aduantage of the occaſion, did freely ouer-runne the country and ſurprized the city of Nixar, careleſly kept by captaine Bernard Franciſco, where they ſlew three ſcore gentlemen, and preuailed againſt the Chriſtians in diuers other encounters, killing many, in number of whom the Commaunder Ruy Diaz Maldonado, ſonne to Doctor Roderic, Lord of Aquila Fuente was one, who was a valiant knight, they tooke and burnt the towne of Cuellar, conſtrayning the Chriſtians that kept it to ſaue themſelues within the caſtle, F
the

A the which they defended by the ſpace of fiue daies againſt the enraged aſſaults of the Moores by the diſcretion and valour of Iohn a' Analos Lieutenant to captaine Charles de Viedma who was abſent.

In the ſpring of the yeere 1489. King Fernand and Queene Iſabella, departed from Valiodolit, and came by Guadalupa not without great deuotion, to Iaen, with intent to goe and beſeege Baça: for this purpoſe they had leauied thirteene thouſand horſe, and foure and twenty thouſand foote, who hauing muſtered at Sottogordo, the army beganne to march, the Maiſter of Saint Iames conducted the vantgard, and had for fore-runners, according to the antient cuſtome, the captaine de los Donzelles, with the Prouoſt Marſhalls, whoſe charge was to prouide the lodgings of the campe: King 17 Caſtille.

B Fernand knowing that the ſeege would bee long and difficult, and that the Moores of Guadix and Almery, which held King Boabdelins el Zagals part, would deſturbe them as much as in them lay, did place guards and watches in fit places, as well to withſtand ſurpriſes, as to ſecure the victuallers and other people which ſerued and followed the campe. The firſt attempt which the army made, was at Cujar, a ſtrong place, and furniſhed with all manner of munition for the warres, by reaſon whereof being ſummoned, they anſwered with armes, ſallying forth to skirmiſh: but it was to their loſſe, for beeing put to flight they loſt their ſuburbes, which they had intrenched and fortified, from whence they were afterward ſo preſſed, and vexed, as abating their courage, they would gladly haue yeelded vpon any reaſonable conditions, the which the King refu-

C ſed, being highly diſpleaſed that they had reſiſted his mighty army: whereat they became ſo enraged and deſperate, as in the next skirmiſh they made ſuch ſlaughter of the Chriſtians, as the King reſolued to grant them whatſoeuer they demaunded: ſo they yeelded vp the towne, and retired themſelues with all their baggage in ſafety to Baça: ſoone after the fortreſſe of Benſalema yeelded it ſelfe, with others. The Earle of Tendilla receiued Canillas by compoſition beeing a league deſtant from Baça. The take- Deſpaire ſometimes bringeth helpe. Seege of Baſa.

ing of theſe forts prepared the acceſſe to Baça, within which place, King Zagall Boabdelin had put tenne thouſand ſouldiars as well horſe as foote, with diuers expert captaines, taking the greateſt care he could for the well fortifing and keeping thereof, being the

D place of moſt importance, and the chiefe Bulwarke of the ſmall ſtate that was left him: for that being loſt, hee was no more able almoſt to make any reſiſtance. The Chriſtian army being re-enforced with new troupes diuided it ſelfe into two parts, which lodged round about Baça a farre off, which gaue libertie to the Moores to goe out and in at their pleaſures without any difficulty or danger: wherevpon the King taking counſell, he cauſed the campe to remooue, and to place the quarters neerer to the towne: The Moores who thought it was not for their proffit, comming forth to fight, did maintaine it for the ſpace of twelue houres with a wonderfull reſolution, and it may well bee termed a battaile, for the whole forces almoſt of either ſide, came to ioyne, and a great number of valiant men were there ſlaine: the concluſion was, that the Moores were

E glad to retire, and were in deſpight of them ſhut in, and the Chriſtian army lodged in their gardens. Yet notwithſtanding, this ſeat of the campe being not thought to bee very commodious for diuers reſpects, the King cauſed the lodgings to be remoued where they were at firſt: and in this retreat the beſeeged failed not to anoy their enemies by all meanes poſſible.

The difficulty being great to hinder the furious ſallies of thoſe barbarous people, the opinions therevpon were ſundry and vncertaine, ſo as the King was at the point to raiſe the ſeege, and to cauſe great forts to bee raiſed round about it, furniſhed with ſtrong guardes, and to ſtrengthen the neigbour garriſons, and by theſe ſlow meanes to tame the enemies and make them yeeld: but becauſe Queene Iſabel did greatly deſire to ſee an

F end of this warre of Granado, to whoſe conſtancy the purſute thereof and the conqueſt of that Kingdome, ſo long time held by the Infidel is to bee attributed, the King craued her opinion: who being wonderfully diſpleaſed that ſo diſhonorable a reſolution ſhould be taken, did entreate the King to thinke better thereon, and for modeſties ſake would not vtter her opinion: but perceiuing that want of victuals and money was the greateſt hinderance they ſtood vpon, which in ſo long a ſeege might diſaduantage the army, ſhee The conqueſt of Granado attributed to Queene Iſabels conſtancy.

ſaid,

ſaid, that they needed not to doubt any ſuch matter, for ſhee would prouide in ſuch ſort, A as there ſhould be no want of either of them: The King knowing the Queenes dilligence in ſuch matters, and the deſire ſhee had that Baça might bee taken, commaunded the ſeege ſhould bee continued with all vehemency, wherewith the whole army in generall was well pleaſed; wherefore the two campes were diſpoſed and placed, a miles diſtance the one from the other & a great trench drawn from one to an other fortified with piles and fifteene forts of timber and flags, where great numbers of ſouldiars were lodged, and by this meanes the city was more ſtreightly ſhut vp. An other trench was drawne from the hils ſide of two miles long, ſo as the place was enuironed round about, in which workes they ſpent two monthes, in all which time they neuer left skirmiſhing. And as B diuers Moores, diſtruſting the ſucceſſe of the ſeege, fled to the Chriſtians campe it was knowne by their meanes how that the city was not well prouided with victualls, wherein King Zagall had greatly failed, and beſides, how that they had their water from a fountaine at the foote of the hill called Alboahacen, which being taken from them they would be in great want: wherefore the King hauing reſolued vpon this intelligence to build a fort vpon that hill: The Moores being aduertized thereof by ſome ſpies, did preuent him, and they themſelues made a fort there for the guarde of their fountaine. In the meane ſpace Don Antonio de la Cueua and others, ranne vp and downe the country, and ſpoiled the townes and villages neere to Guadix, from whence bringing great numbers of cattaile of all ſorts, the Moores came forth to the reskew of them, and there the Chri- C ſtians beganne to ſtand at a ſtay, and knew not whether it were beſt to leaue their booty to betake themſelues to flight, or elſe to tarry ſtill and defend it valiantly. The valour of Hernand Peres de Pulgar encouraged the reſt, who hanging an hand-kercher vpon the toppe of a pike, cried out aloud, let thoſe that are no cowards follow this Enſeigne, and in this ſort marching againſt the Moores, they beate them backe with great ſlaughter, and returned victorious to the campe: in regarde whereof the King made Hernand Peres Knight: and permitted him to beare a white hand-kercher in his armes in token of his valor to his poſterity.

King Muley did oftentimes attempt to victuall Baça but it was in vaine: and foreſeeing that the end of the Moores reigne in Spaine was at hand, his laſt refuge was, D by the counſell of his friends, to haue recourſe to the Soldan of Egipt, who in a manner commaunded ouer all the pettie Kings of Affrica, vnto whom hee complained of the greedineſſe of the Chriſtian King, who did vniuſtly diſpoſſeſſe him from the Kingdome which his Anceſtors had enioyed ſo long a time: whereat the Sultan bee-ing mooued, ſent two friers Ambaſſadors to Pope Innocent, of thoſe that dwelt in the The Soldan of Egipts dilligence in the behalfe of the Spaniſh Moores. Temple of Ieruſalem which they call our Sauiours Sepulchre: to let him vnderſtand how that the Kings of Caſtile did deale vniuſtly in vexing the Moores that dwelt there by warres, wherein if they perſiſted, hee would vſe the Chriſtians in the ſame manner that liued in his countries and dominions: the Pope gaue notice thereof to King Fer- nand and Queene Iſabella, yet they for all that would not leaue of their deſeigne, but E
The King of Caſtile, gaue a thouſand ducats yeerly rent to the friers at Ieruſalem. ſatisfied the Pope with reaſons wherefore they purſued that warre: and beeing de-uout and charitable Princes they gaue and aſſigned a yeerely ſtipend to the friars of a thouſand ducats, which they enioy and is the faireſt reuenue they haue at theſe daies: Be-ſides that, the Queene ſent a vaile wrought with her owne hand to hang ouer the Sepulchre at Ieruſalem.

18 During the ſeege of Baça, this yeere 1489. Don Garcia Lopes de Padilla the laſt
The Maiſterſhip of Calatraua incorporated to Caſtile. Maiſter of the Knights of Calatraua died: for the Maiſterſhip was then incorporated to the Royall crowne of Caſtile by the Popes authority, as not long after thoſe of Saint Iames and Alcantara were: remayning euer after in the Kings hands with title of perpetuall adminiſtrators thereof: for in truth theſe maſters did draw after them, by F reaſon of the authority which they had ouer ſo great a number of Knights, all gentlemen of great houſes, to great a power and to be ſuſpected by the Kings, as pernitious to a ſtate, where in concluſion they were heads of factions, by whom, Spaine was many times torne in peeces.

The

A The Knights of this order were permitted to marry the yeare one thouſand, fiue hundred and forty, by Pope Paul the third. From the firſt inſtitution of this order, vntill this time, and the death of Don Garcy Lopes de Padilla, eight and thirty maiſters of the ſame order are reckoned.

The ſiege of Baça had already laſted foure whole moneths, without hope of winning it, againſt which the Artillery wrought no great effect: for that men in thoſe dayes were not skilfull in the approches and neere batteries, as they are now in theſe times: Neuertheleſſe King Ferdinand thinking it would bee a great blemiſh to his reputation, if hee ſhould raiſe the ſiege, would by no meanes giue it ouer, beeing aſſured that
B continuance of time would bring the Moores to reaſon: the beſieged on the contrary, knowing that the loſſe of Baça would carry with it Almerie, and Guadix, and ſo conſequently the whole ruine of the Moores ſtate in Spaine, did all of them reſolue to dye rather then to yeeld. And becauſe the trench on the hills ſide was a great hinderance to them, they went out vpon a day to breake and fill it vp, where they gaue a very furious aſſault, wherein great numbers on both ſides were ſlaine. Wherevpon the King commanded that no man ſhould goe forth to skirmiſh without leaue, and cauſed all the Moores to depart out of the Campe, commanding that all thoſe that ſhould flye forth of the Citty ſhould bee made ſlaues, but they had rather vndergoe that condition then to ſtarue. Beeing beſieged ſo farre off, the ſallies were the eaſier and oftner;
C but the Moores commonly had the worſt: At one of theſe skirmiſhes Don Iohn de Luna was ſlaine, a yong Knight, and heire to the noble houſe of Luna in Arragon. Winter drawing on, gaue ſome hope to the beſieged that their enemies would ſhortly diſlodge, and therefore they meant to hold out a little longer: but when they ſaw that King Ferdinand cauſed Carpenters to build ſmall houſes and cabins for the Souldiors, they then perceiued that the King meant not to leaue them ſo ſoone. The ſeaſon beeing wette and rainie, did greatly trouble the Armie before Baça, and that which was worſt of all, the wayes were ſo deepe and full of water, that no victuals nor munition could bee brought to the Campe, but with incredible difficulty. But the diligence of the noble and couragious Queene ſurmounted all theſe inconueniences;
D for ſhee hired foureteene thouſand ordinary beaſts of carriage, beſides thoſe which went vp and downe to the Campe for their priuate gaine, taking marueilous paines and care to prouide all things neceſſary for the reliefe of the Armie, not ſparing for any coſt. For to defray which charges, ſhee engaged part of the Royall patrimonie, and aſſigned pentions: ſhee borrowed money of Citties, and of priuate men and women, and pawned her owne Iewels; and for an argument of her great pietie and charity, ſhee kept foure great tents in the Campe, which were termed the Queenes Hoſpitall, for the reliefe of hurt and ſicke Souldiours, feeing for that purpoſe, diuerſe Phiſitions, Surgeons, and Apothecaries, and prouided for all other neceſſities, with ſuch care, iudgement and diligence, as the conqueſt of the kingdome of Granada,
E and expulſion of the Mahometan Moores forth of Spaine, may more iuſtly bee attributed to this Princeſſe then to any other.

The Queenes Hoſpitall in the Campe.

Queene Iſabels great diligence.

It was thought fitte that the Ordinance which was in the Maiſter of Saint Iames and the Duke of Nageraes quarter, ſhould bee brought neerer to the enemies fortes and defenſes: the which was done with many bloudy incounters: the Moores continuing ſtill more obſtinate, were diuerſe times aduiſed to yeeld, and to enioy the fauour and bountie of King Ferdinand, who promiſed them the liberty of their religion, and not to take away their goods, lawes, and cuſtomes, notwithſtanding that they were in great want of victuals and money for the payment of the Souldiours, for whoſe wages, the Captaines tooke away the Rings and Iewels from the women, to F the end to auoyde ſedition and rebellion in the towne. The continuall miſeries of that ſiege did likewiſe trouble diuerſe that were abroade, who cunningly did councell the King, who was reſolute not to riſe from thence, to cauſe the Queene to come to the Campe, ſaying, that it would cauſe the Moores vtterly to diſpaire: but indeed they thought that the Queene, ſeeing with her owne eyes the trauaile and miſerie which the Armie endured, would bee a meanes to diſlodge, and that the reiected

opinion

opinion of beſieging them by Fortes, would bee then renewed. The King wrote diuerſe letters to the Queene who lay at Iaen, to cauſe her to come to the Campe, the which ſhee did, beeing accompanied with the Cardinall of Spaine, and other Prelates, leauing the Prince her ſonne at Vbeda with the Archbiſhop of Siuill, and ſome others of his Councell. Her comming cauſed moſt of the Souldiours to forget their miſery and trauaile, and brought forth an effect contrary to that which ſome of them, who had beene the occaſion thereof, did imagine; But the Moores were wholy confounded thereby, and diſcouraged to make any longer reſiſtance. Wherefore their chiefe Commander, whoſe name was Mahomet Abenhazan, began to hearken to that which had beene ſo often propounded by the King and Queene, and craued a parley. Don Gutti-ere de Cardegna great Commander of Leon, had Commiſſion to treate with him, hee beeing an eloquent and diſcreete Gentleman, ſhewed him what fauour and good hee might expect and hope for from theſe victorious Princes, and that there was nothing more plaine, then that God had giuen an end to the Moores happineſſe in Spaine: The Moore apprehending ſufficiently what the Commander told him, did with very humble ſpeeches deſire to become their vaſſall, but hee ſayd, that it behooued him to conferre with the inhabitants of Baça, before hee could giue any reſolute anſwer: which beeing granted him; thoſe people of iudgement which conſented to the yeelding of the towne, were of opinion to let King Muley vnderſtand vpon what termes they ſtood, to the end they might hee able to iuſtifie the yeelding thereof.

The Moores of Baza begin to parley.

During this negotiation, a ſuſpence from Armes was granted, and King Muley beeing aduertiſed and perſwaded by Mahomet Abenhazan, did not onely conſent to the yeelding of Baça, but compounded likewiſe for the reſt which he held, and for his ſtate hereafter: Namely, that Almerie and Guadix ſhould bee deliuered into the Kings hands; the which was effected aſſoone as the Gouernour returned back. The Moores of the garriſon of Baça came forth with their Armor and baggage, and the inhabitants were permitted to liue in the neighbour townes, or elſe-where in Spaine, where they thought good, without any moleſtation in their beliefe and ſuperſtition: and the Gouernour Mahomet Abenhazen with all his kindered, was receiued into the Kings fauour as their ſubiect and vaſſaile.

Baſa, Guadiz and Almery yeelded.

The Chriſtian Souldiers entred into Baça the fourth day of December, the ſeauenth moneth of the ſiege. The yeelding of that place beeing diuulged all ouer the countrey, the Captaines and Gouernours of the townes of Almunecar, Porchena, Tabernas, and others of the countrey of Alpuxarras, from Almerie vnto Granado, came and preſented their keyes to the Kings, remaining their vaſſalls and Mudejares, the Captaine of Porchena excepted, who reiecting all entreaties, guifts and offers, would needs paſſe ouer into Affricke. King Ferdinand went from Baça to Almery, where King Muley lay, who came and met him, hauing layde by the royall Diadem, and like a priuate man, alighting from his horſe, would in ſigne of homage haue kiſſed his hands: but King Ferdinand, conſidering the alterations wherevnto humaine affaires are ſubiect, would not permit it, but cauſed him to remount his horſe, and ſo receiued him neuertheleſſe for his vaſſaile. The Citty of Almerie beeing receiued, and the ſame conditions granted to the Cittizens as was to others, namely, to liue free, and to enioy without any moleſtation their goods, and the exerciſe of their religion, in paying the ſame tribute which they were accuſtomed to giue to the Moore Kings, the Kings went to Guadix, where the like was done. This was in the beginning of the yeare one thouſand, foure hundred and ninety. The gouernments of theſe places were giuen by the King, that of Baça to Don Henry Henriques his Vnckle; Almerie to the great Commander of Leon, and Guadix to Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, the Cardinalls brother. The Gouernor of Solobregna and other Moores, did likewiſe yeeld their Fortes and Caſtles to the Kings, and did taſte of their mildneſſe and clemencie. The towne of Andaraz was aſſigned to Muley Boabdelin for his reſidence, with a thouſand Mudejares to his vaſſalls, and foure millions of Marauedis for his pention, which hee enioyed but a yeare: for diſdaining to liue as a ſubiect, there where hee had reigned, hee went ouer into Affricke. By meanes whereof Mahomet Boabdelin the little, remayned ſole King of Granado,

Muley Boabdelin ſubmits himſelfe to the Kings of Caſtile.

1490. Moores.

A Granado, who not long after, was brought to the ſame paſſe like his vncle, as ſhall appeare. The Biſhops and the Clergie did in theſe cities performe the accuſtomed purifications and ceremonies: and Almery and Guadix were after that erected into Epiſcopall Seas.

The power of the Moores after the taking of theſe places was in a manner brought to nothing: the city of Granado with a few other places remayning to Mahumet the Little: but all that was done was to no purpoſe vnleſſe Granado were taken, which had beene the chiefe of that rich and mighty Kingdome for many yeeres: wherefore Mahumet was entreated by the Kings to giue them the city of Granado, alleadging a cer- 20
B taine agreement and promiſe which he had made vnto them, that vpon the conqueſt of the cities of Baça, Guadix and Almerie, by the King and Queene, they ſhould giue them to Mahumet the Little, with certaine other places, vpon condition, that hee ſhould liue vnder them as their vaſſall, and that hee ſhould enioy the rents and reuenues of thoſe places, and hee in regarde thereof ſhould deliuer the city of Granado into their hands. But the ſaid Mahumet thought it an hard matter from a Maſter to become a ſeruant, and from a King a ſubiect, therefore ſome times excuſing himſelfe, by the reſiſtance of the Moores of Granado, from performing his promiſe, and at other times demanding more townes and reuenues, this laſt was graunted him, with promiſe to amplifie and enlarge his dominion, and as for the rebellious Moores, hee was enioyned to diſarme them.

C Some, who ſaw that it muſt needes bee ſo, did yeeld vp their weapons, others who could not endure ſuch baſeneſſe, did ſtirre vp King Mahomet in ſuch ſort as hee rebelled openly with them: wherefore this yeere 1490. the Moore King beganne the warre againe, and tooke diuers caſtles neere to the city, driuing away the Chriſtians from thence: by reaſon whereof the garriſons of Alhama, Loxa, the townes of Illora, Moclin, Montefrio, Alhedin and Colomera were fortified by the Kings: who contenting themſelues for that time to haue ſecured the frontiers, and the new conquered cities, they went to Cordoua, and from thence to Siuill: where receiuing newes how the Moores ſpoiled the country, they appointed Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza Earle
D of Tendilla Generall, who abiding at Alcala the real, did giue and take many defeats: but it was not long after, before King Fernand came in his perſon, with an army of fiue thouſand horſe and twenty thouſand foote, and ſpoyled all the territory of Granado, where hee left nothing for the Moores to liue on, or to yeeld them any eaſe or commodity, not without ſharpe reſiſtances skirmiſhes and dangerous and deadly incounters as well on the one ſide as the other: in the campes retreat the Marquis of Villenas brother called Alphonſo de Pacheco, Stefano de Luxon, and an other captaine of the Marquis, did amongſt others looſe their liues: the Marquis of Villena himſelfe was hurt in the arme, which hee felt euer after during his life, but at that time hee purchaſed the fame of a braue, generous, and charitable Knight towards his ſeruants: for perceiuing that a groome of his Chamber was hand to hand in fight with fiue
E Moores who had the oddes of him, he not being able to endure to ſee his ſeruant in that danger, did not feare to hazard his owne perſon in his reſcue', but ſpurred his horſe againſt thoſe Moores ſlue two of them with his owne hand, and put the other to flight: and there he receiued that hurt.

King Mahumet the Little enforced to rebell.

Sharpe reſiſtance of Moores.

The Marquis of Villena valiant and charitable.

After that King the had made his retreate and was gonne to Cordoua with the army, ſending them home to their houſes (for they were all of Andaluzia and the neighbour Prouinces) the Moores hauing gathered together ſome forces in the city and out of the hill called Sierra Neuada, came and planted their ſeege before Alhedin, which was kept by Mondo of Queſada, where they did aſſaile furiouſly ſeuen daies and ſeuen
F nights, in ſuch ſort as the Chriſtians, hauing no leiſure to eate or ſleepe, were conſtrained to giue ouer the place, except a ſtrong tower whereinto they ſhut themſelues where they made the beſt reſiſtance they could.

The King hauing notice of the daunger they were in, did forthwith aſſemble forces for their ſuccour, but it could not come ſoone enough, for the beſeeged Chriſtians, hauing done as much as men could doe in their owne defence, were at the laſt conſtrained to yeeld to the enemies diſcretion, who carryed them all away for A Exploits of the Moores. ſlaues to Granado: when the King heard this, hee turned back againe: but the Moores proud of their victory, proceeded on in taking of places, as Marchena and others: and becauſe there was nothing to bee had in the territory of Granado, they prouided their victualls out of Affrick, hauing procured the Moores Mudeiares of Solobregna, a ſea towne, againſt their faith giuen and ſworne to the Kings of Caſtile, to giue them ſafe acceſſe in their harbor, with victuals, money, and other commodities, and they receiued King Mahomet into their towne, who a great while beſieged the Caſtle, which was defended by Franciſco Ramires of Madrid, till ſuch time as hauing intelligence of the comming of the Chriſtian Armie, hee was conſtrained to abandon it, and to returne B to Granado: whether King Ferdinand came to make an end of his former ſpoile. And becauſe hee vnderſtood that the Moores who remained in Baça, Guadix, and Almerie, had intelligence with King Mahomet, hee went thither, and cauſed that curſſed race to bee expelled and diſlodged out of all the walled townes and Caſtles, permitting them to dwell in the Villages thereabout if they would, and then went back to Siuill.

21 In that Citty in the moneth of March this yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, and Portugal. ninety, were celebrated the promiſes of marriage, betwixt the Infanta Iſabell, and Prince Iohn of Portugall, Don Fernand Siluera, and Doctor Iohn de Taxeda high Chancellor of that kingdome, beeing ſent thether Ambaſſadors for that purpoſe, the Cardinall of C Spaine performing the ceremonie. The feaſts, coſts, gifts and preſents, were great and magnificent, and the Kings beeing at Conſtantine, vpon their returne to Siuill, they ſent the betrothed Princeſſe into Portugall, who was attended on by the Cardinall of Spaine, by Don Lewis Oſorio Biſhop of Iaen, Alphonſo de Cardegna Maiſter of Saint Iames, Iohn de Eſtuniga Maiſter of Alcantara, Don Rodrigo Alphonſo Pimentell Earle of Benauent, Don Lorenzo Suares de Figueroa Earle of Feria, Don Pedro Portocarero Lord of Palma, Rodrigo de Vlloa who went as Ambaſſador, with other great numbers of nobilitie. With this company the Princeſſe arriued at Badajos in the beginning of No-
Caia a ſmall ſtreame diuiding Caſtile from Portugal. uember, and paſſing on to the bridge of Caia, ouer a little ſtreame which deuided Caſtile from Portugall, ſhee was deliuered into the hands of Don Manuell Duke of Beja, couſin germaine to the King, who beeing accompanied with the Biſhops of Ebora and Coimbra, with the Earles of Monſanto and Marialua, and diuerſe other Knights, they brought her to Eſtremos, where King Iohn and the Prince his ſonne met her, and in that place they were married by George d' Acoſta, Archbiſhop of Braga: after that Mariage of the Infants D. Alphonſo of Portugall and Iſabell of Caſtile they went to Ebora, where they feaſted with great pompe and magnificence. Don George, baſtard ſonne to the King, was preſent at the wedding, who was newly come from the Monaſtery of Ieſus d' Auero, where hee had till then beene brought vp, vnder the gouernment of Don Ioane his Aunt the Kings ſiſter, who dyed not long before. At theſe feaſts the King maintained the tilt againſt all knights that would runne, furniſhing them with horſe and armor.

22 This yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, ninety and one, the kings of Caſtile beeing
Caſtille. at Siuill, they began to giue order for the ſiege of Granado, ſending for the Knights and men of warre from all places of the kingdome, as well on this ſide as beyond the hills, commanding them to meete at Alcala the reall, to which place they went in the moneth of Aprill, hauing in their company, the Prince and the Infantas their children, who with the Queene remained at Alcala. The king paſſing on into the plaine countrey of Granado with the Armie, conſiſting of ten thouſand horſe, and about forty thouſand footemen, in the which were in perſon, the Maiſter of Saint Iames, the Marquis of Villena, hee of Cales, and his brother in lawe Don Rodrigo Ponce de Leon, who did begin this warre, the Earles of Vregna, Cabro, Ciſuentes, and Don Alphonſo de Aguilar: diuerſe great Lords which came not themſelues ſent thither their forces. The Conſtable remained Viceroy in Caſtile the old.

The Campe hauing marched as farre as the place called Los ojos de Hueſcar, ſtayed there, and the Marquis of Vellena was ſent with 3. thouſand horſe, and 5. thouſand foot, into the valley of Aletin & to other places and paſſages of the country called Alpuxarras

to

A to ſpoile it, and becauſe the King was aduertized that in the ſame country were a great number of Moores able to make reſiſtance, he followed the Marquis, and paſſing along by Granado he maintained skirmiſh with diuers Moores which came forth for that purpoſe, who with great loſſe were repulſed; the King went forward, and by the way met the Marquis and his troupes as they returned, who had burned and deſtroied nine townes, and ſlue more then fiue hundred Moores, whom they found careleſſe and ſecure, thinking themſelues ſafe from any ſearch in thoſe ſharpe and ſtony places: ſo their forces beeing ioyned together they returned againe into Las Alpuxarras to make an end of ſpoyling what was left. And King Fernand hauing notice that three captaines of the B Moores were come forth of Granado, and had made themſelues maſters of a paſſage, he ſent the Marquis thither, who fought with them and draue them thence, hee ſlue aboue one hundred of them and tooke three ſcore priſoners, and they deſtroied fifteene townes more in the country, beſides thoſe nine aboue mentioned with great ſtore of ſpoile which they carried away with them: for the Moores did alwaies thinke that their goods were ſafer in thoſe places then in the city of Granado: After which exploit the army was brought backe to Pradal & from thence marched to a place called Goſto: There the king by the aduice of the Lords which were with him, cauſed the compaſſe of a city Seege of Granado.
to be meaſured out which was called Saint Foy, with an intent to build houſes in that place for the beginning of the army if it ſhould be conſtrained to winter there, and if the C ſeege of Granado ſhould bee drawne out in length, as it was greatly feared: they gaue it The city of Holy faith.
the title of Saint Foy, in regard that warre was vndertaken for the augmentation of the Holy Chriſtian faith. Round about the foreſaid compaſſe, the campe was lodged, being fortified and rampired with trenches and walls for feare of ſurprizes, in which workes the Moores failed not to hinder them by comming forth of Granado with continual skirmiſhes. The Queene with her children came from Alcala to the campe; the Maiſter of Saint Iames and the Marquis of Cales went forth to meet them, and ſhe with her Ladies were lodged in the ſafeſt place of al the campe, and they did oftentimes ride about the quarters, where for their diſport they did many times behold the fights and skirmiſhes which were almoſt euery houre made a farre off, and one eſpecially among the reſt where them, with 600. of their men ſlaine vpon the place, and more then fourteene hundred of them hurt, the Marquis of Cales leading the Chriſtians, who attributed that victory to the Queenes good hap, and ſhe aſcribed it to the Marquis his good fortune. Now thoſe of Granado were not long able to hold out: for the greater numbers of horſmen which were wont to ſally forth of the city, were ſo diminiſhed as they hardly had 300. horſe of Great neceſſity in the city of Granado.
D as the Moores in great troupes being come forthwith two peeces of Artillery, did looſe A great skirmiſh wherein the Moores are diſcated.
ſeruice, the reſt, were loſt and conſumed in the laſt wars: and beſides this; the city which conteined aboue 200. thouſand perſons was very ill prouided of victuals, ſo that diuers caualiers and men of great note began to deuiſe means how to treat with the Chriſtians for their ſafty: to be ſhort, al of them conſidering the ſtate whereinto they were brought,
E and that they had no hope or expectation of reliefe from any place, they were glad to hearken vnto compoſition and agreement in yeelding vp the city to the Kings of Caſtile: wherefore King Mahomet the Little reſolued to giue place to neceſſity, and to receiue this fattall wound, to fall from his crowne and regall dignity, and to become vaſſal and ſubiect to his enemies, and to that purpoſe he ſent to entreat the Kings to appoint commiſſioners to treat and compound with him. This newes was pleaſing to the Chriſtians, who did not thinke to haue gotten it ſo good cheape: therefore D. Gonçall Hernandes de Cordoua, and the Secretary Hernando de ſafra, were appointed to capitulate with him; who after diuers goings and commings, did conclude with the Moores and their Prince Mahomet the Little, vpon theſe conditions following.

F 1 That King Mahomet ſhould no more terme himſelfe King of Granado: vnto whom the Kings of Caſtile ſhould giue an honorable ſtipend for his entertainment, who might liue in the cities, lands, and other reuenues, ſpecified, which hee had held in the daies of his father King Muley Albohacen; and the like to bee done to his mother Queene Aixa, his wife, ſiſters, and children.

2 That their traine, ſtuffe, ſeruants and purueiors ſhould be free from al tax and tribute.

3 That the Moores ſhould bee iudged according to their owne lawes and cuſtomes, A which they call Xaira, and if any Chriſtian were a party, by Iudges that were one halfe Moores, and the reſt Chriſtians.

4 That their Armes ſhould not be taken from them, (their Harquebuſes excepted) the which no Moore might keepe without ſpeciall licence.

5 That all Moores ſhould bee ſuffered to liue in Spaine, with free liberty of their ceremonies and religion: and if they would goe ouer into Affricke, they might do ſo, and carry with them their mooueables, money, marchandiſe, and all other commodities, excepting Armor and munition for the warres, without paying any tribute for three yeares together, and they ſhould bee furniſhed with ſhipping for their paſſage: After B three yeares were expired, thoſe that would depart ſhould pay a Ducat for euery head.

Capitulations betweene Ferdinand and Mahomet the little.

6 That all Moores which poſſeſſed immoueable goods in Spaine, might enioy them, albeit they themſelues were in Affrick, and they might ſell, let out, and accommodate them, and for that purpoſe they might keepe factors and Atturneys in the King and Queenes dominions.

7 That no Renegada Chriſtian ſhould bee conſtrained by force to returne to the Chriſtian faith.

Liberty of religion granted to the Moores.

8 That within certaine dayes after the concluſion of this treaty, King Mahomet the little, or his Alcaydes, ſhould deliuer vp the Fortreſſe of Alhambra, with all the towers and other ſtrong places of the citty into the Kings hands. C

9 That thoſe of Granado ſhould giue foure hundred principall Moores for hoſtage.
As theſe matters were handling, the Queenes tents were ſet on fire by the negligence of one of the Queenes women; ſo as the whole Armie was in an vproare, and fell into order of battaile, thinking it to bee ſome Moriſh ſtratagem: but when the cauſe was knowne, all was quieted. The like inconuenience of fire hapned at the ſame time at Medina del Campo, by meanes whereof more then two hundred houſes were burned. Now after that the aboue-named articles were agreed vpon, a great ſedition was raiſed in the citty of Granado, by more then twenty thouſand of the common people, who tooke armes, gaine-ſaying the yeelding vp of the citty, in ſuch ſort as King Mahomet was glad to take the Fortreſſe of Alhambre with a ſtrong garde, looking euery houre when they would D haue aſſailed him: but their fury being appeaſed, he ſhewed them, that there was now no more time to make reſiſtance, and gaue them many reaſons for it: Neuertheleſſe, hee Wizards ſtir vp the people. perceiuing that there was euer ſome frantick Prophet or other among that nation which did put the people in thoſe tumults, he wrote to the Kings, that without ſtaying for the day appointed for the deliuery of the Alhambra, they ſhould ſend to take preſent poſſeſſion thereof, which King Ferdinand did forth-with, and marched with his forces againſt
The Alhambra of Granado yeelded the yeare 1492. that Fortreſſe: from whence Mahomet the little, no more a King, went out to meete him, who with a ſorrowfull and deiected countenance, preſented him the Keyes, ſaying, that they were the Keyes of the Royall Pallace of Granado, the which, with himſelfe, and all the men that were in it, were at his ſeruice. He pronounced theſe words with a broken E and ſorrowfull voyce, and would haue alighted from his horſe to haue kiſſed the Kings hand, who mooued with pitty and compaſſion, would not ſuffer him ſo to doe, but did very gently and gratiouſly comfort him. King Ferdinand gaue the Keyes to the Queene, Granado yeelded vp. ſhee to Prince Iohn her ſonne, and he gaue them to Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza Earle of Tendilla, who with three thouſand horſe, and like number of footmen, entred into the ſpacious and royall fortreſſe of the Alhambra, with the Marquis of Villena, and other Knights: & Frier Hernando de Talauera Biſhop of Auila (who was afterward Archbiſhop of Granado) did forthwith goe vp into the higheſt Tower there, and ſet vp the Croſſe, which was the very ſame that the Cardinall of Spaine did vſe to haue borne before him as Archbiſhop of Toledo and Primat, and the which is at this day kept in the Veſtrie at F Toledo: and then were the banners of Saint Iames and King Ferdinand and Queene Iſa-bell ſet vp, with performance of the accuſtomed ceremonies: and ſoone after, other forces were ſent to ſeaze vpon the gates and towers of the citty, where the people were diſarmed, and the armor carried into the Alhambra, ſauing thoſe which were hidden and afterward found, which coſt diuers their liues, who were executed by courſe of lawe.

The

A The city was yeelded vp the firſt day of Ianuary 1492. the 675. yeere of the reigne of the Arabians there: and thereby ended the warre of Granado, which laſted tenne yeeres, and gaue end to the Arabians and Moores dominion in Spaine; but the moſt part of the Knights would not tarry there but went ouer into Africke: the greedineſſe, inconſtancy, infidelity, and deſire to rule which that Nation had, brought them to this miſery. King Fernand aduertized Pope Innocent and other Chriſtian Princes his friends of this great victory, and hee ſtaied a great while in the city of Granado, to giue order for the gouernment thereof, as alſo of all that they had newly conquered: wherein Queene Iſabell's conſtancy and magnanimity deſerues the firſt place, then King Fernands valour, wiſdome and good conduct, with other Lords and chiefe Knights of their
B Kingdomes: the cities of Siuill, Cordoua, Iaen, Eccia, Xeres, Vbeda, Baeça, Murcia, Carthagena and Lorca did not ſpare any of their publike and particular goods.

The end of the Arabians rule in Spaine.

The ſame day that King Fernand and Queene Iſabell made their entry into the city of Granado, D. Pero Fernandes de Velaſco Earle of Haro, Viceroy and Conſtable of Caſtile died, whom D. Bernardin de Haro his ſonne ſucceeded as well in the Earldome as Conſtableſhip, who this yeere was made Earle of Frias and married to Donna Ioane of Arragon the Kings daughter.

A little before the viceroys death, the Preſident and Auditors of the Kings Chancery reſiding at Valiodolit, did greatly forget themſelues, by receiuing an Appellation to Rome, for a certaine cauſe depending before them, for which the King and Queene de-C priued them of their offices, and placed others therein: they that were diſpoſed, were D. Alphonſo de Valdiuieſſo Biſhop of Leon who was preſident, and Doctor Martin d'Auila, the Licenciat Cinchilla, Doctor Cano, and Doctor Olmedilla Auditors: In their roomes were placed Doctor Iohn Arias del Villar Biſhop of Ouiedo for Preſident, the Licenciat de Villena, Doctor de Palacios, the Licenciate Ville-Muriell, the Licenciate Palacios Rubias, and Doctor de Villoucla Auditors. The Iewes did alſo grant a generall ſubſidy to the Kings, which was the laſt ſubſidy raiſed vpon that ſect: for ſoone after they were all driuen forth of Spaine. The King and Queene hauing begunne to take the beſt order they could for the gouernment of the new conquered Prouinces, in 1492.
D the month of March this yeere 1492. they came to Cordoua to intend the affaires of the reſt of the Kingdome: there they made a ſtatute, whereby all gentlemen of the Kingdomes and Lordſhips, ſubiect to the crowne of Caſtile and Arragon, were enioyned to come and make proofe of their pedigrees and nobility: and becauſe it was made at Cordoua, it was called the ſtatute or law of Cordoua.

The Preſident and Auditors of Valliodolit depoſed and their names.

Subſidy raiſed vpō the Iewes.

Statute of Cordoua for the Nobility.

Whileſt the King and Queene were buſied in the warres and ſeege of Granado, the 24
ioy and feaſts in Portugall were ſodainely turned into teares and lamentations: the mar- Portugal.
riage betwixt Alphonſo of Portugall and D. Iſabella of Caſtile being celebrated with great magnificence at Ebora, and the feaſts and triumphes continuing at Saint Iren, whether the new married couple were gonne to auoide the great heate: the Prince E on an Euening accompanying the King his father, and beeing mounted vpon a very ready and ſwift horſe, would needs runne a race againſt an other horſe, whereon Don Iohn de Menezes, Commander of Algezier, did ride, but the Commander excuſed the matter by reaſon it was late and almoſt night, the Prince commanded a Mule to bee brought vnto him, and in the getting vp the ſtirrop brake, wherefore hee tooke his former horſe, and continuing in his determination to runne, he tooke the Commander by the hand, and giuing ſpurres to his horſe, hee conſtrained him to runne the race with him: but the miſhap was that the Princes horſe ſtumbling at the races end, ouer-threw his rider vnder him, and did ſo bruze him, as hee lay ſpeechleſſe and almoſt dead vp-
F on the ground. The King and all the ſtanders by, being very ſorrowfull, cauſed him to bee carried to the next cottage which was a fiſher-mans, where the Princeſſes, the mother and the daughter in law, hauing vnderſtood this pittifull accident did come on foote, where finding this poore Prince in ſuch ſtate as for no ſpeech nor any thing elſe that cold be ſaid or don, he did make any ſign or ſhew of vnderſtanding ought: They did all melt into teares, vttering forth very ſtrang cries and lamentations. Great Prince Alphonſo.
and ſundry were the dilligences and remedies though ſuperfluous, which the Phyſitions

A pittiful accident hapned to Prince Alphonſo of Portugal.

and Surgions vſed for his recouery: the Phyſitions telling the King that his ſonnes end drew nere, he brought the Queene and the Princeſſe to the houſes of Vaſco Pallas, which are vpon the riuer of Tayo, and the Prince died ſeuen and twenty houres after the accident, who was lamented and bewailed by all men, for the great hope and expectation which he gaue of himſelfe in thoſe young yeeres, hauing hardly attained to ſeuenteene yeeres of age: and that which did more encreaſe the ſorrow, was that he left the Princeſſe Iſabell a widdow euen almoſt as ſoone as ſhee had beene a wife: for they had not beene married fully eight monthes. The Princes body was laied in a herſe and carried to the Monaſtery of battaile. The Princeſſe in token of ſorrow, did cut off her heire, and clothed her ſelfe in garments befitting her griefe, and hauing remained fifteene daies in the houſe of Vaſco Pallos ſhee went to the Kings pallace one euening without any light, where the King, Queene, and ſhee, kept themſelues ſhut vp a long time, giuing themſelues to much ouer to griefe, and forgetting the health of their owne perſons: and being in this eſtate they were viſited and comforted on the Kings of Caſtiles part. After this manner King Iohns Court remained deſolate, and it may bee, that God cauſed this loſſe to fall vpon him, for ouer haſtily deſtroying the great houſes of his owne Kingdome, eſpecially that of his Aunt D. Beatrice Dutcheſſe of Viſeo, whoſe ſonne D. Dominigo a Prince of his bloud, hee had ſlaine with his owne hand. The obſequies and funeralls being ended, where the King and the great Lords and Ladies of the Realme were preſent, Queene Elenor, and the Princeſſe Iſabell excepted, ſhee being ſorrowfull and a widdow was brought backe into Caſtile the ſame time King Fernand and Queene Iſabell were about Granado in the New towne of Saint Foy which they builded. King Iohn being in this anguiſh went backe to Lisbone, where this yeere 1492. the two Maiſterſhips of Saint Iames, and Auis, fell to his ſonne D. George: for whoſe gouernor hee appointed D. Diego Almeyda ſonne to the Earle of Abrantes.

Princeſſe Iſabels lamentation.

A B C

The end of the three and twentith Booke.

THE

THE FOVRE AND TVVENtith Booke of the Generall Hiſtory of Spaine.

The Contents.

1. CHriſtopher Columbus his firſt voyage to the Indies.
2. A rigorous Edict againſt the Iewes and Moores.
3. King Fernand is hurt at Barcelona: Polliticke affaires of Spayne.
4. Chriſtopher Columbus returnes backe: Good and euill which the world hath receiued by the diſcouerie of the Weſterne Indies: The Pope giues thoſe new lands to the Kings of of Caſtile: Columbus his ſecond voyage.
5. The Maſter-ſhip of S. Iames in the hands of King Fernand as perpetuall Adminiſtratour thereof: Charles the eight of that name, the French King, reſtores the Earledome of Roſſillon to King Fernand, with other polliticke affaires.
6. Order concerning the Spaniards and Portugals nauigations.
7. The Maſter-ſhip of Alcantara in the hands of King Fernand as perpetuall Adminiſtrator thereof: the Chancery of Granado, and of the country beyond Tejo.
8. Originall of the warres betwixt France and Spaine.
9. Don Pero Gonçal of Mendoza, Cardinall of Spaine dyes. Friar Francis Ximenes of Ciſneros is promoted to the Archbiſhoppricke of Toledo.
10. Peace betwixt Caſtile and Nauarre: Coronation of King Iohn of Albret, and Queene Catherine, which was the laſt in that Kingdome: purſuites againſt the Earle of Leuin.
11. VVarre of Naples, noble exploites of Gonçalo Fernandes of Cordoua, ſurnamed the great Captaine.
12. The Houſes of Auſtria and Spaine, allyed together by marriage.
13. VVarre in the Earledome of Roſſillon.
14. The third voyage of Chriſtopher Columbus to the Indies. Enterpriſes vpon the Affricane Moores.
15. Don Manuel firſt of that name, and 14. King of Portugal his qualities and vertues, &c. Edict againſt the Iewes.
16. Vaſco de Gama his nauigation to Calicut.
17. The Marriage of King Manuel with D. Iſabell of Caſtile, and the birth of D. Michel their ſonne, heire to Caſtile, Arragon, and Portugal, if he had liued.
18. Chriſtopher Columbus and his brother are brought backe as priſoners into Spaine: rebellion in the Indies: voyages of diuers particular perſons to the Indies, by the King of Caſtiles permiſſion.
19. Conuerſion of the Moores Mudejares commanded by Edict in Caſtile.

20. King

20. King Iohn of Albret his iourney into Caſtile: King Fernands couetouſneſſe to get the Kingdome of Nauarre. A
21. The warre of Italy, which in proceſſe of time ſubiected the State of Milan to Caſtile.
22. Death of Prince Don Michel, whereby D. Ioane, mother to Charles of Auſtria, was aduanced to the ſucceſſiue right of Caſtile and Arragon.
23. Perſecution of the Moores Mudejares in Granado and elſe-where: Mahometans wholy baniſhed out of Spaine.
24. Duke Lewis Sforza is taken by the French-men: The Kingdome of Naples is parted betwixt King Lewis the twelfth, and king Fernand, to the preiudice of king Fredericke.
25. Philip Arch-duke of Auſtria, and D. Ioane his wife, their iourney into Caſtile, where B they receiue the oath of the Caſtillians, as preſumptiue heires to the ſame Crowne.
26. Peter Martyr of Angleria ſent Ambaſſadour to Cayro by king Fernand.
27 Voyages of diuers particular perſons to the Weſterne Indies by king Fernand and Queene Iſabels permiſsion.
28. Voyages of the Portugals into the Eaſt, and other places of the Ocean ſea, to wit, of Pero Aluares Gabralde, Iohn de la Nueua, Americus Veſpucius, &c. Warres raiſed by the Portugals among the ſmall kings of the Eaſt.
29. Birth of the Infant D. Fernand, ſonne to the Arch-duke Philip, and to D. Ioane: their returne into Flanders. Treatie of peace betwixt France and Caſtile to no purpoſe.
30. Aduancement of Pope Iulius the ſecond. The Duke of Valentine perſecuted by him. Miſerable retreate of the French out of the kingdome of Naples. Death of Queene Iſabell. C

In

In this foure and twentith Booke followeth in the Line of Portugall, 14. Don Manuel the first.

THE warre of Granado beeing happily ended, it was followed with other great enterprises, partly profitable, and partly preiudiciall: whereof, that of the discouerie of the new world might haue beene worthie of great prayse, if those vnto whome the great and good God did the fauour to discouer those countries and nations, vntill then vnknown to our Hemisphere, and their posteritie, could haue rightly vsed, to his honour and glorie, the wealth and riches which they found there, as they were bound to haue done: but there is no memorie of cruelty, auarice, and dishonestie, to bee compared to the actions of the Spanish Christians in the conquest of the occidentall Indies: which their owne Histories beare witnesse of, with terrour to those which reade it, and is a publike scandall to the vnbeleeuing Nations which haue heard tell of their dealings, for the Christian Religion: the which they thinke by reason thereof, to be a bloudie Religion, which seekes nothing but gold and wealth with an insatiate desire of rule. But wee may easily beleeue, that the excesse committed by the euill ministers in these searches of the Westerne Indies, was not by their Kings consent, whose zeale herein is rather prayse-worthie, but their negligence in redressing and punishing such mischieses can hardly be excused. Of which voyages and discoueries we intend not to pourssue the Historie at large, as wee did protest in the beginning of this Worke, but wee will content our selues with the declarations of the decrees and ordonances made in the Courts and Councels of the Kings of Spaine, for the regard of things executed and done in their names and authoritie in those farther Regions, and to handle, by the way, that which hath followed thereuppon in generall: for such matters require particular and distinct Treatises.

The Spaniards auarice and cruelty toward the Indians, makes Christian religion odious to the vnbeleeuing nations.

Wee haue heretofore declared, how that Christopher Columbus hauing beene diuers times heard to discourse of the nauigation which hee had conceiued in his mind to bee made towards the West, with knowledge of new lands, whereof there was no memory in precedent times, had hope and promises of Fernand and Queene Izabella, to giue him meanes to effect it at a time conuenient; the which beeing offered vppon the time that Granado was taken, hee obtained three Caruels rigged and furnished with sixe-score men, souldiers and marriners: for the setting foorth of whome, the Councellor Lewis of Saint Angell did lend the King sixteene thousand Duckets. Hee departed then from Palos de Moguer in Andalusia, vppon a Friday the fourth of August, in the yeare 1492. and hauing sayled two moneths and eight dayes, hee discouered the land which hee so much desired, that is to say, vppon the eleuenth day of October of the same yeare.

Christopher Columbus his first voyage to the Indies.

An. 1492.

The first man which cryed, Land, was one called Rodrigo de Triane, who descried the Iland of Guanahami of Lucaios betwixt Florida and Cuba, where they first landed, and tooke tooke poſſeſſion of that new world, in the name of King Fernand and Queene Iſabella: A then they ſayled to Barucoa, the port of the Iſle of Cuba, where they tooke certaine Indians, and afterward they turned towards the Iſle of Hati, ſince then called Hiſpagniola, and entred into the port by them named Royall.

The Indians gentle and tractable.

There the Indians, at the beginning ſterne and rough, at the view of ſuch new people, did in ſuch manner become tractable, courteous, and gentle, as they came and brought gold, with ſuch victuals as they had to the Spaniards, exchanging them for bables and toyes of ſmall woorth. One of their Kings whom they call Cachiques, whoſe name was Guacanagari, did ſhew himſelfe ſo kind, tractable and obedient to theſe newcommers, as they louingly receyued from him what commodities they would, ſo as it B was lawfull for them, beeing ayded by the Indians and their Cachique, to build a fort in that countrey, wherein Columbus left eight and thirtie Spaniards with a Captain of Cordoua named Roderigo d'Arana, and with his two Caruels which were left, (for he had loſt the third) he returned to Spaine from whence he came, carrying ſome Indians with him, with gold of the Country, and other ſingularities, which he brought to the aforenamed place of Palos de Moguer within the ſpace of fiftie dayes: before Columbus departure, King Fernand and Queene Izabella did graunt him the twelfth part of all the royall rights of the lands which he ſhould diſcouer, with this reſeruation, that he ſhould not in his diſcouerie, do any thing that might preiudice the King of Portugals nauigation.

2
Edict againſt the Iewes.

There was a matter reſolued vppon in the Kings Councell of Caſtile, as ſoone as they C found themſelues to be Maſters of Granado, faire in ſhew, but of a pernitious conſequence: For they made an Edict, wherby all Iewes, which inhabited in Caſtile and Leon, were enioyned to turne to the Chriſtian Religion, and to be baptized within three moneths, on paine of hauing their goods confiſcate, and perpetuall baniſhment. This decree was receiued, publiſhed, and executed by an inconſiderate zeale, and without the knowledge of the King and Queene, thinking thereby, as it is likely to augment Chriſtian Religion, and to confirme vnto themſelues the name and title of Catholike Kings: wherunto they were incited by the Prelates and ſlothfull Paſtors, who contemned their charge of teaching good and wholeſome doctrine; and likewiſe by the Monkes and other ſeditious Church-men, who deſired rather to deſtroy, then to feed thoſe miſerable creatures, vnto whom they were in perpetuall deteſtation and skandall, by meanes of their wicked and corrupted liues, whereby it came to paſſe, that the name of God was prophaned and blaſphemed among the Iewes and Mahometans of thoſe times, who would rather haue retired a thouſand leagues, then to draw neere to receiue any religious inſtruction, from ſo irreligious people, whoſe pietie was but childiſh ceremonies, and external ſeruices, their knowledge meere cunning and deceipt, to maintaine and increaſe their riches, eaſe, and vnruly appetites, and their ayme and end, honours and worldly glorie, with a popular opinion of wiſedome in the affaires of this world: the which was playne and euident to people of vnderſtanding among the Infidels: therefore it behooued ſuch euill-affected perſons, and no way diſpoſed to amend, as were the Prelates of thoſe daies E to ſet forward ſuch councels, and to cauſe the Kings of Spaine to practiſe courſes fit and pleaſing to the Diuell, who is a murtherer from the beginning of the world, and author of all ruine and deſolation: the which hath beene ſince practiſed in all places of Chriſtendome with very bad ſucceſſe: for torments, death, confiſcations of goods, and ſuch other like violences, cannot beget a grayne of fayth in the heart of man, whoſe ſeed is the word of God; the watering, the holy workes of vnfained charitie, by the example of the heauenly Father, and the encreaſe thereof, the ſpirit of the Lord: but they may well bring foorth Atheiſme, Hypocriſie, and deſpaire in aboundance, which are the offerings which the enemy of Chriſt Ieſus doth demaund.

Negligent Paſtors ſtirre vp perſecutions.

The diſtreſſe of thoſe who perſecuted the Iewes.

Now the poore Iewes, at the publication of this Edict, were marueilouſly perplexed, F and afflicted with ſundry paſſions, for their religion, liues, and goods which were very great: whereunto perhaps, the Kings Councell had regard, thinking by their obſtinacie, which is a vice proper and peculiar to that nation, to find meanes to fill the treaſurie emptied in the laſt warres, by the confiſcation of ſo great wealth as they poſſeſſed in Spain, and to redeeme the alienated reuenues of the Crowne, and the Queenes ingaged Iewels.

Now

A Now the moſt religious Spaniſh Iewes, tooke counſell in theſe three moneths ſpace of delay before they were to leaue the countrey, and found meanes, to ſend away their money and chiefe goods out of Spaine, wherein they were ayded and befriended by many honeſt-minded Chriſtians, who beeing mooued with pittie and humanitie, did helpe to hide them, and to conuey them into Portugall, Affricke, Italy, and elſe-where whether that nation went: great numbers of them did ſpred themſelues ouer Macedon, Greece, and other Regions poſſeſſed by the Turkes, whom they taught to make Ordinance and Artillerie, and the art of making Gun-powder, Harguebuzes, and ſuch other engins, which they haue ſufficiently vſed to the hurt of Chriſtendome.

Humanity of Chriſtians towards the baniſhed Iewes.

B The reſt of them who loued their eaſe, did value the countrie where they were borne, and their goods, aboue all other matters, and were baptized, and made profeſſion, either true or fained, of Chriſtian Religion, ſuch as they could learn and comprehend in ſo ſhort a time, the which did cauſe another inconuenience: for in proceſſe of time the noble families of Spaine, allying themſelues by marriage to that race, did wholy contaminate and pollute themſelues both in bloud and beleefe. Theſe are the effects which this violent law of King Fernand and Queene Izabella did produce, by the which the Spaniards end in the 2082. yeare of the Iewes habitation in Spayne, if ſo be they faile not in their account. The ſame rigour was obſerued againſt them in Arragon, Valencia, Cattalonia, Sicill, and other places vnder the Kings obedience, who from Cordoua went into Arragon to order the affaires of that kingdome.

The Turks and Infidels make profit of the Iewes baniſhment

The Nobilitie of Spayne contaminated by the alliances with the conuerted Iewes.

C Beeing in the Cittie of Barcelona, God ſent them a ſmall aduertiſement: for as King Fernand on a morning came foorth of the towne-houſe, where himſelfe in perſon had aſſiſted at the pleas of iuſtice, and beeing come downe to the foot of the ſtayres towards the kings houſe talking to his Treaſurer, a certaine mad man borne at Remença, whoſe name was Iohn de Cagnamares, drew neere vnto him, and lifting vp a ſhort ſword, hee gaue him ſuch a blow from the eare downe to the ſhoulders, as it was a wonder that hee ſtrake not off his head: Whereat the King beeing aſtoniſhed, and thinking it to be ſome conſpiracie, he cryed out, Saint Marie helpe me, oh what treaſon, oh what treaſon; thinking that ſome others would make an end of what that fooliſh fellow had begunne: but D when hee perceiued that no man ſtirred, but that euery one ſtepped before him, to the end the other might not redouble his blow, and that a Gentleman that was his Caruer, and one more had ſtept to the offendour, meaning to haue ſtabbed him to death with poynards: hee commanded not to kill him; therefore they ledde him to priſon; and dreſſed his wounds: beeing afterward examined who had procured him to commit that treaſon, they could neither then, nor after that hee was healed, by any torments whatſoeuer, get any thing out of him, but that the diuell had aſſured him, if he would kill the king, to be king himſelfe.

3 King Fernand hurt at Barcelona.

The cittie of Barcelona beeing highly diſpleaſed, that this act had beene committed in their iuriſdiction, and beleeuing verily that there had beene ſome conſpiracie, did put themſelues in armes, and the tumult could not be appeaſed, vntill the king, whoſe wound E was newly dreſt, and ſtitched vp with ſeuen ſtitches of a needle, did come and ſhew himſelfe out of his lodging windowes to the people, to aſſure them that hee was aliue: and then euery man went home to his own houſe. The foole who had comitted the deed, was by law condemned to haue his hands and feete cutte off, his eyes pulled foorth of his head, to bee diſmembred, with burning pincers, and to bee drawn on a cart to the common dung hill, where his bodie was burned, hauing bene firſt ſtrangled, by the Queens clemencie.

In theſe buſineſſes the yeare 1492. was ſpent, in which the Brotherhood of the Court beganne, and the building the ſtately Colledge of the holy Croſſe at Vailliodolit was en- F ded, and the ſame yeare dyed Don Pero Fernandes, Generall of the frontier of Andaluſia, Don Henrique de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, Don Rodrigo Ponce of Leon, Marquis of Cales, by whoſe deceaſe without children, the cittie of Cales returned to the Crowne: Don Pedro of Eſtuniga, Earle of Miranda of Duero, and Don Bertrand de la Cueua, firſt Duke of Albuquerque.

Cales reunited to the Crowne of Caſtile.

Pope Innocent the eight dyed likewiſe at Rome, in whoſe ſtead was choſen Rodrigo Borgia, Borgia, Cardinall of Saint Nicholas in Carcere Tulliano, Biſhop of Alba, Porto, and S. A Ruffine, Vice-chancellor and Deane of the Church of Rome, ſonne to Don Ieffrey Lançol, Lord of Canales, and to a ſiſter of Pope Calixtus the third, who was of the family of Borgia, from whence this man did take his name, and he was called Alexander the ſixt, who ſoone after his aſſumption to the Papacie, made two Cardinals of his Bloud, the one his Nephew, named Iohn Borgia, and the other his owne ſonne called Caſar Borgia, of whome we ſhall haue occaſion to ſpeake in this Hiſtorie.

The ſame yeare the ſonne of Don Pero Gonçales of Mendoza, Cardinall of Spaine, whoſe name was Rodrigo, was by King Fernand and Queene Izabella, honoured with the title of Marquis of Zenete, and they made an end of building the vaults of the Cathe- B drall Church of Toledo, which were begunne in the dayes of King Fernand the third, and of the Arch-biſhop Don Rodrigo Ximenes: the Court remayning ſtil at Barcelona about
An. 1493. the beginning of the yeare 1493. Chriſtopher Columbus arriued there, being returned from Chriſtopher Columbus Admirall of the Indies. the Weſt Indies, whoſe fame, for the diſcouerie of thoſe new lands, was ſpread abroade ouer all Spayn: he preſented the Kings with gold, beaſts, and other things brought from thoſe Regions, making an ample relation of his voyage, the which did greatly content them, who gaue him the title of Admirall of the Indies, with armes, wherein he vſed this Motto: For Caſtile and Leon, Columbus hath gotten a new world. If the finding out of the wealth brought from the Indies hath brought any commoditie to the couetous negociators of our Regions, the euils which did accompanie them, did farre ſurmount and C exceed them:

The great Pockes, the diſeaſe of the Indies brought into Europe. For then firſt of all, was the abhominable Venerean diſeaſe known, which in France is called the great pockes, brought by the Spaniards, which went with Columbus, who hauing had to do with the Indian women, which were infected there-with, as with a diſeaſe proper and peculiar to the Country, did communicate it to the women of Seuill, and of the Court, who diſtributed it to others: running on with ſuch contagion and horrible accidents of knobbes and rotting ſoares, as in the beginning, when our Phiſitions knew not the remedie for ſuch a diſeaſe, diuers did miſerably periſh, or remayned lame of their members, with a villanous and ſtrange change of their forme and fauour, the reward of whoredom, ouer common then in Spaine and elſe-where, which neuertheleſſe could not D chaſtiſe the world in ſuch ſort, but that this ſinne is at this day more in vſe then euer it was, to the diſhonour of God, contempt of his lawes, and confuſion of all good order. The Spaniards in recompence of this euill brought brought from the Indies, carried thither the Kings euill and madneſſe by the biting of dogges, which they brought thither with them, of which diſeaſes the Indians had no knowledge at all.

The right remedie of this contagious infirmitie, are Guaiacū, Chinaū, and Salſaparilla, which nature bringeth foorth in aboundance in that new world, where they haue daily
The Indies haue diuerted the Spaniards from husbandrie and arts. need thereof. Another euill hath the deſire of gold, pearles, and other high prized things found in thoſe Ilands, brought with it, namely, that the Spaniards haue giuen ouer all honeſt and profitable exerciſes, the ground remayning vntilled in diuers places of E
Spaine, and other arts contemned, the people of Spayne making none account of any other matter, but onely of the voyage to the Indies: ſo that euer ſince, it hath had continuall need of the commodities of the neighbour regions.

King Fernand and Queene Iſabella did foorth-with ſend the deſired newes of this diſcouerie to Pope Alexander, betwixt whome diuers diſcourſes did paſſe by their Ambaſſadours, and letters to reduce the brutiſh and idolatrous people of that countrey, to the knowledge of the true God, and the benefite of Ieſus Chriſt, which would haue beene a memorable worke. This Pope, in the Conhſtorie of the Cardinals did approoue this
The Pope giues the weſt Indies to the Kings of Caſtile enterprize and conqueſt for the Kings of Caſtile, granting and giuing to them and their ſucceſſours by Apoſtolicall authoritie, the Indies, Iſlands and firme land of the Weſt, F and did charge and enioyne them to cauſe the Goſpell to be preached: the which mooued the kings to furniſh foorth the number of eighteene ſhippes, vſing therein the diligence of Iohn Rodrigo of Fonſeca, Deane of Siuill, who was afterward Biſhop of Burgos, and ſuperintendent of the Indian affaires: of which veſſels, manned with fifteene hundred men, they gaue the charge to the Admirall Columbus, and to a brother of his named

A named Bartholomew, the dignitie of Gouernour of thoſe new Countries, who departing from Cales, did againe cut thorough the Ocean ſea, and landed at the Iland called by them the Deſired, from whence without ſtaying they paſſed to the port of la Plata in the Iſland Hiſpagniola, and came to the royall port, where they found their fort to be ouerthrowne, and the eight and thirtie Spaniards with their Captaine, whom they had there left, to be ſlaine by the Indians, who were enforced to fall vppon them for the ſpoiles and robberies which they had committed.

There came in this ſecond voyage with the Admirall Columbus, Friar Buyll, a Monke of the Order of Saint Bennet, a Cattelan by nation, with authoritie of the Popes Vicar, B and twelue learned Clearkes of good and holy life, according to thoſe times, diuers artificers, beaſts, as well horſe as neate, with others, ſtore of victuals, ſtuffes, and neceſſary and profitable matters for the life of man: with theſe prouiſions the better to be furniſhed for future times, the Admirall Columbus cauſed a new towne to be meaſured out, which he named Iſabella, after the Queenes name, the which hee peopled, and purſuing his ſearch, hee diſcouered Cuba and Iamaica, and other ſmaller Ilands: wherin being buſied, the Spaniards, left with the Friar, beganne to enter into mutinie, and to commit many diſorders, the Gouernours authoritie, nor the Friars exhortations and interdictions not beeing able to containe them within their bounds, whom the Admirall punniſhing according to their deſerts, at his returne it procured him enemies and hatred, who did vn- C worthily vexe and purſue him, as ſhalbe hereafter declared.

Friar Buyl the Popes Vicar in the Indies.

Don Alphonſo de Cardenas, Maſter of Saint Iames, beeing dead this yeare, King Fernand retayned the Maſterſhippe, not ſuffering any new election to be made, as hee had done the like to that of Calatraua with the ſelfe ſame conſiderations and reaſons, who by the Popes authoritie, remayned Adminiſtrator of them. Don Alphonſo was then the Maſter of the ſame Order, and the three and fortieth in order and continuance: the ſame was done to the Order of Alcantara: the which three dignities were ſince that incorporated to the Crowne by Pope Adrian the ſixth, in the time of the Emperour Charles the fifth, who was heire to the Kingdomes of Caſtile.

5
The Maſterſhip of S. Iames in the kings hands in quality of adminiſtrator.

The ſame yeare the Kings of Caſtile were altogether rid of King Mahomet Boabdellin D the Little, who beeing impatient of the daily ſollicitations which were made to him, for to become a Chriſtian, and to receiue the water of Baptiſme, did ſell all the lands and rights which had beene giuen him by the capitulations, at ſuch time as hee deliuered vp the Cittie of Granado, for foure-ſcore thouſand Duckets, and with his family retired himſelfe into Affricke. There were new teares and lamentations renewed, when his owne mother vpbrayding him, ſayd, That it well became him to put finger in the eye and weepe like a woman, for the loſſe of his dignitie and pallaces, ſeeing that hee could not defend them like a man. He was kindly welcommed and receyued by the King of Fez, but within a few yeares afterwards he was ſlaine in his fierce and inteſtine warres againſt the Xerifs.

E The Spaniſh Authours ſet downe for a memorable matter, that the Kingdome of Granado beganne and ended, two kings of Caſtile of one ſelfe ſame name raigning, namely Ferdinand, and the firſt and laſt King of Granado were called Mahomet. At the ſame time the Earledome of Roſſillon was reſtored to King Fernand by the French king, Charles the eighth, who hauing vndertaken at the entreatie and requeſt of Lewis Sforza, named the Moore who did vſurpe the Dutchie of Milan, the Conqueſt of the Kingdome of Naples, did feare leaſt the King of Caſtile ſhould in his abſence enterpriſe vpon France, in regard of the ſtrife and contention about the ſayd Earledome: Wherefore to free and acquit himſelfe from that feare and ſuſpition, hee yeelded it vnto him, and renewed the peace and allyances betwixt the Kingdomes of France, Caſtile and Arra- F gon, but it was euill and vnfaithfully kept: Wherein the Kings chiefe Councellours did greatly ſtand him in ſtead, namely, Steephen Petis de vers, and Friar Alphonſo of Albi, and namely, the holy man Friar Francis de Paule; who died at Pleſſis les Tours, certaine of whoſe letters are yet extant, which he wrote thereuppon, and to the ſame effect to King Fernand.

The Earledome of Roſſillon reſtored to King Fernand.

It was concluded in this agreement, that King Ferdinand of Caſtile ſhould not giue ayde nor aſſiſtance to the King of Naples: whereby it appeareth that this Catholicke King knew well how to vſe the vncharitable rule, which ſayes, that Charity begins by it ſelfe. For he to recouer the Earledome of Roſſillon, without reſtitution of the money which King Iohn his Father had borrowed of King Lewis the eleuenth, did not greatly care to leaue the honour, ſtate, and life, of his cooſin germaine, and brother in law Ferdinand King of Naples for a prey to the French, or at the leaſt hee promiſed it, and ſwore ſo to the French King, notwithſtanding that hee afterward changed his minde. King Ferdinand and Queene Iſabell hauing remained for a while in Cattalonia, and afterward at Saragoſſa, they came to Valiodelit, where Don Roderigo d'Vlloa beeing deceaſed, who was one of the ſuperintendents of the treaſure which they call Cantador major, they ſuppreſſed that ſuperintendencie, retaining no more but the two that remained, namely, Don Guttiere de Cardenas great Commander of Leon, and Don Iohn Chacon gouernor of the frontier of Murcia. Beeing departed from Valiodolit to Medina del Campo, they receiued newes of the death of King Ferdinand of Naples, whom his ſonne Don Alphonſo Duke of Calabria ſucceeded. The King at the ſame time had called in the towne of Tordeſillas, a Chapter of the order of Saint Iames, and reformed certaine abuſes, and there the differences were compounded, betwixt Caſtile and Portugall about the Indian nauigation.

King Ferdinand vncharitable.

6 Portugal. 1493.

Wee haue declared how that Pope Alexander had granted by his Bull, dated at Saint Peters, this preſent yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, ninety and three, and the firſt of his Popedome, the weſt Indies to the Kings of Caſtile. Now for to limit the Streights, betwixt Caſtile and Portugall, he did draw a line or a meridionall in the Globe from the Poles of the North to the South, leauing a hundred leagues diſtance to the Portuguze towards the Weſt, from one of the Iſles to Cape vert, to make their nauigation of Affrick, and the Eaſt Indies: wherewith the King of Portugall was highly diſpleaſed, and complained in ſuch ſort to the Pope, that the Kings of Caſtile entreated that the nauigation might bee left free to him towards the weſt, of foure hundred leagues, and the Iſles and lands within the ſame reputed for his conqueſt, wherewith the King of Caſtile was not onely contented, but added to it threeſcore and ten leagues more, ſo as the Portugalls nauigation in all, did ſtretch from the Iſles of Cape vert, towards the weſt, foure hundred and ſeauenty leagues, paſſing the meridionall by that point round about the globe: but time made it manifeſt, that the King of Portugall thereby did ſmally better his condition: for the riche Iſlands of the Moluccos, from whence the ſpices come, are fonnd to bee within the ſtreight of Caſtile: this Tranſaction was paſſed the ſeauenth day of Iune in the yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, ninety and foure.

The Pope limits the Spaniards and Portugals nauigation.

The Portugals nauigation limited towards the VVeſt.

The Moluccos found to bee within the nauigation of the Caſtillans.

Now King Iohn thinking that the Moluccos were his part, hee ſent certaine Caruels this yeare to ſeeke a paſſage by the Affrican ſea towards the Eaſt, but they went not farre beyond the Cape of Good hope: wherefore the King beeing very deſirous, that in his dayes this vnknowne nauigation might bee practiſed, could not haue that good hap, for hee did not liue this yeare. In his time neuertheleſſe the kingdome of Manicongo in Guiney was diſcouered, the King whereof with the moſt part of his nobility were Baptized. King Iohn beeing oppreſſed with continuall melancholy for the death of his ſonne Prince Alphonſo, hee fell into a dropſie, which by little and little brought him to his end, not without ſuſpition that his diſeaſe was procured or augmented by poyſon: hee neuertheleſſe made his abode in the Citty of Lisbone, and attended the affaires of his kingdome: but his minde was, aboue all other matters, ſet on this nauigation, the which hee did ſet downe according to the opinions which hee had receiued from diuerſe places, which did confirme and verifie the diſcourſe which Pedro de Cobanilla had ſent him, who remained in Preſter Iohns Countrey Emperour of Æthiopia, from whence there arriued at Lisbone, a little before the Kings death, a learned and diſcreete Monke, who informed the king more particularly of diuers matters, which ſerued afterwards to great purpoſe.

The King of Monicongo receiues the Chriſtian religion.

Now king Iohn feeling himſelfe neere his end, made his Will, and hauing no lawfull children, hee knew that the kingdome was to fall to Don Manuell Duke of Beja: hee

A Hee was therefore deſirous to giue Don George his baſe ſonne a portion, vnto whome hee gaue the Cittie of Coimbra, with the title of Duke, and Montmajor the old, and the lands of the Infantaſgo, in the ſame forme, as his Grandfather the Infant Don Pedro, father to Queen Izabella, his mother, had poſſeſſed them: hee gaue him moreouer, the Iſle of Madera, Beja, and Viſeo, which was not performed afterward.

This will and Teſtament was ſigned by Don Manuel, and D. George, and by fiue other perſonages of great place, who made vp the number of ſeuen witneſſes. After this hee went into Algarbe to the Bathes of Monchiz, in the moneth of October the ſeaſon beeing cold, and vnfit for his diſeaſe: and hunting the wild Bore vppon a wet rainie day, hee
B got a fluxe: Wherefore as ſoone as he came to Albor, aſſured tokens of death beganne to appeare vpon him, wherof he was admoniſhed by D. Diego Ortiz Biſhop of Tanger, and Don Diego Almeyda, Prior of Saint Iohns, who was Gouernour to Don George: then diſpoſing himſelfe to dye, hee appoynted certaine things, out of a litle Booke, to be read, and accompliſhed at ſuch time as he was readie to giue vp the ghoſt. Firſt, hee craued pardon of the Dutcheſſe Donna Beatrix his mother-in-law, of Queene Leonora his wife, and of the Cardinal Don George of Acoſta, who then was at Rome, he likewiſe craued pardon of the whole Eſtates of his Kingdome in generall. And to the end that his ſonne Don George ſhould not grieue and trouble his mind, hee cauſed him to bee ledde foorth of his chamber, and there ſtood round about his bed, Don George of Almeyda, Biſhop of Coimbra, and his brother Don Diego of Almeyda, Prior of Saint Iohns, Don C Iohn de Silua Biſhop of Silues, Don Diego Ortiz Biſhop of Tanger, and Don Iohn de Vaſconcellos, Earle of Penela, with certaine Chaplens, who exhorted him for his ſoules health. In this manner this King died, hauing held the ſcepter of Portugall foureteene yeares and two moneths in the yeare 1495. and in the ſixe and fortieth of his age: his bodie, by his owne appointment, was layd in the Cathedrall church of Silues, and was afterwards tranſported by the commaundement of the King his ſucceſſor to the Monaſterie of Battaile, beeing the laſt king that was buried there, and it is reported that yet to this day his bodie lyes whole and vnconſumed. He was an excellent King, and eſteemed to be ſo by the other Princes of Chriſtendome.

Death of king Iohn of Portugal. 1495.

D Returning to the affaires of Caſtile, King Ferdinand and Queene Izabella departing from Tordeſillas, went to Areualo to viſite the old Queene Izabella, mother to Queene Izabella then raigning, from whence they came to Segouia, and afterward to Madrid, where by the aduice of their Councell it was decreed, that the king ſhould take the Maſter-ſhip of Alcantara into his owne hands, as well as thoſe of Saint Iames and Calatraua, for to be perpetuall Adminiſtrator thereof, and to the end that there might bee no more maſters in Caſtile, then the King and Queene: the which was approued by authoritie Apoſtolicall: Don Iohn of Eſtuniga beeing bereft of his Maſterſhip, was otherwaies recompenced. This yeare alſo, the new Chancerie and royall audience at Cité reall was erected for pleas and cauſes depending beyond Tayo, this riuer ſeparating the bounds of E the two Chanceries: namely, of this, and of that at Vailiodolit, from this Spring in the mountaine of Cuenca, where it enters into the lands of Portugall, Don Alphonſo Carillo Biſhop of Catania, and afterwards of Auila, was the firſt Preſident thereof. Now the King and Queene had ſent ſome few dayes before Antonio Fonſeca Ambaſſadour to the French king Charles the eight, to the end to diuert him from the warre of Naples, enterprized againſt King Alphonſo their Nephew, and to declare plainely to him (now that they had gotten the Earledome of Roſſillon) their meaning. And king Charles beeing alreadie come into Italy with a mightie armie, the Ambaſſadour mette him at Vilitri neere to Rome, where he deliuered his Ambaſſage, and did proteſt, notwithſtanding the agreement and promiſes made at the reſtitution of the Earledome of Roſſillon, that if F he did perſiſt to purſue by armes his pretended right to the kingdome of Naples, king Fernand his maſter could do no leſſe then ſhew himſelfe his enemie, and take vpon him his Nephewes defence, and therefore he entreated him to thinke of it, and to referre all their differences to the Popes iudgement, who could very well iudge whither the kingdome of Naples did belong to the French or to the Arragonois.

7 Caſtile.

The Ambaſſador wold haue ſayd more, but he was interrupted in his ſpeech, by certain

8 hotte and fierie French Lords, who made him hold his peace, and told him that he ſpake A Peace betwixt France and Caſtile broken. too arrogantly and impertinently: therefore the Ambaſſador following his inſtruction, tooke the Articles of the laſt agreement betwixt King Charles and King Ferdinand (which he brought with him) and tare them in peeces in the preſence of the King, Lords, and Knights of his Armie: and hee warned at the ſame inſtant, Charles de Areillan, and Iohn Petit Ceruillon, Spaniſh Captaines, who ſerued in King Charles his Armie: that as ſubiects to King Ferdinand they ſhould depart thence within three dayes, and giue ouer the French Kings ſeruice, on paine of being held rebels to their Prince: From the ſame time was the friendſhip betwixt thoſe two Kings broken, and warre in a manner denounced. King Charles purſued his deſtenie, and without any difficulty made himſelfe maiſter of B the Realme of Naples, King Alphonſo before hee had fully raigned a yeare, hauing giuen ouer the kingdome to his ſonne Ferdinand, went into Sicill, and there ledde a monaſtick life: but not long after, the Kings of Caſtile beeing at Tortoſa in Cattalonia, did openly and by effect declare themſelues enemies to the French, as well for feare leaſt they being already Maiſters of Naples, ſhould ſeaze vpon Sicill, where they pretended like right, as alſo at the entreaty of Pope Alexander and other Potentates of Italy, being in the ſame feare of their owne eſtates, and would not permit the power of the French to grow ſo great in Italy: therefore they ſet forth a Nauie of Galleys and other ſhips, with fiue thouſand Spaniſh footmen, and ſixe hundred horſe, vnder the conduct of Gonçalo Hernandes of Cordoua: the which forces departing from Carthagena, arriued C ſafely in the Porte of Meſſina, this yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, ninety and fiue, making a ſhew as if they would haue ſuccoured the new King Ferdinand driuen from Naples. Theſe troopes of Spaniards among other memorable matters, brought the
The Great Pocks in Italy. great Pockes into Italy, wherewith they of the countrey were ſoone poſſeſſed, and did communicate it to the French men, which were ſcattered heere and there in the kingdome of Naples, and they afterward brought it on this ſide the Mounts, and did diſtribute it to their neighbour nations, ſo as this diſeaſe beeing indeed of India, was called the Spaniſh, Neapolitan, and French diſeaſe, according to the next ſubiect where it was diſcouered, and from whence the contagion was perceiued to come.

9 About the ſame time in the Citty of Guadalajara, dyed Don Pero Gonçales de Men- D
Death of the Cardinall Don Pero Gonſall de Mendoſa. doza Cardinall, and Primat of Spaine and Gotike France, Archbiſhop of Toledo, Patriarke of Alexandria, and Biſhop of Siguença (ſuch were his titles) who beeing viſited in his ſickneſſe by the Kings, and being demanded whom hee thought worthy to ſucceed him in the Archbiſhoprick of Toledo, hee named Frier Francis Ximenes of Ciſneros the Queenes Confeſſor, Prouinciall of the order of Saint Francis in the Prouince of Toledo. This Cardinall had a ſingular affection to holy Croſſe, who beſides that it was his hap to haue the holy Croſſe in Ieruſalem for the title of his Cardinalſhip, hee builded a Colledge at Valiodolit, and an hoſpitall at Toledo neere the place of Codebecer, cal-Pilats original title ſet on the croſſe of our Sauiour, kept for a relicq in Rome. led Holy Croſſe: hee re-edified the Church of Santa Cruz at Rome, where they ſay the originall title written by Pilate on our Sauiours Croſſe in Greeke, Hebrew, and Latin, E was found in an vnfitte place, the which remaines as a famous relique in that Church. Beſides, it is reported, that beeing neere his end, a great white Croſſe of more then forty Cubits length appeared ouer the houſe where he lay ſick, which beeing reported to him, he did reioyce, and hauing cauſed a Maſſe of the Holy Croſſe to be ſaid, hee gaue vp the ghoſt: theſe things are written for wonders by the Spaniards: his body lies buried in the chiefe chappell of the Church of Toledo, in a ſumptuous Marble monument. As concerning Frier Francis Ximenes of Ciſneros his ſucceſſor in the Archbiſhoprick of Toledo, hee was ſonne to a ſolicitor of cauſes in the towne of Tordelaguna, called Alphonſo Ximenes: his firſt riſing was to the Arch-prieſthood of Vzeda, and hee was great Chaplaine of Siguença, and the lxxi. in the order of the Archbiſhops, and hee was afterward I created Cardinall by Pope Alexander the ſixt, of the title of Saint Balbine: but D. Bernardin de Caruajall Biſhop of Carthagena, was preferred before him to the dignity of a Cardinall by the title of Santa Cruz in Ieruſalem, and was likewiſe admitted to the Biſhoprick of Siguença vacant by the Cardinals death, and at the laſt obtained that of Playſance. Frier Diego de Deça, of the order of Friers Preachers, Schoole-maiſter to

Prince

A Prince Iohn of Caſtile, was likewiſe made Biſhop of Salamanca.

The affaires betwixt Caſtile and Nauarre, ſince the time that Alain of Albret came to Valencia to King Fernand, were peaceable: but the kingdome of Nauarre was ſtill vexed by the factions: thoſe of Beaumont, had euer for their chief the Conſtable Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin: thoſe of Grammont ioyned themſelues with the Lord of Abenas, Viceroy and Gouernour of the Countrey, waiting with great deſire for the comming of King Iohn and Queene Catherine, vnto whom they proteſted all obedience. Now the great affaires which theſe Princes had on this ſide the mountaines, detayned them a long time there: for beſides that they were in no ſort fauoured by Charles the eight, the pourſuites of their vnkle Iohn Vicount of Narbonne had continually diſquieted them, vntill the yeare 1493. that they fell to agreement with him: and to ſecure the countries of Foix and Bearne in their abſence, from his ſurprizes and vſurpations, they had made ouer to him the townes of Sauardun, Maſeres, Monthault, and Gibel. 10 The laſt Coro. nation at Nauarre.

This Vicount was a widower, by the death of Donna Marie of Orleance, ſiſter to Lewis the French King, who left him two children, namely, Gaſton, who was duke of Nemours, and Germaine, which was afterward wife to King Fernand of Arragon after Queene Iſabella's death. Hauing then contented the Vicount, and king Charles buſied in his iourney to Naples, Iohn Lord of Albret, and Queene Catherine his wife, went into Nauarre, leading with them great troupes of ſouldiers, for feare leſt the Conſtable ſhould rebell, who held the cittie of Pampelona in ſuch ſort at his commaund, as he diſpoſed of all matters there, as if he had beene King: and when the Princes came to the gates thereof, their entrance was denyed, and they were conſtrayned to lodge at Egues, where they remayned certaine dayes, vntill the Conſtable and his Faction were pleaſed to giue them entrance. In that Cittie were the Eſtates aſſembled, and the King and Queene were crowned with the vſuall ceremonies, in the preſence of diuers Prelats, Knights, and the Ambaſſadors of diuers Princes. It was the laſt Coronation which was made in Nauarre in our time: for this kingdome beeing ſoone after in the Kings of Caſtiles poſſeſſion, they would no longer continue ſuch ceremonies, beeing content to receiue the oath of the Eſtates after the manner of Spaine. The titles of King Iohn and Queene Catherine of Nauarre, were Kings of Nauarre, Dukes of Nemours, Gandia, Momblanc and Pegnafiell, Earles of Foix, and Lords of Bearne, Earles of Bigorre, Ribagorça, Pontieure and Perigort, Vicounts of Limoges, Peeres of France, and Lords of the cittie of Balaguer.

The yeare 1494. Cæſar Borgia, who was after Duke Valentinois, Cardinall and ſonne to Pope Alexander the ſixt, did by his procurators take poſſeſſion of the perpetuall adminiſtration of the Church of Pampelona, by the deceaſe of Don Alphonſo Carillo the Biſhop, and by the grant of the Pope his father: and the yeare following 1495. Princeſſe Magdalen of France dyed, who was mother to Queene Catherine, in the ſame cittie of Pampelona, who accompanied her daughter to her coronation, and had euer vertuouſly employed her ſelfe about the conſeruation of her childrens eſtates for the ſpace of fiue and twentie yeares, all which time ſhe had liued in holy widow-hood: her bodie lies buried in the great Chappell of the Cathedrall church of the ſame cittie. About that time Queene Katherine viſited the King and Queene of Caſtile at Alfaro, by whome ſhe was greatly honoured and welcommed, as befitted ſo great a Princeſſe: and we reade of none other occaſion of her comming thither, but onely for to ſee them. Cæſar Borgia Cardinal Biſhop of Pampelona.

Now after that the King and Queene had made themſelues maſters of the Cittie of Pampelona, the chiefe of the Kingdome, and of many other places which they feared, they were obeyed and reuerenced by the moſt part of their ſubiects, and ſtrongly accompanied with Knights and men at armes, they did call to remembrance many raſh actions committed by the Conſtable Lewis of Beaumont, as well againſt King Iohn of Arragon, and Queene Leonora their Grandmother, as againſt king Francis Phœbus and themſelues, namely, that the Beaumontois had denyed to open them the gates of Pampelona, with other ſuch recent occaſions, whereupon they began to perſecute him very ſharpely, ſo as the Realme of Nauarre was againe in as great confuſion as euer it had beene: the two old Factions not forgetting to make vſe of any occaſions that might hurt one another: the which ſtormes were in ſome ſort quietly calmed by the mediation of King Fernand of Caſtile & Arragon who procured this agreement, that the Conſtable Lewis of Beaumont his brother in law ſhould withdraw himſelfe into Caſtile for a certaine limited time, in which meane ſpace either part ſhould lay by their armes, and that the ſaid Conſtables goods and lands ſhould be laied in depoſito in King Fernands hands. And in this ſort the Conſtable left Nauarre, but he loſt nothing thereby, for King Fernand gaue him twice as much reuenue as he had before, and made him Marquis of Hueſcar in Granado. The name of open warre ceaſſed in Nauarre, but they left not of committing of many murthers and robberies without feare of law, for that nation had beene a long time accuſtomed to ſuch outrages in contempt of the law; the which waxed ſtill worſe thorow King Iohn and Queene Catherines negligence, who by euill counſell, and particular affections, vnworthy of ſoueraigne Princes, did at the laſt bandy themſelues in leagues one againſt the other, the King taking part with thoſe of Beaumont, and the Queene with the Grammontois whereof infinite miſeries enſued.

Lewis of Beaumont made Marquis of Hueſcar.

11 Caſtile.

During theſe troubles Gonçalo Fernandes de Cordoua, ſurnamed the Great captaine, hauing ioyned the forces that hee brought from Spaine with thoſe that King Fernand had, who was driuen forth of Naples, and beeing accompained with D. Hugo Cardona the Sicillian, did ſo handle the matter as after that King Charles was departed forth of the Kingdome hee recouered Calabria from the French, and draue thence the Lord d'Aubigni who was gouernor in thoſe marches, notwithſtanding that ſoone after hee receiued an ouerthrow by him neere to Seminara, where King Fernand of Naples had like to haue beene taken priſoner: after which Gonçalo Fernandes hauing made his retreate to Rijoles, where he ſtood a certaine time on his defence, and beeing afterwards re-enforced with new ſupplies out of Sicile, and a nauy of three ſcore and tenne ſhips brought from Meſſina by King Fernand, hee had courage and meanes to beſeege and make himſelfe Maſter of the city of Naples, with her caſtles, and draue thence Lord Guilbert of Montpenſier, whom King Charles had left there for gouernour and Lieutenant Generall, making ſuch ſharpe warre vpon the reſt of the French that were left there, as King Fernand in ſhort time was reſtored to his Kingdome, by the valour, proweſſe, and diſcretion of this great captaine: which when Don Alphonſo vnderſtood, who of a King was become a Monke in Sicile, hee laboured to recouer his former dignity: but his ſonne who was in poſſeſſion thereof, and who had valiantly imployed himſelfe in the recouery of that which his father had careleſly loſt, would not giue it ouer: wherefore Don Alphonſo did not liue long after in his monaſticke ſtate, for hee died this yeere 1495.

Exploits of Gonſalo Hernandes of Cordoua ſurnamed the Great captaine.

D. Alphonſo from a King become a Monke, ſtriueth in vaine, from a Monke to become a King.

The ſucceſſull exploits of the Spaniards in the Kingdome of Naples did greatly reioyce King Fernand and Queene Iſabella, who beeing at Tortoſa, did agree vpon the marriage of Prince Iohn their ſonne and heire to the Kingdomes, with Marguerite of Auſtria, daughter to Maximillian then Emperor, who was ſent home, as hath beene ſaid, by Charles the French King: and by the ſame meanes the marriage was concluded betwixt Philip of Auſtria ſonne to the ſaid Emperor and Donna Ioane, ſecond daughter to the King and Queene of Caſtile and Arragon. Theſe Princes and Princeſſes which were married, brother and ſiſter to the brother and ſiſter, were very nere of kinne by the line of Portugall: for Donna Iſabella of Portugall, wife to Duke Philip of Burgondy, was mother to Duke Charles father to Mary, who was mother to Philip and to Marguerite of Auſtria.

Alliances betwixt the houſes of Auſtria and Caſtile.

12

And on the other ſide D. Leonora of Portugall the Empreſſe, wife to Frederike, mother to Maximillian, father to Philip and Margnerite, was coſin germain to King Fernand, daughter to Donna Leonora of Arragon, ſiſter to King Iohn his father, the which Donna Leonora was wife to King Edward of Portugall. Theſe treaties being made, the King made ſome ſtay at Tortoſa, and then returned into Caſtile: but they were not long there, till the King was conſtrained to returne to Tortoſa to take order for the warre which the French had raiſed in the Earldome of Roſſillon: for King Charles beeing highly mooued that the King of Caſtile, contrary to the agreement and promiſe which hee had made him, had ſent aide to the King of Naples, fought againſt his armies and townes which hee had conquered, had ſent a mighty army Warre betwixt the French and Spaniards in the Earldome of Roſſillon.

13

to

A to the Pirenean hills, the which did aſſaile Sauſſes, defended by Captaine Bernard Franciſ, who was ouer-come and taken, and almoſt al the Spaniards were cut in peeces in the ſight of the Spaniſh Armies, commanded by Don Henry Henriques Earle of Alua de Liſta, and by the King himſelfe, who was come as farre as Gyrone, thinking by vaine ſhewes to cauſe the French to retire: the which they did, but it was becauſe winter drew on, and for want of victualls, the enemies Armie being in the like neceſſity. Sauſſes beeing forſaken, diſmantled and burnt by the French, a truce was taken for foure moneths. Among other men of name which dyed at the taking of Sauſſes were Don Diego de Azeuedo, and Pedro de Solis: the ſame hapned the yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, ninety and ſixe. Sauſſes taken by the French. 1496.

B Queene Iſabell remaining at Burgos, gaue order for the iourney of her ſecond daughter Don Ioane into Flanders to Phillip of Auſtria, vnto whom ſhee was promiſed, and for the ſame purpoſe ſhee cauſed a great Nauie to bee rigged in the Porte of Laredo, whether ſhee came in perſon, after ſhee had celebrated the obſequies of Queene Iſabell her Mother, who dyed at the ſame time at Areualo, hauing liued a widdow the ſpace of two and forty yeares, troubled with ſickneſſe both of body and minde, whoſe body beeing then laide in the Monaſterie of Saint Francis of Areualo, was afterward tranſported to the Carthuſians in the Citty of Burgos, called Mirefleur, where King Iohn her husband was buried. The ſame yeare dyed in Guipuſcoa Don Iohn de Gamboa, a C perſonage full of yeares and honour, who was Maiſter of the horſe to the Kings of Caſtile, and of their Councell, Captaine generall of the frontiers of France and Nauarre, and gouernor of Fontaraby. This Knight left onely two daughters, one of which was married in Guipuſcoa in the family of Sarauz, and the other into Biſcay into that of Arteaga: the Queene gaue the conduct of the Nauie, and of the Infanta Donna Ioane her daughter, to Don Frederick Henriques high Admirall of Caſtile her Vnckle, beeing accompanied by Donna Maria de Velaſco the Admiralls Mother, with other Lords, Ladyes and Gentlewomen, who beeing ſhipped, the Queene went back to Burgos, and from thence into Cattalonia to ayde the King her husband. Queene Iſabell the Dowager ſick both in body & minde. Death of Don Iohn de Gamboa. The Infanta Don Ioanes voyage into Flanders.

In the meane ſpace, the great Captaine continued the warre on the one ſide, and King D Ferdinand on the other in the kingdome of Naples, who were reſiſted in Calabria by Eberard Stuard Lord of Aubigni, aſſiſted by the faction of Aniow, and with a few French forces which were left him, and in the territorie of Lauoro by the Lord Guillert of Montpenſier Lieutenant generall to the French King, in the ſame kingdome, who was beſieged in the Citty of Auerſa by King Ferdinand and the great Captaine both together, and was brought to ſuch extremitie, as hee promiſed, if within thirty dayes hee were not ſuccoured, to yeeld vp all that the French men held in the kingdome of Naples, excepting Gaieta, Venoſa and Tarentum, which were in the hands of ſtrangers, vpon condition that they would furniſh him with ſhippes to carry him and his people into France: there fell afterwards great ſickneſſe among the men of warre on either E ſide: and Lord Guilbert of Montpenſier dyed at Pozzuolo with other French Lords, and there dyed likewiſe on the enemies part diuerſe men of note, as namely King Ferdinand, who had for ſucceſſour his Vnckle Don Frederick of Arragon, brother to Don Alphonſo. King Frederick ſtayed not long ere hee beſieged Gaietta, during which ſiege the Lord D' Aubigni rendred the places which hee held in Calabria, by whoſe example Gaietta, Venoſa and Tarentum were yeelded, and King Frederick by that meanes recouered all the realme of Naples.

In this warre all the Potentates of Italy ſhewed themſelues enemies to the French, the Florentines excepted, who thought by the meanes of the Frenchmen who held Piſa, to bring that Cittie into their ſubiection. And the warre beeing ended, Pope F Alexander did ſharply perſecute the Vrſins, friends and ſeruants to the houſe of France, and the chiefe of that family Virginio Vrſino, an excellent Captaine, of all which matters, King Ferdinand and Queene Iſabell of Caſtile were aduertized to their great contentment. All the Potentates of Italy enemies to the French except the Florentines.

The beginning of the yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, ninetie and ſeauen, the Kings beeing in the Citty of Burgos, they receiued aduertiſement that the Armie of 1467.

Caſtile

Caſtile was returned, which had conducted the Infanta Donna Ioane, wife to Philip of Auſtria, and brought Margueret, ſiſter to the ſaid Philip, betrothed to Prince Iohn, who were married in the ſame Citty, Frier Francis Ximenes of Ciſneros Archbiſhop of Toledo and Primat of Spaine dooing the ceremony: and they had for their God-father Don Frederick the Admirall, and Donna Maria de Velaſco his mother for their God-mother. The feaſts and magnificences were great and pompous, whereat dyed Don Alphonſo de Cardegna ſecond ſonne to Don Gutiere de Cardegna, great Commander of Leon. A Fryer Francis Ximenes Archbiſhop of Toledo.

The wedding being ended, the Court came to Medina del campo, where Chriſtopher Colombus arriued as a priſoner by the ſlanders and accuſations of the Spaniards his enemies, who were impatient of diſcipline, the moſt enuious of whom was Frier Buil, who came back the ſame time into Spaine: neuertheleſſe the Kings thinking it an vnſeemly matter that ſuch a perſonage ſhould yeeld account of his actions in quality of an offender, they did abſolue him of the great rigor which hee had executed by iuſtice on the Spaniards, with commandement thence-forward to vſe thoſe more gently, who did croſſe ſo many ſeas to doe them ſeruice, and they willed him to returne to the Iudges, they being highly contented with the reports which hee made of the great riches and wealth which thoſe countries yeelded: whereof hee brought them proofes of golde, Brazil, mother of Pearle, Amber, pretious Feathers, Indian tapſtrie, and other ſtrange things: They did againe rigge forth eight ſhips for him, furniſhed with men and victuals, two whereof hee ſent away before laden with victualls and weapons to his brother Bartholomew Colombus, who had begun to builde the Cittie of Saint Domingo, vpon the riuer of Ocama in the Iſland of Hiſpagunola: hee with the other ſixe parted from Saint Lucar de Barameda, and beeing arriued at Madera, vnderſtanding that there were French Pirates at ſea that watched for him, beeing drawne thither by the renowne of the wealth of the Indies, hee ſent onely three of his ſhippes directly to the Iſland of Hiſpagnuola, and hee with the other three ſayled towards the Iſles of Cape vert, tending to the Equinoctiall, and after great trauaile of heates, and calmes, hee arriued at Paria the firme land of thoſe Weſt Indies: then coaſting three hundred and thirty leagues vnto Cape de Velas, hee diſcouered and tooke note of all that countrey, where are Cabo Anegado, the point of Salinas, Cubagua, otherwiſe called the Iſle of Pearles, the point of Araja, Cumana, Chiriuichi, the Gulphe of Cariari, Curiana, Saint Roman, Venecuela Coquibocoa, and other places, from whence hee paſſed to the new Citty of Saint Domingo, and there was receiued for Gouernour, to the great griefe of diuerſe. B C D

14 Colombus his third voyage to the Indies.

This was the third voyage that Colombus made to the Indies, and then they had already begun to trade and negociate with the Indians by force of armes: for the violent vſage of them had made them become ſtrange, and enemies to the Spaniards, ſo as they left off tilling of their grounds, and ſowing of their Maiz, to the end to conſtraine them by hunger to leaue the contrey, and at the ſame time as theſe ſhippes arriued, great number of Indians beeing gathered together, did beſiege the Spaniards of the Forte of Saint Thomas du Ciabo, who were put to flight by Alphonſo de Hoiedo. Hauing then gotten the Cachique Coanabo into the Forte, keeping him priſoner for the death of diuerſe Chriſtians, more then fiue thouſand Indians aſſembled themſelues, beeing conducted by a brother of his, for to deliuer him, who were likewiſe defeated by Hoyeda, hauing but a hundred Spaniards in his company, and ſome amongſt them were horſemen, the which made the Spaniards to bee greatly feared, and much more afterward when Bartholomew Colombus by night defeated fifteene thouſand Indians, tooke fifteene Cachiques, and a Generall aboue all the reſt named Guarionex, all which hee ſet at libertie vppon their words and promiſes to continew ſubiects to the Kings of Caſtile. E F

Enterpriſes vpon the Affrican Moores.

Beſides theſe conqueſts in the Indies, the Spaniſh Nobilitie, who ſeeing that there was no more warres in Spaine againſt the Infidells, began to enterprize vppon the neighbour ſhoare of Affrick, and this yeare the Citty of Melilla, neere the ſea in the kingdome of Tremeſſen, was taken by Don Iohn de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, who

A who led a ſufficient army thither, at his owne coaſts and charges. This was the firſt place which the crowne of Caſtile did poſſeſſe in that country beyond the ſea, which gaue beginning to the warres of Afrike, which continued afterward, and whereof wee will ſpeake in his place. This exploite of the Duke of Medina was acknowledged and rewarded by the King, who lying at Valencia of Alcantara did treat the marriage of their daughter, the Infanta Iſabell the widdow, with the new King D. Manuell of Portugall, of whom we muſt diſcourſe.

B

D. Manuel the fourthteenth King of Portugall.

THis Prince ſucceeded King Iohn his coſin and brother in law in the crowne of Portugal the yeere 1465. being ſeuen and twenty yeeres of age: hee was ſonne to Don Fernand Duke of Viſeo, and of the Infanta Donna Beatrice, grand-child to King Edward, and great grand-child to King Iohn the firſt, whoſe aduancement to the royall crowne had beene fore-told by certaine Soothſaiers and Aſtrologians: he obtained it by right of lawfull ſucceſſion, and by the teſtamentary appointment of King Iohn his predeceſſor: in whoſe life time he did in no ſort take vpon him the title of Prince and heire of Portu- 15 Portugal.

C gall, but onely of Duke of Beja and Maſter of Chriſtus. Hee was a iuſt King, and loued honour, religious and zealous in the faith which had beene taught him, vſing the Nobility kindely, the which hee increaſed and aduanced in his dominions as much as hee could: he was gentle, liberall and a great giuer of almes, eſpecially to religious friers as well of his owne Kingdome as to ſtrangers, dilligent and carefull in the adminiſtration of iuſtice, an enterprizer, lucky in voyages, nauigations and diſcoueries of countries, whereby he greatly augmented and amplified his Kingdome and Siegnories: hee was beloued and eſteemed as well of his owne ſubiects as of ſtrangers: magnificent and ſumptuous in buildings, which the royall monaſtery of Belen or Bethlem, of the order

D of Saint Ieroſme doth beare witneſſe of, edified for the buriall of the Kings: the caſtle of Belen, which ſtands almoſt in the riuer of Tayo, for the guarde of the Port of Lisbone; the Monaſtery of Saint Mary de la Pegna of the ſame order of Saint Ieroſme neere to Sintra, and that of Saint Clare the New in the towne of Eſtremos: all which workes were by him built from the foundation; and hee did moreouer reſtore and augment the couents of Saint Francis of Lisbone, Ebora and Saint Iren. The bridge of Coimbra, and that of Oliuença vpon Guadiana are likewiſe of his ſtructure, with diuers others publike buildings and reparations: all which vertues and magnificencies were blemiſhed by one vice, whereupon Princes and great Lords doe often ſtumble, namely, he was to light of beleefe. Whereby hee ſhewed himſelfe inconſtant and variable, retracting on euery ſmall occaſion his decrees, orders, guifts and priuiledges by con-

E trary commandments.

Qualities of King Manuel.

Buildings of King Manuel.

This King Don Manuel was thrice married, and all his wiues were Infantaes of Caſtile, and the two firſt were ſiſters: his firſt wife was Donna Iſabella, widdow to the Infant Don Alphonſo his Nephew his ſiſters ſonne, on whom hee begat a ſonne named D. Michel, who was borne in Arragon in the city of Saragoſſa at ſuch a time as ſhalbe ſet downe hereafter, who if hee had liued, had beene heire to all Spaine: Donna Iſabella being dead, his ſecond wife was her ſiſter, called the Infanta Maria of Caſtile, third daughter to King Fernand and Queene Iſabella by whom hee had a great iſſue. Firſt of all, D. Iohn heire of Portugall borne at Lisbone in the pallace of the Riuer, the Infanta

F Donna Iſabella borne in the ſame city, who was Queene of Caſtile, Leon, Arragon and Nauarre, and Empreſſe of Germany, married to Charles the fifth. Donna Beatrice who was Dutcheſſe of Sauoy, wife to Charles the ninth, and mother to Duke Emanuel Philibert of Sauoy, D. Lewis borne in Abrantes, father to D. Antonio who was at ſtriſe for the kingdome of Portugall with Philip king of Spaine in our time; next D. Henry, who in our time was a Cardinall, borne likewiſe in Abrantes on the riuer of Tayo, D.

Genealogie of Portugal.

Alphonſo

Alphonſo who was borne in the city of Ebora, and was likewiſe made Cardinall at ſeuen A yeeres of age by Pope Leo the tenth; Don Catherine who died young, then D. Fernand, Don Edward and Don Antonio. His third and laſt wife was Donna Leonora daughter to Philip of Auſtria, Infanta of Caſtile, and ſiſter to the Emperour Charles the fifth, by whom he had a ſonne named Charles who died young, he had moreouer by her a daughter, borne after his death, named Donna Maria, who liued in great chaſtity in our daies: So as this King had by his three married wiues thirteene children liuing, namely nine ſonnes and foure daughters: This Prince comming to the crowne hee erected diuerſe Earledomes for the ornament of the Nobility of Portugall, hee gaue that of Portalegre to Diego de Silua his gouernor, who enioyed but the title onely, for the Inhabitants B of Portalegre did defend themſelues, by reaſon of their priuiledges: hee made Don Vaſco de Gama Admirall of Portugall Earle of Bediguera, Don Martin de Caſtel-blanc Earle of Villanoua, Don Iohn de Meneſes Earle of Taroco and prior of Saint Iohns, Don Rodrigo de Merlo Earle of Tentugall, Don Pedro de Caſtro Earle of Montſancto, Don Franciſco de Soſa, ſonne to the Biſhop of Ebora Earle of Bemioſo, and Don Antonio of Portugall Earle of Lignare, honouring in that manner, by liberality and royall bounty the Nobility of Portugal.

Earldomes erected in Portugall by King Manuell.

D. James reſtored to the Duchy of Viſeo and to his fathers goods.

At the inſtant entreaties and requeſts of the widdow, Queene Leonora his ſiſter, and of the Dutcheſſe Donna Iſabel, widdow of Bragança, hee reſtored to the honours and goods of the deceaſed Duke, D. Iames, vntil then in exile in Caſtile, who was the C
Dukes ſecond ſonne, for Don Philip the eldeſt died in Caſtile, becauſe the Princes of his bloud ſhould not liue in ſuch calamity, and that ſo noble a race might not faile in Portugall: he ſhewed the like grace and bounty to diuerſe other Lords, who were abſent, for offences committed againſt the crowne, albeit that the new Duke D. Iames had for his owne part no way offended, but had run into his fathers diſgrace who was executed by law. For a notable and religious act, as he and his counſel thought, he gaue commandement that all Iewes and Moores ſhould voide forth of Portugal, vnleſſe they would bee baptized, confiſcating their goods, and children of euery ſex, excepted vnder thirteene yeeres of age, whom by force he cauſed to be baptized, but beeing afterwards better aduiſed, hee retained onely the men and women of thoſe ſects by force, cauſing them to D receiue baptiſme, and to confeſſe Ieſus Chriſt with their mouthes, but, as it is to bee preſumed, without beleeuing it in their hearts, and people conſtrained, and not wel inſtructed, the which did beget infinite apoſtacies, ſects, and hereſies in Portugal, as it could not fall out otherwiſe.

Iewes conſtrained to be baptized.

16 Following the ſteps of his predeceſſor King Iohn, hee ſent men into the parts of
D. Vaſco de Gama a Portugal Captaine in Calicut. the Eaſt to make ample and certaine information of the trafficke of ſpices, and hee cauſed Don Vaſco de Gama to purſue the nauigations and diſcouery of the ſhores of Affrike, who departing from Lisbone this yeere 1497. with two ſhips, the one named the Angel Gabriel, the other the Angel Raphael, manned with a hundred and forty men, coaſted about Affrike, and touching at the Iſle of Saint Iames, and that of E
Saint Helen, places by him ſo named, hee came into Maçambuque a country of the Moores, and from thence, by a long and tedious iourney paſſing hard by a rocke, which hee called Saint George, and by the ſhelues and ſands of Saint Raphaell hee arriued at Mombaça a land fertil, pleaſant, and of great trade and commerce, then going forward he came to the city of Melinde, in the which hee had not only ſome reſt and refreſhing from his paineful iourney, but did likewiſe contract peace and alliance betwixt the King of Melinde, and King Manuel his Maſter: at the laſt ſayling farther, he came to Calicut the place ſo much deſired which was the aime of his enterprize. He found Calicut to be a great and wel peopled city, and of great trade for ſpices, he ſaw in the hauen more then a thouſand fiue hundred ſaile of marchants ſhips, great and ſmal, but ill built and vnſeruiF ceable for long voyages, without art in their ſailes, anchors and tackling, not vſing the compaſſe, and wholy vnfit for ſea fights, not beeing able to ſaile vnleſſe they had a fore winde.

17 Now King Manuel beeing ſuch an one as wee haue deſcribed him, and in his flo-Caſtile. riſhing age, the marriage betwixt him and the Princeſſe Iſabella of Caſtile; who was

A was a widdow was concluded at Valencia of Alcantara, at the ſame time as Prince Iohn of Caſtile newly married to Marguerite of Auſtria fell ſicke of the diſeaſe whereof hee died at Salamanca: the which cauſed king Manuell to haſten the effecting of this marriage: becauſe that after Prince Iohn, the ſucceſſion of the Realmes of Caſtile and Arragon fell to Donna Iſabella as to the eldeſt. Therefore hee vſed ſuch dilligence as the marriage was accõpliſhed before the Prince his death, who deceaſſed to the great griefe of the kings his father and mother, and of all their ſubiects, hauing not fully attained to the twentith yeere of his age, and was buried in the Monaſtery of S. Thomas of the frier preachers in the city of Auila. All the Gentlemen, Knights, Lawiers, and other men

Death of Prince Iohn of Caſtile.

General mourning.

B of note in all parts of Spaine, did in ſigne of mourning for his death cloath themſelues in blacke friſe, or ſuch like courſe cloath of meane price. The Princeſſe Marguerite his widdow, who was with child, was brought in bed ſoone after in the towne of Alcala de Henares of a dead daughter. King Fernand beeing the firſt that receiued theſe lamentable newes, fearing leaſt the Queene his wife would fall into ſome great perplexity for the loſſe of an onely ſonne, heire to ſo great a ſtate and of ſuch young yeeres, did determine to ſend her newes that he himſelfe was dead, and then when ſhee ſhould enter into teares and lamentations, to come into her preſence at the ſame inſtant to comfort her, and then plainely to tell her the truth of their ſonnes death, imagining that a ſodaine conſolation betwixt two extreame griefes, would greatly mode-

A good meanes to comfort an extreame ſorrow.

C rate both the one and the other: the which tooke good effect, by the good reaſons and examples which hee alleadged vnto her. By Prince Iohns deceaſe, Donna Iſabella his ſiſter was Princeſſe of the Aſturia's, and eldeſt heire to the Kingdomes of Caſtile and Arragon.

This yeere died Don Iohn Arias de Villar, who was Biſhop of Ouiedo, the which place was giuen to Don Garcia Ramires de Villa Eſcuſa, laſt perpetuall prior of Saint Markes of Leon, and euer afterward the Priors of that place were but from yeere to yeere. There died alſo by a lamentable chance, the Court beeing at Alcala, Don Lewis Pimentell Marquis of Villa-franca, eldeſt ſonne to Don Roderigo Alphonſo Pimentell Earle of Benauent, who fell downe to the ground out of a gallery. Don Diego of Ca-

D ſtile great commander of Calatroua did likewiſe die, and his commandery was giuen to Don Guttiere de Padilla Treaſorer, and his place to Don Alphonſo de Silua, brother to the Earle of Ciſuentes. Now the new Queene of Portugall, Infanta of Caſtile and Arragon, hauing right to ſo great a ſucceſſion by the death of Prince Iohn her brother: it behoued the King her husband and her ſelfe to paſſe into Caſtile, to receiue, in quality of future heires to thoſe Kingdomes, the oth of the States: therefore leauing the widdow Queene Leonora Regent in Portugall, they came to the city of Toledo the yeere 1498. where Queene Iſabella of Portugall was ſworne, and acknowledged Princeſſe of the Aſturia's, heire to Caſtile and Leon: then going into Arragon, the like was done for the ſucceſſion in thoſe Kingdomes. But this Princeſſe being with child,

An. 1498.

E ſhee was brought in bed and died in the city of Saragoſſa, leauing heire to all her fathers and mothers dominions, the child newly borne if he had liued, who was called D. Michel, who in that infancy was ſworne Prince of Girone and heire to Arragon and Sicile. With this ſorrow D. Manuel returned a widdower into Portugal, leauing his onely ſonne in Saragoſſa. The dead Queenes body was brought to Toledo and buried in the Monaſtery of Saint Antolin, which is a parriſh Church where were Religious Nuns, which was builded by Don Agnes d' Ayala, wife to the Admiral of Caſtile, grand-mother to King Fernand. And afterward becauſe of this Princeſſe, which was there buried, it was called the Monaſtery of Saint Elizabeth, and the parriſh remooued to Saint Marks which was of the number of the Muſarabes.

D. Michel that was borne Infant ſworne heire of Arragon.

F About this time Lewis the twelfth of that name, before Duke of Orleance hauing ſucceeded Charles the eight in the crowne of France, and hauing his thoughts wholy bent to diſpoſſeſſe Duke Lewis Sforza of the Duchy of Milan, which hee ſaid was the antient maternall inheritance of the houſe of Orleance, peace was granted to King Frederike of Naples, and an agreement procured betwixt France and Caſtile: therefore fore Don Gonçalo Hernandes ſurnamed the great captaine, returned out of Italy into Spaine, full of victory and honor. The Court being come to Ocagna, where Queene Iſabella found her ſelfe ſomewhat well at eaſe the yeere 1499. the Infant Don Michel was ſworne Prince of the Aſturia's, and heire to Caſtile. There aroſe a great quarrel in Ocagna amongſt the courtiers, wherein Don Alphonſo Pimentel, ſonne to Don Iohn Pimentel was ſlaine. A Oth to the Infant D. Michel for the future ſucceſſion of Caſtile.

The Court comming to Madrid, the marriage was celebrated betwixt D. Rodrigo de Mendoza the firſt Marquis of Zenete, a widdower by the death of his wife D. Leonora de la Cerda Marquiſſe of Zenete, onely daughter to the Duke of Medina Celi, and Donna Maria de Fonſeca, daughter to D. Alphonſo de Fonſeca, of which marriage was borne a daughter and heire called Mencia de Mendoza, who was wife to Henry Earle of Naſſau. B

D. Mencia de Mendoza wife to Earle Henry of Naſſau.

The affaires of the Indies grew worſe and worſe, the Spaniſh arrogancy not beeing able to endure a bridle to reſtraine them in their diſorders, for Rowland Ximenes from a ſeruant being become great Prouoſt and Preſident of iuſtice in the Indies, by the fauour of the Admiral Chriſtopher Colombus, did openly mutiny againſt Bartolmew Colombus the gouernour, and with threeſcore and tenne of his confederates, hee ſequeſtred himſelfe and went into Xaragua, proteſting that hee did not forſake the Kings ſeruice of Caſtile, but onely his obedience to the Geneuois, whoſe pride he could not beare: the Admirall endeuored by all meanes to appeaſe this tumult, but he could not, wherefore they fell to writing one againſt an other into Spaine, and to lay great offences to each others charge, ſo as the Kings ſent Francis de Bouadilla, a Knight of the order of Calatraua with foure caruels, with ample power and authority to the Indies to make information of theſe matters, who being arriued in the Iſland of Hiſpagnuola, found, after enquiry made in the city of Saint Domingo, that the two brothers Colombs were in the fault, therfore hee apprehended them, and ſent each of them in a caruell priſoners in fetters into Spaine. C

18

The brothers Colombus brought backe againe priſoners into Spaine.

Being landed at Cales, the Kings hauing notice of their arriuall, cauſed them to bee ſet at liberty and to come to Granado where the Court then lay, where notwithſtanding their iuſtifications, the gouernment of the Indies was taken from them. And ſo the Admiral remained three yeeres in Spaine, without returning to the countries by him diſcouered. The Kings the ſame yeere gaue leaue to Pero Nugno borne at Palos de Moguer to goe to the Indies with a ſhip and thirty marriners, on condition that he ſhould not land, nor come neere the lands diſcouered by Chriſtopher Colombus by fifty leagues: who beeing arriued at Parias, and hauing well noted the coaſt euen to Curiana, which is nere to Veneçuela, he landed in Curiana, where he found the people to be ſimple, with whom he exchanged his pedlery ware of ſmal value, for very precious pearles. This Pero Nugno being returned into Galicia was accuſed by his own fellowes, and had a long ſuite before Hernando de Vega Lord of Grayales viceroy in that country. Other inhabitants of Palos Moguer, who had beene in the voyages of Chriſtopher Colombus, and had inriched themſelues were deſirous to ſaile againe to the Indies, as namely, Vicont Iames Pinſon, and Arias Pinſon his nephew, who at their owne charges hauing victualled and rig'd foure caruels, they paſſed by Saint Iames his Iſle, one of thoſe of Cap-vert, and arriued at the Cap of Saint Auguſtin, a country very thicke of trees, amongſt the which they found one that ſixteene men could not fadom, where they wrote their names, and thoſe of their King and Queene in token of poſſeſſion: then coaſting along the ſhoares (not without danger) where they thought to land, in regard they found there very fierce and barbarous Indians, they came to the mouth of the great riuer Maragnon, in the gulphe of Parias, and to that of the riuer Oreillana, which are the greateſt in the world, and doe runne almoſt euer vnder the Equinoctiall: the which riuer of Oreillana the Pinſons hauing failed, and ſpent tenne monthes in thoſe nauigations; they returned into Spaine with two caruels onely laden with braſill and drogues, but no gold nor pearles. D E F

Pero Nugnos voyage.

The voyage of Vincent and Arias Pinſon.

Portugal. Don Vaſco de Gama arriued likewiſe this yeere in Portugal from his voyage of Calicut laden with ſpices, which hee had bought at a cheape rate, from which place hee departed

A parted in the month of September of the precedent yeere, captaine Nicholas Coello going before from the Cap of good hope to bring the King of Portugall good newes thereof, after whom the ſaid Vaſco arriued, who was moſt graciouſly welcomed, and largely rewarded for his trauaile which laſted ſix and twenty monthes, and of all the men which he carried out with him hee brought home fifty onely. The Portugalls from that time, did ordinarily ſaile to the Eaſt Indies.

This yeere the Princeſſe Margueret of Auſtria widdow, parted from Spaine to re- Caſtile.
turne into Flanders, afterward ſhee ſhas married to Philibert Duke of Sauoy, by whom hauing had no children, after his death ſhe remained a widdow, and gouerned the coun-
B try of Flanders a long time: the Monaſtery called Bruns neere to Bourg in Breſſe, was builded by her. The Court beeing at Granado, Queene Ioane of Naples, widdow to the late King Fernand the firſt came thither, ſhee was ſiſter to King Fernand of Caſtile. In her company was the Cardinall Lewis of Arragon, ſonne to Don Roderigo of Arragon baſtard to the King her husband: and in Flanders the Infanta Donna Ioane wife to Philip of Auſtria was brought in bed of a daughter named Leonor, who was Queene of Portugall, married to the King Don Manuel and afterward to the great King Francis of France.

King Fernand and Queene Iſabella being come from Granado to Siuil, beeing mooued with zeale to religion, and the better to obtaine the title of Catholike Kings, by the counſell alſo of the Prelats, and namely of frier Francis Ximenes de Ciſneros Archbi-
C ſhop of Toledo, frier Thomas of Torquemada, the chiefe Inquiſitor of Spaine being deceaſed a while before, they vndertooke the voluntary and forced conuerſion of the Moores, contrary to the promiſes and capitulations made vnto thoſe which yeelded during the warres, whereof great troubles enſued.

The Archbiſhop Ximenes was at Granado to aſſiſt frier Hernand of Talauera a lit- 19 tle before made Archbiſhop of Granado, who laboured to procure that conuerſion to Moores Mudeiares enforced to change their religion.
bee voluntary, without vſing conſtraint. But hee of Toledo imagining that the other had proceeded ouer gently, did beginne to preſſe the Moores that were inhabitants of the Albayzin after his owne humor; giuing hard ſpeeches to ſuch as would D diſpute of religion with the Monkes and Curats, who thought to conuert them: and then comming to deeds, he laid hands vpon a chiefe Moore of the familie of Zigri, who was deſcended from the Kings of Granado, and kept him ſo long in priſon as to recouer his liberty, hee ſaid that hee was contented to beleeue in Ieſus Chriſt, and that hee had had a viſion which did aſſure him that it was the right way of ſaluation. Hee ſent after that, one of his houſehold ſeruants named Sazedo, with a Prouoſt that was very ill beloued to apprehend a woman dwelling in the ſame Albayzin, but both of them were there ſlaine. Diuers Moores being gathered together at the womans cries, who after the deed ranne to the Archbiſhop of Toledos lodging to haue done as much to him: but he and his people did valiantly defend themſelues vntill the Earle of Tendil-
E la the Gouernor came and freed him from them: the which Earle with the Archbiſhop of Toledo delt in ſuch ſort as the mutinous people were appeaſed, and their Alguaſils were heard, who proteſted that they did not riſe againſt the King, but onely to hinder the breaking of the Articles agreed vpon, which were, not bee enforced to change their religion.

This was the firſt attempt of the Moores conuerſion, with no ſmall daunger and tumult, which laſted tenne daies. The King hauing notice of what was done, was highly mooued againſt the Archbiſhop of Toledo; but hee contented him with reaſons wherewith hee was not vnfurniſhed, and cauſed him to allow and approoue to haue them conuerted by force: for at the report of what the Moores of Albayzin
F had done, thoſe of the mountaines, and of the country called Alpuxarres did fall into a mutiny, to chaſtice whom they were conſtrained to proceed by armes the yeere following 1500. In the ſame yeere Pope Alexander the ſixth, celebrated the tenth Iubiley at Rome, whether people of ſundry Nations went in great numbers: and they beganne to conuert the Moores of Granado, this yeere where diuers of them did mutiny: neuertheleſſe more then fifty thouſand of that ſect receiued the water of Baptiſme, and their Moſquees were bleſſed and conſecrated to ceremonies and vſes accuſtomed amongſt the Chriſtians of that age: thoſe amongſt them who would not change their religion at the Kings command, were conſtrained to doe it by force of armes, and becauſe the townes of Hueſcar, Lanjaron, and Andarrax in the country of Alpuxarras did make the greateſt reſiſtance, the inhabitants being enforced were made ſlaues. And the ſame yeere was borne in the city of Gaunt vnto Philip of Auſtria and Donna Ioane of Caſtile vpon Saint Mathias day, a ſonne named Charles, who was heire to all the Kingdomes of King Fernand, and Queene Iſabella his grand-father and grand mother, and Emperour of Almaine, the fifth of that name, a great and an excellent Prince. It is reported that when the newes of his birth was brought to Queene Iſabella his grand-mother, ſhe in a propheticall ſpirit of his future vniuerſal ſucceſſion in the great dominions of Spaine, ſpake theſe words, taken out of the Acts of the Apoſtles, The lot is falne vpon Mathias, noting thereby, that Don Michel of Portugal then liuing ſhould not inherite, but that it ſhould bee hee who was borne vpon Saint Mathias day: the which in deed fell out to be happy for the Emperour Charles, it is the foure and twentith day of February.

Birth of Charls of Auſtria who was King of Spaine and Emperor.

Saint Mathias day lucky to Emperor Charles.

Nauarre. 20

King Fernand beeing returned from the Catholike warre of the country of Alpuxarres in the Kingdome of Granado vnto Siuill, hee was viſited by Iohn d' Albret King of Nauarre, whom hee welcomed with great honour and curteſie, for the ſpace of ſeuenteene daies that hee remained there. Diuers buſineſſes mooued this Prince to come into Caſtile, but there were two of greateſt importance, for hee imagined to get againe the townes of La Garde, Arcos, Saint Vincent, and Bermedo, the caſtles of Toro and Herera, and other places of La Soſierra which the King of Caſtile poſſeſſed of the antient patrimony of Nauarre; hee did moreouer, in the right of the late Queene Blanch of Nauarre, firſt wife to King Iohn of Arragon, and great grand-mother to Queene Catherine then reigning, and by grant made in the contract of her marriage, demaund the Infantaſgo of Caſtile, the Duchy of Pegnafiel and Lordſhip of Lara, with many other lands, and therewith all the ſonne of 420112. florins, ſixe ſhillings eight pence of the coine of Arragon: for which matters King Iohn d' Albret and Queene Catherine of Nauarre being at Pau, had not long ſince ſent two Franciſcan friers in Ambaſſage to the Kings of Caſtile, who were men of vnderſtanding, namely frier Iohn de Vadre Warden of Corella, and frier Iohn de Ro, warden of Tafalla, with ample inſtructions to obtaine them: but they brought away nothing but pleaſing words and dilatory excuſes. Beſides this buſineſſe, the ſuſpition which they had of the Earle of Lerin did greatly trouble them, who was newly come into Caſtile, and was much honoured and aduanced there, and it was reported to them that King Fernand had often times ſolicited him, to make ouer vnto him all the lands, goods, rights and actions which he had in the Realme of Nauarre, promiſing him treble recompence for them in Caſtile; the which the Earle had neuertheleſſe refuſed, either for the naturall loue which he did beare to his country, or elſe that hee did better eſteeme the place which hee held, almoſt as King of Nauarre, then to bee in Caſtile, where diuers others tooke place before him as it was fit: Theſe two chiefe occaſions cauſed the King and Queene of Nauarre to depart from Pau, whether they were goone as ſoone as they had newes of King Charles the eight his death, and to returne into Nauarre, where the Queene remained gouerneſſe aſſiſted by frier Pedro Eraſo Abbot of the Monaſtery of Oliua: King Iohn d' Albret went to Siuill to bee reſolued by King Fernand concerning theſe buſineſſes, to preuent the inconueniences which he feared, and to renue the peace, friendſhip and alliance betwixt thoſe two Kingdomes: Hee was highly honoured, as hath beene ſaid, by the Kings of Caſtile, and lodged with them in the fort of that magnificent city: and the more to gratifie and reuerence him the Conſtable, the Earle of Lerin, was forbidden to come into the caſtle.

King Fernand deſirous to get the Kingdome of Nauarre.

It is reported that King Fernand cauſed the King of Nauarre to bee ſounded whether he thought well of the exchange which hee deſired to make with the Earle of Lerin

of

of the lands which he poſſeſſed in his Kingdome, for other recompence in Caſtile, and that hee would giue King Iohn d' Albret a good ſumme of money, if hee would conſent that thoſe lands ſhould remaine to Caſtile: who notwithſtanding the euill will that he did beare to the Earle of Lerin, vttered his opinion concerning it, which was, that a man ſhould neuer exchange lands and reuenues for money. King Iohn d' Albret got no other matter by this iourney but good cheere, and diuers preſents of rich plate, hangings, horſe, iewels, and other ſuch like things: wherefore hee returned into his Realme of Nauarre, leauing the matters hee went for vn-effected. The Earle of Lerin Conſtable of Nauarre beeing at that meeting reconciled to him did follow him and ſtaied in Nauarre, certaine monthes in good quiet. We haue made mention how that Cardinall Cæſar Borgia, ſonne to Pope Alexander, had the Biſhoprike of Pampelona in nature of perpetuall adminiſtrator thereof, hee reſigned the ſame to the Cardinall of Saint Praxede: he laide aſide likewiſe his Cardinals hat, and followed the warres whereunto he was more inclined then to Church matters, and was made by his father Duke of the country called in old time Flaminia, and Gonfaloner and captaine Generall of the Church, this was the Duke Valentinois.

A man ſhould neuer exchang lands for mo. ney.

Cæſar Borgia, made Duke Valentinois.

In theſe daies beganne the warre which in proceſſe of time did ſubiect the ſtate of Milan vnder the dominion of the Kings of Caſtile. King Lewis the twelfth, of the houſe of Orleance, pretending that the right of that Duchy belonged vnto him as the proper inheritance of the Ducheſſe Valentine his grand-mother, lawfull daughter to Duke Iohn Galeas Viſcont, and heire to her two brothers Iohn Maria, and Philip, ſucceſſiue Dukes on after an other, who died without children, hee gaue ouer all thought of the conqueſt of Naples, the right of the houſe of Aniou, and turned his forces againſt the Duke then raigning, Lewis Sforza vſurper of that ſtate, whereat not onely the Potentates of Italy, hating the French dominion, were diſcontented, but they drew the Spaniſh forces to the defenſe of Prince Sforza, wherein chiefely King Frederike of Naples imployed himſelfe, ſoliciting King Fernand, and Queene Iſabella by continuall meſſengers and letters to oppoſe themſelues by all meanes againſt the greatneſſe of the French in Italy, who if they ſhould obtaine the Duchy of Milan, hee did aſſure them that they would paſſe on to Naples, and after that into Sicile which was their antient right: Therefore it was concluded in the counſell of Caſtile, to ſend backe Don Gonçal Hernandes the great captaine; who tooke ſhipping at Malaga the eight of Iuly, this yeere 1500. and led into Italy, eight thouſand foot, and twelue hundred horſe, where beeing arriued, to auoide idleneſſe, hee went ouer with his army into the Iſle of Zante in old time Zacinthium, in the Illiri an ſea, to the end to aide the Venetians oppreſſed by the Turkes army, which had taken from them Modon, Coron, Criſſe, and Pila in Morea, and the Iſland of Cephalonia, in which the Spaniſh army ioyned to the Venetian, commanded by Benedetto Pezaro, did land, and there behaued themſelues ſo valiantly, as they brought againe that Iſland vnder the Venetians power, the army of the Turke Bajazet then reigning, being gonne to Conſtantinople. The Venetians in acknowledgement of which ſeruice did honour the great captaine with the title and priuiledge, of a Gentleman of their commonwealth, a thing rarely granted by them vnto ſtrangers, who brought backe his army victorious to Meſſina, wayting for an occaſion to employ it to the preiudice of the French.

21 Caſtile.

VVars of the French againſt Lewis Sforza.

During theſe ſtirres, the Court being at Granado, there died the Prince Don Michel heire to theſe Kingdomes, to the great griefe of the Kings of Caſtile his grand-father and grand-mother, and of King Manuell his father, hauing not exceeded the age of two yeeres, who lies buried in the chappell of the Kings, ſince then builded in the ſame City: By his deceaſe the Infanta Donna Ioane, wife to the Archduke Philip had right to the ſucceſſion of theſe great Eſtates, and ſo conſequently the lotte fell vpon her ſonne Charles borne on Saint Mathias daie, as Queene Iſabella had fore-told, the Archduke and Donna Ioane his wife beeing called vpon that occaſion, prepared themſelues for their iourney into Spaine. The ſame yeere died Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza, ſecond Duke of Infantaſgo, who was buried in the Conuent

22 Portugal.

D. Ioane wife to the Archduke Philip, preſumptiue heire of Caſtile and Arragon.

Conuent of Saint Francis at Guadalajara, King Manuel being a widdower and without children, contracted marriage with the other ſiſter of his deceaſed Queene named Donna Maria, third daughter to the King and Queene of Caſtile, by whom he had many children, as hath beene heretofore declared. The new Queene of Portugal departed from Granado in the monthes of September this yeere 1500. and was conducted to the King her husband by D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Archbiſhop of Siuill and Patriarke of Alexandria, who was afterward Cardinall, with diuers other Lords and Knights. A

Caſtile.

23

The Moores perſecuted in Spaine, to cauſe them to turne to Chriſtian religion.

The conuerſion of the Moores of the Kingdome of Granado, begunne by King Fernand and Queene Iſabel, was ſo greatly by them deſired as they would not depart out of that country till they had brought it to ſuch paſſe as they intended: the Moores on the other ſide not being inſtructed, and ſeeing diuers contempts of religion, and infinite euill examples amongſt the Prelats and in all the Eccleſiaſticall Hierarchy of the Chriſtians; they thought it a ſtrang matter to be enforced to change their religion the which they thought to be holy, and that they ſhould ſo perfidiouſly breake the agreements and promiſes, vpon which they had yeelded themſelues to the Kings of Caſtile: wherefore they made all the reſiſtance poſſible: Neuertheleſſe the inhabitants of Las Alpuxarras, thoſe of the cities of Almerie, Guadix and Baça, did in ſome ſort faſhion themſelues to the Kings religion: but thoſe of Benefique, Nixar, and Guijar, ranne to armes and reſolued rather to die then to bee ſo euill intreated: wherefore they were conſtrained to ſend an army thither, by which thoſe townes were taken by force and cruell ſlaughter made of the inhabitants: namely after the fury of the fight, the Kings cauſed all the male children, which were of age to beare armes, to be executed by law, and as for the women they were all ſold for ſlaues, and this was done to quench the bloudy thirſt of the prelats and monkes, counſellors and ſolicitors of that ill vnderſtood conuerſion. Yet for all that, after the fury was paſt, the King cauſed the children of either ſex amongſt thoſe miſerable people vnder eleuen yeeres of age to bee ſeparated and baptized, giuing them their liberty as innocent of their fathers obſtinacy. This rigour was ſo farre off from fearing or abating the courage of the reſt as they thereby became more ſtubborne: their being no ſpurre in the world more ſharpe, then religion, to make men giue ouer and contemne life, and all other things to be beloued in this world, when they are conſtrained to take armes for that reſpect: for diuers Moores dwelling vpon the coaſt of Ronda, La Sierra Vermeille, and Villa longa: being brought to the laſt hope of being able to liue in the freedome of their conſciences, and to keepe their old religion, did arme themſelues, to the number of twelue thouſand perſons, which cauſed the Kings to thinke that they were entred againe into a very difficult warre, and that the conqueſt of the kingdome of Granado was not yet ended. B C D

Cruel execution of the Moores at Beniſique, Nixar, &c.

VVar renued by the perſecuted Moores.

And becauſe it behoued them to giue a preſent remedy to this fire which kindled, they diſpatched away Don Alphonſo d'Aguilar, and the Earle of Vregna, with as great forces as the preſent neceſſity could furniſh: but Don Alphonſo who was old, and a well experienced captaine, proteſted that with ſo ſmall a number he could doe the King no ſeruice, but ſhould receiue loſſe and diſhonour; for the Moores were foure to one of his people: neuertheleſſe being vrged to it, he marched againſt the enemies, who keeping themſelues cloſſe togither, and in ſtrong places, would not giue the leaſt aduantage to the Chriſtians; for whom they laide waite in the valleies and ſtreight places of the country, well knowne to themſelues, to the end to ſurprize and defeat them, the which came to paſſe: for the Chriſtians being lodged one night at the foote of Sierra Vermeille, in ſuch a place as Don Alphonſo's troupes were ſeparated from thoſe of the Earle of Vregna by a great botome which was betwixt them, the Moores at the ſhutting in of day-light fell vpon Don Alphonſo and his people with ſuch fury, as they cut them all in peeces, Don Alphonſo himſelfe lay dead vpon the place: his ſonne Don Pedro, hauing his teeth beaten out with the blow of a ſtone, and hurt with an arrow, with great difficulty eſcaped at the beginning of the fight, the Earle of Vregna beholding the ſlaughter of his friends, not being able to ſuccour them by reaſon of E F

the

A the bottome that lay betwixt them, or elſe becauſe hee would not, as diuers did thinke, for euer among great Lords, and chiefe commanders vnder one Prince are enuy, iealozie, and emulation found, which cauſe ſuch effects to the loſſe of their Prince and commonwealth.

Particular enmities among captains of one ſelfe ſide, doe oftentimes cauſe the publique cauſe to be forgotten.

King Fernand did greatly apprehend this loſſe, as alſo Don Alphenſos death, the which could not bee imputed to raſhneſſe: for he had proteſted that ſuch reſolute men as thoſe Moores were, who were in their forts, ought not to haue beene aſſailed with ſuch weake forces: and that they knew very well, the common prouerbe, which ſaith, that for to fetch a dead man out of his owne houſe, there muſt alway bee foure, how B much more then did it behooue them to goe ſtrongly accompanied againſt thoſe with whom he had to do, who weare liuing men, ſouldiers, and well armed: It is reported that as he was aſſailed, diuers Knights were of opinion to turne their backes and to flee, but he would needs make head, ſaying, that neuer any of his race did turne their backes to a Moore. Wherefore being kept backe by ſhame and diſhonour hee ſuſtei-ned that conflict, whereas hee might haue made an excuſable retreat. Now the King being in a merueilous chollor, departed from Granado againſt theſe Moores, with an intent to puniſh them rigorouſly: but perceiuing that it is euermore harder to exe-cute then to counſell; hee was content to permit them to paſſe ouer into Afrike, and to leaue the country: by this meanes after ſundry defeats and ſlaughters on either ſide, he obtained his deſire, and returned to Granado, where the marriage of D. Catherine his
C fourth daughter with Arthur Prince of Wales, heire to the crowne of England, was trea-ted of. This Princeſſe tooke her iourney towards her husband the yere 1501. accompani-ed by Don Alphonſo de Fonſeca, Archbiſhop of Saint Iames, Don Antonio de Rojas Biſhop of Majorque, who was afterward Archbiſhop of Granado and Preſident of the royall counſel, and D. Diego Fernandes de Cordoua Earle of Cabra: and at the ſame time Queene Ioane, the widdow of Naples, ſiſter to King Fernand, tooke her leaue of him and withdrew herſelfe to Valencia: The Archdnke Philip of Auſtria making preparation for his voyage into Spaine, was father of his third child, Donna Ioane his wife beeing brought in bed of a daughter named Donna Iſabella. This Princeſſe was wife to Chri-
D ſtierne King of Denmarke, hee who was depoſed by his vncle Chriſtierne King of Swethland, taken by him, and kept in perpetuall priſon: by which Chriſtierne ſhee had two daughters, that is to ſay, Dorothy, future wife to Frederike Earle Palatin, and Elector of the Empire, and Chriſtine, who was married to Franciſco Maria Sferza, Duke of Milan the yeere 1534. who died the yeere after; ſhee was ſecondly married to Francis Duke of Lorraine, father to Duke Charles who liues in our time. After that King Chriſterne was depoſed from his owne Kingdome, for inuading that of Sweuia: this Princeſſe D. Iſabella, went into England, where her Aunt Donna Catherine was married, and then ſhe died being ſix and twenty yeeres of age.

Vnſeaſonable magnanimity of D. Alphonſo de Aguilar.

Whileſt theſe things paſſed on in Spaine, the French King Lewis the twelfth, did luckily end his enterpriſe of Milan, and did ſhut vp into cloſe and perpetuall priſon Duke
E Lewis Sforza, ſurnamed the Moore, the Author of all the warres and ruines of Italy in his time: the which King Frederick of Naples conſidering, hee was mooued partly by feare, leaſt he ſhould againe haue to doe with the victorious French armies, partly not to oblige himſelfe ouer much to the Kings of Spaine, and not to giue occaſion to the Spaniſh inſolency to grow ouer ſaucie in his Kingdome: and namely becauſe King Iohn of Arragon, and Don Fernand his ſonne, had at one time called in queſtion the late King Alphonſo his teſtamentary decree, whereby hee had left that Kingdome to his baſtard ſonne, incapable thereby (as they ſaid) of ſo great an inheritance: wherefore hee beganne to haue ſecret intelligence with the French King, whereof King Fer-
F nand was ſoone aduertized: who thought, that hee was very ingratefully delt with-all and ill requited for all his coſt beſtowed in the recouery of that kingdome out of the French mens hands: and he imagned that hee ſhould not tranſgreſſe either diuine or humaine lawes, if he reputed that conqueſt to belong to him ſelfe; and if hee ſhould ioyne this action to that which his father and hee pretended in the ſaid Kingdome by reaſon of the illegitimate ſucceſſion of Don Fernand baſtard to Don Alphonſo of Arragon: wherefore, he vſing the ſelfe ſame pollicy, did practize with King Lewis, in ſuch ſort, as they parted the Kingdome of Naples betwixt themſelues, and diſpoſſeſſed King Frederike thereof, whom they condemned for light and inconſtant: vnto King Fernand were aſſigned, Calabria, and Puglia, as countries neere to his Realme of Sicile: to the French King, Abruzzo, and Terra di Lauor, where ſtands the city of Naples: on condition that King Fernand ſhould intitle himſelfe, as hee was wont to doe, King of Sicile; and the French King ſhould adde to his titles, King of Naples and of Ieruſalem, for all rights pretended by the houſe of Aniou: That theſe diuiſions ſhould be conquered from King Frederike, at the particular coſts, and by the forces of either of theſe great Kings; wiith condition that the one ſhould not hinder the others conqueſt. This agreement and diuiſion, made and concluded in great ſecret, was afterward allowed and confirmed at Rome by Pope Alexander the ſixth, the two Ambaſſadors of France and Caſtile requiring it: and the French King did preſently ſet his hand to the worke, ſending a mighty army vnder the conduct of Lewis of Armignac Duke of Nemours, who enuaded the portion aſſigned to the King his Maſter, and tooke the cities of Naples, Capua, and other ſtrong places, being aſſiſted by Cæſar Borgia Lançol Duke Valentinois, who from a Cardinall was become a ſouldier, and murtherer of his owne brother Don Franciſco Borgia Lançol Duke of Gandia. The great captaine on the other ſide, preſſing King Frederike very hardly, who beeing amazed to ſee him ſelfe ſhut in betwixt two ſuch mighty enemies, beeing not prepared, nor ſtrong enough to reſiſt, at the laſt giuing place to neceſſity, hee reſolued to make an agreement with the French King, making ouer to him all his right, and the forts which he held, on condition that he might be Duke of Aniou, and receiue in France where hee would remaine thirty thouſand ducats of yeerely rent.

24 Sforza taken by the French.

The King of France and Spaine, diuide the Realme of Naples, and depoſe King Frederike.

This agreement was concluded to Frederikes great loſſe; who contemned King Fernand of Caſtile, or at the leaſt did diſtruſt his friendſhip, perceiuing that contrary to the hope which he had to be aided by him at his need, and wherein hee had entertained Proſpero Colonna with great numbers of ſouldiers, he did ſhew himſelfe to bee his enemy: It may be that the feare which he had of his owne ſouldiers did haſten him to this concluſion, hauing no meanes to pay them their entertainment, the fauor of Spaine failing him, and fearing leaſt they would haue plaide him the like trick, as the Switzers, defrauded of their paies, had done to the Duke of Milan, whom they deliuered to the French King his enemy. He went into France with his wife and children, his eldeſt excepted, and carried with him his moueables and money, receiuing of Duke Valentine a great ſum of glod for his Artillery and munition which he ſold to him. This King Frederike was the fifth of the houſe of Arragon, who had ſucceſſiuely held the crowne of Naples, counting from King Alphonſo of Arragon, adopted by Queene Ioane, who deceaſſing at Naples the yeere 1458. left it to his baſe ſonne Fernand, hee to his ſonne Alphonſo: Alphonſo, inforced by Charles the eight, gaue it ouer to his ſonne Fernand, by whoſe death the Kingdome fell to Frederike his vncle, who hauing reigned foure yeeres, made it ouer to King Lewis of France, and died in the city of Tours; leauing his eldeſt ſonne D. Fernand of Arragon, Duke of Calabria, heire to all that he poſſeſt, whom he had left fortified in the inexpugnable city of Tarentum, with D. Iohn de Gueuara Earle of Potentia, and other Knights, who neuertheleſſe being beſeeged and aſſailed by the great captaine, did yeeld, vpon condition to bee ſet at liberty: the which was not performed; for the great captaine to preuent the inconueniences which might happen, detained and ſent them priſoners into Spaine.

King Frederike of Naples, goes into France.

The great captaine makes none account of keeping his faith and promiſe.

About the time of the agreement betwixt theſe two Kings, not long before. Claude daughter to King Lewis was borne, ſhee was preſumptiue heire to the Duchy of Britan: There was motion made of marrying her, when ſhe ſhould come to age with Charls of Auſtria, ſonne to the Archduke Philip, and to the Infanta D. Ioane his wife, who purſuing there voyage into Spaine, went thorow France, and were by King Lewis his command greatly honored in all places, and namely in the city of Paris.

Among

A Among other poynts and articles of this Treatie of marriage, it was concluded (as the Spaniards write) betwixt the Emperour Maximillian, pretending right to the Dutchie of Milan, and King Lewis, who then poſſeſſed it; that hee, by whoſe fault this marriage was not accompliſhed, ſhould forfeit all his right in the ſayd Dutchie. The Arch-duke and the Infanta his wife beeing at Paris, were required by the King to do him homage, as to their Soueraigne, for the Earledome of Flanders, and other lands belonging to the Crowne: whereat the Infanta Donna Ioane was ſo diſpleaſed, as albeit ſhee were in the Kings dominions, ſhee did obſtinatly contradict it, and would neuer conſent thereunto. Theſe two houſes by the iuſt iudgement of God were appoynted to vexe one ano-
B ther by long warre in time to come, for to ſcourge the world. It is an hard matter to entertaine the friendſhip of great men, or when it is diſioyned, to ſet it firmely together againe.

Homage for Flanders and Artois refuſed to the French King.

The houſes of Spayne and France, in former times vnited by holy concord, and moſt profitable friendſhip, did firſt of all diſagree about the Earledome of Roſſillon, pawned to King Lewis the eleuenth by King Iohn of Arragon for 3. hundred thouſand crownes, about the reſtitution whereof, pernitious warres enſued, the which in ſome ſort beeing compoſed, they were afterward renewed concerning the Kingdome of Naples, and either part did not let to ſearch, and take all occaſions lawful, or faigned, to hurt one another, and to violate and breake all agreements procured betwixt them: in ſuch ſort as there is no Region on the earth, which hath not beene troubled with their quarrels, or
C felt the miſeries and calamities of their warres.

The agreement made betwixt the two Kings, diuiding another mans Kingdome, did not laſt long: for before the yeare was ended, there aroſe a great quarrell betwixt the two Kings Gouernours and Lieutenants in the Kingdome of Naples about a bitte of ground lying betwixt Puglia and Abruzzo, called the Capitanato, the which each of them pretended for his owne, and maintained it for his part, becauſe that otherwiſe they ſhould be depriued of a taxe rayſed vppon cattell in that countrey, the which in leſſe then a moneths ſpace affoorded more then foureſcore thouſand Duckets: and the French men did particularly challenge it, becauſe this Capitanato did abound in corne, wherewith the D countrey of Abruzzo and Terra di Lauor was furniſhed, thinking it to bee a very great loſſe, if they ſhould leaue it to the Spaniards. Howſoeuer it was, their claime was ambiguous, each others limits beeing not plainely ſpecified in the diuiſion, ſo as they fell to armes more fiercely then before, wherein for that time the French-men preuayled, and made themſelues maſters, not onely of the ground that was in ſtrife, but likewiſe of many places of Calabria and Puglia for which there had beene no contention at all.

In the meane ſpace, the Arch-duke Philip and Donna Ioane his wife arriued at Guipuſcoa, where Don Bernard de Rojas and Sandouall, who was afterward Marquis of Denia, with great numbers of Lords and Knights of name, waited for them at Fontarabie, by whome they were conducted, and theſe Princes paſſing by Saint Adrians mount, did E chriſten Philip de Laſcan, ſonne and heire to the houſe of Laſcan. From thence by Alaua, Bureua, Burgos, Vailliodolit, Medina del campo, Segobia, and Madrid, in all which places they had ſumptuous and magnificent entertainement, they came at laſt to the cittie of Toledo, where the three Eſtates of the Realmes of Caſtile and Leon were aſſembled.

25

Arriuall of the Arch-duke & D. Ioane his wife in Caſtile.

King Fernand and Queene Izabella departing from Seuile, came likewiſe to Toledo, where after they had beene feaſted, and entertayned with diſports for the ſpace of fifteen dayes, Philip of Auſtria and Donna Ioane were ſworne and acknowledged Princes of the Aſturia's, and eldeſt heires to the Kingdomes of Caſtile and Leon, in the right of Donna Ioane: This was done in the preſence of King Fernand and Queene Izabella, the Primate
F Friar Francis Ximenes, Arch-biſhoppe of the ſame cittie, Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, Arch-biſhoppe of Seuile, Cardinall of Saint Sabine, and Patriarke of Alexandria, the Biſhops of Calaorra, Palence, Oſma, Cordoua, Salamanca, Iaen, Cité Rodrigo, Malaga, Mondognedo, and other Prelates: of Bernardin de Velaſco Conſtable of Caſtile, the Dukes of Infantaſgo, Alua, Bejar, Albuquerque, and the Marquis of Villena, the Earles

Ceremonies at the ſwearing to the Princes Philip & Ioane

Earles of Oropeſa, Miranda, and Benalcaçar, Crugna, Siruella, Ribadeo, Fuençalida, A Ajamonte, and others, with the Procurators, and Commiſſioners of all the citties and prouinces of Spaine, which haue place in ſuch aſſemblies. This oath beeing made for Caſtile, King Fernand was deſirous to haue the like done for the Kingdome of Arragon and dependancies thereof: and ſo he iourneyed towards Sarragoſſa, leauing the Queene with the Princes at Toledo, who went to paſſe away the hotte time of Iuly and Auguſt at Ocagna, recreating themſelues in the pleaſant forreſt of Aranjues neere to the riuer Tayo: and from thence they departed to Sarragoſſa, where by the Eſtates they were likewiſe declared and ſworne Princes of Girone, heires to Arragon, Valence, Cattalognia, Sicill, and other Countries belonging to that Crowne. The Queene in the meane time B ſtaying at Toledo, remoued to Madrid, where ſhe beganne to be euill diſpoſed of her perſon, which cauſed king Fernand to haſten his returne to her, the Princes deſiring to follow him, did ſeparat themſelues, becauſe the Princeſſe was with child, wherefore ſhee remayned at Sarragoſſa, and the Prince went to Madrid. Theſe matters fell out, the yere 1502. wherein dyed the Cardinall Diego Hurtado of Mendoza in the ſame cittie of Madrid. Don Iohn of Eſtuniga, who had beene Maſter of Alcantara, and afterward was Cardinall ſucceeded him in the Arch-biſhoppricke of Siuill. The Marquis of Denja dyed likewiſe. The precedent yeare, about the time that the Princeſſe Catherine departed into England, Don Iohn d' Arias del Villar dyed, who was Preſident of Vailliodolit, and Biſhop of Segobia, in whoſe place ſucceeded Doctor Iohn de Medina, Biſhop of Carthagena. C
There dyed alſo D. Lewis de la Cerde, firſt Duke of Medina Celi, ſonne to Earle Gaſton. The Prince of Wales, husband to the Infanta Catherine, died likewiſe this yeare; and the Cittie of Gibraltar was re-united to the Crowne, and another perſecution was raiſed againſt the Moores.

26 Before the Kings of Caſtile departed from Siuill to come to Toledo, they had ſent an
The king of Caſtile ſends an Ambaſſade to the grand Cairo. Ambaſſadour to the Souldan of Egipt, who was as Emperour of Arabia, acknowledged then for Soueraigne, ouer all the Kings of Affricke, who had beene informed by the Kings of Tremeſſen, Fez, Bugie, Tunis and others, of diuers rigors and inhumanities exerciſed vppon the Moores and Iewes dwelling in Spaine, which that Prince did greatly recent. The Ambaſſadour ſent thither was called Peter Martyr Angleria of Milan, Deane D Peter Martyr of Angleria Ambaſſador. of Granado, a learned and well-experienced perſon, vnto whome were letters of credite and inſtructions giuen, how to appeaſe the Souldan, and to perſwade him otherwiſe, then he had beene before informed: Wherefore he went by Venice, where the Seigneurie prouided him of a ſhippe to carrie him to Alexandria: there he found diuers Chriſtian Merchants, with a Conſul, who was a Cattelan by nation, by whom hee was well entertayned. The Warden of the Monaſterie of mount Sion beeing aduertized, ſome few dayes before of his comming, ſent him word, that he would meete him at Cairo: therefore Peter Martyr ſent certaine Friars before to Cairo, whom he had brought with him, for to receiue that Friar Warden: and to obtaine a ſafe-conduct for his owne perſon and trayne from the Souldan, to the end to declare his Ambaſie vnto him. The father War- E den and his Friars beeing arriued at Cayro found a Truch-man or Interpreter there who was a Spaniard borne at Momblanc in the Realme of Valencia, vnto whom hauing giuen notice of the Ambaſſadors arriuall at Alexandria, and demaunded the ſafe-conduct, the Souldan granted it, and ſent word to the Gouernor of Alexandria, whom the cal Admirall, to cauſe him to be conducted in ſafetie. But the Monkes hauing vnderſtood by their conferences with the Truchman, how ſiniſterly the Souldan was poſſeſſed againſt the Kings of Caſtil, by the reports of the Moores of Granado, and the Iewes which were expulſed out of Spaine, they did aduertize him to be well aduiſed what he did, and to foreſee the danger he had put himſelfe in, by comming to the preſence of that angry Prince, whoſe anſwer, perhaps might be death: but the Ambaſſador was no whit amazed thereat: F
but ſayd, that it would be a great happineſſe for him to die in ſo honourable a cauſe: ſo he tooke his iourney, going againſt the ſtream of the riuer Nilus, accompanied by diuers Mamelues in Egypt. Mameluke ſouldiers, which were Chriſtians renied, or children of bought Chriſtians, in whoſe hands lay the gouernment of al the affairs of Egypt, and namely, out of their bands was the Souldan choſen.

Being

A Being come to Caire, he was longed in the ſayd Truchmans houſe, and then the day following, he was ledde to the Caſtle to the Souldans pallace, and paſſing thorough diuers galleries full of Mameluques, he was brought into an hall where the Souldan taried for his comming: Hee found him ſitting vppon a bed of State, like vnto women, made in faſhion of an altar, clothed in a gowne of skarlet with large ſleeues furred with Martins, and vpon his head a rich Turbant, with two hornes after a ſtrange faſhion, and a ſword neere vnto him, being compaſſed about with diuers Gouernours of Prouinces, which they called Admirals. Before this Emperor, the Ambaſſadour preſented himſelfe, apparelled in a coate of blacke ſattin, and a gowne of purple veluet, kneeling vpon one knee, the Monkes and other Chriſtians which followed him, kneeled on both their knees and hands, as though they would haue kiſſed the earth, then riſing vp, and going on neerer by two and two paces, they made three ſuch reuerences: then ſtanding vpon their feete, the Ambaſſadour went a little forwarder neere to the Prince, and hauing made a fourth reuerence, he ſtood vp, and preſented the Kings of Caſtils letters of credit to the Truchman, the which beeing opened and read with diuers ceremonies, the Souldan told him, that hee was welcome. Then the Ambaſſadour making a great reuerence, told him, the Kings his Lords and Maſters had ſent him thither to ſalute and viſit him in their name, and to offer him whatſoeuer was in their power, excepting that which belonged to Chriſtian Religion, and that he had commandement and inſtruction to communicate diuers buſineſſes with him, Wherefore he beſought him to be pleaſed to giue him audience in a more priuate manner: the Souldan anſwered him, that he was contented to do ſo, and told him, that if in the meane time he wanted any thing, he ſhould ſpeake, and that whatſoeuer he demanded ſhould be giuen: The Ambaſſadour hauing againe thanked him, and ſayd, that he could deſire no more fauour and courteſie then hee had alreadie receiued, then tooke his leaue and returned to his lodging; whether the Souldan ſent him diuers preſents of meates.

Admirals Gouernors of Prouinces.

Three dayes after, the Ambaſſadour accompanied by the Truch-man, was brought againe to the Pallace early in the morning, before the Ambaſſadours of the Kings of Affricke and the Moores were riſen, and finding the Souldan at leyſure, he gaue him ſecret audience, where he anſwered very pertinently to all the Souldans demaunds, and did highly content him, and this conference betwixt them laſted till two of the clocke in the after-noone, all the contrarie Ambaſſadours beeing come to Court, in hope to ſee the Spaniſh diſgraced: but they were deceyued, for they beheld him returne to his houſe very honourably accompanied. Afterward, the Mooriſh Ambaſſadours in two ſeuerall audiences, preſſing and accuſing the Kings of Caſtile, Peter Martyr did ſo well diſguiſe and handle the matter, as he perſwaded the Souldan, that whatſoeuer his aduerſaries had ſaid, was but meere vntruths: Wherefore hee beeing ſent backe againe the ſame time, the Truchman procured a fourth audience, wherein the Ambaſſador of Caſtile being heard almoſt an whole day, did in ſuch manner content and ſatisfie the Souldan, as hee procured his fauour and friendſhip for his King and Queene. And as hee was going forth of the Souldans preſence, two Admirals cloathed him with a gowne of Damaske furred with very rich Ermines, (it was in the moneth of Februarie) for which hauing giuen thankes, and made his vſuall reuerences, hee returned with his trayne. In this manner are the faults of great men excuſed by great men. Before Peter Martyrs departure, he feaſted and banqueted the Admirals and chiefeſt Mamelucs, ſo as they were highly contented with him: and departing from Cayro, he went to viſit the notable places of Egypt and Syria: of which voyage and ambaſſage hee wrote a diſcourſe at his returne. This is hee which wrote an hiſtorie of the Indies by Decades in Latin, which he entitled, The Ocean, vnto the yeare 1526. He returned into Spaine with honour, and gaue good account to the Catholicke Kings of his Legation.

The nauigations to the Indies were this yeare very common, diuers particular perſons, tickled with a deſire of gaine, vndertaking thoſe dangerous voyages at their owne coſts, by the Kings permiſſion notwithſtanding. Rodrigo de Baſtidas was one of thoſe aduenturers, who ſet forth two Caruels at his owne coſts, and Iohn de Ledeſma's and others, carrying with him Iohn de la Coſa, an excellent Marriner borne in Saint Mary port,

27 Voyages of diuers particular perſons to the Indies.

port, who departing from Cales, ſayled neere to Cape de Vela, and ranne one hundred three ſcore and tenne leagues vppon the coaſt from that Cape to the Gulph of Vraba, and Darian, in which are found Caribana, Zenu, Carthagena, Zamba, and S. Martha, places inhabited by people called Caribes, who feed on mans fleſh, without law or naturall honeſtie, beeing armed with darts and poyſoned arrowes. Rodrigo de Baſtida beeing afterwards come to the cittie of Domingo, did loſe his Caruels there, and was committed to priſon by the Commander Francisco de Bouadilla, Gouernor of the Iland of Hiſpagniola, laying to his charge, that he had trafficke with the Indians for gold, defrauding the king of his right: wherefore he ſent him priſoner into Spaine: but the kings ſet him at libertie, knowing that this voyage was for the publike good, and gaue him 200. Duckets of rent. Nicholas d'Ouando, Commander of Larez, of the Order of Alcantara, a valiant Knight, did by the kings commandement, ſet ſayle, with thirty ſhippes, and a great company of ſouldiers, to ſucceed the Commander Bouadilla, taking along Rowland Ximenes in his company, the enemy and accuſers of the breethren Columbus, did embarke himſelfe in the ſame veſſell, which had brought the new Gouernour, whereof Antonio de Torres was Captaine, hauing with them more then an hundred thouſand Duckets weight of gold, and among others, a graine of pure gold to preſent vnto the Queene, weighing 3. thouſand, three hundred Caſtillans: but their hap was ſuch, as both they and their wealth periſhed by ſea: the Admirall Columbus, and his brother beeing by that meanes reuenged of the great rigour that Bouadilla had vſed towards them, by ſending them from the Indies in yrons into Spayne, and of Rowland Ximenes ingratitude and rebellion, with whom were drowned more then three hundred men, ſo as of thoſe thirty ſhips, hardly ſixe eſcaped. Nicholas d'Ouando remained in his gouernement of the Iſland of Hiſpagniola, the ſpace of ſixe yeares, all matters ſucceeding well and proſperouſly with him, by reaſon of his humanity and gentlenes: he conquered the Prouinces of Higney, Zauana, Guaycarima, he pacified that of Xaragua, and vſing all his authoritie with ſuch courteſie and modeſtie, he got honour and wealth for himſelfe and the Kings his maſters, vnto whom hee ſent great treaſures, in recompence whereof he was made great Commander of Alcantara. Then was the Admirall Columbus permitted to go to ſea, who departed with foure Caruels ſet foorth at the Kings coſt, with an hundred, threeſcore and ten ſaylers: but beeing come to the mouth of the riuer Oçman in the Iſland of Hiſpagniola, the Gouernour Nicholas d' Ouanda would not ſuffer him to come into the city of S. Domingo: wherfore he ſayled to the port Eſcondido or hidden, and after came to the riuer and cape of Figtrees: from whence he ran more then three hundred and ſeuenty leagues alongſt the Southerne coaſt, deſirous to find a paſſage beyond the Equinoctiall, he came to a place called Nombre de Dios, and from thence returned to Cuba, and foorth-with paſſed to Iamaica where he loſt two Caruels.

Nicholas d'Ouando Gouernor of the Indies.

The Gouernour Bouadilla drowned, with three hundred Spaniards.

Columbus his fourth and laſt voyage to the Indies.

In this Iland the Admirall had many croſſes, for moſt of his people fell ſicke there to the death, then they mutined, and would haue ſlaine one another, Francisco de Porras, Treaſurer of his nauie being author of that ſedition: and beſides that, the Indians refuſed to giue him victuals, which did greatly trouble him: for this he found a preſent remedie, and beeing a good Aſtronomer, he knew that the day following, there would bee a great Eccliſpe of the Moone, he told the idolatrous Indians, that if they gaue him not victuals, they ſhould all of them die of the plague, and for a true token thereof, they ſhould the morrow after ſee the Moone appeare all bloudie; the which by reaſon of the Eclipſe, became duskie and ſpotted: the Indians were ſo greatly amazed thereat, as they beſought the Admirall to pardon them, and to reconcile them to the Moone, and brought him more victuals then he had need of. Hauing remained a yeare in Iamayca, the Admirall Columbus returned into Spayne, from whence he neuer afterwards did ſtirre: this was his fourth and laſt voyage to the Indies.

Columbus foretels an Eclipſe of the Moone to the Indians to feare them.

28 Portugal.

The ſame courſe held king Manuel in his nauigation to the Eaſt Indies, wherein hee ſpared no coſt: for hauing had ample information of the whole voyage of Calicut by D. Vaſco de Gama: he had ſent thither in the yeare 1500. a Nauie of twelue Carauels, vnder the command of Captaine Pero Aluares Cabralde, a Gentleman of Portugal, followed by other Gentlemen manned with fifteene hundred ſouldiers, carrying along with him

fiue

A fiue Friars, and good ſtore of merchandize, to exchange for ſpices, and other things which the Eaſt produceth, all of it according to the order and appointment of Don Vaſco de Gama.

Theſe Caruels hauing ſayled in view of the Ilands of the Canaries, and arriued at S. Iames, as they diſcouered the Iſle of Breſill, there appeared to them a Comet with long and fearefull beames towards the Eaſt: continuing their voyage, there aroſe ſo great and ſtrange a tempeſt, as by day the water of the ſea ſeemed as blacke as pitch, and in the night like to fire, which ſwallowed foure of thoſe ſhippes, the reſt of the Nauy ſayling on in great danger, came in ſight of cape Double, and from thence arriued at Moſambique, B then ſayling towards Melinde, and beyond that to Anjauina, they came at laſt within a league of Calicut: from whence he beganne to contract with the King of the ſame countrie: but afterwards they fell at oddes, which cauſed loſſe to either of them. Vppon this occaſion, Pero Aluares Cabralda, went into the land of Malabar, belonging to the King of Cochin, with whome he agreed, and found meanes to lade his ſhips with ſpices: and ſo returning homewards, he touched at the cape of Good hope, and from thence to Lisbone, where he arriued in Iuly, in the yeare 1501. with ſixe Caruels of twelue, that hee 1501.
carried out with him, hauing beene in that voyage neere ſixteene moneths.

Before his returne Iohn de la Nueua Gallego, departed from Lisbon with three ſhippes and a Caruell for the ſelfe ſame voyage of Calicut: but King Manuel conceyuing in his mind to find a way to the Iſles of Moluccos, and thoſe countries where the ſpices grow,
C he ſent the ſame yeare 1501. a skilfull marriner called Americus Veſpucius a Florentine, with foure Caruels, who paſſed not much farther then Saint Auguſtines Cape, and without taking notice of the great riuer of ſiluer, or Rio de Plata, he returned home. Voyage of Iohn de la Nueua a Portugal.

The yeare 1502. Don Vaſco de Gama, Admirall of Portugall, was againe ſent by the King into the Eaſt, with thirteene ſhippes, and three Caruels, manned with great numbers of Gentlemen and ſouldiers, with Merchandizes, munitions and victuals, and all other things neceſſarie for ſo long and painefull a voyage: and within few dayes after, hee ſent other fiue ſhippes to follow Don Vaſco, commanded by Stephano Gamo. By theſe were new lands diſcouered, to the great profit and commodity of the nations of Europe. An. 1502. D. Vaſco de Gama his ſecond voyage.

D This ſame yeare King Manuel had by his wife Queene Mary, a ſonne called Iohn, who ſucceeded him in the Kingdome, the day of whoſe birth was rainy, and ſuch thunder and lightning on the day of his chriſtening, as the Royall pallace was in danger of beeing burned. Birth of prince Iohn of Portugal.

And the yeare following 1503. his daughter the Infanta Izabella was born, who came to be Empreſſe of Germany, and was mother to king Philip the ſecond deceaſed. Don Vaſco beeing returned from his luckie and proſperous voyage, king Manuel gaue no intermiſſion to that moſt profitable and honorable nauigation: but the Portugals hauing raiſed warre in the Eaſt betwixt the Kings of Calicut and Cochin, tooke the King of Cochins part, beeing by him receyued and welcommed into his countrie and hauens: ſo as he of Calicut did in ſhort time know, that he had greatly erred in wronging his gueſts. An. 1503. Birth of D. Iſabella.

E The yeare 1504. King Manuel hauing notice of this warre, was diſpleaſed therewith, and ſet foorth a Nauy of twelue great ſhippes, Don Lopes Suares de Mereſes beeing Admiral of the ſame, who arriued in ſafetie at Cochin, by meanes whereof they did greatly encreaſe the renowne of the Portugals, and eſtabliſhed the trafficke, pourchaſing their King friends, not onely among thoſe Eaſterne people, but alſo tributarie Princes for his ſeruants. Theſe conqueſts were purſued by Ferdinand of Almeyda, and Alphonſo of Albuquerque, and other vertuous and valiant Captaines, which haue continued thoſe voyages ſince, and by meanes thereof haue carried ſome knowledge of the name of Ieſus Chriſt to thoſe barbarous and vnbeleeuing people. An. 1504. Voyage of Lopes Suares de Meneſes.

F The Court of Caſtile lying at Alcala de Henares, the yeare 1503. the Princeſſe D. Ioane was there brought in bed of a ſonne, who was named Don Ferdinand, who was king of Hongarie and Bohemia, and at the laſt Emperour. In Alcala dyed Don Guttiere de Cardegna, great Commander of Leon, a moſt faithfull ſeruant to the Kings, who would haue giuen the great Commanderie to Iohn Lopes of Leaçarraga their Treaſurer, but he refuſed it, ſaying, that he had alreadie too much wealth: hee likewiſe refuſed the 29 Caſtille.

place

place of generall Superintendent of the Kings reuenues, and left behind him the report A of a loyall, faithfull, and iuſt man in all his affairs: he was borne in the towne of Ognate.

The affaires of Italy not ſucceeding proſperouſly for the Kings of Spaine, they began to reſolue vppon ſomewhat that might bee hurtfull to the French: The great Captaine kept himſelfe in Barletta, beeing conſtrayned to retire himſelfe thither, and wanting all neceſſarie things: ſo as the French forraged the countrey at their owne pleaſure: but at the laſt hauing new ſupplies, as well from Sicill, (from whence Hugo de Cardona entred into Calabria, with certaine companies of Spaniards, which had ſerued the Duke Valentinois, when hee warred vppon the Vrſins, with intent to haue made himſelfe Lord of Romagnia) as alſo from Spaine, from whence the King ſent Don Manuel de Bonarides B
Antonio de Leuz his firſt paſſage into Italy. with certaine numbers of horſe and foote: with which troupes Antonio de Leua did firſt paſſe into Italy, who was a famous Captaine in the warres of Lombardy and Piedmont, betwixt France and Spain, and likewiſe after that other Spaniſh companies arriued vnder the conduct of Don Pedro Puerto Carrero, who dying in Italy, hee left his men vnder the commaund of Ferdinand of Andrada, who hauing receyued by the gulph of Venice ſome Germaines, which had beene leauied by him, hee employed theſe forces in ſuch ſort, beeing ſometimes diuided, and ſometimes vnited, as hee ſoone reſtored all things, and ſuppreſſed the enemie by the winning of many victories, Spayne hauing alwaies after that time the aduantage. Yet they had treated an accord betwixt the two Kings, Lewis Prince Philipp in Flanders. and Ferdinand, and had ſent Ambaſſadours to that end, but without any effect: vntil that C the paſſage and the returne of the Arch-duke Philip Prince of Spayne, into Flanders, gaue ſome greater hope of an agreement. This Prince paſſing thorough France in his returne, as he had done going, was honorably receiued in all places, eſpecially at Blois, whereas King Lewis attended him, who, to vſe the Arch-duke with greater courteſie, and to aſſure him the more, had ſent certaine French Noblemen into Flanders for hoſtages, vntill he were arriued, the which the Arch-duke cauſed to returne, beeing loath to yeeld vnto the King, in demonſtrations of friendſhip and ceremonies. Beeing at Blois, they treated an accord betwixt the French King and him of Spaine, the Arch-duke Philip hauing an ample Commiſſion, with this onely reſtraint, that hee ſhould communicate all things to the Ambaſſadours of Caſtile, which were ſent expreſly with him, and ſhold D gouerne himſelfe by their counſell.

Treaty of peace betwixt France and Spaine. Matters beeing debated, in the end they were concluded, by the confirmation of a future marriage betwixt the Ladie Claude of France, the Kings eldeſt daughter, and Don Charles of Auſtria, ſonne and heire to great Eſtates which fell to the houſe of Auſtria: capitulating, that the Lands which were in queſtion in the Realme of Naples, ſhould be left in depoſito, in the Arch-dukes hands, and the future ſpouſes ſhould from that time intitle themſelues Kings of Naples, and Dukes of Calabria. That the French king ſhould enioy that portion which did belong vnto him in the ſayd Realme, and appoint whome he pleaſed, to gouerne it in the names of the Princes Charles and Claude, and that the mariage beeing conſummated, he ſhould giue it in dowrie with his daughter. E

This peace was ſollemnely ſworne in the Church at Blois, but yet it prooued of no effect: for notwithſtanding that the Arch-duke gaue ſpeedie aduice vnto the Kings Don Fernand and Donna Iſabella, yet they did not forbeare to make warre in the Realme of Naples, whence they had daily intelligence that their great Captaine proſpered: wherefore hee beeing required by the Duke of Nemours, Lieutenant for the French King, to ſtay all acts of hoſtilitie, he anſwered, that hee had no ſuch commaundement from the King Don Fernand his maſter, but continuing to make warre, as well in Calabria, as in other parts of the Realme, the French had alwaies the worſt, hauing had two Armies defeated in leſſe then eight dayes, one in Calabria, led by the Lord of Aubigny, who was then taken, with many other Noblemen: the other at Cirignole, whereas Lewis of Ar- F maignac Duke of Nemours, their Generall, was ſlaine with many French. By meanes of which victories the great Captaine tooke Naples, Capua, Auerſo and Melfi, by compoſition, and in the end the two caſtles of Naples by mynes and other practiſes inuented by Peter of Nauarre: ſo as the French had nothing but Gayette, and ſome other ſmall places remayning in the Realme of Naples.

The

A The kings of Caſtille being aduertiſed of theſe things, they little regarded the accord made by the Archduke their ſonne in law, alledging for excuſe, that he had exceeded his charge, and had not gouerned himſelfe by the aduice of the embaſſadors which went in his companie: Yet they ſent embaſſadours into Fraunce, to treat a new peace, in a more honeſt forme than before, propounding, that the realme ſhould be reſtored to king Frederic: But king Lewis holding them but mockeries, and that the kings of Spaine had no wills to diſpoſſeſſe themſelues, ſeeing that all things ſucceeded wiſhfully for them, he ſent backe their embaſſadors without any other anſwer. 1504

Excuſes of the Catholike kings for not maintaining of the peace.

30 Before that the Court of Caſtille parted from Alcala, D. Iohn Chacon, gouernor of B the frontire of Murcia, died. From Alcala the queene came to Madrid, and from thence to Segobia, where ſhe had newes of the death of Pope Alexander, by poiſon which had bin prepared for certaine cardinals, by the duke of Valentinois, his ſonne, the which he alſo drunke, through the negligence of the cup-bearer, or butler, who tooke one bottle for another. Cardinall Franciſco Thedeſchin Picolonimi of Siena, ſucceeded him, who was called Pius the third; but hauing held the See but ſix and twentie dayes, there was choſen Pope Iulian of Rouere, biſhop of Alba, and then of Oſtia, cardinall of S. Peter ad Vincula, whom they named Iulio the ſecond. In theſe elections of Popes, which are made through the fauour of the princes and great monarches of Chriſtendome, for the intereſt of their temporall eſtates, the citie of Rome was in great feare and jelouſie, that the great cap-
C taine would approach with his victorious armie on the one ſide, and on the other the lord of Tremouille being ſent into Italie, by the French king, with great forces, and aſsiſted by Florentines, Siennois, the duke of Ferrara, and the marqueſſe of Mantoua, either of them to fauour the cardinals of their faction, and to make a Pope by force, to the prejudice of the citie, and of the whole territorie. This yeare there were ſixteene foiſts of Moores ſcoured the coaſts of Valencia, who landing neere vnto the riuer Xucar, aſsailed the towne of Cullera, carried away ſeuentie priſoners, and committed other ſpoyls. The duke of Valentinois, at his fathers death, was ſo ill with this drinke which he had taken, as he was conſtrained to be a neuter, as he had carried himſelfe in the warres betwixt Fraunce and Spaine, yet adhering more to the great captaine, for the deſigne which they both had D to inuade Tuſcanie, when as the warres of Naples ſhould be ended. Hauing entertained himſelfe in fauour with Pope Iulio, at his aduancement, they fell afterwards to quarell, for certaine places in Romania, held by the duke of Valentinois, which the Pope would haue, ſo as the duke was ſtaied at Oſtia, meaning to imbarke, & to go to Specie, and from thence by Ferrara to Imola. Afterwards hauing in ſome ſort ſatisfied the Popes deſire, and being ſet at libertie, he retired to Naples, hauing a paſport from the great captaine, thinking to be verie ſafe there: whereas propounding many great enterpriſes, euen vpon Tuſcanie, and beginning to make preparation to put his deſigne in execution, the great captain ſtaied him priſoner, ſaying that it was by the commaundement of the king D. Ferdinand, to whom he ought more reuerence than to the paſport he had giuen him, and ſo he ſent him
E into Spaine, where he was lodged in the caſtle of Medina del Campo, called la Mote. By this meanes the great captaine kept this turbulent man from troubling the affaires of Italie any more. The armie led by the lord of Tremouille, being come into the realme of Naples, did nothing but increaſe the glorie and reputation of the great captaine, who by a memorable victorie gotten at the riuer of Garillan, did there ſettle the Spaniards commaund: for ſoone Gajete, which was the onely hope of the French, yeelded, vpon condition, that all priſoners ſhould be deliuered, and that the French might retire ſafely into France, who being naked, and vnprouided of all things, periſhed in a maner all by the way of hunger, cold, and other extremities. At the ſame time king Lewis hauing appointed two armies to inuade Spaine, one by Guipuſcoa, the other by Cattelonia, that which F marcht towards Fontarrabie, wherof the lord of Albret had the charge, could neuer come together; the other led by the marſhall of Rieux, entred by the countrey of Roſsillon, and beſieged Sauſſes, but not being able to take it, he was forced to retire, both for that he fell ſicke, as alſo for that D. Frederic of Toledo, duke of Alua, Generall of the Spaniſh armie which was raiſed at Perpignan, began to march to raiſe the ſiege, king Ferdinand being alſo come in perſon into Cattelonia, to giue order for the affaires of this warre, the Death of Pope Alexander the ſixt.

Quarels betwixt Pope Iulio and the duke of Valentinois.

Duke of Valentinois ſent priſoner into Spaine by D. Gonſalo.

Retreat of the French out of the realme of Naples, verie miſerable.

Two armies of French in Spain.

1504 which afterwards had ſome intermiſſion, by a truce of fiue monethes, which was made at G the inſtance of king Frederic, who was not out of hope to returne into his realme: Which conceit was grounded vpon the demonſtrations of fauour were made him both by France and Spaine; which was but a vaine content, and a comfort to him in his miſerable eſtate.
This truce was afterwards continued for three yeares, both by ſea and land, with free traf-ficke for all their ſubiects, except the French in the realme of Naples. For the great ſer-uices which D. Gonſalo Fernandes, ſurnamed the Great Captaine, had done to the kings D.
D. Gonſalo Fernandes made duke of Terra noua and Seſſa. Ferdinand, and D. Iſabella, in this warre, he obtained the duchie of Terra noua, and of Seſſa, beſides the duchie of S. Ange, which king Frederic had ginen him, when as he fauoured him, and the Conſtableſhip of the realme of Naples. Pedro Nauarro had alſo for his H Pedro Nauarro made earle of Albeto: his beginning. good ſeruices, and in recompence of his great induſtrie during the warre, the countrey of Albeto, in the ſame realme of Naples, neere vnto Aquih. This man from a ſmall condition came to this greatneſſe by his vertue: for his beginning being ſcarce knowne, he firſt of all went to ſea, and was a mariner, after which he was a footman to the cardinall D.
Iohn of Arragon, then a ſouldier, and in the end a famous captaine, and an earle. After the Earthquake in Spaine. ſwearing of the ſaid truce, there was a great earthquake throughout all Spaine, to the great terrour and amazement of all men, by the which many houſes, churches, forts, and other buildings, were ſhaken and ruined.

At that time, they ſay, the teſtament of the deceaſed king Henrie the fourth, was found by the diligence of Hernando Gomes of Herrera of Madrid, who hauing notice from the I curat of S. Croix, of the ſame towne, that this teſtament was in the towne of Almeyda in Portugal, whither he had tranſported it with other writings of importance, he aduerti-ſed the queene, and by her commiſsion went to Almeyda, with the curat, found theſe writings, and brought them away: In recompence whereof, the king made the bacheler Hernand, Alcayde, or Prouoſt of the juſtice of his houſe and court. The queene did not ſee this teſtament, as it is probable; for ſhe fell extreamly ſicke, and after foure monethes lan-Death of the Q. Iſabella. guiſhing died, at Medina del Campo, in the yeare 1504, being 53 yeares old, and ſeuen monethes, and the thirtieth yeare of her raigne. A princeſſe adorned with great vertues, which may couer ſome exceſſe of ambition, & her other imperfections: ſhe was zealous in religion, chaſt, liberall, and courteous. Her bodie was tranſported to the citie of Gra- K Bodie of the Q. Iſabella in a Friers weed. nado, and remained long there in the Alhambra, in the habit of a Franciſcane Frier, as ſhe had ordained: And after the deceaſe of her husband, which was twelue yeares after, it was layed with his, in the royall chappell of that citie. That yere died D. Magdeleina, Infanta of Nauarre, in the ſame towne of Medina del Campo, being daughter to the king D. Iohn of Albret and Katherine, then raigning. D. Henrie Henriques, vncle to king Ferdinand, and his lord ſteward, and D. Pedro of Eſtuniga, cardinall, and Archbiſhop of Seuille, did alſo leaue this world: which Archbiſhopricke was giuen to Diego of Deca, borne at Toro, being then biſhop of Palence, a doctor in Diuinitie, and afterwards Inquiſitor generall, Confeſſor to the king, and founder of the colledge of S. Thomas of Aquin, at Seuille.

THE

A

THE 25 BOOKE OF THE Hiſtorie of Spaine.

The Contents of the 25 Booke.

C

1 VOyage of Iohn Coſa, and of Fernando Cortez, to the Indies.
2 Expedition of Africke by the Caſtillans, and the taking of the great port of Merſalcabir.
3 Peace betwixt Caſtille and France, and treaties of mariage.
4 The Archduke Philip of Auſtria and D. Iaone his wife, part out of Flaunders, to returne into Caſtille, and are ſtayed in England.
5 Death of Chriſtofer Columbus. His poſteritie.
6 D. Philip and D. Ioane his wife kings of Caſtille. Retreat of king Ferdinand into Arragon.
7 Voyage of king Ferdinand into Italie. Enteruiew of king Lewis and king Ferdinand at Sauonne.

D

8 The duke Valentin being a priſoner in Caſtille, eſcapes into Nauarre.
9 Affaires of Nauarre. Diſpoſition of the king D. Iohn of Albret. Contentions betwixt him and the queene his wife, for the factions of Nauarre.
10 Raſhneſſe of the earle of Lerin, Conſtable of Nauarre. Sentence and condemnation againſt him. Warre betwixt the king and the earle. Death of duke Valentin.
11 Exploits of Pedro Nauarro in Africke, in fauour of the Portugals.
12 Raſhneſſe of the marqueſſe of Priego puniſhed by the king D. Ferdinand, Regent in Caſtille.
13 Sedition at Lisbone for religion. The mutines puniſhed.
14 Search of the firme land at the Indies, by Alphonſo Hojeda, and others.

E

15 League betwixt the Pope, the Emperour Maximilian, king Ferdinand, and Lewis 12, the French king, againſt the Venetians.
16 Diſcouerie of the firme land at the Indies. Forts built there.
17 Expedition of Cardinall Francis Ximenes into Africke. The taking of the citie of Oran.
18 Warre againſt the Venetians.
19 Practiſe of Pope Iulio againſt the French. Schiſme in the Church of Rome. Counſell demanded by the French king.
20 Taking of Bugia, and other exploits in Africke, by Pedro Nauarro. Death of D. Garcia Aluares of Toledo.
21 Behauiour of the Spaniards at the Weſt Indies. Seditions among them.

F

22 Progreſſe of the warre of Italie, made by the French againſt the Pope. Councell of Piſa, and a counter Councell at Rome, at S. Iohn de Latran.
23 Warre betwixt France and Spaine. A league betwixt the Pope, king Ferdinand, and the Venetians.
24 Continuance of this warre by the Pope againſt the French. Exploits of Gaſton earle of Foix, duke of Nemours.

25 Purſuit of the king and queene of Nauarre in Caſtille, to be reſtored to much of their patri- G monie in that realme, but without any effect.

26 Meanes vſed by the Pope and king Ferdinand, to diſpoſſeſſe the king D. Iohn of Albret, and the queene D. Katherina his wife, of the realme of Nauarre.

27 Meanes vſed by the Emperor Maximilian, to abandon the French. Battell of Rauenna.

28 Cenſures againſt Lewis the twelfth the French king, and his realme. Retreat of king Iohn of Albret into Fraunce. Inuaſion of the realme by the Caſtillans. Pampelone taken by the duke of Alua.

29 Exploits of Vaſco Nugnes of Bilbao, and other Spaniards, at the Indies.

H

D. Philip 1. and D. Ioane, 21 Kings of Caſtille, and 42 of Leon.

1504 THe Caſtillans and Leonois, for want of their Queene proprietarie, D. Iſabella, began to accuſtome themſelues to the yoke of German princes, hauing preſently ſet vp in Caſtille the Armes of the Archduke Philip of Auſtria, and of D. Ioane, heire of theſe realmes in her mothers right; and D. Frederic of Toledo, duke of Alba, aduanced theſe banners in their name: yet the king D. Ferdinand continued lawfull gouernour vntill the comming of theſe princes, who had I aduertiſement ſent them preſently into Flaunders of the Queenes death. The Archduke Philip was then ſix and twentie yeares old, faire of face, well proportioned of his members, of a good grace, mild and courteous in ſpeech, of a great ſpirit, actiue, quicke, and learned: by reaſon whereof being in him more then ordinarie, hee was ſurnamed the Great. Whileſt that he made preparation to come and take poſſeſsion of this great inheritance, king Ferdinand, after the royall and ſtately obſequies of the deceaſed Queene, and the bodie tranſported to Granado with a great traine, he retired himſelfe to the monaſterie of Mejorada, and from thence hee paſt to Toro, being accompanied by D. Francis Ximenes, Archbiſhop of Toledo, Diego of Deca, Archbiſhop of Seuille, and K others of great qualitie and learning, to conferre about the execution of the deceaſed Queenes will.

Voiage of Iohn de Coſa. 1 In the meane time Iohn de Coſa, a good ſea-man, rigged forth foure Carauels, out of port S. Maria, at his owne charge, and by Iohn of Ledeſma of Seuille, and others, deſirous to inrich themſelues, vndertaking the conqueſt of that countrey at the Indies, which was held by the Caribes: Whereupon ſetting ſayle he came and toucht at a place called Carthagena, there being joyned vnto him captaine Lewis Guerre; who beginning to make warre together, they tooke ſixe hundred of theſe Barbarians in the iſland of Codego: then coaſting along the ſhore, deſirous to barter wares, and to buy gold, they entred into Vraba, where they found ſome little gold in the ſand; and from thence they returned into the iſland of Hiſpaniola, and the citie of S. Domingo, laden L with men, but ſcanted of victuals, and of all other things, eſpecially of gold, wherof they were exceeding greedie.

Fernando Cortez voyage to the Indies. The ſame yeare 1504, there went vnto the Indies Fernand Cortez, borne at Medellin in Eſtremadura, one of the moſt famous men that hath beene in theſe conqueſts vnto our dayes. He arriued at S. Domingo in a ſhip belonging to Alphonſo Quintero of Palos of Moguer, where he was well entertained by the Secretarie Medine, the gouernour being then abſent, and afterwards by the gouernor Nicholas d' Ouando himſelfe, being returned. This was he which conquered Noua Hiſpania. Of the maners of the Indians, their idolatries, and damnable ſuperſtitions, the curious may be more amply informed by the particular hiſtories of the Indies, written by Peter Martyr of Angleria, Gonſal Fernandes of Ouiedo, Franciſco Lopes of Gomara, and others. M

During king Ferdinands gouernment in Caſtille, the Eſtate began to be troubled by ſome noblemen, who thought that queen Iſabel being dead, they might lawfully tyrannize: but 1505 the king hauing called the Eſtates to Toro, in the yeare 1505, he cauſed a new oath to be taken to the queene D. Ioane his daughter, and to her husband, as kings of Caſtille, Leon, Granado,

A Granado, &c. and by his wiſedome pacified thoſe tumults and diſorders which were likely to grow: Which yeare, for many reaſons, the Chauncerie which was at Cité Royall, was tranſported to Granado, where ſince it hath remained. And by the perſuaſion of D. Franciſco Ximenes, Archbiſhop of Toledo, and Primate of Spaine, there was an expedition attempted againſt the Moores of Africke, nothing concurring with the embaſſage which had beene ſent to Caire, whereof mention hath beene made. 1505 Chauncerie tranſported frõ Cite Royall to Granado.

2 The Primate had had ſundrie diſcourſes with a Venetian, called Ieronimo Vianello, an induſtrious man, and knowing the countrey of Africke. His deſigne was vpon the citie of Oran, well peopled, free, hauing priuat lawes, rich, a common hauen for all nations traf- Deſcription of Oran.
B ficking into Barbarie, who entertained an ordinarie garriſon for the ſafetie of their marchandiſes, and payed ſome tribute to the king of Tremeſſen, for protection; and they ſay, that it contained aboue 6000 families. This citie is ſeated vpon the deſcent of a high hill, enuironed about with wals and towers: the ſea is within a ſtones caſt on the one ſide, and on the other ſide they haue pleaſant gardens, & ſtore of fountains. The countrey men call this citie Madaura, Aera, Auran, Guhara, all names ſignifying a place hanging, and expoſed to the winds: but we call it Oran. The Archbiſhop Ximenes did eaſily conceiue by Vianelloes diſcourſe, that it were labor loſt to aſſayle that citie, if they were not firſt maſters of the coaſt about it, wherof Vianello made him a model in wax, which repreſented vnto him the hauens, ports, hills, vallies, townes, rockes, forts, and other particularities of that
C countrey, namely, of the watch called the Lampe, which is ſet vpon the top of a high mountaine, the which is inacceſſible, but by one difficult paſſage, whereby they muſt neceſſarily paſſe that will goe to Oran. This watch hath on the one ſide the citie of Oran, and on the other the port called Merſalcabir, or Marſael-quibir, great and famous, the which they muſt firſt get, to make the expedition of Africke profitable and eaſie. Ha- Merſalcabir a great port in Africke.
uing acquainted king Ferdinand with theſe deſignes, and ſeeing that there wanted money to effect it, the treaſure hauing beene waſted in the warres of Granado and Italie, the Archbiſhop offered to lend money to pay the armie two monethes; whereupon they began to make readie for the voyage, whereof the young courteors were verie deſirous. The charge of Generall was giuen to D. Diego Fernandes of Cordoua, who af-
D terwards was marqueſſe of Comares, who had for aſsiſtants D. Raymond of Cordoua, Generall of the gallies, Diego Vera, maſter of the ordnance, Gonſal Ayora, captaine of the gards, Ieronimo Vianello, conductor of the enterpriſe, Pero Lopes of Oreſco, and other old captaines and of great experience: Who parting from the port of Malaga came within few dayes neere vnto Mercaleabir, whereas the Moores being aduertiſed of their comming, had prepared to receiue them. Wherefore as ſoone as the armie was diſcouered, they gaue ſignes in ſuch ſort as all Africke had ſoone notice thereof, and all the countrey was full ſouldiers of that nation, which came to ſuccour them. Notwithſtanding the Spaniards woon the port, and landing, had meanes to campe, and to fortifie themſelues from ſo great a multitude of enemies which came running from Oran and E other neighbour places. To gard the port there was a fort built vpon a rocke enuironed by the ſea but of one ſide where it joyned to a mount that did commaund the fort; which the Spaniards ſeeking to win, and to plant their batterie thereon, they found a ſharpe and bloudie reſiſtance made by the Moores: notwithſtanding they planted their ordnance there, and began to batter the fort furiouſly, both from thence, and from the gallies, vntill the captaine, who imployed himſelfe vertuouſly for the defence thereof, was ſlaine with a bullet. In the meane time the king of Tremeſſen had ſent an armie, againſt the which the Chriſtians had many skirmiſhes, ſometimes with gaine, ſometimes with loſſe; yet the ſiege of Merſalcabir continued ſtill, whereat the ſouldiers being diſcouraged, by reaſon of the loſſe of their commaunder, and alſo for that they
F ſaw the paſſages both by ſea and land were ſtopt by the Spaniards, ſo as they could neither be releeued with men nor victuals, they did capitulate, after ſome reſiſtance, That if within certaine dayes the king of Tremeſſen did not come and ſuccour them, they would yeeld the place to the Spaniards, the inhabitants and ſouldiers departing with their wiues, children, and baggage. No ſuccours appearing, the fort was yeelded Merſalcabir taken by the Caſtillans the fiftieth day after they parted from Malaga. The Moores went forth, the Chriſtian armie being in battell, and proclamation being made, that no man ſhould goe out of his ranke, to offer them any violence vpon paine of death: the which a Spaniſh ſouldier tried, who for that he had offered to ſpoile or rauiſh a Mooriſh woman, was by the commaundement of D.Diego Fernandes ſlaine with darts. This conqueſt being made to the great contentment of all men, the king D.Ferdinand, and the Archbiſhop Ximenes were inſtantly aduertiſed, where attending the kings pleaſure, the fort was rampared and furniſhed. They ſay, that moſt of the men of qualitie and wealth, which dwelt at Oran, being amazed at the taking of Merſalcabir, retired to Tremeſſen, thinking that the Chriſtians would not ſtay long to come and beſiege that citie, as it fell out: But foure yeares being paſt, and nothing attempted, they all returned to their loſſe, except one Moore, who was verie rich, who was ſtill conſtant to remaine at Tremeſſen, and foretold the ruine of the reſt. D.Diego Fernandes hauing well manned his conqueſt with good ſouldiers, he ſent back the reſt of his armie into Spaine, which was full of joy for ſo important a victorie, whereby not onely the coaſts of Spaine were aſſured from the ſpoyles of pyrats, Moores, but alſo there was a faire way made for the Spaniards to inuade Africke. D.Diego Fernandes ſtayed ſtill in Merſalcabir, vntill he had a new commaundement from the king. In the meane time Diego de Vera, Gonſal Agora, and Pero Lopes Oroſco, ſurnamed by the Arabians Alzagal, paſt into Spaine; and there was preſented vnto the Primate Ximenes, by Pero Lopes, a ſtaffe of Ebene, which the Cadis or high Prieſts of the Arabians were accuſtomed to carrie, the which he carried many dayes for his ſake, and then he ſent it to his Academie at Alcala of Henares, for a monument of this Africane victorie. The king ſent D. Roderigo Dias of Roia, a man of great worth and valour, for the gard of the fort and port of Merſalcabir, with one hundred light horſe, and foure hundred foot, and called home D.Diego Fernandes, whom he honoured with the gouernment of his conqueſt, & other fauors, D.Roderigo Dias being his lieutenant, who ouerran the countrey, & kept the Moors ſtill in alarme during his aboad there. There is one of the ſtrangeſt blowes reported of him, that euer was giuen of any; who with an Azagay, or Iauelin, pierced a man thorow the pomell of the ſaddle and the horſe necke. The fort of Merſalcabir hath ſince beene much fortified by the kings of Spaine, eſpecially by D.Philip the ſecond, who made it impregnable.

Birth of the Infanta Marie, who was queen of Hungarie.

The ſame day that Merſalcabir, or Maſalquiuir, was woon, which was the 13 of September, Queene Ione was brought in bed in Flaunders, of a daughter called Marie, who was Queene of Hungarie and Bohemia, maried to king Lewis, ſonne to Ladiſlaus, after whoſe deceaſe, remaining a widow, ſhe gouerned the Netherlands, and then came and died in Spaine, in the towne of Cigales, neere to Vailledolit, in the yeare 1558, and lyes in the monaſterie of S.Benedict of Vailledolit.

3 Whileſt that the Queen D.Iſabella liued, they did ſtill practiſe ſome meanes of peace betwixt France and Spaine, and to this end the kings of Caſtille and Arragon had their embaſſadors in the French kings Court, making ſhew that they would reſtore king Frederic to his realme of Naples, or giue it to D.Ferdinand duke of Calabria, his eldeſt ſonne, who was reſident in Spaine: but it was not credible, for that is not the cuſtome in our age, to giue away kingdomes which they doe quietly enjoy, eſpecially hauing gotten it with ſo great charge, neither did he any thing: But the yeare of her deceaſe there was a peace concluded betwixt the Emperor Maximilian and his ſonne Philip, and king Lewis, by the which it was the third time agreed, That prince Charles of Auſtria ſhould mario Claude of France, with the conſent of the princes and noblemen of France, by the kings commaundement, and namely of Francis duke of Angouleſme, who was next in degree to the Crowne. It was alſo concluded, That the Emperor Maximilian ſhould grant the inueſtiture of the duchie of Milan to king Lewis, for him and his heires and ſucceſſors males, and for want of males to his daughter, and to her future ſpouſe prince Charles, who dying before the conſummation of the mariage, ſhe ſhould be giuen in mariage to the Infant D.Ferdinand his brother, and they & their deſcendants ſhould enjoy the ſaid duchie of Milan. For the expedition of which priuiledge and donation, king Lewis ſhould pay vnto the Emperor 70000. ducats vpon the deliuerie of the letters, and the like ſumme ſix moneths after, and euery yere vpon new-yeres day a paire of gilt ſpurs, in ſigne of honor.

Be-

A Betwixt the Pope, the Emperour, king Philip his Sonne, and the French king, there was a league made againſt the Venetians, to recouer the townes, and Lands which either of theſe Princes pretended to belong vnto him, and had beene vſurped by this Commonweale, into which league Ferdinand king of Arragon might enter if he pleaſed, and there was not any mention made of the realme of Naples, in expectation whereof king Frederic ended his daies that yeare 1505. at Tours. That yeare the truce betwixt D. Ferdinand king of Arragon and the French king, was conuerted to a peace, vpon condition that king Ferdinand ſhould marry Germaine the kings neece, daughter to his ſiſter and to Iohn of Foix and of Nauarre, Vicount of Narbone, which Lady was allyed to King Ferdinand in the third degree, the Vicont of Narbone being borne of queene Leonora of Nauarre his Siſter: by reaſon of which conſanguinity they had a diſpenſation from the Pope, and in conſideration of this marriage it was agreed, that the part which the French king might pretend in the realme of Naples, ſhould ſtand in ſtead of a dowrie for his Neece, the future queene of Arragon; vpon condition that the king D. Ferdinand ſhould pay vnto the French king ſeuen hundred thouſand ducats for the charges hee had beene at in the warre of Naples, and moreouer ſhould indowe his ſpouſe with three hundred thouſand ducats: and in regard thereof a peace being concluded, the Noblemen and Barons of the Realme that were priſoners in the Spaniards hands, ſhould be deliuered, and the baniſhed men reſtored to their eſtates, all confiſcations being void:

League made againſt the Venetians.

Peace betwixt France and Spaine.

Treatie of marriage betwixt Ferdinand and the Lady Germaine of Foix.

C That queene Germaine dying without children before the king D. Ferdinand, her dowrie ſhould remaine to him, but if ſhe ſuruiued and had no children, it ſhould returne to the crown of France: That king Ferdinand ſhold be bound to aſſiſt Gaſton of Foix, brother to his future ſpouſe, to conquer the realme of Nauarre which he pretended to belong vnto him, and not to queene Katherine his couſin: That the French King ſhould giue leaue to queene Elizabeth widowe to King Frederic, to retyre into Spaine with two children which ſhee had in France, to whome the King D. Ferdinand ſhould giue honeſt meanes to liue: and if ſhe ſhould refuſe to goe, that the French king ſhould not giue any entertainment to her nor her children, That for a ſtronger bond of peace and aſſurance of the two realmes, the king of Spaine ſhould be bound to aide him of France with two D thouſand light Horſe, three hundred men at armes, and ſixe thouſand foot, the French king him of Spaine with a thouſand Lances, and ſixe thouſand foot in their warres.

The king of England was caution for both of them for this peace, whereunto and to the marriage king Ferdinand did eaſily incline to quiet his minde in regard of the realme of Naples, being alſo aduertiſed that his ſonne in law king Philip contemning the will and teſtament of queene Iſabell his mother in Lawe, did not meane that hee ſhould gouerne the realme of Caſtille. The widow queene of Naples, being chaſed out of France according to the accord, ſhe deſired rather to retyre to Ferrara vnder the protection of Duke Alfonſo of Eſte: then to go into Spaine, fearing, it may be, that king Ferdinand would put her children to death, that there might not be any to pretend to the E realme of Naples. King Ferdinand hauing remained moſt part of the yeare at Segobia, and hunting at Cerezuela, hee came to Salamanca there to ſpend the remainder, in which yeare there dyed many great men of Spaine: D. Alfonſo of Fonſeca Biſhop of Oſma, to whome there ſucceeded an ignorant and vicious Prelate, baſe Sonne to the Admirall D. Frederic Henriques, called D. Alfonſo Henriques, borne of a ſlaue, of which promotion the king did often repent him, and was much blamed for it by other Prelates, namely of frier Anthonie de la Pegna, who preached before him: There dyed alſo D. Pero Aluares Oſorio, Marqueſſe of Aſtorga, who left for ſucceſſor his Sonne D. Aluar Peres Oſorio, D. Gomes Suarez of Figueroa, Earle of Feria, to whome ſucceeded Don Laurence Suarez of Figueroa his Sonne, who hauing marryed D. F Katherine of Cordoua, eldeſt Daughter to D. Pedro of Cordoua, and neece to the great Captaine, came by her right, to bee Marqueſſe of Priego, D. Alfonſo of Fonſeca, Lord of Coca and Alacxos, and D. Franciſco of Velaſco, Earle of Siruela, D. Hurtado of Mendoſa gouernour of Caſorla, brother to the deceaſed Cardinall D. Pero Gonſales of Mendoca, did alſo end their daies this yeare. The plague did alſo carry away infinite numbers of people in the citie of Burgos, ſo as it was in a manner left deſolate.

Iſabel widow to Frederic of Naples chaſed out of France.

Death of many Gentlemen in Spaine.

4 In

1506 4 In the yeare 1506, vpon the controuerſie growen betwixt the two kings father G in lawe and ſonne, touching the gouernement of Caſtille, Leon, Granado, and o-Difference betwixt D. Ferdinãd king of Arragon, and D. Philip, and D. Ioane king of Caſtille for the gouernment. ther the hereditarie lands of the deceaſed queene D. Iſabella, and for the which king Philip had ſent embaſſadors into Spaine, it was concluded that the kings, D. Ferdinand, D. Philip, and D. Ioane ſhould bee all three gouernours, and that all letters ſhould bee diſpacht in their name, whereupon their armes and Enſignes were againe ſet vp, according to the ancient cuſtome; and this accord was proclaimed in the Citie of Salamanca, on Twelfe day: and ſoone after the kings, D. Philip and D. Ioane parted from Flanders with many Ships, who were ſuddenly diſperſed by a violent ſtorme, and ma-D. Philip & D. Ioan driuen into England by a ſtorme. ny of them driuen into diuers parts of England. That wherein the kings were and H two other ſhips came to Hampton, where they cauſed ſome alteration in the towne, the inhabitants fearing they had beene enemies, but being knowne they did them honour, as was fit for ſo great Princes. Many knights and men of experience of their traine, perſuaded them not to land, foreſeeing that which did happen; but king Philip hauing beene extreamely ſicke, and ſeeing the queene and noblemen which did accompany him in the ſame eſtate, would not beleeue them, but was the firſt who leaping into a boate cauſed himſelfe to bee carried to land. It being bruted abroad that a ſtorme had driuen the kings of Caſtille vpon that coaſt, a knight, whoſe name was Thomas Trenchard, hauing his houſe there nere adioyning, came to doe him reuerence, offring him his lodging, with other commodities, and entertained him I vntill that king Henry the ſeuenth then raigning, was aduertiſed by meſſengers, ſent in poſt: then many men drewe thither in armes, with a captaine called Iohn Carew, who in the company of Thomas Trenchard beſought king Philip not to depart out of England, vntill that hee had ſeene their king, who was his friend. Then did king Philip find that hee had erred, in not beleeuing the counſell of his followers, and the queene more, who notwithſtanding carryed this croſſe couragiouſly: wherefore ſeeing that this intreatie was a commandement, and that hee muſt obey it, hee ſtaied, alleаging in vaine that his voyage was verie haſtie, with much other excuſes. Soone after there arriued many Engliſh noblemen, who conducted them with great honour to the caſtle of Windſore, whereas king Henrie attended them. There king Philip K King of Englād forceth king Philip to deliuer him the duke of Suffolke. was required by the king of England, to deliuer vnto him Edmond de la Poole duke of Suffolke his Competitor, who was then a priſoner in the caſtle of Namur: and ſo great was his deſire to haue this duke, as forgetting the lawes of hoſpitality and the friendſhip which princes allyes ſhould beare one vnto another, hee forced the king of Caſtille, notwithſtanding all excuſes, to giue him the duke, vpon a promiſe that hee ſhould not put him to death: whereupon men were ſent into Flanders to fetch this poore duke. In the meane time king Henrie led his gueſts to London, where hee entertained them with great and ſtately feaſts, and royall ſports; and the priſoner being arriued, they had libertie to depart at their pleaſures. So as theſe kings hauing renewed the league with the king of England, they imbarked and L continued their voyage towards Spaine.

Marriage of the king of Arragon with Germaine of Foix. In the meane time Germaine the new queene of Arragon came to Duegnas, wher-as king Ferdinand came and married her. There paſſed many noblemen of the realm of Naples of the Angeuin faction, with her out of France into Spaine, who ſoone after did accompany the king D. Ferdinand to Naples. After the conſummation of the marriage, the king led the queene his wife to Vailledolit and there leauing her with D. Ioane his ſiſter, the old queene of Naples, and one of her daughters, hee went to Burgos, to receiue the kings, D. Philip and D. Ioane, thinking that they had landed at Laredo, or ſome other place of Biſcaie, but it fell out otherwiſe: for they tooke port at Corunna, or the Groine in Galicia, whereof king Ferdinand being ad- M uertiſed, hee tooke the way to Leon, and then to Torquemada, to goe and meete his ſonne in law and his daughter.

Death of Chriſtopher Columbus. 5 At that time there dyed in Vailledolit the admirall Chriſtopher Columbus the diſcouerer of the Indies, whoſe body was carryed to Seuile, and was buried in the mo-naſterie de las Cuenas of the Cartuſiens. To him his ſonne Diego Columbus ſucceeded
in

A in the Admiraltie of the Indies, who marryed D. Maria of Toledo, daughter to D. Ferdinand of Toledo great Commander of Leon: hee left another Sonne called D. Ferdinand Colombus who was neuer married. Among many deeds worthie of commendation, of this Admirall D. Diego Colombus, hee gathered together in the citie of Seuile, one of the greateſt and goodlyeſt Libraries in Chriſtendome, ſeeking out with great care and charge, all good bookes, in what language ſoeuer: ſo as there were aboue twelue thouſand volumes: for the keeping, maintenance and increaſe of which liberarie, he left and aſſigned ſufficient rents. 1506

Library gathered together by Diego Colombus

6 At the arriuall of the new kings of Caſtille, the king D. Ferdinand found by ex-
B perience that princes ſeruants doe moſt commonly follow them for profit, and not for loue and affection: for many of thoſe that were with him in this voyage, left him without leaue, and went before to offer their ſeruice, and to accompany their new maiſter, the which diſcontented him very much. Theſe princes met betwixt Puebla of Sanabria and Aſturie, where hauing conferred together touching the manner of gouernment, they did not agree: whereupon the king D. Ferdinand came to Tordeſillas, much diſtaſted of the king his ſonne in law, who with Queene D. Ioane paſt to Benauent. The diligence and care of the Archbiſhop of Toledo, to reconcile king Ferdinand and his children, was ſuch, as they concluded that the king of Arragon ſhould inioy the three maſterſhips of Caſtille, Saint Iaques, Calatraua and Alcanta-
C ra, with the reuenues of the Indies, and eight millions of Marauidis of yearely rent during his life, which queene D. Iſabella had left him, in regard whereof hee ſhould bee contented to remaine in his countrie of Arragon: to confirme which accord, the two kings had an enteruiew within a league of Vailledolit, in the veſtrie of Renedo, whereas the archbiſhop himſelf kept the doore: There they ſay king Ferdinand gaue much counſel to his ſonne in law, by whome hee was intreated, notwithſtanding their accord, to remaine in Caſtille, and to helpe him to gouerne, but he refuſed him, and went away this yeare 1506, in Iuly, leading his wife Queene Germaine with him into Arragon. The kings D. Philip and D. Ioane entred into Vailledolit, whether they had called the eſtates of the realm, and there took a new oath, cauſing their eldeſt ſonne D. Charles to D be ſworn heire to the crown of Caſtille, Leon, & Granado. In theſe princes were vnited vnto the realms of Caſtille and Leon, and there dependances, the great eſtates of the low countries and Burgundy, and afterwards Arragon, Sicile, Sardynia and Naples. At Vailledolit there were many noblemen honored with the order of the golden fleece. The gard of the caſtle of Segobia was taken from the marqueſſe of Moya, & giuen to D. Iohn Manuell, who was much fauored by the kings, who being at Tudele of Duero, there appeared a ſtrange comet in the firmament, foreſhewing (as they ſaid afterwards) the approching death of king Philip, which happened ſoon after in the city of Burgos, to the generall griefe of all his ſubiects, the comet ſtill raigning, whereunto he did attribute his death, ſaying often in his paines and agonies, Ha comēta, ha cometa: He died in the floure
E of his age, in the conſtables houſe, this yere 1506, hauing raigned 1 yere and ten monthes: his body was laied many yeres after by the commandement of the Emperour Charles his ſonne, in the royal chappel of Granado, hauing remained in diuers places. This ſummer which was very drie, there died in Caſtille D. Guttiere of Toledo biſhop of Plaiſance, to whome ſucceeded D. Gomes of Toledo, ſonne to D. Guttiere de Solis earle of Coria.

King Ferdinād retires into Arragon.

Order touching the gouernment of Caſtille.

Princes ſeruāts follow for profit and not for affection.

Death of Philip King of Caſtille.

7 At the time of the death of the king D. Philip, king Ferdinand was at ſea ſayling towards Italie: for after the enteruiew of theſe two princes, & the order taken for the gouernment of Caſtille, he went to Cattelonia, where hauing cauſed a goodly fleet to bee made readie at Barcelona, he imbarked to go and viſit the realms of Naples, & of Sicile, hauing conceiued a iealouſie that the great captaine did fauor the deſignes of the king of Caſtille
F his ſon in law: for hauing ſent often for him to come into Spaine, hee had ſtill delaied it with excuſes, as he thought. At his departure out of Caſtille, he was abandoned by all the great men, except the duke of Alua, who did accompany him to the frontiers of Arragon. He who ſhewed himſelfe moſt faithfull of all the noblemen, was D. Bernard of Rojas and Sandoual marqueſſe of Denia, who neuer abandoned him, neither aliue nor dead: for hee retired many of his officers and houſhold ſeruants, which had no maintenance. It was concluded

Voyage of king Ferdinand into Italy.

A faithfull ſeruant.

cluded by the laſt accord made betwixt him and king Philip, that the realme of Naples, G
although it had been conquered by the means and forces of Caſtille, more then by thoſe of Arragon, ſhould remain to the crown of Arragon. Being therefore ready to ſet ſaile to-Sinceritie of the great Captaine wards his realme of Naples, he receiued letters from the great captaine, by the which hee did aſſure him of his ſincerity and ſeruice, and did aduertiſe him of the eſtate of the country, wherewith he was ſo wel ſatisfied, as he did confirme all his former gifts vnto him & added new, yea he was much more pleaſed with him, for that contrary to the opinion of many he came and met him at the port of Genoua: for both the Pope and all the Poten-tates of Italy, thought that he was gone from Naples, with an intent to retyre himſelfe into Caſtille, and not to ſee king Ferdinand, as if he feared to looke on him. The king being H ſtaied there ſome daies by reaſon of cõtrary winds, he had news of his ſon in laws death, for the which he ſeemed verie ſorrowful: & notwithſtanding that he was preſt by the widow queen D. Ioane his daughter to returne into Spaine, yet he went on his voyage to Naples, Entrie of king Ferdinand into Naples. where he entred in great pompe, vnder a canopie of cloth of gold, the city wal being beaten down for the more ſtate, hauing all the honors and ceremonies accuſtomed at the receptions of new kings: he ſtaied 7. months there to the great content of the whole realm, and of all the Potentates of Italie, who poſſeſt with an opinion of his juſtice and equity, ſent to viſit him by ambaſſadors, and made him arbitrator of many cõtrouerſies, that were among them. The Neapolitanes offered him great ſummes of money and other commodities; but he would not accept any but 30000 ducats, for the charges of his voyage. Hee I would not at that time breake with the Venetiãs for the Popes pleaſure or of any others, and yet they detained certain places from him, referring that quarel to a more conuenient time. He paciſed and ended many quarrels, and pretenſions of Barons, yea, of the Angeuin party, who were yet diſpoſeſt of their goods, which had been confiſcated, & paſt into priuate mens hands, to whome they had been giuen in recompence of their ſeruices: and that which he could not end, he left in charge to the Viceroy D. Iohn of Arragon earle of Ribagorſa, whom he left in the place of Gonſall Fernandes of Cordoua, the great Captain, whome he cauſed to imbarke with him at his returne, and carried him into Spaine, being iealous of the honor which he had gotten in the conqueſt of the realme. In regard of the realm of Sicile, he made many good lawes, but he could not goe thither in perſon, being K preſt by the queen D. Ioane his daughter, the councel, cities, and comminalties of Caſtille D. Ioane queene of Caſtille touchi in her ſences. to return into Spaine: for this poore princeſſe, beſides her affliction for the death of her husband, had other infirmities, which ſhe did inherit from her grandmother by the mothers ſide D. Iſabella of Portugall, wherefore finding her ſelfe vnable to gouern ſo great a ſtate, ſhe put all ouer into the hands of D. Franciſo Ximenes Archbiſhop of Toledo & Councell of Caſtille. primate of Spain, & of doctor D. Alfonſo Suarez de la Fuente del Sauz biſhop of Iaen preſi-dent of the kings councell, Garcia of Muxica licentiate in the laws, born in the prouince of Guipuſcoa, doctor Pedro of Orepeſa, a moſt religious Baron, the licentiat Fernando Telles, doctor Laurence Galindez of Carnail, & the licentiate Lewis of Polanco, with others of the councel, who took charge of the affairs, in the abſence of the king D. Ferdinand her father, L the Prince D. Charles, who was then bred vp in Flanders, being yet a childe of 7 yeres old.
Pope Iulio ſtaied many daies in the caſtle of Oſtia, thinking that K. Ferdinand would land there to ſee him, but he excuſed himſelfe by reaſon of the ſmal intelligence that was betwixt them: for the king hauing demanded of him the confirmation & inueſtiture of the realm of Naples, he would not graunt it, but with heauier conditions then other kings of Arragon his predeceſſors had held it. Queen Germain did accõpany the king her husband in al this voyage, who ſailing towards Spaine, they toucht at Sauone, which place was aſ-Enteruiew betwixt the frech king and him of Arragon. ſigned for an enteruiew, betwixt them and Lewis 12. the French king, who was already ariued with a goodly train of his nobilitie. At the comming of the Spaniſh army king Lew- is ſhewed ſo great a confidence in the vertue and generoſity of king Ferdinand, as he made M no difficulty to enter into his galley, without any gards, by a bridge of wood made to that end, and there hauing conference awhile together, they entred all into the city; queene Germaine going betwixt the two kings, the king her husband being on the right hand, and the French king on the left, who were immediately followed by the Cardinall of Rouan, and the great captain, and then by many noblemen, ladies and gentlewomen, richly atty-

red

A red: king Ferdinand made ſhew of as great confidence to the French king, entering into Sauone, a towne held by him, where hee was lodged in the Caſtle, and king Lewis in the biſhops Palace. For three daies ſpace that theſe great Princes were together, they treated of many matters of importance, in the which the Cardinall of Praxeda, the Popes Legate, was a great dealer: king Lewis ſpake much concerning the renewing and ſtrengthning of their leagues, and the friendſhip which he deſired to entertaine with the emperour Maximilian, who was greatly diſcontented with him, for many reaſons, but eſpecially for that the ladie Claude the eldeſt daughter of France, ſo often promiſed to prince Charles, had beene lately made ſure to Francis duke of Angou-
B leſme: the which king Lewis excuſed, ſaying, that he had done it at the inſtant requeſt of the eſtates of his realme. They did alſo treat of many things concerning Italy, and yet neuer entred into any ſpeech of the realme of Naples: but the French king ſhewed great hatred to the Venetians, and little loue to the Pope, againſt whome hee propounded to haue a generall Councell called, being animated thereunto by the Cardinall of Rouan, deſirous to finde a meanes to attaine vnto the dignitie of Soueraigne biſhop, whereof he had ſome hope, when the ſeat was voide, by the death of Alexander the ſixt, wherein there were reſolutions then taken, to the contentment of both kings: but as for a Councell, king Ferdinand excuſed himſelfe, ſaying that it was a dangerous thing for the common-weale of Chriſtendome. The French king hauing often deſired to ſee and
C know Gonſalo Fernandes, called the great captaine, he imbraced him with much honour, and could not be ſatisfied in looking on him, as admiring thoſe great matters which hee had heard of him, getting leaue of king Ferdinand that hee might eate at their table, whereas Queene Germaine ſayed (it may bee indiſcreetly) that he which had vanquiſhed kings, ſhould eat with kings: Some ſay, that at that time onely hee purchaſed the ſurname of Great, for that king Lewis did ſo call him, ſaying freely vnto king Ferdinand, that hee did enuie him for ſo worthy a man, whome hee honoured with praiſes and great titles in all his diſcourſes, and taking a chaine of gold of great price from off his owne neck, he put it about his. The fourth day of this enteruiew, the kings parted one towards Prannee, and the other continuing his courſe towards Spaine,
D where the fleete arriued in mid-Auguſt 1507, at the port Valencia, from whence, without ſtay, the king and queene went to Almaſan, a towne of Caſtille, not without diſcontentment of the Arragonois, who found his ſhort aboade among them verie ſtrange, to buſie himſelfe with the affaires of a realme where hee had found ſo much ingratitude. The great Captaine was receiued in Spaine with great fauour of all men, being held the honour and ornament of Caſtille, but hee neuer ſaw Naples more, where he was exceedingly beloued, and deſired. They ſay that at his departure from Naples, hee gaue a great part of his meanes to ſuch as had beene faithfull companions vnto him in the warre, to performe the which he ſold ſome of his lands.

1507

Councels are dangerous for the church of Rome.

Gonſalo Fernandes honored by Lewis the 12.

Bounty of the great Captaine.

E 8 Whilſt that the king D. Ferdinand was in Italie, the duke of Valentinois, who was a priſoner in the Caſtle of Medina del Campo, being ill garded ſlipt downe by a roape, and eſcaped going towards Guipuſcoa in a diſguiſed habit, whereas he found in the towne of Mondragon, one Lewis Lauregui, who had ſerued him in Italie, and was then one of the chiefe of the place, who gaue him meanes to paſſe into Nauarre, towards king Iohn of Albret, whoſe ſiſter hee had married. D. Ioane queene of Caſtille being with-childe at her Husbands death, had beene deliuered of a Daughter in Torquemada, who was named D. Catherina, future wife to Iohn the third of that name, king of Portugall. This yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and
F ſeuen, there was a chaunge of Biſhops in Spaine from leſſe to greater, after the accuſtomed manner: for by the death of D. Iohn of Medina Biſhop of Segobia, D. Frederic of Portugall was aduanced to that Biſhopricke, and that of Calaorra, which hee held, was giuen to D. Iohn of Velaſco, who before was biſhop of Carthagena, the which was beſtowed vpon doctor Martin of Angulo, Archdeacon of Talauera in the church of Toledo: The archbiſhoprick of Granado in like maner being void, by the death of frier Hernando of Talauera, there was preferred to that dignity D. Anthony of Rojas, Biſhop

Duke of Valentinois eſcapes out of priſon.

Change of biſhops in Caſtille.

1507 ſhop of Maiorca, and his Biſhopricke was giuen vnto D. Diego of Riuera. By the deceaſe alſo of D. Garcia Ramires of Villa excuſa Biſhop of Ouiedo, who was the laſt Prior of S. Marc of Leon, D. Valerio Alfonſo of Villaquiran, was made Biſhop in his place; and the biſhoprick of Villaquiran & citie Roderigo, which he held, was giuen to D. Franciſco of Bouadilla, ſon to the Marqueſſe of Moya. The ſame yere D. Francis Ximenes of Ciſneros Archbiſhop of Toledo, obtained a Cardinals hat, with the title of Sancta Balbina: and for that he was primate of Spain, he was called Cardinall of Spaine: And D. Alfonſo Fonſeca, was allowed to reſigne the Archbiſhopricke of Saint Iaques to his ſonne, carrying the ſame name, for the which Cardinall Ximenes did greatly reproach king Ferdinand, who had countenanced it, ſaying, that he made Archbiſhopricks hereditarie, and that hee ſhould ſee if women were excluded. King Ferdinand was then come to Sancta Maria del Campo, with the queene his daughter, where they made the anniuerſarie for the deceaſed king Philip: from thence they went to Arcos, where the Queene ſtaying, the king came to Burgos, where during his long aboade, wee will returne to the affaires of Nauarre. The king D. Iohn of Albret, who is numbred for the fiue and thirtieth king of Nauarre, and the third of that name, had by his wife Katherine of Foix, a great iſſue, Iohn and Andrew Phœbus, who dyed both yong, Henrie who ſucceeded them in the eſtates of Foix & Bearn, and in the title of Nauarre, and was born three daies after the death of Andrew Phœbus his brother, in the town of Sangueſſa, in the yere one thouſand fiue hundred and three, in the month of Aprill: the godfathers at the Chriſtening were two Germaine Pilgrimes, which paſt by chance at the time of his birth, to goe to Saint Iaques, whereof the one was called Henrie, and the other Adam: the which the king his father did by deuotion: but the Spaniards ſay that it was an aduertiſement and preſage of his future condition, that he ſhould liue a ſtranger and Pilgrim out of his realme: Beſides theſe, hee had Charles, named by ſome Francis, who dyed in the Lord of Lautrees voyage to Naples; Katherine, Anne, Quiterie, Magdeline, Iſabell, and fiue other children, whoſe names are not ſpecified, for they dyed young. Of the daughters, Anne was betrothed, but not marryed the earle of Candale, for ſhee dyed at the aſſurance making: into which houſe the Queene of Nauarres aunt, called Katherine alſo, had beene married; ſhee was mother to Queene Anne of Hungarie, wife to king Ladiſlaus: Iſabell married with the earle of Rohan in Brittaine. This king D. Iohn of Albret was full of pompe and ſtate in his court, and houſe, the which was frequented by the nobility both of Spaine, France, and other nations, as much as any of the greateſt monarchs. His ſtudie and delights were diuers, for he loued learning and books, whereof hee made a goodly Librarie; hee was curious in the ſearch of Genealogies of noble families, and would vnderſtand their armes, and blaſons; yet ſometimes he made ſome noble, that were of ſmall merit: hee tooke great delight to diſcourſe priuately and familiarly with his vaſſals and others, as if hee had been no king, but a priuate gentleman: hee daunced willingly, and did ſo little mainteine his royall grauitie, as hee made no difficultie to come into publike aſſemblies, and to dance in the ſtreets with wiues and virgins after the countrie maner: he went familiarly to dine and ſup, and to make good cheare in his ſubiects houſes, inuiting himſelfe, the which did winne him the loue of ſome, and made him to bee ſcorned of others, as not knowing how to hold his ranke: the which hee held of the French humor, whereas the princes doe ſometimes make themſelues too familiar with petty companions. Hee was ſo giuen to his pleaſures, as many times he referred matters of greateſt importance to others, the which did purchaſe him contempt and hatred with many: for by this meanes againſt his oath and promiſe made at his coronation, many ſtrangers were admitted to eſtates, offices, and benefices within the realme of Nauarre, wherof there were ſundrie admonitions and proteſtations made vnto him in the aſſemblie of the eſtates by the noblemē of the realm, but he did not regard it: for hee thought to find a great ſupport in the king of Caſtilles friendſhip: yet notwithſtanding king Ferdinād did not forbeare to capitulat with Lewis 12 the Frēch king who ſhould help to diſpoſſeſſe him of the realm of Nauar, to inueſt Gaſton of Foix duke of Nemours ſon to Iohn vicont of Narbone, & brother to queene Germain, which D. Ferdinand did afterwards ſeaſe on vpon Archbiſhop of Toledo made a Cardinall.

9 Nauarre.

Genealogie of Nauarre.

Diſpoſition of king Iohn of Nauarre.

A vpon another occasion, as we will shew. About the end of the yeare one thousand fiue hundred and sixe, the Duke of Valentinois hauing escaped from Medina del Campo, and being come, as we haue said, into Nauarre, he found that the King D. Iohn of Albret, and the Queene his wife were growne into factions one against another; the King fauouring them of Beamont, and the Queene the others of Gramont: wherefore the Duke shewing therein both iudgement and affection, hee dealt so as hee reconciled them, making the King his brother in law to fauor the faction of Gramont, wherewith the contrary partie was much troubled: yet Lewis of Beamont the Constable, a man of a great courage, maintained himselfe still proudly in his ranke, so as on a time a certaine Officer comming to giue him notice of some commaundement from the King, he caused him to be beaten B with cudgells, and to be cast into prison in the castle of Larraga, making shew that he did not much respect the King, nor his Aduersaries of Gramont which were fauored by him, which was the cause of his ruine: for the King being iustly incensed at this audacious fact, hauing by many messages sent for him to Court, and hee not obeying, hee resolued to ruine him quite. He had to friend, although he were of the contrary faction, D. Alfonso Carillo of Peralta Erale of Saint Stephen, sonne to Troilo Carillo, and grandchild to D. Alfonso Carillo of Acugna Archbishop of Toledo, who did aduertise him of all that was practised against him, aduising him by no meanes to come to the Court, vnlesse hee would fall into their ambushes. By reason of this contumacie, the King hauing caused his processe to be made, he was condemned to loose both life and goods, as guiltie of high treaC son: and hauing sent forth troupes for the execution of this Sentence, he giue the charge to the Duke of Valentinois his brother in law, to pursue him with all extremitie of warre, the which the Duke beganne by the siege of the castle of Larraga the eleuenth of February 1507. But a Gentleman called Oger of Berastegui who commanded there, defended it brauely, so as both the King, who was there in person, and the Duke, left it, and went to Viana, whereas the towne made not any resistance, but the castle held good, although they were scanted for victualls: whereof the Earle of Lerin the Constable being aduertised, he resolued to relieue it; for the effecting whereof hauing gathered together about two hundred horse and some foot, hee came to Mandauia to watch some opportunitie to execute his designe, the which succeeded happily, for the same night there did rise a horD rible tempest, which made the Duke thinke that the enemy would not goe to field, and that they would not aduenture to succour the besieged; wherefore he retired his gardes and sentinells which he did vsually set vpon all the approches to the castle, wherein hee was deceiued although he were held for a wise and discreet Commander: for through fauour of the noyse of the winde, and the great raine, three score horses parted from Mandauia, euery one carrying a sacke of meale, and some baked bread, which prouision they put into the castle by a posterne, and were not discouered: Morning being come, in their retreit they discouered certain horsmen vpon the way of Logrogno, which made them thinke that it was a supply of 300. Castillan horse which the Duke of Negera had promised to send vnto the Constable, wherefore they beganne to crie, Beaumont, BeauE mont, which gaue an alarme vnto the Towne. The Duke of Valentinois hauing caused himselfe to be richly armed by a groome of his called Ianicot, who had sometimes serued the Constable; he went forth brauely mounted, and followed by a thousand horse, and a great troupe of foot, and so hee went towards Mandauia, saying, Where is this pettie Count? I vow to God I will this day kill him, or take him prisoner, I will not leaue him vntill he be quite ruined, and will not pardon any one of his, all shalbe put to the sword, euen the dogges and cattes. Being thrust on with this violent passion, he aduaunced his troup, folowing 60. horse which retired before him. The Constable had sent forth some, aswell to receiue those (if need were) which were gone to victuall the castle of Viana, as F to discouer what the enemy did, who seeing the Duke whom they knew not come thus alone, and with a great assurance, doubting that he was followed by some great troupes, they retired to the place where the Constable remayned, who wondering what this Knight should be, and at his hardinesse, What? (saies hee) is there no man here that dares affront this gallant, which comes so neere vs? Then there disbanded three gentlemen of his troupe, who went to incounter him in a hollow way like vnto a ditch, whereas

1597

Diuision of Albret king of Nauarre & the Queene his wife fall into factions.

10

Rashnesse of the Erle of Lerin, which caused his ruine.

Sentẽce against the Earle of Lerin.

Castle of Viana besieged by the Duke of Valentinois.

Viana victualled by the Earle of Lerin.

1507 the duke could not well vſe his force and dexteritie, nor mannage his horſe, who hauing charged their Lances againſt him, one of them tooke him vnder the right arme pit, where hee was vnarmed, as hee did lift vp his arme to charge his lance, and ſo ranne him through, hee falling downe dead to the ground. They ſaie that hee that gaue the blow was one of the Garceſes of Agreda: The bodie was preſently ſtript by theſe three companions, and left naked in the way, hauing couered his priuie parts with a ſtone: they carried theſe rich ſpoyles vnto the Conſtable who beganne to retire, not knowing any thing of him that was ſlaine, but that hee ſhould be ſome great captaine, vntill that the ſame morning Ianicot the groome of his chamber, who had followed his maſter, and miſt his way, was taken by ſome and led to the Conſtable, by whom it was knowne after that he had ſeene his armes and habiliments, that it was Ceſar Borgia duke of Valentinois which had beene ſlaine, whoſe bodie was found by the army which followed after. King Iohn himſelfe being in perſon in the rereward, who lamented much for the death of his brother in lawe, and couering him with a cloake of ſcarlet he cauſed him to be carried to Viana, and to be buried in the great chappell of the pariſh church of Saint Mary, where this epitaph is to be read.

Death of the duke of Valentinois.

A qui iaze en poca tierra
El que toda le temia,
El que lapas, y la guerra
Por todo el mondo hazia.

O tu que vas à buſcar, Dignas coſas de loar,
Se tu loas lo mas digno,
Aqui pare tu camino
No cure de mas andar.

It is obſerued in Spaine for a memorable thing, that the death of the duke of Valentinois happened in Nauarre the like day that hee had in the ſame realme taken poſſeſſion of the perpetuall adminiſtration of the church of Pampelome, the chiefe of that realme, which was the eleuenth day of March, on the which God would ſhew ſome teſtimonie of his wrath againſt him, who in contempt of all religion had quit his Eccleſiaſticall eſtate, and the Miniſterie, to follow the practiſe of armes: The Conſtable would haue beene more ioyfull if hee had beene taken aliue, to haue preſented him to king Ferdinand. The king of Nauarre by reaſon of this death fell into ſuch a rage againſt the Conſtable, and all his houſe, as euen ſome of his kinſemen which followed the Kings armie were forced to retire, not daring to preſent themſelues before him: againſt whom the caſtle of Viana did ſtill make reſiſtance, notwithſtanding that his armie was much increaſed by certaine troupes which had beene ſent him out of Caſtille from D. Bernardin of Velaſco Conſtable and Duke of Frias, and the Earle of Nieua, with whom and with the Earle of Aguilar, the king had alwayes entertayned a ſtrict friendſhip: but hee paſt into the Conſtables lands where hee committed all the ſpoyles that an incenſed enemy could deuiſe: hee tooke the towne of Lerin, where hee ouerthrew and ruined the ſepulchre or monument of the houſe of Lerin, and the Conſtables progenitours, which was a ſumptuous and ſtately building; hee raſed his houſes, cut vp his vines and trees, then taking the reſt of his places and caſtles, ſome by a voluntarie yeelding, and ſome by force, where hee cauſed the captaynes which made reſiſtance to be hanged, hee reduced him to that extremitie, as hee was forced to retire himſelfe into Caſtille to D. Ferdinand king of Arragon his brother in lawe, being followed by many other knights of the faction of Beaumont which was then vnder foote, and that of Gramont aduaunced, amongſt whom was the Marſhalles place; and moreouer by the Conſtables retreat they obtayned that Office for D. Alphonſo Carillo of Peralta Earle of Saint Stephen: Then the caſtles of Viana and Larraga yeelded. And in this exile the Conſtable beeing old and diſpoſſeſt, died ſome moneths after in Arragon, in the towne of Aranda: His wife D. Leonora of Arragon dyed likewiſe at the ſame time in the citie of Tortoſa in Cattelonia. The Conſtables bodie hauing beene left for a time in the monaſterie of Veruela, was afterwards tranſported to Lerin, where he lies: his ſonne D. Lewis of Beaumont ſucceeded him after the conqueſt of Nauarre, made by D. Fer-

Warre againſt the Conſtable of Lerin.

Death of D. Lewis of Beaumõt the Conſtable.

A D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, in the office of Conſtable, and of high Chancellour of the realme, and in all his other eſtate and lands being by his mothers ſide, nephew to the king D. Ferdinand, and graundchilde to D. Iohn king of Arragon the ſecond of that name. There was a bruite, that the Conſtable and his ſonne had treated with Lewis the twelfth to diſpoſſeſſe king Iohn of Albret of the realme of Nauarre, and to inueſt Gaſton of Foix duke of Nemours his nephew, and that Lewis of Beaumont, the ſonne of D. Francis of Beaumont, and D. Pedro Menat of Beaumont went into France to ſollicite the king in this buſineſſe, aſſuring him that all things ſhould be eaſie for him, and fauourable, but that the king being then buſied in other affaires, eſpecially to reduce the citie of Genoua which was then rebelled, to his obedience, would not hearken to it: B wherefore D. Lewis of Beaumont, and D. Pedro Menat returned into Arragon, leauing D. Francis in the French kings ſeruice, where hee continued vntill that hee was called home by his father D. Iohn of Beaumont, who had a certaine quarrell with Amador of Laſcan, whoſe challenge hee could not anſwer by reaſon of his age, ſo as hee came and preſented himſelfe to the combat againſt Amador, during the raigne of theſe kings; but there growing a certayne queſtion being ready to fight, vpon the qualitie of the armes, they ſpent the whole day in diſputes, and nothing was done. The cardinall D. Anthony biſhop of Pampelone being dead about the end of this yeare one thouſand fiue hundred & ſeuen, there was preferred in his place by pope Iulio the ſecond, the cardinall of Sancta C Sabina, called Facio; but the chapter of the church of Pampelone, hauing already choſen cardinall Amand of Albret of the title of Saint Nicholas in carcere Tulliano, the kings brother, for their biſhop, the cardinall of Sancta Sabina was reiected and kept from the poſſeſſion of that biſhopricke: whereupon Pope Iulio did cenſure the whole realme of Nauarre in the beginning of the yere one thouſand fiue hundred and eight, and did continue a whole yere, to free them from the which they were forced to accept of the cardinall preferred by him for their biſhop of Pampelone, whereof he tooke poſſeſſion by his deputy, and the election made by the chapter was declared voyd. This cardinall Facio liued not long after, wherefore cardinall Amand of Albret the kings brother recouered his right, and was receiued in the place of the deceaſed. The archdeaconſhip of D the table of that church, a chiefe dignitie, and of great reuenues, was giuen vnto D. Iohn of Beaumont, for his ſonne called alſo D. Iohn brother to D. Francis of Beaumont aboue mentioned, who being returned out of France into Nauarre, was, notwithſtanding the hatred and factions of Beaumont and Gramont, much fauoured by the Marſhall D. Pedro, who was then in greateſt eſteeme and authoritie with the Kings D. Iohn and D. Catherina.

1508

11 This yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and eight Muley Mahumet king of Fez, of the family of the Merins, beſieged the citie of Arzilla, in the which the earle of Redondo a Portugall was gouernour, and hauing taken the towne with his great power, being aboue a hundred thouſand fighting men, hee alſo tooke part of the caſtle, and forE ced the Earle to retire into a tower with ſome ſouldiers: whereof king Ferdinand being aduertiſed, hee ſent to the Earle Pedro Nauarro an excellent captaine of his time, being at Malaga, to goe and ſuccour the Portugalls at Arzilla, appoynting him certaine old ſouldiers which were come from Naples, who were then lodged in the Axarchia of Malaga. The earle hauing receiued this charge, imbarqued with great ſpeed in a ſhippe of his owne, which was called Mariette, with other ſhippes which hee found readie, and foure gallies, about two thouſand and fiue hundred of theſe ſouldiers, and ſo ſayled towards Arzilla, where vpon his firſt approach hee ſo terrified the Moores, which beſieged the Tower where the Earle of Redondo was, with his great ordonance from the ſhippes, as they ſuffered him to land his men, with the which hee entred the citie, and F fought ſo valiantly, as hee chaſed away the Moores, whom he found lodged, and fortified there, ſtriking ſuch a terrour into the king of Fez his armie, as the ſame night it retired about two leagues from the towne. D. Pedro Nauarro incouraged with this good ſucceſſe, going forth with certaine field peeces, and ſetting a countenance on it, hee held the enemies in ſuch doubt, as they retired to Fez, and Arzilla was freed, whereas within few dayes after the armie of Portugall arriued, being ſent to ſuccour it by the king Caſtile. Arzilla beſieged, the Moores and the towne taken.

Exploit of Pedro Nauarro at Arzilla in fauour of the Portugalls.

1503 D. Manuel, the which had come too late without the diligence and good office of King Ferdinand, and the Earle D. Pedro Nauarro, who hauing ſent backe part of his ſouldiers in the Mariette, hee ranne along the coaſt of Barbarie with his foure gallies, vnto Belis or Veles of Gomera, who diſcouering a rocke in the ſea fit to build a fort on, for the defence and ſafetie of the coaſt of Spaine, eſpecially for the ſtreit, and the reſt of Andaluſia hee put thirtie ſouldiers in garriſon there, in deſpight of the Moores: And being returned to Malaga, hee aduertiſed the King of the commoditie of this ſeat, yeelding him many reaſons to induce him to build a fort there: whereupon the King ſent a gouernour thither, whoſe name was Iohn of Villalobos, captaine of Trebeja, and rector of Malaga, who entring into this place called Pegnon de Veles, with three ſcore and tenne ſouldiers, he ſpent his life there in garriſon, and after him his ſonne, who put in his place an vncle of his called Francis of Villalobos, in whoſe time this fort was taken by the Moores, eight yeres after it had beene firſt fortified by the earle D. Pedro Nauarro.

Pegnon de Veles fortified.

12 The king D. Ferdinand hauing this yeere ſent one of the Prouoſts of his Court called the Bacheler Hernando Gomes of Herrera to Cordoua, for certaine executions of Iuſtice, hee had ſuch a quarrell with D. Pero Fernandes of Cordoua, nephew to the great captayne, as the marqueſſe cauſed him to be taken priſoner, and to be carried to Montillo, wherewith the king found himſelfe much wronged, and loath to imploy anie other, hee went himſelfe to puniſh this diſobedience and contempt. Wherefore comming to Toledo, and from thence by Cite royall, Syerra Morena, Pedroche, and Adamuz hee entred into Cordoua, where he beganne to haue informations made againſt the marqueſſe, for whom the great captaine and other noblemen were ſuiters, intreating him to remember how D. Alphonſo d'Aguilar the marqueſſes father died, and how his vncle the great captaine had liued: yet the marqueſſe was condemned in a great fine, his houſe of Aguilar raſed, and himſelfe baniſhed for a certaine time.

Prouoſt of the court troubled in his charge, and the puniſhment the king inflicted.

13 In Portugall the king D. Manuel attending the gouernement of his realmes, and the nauigations to the Eaſt Indies, made his greateſt reſidence in the citie of Ebora, whileſt that Lisbone was afflicted with cruell ſeditions, by reaſon of religion; an ordinarie thing in this later age, whenas moſt Chriſtians iealous of their owne glorie, worſhip their opinions, and maintaine their ceremonies by tumults and effuſion of bloud. It did ſeeme vnto ſome women of the auncient families of Chriſtians in that citie, that ſome of the new conuerts or of their deſcendants, being in the Conuent of the friers of Saint Dominike had mockt at the hoſte, which they are accuſtomed to keep in their churches: wherewith being moued with a womaniſh choler, they beganne to caſt their pattens at them, ſaying, Goe you wicked dogges, God forbid that the plague and other miſeries ſhould fall vpon vs for you. At this noyſe there came two friers running, who moued with a monkiſh zeale, tooke vp a Croſſe, and running vp and downe the ſtreetes, cried, Kill, kill theſe wicked hereticall dogges, for both plague and famine will fall vpon this countrey for their impieties: with which cries they ſtirred vp the people, ſo as falling vpon theſe new Chriſtians (as they call them) they ſlue aboue 4000, regarding the innocent no more then the offender: and that which was the chiefe motiue, they ſpoiled their goods, ſackt their houſes, and burnt many in the ſtreetes, and publike places of the citie: the which the officers of Iuſtice could not help. In the end, being tired rather then glutted with killing and ſpoyling, the tumult ceaſed. King Manuel beeing aduertiſed of this exceſſe, cauſed the two friers which were the authors to be apprehended, and to be publikely burnt at Ebora, and informations being made againſt the mutines, and ſpoilers, about 70 of them were moſt iuſtly hanged, wherein it is ſtrange how often they were then abuſed, who leauing Mahumets or the Iewiſh impietie, came into the boſome of the Romiſh church, thinking to find a ſafe refuge, or ſome mildnes and humanitie there, whereas they did often make triall of the ſmothered hatred, and crueltie, of theſe proud and rauiſhing olde Chriſtians, as they call them in Spaine; men truely vnfitte to draw infidelles to the healthfull Doctrine of IESVS CHRIST: for this deteſtable example could no wayes edifie the ſonne of the King of Manicongo, who was ſent a while after into Portugall, to bee there inſtructed in the Romiſh Religion. This King ruling vpon the weſterne ſhoare of Afrike beyond the Equinoctiall, was vaſſall and

Portugal.

Sedition at Liſbone for religiõ.

A and alied to the king D. Manuel, the infant his ſonne was named Henry, and was bred vp and inſtructed in the Latine tongue and the ſciences for the ſpace of twelue yeeres, at Saint Eloy in Lisbone, after the which hee returned into his countrey, being accompanied by many of the monkes of S.Eloy, carrying with him many ornaments ſeruing for the ceremonies of the Romiſh religion, and many gifts from the King D. Manuel. 1508 Henry Infant of Manicongo baptized.

14 D. Ferdinand King of Arragon for his part, ſeeking the propagation of religion, following the aduice of his councell and of the diuines of Spaine, gaue leaue this yeere one thouſand fiue hundred and eight, to ſome Spaniards dwelling at the Indies to ſearch into the maine land there, to conquer prouinces and people, and to conuert thoſe in- Caſtille.
B fidelles to the Chriſtian religion, by armes, if they did not willingly ſubmit themſelues; ſending ample inſtructions vnto them. The firſt that vndertooke that enterpriſe was Alphonſo of Hojeda or Fojeda, borne at Cuenea, hauing dwelt long at the Indies, who parting from the port of Beate of Saint Dominike with foure ſhippes and three hundred men, came vnto Carthagena, beeing followed by an other ſhippe, in the which there ſhould be certaine mares, ſwine, and other cattell to breed, being conducted by the bacheler Martin Fernandes of Enſiſo with an hundred and fiftie Spaniards. Hauing landed, Alphonſo of Hojeda cauſed the Caribes a cruell and barbarous nation, which inhabite that countrie, to be ſummoned, to yeeld obedience to the King D. Ferdinand, and D. Ioane Alphonſo of Hoieda firſt diſcouerer of the firme land at the Indies.
C of Caſtille, and to receiue the preaching of the goſpel, offering them peace with great priuiledges and exemptions: but they making no regard of all theſe things, Hoieda made cruell wars againſt them, killing or making ſlaues all he could get, according to the inſtruction of the diuines of Spaine. He marcht about fiue leagues into the land, and beſieged a little borough of ſome one hundred houſes, where there might dwell ſome three hundred perſons of theſe Caribes, who defended themſelues in ſuch ſort with poyſoned arrowes, and their other armes, as they ſlew three ſcore and tenne Spaniards, and among them Alphonſo de la Coſa of Palos of Moguer in Adaluſia, a man expert in nauigation, and lieutenant at that time to Hoieda, which was a great loſſe; and had not Caribes defend themſelues courageouſly.
D Diego of Nicueſa of Baeſa arriued, they were in daunger to haue receiued a greater loſſe and affront. Nicueſa parting from the ſame port of Beata of S. Domingo, had brought foure ſcore Spaniards in ſeuen ſhippes and two brigantines. Hoieda hauing ioyned with 780. did eaſily force the borough, and burnt it with all the Indians, who had no leaſure nor meanes to flie, of the which they retayned ſeuen priſoners: and hauing gathered vp ſome little gold in the aſhes of this fire, theſe captaines diuided themſelues, Hoieda bending towards Vrabia, and Nicueſa to Beragua.

15 This was done at ſuch time as the Chriſtian princes made a league at Cambrie againſt the Venetians, into the which D. Ferdinand King of Arragon and Gouernour of Caſtille entred. The Venetians who alwayes knew how to make their profite by other mens quarrels, held Padena, Vincence, Verona, Friuli and Treuiſo which the emperour Pretenſions of Chriſtian princes againſt the Venetians.
E pretended. The French king as duke of Millane demaunded of them Cremona, Ghiaradda, Breſt, Bergamo and Crema, for the pope there was exacted the towne of Faruſe, Rimini, Rauenna and Ceruia, and King Ferdinand deſired to retire the places and ports of the realme of Naples; which had beene engaged vnto them by the old King D. Ferdinand of Naples: for theſe conſiderations all their embaſſadors met there together, to conclude a warre againſt the Venetians; but king Ferdinand had no great will to take armes againſt that common weale, proiecting other meanes to recouer his right, but to pleaſe the Emperour hee ioyned in this warre, and for that there was ſome diſcontentment betwixt the king D. Ferdinand, the emperour and prince Charles, by reaſon of the gouernement of Caſtille, it was ſaid, that there ſhould be no ſpeach of it, vntill the F end of that war. There were many other particularities treated of and concluded there, euery one of theſe princes ſeeking more his owne priuate intereſt then the good of the league in generall. King Ferdinand was then at Tordeſillas, whither hee had accompanied his daughter the Queene. D. Ioane, who liued there, and hauing beene a widow eight and fourty yeares, ended her dayes there. In May, in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and nine, queene Germanie wife to king Ferdinand was deliuered 1509 of a ſon at Vailledolit, who was named Iohn, but he liued not long, after which this princeſſe had not any more children : but the king her husband before he maried her had D. Alphonſo of Arragon by the vicounteſſe of Eboli; he was archbiſhop of Saragoſſe, a prince of ſinguler vertue : he had alſo D. Ioane of Arragon who was wife to the Conſtable D. Berrardin of Velaſco : and moreouer by a gentlewoman of Bilbao called D. Tota, he had D. Maria of Arragon, who was a nunne at Madrigal : and of a lady of Portugall of the family of the Pereiras, an other daughter named alſo D. Maria of Arragon, who was in like manner a nunne in Madrigal with her ſiſter ; this was the poſteritie of king Ferdinand.

Genealogie of Arragon.

Fort built by the Spaniards in the firme land of the Indies.

Policie of the Indians.

16 That yeare Alphonſo of Hojeda or Fogeda, running ouer the countrey of Vraba, tooke in the ſtrong Iland two men and ſeuen women, and got about two hundred ounces of gold : and hauing landed in Caribana, hee beganne a fort and towne, which was the firſt the Spaniards made in the firme land of the Indies. The Spaniards being entred foure leagues into the countrey, they aſſailed a little towne called Taripi, whereas the Indians made great reſiſtance, and they had this policie, to draw their enemies on with gold, whereof they knew them to be very couetous, caſting it in certaine places, that comming to gather it vp, they might pierce them more eaſily with their poyſoned arrowes, whereof they died like mad men. Hoieda preſt with theſe difficulties, and with hunger, raiſed his ſiege, and went to another Borough, where he found ſome ſmall ſtore of victualls, and tooke ſome priſoners, and among others, a woman, whoſe husband came before Hoieda, and promiſed by a certaine day to bring her ranſome, at which prefixed time hee came, being accompanied with eight archers, who began to ſhoot many poyſoned arrowes among the Spaniards, wherewith Hoieda himſelfe was hurt, and others died, wherefore the Spaniards ſlue them all nine. Hereupon Bernardin of Talauera arriued with a ſhip laden with victualles and three ſcore and tenne Spaniards to ſuccour Hoieda, but this did not much comfort the Spaniards : wherefore Hoieda fearing that they would mutine, hee reſolued to returne himſelfe to Saint Domingo, to make ſufficient prouiſion of victualles and other things neceſſarie, leauing for lieutenant in his place Francis Picarro, who was afterwards marqueſſe of Atabillos, with an expreſſe charge, that if within fiftie dayes they had no newes of him, they ſhould make the beſt ſhift they could. So Hoieda parting from Caribana, hee arriued in the Iland of Hiſpaniola a citie of Saint Domingo, where being tired with the toyle hee had endured, and with the bad ſucceſſe of his voyage, deſperate, wounded, and ſicke of his perſon, he became a Franciſcan Frier the remaynder of his life. Diego of Nicueſa who had taken the rout of Beragua, aduaunced with a carauell and two brigantines, and paſt the land without diſcouerie : but one of his brigantines commaunded by Lope of Olano, turned backe to conſider of that coaſt, then returning to the other brigantine they went together, to enter in at the mouth of the riuer of Chagre, which they called Lagartos, where they found the reſt of the army, except Nicueſa, who was ſtrayed with his carauel. Being come to the riuer of Beragua, thinking to finde their captayne Nicueſa there, but hearing not any newes of him, they were out of hope euer to returne vnto their houſes, breaking their veſſelles in peeces which were halfe rotten, they choſe Lope of Olano for their captayne, who beganne to make a fort there, and to till the ground, meaning to make his abode there. In the meane time Nicueſa who had loſt his carauell, was come to Sorobaro in great want of victualls, ſo as hee and his companie liued ſome daies with wild fruits; the which was reported to Lope of Olano, by thoſe men who had ſtolne away his carauells cocke-boat : wherefore hee preſently ſent a brigantine vnto him laden with victualls, in the which he came to Beragua : but there enuying the good ſucceſſe of Olano, he began to charge him that he had incroched vpon his authoritie, intreating him ingratefully, whereat the whole company was much diſcontented : after which he cauſed them to diſlodge, and to leaue that country, where they had ſowen much Mays, leading them to Porto Bello, where hee left halfe his men, and led the reſt to a place called Marmoll or Marbre, where hee began a fort, which ſince hath beene verie famous, which he called Nombre de Dios; there Nicueſa and his people were in ſuch extreame neceſſitie, as they were forced to eate their dogges, whereof ſome were ſold for

Nombre de Dios

A for fiue and twenty ducats of Caſtile, yea they did eate the fleſh of an Indian, whom they found dead and halfe rotten. They which Hoieda had left in Caribana, ſeeing that their captaine returned not at the fiftieth day aſſigned, being oppreſt with hunger, they imbarqued by the aduice of Francis Picarro, and hauing loſt one brigantine, they ſayled towards Cochibocoa, neere to the which they met with the bacheler Martin Fernandes of Enciſo, hauing a ſhippe laden with victualles and men, and a brigantine, who commaunded them to returne backe with him: and hauing landed and watered at Camari, they came to Vraba, in which gulfe they built a Towne, the which they called Guarda. The King or Cachique of that countrey called Cemaco, being incenſed that without his B leaue they built vpon his land, hauing hidden all the wealth of his towne among the reedes, hee drew together fiue hundred Indians, and beganne to threaten the Spaniards: then was the Bacheler in great diſtreſſe, and beganne to make vowes and promiſes, That if he got the victorie of thoſe men, hee would build a Temple of the Cachiques towne, the which he would haue called, Our Lady of the Ancient of Darien, and that he would ſend a certayne quantity of gold and ſiluer to the church of our Lady the Ancient of Seuille: whereupon a hundred Spaniards did charge theſe Indians, and defeated them, and their towne was taken and ſpoyled, and their hidden treaſure found, which was not ſmall, & then they began to build the towne and colonie of the Antique of Darien.

Extremitie of the Spaniards at the Indies.

C 17 Whileſt that theſe men guided by auarice, & by the practiſe of cruelty, thought to amplifie the religion of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt at the weſt Indies, the cardinall D. Francis Ximenes of Ciſneros archbiſhop of Toledo, vnder the ſame pretext, but it may be thruſt on by ſome other affection, made offer to go in perſon into Affrike, and there to make warre againſt the Moores, animated thereunto (beſides his owne deſire to make that enterpriſe) by the ſpoyles which ſome pyrates Moores had lately made vpon the coaſt of Spaine, from whence they had carried away many poore ſlaues of all ages, men and women: and that which did more pricke him forward, was, that D. Diego Fernandes Gouernour of Merſalcabler had beene lately defeated by the Moores of Oran, importunately prouoked by him; which diſgrace hee deſired to reuenge vpon that citie. Theſe D things happened during the kings abſence, whenas he was at Naples, from whence being returned, hee was preſently ſollicited by the Cardinall to vndertake this enterpriſe of Oran, whither hee offered to goe himſelfe: wherein hee had many oppoſitions and croſſes, not ſo much by the king, as by the noblemen of the court, who ſcorned him, holding him for a man drunke with ambition, and ignorant how to maintaine himſelfe in his ranke and profeſſion, ſaying, That it was a pleaſant change to ſee the great captaine Gonſal Fernandes famous for ſo many victories which hee had obtayned, now telling of his beads at Vailledolit, and the archbiſhop of Toledo to leaue his miter and croſſe and to put on armes, hauing no thoughts but of killing and ſheding of bloud: but thoſe courtiers which found this ſo ſtrange, had not peruſed the Annales of Spaine, where they E might haue read warrelike exploits of many other Biſhops, equalling the greateſt captaines of their time. Notwithſtanding all the oppoſitions of theſe diſdainefull ſpirites, yet the cardinall obtained what hee pretended: for the king knew his qualities and vertues better then any other, and could ſo extoll him to his Councell, and other noble men in Court, as in the end they did allow of the Cardinalls propoſition, they commended it, and perſwaded the youth to follow him into Affrike. This warre being concluded, there was preſent order giuen, that all the gallies and other veſſelles of warre, and ſhips to carrie victualls and baggage which were made ready in diuers ports, ſhould come to Malaga or Carthagena: there was prouiſion made in diuers places of corne and all kindes of victuall, great ſtore of caske to water in the enemies countrey, and of poul- F der in euery part of Spaine: and there was commaundement giuen to all vaſſals holding fees, commaunderies, and militarie benefices, to be there in perſon, and no man to be exempted but for a very lawful cauſe, and for the neceſſary defence of the Chriſtian commonweale: the ſouldiers which were in the kings pay, and remaining in ordinarie garriſons were alſo ſent, and new leuies made. There were alſo two Alcaides or Prouoſts of Iuſtice of the court appoynted to aſſiſt the cardinall, which were Callego and Aguirro, who Enterpriſe of Oran by Ximenes.

in

in the Kings name, and by his authoritie, ſhould containe euerie man in his duetie. G Herewithall there were giuen vnto the Cardinall many blanckes ſigned and ſealed by the King, to vſe them when neede ſhould require, namely, to inſtitute and appoynt Iudges to puniſh offenders: wherewith the cardinall would not meddle, for that hee was a Franciſcan Friar, and a man of the church. Theſe things prouided, the great captayne Gonſalo Fernandes did aduiſe, that the managing of the warre ſhould bee giuen vnto Pedro Nauarro Earle of Albeto, who ſome few moneths before had built the fort of Pegnon de Veles againſt the Moores, and was a captaine of iudgement and great experience. The cardinall conferred with him of all matters, and did write to Vargas of the Kings councell, and to Villalobos commiſſarie of the victualles, that they ſhould deliuer the victualls and munition ordayned for this warre, as Pedro Nauarro ſhould appoint, and to the colonels to cauſe their men to march towards Malaga: the chiefe of H which were D. Roderigo Moſcoſo Earle of Altamira, D. Iohn Spinoſa, Alphonſo Vanega, Gonſalo Ayora, Pedro of Arias, and Iohn Vilalua, hauing many good and valiant captaines vnder them. To Garcia Villaroello was giuen the commaund of the horſe: Ieroſme Vianello was made marſhall of the campe, by reaſon of the experience and knowledge hee had of the countrie of Africke, and therefore held fitteſt to chooſe the ſituation of the camp, and the places where they ſhould aſſaile the Moores. Thus the cardinall drew together about foure thouſand horſe and tenne thouſand foot. To this warre, beſides the money which the king did furniſh out of his treaſure, and that which the cardinall drew out of his coffers, the chanons of Toledo did alſo contribute: for the cardinall knowing that I money is that which maintaines and giues perfection vnto warre, hee would not make any iuſt proportion of the charge of this worke, or what it might amount vnto, but ſought to gather ſo much together, as hee might haue an ouerplus. The execution of all theſe prouiſions was much delayed, and the voyage almoſt broken, for many did ſtill detract the Cardinall and his enterpriſe to the king, tearming it fooliſh and vnfit for a man of his coate, ſo as the king being almoſt altered, was in a manner reſolued to referre it to another ſeaſon: the which the commiſſaries, collectors, captains of gallies, gouernors of townes, and others hauing publique charges, perceiuing, there was not anie one that cared to doe his duetie, nor to obey Pedro Nauarroes commaundement; there came not a ſhippe to Malaga, the victualls and munition which was not neere, were made K deere for the cardinalles men, who had not his money yet readie: the which D. Pedro ſeeing, he ſought himſelfe to diuert this expedition by another enterpriſe which he propounded vpon ſome other parts in Afrike; wherewith the cardinall was much perplexed, but hee muſt ſhew his magnanimitie and perſeuerance: for then hee reſolued to imploy all his meanes, and friends, rather then to faile in that which hee had vndertaken, which was publiſhed to all the world, and had beene a great diſhonour to the king, to him, and to all Chriſtendome, if after ſo great a ſhew of armes, they ſhould retire without cauſe: which hauing made knowne vnto the king with pertinent reaſons, and vehement perſuaſions, hee had anſwer from the king according to his deſire, that although hee were diſſuaded, yet hee would haue the armie paſſe into Afrike at the firſt L opportunitie, yet notwithſtanding there grew new difficulties, the ſouldiers beeing hardly ſtayed, and the victualls and other prouiſions, through the couetouſneſſe and malice of the commiſſaries, delaied, and in a maner denied, and many of the men at armes gone backe: yet hee ſurmounted all theſe difficulties, making the rendes-vous for his armie at Carthagena: he himſelfe parting from Alcala, being accompanyed with a great number of his friends and ſeruants in armes, where there were many Friers of his houſhold, which girded themſelues with ſwords vnder the habite of Saint Francis, hee came to Toledo, where hee made knowne vnto the Chapter the cauſe of his voyage, and hauing recommended the charge of the archbiſhopricke in his abſence to D. Iohn de Velaſco biſhop of Calaorra, he came to Carthagena. Many of his chanons deſirous to M ſee the world, would haue followed him, but he ſtayed two onely, and ſent backe the reſt: thoſe two were Francis Aluares learned in the lawes, and Charles of Mendoſa Abbot of Saint Leocadie. Being readie to imbarque, the ſouldiers began to call for money, elſe they would not goe: the author of this ſedition was a raſcall of Alcala of Henares, called Conſcience of Ximenes.

Pedro Nauarro chiefe conductor of the Affricane warre.

Colonels at the warre of Oran.

Foreſight of the Cardinall.

Magnanimitie of the Cardinall Ximenes.

Sedition in the Cardinals camp cauſed by a raſcall.

A called Arnold, who had beene a broker in his youth: the which did ſomewhat trouble the cardinall, not knowing whether it had a further reach, being reſolued not to giue the ſouldiers any money vntill they were paſt into Afrike. Vianello maſter of the campe, cauſed as many of the ſeditious as hee could lay hand on to bee hanged, or to paſſe the pikes: wherein vſing too great ſeueritie, the Cardinall ſent Garcia Villaroello vnto him, to admoniſh him to proceed more mildly for the loue and reſpect of his perſon, and the religious habite which hee bare, whom ſo great rigour did not befit, and the rather for that manie of theſe ſouldiers were raiſed in his Archbiſhopricke, and were come to the warres for the loue of him, abandoning both wife and children. It is not well knowne in what maner Garcia deliuered his meſſage to Vianello, but he made him a proud B anſwer, to the diſgrace of Garcia, and of the Cardinall himſelfe; with which affront D. Garcia being incenſed, he could not containe himſelfe, but drew his ſword and hurt Vianello very ſore, and then hee fled into a caſtle, whereas a kinſeman of his was captayne, fearing the Cardinalles indignation, who was much offended with theſe actions. Vianelloes hurt did ſomewhat ſtay the departure of the armie; in the meane time they got the mutined ſouldiers to imbarke, with promiſe that they ſhould haue money as ſoone as they were on ſhippe boord, the which was perfourmed. Beeing then imbarked, eſpecially by the care and policie of Salazar colonell of them of Toledo, they ſawe in the Generalles galley manie ſackes full of crownes, deckt with bowes, and many barkes about it, dreſt in like maner, with a great noyſe of trumpets and drummes, which made C them forget all diſcontent, receiuing their pay with great ioy. The Cardinall did alſo imbarke, but hee was forced to ſtay ſome dayes for a winde, the which turning faire, they paſt happily into Afrike, beeing foure ſcore ſhippes of burthen, thirteene gallies, and many other ſmaller veſſells, carrying tenne thouſand foot, and foure thouſand horſe, with many marchants, victuallers, groomes, pioners and other people neceſſarie in a campe. The Spaniards which write of this action, ſay that the Cardinall at his departure from Carthagena, had conceiued ſuch a hope of victorie, as hee did ſollicite the king by his letters to prouide for the gard of Oran which he had alreadie conquered, aſſuring him that he might ſhortly make vſe of the armie which he led, for his affaires of Italie, whither hee himſelfe would goe if need required, and that it ſhould pleaſe him to D commaund him. Hee was not deceiued in his conceit: but comming to the coaſt of Afrike on Aſcenſion day, the whole countrey was preſently aduertiſed by the watches and fiers which were made by the Moores, and all the Chriſtians ſhippes came ſafely that night into the port of Merſalcabir, although it were verie darke. Hauing called a Councell, it was reſolued to ſeaze preſently vpon the ſtreit paſſage which is betwixt Merſalcabir and Oran, whereas the beacon is ſet, and to bring the ſhippes of burthen in view of Oran, and to plant their batterie ſpeedily, before that the Alarabes being aduertiſed from all parts, ſhould gather together to make head, and hinder their deſcent. Vpon this reſolution Pedro Nauarro cauſed all the veſſells as ſoone as the ſouldiers were landed, to paſſe towards Oran, and preſently to towe all the barkes which ſhould carry E the horſe, holding them vnneceſſarie in a Countrey which was rough and vneuen: the which the Cardinall not vnderſtanding ſo well as the other, hee held it for a diſgrace which Nauarro meant to doe him, commaunding the horſe that they ſhould follow by land as well as they could, diſpoſing gardes in conuenient places, for feare of the Moores ſurpriſes, the which did ſerue to ſome purpoſe. The paſſage was attempted and woon, not without great difficultie, beeing defended by the Moores, and Alarabes, which came out of Oran: the which was in the meane time battered from the Chriſtians ſhippes and gallies. It happened that many ſouldiers landing out of the gallies, they hindered the Moores and the Alarabes from flying into the towne, hauing beene cha- F ſed from the paſſage of the mountayne, and were purſued by Pedro Nauarroes troupes, ſo as the Citie wanting men to defend it, it was taken none knowes how: the ſouldiers climing myraculouſly ouer the walles and rampiers, with the helpe of theyr pikes: the which beeing tryed by manie after the taking of it, they could not

1509

Vianello Maiſter of the campe hurt by Garcia Villaroello.

Army parts from Carthagena.

Oran taken miraculouſly.

get

1509 get vp by reaſon of the height of the walles, and the weakeneſſe of theyr pikes, G ſo as this priſe was held miraculous; Soſa who carried the Cardinalles cornet was the firſt that mounted, crying Saint Iago, Ximenes, and victorie. The Moores fayl-ing both in defence and courage, ſhut themſelues into their Meſquites, or into their ſtrongeſt houſes; ſome held the market places, being reſolued to die fighting. But the citie gates being broke open, and all the armie brought in, all this wretched multitude ranne towards the port which is towards Tremeſſen, to ſee if they might eſcape. But Garcia Villaroello was ſet there in gard with ſome horſe, to put all them to the ſword that ſhould ſeeke to flie away. It happened that neere vnto that port there lay hidden in the Treacherie of the mercenarie Moores. gardens and other places couered with trees a hundred and fiftie horſe Alarabes, of thoſe which had beene chaſed from the paſſage of the mountaine, with no other intent but to H ſpoile the people that ſhould flie out of the citie (ſuch trecherous and couetous theeues they bee) when as they ſaw theſe Chriſtian horſemen, who watcht alſo for their pray, they charged them ſodainely and with ſuch fury, as before they had viewed them, they ſlew tenne, and put the reſt to flight, whereas Garcias horſe was ſlaine. This accident gaue many poore Moores meanes to eſcape. Within the citie the victorious army put all to the ſword that they found in the ſtreetes or houſes, in hatred of their religion, not ſparing neyther age nor ſex, neyther did the care of the commanders and captaines preuaile any thing, who cauſing a retreat to be ſounded, called euery one backe into his quarter, the night approaching: for moſt of the ſouldiers being diſperſed in the Moores houſes and ſtreetes, hauing fed well, fell ſo ſoundly aſleepe among the dead bodies, as I Dutie of a well aduiſed captaine. many of them could not bee awaked the next day at noone: wherefore it was needefull that the Earle Pedro Nauarro and the captaines with troupes choſen out of their beſt men to watch that night. Pedro Nauarro beeing ſufficiently aduertiſed of the Moores ſubtil-ties, did neuer diſarme, neyther did he ſleepe, vntill hee ſaw all things aſſured, performing therein the duetie of a well aduiſed captaine. The Moores which had fortified themſelues in their Meſquites and other places, beeing ſummoned to yeeld, and refuſing, de-teſting the conquerers crueltie, were forced. In this ſlaughter there was a miſerable ſpectacle of a little infant which ſtroue to take the mothers dugge being ſlaine. There Number of them that were ſlaine at Oran. were ſlaine as ſome write, aboue foure thouſand, and about fiue thouſand priſoners, or eight thouſand, as Ieroſme Lulien the cardinalls Secretary writes, and of the Chriſtians K only thirtie. The ſpoile of that citie was eſteemed to be worth aboue 500000 crownes, the which is credible, for they hold that there were fifteene hundred ſtore-houſes, or marchants ſhoppes. To conclude, all men made themſelues rich there, yea the verie horſe boyes. The cardinall being in the fort of Merſalcabir hauing had intelligence of the winning of the citie of Oran, cauſed himſelfe to be conducted thither in the gallies, where hee entred with great acclamations, cauſing a croſſe to be carried before him:
there hee receiued the keyes of the Alcazaua, that is to ſay, of the chiefe fort, from whence there were drawne aboue 300 poore Chriſtian priſoners and ſet at libertie.
The ſpoyle being all gathered together, and kept to be preſented vnto him, that he might Diſtribution of the ſpoyle at Oran. diſpoſe thereof as generall of the army, hee retained nothing for himſelfe, but onely cau- L ſed certaine things to be layd a part for the king: he did ſeperate alſo a part for the commoditie and vſe of the army in generall, leauing the reſt to the captaines and ſouldiers:
many of the which who had ſhewed themſelues moſt valiant he honoured with preſents.
It was no ſmall difficultie to cleanſe the towne of dead bodies, which did already ſtinke, and were likely to corrupt the ayre, for the number beeing great, after that they had buried many in great and deepe pittes, and burnt many, yet did they many dayes after finde ſome in the ſtreetes and houſes; beſides, there were few men that would buſie themſelues to bury the dead, for there was not ſo great gaine, as in killing them that were liuing. They found aboue three ſcore peeces of ordonance, and an infinite number of other engins for defence, ſo as it is admirable, that a towne ſo well peopled and ſo M well fortified made no defence, being aſſured of ſuccours from the Alarabes, vagabonds and mercenaries of Afrike, whereof they had means to entertaine good numbers. True it it is that ſome ſay this city was taken by practiſe and treaſon plotted by the Cardinall,
and

A and by the miniſterie of Martin Argoto of Cordoua, and Alphonſo of Martos priſoners in Oran, ſince the defeat of D. Diego Fernandes gouernor of Merſalcabir, and that theſe two did corrupt Hamet Acanix, or Aben Canex, and Iſael Otaybi receiuers of the reuenue which the king of Tremeſſen had there, and a Iew dwelling at Oran, called Cetora, who were the cauſe that the ports were ſhut againſt the Alarabes which were repulſed, from the paſſage of the mountaine, of the watch, and gaue entrie to the Spaniards: the cardinall hauing had aduice by theſe traitors, that he muſt aſſaile the towne the day after his arriuall, for if he delayed it, he ſhould be deceiued of his expectation, for that the king of Tremeſſen had a mighty army which marcht to ſuccour the city. And they ſay, that he that was captaine of the Alcazaua or fort of Oran, called Cedrin, was kinſeman to Acanix, B and a partiſan of his treaſon, the which is probable: for in trueth the Spaniards did firſt enter into Oran by the fort. The cardinall hauing cleanſed the Meſquites, the chiefe of them was dedicated to the Annunciation, and an other to Saint Iaques: hee made an hoſpitall called Saint Bernard, and two Couents, one of Franciſcan Friars, and the other of Iacobins, and hauing ordered all things concerning religion the beſt he could, he left the care of ſtate and warre to Pedro Nauarro, and ſo returned into Spaine, for there was no good agreement among them. The cardinall ſpent a whole yeere in theſe matters, for he arriued in Spaine the ſame day that he parted: He did erect a dignitie with the title of an Abbot in regard of this victorie, to the which hee aſſigned a ſeate in his church of Toledo.

1509
Oran taken by practiſe as ſome hold.

C 18 This yeere, one thouſand fiue hundred and nine, D. Catherine Infanta of Caſtille, widow to Arthur prince of Wales, was married to Henrie king of England, the eight of that name, brother to her deceaſed husband, who was that yeere come to the crowne, by the deceaſe of their father Henrie the ſeuenth, and was crowned on Saint Iohn Baptiſts day, which by reaſon thereof was ſolemnized with extraordinarie pompe in Caſtille by king Ferdinand: who to perform the articles of the league made at Cambray, ſent at the ſame time a ſea-army to the realme of Naples: wherefore the Viceroy of Naples beganne to ſhew himſelfe vpon the coaſt of Apulia in ſhew of an enemy, to force the Venetians to yeeld vnto the king his maſter, the townes of Manfredonia, Trani, Monopoli, Brindez and Otranto, which had beene ingaged vnto them, during the precedent
D warres with France. The Pope, the Emperour, and the French King did likewiſe inuade them, the euent whereof I will forbeare to relate, it belonging not to this Hiſtorie of Spaine.

Army of Spaine ſent to annoy the Venetians.

During the warre againſt the Venetians, there was a controuerſie reconciled betwixt the emperour Maximilian, and king Ferdinand, touching the gouernement of Caſtille, after the death of king Philip. The emperour thought, that being grandfather by the fathers ſide vnto prince Charles the heire of that realme, and of his brother and ſiſters, D. Ferdinand, D. Leonora, D. Maria, D. Iſabella and D. Catherina, iſſued of his ſonne and D. Ioane, and therefore pretending right in Caſtille, it was more fit that hee ſhould haue the gouernement, than the king D. Ferdinand, their grandfather by the mothers ſide;
E but king Ferdinands title ſeemed to be the better, for that D. Ioane his daughter, the proprietarie Queene of Caſtille was yet liuing, and that it was an vnwoorthy thing that the gouernement of a realme, which had beene honored and inlarged by him with ſuch great conqueſts, ſhould be taken from him, to giue it vnto ſtrangers. This controuerſie was ended by the mediation of the French king, vpon theſe conditions, That the king D. Ferdinand ſhould gouerne the realme of Caſtille, Leon &c. in caſe hee had no ſonne by queene Germaine, vntill that prince Charles ſhould come to the age of fiue and twentie yeares, at which time hee ſhould reſigne the gouernement vnto the prince, with this charge, that during the life of queene Ioane his mother hee ſhould not intitle himſelfe
F king of Caſtille: That during this time king Ferdinand ſhould pay vnto the emperor fifty thouſand ducats yearely, and to prince Charles other great ſummes of money, and that perſiſting in the accords of the league made at Cambray, hee ſhould contribute to the warre of Lombardie againſt the Venetians. After this accord the Emperour and the French King vnderſtood, to their great griefe, what the Pope and King Ferdinand had done with the Venetians.

Controuerſie betwixt the emperour Maximilian & king Ferdinand reconciled.

19 The

Practiſes of pope Iulio the 2. againſt the French.

19 The pope doubting that the French king who was mighty in Italie, would ſeeke G ſome reuenge againſt him, he began to ſtudy by what means he might diuert him from Italy, and if occaſion were offred to expell him quite: wherefore he drew the Suiſſes vnto him, hee did ſollicite the king of England to make war againſt the French, and did what hee could to cauſe D. Ferdinand to declare himſelfe their enemy; but the Popes practiſes were then of ſmall effect, for England ſtirred not, & king Ferdinand ſeeing that the French king made no ſhew that hee meant to annoy the pope, hee perſiſted in ſome ſort in the league of Cambray, ſaying that hee would according to the treatie made with the emperour, aſſiſt him in the warre of Lombardie whither he ſent foure hundred horſe, and two thouſand Spaniſh foote, vnder the command of the duke of Termini. The pope fearing that the Venetians ruine would alſo cauſe that of the ſtate of Rome, and of the other po- H tentates of Italy, he ſought to haue ſome pretext to quarrell with the French king, hoping that if hee declared himſelfe his enemie, with any colour he ſhould ſway the league of Cambray much; wherefore he tooke an occaſion for that king Lewis fauored Alphonſo of Eſte duke of Ferrara, againſt whom hee had a quarrell, puniſhing him with his ſpirituall and temporall armes: and to gratifie king Ferdinand and to draw him to his deuo-tion, hee confirmed vnto him the poſſeſſion of the realme of Naples, with the ſaid conditions that the king of Arragon his predeceſſors had formerly held it: the which hee had before refuſed, and moreouer hee drew a promiſe from the king, to aide him with three hundred men at armes, if need were, for the defence of the territories of the church.
King Ferdinand foreſeeing and fearing the miſeries that might enſue, if the French king I and the pope ſhould grow to an open quarrell, he did all good offices to reconcile them, but hee could not: for the pope was obſtinately bent to oppreſſe the duke of Ferrara, and the king held it diſhonourable for him to abandon his allie: whereupon king Lewis moued with a iuſt indignation, began to treat a new league againſt pope Iulio, with the em-perour and other princes and potentates of Chriſtendome, perſuading Maximilian as emperor, to purſue the vniting of the lands held in Italie by the pope as belonging rightly vnto the empire, and that the Germans and French ioyntly ſhould demaund a generall Councell propounded to reforme the pope. Councell, for the reformation of the pope and clergie: and to giue ſome forme thereun-to for his part, hee called an aſſembly of the prelates of France, in manner of a Nationall Councell, in the citie of Orleans, to the end they ſhould withdraw themſelues from the K popes obedience by a decree. The prelates hauing transferred the aſſembly from Orleans to Towers, they drew ſome articles to be preſented vnto the pope in the name of the French church, and in caſe hee did refuſe them, then to proteſt that they did not acknowledge him for their ſuperiour, appointing in that reſpect an other aſſembly within Cardinall of S. Croix a Spaniard againſt the pope. ſixe moneths after, of the clergie of France. To this enterpriſe the king had drawne ſome cardinalls, namely D. Bernardin of Caruajal biſhop of Siguenſa cardinall of Saint Croix a Spaniard, who had beene apoſtolike legat in the emperours court, hoping to make king Ferdinand to yeeld vnto it, for the reſpect hee bare vnto the emperour. The pope beſides the intereſt of the Venetians and of all Italy which did moue him, being in heart an irreconcileable enemie to the French, and to all them beyond the mountaines, he de- L ſired nothing but troubles, as appeared by his courſes. In the mean time king Ferdinand, by reaſon of an army of Turkes which had beene diſcouered neere vnto Otranto, was forced to call home his ſouldiers which he had ſent into Lombardie, in fauour of the league of Cambray: which made the emperour and French king ſuſpect that hee would ioyne with the pope; whereupon they ſent vnto him to know his intent: whereunto king Ferdinand made a plaine anſwer, without any ambiguitie, that although by reaſon of the fee of Naples, hee had furniſhed the pope with ſome horſemen, yet hee meant not for all that to leaue the league of Cambray, but would entertaine it more then before: and therefore hee promiſed to ſend his ſouldiers backe into Lombardie: but as for the other M league which they treated of, hee could not yeeld vnto it, and much leſſe that which Excuſes made by king Ferdinand for not yeelding to a councell. concerned a generall councell, for that, ſayd this catholike king, it were a ſcandalous thing, and would trouble all Chriſtendome; being moſt apparent, that this councell was not propounded but to offend the pope, whom both he and all Chriſtian Princes did acknowledge to be Chriſts vicar in the church of God: and that peace and vnion ſhould be

A bee the end of all holy councels, wherefore hee excuſed himſelfe from entring into any other league, then that of Cambray, exhorting them for the tranquilitie of the ſtate of Chriſtendome (torne and diſmembred with warre) to hearken to ſome good agreement with the Pope, notwithſtanding which anſwere the French king and the Emperour made a new League, for the executing of the league of Cambray againſt the Venetians, leauing libertie for the Pope to enter within fiue monethes, and for the kings of Spaine and Hungarie within foure: and if the Pope ſhould refuſe to enter into their league, then they would call a generall Councell: for the effecting whereof, the Emperour ſhould aſſemble the Prelates in Germany, as the French king had
B done them in France. Thus, great miſeries did threaten Italie, through the obſtinacy of Pope Iulio. 1509

Excuſes made by king Ferdinand for not yeelding to a councell.

20 Whilſt that the Chriſtian Princes of Europe treated of theſe things in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and tenne, the coaſt of Africke was much annoyed by the army of Spaine, of the which the earle Pedro Nauarro was gouernour, who tooke the citie of Bugia, which had beene a great Vniuerſity for the Moores; the which ſtrooke ſo great a terrour throughout all Africke, as the towne of Algier and many places vpon that coaſt became tributaries to the crowne of Caſtille, agreeing with Pedro Nauarro what annual rent they ſhould paie, and ſending embaſſadors into Spain, who brought with them 50 Chriſtain, ſlaues, and they landed at Va-
C lencia, at ſuch time as king Ferdinand hauing left the Infant D. Ferdinand his grand-childe with Cardinal Ximenes, whom they called the Cardinall of Spain, and the councel at Vailledolit, he came into Arragon, and called the eſtates of the realmes to Monſon. The earle Pedro Nauarro continuing his conqueſts, hee woone Tripoli in Barbarie: and ſoone after, about the middeſt of Auguſt, D. Garcia Aluares of Toledo arriued at Gelbes with ſome ſhips and Spaniſh ſouldiers, the which hee ioyned to the army of D. Pedro Nauarro. D. Garcia was eldeſt ſonne to D. Frederic of Toledo duke of Alua, a gallant knight, but vnfortunate in this expedition, for hauing landed in that countrie with his troopes, hee was fought with all, vanquiſhed and ſlaine vpon the place by the Arabians, and could not bee relieued by the earles army, which was at ſea, his
D men before they came to fight with the enemy, being almoſt dead with thirſt which they had endured in that drie and barren countrie. Some did taxe the earle D. Pedro Nauarro for this rout of D. Garcia, ſaying, that hee would not ſuccour him as he might, being diſcontented and iealous of his comming in qualitie of generall of that lamentable enterpriſe. 1510

Bugia taken by Pedro Nauarro.

Algier tributary to Caſtille.

Tripoli in Barbarie taken.

D. Garcia Aluares of Toledo ſlaine by the Arabians.

21 At the weſt Indies Diego of Nicueſa had not much better ſucceſſe in his Colonie of Nombre de Dios, which was built vpon the firme land. Thoſe alſo that were in the Colonie of the Antique of Darien were alſo in mutinies & ſeditions among themſelues, raiſed by a great ſouldier, but verie mutinous, called Vaſco Nugnes, of Balboa, borne at Badajos, who had incenſed ſome of the people, againſt the bacheler Martin Her-
E nandes, of Enciſo, who was appointed gouernour in that place by the king: but the Bachelers Letters were vnfortunately loſt, whenas hauing cauſed Franciſco Pizaro, and the companions of Hoieda to returne with him, the ſhip wherein hee was, was caſt away at his comming to Vraba: wherefore Vaſco Nugnes hauing quarreled with him, ſaying, that ſuch charges did not belong to Bachelers, and hee oppoſing to the contrarie that he had receiued it frō the king, he could not ſhew it: ſo as there was great & long contention betwixt them, vntil the comming of Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares, with two carauels laden with victuals and prouiſions, and 70 men, who went from the port of Beata of S. Domingo, to ſeeke out Hoiedas companions. He being come to a place called Garia, had landed with fifty Spaniards, to fetch water, but they were inſtantly charged by F a great number of Indian archers, who ſlue 47 and tooke the reſt aliue, and then they eate them all: whereupon Roderigo diſlodging, he entred into the gulph of Vraba, where he found ſome ſteps and marks of the Spaniards landing: wherefore he ſhot off certain peeces of ordenance, and made a great ſmoake, to giue aduertiſment that he was on ſhoare, to end that if there were any Spaniards they ſhould anſwere him. Thoſe of the Antique of Darien perceiuing the ſmoake, and hearing the ſhot, made anſwere in like maner: where-

Behauiour of the Spaniards at the Weſt Indies. Seditions among them.

1510 fore Colmenares directed his courſe that way, where he was receiued with great ioy. The Spaniards were relieued by him of their miſeries & pouertie: for had he not arriued, they had been cut in peeces, or periſhed for hunger. Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares labored in ſuch ſort as he did pacifie theſe mutines of the Antique of Darien, making them al conſent, except Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa, and the Bacheler Martin Hernandes of Enciſo, who were the heads of the factions, that the ſuperintendency & authority ſhould bee giuen to Diego Nicueſa, as to him who had order from the king to cõmand. And then Colmenares ſet ſaile towards the fort of Nombre de Dios, with one ſhip & a brigãtin, & hauing found Diego Nicueſa there poor, he did cõfort him with good news of his election, ſo as after much diſcourſe of his misfortunes, he imbarked him 60 with of his companions, to carry him to the Antique of Darien: but Nicueſa being an indiſcreet man, & ful of arrogancy, he began in his voyage to braue & threaten them which had not yet receiued him for their magiſtrate, ſaying, he would teach Balboa and Enciſo, the authors of theſe factions, to hazard the affairs of the king their maſter by their diuiſiõs, & that he would puniſh them ſeuerely, and put others in their places, that he would take away their gold, & doe many other wonders: which words proceeding as from a mad man, diſpleaſed Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares, and others of his company, who failed not to make report therof to them of the Antique, yea to the 2 heads of the factions, who receiued Nicueſa with 1000 ſcoffes & iniuries, making him to take another courſe with his 60 companions. This wretch directing his voyage to the Iland of Hiſpaniola, with an intent to accuſe the bacheler Enciſo, & Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa, before the admiral D. Diego Colombus, eldeſt ſonne to Chriſtopher Columbus, then lieutenant general or viceroy in thoſe countries, in the place of the commander Nicholas of Ouãto, he periſhed at ſea, with all his cõpany. The diſſention betwixt Enciſo & Balboa cõtinuing, Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares did adhere to Vaſco Nugnes, of Balboa, who ſhewed himſelf ſo proud & raſh as he not only attẽpted to put the bacheler Martin into priſon, & to confiſcate his goods, but, if ſome had not ſtaied him, he was reſolued to do him a publike ſhame, which he himſelfe did better deſerue.

Arrogancy of Nicueſa makes him loſe the gouernment of the firme land at the Indies.

1511 The yere 1511 being come, in the which king Ferdinand after the aſſembly of Mõſon, being returned to Madrid, & grieuing for the death of D. Garcia Aluares of Toledo, and of his men at Gelbes, he cauſed a great fleet to be made ready in the ports of Malaga, Gibaltar & Calis, being reſolued to go in perſon into Afrike, & to make war againſt the Infidels: from the which he was diuerted, by the intreaties of the eſtates of his realms, ſhewing him the inconueniences which were to be feared, if his perſon ſhould miſcarie, beſeeching him to giue the charge of that war to his captains. The hatred betwixt the Pope and French king, was very great: the Pope did beſiege Mirãdola, with ſuch vehemency, being himſelf at the ſiege in perſon (againſt the aduice of the colledge, & the dignity of his papal eſtate) that he took it, and hauing put 500 Spaniards, & 300 Italiãs there in garriſon, he took the way to Bolonia, the princes ſeeking to quench this fire by all good means, yea the king D. Ferdinand by his embaſſadors, D. Ieroſme Vich of Valẽcia in the court of Rome, & D. Pedro of Vrrea, in that of the emperor, whom he deſired to reconcile with the Venetians, hoping that the French king would afterwards yeeld vnto it: intreating them all to giue him this cõtentment, to ſee Chriſtendom at peace, that he might with more liberty attẽd the war of Africke; an enterpriſe which by reaſon ſhould pleaſe, and be fauoured by all Chriſtian Princes: but he labored particularly to diuert the emperour from proceeding to an aſſembly or conuocation of the Prelates of Germany, concerning a Councell, the which hee did vtterly diſalow: propunding inſtead thereof an aſſembly of embaſſadors in the city of Mantoua, to conſult of a pacification. By his care and diligence this aſſembly was made, and there met at Mantoua, for him the aboue named embaſſadors; for the empererour the biſhop of Gurgenſis, and for the French king, the biſhop of Paris, whoſe labour proued fruitleſſe. The time was come in regard of the league of Cambray to retyre king Ferdinands three hunderd men at armes, which had ſerued the Pope, wherefore theſe horſemen being retained longer then was agreed, they returned to Naples. The Pope being obſtinate and furious, not caring for the Emperour, and much leſſe for the French king, was forced to diſlodge from Bolonia, for feare of the French army, which did approch, which city, either for that it was abandoned by them he left there, or

King Ferdinand oppoſeth againſt the calling of a Councell.

A or by intelligence with the Bentiuoly, came into the power of king Lewis, without any difficulty: and ſoone after there were bils ſet vp in the publike places at Mantoua, and at Bolonia, declaring that a generall councell was aſſigned in September that yeare 1511, to the which (the Pope and his adherents being accuſed of many crimes) were cited: for the which the Pope (being a cholerike and furious man) thought to run mad, calling thoſe Cardinalls which were oppoſite vnto him, wicked Sectaries, vſurpers of the Soueraigne biſhops authority, to whom only (ſaid he) it did belong to cal a councel, inciting the Vniuerſities, and faculties of diuinitie, who declared this act to be hereticall. The Emperour had made offer as a fit place, and fatall to diſordred Popes, of the citie of Conſtance, Tu-
B rin had alſo beene propounded, but Piſa was held moſt conuenient. The furye of this war was ſo great in Italie, as king Ferdinand (being iealous of his realm of Naples) ſent three thouſand Spaniards to his viceroy D. Raymond of Cardonea, vnder the command of Pedro Nauaro, earle of Albeto, ſtil doubting that king Lewis did gape after it, notwithſtanding the accords made in regard of the marriage of Queene Germaine; and hee deferred his voyage of Africke, attending the iſſue of theſe troubles, and of the councell of Piſa, the chiefe fauourers whereof, were the Cardinalls of S. Croix a Spaniard, Bayeux, Saint Malo, Albret, brother to Iohn of Albret king of Nauarre, Frenchmen; they of Coſenſa, &
C Saint Seuerin, Italians: but Pope Iulio, for that he would not ſeeme to faile in his paſtorall office, pretending that the calling of a councell did belong to him, and to diſperſe that of Piſa, he did publiſh another at Saint Iohn de Latran in Rome: the which wrought great effects in the hearts of princes, and of religious people which did abhor ſchiſmes. So as notwithſtanding that the French king had ſent 24 biſhops to Piſa, in the behalfe of the Clergie of France, expecting that the emperour according to their accord ſhould do the like for the Clergy of Germany, yet whether retained by conſcience or otherwiſe, he neither ſent biſhops nor embaſſadors, finding ſomtimes one euaſion ſometimes another.

1511 Publ... a Counc... den at P...

Cardinals fa... uouring the counc... of Piſa.

23 King Ferdinand being alſo ſollicited by the Pope, and (as it is credible) hauing good intelligence with him, he made a publike declaration, that ſeeing neither by intreaties, nor perſuaſions, he could not diuert the French king from his reſolution to diſquiet the Apoſtolike ſea, he tooke it into his protection: and it is likely that the emperour Maximili-
D an had beene alſo wonne by theſe two. This declaration was made at Seuile, whether ſoone after came letters from the councell of Piſa, ſommoning king Ferdinand to ſend his Prelates, and embaſſadors thither, whereof hee made no accompt: whereupon he parted from Seuile and came to Burgos, from whence as the Spaniards ſay, he ſent to Iohn of Albret king of Nauarre, to intreat him him not to beleeue the councell of the Cardinal his brother, not to adhere in any ſort to that falſe Councell of Piſa. Yet the k. of Nauarre ioined with the French king, & was declared a ſchiſmatike, which made king Ferdinand to inuade his realm, as we wil ſhew. And being now come to open war king Ferdinand ſent the whole army which he had prepared for Africk to Naples, whereof he made D. Alfonſo of Caruajal, ſon to D. Diego of Caruajal, Lord of Xodar, general, and one called Camudio,
E Colonell of the foot. In this army were 3000 foot, and ſome 1100 horſe, whereof 600 were light horſe. During his abode at Burgos, he had news that Pope Iulio was fallen dãgerouſly ſicke, ſo as there was neither hope of life nor recouery, the which held many Potentates in ſuſpence, fearing ſome great alteration, but he recouered. From Burgos he ſent embaſſadors to Henry king of Englãd his ſon in law, to moue him to make war againſt the French king vpon his old pretenſions; againſt whom & his Councel of Piſa, there was a league made, which had bin breeding betwixt the king D. Ferdinand, the Pope, & the Venetians, ſince the beginning of theſe quarrels, vnder colour to defend the rights of the Apoſtolike ſea, to diſperſe the ſchiſmatical & heretical councel of Piſa, for the recoueries of the cities of Bolonia & Ferrara, & the reſtoring of them to the church. King Ferdinand did
F offer for this war 12 hundred men at armes, one thouſand light horſe, & 10000 Spaniſh foot, the Seigniory of Venice eight hundred men at armes, one thouſand horſe, and 8000 foot, & the Pope 400 men at armes, fiue hundred light horſe, & 6000 foot: Moreouer 12 galleys for the king D. Ferdinand, & 14 for the Venetians: making D. Raymond of Cardone viceroie of Naples, generall of this warre: for the entertainment of which army the Pope ſhould furniſh twenty thouſand ducats a month, and the Venetians as much, and fourty

Warre betwixt France and Spaine.

League betwixt king Ferdinand the Pope and the Venetians.

1511 thouſand preſently: and this league was publiſhed at Rome, in the church of Sancta Maria del populo, in Octob. this yeare one thouſand fiue hundredand 11, into the which the king of England ſhould be admitted, if he would. After which they did admoniſh & proceed againſt the Cardinalls which diſobeyed the Pope with the accuſtomed ceremonies, ſolemnities, and delaies, to bring thē into the boſom of the holy mother church, that is to ſay, to the Councell aſſigned by the Pope at Saint John de Latran: which if they diſobeyed, they ſhould be depriued of their dignities and liuings, and puniſhed as ſchiſmatikes and heretikes; which act was celebrated by the Pope, in his pontificall habit, and in a conſiſtorie of ſeuen partiall Cardinals. Thoſe of the contrarie faction, notwithſtanding all this, began to hold the councell of Piſa, whereas the Florentines would not ſuffer 3 hundred Frenchmen at armes to enter, which the Fathers and Prelates demanded for their gard, being led by Gaſton of Foix, the kings nephew, and duke of Nemours, fearing leaſt they ſhould ſeaſe vpon that city for the French king. The fathers comming to the firſt ſeſſion, they were ſo mockt by the people, & receiued ſo many indignities, as they were forced to transferre the councell of Piſa to Milan, where they had neither more honor, nor better vſage, notwithſtanding that they were in the French kings dominion, where they held their ſecond ſeſſion, the Cardinall of Saint Croix a Spaniard being preſident; where they attended the prelates of Germany, and the Emperors embaſſadors in vaine, but they wanted no excuſes.

Order of the conception of Nunnes.

Theſe ſeeds of warre being caſt among chriſtians, Pope Iulio doing his duety in matters of religion, he confirmed the new order of the conception of Nunnes, inſtituted in the citie of Toledo ſome yeares before, by one of the ladies of Queene Iſabell, who was ſecond wife to king Iohn the 2, her name was D. Beatrix de Silua, of Portugal, who being ſuſpected by her miſtreſſe, for that by reaſon of her great beauty, many courted her, and there grew dailie quarrels among the courtiers, ſhe was put in priſon, where being kept three daies in teares and heauines, without bread or drinke, ſhee was moued to make a vow of chaſtity, and for this cauſe, they ſay, the virgin Mary appeared vnto her in the habit which the Nunnes doe now weare, that is, a blew cloake, and a white hood, and did comfort her. Being out of priſon, and going to Toledo, with an intent to be a religious woman, there appeared two Franciſcane friers vnto her, which ſight made her think that they were ſent to cōfeſſe her, & then ſhe ſhold be put to death: but theſe fathers told her that ſhe ſhould be the mother of many daughters, declaring vnto her the ſpirituall vnderſtāding of it, that it ſhould be of many religious women, & then they vaniſhed: wherfore ſhe going on her way, being come to Toledo, ſhe put herſelfe into the monaſterie of religious women, of S. Dominike the royal, where ſhe remained 30 yeres in a ſecular habit, liuing holily; afterwards ſhe remoued with 12 nuns to a place where now S. Foy is, which in former times was called the palace of galiena, being deſirous to inſtitute an order in honor of the virgin Mary, and there ſhe remained with her company, by the permiſſion of the queen D. Iſabella, wife to the king D. Ferdinand now raigning, vntill that the habit was confirmed vnto them by Pope Innocent the eight, & the office of the conception, vnder the rule of Criſteaux, without any other new order: in the which hauing cōtinued ſome time, they ioyned with the Nunnes of Saint Peter de las Duegnas, of the order of Saint Benet, making a medley of the rules of the Benedictins & Bernardines, vntill that Cardinall Francis Ximenes, then prouinciall of the Franciſcans, and generall reformer in Spaine, made them to leaue the rules of Saint Bennet and Saint Bernard, and to take the habit and the Office of the conception, vnder the rule of Saint Clare, putting them into the monaſterie which at this day is called of the Conception, which was woont to bee the conuent of Franciſcane Friers, tranſported by reaſon of them to S. Iohn des Rois. There this yere 1511 Pope Iulio confirmed them in their own rule and order of the conception, leauing that of S. Clare. This yere all the coaſt of Affrike was terrified vpon the brute of the great preparation which had been made in Spain, to inuade them: The king of Tremeſſen ſent his embaſſadors to king Ferdinand, to offer him vaſſalage, and a tribute of 13000 double ducats of gold payable in the citie of Oran. In Spain there died D. Beatrix of Bouadilla, Marqueſſe of Moya, and ſoone after her husband D. Andrew de Cabrera.

The yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and twelue following, king Ferdinand hauing

A ning vndertaken the Popes defence, hee commanded D. Raymond of Cardoua vice- 1511
roy of Naples, appointed generall of the holy league, to ioyne his forces with the Popes and Venetians, the which was done at Imola, where they made the body of the army, in the which was Legate for the Pope Cardinall Iohn of Medicis, of the title of Sancta Maria in Dominica. Theſe forces entring into Lombardie, in a manner all that the duke of Ferrara held on this ſide Pò, yeelded vnto the league, without any force, but La Baſtie, which the earle Pedro Nauarro tooke: and then they camped before Bolonia: but Gaſton of Foix duke of Nemours, a gallant young nobleman comming to releeue it, the army of the league was forced to retyre to Imola.

B On the other ſide the Venetians tooke Breſſe, but not the Caſtle; and Bergamo, with other places were yeelded vnto them: but the duke of Nemours comming to ſuccour the caſtle of Breſſe, hee encountred Iohn Paul Baſſon vpon the way, with part of the Venetian army, and put them to rout, and then hee entred the towne and put eight thouſand Venetians and inhabitants to the ſword, hee tooke Andrew Gritti their commander priſoner, with Anthonie Iuſtinien, and other men of great quality, and ſoone after recouered Bergamo, and all the places which the Venetians had taken. In the meane time king Ferdinand prepared a fleet in the ports of Biſcaye and Guipuſcoa, to aſſaile France vpon the coaſt of Guienne, hauing induced the king of England to reuiue the old quarrell, who at the perſuaſion of the Popes embaſſador, had made Exploits of Gaſton of Foix.

C an aſſemblie of the Prelates of his realme, and promiſed to ſend to the Councell of Latran: and for a greater demonſtration of his hatred, hee cauſed the French embaſſadors which did reſide in his court to diſlodge.

25 During theſe troubles, the king D. Iohn, and the Queene D. Catherine of Na- Nauarre.
uarre his wife, did enioy their realme in peace, ſince the expulſion of the earle of Lerin the Conſtable, and of Lewis of Beaumont his ſonne, with others of that faction: then all their care was to reſtore it to the ancient eſtate, and the places reunited which were diſtracted and held by the king of Caſtille: for the which, and to demaund other rights which they pretended, they had ſent many embaſſadors to king Ferdinand, who had returned with good hope to obtaine what they demanded, or the greater part: wherefore

D they ſent againe doctor Iohn of Iaſſu Seigniour of Pauierre, Ladron of Monleon, and the Protonotarie Martin of Iaureguiſar, who were of the councel, with ample inſtructions to capitulate, compound, and end all their pretentions, in this form: That they ſhould intreat the king of Arragon, Regent of Caſtille, that, if he made any accord with the French king, the kings of Nauarre might be comprehended. That the embaſſadors ſhould make great inſtance to king Ferdinand that the townes of Saint Vincent, Sos, Arcos, Garde and Bernedo, and moreouer the places of Soſierra, held by him, and the crowne of Caſtille, might bee reſtored vnto them according vnto the will of the deceaſed Queene D. Iſabella at her death, as places belonging to the Crowne of Nauarre: That in like maner they ſhould demand as hereditarie things, the Duchies of Gandie, & of Mom-

Embaſſage of Nauarre to king Ferdinand

E blanc, the earledome of Ribagorſa and the citie of Balaguer in Arragon, the duchie of Pegnafiel, and the Infantazgo of Caſtille, the townes of Cuellar, Caſtro Xeris, Haro, Villalon, and other lands, and moreouer the ſumme of foure hundred and twenty thouſand a hundred and twelue florins of gold, ſixe ſoulz and eight deniers of Arragon, giuen in dowrie by king Charles the third of Nauarre, to his ſonne in law, D. Iohn king of Arragon: Theſe were the pretentions of the kings of Nauarre againſt Caſtille, for the which they had beene fed with many vaine hopes, that reaſon ſhould be done them: but in effect king Ferdinand ſhewed by his delaies that he had no ſuch meaning, & that he expected ſome other occaſion to acquit himſelfe, and yet not to leaue any thing that he held: wherein the beſt euaſion hee had was the reſtitution of them of Beaumont, which

F he knew to be moſt odious to the kings of Nauarre. The embaſſadors hauing done their duties, and loſt many iourneys in following the court of Caſtille, they returned without any effect, diſcharging themſelues vnto their kings D. Iohn and D. Catherine, who were in France: whereupon they returned into Nauarre, whereas being, when as the aboue-mentioned warres were hotteſt in Italie, king Ferdinand who had a deſigne to leade an Armye into Gaſcoyne, in fauour of the Engliſh, ſent to

1511 demaund a paſſage of them for his ſouldiers victualls, and munition, and for his aſ- G ſurance, they ſhould giue him in hoſtage, the caſtles of Eſtelle and Maye in Nauarre, and that of Saint Iohn de pied de Port, vpon the frontiers of Fraunce: promiſing them, as hee had done at other times, in requitall of this pleaſure, to reſtore vnto them the townes of Saint Vincent, Arcos, Garde, and others, of the principalitie of Viana. The king D. Iohn, and D. Katherina were much troubled at this demaund, for they ſawe themſelues much ingaged to either of theſe two realmes of France and Caſtille, ſo as in the quarrels of theſe great Monarchs, taking the party of the one, they declared themſelues enemies to the other, and being neuters, they were a pray to both. Being thus in ſuſpence, their owne vncle Amand of Albret, Lord of Obal, H King of Nauar adheres to the French king. being then in their court embaſſador for France, made them to adhere to king Lewis his maſter, promiſing them infinite fauours, and aduancements, from the which Mondognedo embaſſador for the king of Caſtille ſought in vaine to diuert them, ſhewing them the miſeries that would enſue. King Ferdinand being preſently aduertiſed hereof, hee thought it a fit occaſion to further his deſignes, and to vnite the crowne of Nauarre to that of Caſtille: wherefore hee made great complaints of this reſolution and adherence of the kings of Nauarre to the French king, whome hee called ſchiſmaticall, and an enemy to the church of Rome, and to Pope Iulio; who hauing vſed the ordinarie meanes, by admonitions and fatherly perſuaſions to theſe princes, according to the forme and ſtile of Rome, to quit the allyance of the peruers, and to ioyne with him and his adherents, ſeeing that they did perſiſt to hold the I party of France, hee proceeded againſt them by the laſt remedie, declaring them Sentence giuen by the Pope againſt Iohn Albret king of Nauarre. by the aduice of the conſiſtorie of Cardinals, ſchiſmatikes and heretikes, depriuing them and their poſteritie, of all right to the realme of Nauarre, and of all their goods, giuing and transferring them to king Ferdinand regent of Caſtille, whoſe forces being prepared to paſſe into Guienne, did ſerue him fitly to conquer Nauarre. King Iohn of Albret vnderſtanding of all theſe proceedings, hee ſent D. Alfonſo Carillo, his conſtable, and D. Pedro of Nauarre marſhall of the realme, embaſſadors, to preuent, if it were poſſible, theſe apparent dangers, who hauing found Lewis of Beaumont, and other baniſhed men in the court of Caſtille, much fauoured, ſoliciting D. Ferdinand to vndertake the enterpriſe of Nauarre, holding it to bee the onely meanes for K them to bee reſtored, they were ſo ill entertained, as they made all the haſt they could to returne, to make report vnto the king and to the eſtates aſſembled at Tudele, that all things tended to warre. King Ferdinand hauing the Popes ſentence for a pretext to aſſaile this countrey, and for meanes the intelligences of many fauorers, of the faction of Beaumont, hee held it an eaſie matter to conquer it:
wherefore hee deferred the warre of Guienne: yet for his greater iuſtification hauing gathered his armie together about the citie Victoria, whereof Frederic of Toledo duke Demands vnciuill made by king Ferdinand to him of Nauarre. of Alua was the generall, hee ſent againe to ſommon the kings of Nauarre to deli-uer into his hands the aboue named places and caſtles, aduertiſing them that vpon refu- L ſall thereof, hee would put the Popes ſentence in execution, and ſpoile them not one-ly of Nauarre, but of all that they held in France. Notwithſtanding all theſe proteſtations, king Iohn refuſed him the paſſage, and the deliuerie of the caſtles, obiecting the league and allyance which hee had with the French king, neither could hee perſuade himſelfe that king Ferdinand, whome hee had neuer offended, ſhould purſue him with ſuch rigour as he ſaid, but he found himſelfe deceiued, for the duke of Alua had commandement preſently, that leauing the way of Guipuſcoa, he ſhould enter into Na-uarre, to cõquer it. At that time by the death of D. Bernardin of Velaſco, firſt duke of Frias, Caſtille. & 3 earle of Haro, his brother and heire, D. Inigo of Velaſco was made conſtable of Ca-ſtille. There dyed alſo that yere D. Iohn de Sylua, earle of Ciſuentes, preſident of the coun- M cel, and Ferdinand infant of Granado, ſonne to king Muley Albocen. In Germany the emperor who ſought but an occaſion to breake with the French king, had called an aſſembly of the Prelates at Ausbourg, who declared the councell of Piſa to bee odious, and worthy to bee reiected: The emperour had in like ſort refuſed the marriage which had bin offered by king Lewis of his ſecond daughter Renee with prince Charles
of

A of Auſtria, and the reſtitution of that which he held in Bourgondie: Yet the warre continued ſtill in Italie, and ſuccesfull for the French, who hauing taken many places in Romania, and deliuered them to the cardinall of S. Seuerin, who was created Apoſtolike Legat for the Councell at Piſa, they beſieged Rauenna, which the armie of the league comming to ſuccour, the French defeated them in battell, but with the loſſe of their Generall Gaſton of Foix, duke of Nemours, who preſſing the enemie that fled, was ſlaine. The loſſe of this battell much troubled the Pope and all the cardinals at Rome, and their onely care was how to auoyd the furie of the French, whom they thought to be at their backes: And had not king Ferdinands embaſſadour vſed great diligence, Pope Iulio had
B caſt himſelfe into the Florentines armes, who were friends and allies to the French king, to obtaine ſome good conditions of peace by their meanes: but being better informed of the whole ſucceſſe by Iulio de Medicis, who was afterwards cardinall, and then Pope Clement the ſeuenth, he changed his reſolution, and continued the warre, being incouraged by the deſcent of the Suiſſes into Italie, to defend the Church of Rome. At that time began the firſt ſeſsion of the Councel of Latran, that of Milan being ſo ridiculous, as the cardinall Iohn of Medicis, a priſoner, hauing ample authoritie from the Pope, gaue diſpenſations, abſolued from cenſures, and did all acts of an Apoſtolike Legat, with a great concourſe of people, before the cardinals and prelates of the oppoſite Councell; the which the gouernours of Milan for the French king did not contradict.

Battell of Rauenna.

Deſpaire of the Pope.

C King Lewis fearing to be aſſailed in Fraunce by the forces of Spaine and England, and and the Suiſſes being incenſed againſt him, hauing paſſed the Alpes with the cardinall of Sion, the Popes Legat, the Emperour Maximilian hauing alſo called home all the Germans that ſerued the French, preſt with many difficulties, he was forced to yeeld the field to the enemie, and (after that he had ſought an accord in vaine) to abandon the eſtate of Milan, and to retire his forces into France, and to defend his owne. The cardinals of the Councell of Piſa retired: Bolonia, and in a manner all other places were recouered, Genoa obtained her libertie, and Iohn Fregoſo was choſen duke; ſo as the French king had nothing remaining in Lombardie, but the caſtle of Milan, that of Cremona, Breſſe, Crema, Lignago, the Lanterne of Genoa, and Caſtellet.

Victorie of Rauenna vnprofitable for the French.

D 28 Thus Pope Iulio ſeeing his affaires ſo ſucceſſull, began to thunder out his ſpirituall cenſures and fulminations, againſt K. Lewis, cauſing him to be declared, by a decree of the Councell of Latran, an heretike and ſchiſmatike, depriuing him for that cauſe of all honour and royall dignitie, yea of the name of Moſt Chriſtian, which had beene ſo long affected to the kings of Fraunce; which title he would transferre to the kings of England: And on the other ſide he did honour the king D. Ferdinand with the title of Catholike, the which the kings of Spaine carrie at this day, vnder colour of the happie warres which he had made and ended, againſt the Moores which had vſurped the prouinces in Spaine, and other Infidels; but being chiefly mooued by the good offices which he had done for him and the See of Rome, oppoſing himſelfe at that time againſt the French and the E Councell of Piſa, and fauouring the deſignes of Pope Iulio, which were to prejudice the Crowne of France: whereof letters and Apoſtolike briefes were preſented vnto king Ferdinand, being in the citie of Burgos, in the yeare 1512.

Popes fulminations againſt K. Lewis the xij.

The realme of France was not ſo eaſie to be ſwallowed vp as that of Nauarre: which was inuaded by the duke of Alua, king Iohn and queene Katherine being at Pampelone, and the Caſtillan armie within eight leagues of them; they were ſo vnprouided of all meanes to make reſiſtance, as king Iohn could take no better reſolution, then to abandon the realme, and retire himſelfe into Fraunce. The inhabitants of Pampelone ſeeing themſelues forſaken, demaunded of him, That ſeeing he left them, what his pleaſure was they ſhould doe; Defend your ſelues (ſaid he) as well as you can, and if you cannot make F it good, yeeld vnto king Ferdinand vpon ſome good conditions, for I will take good order that he ſhall not long enjoy Nauarre. Queene Katherine found it ſtrange, that the king her husband ſhould ſo ſoone abandon his realme, before that the armie of Caſtille had done any notable exploit: but whether it were feare, or diſtruſt that he had of them of Pampelone, who he knew were affected to the earle of Lerin, and to the faction of Beaumont, he left it, notwithſtanding all her reaſons and perſuaſions, on the two and twentieth of

Nauarre.

King Iohn of Albret forced to retire into France.

1512 of Iulie, this yeare 1512; ſaying, That he had rather liue in woods and mountaines, than G to be a priſoner in his owne countrey. His retreat was by the vallie of Baztan, and the caſtle of Moya, and ſo went to the Court of France, leauing the queene his wife at Pampelone, who hauing ſtayed there but two dayes after him, followed him, with prince Hen- rie her ſonne, and three daughters; and hauing ouertaken him, among other ſpeeches ful Speech of Q. Katherine to the king her husbād of bitterneſſe, ſhe ſaid vnto him: O King, you ſhall remaine Iohn of Albret, and neuer thinke more of the realme of Nauarre, for that hauing beene ſuperfluouſly good, you haue beene the leſſe eſteemed of your ſubiects, and haue vndone your ſelfe and your realme. D. Pedro the marſhall of the realme, parted with theſe princes, and many other knights of the faction of Gra-Factiō of Beaumont in the Court of Nauarre. mont. D. Lewis of Beaumont, earle of Lerin, had ſuch intelligences in the Court, and H throughout the realme of Nauarre, as hee had particular aduiſe of all that was done, whereof he aduertiſed the duke of Alua, who marching before, came and camped within two leagues of Pampelone, hauing in his armie ſix thouſand foot, a thouſand men at armes, and fifteene hundred light horſe, Caſtillans, beſides the ſupplies of Beaumont, their friends, kinsfolkes, and partiſans. Then the inhabitants of Pampelone ſent forth vnto the duke, requiring that they might be receiued vpon certaine lawes and conditions (for they had no power to defend themſelues, nor, it may be, will:) To whom anſwer was made by the duke, That it was for the vanquiſher to preſcribe lawes vnto the vanquiſhed; wherefore they ſhould reſolue to yeeld themſelues freely into his hands, or to attend all the miſeries and calamities which are vſually felt in the expugnation of townes: by reaſon I whereof he reſtrained their demaunds to the obſeruation of their auncient priuiledges and liberties; the which was granted them, and moreouer ſome prouiſions for the preſent Articles vpon the yeelding of Pampelone to the duke of Alua. eſtate. Among theſe articles that were agreed vpon, the chiefe of them were theſe.

1 That the duke of Alua ſhould from thenceforth be patron and mediator for the inhabitants of Pampelone, in the demaunds and requeſts which they ſhould make vnto the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Ioane, for all matters either honourable or profitable.

2 That ſuch as ſhould remaine vaſſals or ſeruants to the kings of Caſtille, ſhould be maintained in their goods and eſtates, fees, rents, and penſions whatſoeuer, which they had beene accuſtomed to receiue from precedent kings. And to ſuch as meant to retire themſelues, ſuch things ſhould not be payed, but to the day of the yeelding vp of the K citie.

3 That the kings receiuors ſhould gather vp the rents, reuenues, impoſts, and other profits of the Crowne, as they had beene accuſtomed, ſo as they did remaine in the citie of Pampelone.

4 That the wages of Counſellors and Preſidents of juſtice, Auditors of the royall accounts, and other officers and magiſtrats of the kings D. Iohn and D. Katherine, ſhould be paied them, with condition that they ſhould remaine in Pampelone.

5 That the inhabitants of Pampelone ſhould remaine faithfull ſeruants to the kings
D. Ferdinand and D. Ioane, and in regard thereof they ſhould enjoy their goods mouable and immouable, rights, and auncient priuiledges: And in like manner thoſe which had L followed the kings D. Iohn and D. Katherine, if within thirtie dayes they did returne into the countrey.

6 That the inhabitants of Pampelone ſhould not be bound to lodge any one without paying for it, no more than they of Saragoſſe, Valencia, and Barcellona.

7 That all knights and gentlemen which within thirtie dayes ſhould ſubmit themſelues to the ſeruice of the kings D. Ferdinand and queene Ioane, ſhould be well and honourably intreated in their perſons and goods, and not called in queſtion for any crime formerly committed in the time of the diſſentions and factions of Beaumont and Gra- mont.

8 That when they ſhould goe vnto the warre, their priuiledges and rankes, touching M their perſons and qualities, ſhould be maintained, as in the time of precedent kings.

9 That the rights of prouiſions of victuals, ſilkes, money, and other things due by the kings D. Iohn and D. Katherine, to their officers, citizens of Pampelone, which came to ſerue the kings of Caſtille, ſhould be paied them, ſo as it were duely verified.

10 That if any of theſe articles were prejudiciall to any one, the judgement thereof
ſhould

A ſhould be referred to the kings of Caſtille, D. Ferdinand, and D. Ioane his daughter. 1512

Many other heads were propounded, whereof ſome were granted, and others ſent backe vnto the king and his counſell; but theſe were the moſt remarkable, the which were promiſed and ſworne by the duke of Alua, in the name, and with the conſent of the kings of Caſtille, the foure and twentieth of Iulie, in the preſence of D. Lewis of Beaumont the conſtable, D. Antonio of Acugna, biſhop of Cuenca, Pedro Lopes of Padilla, Ferdinand Suarez of Toledo, and other knights. And notwithſtanding that the duke had promiſed not to enter into the citie vntill the next day, leaſt it ſhould be reproached vnto them, That they had yeelded before they had ſeene the enemie, yet the earle of Lerin,

B who was conſtable of Nauarre, entred the ſame day, being the foure and twentieth, and the fiue and twentieth the duke with the reſt of the armie. Thus the kings D. Iohn and Q. Katherine, were ſpoyled of their realme of Nauarre, which they had held together eighteene yeares and a halfe, and the queene almoſt ten yeares alone, after the death of her brother Francis Phœbus. From the 25 of Iulie 1512, being S. Iames day, Nauarre was vnited to the Crowne of Caſtille, 468 yeares after that it had beene diuided from it, in the time, and by the death of the king D. Sancho the great. After the yeelding of the chiefe citie, the duke of Alua cauſed the other places of ſtrength within the realme to be ſummoned to yeeld, promiſing that in ſo doing they ſhould be intreated with the like clemencie to Pampelone; if not, he would purſue them with fire and ſword, as ſectaries to prin-

C ces, who were declared ſchiſmatikes and heretikes. In the beginning ſome townes ſeemed difficult, but hauing better conſidered of their affairs, the townes of Lumbier, Sangueſſe, Montreal, Olite and Tafalla, with the citie of Tudele, yeelded, yet the caſtle thereof held good for the kings that were expelled, Denis of Deſa, a gallant knight, and a good ſeruant to his maſters, commaunding therein. They of the vallie of Roncal, and of the vallie of Ameſcoa, truſting in the naturall force of their mountainous countrey, made no account to yeeld. King Ferdinand being at Burgos, hearing the ſucceſſe of this conqueſt, ſent ſupplies of men to the duke of Alua: And the better to juſtifie his actions, he ſent D. Antonio of Acugna, biſhop of Zamora, embaſſador into France, to king Iohn, offering him, That if he would quit the friendſhip and alliance of king Lewis, he would reſtore his

D realme to him againe. The biſhop came not to king Iohn; for notwithſtanding the prerogatiue of embaſſadors, he was ſtaied priſoner in Bearn, from whence he parted not, but for a great ranſome. Vpon this exceſſe the duke of Alua was readie to paſſe into Bearn, to be reuenged of the wrong done vnto the king his maſter, and to his embaſſador: but ſeeing the towns of Tudele, Olite, Tafalla, and Eſtella, begin to be ſomewhat moued at the brute of king Iohns comming with a French armie, he remained in Nauarre; where hauing ordered matters in ſuch ſort as they ſeemed ſecure, he aſſembled the chiefe men of Pampelone, in the monaſterie of S. Francis; where hauing made a long diſcourſe vnto them, to juſtifie the conqueſt which his maſter had made of that realme, he required them to take an oath to king Ferdinand, and they demaunded three dayes reſpite to conſider

E thereon; which being expired, they ſaid, That they were content to take an oath as ſubjects, but not as vaſſals. And what difference, demaunded the duke, make you betwixt vaſſals and ſubjects? He (ſaid they) is to be vnderſtood a vaſſall, whom the lord may intreat well or ill, at his pleaſure; but the ſubject ought to be well intreated by him. Then the duke hauing ſhewed them that they ſhould not doubt but the king would intreat them well and fauourably in all things, he alledged many reaſons which induced them to take this oath, acknowledging king Ferdinand for their king, who parting from Burgos, came vnto Logrogno, neere to Nauarre, where he ſtaied the remainder of that yere, to prouide for the defence of this new conqueſt.

Duke of Alua enters into Pampelone.

Vnion of Caſtille and Nauarre by conqueſt.

Denis of Deſa faithfull to king Iohn of Albret.

King Ferdinands embaſſador arreſted in Bearn.

Difference betwixt a vaſſall and a ſubiect.

This yeare died D. Paſcall, of the Order of the preaching friers, biſhop of Burgos, at Caſtille.

F Rome D. Iohn of Fonſeca, biſhop of Palence, and ſuperintendent of the affaires of the Indies, was preferred in his place; D. Iohn of Velaſco, biſhop of Calaorra had that of Palence and D. Iohn Caſtellan of Vilalua, came to that of Calaorra; he was brother to the colonell Valalua: D. Valerio Alphonſo Ordognes of Villaquiran, biſhop of Ouiedo, died alſo, and his biſhopricke was giuen to D. Diego of Muros, who was biſhop of Mondognedo, he who did found the colledge of S. Sauior in the Vniuerſitie of Salamanca, which hath the name

of

1512 of Ouiedo: the biſhopricke of Mondognedo was giuen to D. Diego of Villamuriel, Preſident of the Chauncerie of Granado. G

29 King Ferdinands affaires ſtanding in theſe termes in Europe, the Spaniards remayning at the Indies, at the place called the Antique of Darien, being commaunded by Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa, they obtained of him the deliuerie of the bacheler Martin Hernandes of Enciſo, who could not be ſtaied by any intreaties in that countrey, to be chiefe Iuſtice ouer all, but went preſently to S. Domingo, and from thence into Spaine, where hee made his complaint vnto the king, accuſing Vaſco Nugnes of much wickedneſſe and exceſſe: whereupon there was a grieuous ſentence pronounced againſt him, the puniſhment whereof he auoyded by his great future ſeruices. The firſt voyage which Vaſco Nugnes made againſt the Indians, was againſt a Cachique, or king of that countrey, called Careta, lord of Coyba, who hauing refuſed him victuals and gold, was by him & his troups, which were 130 Spaniards, aſſayled, taken, and his burrough ſackt, where they found three Spaniards, who, for villanies committed, had fled from their captaine Nicueſa, and had beene receiued and wel intreated by this Cachique, at whoſe intreatie he was deliuered, and held for a friend, and Vaſco Nugnes promiſed to aid him againſt another Cachique, his enemie, who was called Ponſa. Being preſt with hunger, and want of all neceſſaries, theſe Spaniards of Antique ſent Samudio and Valdiuia, two of their men, into the iſland of Hiſpaniola, to fetch them victuals; and another into Spaine, called Zamudio, who carried the proceſſe of the bacheler Martin Hernandes of Enciſo. Vaſco Nugnes in the meane time went in perſon againſt the Cachique Ponſa, who fled away with his people, carrying all their wealth with them: whereupon he went againſt another Cachique, called Comagro, whoſe land was not farre from the South ſea: for the region of Darien is but an iſthmus, or a ſtrait necke of land. Vaſco Nugnes contracted friendſhip and alliance with this Cachique, for he found him mild and tractable. He lodged him in a hall which was 150 paces long, and 80 broad, whereas he and all his Spaniards made good cheere with their victuals, wine of dates, and other fruits after their maner: and the Cachiques eldeſt ſonne brought the weight of 4000 dragmes in gold wrought, and ſeuentie ſlaues, which he gaue vnto the Spaniards; who ſeeing them through greedineſſe to contend and quarell about the diuiſion of theſe things, he wondred much, and ſaid vnto them, That ſeeing they had ſo great a deſire of gold, which was but earth, as for it they did thruſt themſelues into ſo great dangers, and did trouble ſo many peaceable nations, he would ſhew them a region not farre of, and neere vnto the other ſea, where they ſhould glut their couetouſneſſe; but they muſt not goe with ſo ſmall a troupe, being neceſſarie to lead a thouſand Spaniards thither. Vaſco Nugnes and Roderigo of Colmenares being verie joyfull of this aduertiſement, and more for that they heard him ſpeake of another neere ſea, imbraced this lord, who was called Panquiaco, intreating him to become a Chriſtian, and that hee ſhould goe with them: the which he did willingly yeeld vnto, and was baptiſed Charles, in honour of prince Charles of Auſtria, the heire of Spaine. This region whereof Charles Panquiaco ſpake, was called Tumanama, to come vnto the which they muſt of neceſſitie paſſe the mountaines and woods inhabited by the Caribes, cruell people, and eaters of men, carrying arrowes dipt in deadly poiſon, which made them madde that were wounded therewith: and therefore Vaſco Nugnes returned to Antique, to prouide all things neceſſarie for this voyage and conqueſt. Hauing found Valdiuia returned from S. Domingo with ſome victuals, he ſent him into Spaine, and with him 15000 dragmes of gold, for the kings fift part of diuers booties which they had taken; giuing him charge to beſeech the king to ſend a thouſand Spaniards for the conqueſt of the South ſea. But Valdiuia miſcarried by the way, he and all his treaſure being drowned. In the meane time Vaſco Nugnes with a brigantine and many barkes began to ſaile into the gulph of Vraba, to ſeeke for victuals, and finding a great riuer which he called S. Iohn, he went ten leagues vp againſt the ſtreame, but he found not any man, for all were fled vp into the countrey, hauing bin terrified with the crueltie and inſatiable couetouſneſſe of the bearded Spaniards (as they called them) by Cemaco the Cachique, who had beene vanquiſhed by Martin Hernandes Enciſo: yet the Spaniards forraged the countrey neere vnto the riuers ſides, and made great bundels of arrowes and other armes, nets, couerings, and other Indian implements, the Exploits of Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa.

Darien an iſthmus or neck of land.

Couetouſneſſe of the Spaniards ſomewhat checked by an Indian.

A the which afterwards they caſt into the ſea, for that in their returne they were taken with a ſtorme, carrying away the value of ſeuen thouſand Caſtillans in gold, but nothing that could ſatisfie hunger: for theſe people in truth were poore, and liued only of fiſhing, exchanging their fiſh with their neighbours for Mays. Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares running vp along the riuers ſide with ſeuentie companions, returned without bread, or any other victuals; but he brought much Caſſe-fiſtula, which he found growing in thoſe regions in great aboundance. Hauing joyned againe with Balboa, they entred into the mouth of a floud, which they called the blacke riuer, where they were to incounter a Cachico, called Abenamaquer, whom they defeated and tooke priſoner, whoſe arme a vil- 1512

B lanous Spaniard cut off, in cold bloud, for that he had been wounded during the skirmiſh. Colmenares remaining there with this Cachico, and the moitie of the Spaniſh troupes, Balboa with the reſt paſt on, & came vnto a place where as he found a building made vpon great old trees, much like vnto a cage to keepe birds in: there a Cachico kept, who thinking himſelfe to be in a ſafe place, & inexpugnable, they mockt at the Spaniards who were on the ground, & did ſummon thē to yeeld: but when as they ſaw them begin to ouerthrow the foundation of his palace with axes, he came downe with two of his ſonnes, and preſented himſelfe humbly to Balboa, excuſing himſelfe that hee had not any gold, whereof he had no need, but promiſed that he would goe and ſeeke ſome, if he would ſuffer him at libertie. Balboa truſting him, let him goe free, but he was deceiued: For this

C Cachico falſifying his faith, conſorted with other Cachicoes and their people, in great numbers, who fell vpon the Spaniards, but to their owne loſſe, for they were repulſt with the loſſe of many Indians. Not content with this inſolencie, the Cachicoes about the blacke riuer and that gulph, conſpired to aſſaile the Antique of Darien ſuddenly with all their power, and to kill the Spaniards and eat them: The which was diſcouered to Vaſco Nugnes by a faire Indian woman whom he entertained as his friend, who had beene aduertiſed to free her ſelfe of this danger, by a brother of hers, who was of the conſpiracie, and for her ſake did frequent familiarly among the Spaniards. Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa cauſed this Indian to be taken, & hauing vnderſtood the truth from him, and what courſe the Indians meant to take to execute their enterpriſe, he wrought in ſuch ſort on the one

D ſide, and Colmenares on the other, as they diſperſed their forces, put a confuſion in their counſels, and did in a maner ſubiect all the countrey of Vraba. Being returned to the Antique of Darien, they ſent Iohn of Quincedo, and Roderigo Henriques of Colmenares, into Spaine, to make relation vnto king Ferdinand of that which they had done, and of the conqueſt of the South ſea, which they intended, and to beſeech him to ſend them 1000 Spaniards to that end. That yeare there went out of Spaine, with the kings leaue, and at his owne charge, Iohn Dias de Solis, pilot major to the king, who taking the courſe of Pinſons, paſt beyond S. Auguſtines cape fortie degrees vnder the Equinoctiall, vnto the great riuer of Parauaguaſu, which ſignifies in the Indian tongue, great water, the which was by Iohn Dias called the riuer of Plata, that is to ſay, of ſiluer, for that they found there ſome grains Riuer of Plata found by Iohn Dias de Solis.

E of that mettall: and hauing planted many croſſes there in ſigne of poſſeſsion, he returned into Spaine, laden with Braſil, where he gaue an account vnto the king of his nauigation.

THE

THE 26 BOOKE OF THE Hiſtorie of Spaine.

The Contents of the 26 Booke.

1 WArre continued by the duke of Alua in Nauarre, and the frontires of France. An armie of French in Nauarre, and their poore exploits. I

2 Proceeding of Pope Iulio againſt the Councell of Piſa, and the fauourers thereof.

3 Practiſes of the duke of Ferrara againſt king Ferdinand. Death of Pope Iulio the ſecond, and election of Leon.

4 Queene Germaine giues a drinke to king Ferdinand her husband, to haue children by him, which cauſeth his death.

5 Warre of Milan, and diſſolution of the Councell of Piſa.

6 Diſcouerie of the South ſea at the Indies, by Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa.

7 Warre continued in Italie by the Emperor and Spaniards againſt the Venetians.

8 Behauiour of Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa at the Indies. K

9 Deſignes of Pope Leo, an enemie both to Spaniſh and French.

10 Seditions at the Indies. The miſerable end of Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa.

11 Comming of king Francis to the Crowne, and treaties betwixt him, the Emperor Maximilian, and king Ferdinand.

12 Enterpriſes of king Ferdinand againſt France. Vnion of Nauarre and Caſtille.

13 Exploits of king Francis in Italie. Abolition of the Pragmaticke ſanction.

14 Comming of doctor Adrian Florantin to Spaine. Teſtament of king Ferdinand, and his death.

15 Exploits of the king D.Manuel in Africke. Exactions vpon the Clergie of Portugall. His third mariage. L

16 D.Charles of Auſtria, firſt of that name, 22 king in Caſtille, 43 in Leon, and 20 in Arragon, and in Nauarre the fourth of that name, and 36 king. Gouernment of cardinall Ximenes and doctor Adrian, in the kings abſence.

17 Eſtate of king Charles his houſe.

18 Troubles in Spaine by D.Pedro Giron and others, pacified by the wiſedome of cardinall Ximenes.

19 Ordinances for the ordinarie legions in Spaine, and other orders made by cardinall Ximenes.

20 Gouernement of Nauarre. Counſell to ruine the townes, and to make the countrey of Nauarre deſolate. Death of king Iohn of Albret and queene Katherine. Order of the iuſtice of Nauarre. M

21 Troubles at Malaga by reaſon of the priuiledges and iuriſdiction of the Admiraltie. Puniſhment of the inhabitants.

22 Contentions for the towne of Arenalo, and reprehenſion of Velaſques of Cuellar.

23 Pitifull eſtate of queene Ioane, mother to Charles of Auſtria, troubled in her ſences.

A 24 Arſenals and ſtorehouſes for munition appointed in Spaine.
25 Search of auncient writings and inſtructions for the publike good, appointed by cardinall Ximenes in Spaine, by the which many frauds were diſcouered, &c.
26 Algier taken by Horuſco Barberouſſe, and the vaine attempts of the Spaniards.
27 Rigorous Edict in Spaine againſt the Genouois. The cauſe thereof, and the reuocation.
28 Vniuſt proceedings againſt the accuſed by the Inquiſitors. Contention for the biſhopricke of Siguenſa.

B

In this ſix and twentieth Booke are vnited the Realmes of Caſtille, Arragon, and Nauarre, in

D. Charles of Auſtria {
22 in Caſtille 1.
43 in Leon 1.
20 in Arragon 1.
C 36 in Nauarre 4.

1 THe realme of Nauarre being conquered with ſo great happineſſe and eaſe, was afterwards defended and kept with more difficultie. About the moneth of May the Engliſh armie landed in Guipuſcoa, being eight thouſand foot, moſt archers, and ſome other men of warre, whereof the lord marqueſſe Dorſet was Generall, who ſtayed ſome dayes vpon thoſe marches, attending the duke of Alua, who was buſie in ſubduing the vallies of Ameſcoa, Salazar, D and Roncal, with the helpe and diligence of colonell Vilalua: whoſe armie being fortified with new troups ſent from king Ferdinand, who was offended at the detention of his embaſſadour, the biſhop of Zamora, in Bearn, it was led to Saint Iohn du pied de Port, which place yeelded vnto him: From whence he ſent word vnto the marqueſſe, what he ſhould doe to come and beſiege Bayone. But the Engliſh generall thinking that the duke of Alua had cauſed him to ſtay there for the conqueſt of Nauarre, which concerned his maſter, after that he had burnt Saint Iohn de Lus, and done ſome other ſpoyles vpon the ſea coaſt, he imbarkt his men, and went home; ſaying, That he would returne another time: beſides, there was a brute of a great French armie which marcht through Guienne, to make head againſt theſe Spaniſh and Engliſh forces; by reaſon whereof the duke of E Alua hauing fortified the caſtle of Pied de Port, and raſed that of Montgelo, he returned into high Nauarre. The French armie whereof the brute was, was led by Francis of Valois, duke Angouleſme, who was afterwards French king, in the which there was king Iohn of Albret, Charles of Montpenſier, duke of Bourbon, Odet of Foix, vicont of Lautrec, the earles of Paliſſe and Longueuille, and others, making about fortie thouſand foot and foure thouſand horſe. About the end of the yeare 1512, the king of Nauarre aduanced with ſix thouſand foot, and a thouſand horſe, accompanied with the lords of Paliſſe and Longueuille, he entred into his countrey by the vallie of Roncal, where hee tooke Burgui, hauing cut the Spaniards in peeces which were in garriſon, with their commander Valdes, captaine of king Ferdinands gard. On the other ſide the duke of Angouleſme F cauſed the duke of Bourbon and the lord of Lautrec, to enter by Guipuſcoa, with ten thouſand foot, and foure hundred horſe, who ruined Yrum, Vranſu, Ojarcum, and the townes of Harnam and Renterie, and beſieged S. Sebaſtien, but they left it ſoone, the vicont of Lautrec going to joyne with king Iohns forces, who marcht towards Pampelone. At that time Diego Lopes of Ayala, lord of Ceuole, was gouernour of Fontarrabie, who cauſed the platforme called Diego Lopes to be built towards France. The marſhall

1512 Nauarre.

S. Iohn du pied de Port taken by the duke of Alua.

Armie of Frēch goes into Nauarre.

King Iohn of Albret goes into his realme of Nauarre with an armie.

1512 D. Pedro was in king Johns armie, with many of the faction of Gramont, whoſe partiſans being diſperſed throughout the realme, cauſed many places to reuolt to the king, as John Ramires of Baquedan, lord of Saint Martin, the towne of Eſtella, Ladron of Mauleon, that of Mirande, Martin of Gomi Tafalla, Pedro de Rada, that of Murillo, Iaime Velez de Medran, S. Care, with others by other men. The king thought that the citie of Pampelone would haue done as much, but he was deceiued. Hereupon D. Alphonſo of Arragon, baſe ſonne to king Ferdinand, and Archbiſhop of Saragoſſe, ſent ſix hundred men from Teruel, Daroca, and Albarrazin, to enter into Pampelone; who paſſing within halfe a league of Saint Martin, they were charged by foureſcore and ten footmen of the vallie of Roncal, and fiue horſemen, who defeated them, ſtript them into their ſhirts, and ſent them home: their colonell came to Olite to demaund aid, but he was in danger to be hanged by the Archbiſhop. Anthonie of Fonſeca recouered ſome of theſe reuolted places, and brought the hoſtages to Pampelone, into the which he put himſelfe. D. Franciſco of Beaumont, the conſtables couſen, ſet vpon Eſtella, and tooke the towne, but not the caſtle, and recouered that of Bernette: and D. Pedro of Beaumont, the conſtables brother, the caſtle of Montjardin. The duke of Alua being in the meane time in a maner incloſed in betwixt the armies of the duke of Angouleſme, and the king of Nauarre: he deceiued them, eſcaping by vnknowne wayes, and came with his armie to Pampelone. And to the end the ſiege of Eſtelle ſhould not ſtay and diſturbe the forces of the king of Caſtille, Diego Hernandes of Cordoua, was ſent with a ſupplie to them that beſieged it: Wherefore Iohn Ramires of Baquedan being extreamely preſt, was forced to yeeld it, vpon condition, That they ſhould depart with their armes, baggage, and enſigns diſplayed, refuſing the great offers which king Ferdinand had made him, if he would come to his ſeruice: So this good knight came to the king of Nauarres campe. The towne of Larraga defended by a French captaine, was alſo yeelded by compoſition. The king of Nauarre tooke the caſtle of Tiebas by force, where was the ladie of Gurendayn, of the houſe of Artieda, whom he ſuffered to goe away freely: and hauing receiued a new ſupplie of two thouſand Germans, he beſieged Pampelone towards Saint Nicholas port, where there were many ſallies and skirmiſhes made, whereby the king of Nauarre vnderſtood, that the force of the beſieged was great. The duke of Alua put ſome of the faction of Gramont, whom he ſuſpected out of the towne, and hauing viſited thoſe parts of the towne which might be dangerous, ordering all things, and ramparing vp the breaches which the enemies made with their furious batterie, he prepared himſelfe to maintaine the Aſſault which was giuen on Saturday, the ſeuen and twentieth of September, from the which the aſſailants were repulſed with great loſſe. King Ferdinand being in the meane time at Logrogne, and aduertiſed of the eſtate of his affaires, hee had drawne together the forces of Alua, Biſcaie, Rioja, and part of Guipuſcoa, notwithſtanding that a good part of the French armie was yet in thoſe limits, being in all fifteene thouſand fighting men, aſſigning their rendez-vous at Pont de Royne, whither he ſent D. Pedro Manriques, duke of Nagera, ſurnamed the Strong, to be generall of this armie. At the brute whereof the king of Nauarre, being out of hope to take Pampelone, and in great neceſſitie of victuals, Winter alſo tyring his armie, he raiſed his ſiege the laſt day of Nouember, by the counſell and perſuaſion of the lord of Paliſſe, and other captaines of experience: And the next day the duke of Nagera arriued with his armie, whereof there was not any need, ſeeing that the ſiege was rayſed, who for that reaſon refuſed the battell which the French ſent to preſent vnto him, by a king at Armes. So king Iohn of Albret complaining his ill fortune, returned on this ſide the Pyrenees, in the ſtraits of which mountaines the reereward of the French armie was much troubled by the Guipuſcoans, and other mountainers, being forced to leaue in the mountaines of Velate, and Leyſondo, part of their artillerie, the which was drawne to Pampelone with great pompe, in the caſtle of which citie there are many peeces to bee ſeene at this day: By reaſon of which proweſſe and good ſeruice, the king, beſides many exemptions and priuiledges, added to the Armes of the prouince of Guipuſcoa, the twelue peeces of ordnance or in a field of azure, the which it carries at this day.

Places returne to the obedience of king Iohn.

Victorie of 90 men ouer 600 Arragonians.

Iohn Ramires of Bequadan faithfull to his prince.

Pampelone beſieged by king Iohn.

Aſſault maintained by the garriſon of Pampelone againſt the French.

Siege of Pampelone raiſed.

Armes of the prouince of Guipuſcoa.

The

A The duke of Nagera hauing brought his armie backe to Logrogne, the duke of Alua remained Viceroy of Nauarre, which realme he brought all vnder the obedience of king Ferdinand, except the caſtle of Moya, which held long for the kings of Nauarre, who were expelled vnder a pretext of ſchiſme, as we haue ſaid. 1512

Vpon the ſame occaſion D. Bernardin of Carnajal, cardinall of Saint Croix, and biſhop of Siguenſa, was depoſed by the Councell of Latran, from all Eccleſiaſticall dignitie; and to his biſhopricke D. Frederic of Portugal, biſhop of Segobia, was preferred; to Segobia D. Diego of Ribera, biſhop of Majorca; and to that doctor Roderigo of Mercado, Abbot of Saint Martha, borne at Ognate, who was afterwards biſhop of Auila, and Caſtille.

B Preſident of the Chauncerie of Granado.

2 During the warre of Nauarre king Ferdinand ſent a new ſupplie of men into Italie, with the commaunder Solis, and was in a maner reſolued to ſend the great captaine thither, had not the counſell of ſome enuious diuerted him. The French affaires declining there, the duke of Ferrara, who in all their actions had aſsiſted them, found himſelfe in great danger to be depriued of his eſtate, and expelled by the Pope, his deadly enemie: to preuent the which, and to purchaſe vnto himſelfe friends and fauour, he ſet Fabricio Colonne, his priſoner, at libertie, without ranſome; by whoſe meanes, with the embaſſador of Spaine and others, he obtained a ſafe conduct, with the which he went to Rome, to treat of his affaires: but he could not make his peace with the Pope, being obſtinately bent

C to diſpoſſeſſe him of Ferrara, and to vnite the citie to the eſtate of the Church, offering him in recompence the countie of Aſt, which he held not, but maintained that it was of the patrimonie of the Church: ſo as Fabricio Colonne and the reſt, who had aſſured his comming to Rome, were forced to put themſelues in armes, to warrant him, and to conduct him to a place of ſafetie; whereof there followed great hatred betwixt the Pope and the Colonnois. And king Ferdinand was no leſſe diſpleaſed at theſe violent proceedings of the Pope; for he had a particular affection vnto duke Alphonſo, his kinſman, borne of a daughter to king Ferdinand the firſt, of Naples. But to make an end of that which had beene concluded by the league: that is, to chaſe the French out of Italie, and out of the world, if they could, D. Raymond of Cardona, Viceroy of Naples, who ſince Pope Iuliors hatred to the duke of Ferrara.

D the battell of Rauenna had beene in his gouernement, returned this yeare with his armie about Bolonia, to continue the warre: But the Pope and the Venetians finding themſelues ſeiſed of a good part of that which they pretended, refuſed to furniſh money for the entertainment of his armie, as had beene agreed by the treatie of the league: ſo as there grew a great mutinie in the campe among the ſouldiers, for want of pay, and the Viceroy was forced to retire, with great danger of his perſon, to Modena, where he found meanes to recouer ſome money, with the which he returned, and kept his ſouldiers together, who began to disband.

At that time there being a day appoynted at Mantoua, to conſult of the affaires of the warre, the Viceroy of Naples came thither, with deputies from the Pope, Emperor,

E Venetians, and Suiſſes. There it was concluded, That they ſhould put Maximilian Sforce, ſonne to Lewis Sforce, in poſſeſſion of the duchie of Milan: And moreouer it was propounded, to aſſaile the Florentines, who were friends and allied to the Crowne of France, as wel for this cauſe, as to reſtore the familie of Medicis, expelled out of that commonweale, to their goods and honours: the which the Pope did preſſe much, in fauour of cardinall Iohn of Medicis, his legate, and others of that familie. This was the Viceroyes firſt taske, after his returne to the armie, to lead it into the eſtate of Florence, from whom he tooke the town of Prato, where there were ſlain aboue two thouſand men of the Florentines part, and many taken. Whereat the citie of Florence being amazed, and their Councell vnprouided of forces and meanes to reſiſt, they yeelded to the reſtitu-

F tion of the Medicis, and to whatſoeuer the Viceroy would impoſe vpon them. For beſides the ſummes of money which they payed for the entertainment of the Spaniſh armie, and another ſumme vnto the Emperour, they made a league with king Ferdinand, promiſing to entertaine two hundred men at armes in the armie of the league, and yet the people were depriued of a good part of their libertie, by the cardinall of Medicis, who created magiſtrats and officers at his pleaſure. Eſtate of Florence vexed by the Viceroy of Naples.

1512 Theſe exploits being done in the Florentines countrey, the Viceroy led his armie to Breſſe, which the Venetians did beſiege, ſo as the lord of Aubigny was out of hope to be able to keepe it, this Spaniſh armie hauing ſo great a fame, for that it had humbled ſo powerfull a commonweale as that of Florence: and therefore he did capitulate with the Viceroy of Naples, although the Venetians had layed the ſiege, and yeelded it vpon condition to depart himſelfe and his men free, with their armes and baggage, their colours flying, and without artillerie. After the taking of Breſſe, the biſhop of Gurcenſis, embaſſadour for the Emperour, came to Rome, whereas he of Spaine laboured much to reconcile the Emperour and the Venetians, there remaining no difference but onely for the citie of Vincence. This embaſſadour did alſo ſeeke to reconcile the Pope with the Colonnois, with whom he was much diſpleaſed, for the duke of Ferraraes cauſe. Yet there was a new league made betwixt the Pope and the Emperour, againſt the Venetians, approued by the Councell of Latran, leauing a place for king Ferdinand to enter. The reaſon of this league was, for that the Venetians would not yeeld to certaine conditions which the Pope propounded vnto them. King Ferdinands doubt herein was, that the Venetians would joyne with the French king, if they were too much preſt: wherfore his embaſſadour fauoured them what he could. The comming of Maximilian Sforce to Verona, cauſed the biſhop of Gurcenſis to part from Rome, to eſtabliſh him in the Emperours name in the duchie of Milan, whither he conducted him, hauing found him at Cremona, with the Viceroy D. Raymond of Cardona. The duke much deſired by the Milanois, was receiued there with great joy. The cardinal of Sion preſented him the keies in the Suiſſes name, who would haue the honour of his reſtoring.

League made againſt the Venetians.

Notwithſtanding the league newly made againſt the Venetians, the Pope had a great deſire to ruine the duke of Ferrara: to preuent the which the embaſſadour of Spaine, by commaundement from his king, did all good offices, and vſed all the meanes he could: And this was one of the chiefe cauſes why king Ferdinand would not pleaſe the Pope, and enter into the league. Notwithſtanding the duke ſhewing himſelfe vngratefull (no man knowes vpon what reaſon) procured a ſcandalous and horrible attempt againſt him, as the Spaniards write, perſuading D. Ferdinand of Arragon, duke of Calabria, ſonne to king Frederic, and conſpiring with him, to depriue him of his life. There was a certaine monke who was meſſenger from the duke of Ferrara to him of Calabria, who had alſo for negotiator on his part, Philip Copula, ſonne to the earle of Sarno, whoſe head king Ferdinand of Naples had cauſed to be ſtriken off. This Copula had made ſome voyages into France, and treated with king Lewis, to giue a retreat and meanes in his realme to the duke of Calabria, being then in the Catholike kings Court at Logrogne, and ſhould haue ſaued himſelfe in the French armie, which was about Pampelone, hauing reſolued firſt to ſet fire on certaine powder that was hidden in the kings lodging: But God would not ſuffer ſo wicked a practiſe to take effect. The matter being diſcouered, Copula was quartered, and D. Ferdinand duke of Calabria was ſent priſoner to the caſtle of Xatiua, neere vnto Valencia, where hee remained aboue ten yeares, vntill that the Emperour Charles pardoned him, and ſet him at libertie. Hereupon king Ferdinand conceiued ſo great a hatred againſt the duke of Ferrara, as hee commaunded the Viceroy of Naples to ayd the Pope with his armie, or any other thing hee had, without any reſpect to the pretended pay. The Venetians ſeeing the Pope and Emperour leagued together to annoy them, and that the Emperour would not giue eare to the Catholike kings embaſſadour, who did ſtill perſuade him to make a peace with their commonwealth, and to take a ſumme of money in the place of Vincence, they joyned with the French king (who had not wholly forgotten the affaires of Italie, and did ſtill hold the caſtles of Milan and Cremona) at the ſame time when as a truce was accorded betwixt king Lewis and king Ferdinand, for a yere, to the great diſcontent of the king of England, who was readie to enter into France, and attended to be aſſiſted by the Spaniſh armie: by reaſon whereof the French king did deferre the recouerie of the realme of Nauarre for a time, to the which he was greatly ſolicited by the diſpoſſeſſed kings, John and Katherine. Which truce the French king had much deſired, to aſſure his realme on that ſide, being aduertiſed that the king of England made great preparation to aſſaile him, be-

3 Ingratitude of the duke of Ferrara pretended by the Spaniards.

Conſpiracie againg king Ferdinand.

...ce betwixt ...rance and Spaine.

A being ſtill preſt thereunto by Pope Iulio, who conceiuing great and pernitious enterpri- 1513 ſes in his mind, died at Rome in Februarie, in the yeare 1513. By his death the duke of Death of Pope Iulio.
Ferrara was freed from great care and feare; who embracing the occaſion, recouered ſome places in Romania, and had taken more if the Viceroyes armie had not ſtopt him, being lodged betwixt Regio and Plaiſance, through the fauour whereof Parma and Plaiſance came into the hands of Maximilian Sforce, the new duke of Milan. The cardinals being aſſembled, they did chuſe Iohn de Medicis, cardinall of Sancta Maria in Domi- Pope Leo choſen nica, for Pope, and called him Leo the tenth.

The Viceroy being aduertiſed of the truce betwixt Fraunce and Spaine, he began to B reſolue vpon his retreat to Naples, ſending for the garriſons which were in Tortona and Alexandria; and cauſing the armie to march towards the riuer of Trebia, hauing with him twelue hundred men at armes, and eight thouſand foot, all choyce ſouldiers:
the which did much terrifie the Milanois and their duke, knowing that the French king made great leuies of men to recouer that eſtate, and fearing that the Suiſſes, who were all their hope, would not be able to defend them, if the French armie did preſſe them on the one ſide, and the Venetians on the other: wherefore at their intreatie, and the Popes interceſſion, the Viceroy and the Spaniſh armie ſtayed, and held the warre in ſuſpence.

The truce which the two great kings had made, aſſured king Ferdinands conqueſt of Nauarre.
C Nauarre, the noblemen and Eſtates of which realme, after the retreat of the French from before Pampelone, deputed the conſtable D. Lewis of Beaumont, earle of Lerin, to take the oath of fealtie and homage, as to their king. And the duke of Alua being returned into Caſtille, there remained Viceroy of Nauarre in his place D. Diego Fernandes of Cor- Diego Fernandes of Cordoua, Viceroy of Nauarre.
doua, marqueſſe of Comares.

4 The great proſperities of D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, Regent of Caſtille, Caſtille.
were accompanied with ſome griefe, for that he had no lawfull iſſue male: but queene Germain his ſecond wife, by whom he had no children, was more perplexed, for her owne intereſt, who by a womaniſh affection ſought curiouſly for all deuices to con-ceiue, thinking by art and humane helpes to obtaine that which comes from the meere D bountie and bleſſing of God: Wherefore it happened this yeare (it is not knowne by whoſe aduice) that, with the kings conſent, the queene her ſelfe, D. Maria of Velaſco, Drinke giuen to king Ferdinand by the L. his wife.
wife to D. Iohn of Velaſco, ſuperintendent of the treaſure, and D. Iſabella Faure, made a drinke, or broth, for the king, to giue him force and vigour: But he had no ſooner taken it, but he found nature toucht with an incurable infirmitie, whereof he languiſhed continually, and in the end dyed. This was done at Carroncillo, whither the king was come to deſport himſelfe with the ladies: And it is not credible that they did preſent him this potion to any other end, but to quicken him in Venus ſports; for all the queenes happineſſe and greatneſſe depended vpon the kings life. Hee was like to haue dyed of this drinke in the monaſterie of Mejorado; but beeing ſomewhat recouered by phy-E ſicke, hee came to Vailledolit, to an aſſemblie of the Eſtates, where hee diſpatcht many affaires.

5 The French king in the meane time had in a manner diſpoſſeſt Maximilian Sforce Defeat of the French at Nouaro by the Suiſſes.
of all his duchie of Milan, he had onely remaining Como and Nouara: Into the laſt he had put himſelfe with many enſignes of Suiſſes, and was beſieged by the French, where followed that memorable ſallie of colonell Mottin and his Suiſſes, and the defeat of the French, with great ſlaughter, and the loſſe of their artillerie, as you may read at large in that hiſtorie: whereupon the French repaſt the Alpes. And on the other ſide D. Raymond of Cardone, Viceroy of Naples, being with his armie vpon the paſſage of the riuer of Pau, oppoſite to the Venetian armie, led by Bartholmew of Aluiano, who hauing newes F of this rout of the French, retired for feare to Ponte Vico, and from thence to Tom-ba, neere to the riuer of Theſin. The Viceroy ſuffering them to paſſe, buſied himſelfe about the reduction of Genoua, which the French had deliuered into the hands of Ador- nes and their factions: ſending, at the inſtance of Iohn and Octauia Fregoſe, three thouſand Spaniards thither, led by the marqueſſe of Peſcare, himſelfe following with the reſt of the armie. Wherewith the French and the Adornes their partiſans, being amazed, they 1513 left the citie, and Octauia Fregoſe was made duke. In the meane time Aluiano tooke G Lignago, by the means of Iohn Paul Baillon, who ſlue moſt of the Spaniards and Germans that were there in garriſon. He alſo attempted Verona in vaine. All which did much incenſe the Viceroy of Naples, who paſſing the Pau with his armie, did ſoone take Bergamo, Peſcare, and Breſſe, Aluiano flying before him, who hauing diuided his armie into gar-riſons, put himſelfe into Padoua.

Pope Leo at his firſt aduancement trying by the beſt meanes he could to diſſolue the Councell of Piſa, he then receiued into grace D. Bernardin of Caruajal, cardinall of Saint Croix, and Frederic of Saint Seuerin, depoſed from their dignities of cardinalls, and depriued of their reuenues and benefices by Pope Iulio and the Councell of Latran. H Theſe two hauing ſtayed a while at Florence, by the Popes commaundement, like priuat men, they came by his permiſsion to Rome, where they entred by night, and the next day they preſented themſelues vnto the Conſiſtorie, in all humilitie, where, vpon their Cardinals receiued into grace. knees, they acknowledged their faults, and demaunded pardon, the which they obtained, approuing the decrees of the Councell of Latran, and the election of the preſent Pope, and confeſsing their depoſition to haue beene juſt, and that the Councell of Piſa was falſe and abhominable: whereupon they were abſolued, and went and embraced all the cardinals in their rankes, who moued not from their places; after which they put on their cardinals weeds, and ſat in their vſuall places: and although they did not recouer their bene-fices and reuenues, yet afterwards they had other things in recompence. I

Indies. 6 At the ſame time the South ſea at the Indies was diſcouered: For Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa, jealous that any other ſhould obtain commiſsion from the king to that effect, and depriue him of the honour of this diſcouerie, which he had now attempted, without attending any anſwer from Spaine, nor the 1000 Spaniards which he had demaunded from the king, parting from the Antique of Darien, in September this yeare 1513, with 190 Spaniards, in a galleon and ten barkes, he came to Carecta, where he landed his troupe, and marcht into the countrey of the Cachico Ponſa, whom he forced to giue him gold, and guides to conduct him to the mountaines, whereof notice had beene giuen him by the Cachico D. Charles Panquiaco. With theſe guides they came into a countrey called Quareca, and the Cachico Torecha, where they were forced to fight: They ſlue the lord K and diſperſed his people, not accuſtomed to ſee ſuch great wounds as ſwords of yron make, nor to heare the noyſe of harquebuſes, nor the biting of furious dogs, which the Spaniards led to the warre with them, whom they cauſed to teare in peeces certaine Indian Sodomites, whom they found in that countrey. Paſsing on, Vaſco Nugnes went vp certaine high mountains, with 67 of his ſouldiers, leauing the reſt to gard them that were hurt and ſicke, in a burrough at the foot of the mountaine. Being neere vnto the top, he cauſed his troupe to ſtay, and would himſelfe goe vp alone, where he diſcouered the wa-South ſea diſcouered by Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa. ters of the South Ocean, for the which he was exceeding glad, and gaue God thanks, and then he called all the ſouldiers to haue them ſee it. There they made mounts of ſtones, in ſigne of poſſeſsion taken. Being come from the mountaine, they went to aſſaile a Cachi- L co, called Chiape, who being obſtinat, they put to flight: yet being friendly inuited he returned, and made himſelfe vaſsall to the king of Caſtille, accompanying him vnto the South ſea ſhore, whereof they tooke poſſeſsion, and drew a writing on the 29 of September, being S. Michaels day 1515. By this ſeruice which Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa did then vnto the king, he well deſerued his pardon, if he had offended in any thing. The company which he had left at Quareca being joyned with him, he paſt a great riuer with 80 Spaniards leauing the reſt vpon the banke, and went and forced another Cachico, called Coquera, who put himſelfe in defence, as Chiape had done, and brought him vnder his obedience.
Then thruſt on with a great courage, he would enter into that ſea, notwithſtanding that Chiape did diſsuade him, ſaying, That the current was ſtrong & trobleſome: ſo as he was in M daunger of drowning, ſeeking to recouer a neere iſland, where he arriued with much paine and peril. There raigned there a Cachico called Tumaco, who made offer to fight, but being aduertiſed by the Indians, guides to Chiape, that the Spainiards were good men, this Tumaco ſent them a ſonne of his, to know what they demanded: Vaſco Nugnes ſpake courteouſly vnto him, apparelled him, and gaue him looking glaſſes,

A ſes, with ſuch other toies, the which he carrying to his company, it moued them ſo, as Tumaco came himſelfe in perſon to the Spaniſh troope with ſhews of loue and friendſhip, of whome the Spaniards demanded perles, for they ſaw the Indians of his company weare ſome, whereof they did furniſh them with a good quantity, and aduertiſed them that there was a plaſh neere hand, where they did fiſh ſome as big as a mans eye, the which did pleaſe the couetous Spaniards and their Captaines: but for that they were few, and there were great difficulties and dangers, they deferred this prey vnto another voyage, wherfore they returned to their companions, & paſt into the country of the Cachico Chiape, where they refreſht themſelues, and reſted ſome daies. Chiape the Ca- 1513

Perles.

B chico did alſo fiſh vpon his ſhoare, and gaue them aboue foure charges of perles. Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa tooke his leaue of him, leauing ſome Spaniards with him, for he wept being much grieued at their departure, for the opinion he had of their wiſdom: then they paſt a riuer to come into the countrie of a Cachico called Teoca, wher the Spaniards were receiued with great ioy, and Teoca gaue them preſents of gold and perles. From thence they went through deſart and barren places, full of Tygres, and Lyons with hunger, thirſt, and extreame danger, into the lands of Pacra, a cruell tyrant, and a Sodomite, who purſued by the conſcience of his owne wickednes, thought to eſcape by flight, but he was brought backe, and after information made of his tyrannies, & diſhoneſty, Vaſco Nugnes cauſed him to be torne in peeces by his Maſtiues, with foure other lords, his confede-

C rates and miniſters of ſuch filthines, and then the peeces to bee burnt: Hee called the coūtrie of Pacra, All Saints. Vaſco Nugnes going from thence, he came to Buquebuca, the lord of which region, thinking that the Spaniards were diuine people, he was aſhamed to appeare before them, holding himſelfe vnworthy, but he ſent them ſome veſſels of gold well wrought, & craued pardon of them. Going on with more deſire to find victuals than gold, they ſaw certain Indians which croſt their way, who being brought back vnto them and demanded of what region they were, and where there was any victuals, they ſaid, that they were ſubiect vnto a king called Corizo, who deſired to know them, and to bee their friend, of whome afterwards they receiued thirty plates of golde, offering them all that was in his power, and intreating them to aide him againſt another Cachico his enemy, in

D whoſe countrie hee aſſured them they ſhould find great wealth: Balboa promiſed him friendſhip, aide and fauour, preſenting him with their hatchets and other iron works, and then he paſt into the land of Pecoroſa, where he found victuals, & receiued gold & ſlaues, & hauing left his ſick men there, he went on with ſixtie ſouldiers onely, vntill he came vnto the Cachico Tumanama, of whome D. Charles Panquiaco had ſpoken vnto him; whom he ſurpriſed in his lodging at night: And for that he was giuen to the brutiſh ſin againſt nature, Balboa was ready to haue him burnt, but thinking to draw from him ſome ſecret of his hidden treaſure, & of the qualitie of the countrie, he was content to reprehend him ſharply, and to keep him priſoner, giuing ſome ſatisfaction to his accuſers: and there Balboa remained the reſt of that yeare 1513.

Hope of gaine make vice remaine vnpuniſhed.

E 7 The Spaniards affaires proſpering after this manner at the Indies, the Armie which was in Italie againſt the Venetians, was no leſſe ſucceſſull. After the retreat of Aluiano the Venetian generall, the emperours lieutenant beſeeged Padoua in vaine. The viceroy of Naples being reſolued to put part of his armie into Breſſe, and part into Bargamo, & there to winter, he was importuned by his ſoldiers, to keep the field with the Germanes, hauing the Caualarie of Naples, and the Popes, with 4500 Spaniards; hauing ſent one thouſand Spaniards to aſſiſt the duke of Milan: The viceroy hauing with theſe forces ſackt Bouoelta, paſt the Brent, and marcht vnto the ſea, burning townes and villages, and all the houſes of the gentlemen of Venice, which were in that countrie: and the more to afflict & braue them, he cauſed ten peeces of his greateſt ordnance to be moun-

Italy.

Cruell warre of the Spaniards againſt the Venetians.

F ted at a place called Marguera, and ſhot againſt the city of Venice, whereof the bullets fel at S. Seconds church, with trouble and amazement to all the inhabitants, and the more, for that night comming, it did repreſent vnto them more plainely, the great fiers and ruines of their houſes of pleaſure in the countrey; the which they held to be the greateſt indignitie that euer the common wealth of Venice receiued: which thinking to reuenge they encreaſed their diſgrace: for Aluiano hauing aſſured the Senat, that the enemies

armie

1513 armie laden with ſpoiles in thoſe mooriſh places, and trenches of riuers, would find G ſuch difficulties in their retreat, as it would bee eaſie to put them to rout, and therefore had gotten leaue to draw their forces to field after that hee had coaſted the enemies, ſeeking to ſtoppe their paſſage at the riuer of Brenta, being himſelfe deceiued and ſurpriſed, as hee thought to ſtop their paſſage going to Verona, whether they marcht onely with an intent to retyre, hee was fought with all, and vanquiſhed about Vincence, hauing loſt aboue fiue thouſand Venetians, and many Captaines ſlaine: vpon the place, with their Pouiidor Andrew Lauredan, who was ſlain by the contention of two ſouldiers, whoſe priſoner hee ſhould be, beſides many captaines and gentlemen of Venice, that were priſoners: which rout did much trouble the af- H faires of that ſtate. What ſucceeded afterwards in that warre, I leaue to other Hiſtories whome it concernes more particularly.

Venetians defeated by the Spaniards

King Ferdinand being much impayred by his languiſhing infirmitie, growen by reaſon of the potion which had beene giuen him, attended as well as hee could the gouernment of his realmes: but hee had a good Councell, and faithfull miniſters, ſo as his affaires both of ſtate and iuſtice, were nothing impayred, neither were they in any ſort peruerted. This yeare there was a fort built at Oran, and another at a place called Pegnon, or the rocke of Alger in Afrike, whereas the crowne of Caſtille held Melille, Caſaſa, Oran, Maſalquiuer, Tripoli, and Bugie, and the two rockes or Pegnons of Alger, and of Velez, beſides the Princes and townes, that were Tributarie I vnto it. And ſo ended that yeare 2513.

Forts built in Afrike.

1514 8 In the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and foureteené, Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa, hauing ſtaied a good ſpace in the countrie of the Cachico Tumanama diſcouering the mines and treaſures of that region, he parted from thence, leading one of that princes ſons with him, to be inſtructed in the Romiſh religion, and came into the country of D. Charles Panquiaco, who receiued Balboa being ſicke verie courteouſly, with all his companions, giuing thē al the eaſe & commodities he could, and when they would depart, he preſented them with 20 pounds of gold. Being thus ſatisfied of him, they retyred to their fort of the Antique of Darien, the which they found much better peopled than they had left it: for vpon the brute of the great riches that were on the firme land, many were come from Hiſ- K paniola, & the citie of S. Domingo to inhabit there. It is thought that Balboa brought beſide the contentment he had to haue diſcouered the ſouth ſea, the value of aboue 100000 Caſtillans in gold, beſides perles and other precious jewels in great aboundance, hauing made a long and dangerous voyage, gone through many barbarous natiōs & enemies, by deſart and vnknown places, hauing not only to incounter men, but Tygres and Lyons, hunger and thirſt, thick woods & craggy mountaines, and yet neuer was put to rout, neuer loſt a man, nor himſelfe wounded in any ſort. Of al their ſpoiles they laied to the value of 20000 ducats for the kings right; and then they diuided the reſt among them, euerie one receiuing according to his place, yea their maſtiues had pay aſwel as the men, for it is reported that a dog belonging vnto Vaſco Nugnes, called Leoncillo, had for his part 500 Ca- L ſtillans, receiuing a greater pay than a harquebuſier. After that Vaſco Nugnes had ordered ſome things in the fort of Darien, he ſent a friend of his called Arbolancha, born at Bilbao, into Spain, to carry news vnto king Ferdinand of his voyages and diſcoueries, and the fift penny of what they had gotten.

Behauiour of Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa at the Indies.

Booty taken at the Indies.

Trauels endured with great patience and happines by the Spaniards.

Maſtiues receiued pay and a part of the ſpoile among the Spaniards.

At that time the French king did ſollicit both k. Ferdinand and the emperor Maximilian to conclude the marriage betwixt D. Ferdinand brother to prince Charles of Auſtria, and the lady Renee, the French kings ſecond daughter, for whoſe dowrie hee would quit his pretenſions to the duchie of Milan: but hauing made a peace with the king of England, by a marriage contracted betwixt him & Marie that kings ſiſter, he changed his opinion, and gaue ouer that treatie for Renee and Ferdinand. The Pope hauing diuers de- M ſignes to free Italie of ſtrangers, hauing no deſire to ſee the French king lord of Milan, yet he entertained him with this hope, to make vſe of him and his meanes, to get the realme of Naples from k. Ferdinand, to ſettle his brother Iulian of Medicis king there, & therof he had already had ſome practiſe with the Venetiās. To fauor the Popes deſignes, being profitable for the common-weale of Venice, Andrew Gritti was appointed by the Senat to be Deſignes of Pope Leo to put ſtrangers out of Italy.

Pope ſeekes to get the realme of Naples.

generall

A generall of an army to inuade the banks of Apulia, thinking by that meanes to diuert the Spaniſh army out of Lombardie, & that they ſhould haue none but the Germanes to incounter. Hereupon Bartholmew of Aluiano hauing ſurpriſed certain Spaniards, he cauſed them to be hanged at Padoua, ſaying that they had been ſuborned by their cõmanders to kill him in treaſon: the which put the viceroy of Naples into ſuch a rage, as he made a miſerable ſpoile of the country about Padoua, & hauing chaſed Bernardin Antinola, nephew to Aluiano, he ſhut him into Citadelle, which place being battered, was taken partly by a breach, and partly by ſcalado. Bernardin of Antinola & his men were carried away priſoners, and the place ſackt. To recompence this loſſe, Aluiano defeated ſome troups of light B horſe nere to Eſte: the army which beſieged Creme, being hardly retained for want of pay was forced to retire. The armie of Spain after the taking of Citadelle, diuided it ſelfe into diuers lodgings, the viceroy to Verona, the Marques of Peſcara to Lendenara, with 3000 Spaniards: there came about 200 men at armes to Rouigo, of which D. Garcia Manrique was captain, who ſuffered themſelues to be ſurprized by Aluiano, who led both him and all his company away priſoners: ſome write they were 300 horſe, & 1000 Spaniſh foot. On the other ſide Renzo de Cert, being freed from the ſiege of Creme which hee had defended valiantly, being fortified with men, hee ſurpriſed Bergamo by intelligence of the inhabitants, but ſoon after the viceroy recouered it againe, hauing ioined his Spaniards with the forces of Milan, led by Siluio Sauello, Renzo, who was within it, yeelding it vpon honorable C conditions. The Bergamaſques were puniſhed for their rebellion by the purſe, redeeming the ſack of the town, & other puniſhments prepared for them, for great ſums of money: the which did much diſpleaſe the Spaniards, who were in hope that the ſpoile of this town ſhould haue been giuen to them. Winter approaching, the armies were lodged: and for that it was bruted that the Fench king prepared a great power to paſſe into Italy in the ſpring, D. Raymond of Cardone the viceroy, who had his Spaniſh army much diminiſhed, went to the emperor to Inſpruch, to take councel touching the affairs of the future warre. At Rome the embaſſadors for the emperor, King Ferdinand, and French king vſed, their art and skil to win the Popes fauor for their maſters: but he being cunning, politike, and enemy to them all, diſcouered not his conceits, but entertained them with vaine hopes.

1514

Spanniards ſurpriſed in their lodging

D 10 About the end of this yere, before that k. Ferdinand had any intelligence of the ſucceſſe of Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa, it was reſolued in councel, to ſend to the Antique of Darien, & into the region of Caſtille del or, a knight for gouernor, whoſe name was Pedro Arias of Auila, born at Segobia: which charge was demanded by many, Arbolancha whome Vaſco Nugnes had ſent into Spain, being not yet ariued, for otherwiſe without doubt that charge had bin giuen him in recompence of his labors & great ſeruice which he had done vnto the king in the diſcouery of ſo rich countries: yet he was made gouernor of the coaſt towards the South ſea: but D. Iohn Rodrigo of Fonſeca, biſhop of Burgos, who had the ſuperintendẽcy of the affaires of the Indies, & did much fauor Pedro Arias, protracted the time to make the diſpatch of his prouiſion, yet the ſentence giuen againſt him at the ſuit of E the bacheler Enciſo was cancelled and made voide. Pedro Arias then haning imbarked at Saint Lucar of Barrameda, with one thouſand fiue hundred men in 17 veſſels, the 14 of May, hauing in his company, frier Iohn Cabedo firſt biſhop of the Antique of Darien, & firſt Prelat of the firme land at the Indies, and for pilot Iohn Veſpucio, Florentin, he ſailed in 38 daies to the Antique, where he was receiued with great ioy, & Vaſco Nugues of Balboa lodged him in his own lodging, with al the honor he could deuiſe, & was informed by him of the whole eſtate of that country, & of the diſcouery which he had made of Caſtille delor, for ſo he had named it, by reaſon of the great riches thereof, and of the South Sea, and of pearles: wherewith Pedro Arias de Auila was verie much pleaſed, finding that there was worke done, and that there remained nothing but to people and husband it. He made the Licenciat Gaſpar of Eſpinoſe, borne at Medina del Campo, Alcayde maior, or preſident of his Iuſtice, and according to his charge, he beganne to diuide the prouinces to his people, ſending Francis Bezerra with 550 Spaniards towards the Riuer of Dabayba, who indured great miſeries there, and returned with notable loſſe. Iohn of Ayora with foure hundred men was directed into the countrie of the Cachico D. Charles Panquiaco, a moſt faithfull friend to the Spaniards, who

Pedro Arias of Auila made vicetoie of the firme land at the Indies

Iohn Cabedo firſt Biſhop of the Antique of Darien

1514 who notwithſtanding was ſo ingratefully intreated by them, and the Indians his ſubiects G ſo cruelly and couetouſly vext, as they were forced to take armes, and to chaſe away Ayora, who returned flying from whence he parted. Captain Valcio being ſent towards Caribana, and Barthelmew Hurtado to Acla, they had no better ſucceſſe; nor others in other places: ſo as Vaſco Nugnes, was not ſo fortunate, but Pedro Arias and his company were as vnfortunate in all their enterpriſes. King Ferdinand toward the end of this yeare 1514 did ſo decay in his health, as there were apparent ſignes of a dropſie in him: One of the captaines which Pedro Arias de Auila, called Gonſalo of Badajos, had ſent to people in the maine land, tooke his courſe towards Nombre de Dios, in the beginning of the yeare 1515 1515, where hee found Indians that were ſtrange and vntractable, ſo as hauing increaſed H his troupe, being about 80 Spaniards, by the arriuall of Lewis of Mercado, who brought 50 more, they went in company towards the ſouth Sea, and being come to a place called Coyba, they ſackt it, for that the lord of the country called Tuana flying the acquaintãce of theſe bearded men, had retired himſelfe into the woods: then they made prey of many things, and eſpecially of ſlaues. Paſſing on by a riuers ſide, on the 5 day they met with two Indians laden with bread, which a blind Cachico ſent vnto them, who brought them to the place where this Cachico dwelt, with whom they made good cheare, & receiued preſents of gold, with information of thoſe countries, which they ſought, and guides to conduct them. Continuing on their courſe they came wher there raigned a lord called Taracura, who alſo gaue thẽ a good quantity of gold: but yet they did not forbeare to fier a bo- I rough belonging to a brother of his, for that he was not to be found at their arriual: then paſſing by the countries of the Cachicos Cheru and Nathan they receiued ſo much gold & other things, as the treaſure which they got in that voyage, amounted to aboue 80000 ducats, & at the leaſt 400 ſlaues. But, as proſperity makes people careles & ouerweening, Spaniards defeated and ſlain by the Indians.

being come into the countrie of a mighty lord called Partza, holding no order nor diſcipline, thinking they ſhould find friendlie reception in all places, they were ſuddenly charged by a great number of Indians, who ſlue 80 of his Spaniards, put the reſt to flight, and got their gold and ſlaues, with all the booty which they had made in this voyage. The ſame yere Gaſpar of Morales being ſent by the ſame gouernour with 150 Spaniards towards S. Michaels gulph, he paſt, with the help of the Cachicos Chiape & Tumaco, into the iſlãd of K
Tarareque, leading 70 men only with him, being drawne on by the fame of perles and other riches which were there, and vpon that ſhoare: there he had three incounters, wheras the Indians ſhewed themſelues braue, ſeeking to repulſe the Spaniards, but at the fourth charge they were vanquiſhed, and the Cachico brought to obedience, by the meanes of ſome Indians that were friends, and did accompany the Spaniards, who did highly praiſe

Perles in aboundance.

them, and extol their inuincible power: Being friends, the Spaniards were well intreated by this lord, & receiued of him aboue 110 markes of perle, in recompence whereof they gaue him hatchets and other ſmal mercery wares, of the which he and his Indians made great eſteeme: and this Cachico grew ſo familiar, as he diſcouered vnto Gaſpar of Morales all the riches of thoſe iſlands, & moreouer made himſelfe vaſſall & tributarie to the king L of Caſtille, promiſing to giue him yerely 100 markes of perle: he ſuffered himſelfe to be baptized, and was called Pedro Arias, by the gouernors name, and with this good ſucceſſe Gaſpar of Morales returned hauing ſped better than the reſt. The gouernor Pedro Arias in the mean time being entred into a great quarrel againſt Vaſco Nugnes of Balboa (whether it were through enuy, for that the one had been more happy in diſcouering, then hee in gouerning of thoſe new found coũtries, or through the inſolencie of Balboa, who ſcoft at his enterpriſes, & the aduerſities of his captains:) it did much trouble his gouernment: to pacifie the which, & to reconcile them, frier Iohn Caucdo, the new biſhop, tried all the meanes he could, cauſing Vaſco Nugnes to marrie Pedro Arias daughter: but notwithſtanding this allyance, they fel againe to great diſcord, which proceeded ſo far, as Vaſco Nugnes being M in his gouernment towards the ſouth ſea, where he had cauſed foure Carauels to be built to continue his conqueſts, the gouernour Arias cauſed him to be adiourned, and forced him to appeare in juſtice at the Antique of Darien, where being arriued, he was laied hold on, and the procurator fiſcall pleading againſt him, he accuſed him of mutinies and other inſolences committed, for the which he had beene abſolued; yet they condemned him to loſe

Mutinies at the Indies through enuie.

A loſe his head, with fiue of his companions: the which did wonderfully incenſe all the Spaniards that were in that countrie, who lamented with teares the pittifull end of ſo braue a Captaine, vnder whoſe conduct and good fortune they did hope in ſhort time to be the richeſt men in Europe. 1515

Voſco Nugnes of Balboa beheaded at the Antique of Darien.

11 Whileſt theſe things paſt at the Indies, the councell of Spaine was in great difficulties for the affaires of Italie, by the death of Lewis 12. the French king, who dyed the firſt of Ianuarie, this yere 1515, to whom Francis duke of Angouleſme had ſucceeded, a young, braue, and valiant Prince, who at the firſt intituled himſelfe duke of Milan, with an intent to purſue the right of his predeceſſor and father in law: wherefore hauing con-

Francis the firſt 16th French king.

B firmed the peace made with the Engliſh, and vpon a hope of marriage betwixt the ladie Renee, yonger daughter to the deceaſed king, being then but nine yeres old, and prince Charles, who began to gouern his eſtates of the Netherlands, being aſſured of his friendſhip, he prepared himſelfe for the warre of Italie. It was contracted with the earle of Naſſau Prince Charles his embaſſador, that to the Princeſſe his future ſpouſe ſhould be giuen 600 thouſand crownes, and the duchie of Berry in dowrie, in regard whereof hee ſhould renounce al rights & pretenſions which ſhe might haue to her mothers or fathers goods, that is, to the duchies of Britaine and Milan, and moreouer, that prince Charles ſhould be a mediator to the king D. Ferdinand his grandfather, for the reſtoring of Iohn of Albret and Catherine his wife, to their realm of Nauarre: & on the other ſide that king Francis ſhould Contract of marriage betwixt prince Charles of Auſtria and Renee of France.

C aid prince Charles with men & ſhipping, when as (after the death of king Ferdinand, which approached) it ſhould be fit for him to paſſe into Spaine, where hee feared ſome oppoſition, by his brother D. Ferdinand, who was bred vp and much beloued in Spain. King Francis ſought to prolong the truce made by king Lewis his predeceſſor with king Ferdinand; to win the Popes fauour, and to pacifie the Suiſſes: but hee found oppoſition in all theſe there: for theſe Potentates were directly contrarie to the deſign which he made vpon the duchie of Milan, and it was bruted that the Suiſſes prepared to inuade Burgongue, or Dauphine. Beſides, there was a ſtreit league made betwixt the emperour, king Ferdinand, and the duke of Milan, to force the French king to quit the title of duke Milan, and to renounce his pretended right to the duchie. And there was another league made be-

League againſt king Francis.

D twixt the French king and the Venetians in that reſpect.

At that time Pedro Nauarro, earle of Albeto, remained priſoner among the French, ſince the battell of Rauenna: for whoſe redemption king Ferdinand did not care, for that ſome noblemen Caſtillans, of leſſe merit than himſelfe, through emulation of his vertue, had imputed the loſſe of that battell vnto him: which this wiſe and iuditious captaine apprehended, and thinking his ſeruices were ill rewarded, hee agreed to ſerue the French king, quitting the countie of Albeto, and all that hee held in the king of Caſtilles dominions, making all acts and proteſtations in that caſe required: After which he began to leuie troups of foot in Gaſcoine, ſeeming that they with other forces ſhould ſerue for the recouerie of the realme of Nauarre: but the princes whome it concerned, knewe

Pedro Nauarro ſerues the French king.

E well that this great preparation was for the duchie of Milan, ſo as euerie one ſtood vpon his gard.

King Ferdinand being bound by the league to inuade France by Cattelonia, and Guipuſcoa, he approached neere to Burgos, where hauing beene verie ſicke ſome daies in the monaſterie of Mejorada, hee paſt at Aranda of Duero, from whence he ſent Queene Germaine his wife into Arragon, to aſſiſt at the Eſtates at Monſon, and to prouide for that which ſhould be neceſſarie, if the warre grew hot in France, to the end hee ſhould receiue no harm on that ſide, himſelfe taking the charge of Caſtille, and of the frontier of Guipuſcoa. Being come to Burgos, he called the eſtates, with whoſe aduice and aid he prouided for the ſea coaſt & the realme of Nauarre, the which at that time, as a conqueſt made with Enterpriſes of king Ferdinand againſt the French king.

F the forces of Caſtille, he did ſolemnly incorporate for euer to that crown: And for that his charges would be verie great for the execution of thoſe enterpriſes which hee had in hand, namely for the conqueſt and defence of thoſe places which hee held in Afrike and at the Indies, and to free the ſeas from pyrats, the Pope gaue him leaue to raiſe certaine ſummes of money vpon the Clergie for two yeares. His infirmity increaſing, hee had ſuch continuall faintings, as on the ſeuen and twentieth of Iune, they thought hee would haue died:

Nauarre incorporated to the crowne of Caſtille.

1515 died: wherefore finding himſelfe neere his end, he deſired to make his will, and cauſed it G
Teſtament of king Ferdinand to be written, leauing his daughter Queene Ioane for his generall heire, and the infant D. Ferdinand his grand-child, gouernour of Caſtille; to whome he gaue for gouernour D. Gonſal of Guzman treaſorer of Calatraua, and for his Schoolemaſter D. Aluaro Oſorio biſhop of Aſtorga, hauing a great deſire to cauſe the three maſterſhips of Caſtille to fall into his hands after his death; whereupon he made orders which hee thought might take place, but afterwards he reuoked them. He had ſome amendment, and came to Aranda of Duero, whether Anthony Auguſtine, his Chancellor of Arragon came, whom he cauſed to be apprehended, and committed, being informed that he had preſumed to attempt againſt the honor of the queene, his wife: for ſeeing her too deſirous to haue children, and H
Chancellor of Arragon accuſed to haue ſought to diſhonor queen Germaine. the king her husband by reaſon of his age and infirmitie, too weake, he had offered her his ſeruice too familiarly. This Chancellor remained in priſon, till after the kings death, and then was ſet at liberty by the Cardinal Ximenes, who was gouernor of Spaine. The ſame yeare there hauing been an enteruiew at Vienne in Auſtria, betwixt the emperour Maximilian, and Ladiſlaus king of Hongarie, and Bohemia, the marriages were accorded of the infant Ferdinand, with Anne Daughter to the ſaid king of Hongarie, and of Marie ſiſter to prince Charles of Auſtria, Infanta of Caſtille, with Lewis ſonne and heir to the ſaid king Ladiſlaus.

13 King Francis paſt into Lombardy, with a great army: what ſucceeded in thoſe wars you may read at large in the French Hiſtorie. The Pope ſeeing all things proſper for the I Enteruiew betwixt Pope Leo and king Francis. French, made an accord with the king: they had an enteruiew at Bolonia, with great ſhewes of friendſhip; there they confirmed their league, and conferred long of the conqueſt of Naples, for the French king: but they reſolued to deferre it till after the death of king Ferdinand, which they knew to be neere: the Pope hauing no deſire of it for the quiet of Italie, alleaging for excuſe, that the time of the league which hee had with the Catholike king, did not yet expire of ſixeteene months, yet in ſhew he ſeemed verie willing to countenance that conqueſt, ſo as the French king (who was well content to haue it deferred vntil another time, for that his treaſur was exhauſted) was verie wel ſatisfied. There Pragmatike ſanction aboliſhed. the Pragmatike ſanction was aboliſhed, the Pope granting liberty to the king, to the preiudice of the clergy of France, to name & preſent men at his pleaſure, to eccleſiaſtical dig- K nities and benefices being voide within his realme; a priuiledge which belonged to Chapters and Colledge: they made many other agreements to the contentment one of another.

In this eſtate ſtood the affaires of Italie, towards the end of king Ferdinands daies, whoſe diſeaſe did vndermine him by little & little yet he would needs part from Segobia, to goe into Arragon to the eſtates, whether he had ſent Queene Germaine his wife, tranſporting himſelfe to Calataiub: but he was forced to returne into Caſtille, as well for the affaires of the realme, as to giue order to prouide men for Italie in fauour of the emperor Maximilian, who made preparation to enter it in the Spring, and alſo to care for the defence of that which he held in Afrike. At that time was the marriage betwixt D. Alfonſo L
Peres of Guzman, or Aluaro duke of Medina Sydonia, and D. Anna of Arragon, daughter to D. Alfonſo of Arragon, the kings Neece: to whom one of his Councel comming from viſiting a certaine woman, whom they held for a Saint in Spaine, called the holie woman of Barca, reported from her, that hee ſhould bee of a good courage, for hee ſhould not die before he had conquered Ieruſalem: but this good woman was deceiued.

Death of D. Gonſalo Fernandes of Cordoua, called the great Captaine. This yeare dyed of a double quarten Ague, the great Captaine Gonſalo Fernandes of Cordoua duke of Seſſa, Terranoua, of Saint Ange, marqueſſe of Bitonto, Prince of Squilaci, and Conſtable of the realme of Naples. Among the other vertues of this famous man, hee is much commended for his great chaſtity, a rare thing in a Spaniard: his end was in the ſeuenty third yeare of his age, leauing by his wife D. Maria Henrique, one on- M ly daughter and heire, named D. Eluira of Cordoua: his bodie lies in the monaſtery of Saint Ieroſme, in that citie. The king hearing of the death of this worthy man, ſent to comfort his widow and daughter.

1516 14 In the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and ſixeteene, which was the laſt of king Ferdinands life, there arriued in Caſtille, at a place called the Sereine, doctor Schoole-

A Adrian Florent deane of Louuain, embaſsador for Prince Charles of Auſtria, and his Scholemaſter, who in time was made biſhop of Tortoſa, then Cardinall, and ſucceſſiuely Pope. His charge in ſhew, was for matters of gouernement, againſt the Lord of Cheures, who was the princes gouernour: but in effect he came into Spaine, to prie and looke into the ſtate of things, and to aduertiſe the prince: And the King dying, which was held to bee verie neere, hee had authoritie and commaundement to take poſſeſſion in his name of the gouernement of the realmes of Caſtille, Arragon, and the reſt. The king parted from Plaiſance, with an intent to goe to Guadalupe, there to performe a vow: paſſing from one place to an other, his infirmitie ſtill increaſing, hee ſtayed at Madrigalejo, a borough neere vnto Trugillo, where he had a kind of fluxe: B by reaſon whereof doctor Adrian (who was verie vnpleaſing vnto him) tranſported himſelfe thither; yet ſhewing him a good countenaunce, hee willed him to goe and attend him at Guadalupe: his ſickeneſſe encreaſing, they that were about him were conſtrayned to aduertiſe him that his end drew neere, the which did much diſcontent him: for hee thought hee had a longer time to liue; neyther did hee giue credit to all that his Confeſſor Frier Thomas of Matienſo ſaid vnto him: but when they had often reiterated this aduertiſement, that hee might diſpoſe himſelfe to die like a Chriſtian, he cauſed the Licenciat Zapate and doctor Caruaial, who were of his chamber, and of his Councell, to bee called vnto him, and with them the Licenciat Vergas his Treaſurer, who was alſo of his Councell, a man in whom hee had great confidence: whom he en- C ioyned and coniured to giue him good and faithfull councell, in that which hee ſhould demaund of them: hee told them that for the opinion hee had that prince Charles would not come in perſon to gouerne the realmes of Spaine, hee had appoynted the Infant D. Ferdinand gouernour of them for the Queene D. Ioane her daughter: whereupon hee deſired to know their opinions, if hee had not done well. Theſe three men zealous of the good of thoſe realmes told him freely, that in ſo doing he had not prouided for the peace and quiet of the realmes, wherefore he ſhould call backe that article, and name prince Charles gouernour of them, as Lawe and Iuſtice required, ſhewing him the great inconueniences which might happen, if haply the Infant D. Ferdinand, finding himſelfe ſeiſed of ſo great Eſtates, ſhould ſeeke to hold them; ſuch thoughts being eaſie to D breede in the hearts of princes. The king yeelded to this Councell, and reformed his Will in that point, in regard of Caſtille, and that which is incorporated vnto it: As for Arragon and Sicile hee left the gouernement to his baſe ſonne D. Alphonſo archbiſhop of Saragoſſe, and vntil that prince Charles came, he appointed gouernor in his abſence, by the aduice of this Councell, Cardinall Francis Ximenes of Ciſneros, ſaying, that he knew him to be an honeſt man, and wel affected, faſhioned and aduanced by him and by the Q. D. Iſabella; one who had no great aliances, & had alwayes ſhewed himſelfe a faithfull ſeruant. As for the realm of Naples, he confirmed the gouernment with the ſame condition to the viceroy D. Raymond of Cardone, & in Nauar there had bin viceroy D. Frederic d'Acugna, commãder of Montemolin, of the order of S. Iames, brother to the erle of Buendia.

Reformation of king Ferdinands teſtamẽt by the aduice of ſome of his councell.

E Some few dayes before he had obtayned from Pope Leo, a new prouiſion in his owne perſon, of the three maſterſhips of Caſtille, Saint Iames, Calatraua and Alcantara, the which he deſired to reſigne to the Infant D. Ferdinand whom hee loued deerely: but hee was in like manner perſuaded not to doe it, for hee ſhould remember of what importance in former times one of thoſe maſterſhips had bin, in the perſon of a priuat man, to trouble the realme: and therefore hee muſt thinke that if all theſe were ioyned in one, and he of the bloud royall, hee equalling (without doubt) the kings power might cauſe greater alterations: whereupon the king demaunding, What then ſhall the Infant do remayning ſo poore? It is, anſwered his Councellours, the beſt and goodlieſt inheri- F tance that you can leaue him: for finding himſelfe poore, it wil giue him occaſion to ſeek the loue of prince Charles his brother, who will aduaunce him. Theſe things pleaſed the king, who gaue vnto the Infant D. Ferdinand 50000 ducats of yerely rent vpon Brindes, Tarentum, and other places in Apulia in the realme of Naples, by the aduice of the ſame councellors Out of the reuenues of the realm of Sicile, he left vnto his wife Q. Germaine, Infant D. Ferdinand ill appointed.

1516 thirtie thouſand florins of gold of yearely rent, the which was afterwards aſſigned in Caſtille, vpon the townes of Arcualo, Madrigal and Olmedo: hee left moreouer vnto her tenne thouſand ducats in the realme of Naples. Theſe Ordinaunces in forme of a teſtament were written by the hand of one of the aboue named Councellours, reuoking that which hee had made at Burgos; all beeing done in great ſecret, to the end that nothing might come to the knowledge of the Infant D. Ferdinand, who was then at Guadalupe, nor of his Gouernours and Miniſters, who did hope to mannage the realme after the Kings deceaſe. The will beeing written out faire, it was receiued by the Prothonotarie Clement of Velaſco. The Queene D. Germaine hauing notice of the extremitie of the Kings infirmitie at Calataiub, whereas the eſtates of Arragon were held, ſhee came with all ſpeed to Madrigalejo, and was at his death, which was on the three and twentieth of Ianuary one thouſand fiue hundred and ſixteene, being three ſcore and three yeares old, and hauing raigned one and forty yeeres, one moneth, and nine dayes, comprehending the time that king D. Philip of Auſtria raigned. The Kings Councell and the Noblemen beeing aſſembled, they reſolued to ſend to the embaſſadour Adrian, who attended the king at Guadalupe: wherefore Doctor Caruajal and the Licenciat Vargas were ſent vnto him, who brought him to Madrigalejo, where in his preſence the kings will was opened and read, whereof they gaue a copie to the embaſſador, at his requeſt. Afterwards by the aduice of them all, D. Bernard of Rojas, marqueſſe of Denia, and the licenciate Ronquillo Alcaideor prouoſt of the Court, did accompanie the Kings bodie to Granado, and the other Noblemen went to Infant D. Ferdinand at Guadalupe, where the funerall was made with royall pompe and ceremonies. The body paſſing by the citie of Cordoua, there ioyned with it D. Martin of Angulo biſhoppe of that citie, the marqueſſe of Priego, the earle of Cabra, with other Lords and Knights which did accompany it vnto Granado, where with the ſtate woorthy of ſuch a prince, hee was interred in the chappell of Kings, by Queene Iſabell his wife, whoſe bodie had beene left in the Alhambre of that citie.

Death of king Ferdinand king of Arragon.

Indies.

A little before the kings death, Iohn Dyas de Solis of Lebrixa, chiefe Pilot to the king, parted from the port of Lepe, with three ſhippes armed, to goe and diſcouer countries in the new world, vnder the equinoctial, where hee had already beene, and found out the great riuer of Panaraguaſa, which hee had named the riuer of Plata, or of Siluer, where beeing arriued and entred, hee landed with fiftie Spaniards, thinking to finde all things quiet, as hee had at the other time: but hee found himſelfe ſurprized, and charged by a multitude of Indians, who ſlew him and all them that had landed with him, and eate them: the reſt which kept the ſhippes being terrified, weighed anchor, and returned into Spaine, laden with breſill, and white anſine, which they vſe for dying.

Spaniards ſlain in the riuer of Plata by the Indians.

Portugall.

15 D. Manuel king of Portugall had alwayes continued his nauigations, and diſcoueries at the Eaſt with good ſucceſſe and profit, and imitating the example of the king of Caſtille, hee preſt the African Moores his neighbors vpon the weſterne ſhoare, from whom hee tooke the towne of Zaſin, by the meanes of Nugno Fernandes of Ataide, who was the firſt Gouernour, and afterwards hauing ſent Iames Duke of Bragance his nephew, with two thouſand horſe, and fifteene thouſand foote, who landing at Marzagan, did aſſaile and take the towne of Azamon, beeing abandoned by the Moores: and ſoone after Almedina yeelded, with other places of that territorie: in which expeditions the Duke of Bragance purchaſed ſo great fame, as at this day the name of Bragance is a terror to the Moores. To ſupply the charges of this war & conqueſts, the King D. Manuel hauing emptied his cofers, he obtained from Pope Leo, by his embaſſadours Triſtan of Acugna, and doctor Diego Pacheco, aid and ſubuention, out of the reuenews of the Clergie of his country: whereunto the Pope did the more willingly yeeld, hauing heard the great exploits which he had done, and the diſcoueries which hee had made; to whom the embaſſadours preſented in the name of the King their maſter a great elephant, a lioneſſe, and a biſhops mitre or tyare garniſhed with perles and precious ſtones, the richeſt that euer had beene ſeene at Rome. The Pope therefore to incorage and giue

Exploits of king Manuell in Afrike.

Bragance a terrour to the Moores.

meanes

A meanes vnto King Manuel to proceede in so commendable an action, hee graunted him the third part of the reuenewes and fruites of Spirituall Liuings, and moreouer to haue a Croisado preached, wherein the Kings deputies behaued themselues so insolently and couetously, as all men had occasion to complaine: whereupon the conuerts and new Christians tooke occasion to fall into many errors and peruerse opinions, touching our Religion. These things past about the yeeres one thousand fiue hundred and twelue, one thousand fiue hundred and thirteene, and one thousand fiue hundred and foureteene. The yeere one thousand fiue hundred and fifteene being come, the king vndertooke to build the fort of Mandora in Afrike; but his prouisions and men were all dispersed and lost there, by the incursions of the Moores, so as few, and those verie poore, B returned into Portugall. This vnfortunate successe was imputed to the exactions which the kings Officers vsed vpon the clergie: being an opinion alreadie setled in the hearts of men: that those princes which touch the treasures of the Church, prosper not. 1516

Third part of spirituall liuings graunted to the king of Portugall in his countrey.

Opinion fauourable for the Clergie.

This yeare Queene Mary was deliuered in the city of Lisbone, of the Infant D. Edward future husband to D. Isabella daughter to D. Iohn duke of Bragance, from whom issued D. Edward, and D. Catherina duchesse of Bragance, wife in our dayes to the duke D. Iohn second sonne to duke Theodosius, and grandchilde to the first D. Iohn. Of D. Edward of Portugall, and D. Isabella, was also borne D. Maria, who was married to the prince of Parma, sonne to Octauio Farnese, and to Marguerite of Austria, base daughter to the emperour Charles. Soone after the death of D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, the king D. C Manuel was full of care, for the insolent behauiour of two of his vassalls, who fought to disquiet him in his nauigations and voyages to the Indies. These were Ferdinand of Magellanes and Ruy Fallero, who for some discontentment retired themselues into Castille, whereas the cardinall D. Francis Ximenes archbishoppe of Toledo gouerned, offering to discouer a short course or way, to go to the rich Ilands of the Moluques, whence the spices came, more profitable and commodious then that of Calicut and China. Magellanes gaue D. Iohn Rodrigues of Fonseca president of the royall councell of the Indies, and other councellors to vnderstand, that they might find a better and more short cut to goe to the Moluques by the coast of Brefill and the riuer of Plata, then by the cape of Bonne Esperance: and moreouer they told them, that the great Iland of Zamatra, and Malaca, were D comprehended in the streit and line of the nauigation of Castile: they did maintaine that the Ilands of the Moluques were not farre from Panama, and the gulph of saint Michael, and that in all those countries and regions they found aboundance of gold, pearles, pretious stones, spices and drugges: and to make these councellors more desirous, they told them many other wonders of vnknowne lands, which they offered to discouer. Magellanes saying, that he had a relation of Lewis of Vertheman of Bolonia, who had beene at Badan, Bornay, Bachian, Tidore, and other countries of spices, which are vnder the Equinoctiall, shewing many letters written from his friends to the Indians: And moreouer, hee had a slaue of the Iland of Zamatra, who vnderstood many languages of that Countrey, and an other slaue recouered in Malaca. By these reasons and persuasions, he induE ced them of the councell; and the Regent D. Francis Ximenes gaue good hope to Magellanes, to obtaine ships and meanes to make this voyage, at the comming of the prince D. Charles, who would not stay long before he parted from Flaunders, to come and take possession of his realmes of Castille and Arragon. The king D. Manuell made many complaints against these fugitiue subiects, by his Ambassadors, to the councell of Castille, and they against him, and the voyage was performed as wee will shew. About the spring one thousand fiue hundred and seuenteene, Queene Marie second wife to the king D. Manuell, died at Lisbone, lying in child-bed of the Infant D. Anthonio, who liued not long after his mother, which caused great heauinesse in the king: Shee lies in the monasterie F of the mother of God. Shee was then fiue and thirtie yeares old, and the king nine and fortie, who beleeuing what the prelates and clergie men of his realme had often preached vnto him, that his crosses and aduersities came for that he tooke the reuenews of the church, and imployed them for the affaires of his realme, he caused the collections & contributions to cease, promising to pay vnto the clergie 150000 ducats in 3 yeeres, at 3 payments. This king tooke to his third wife D. Leonor sister to prince Charles of Austria

Genealogie of Portugall.

Magellanes and Fallero Portugalls serue in Castile.

Death of Marie Queene of Portugall.

King conscientious.

1516 Infanta of Caſtille, neece to the two former queenes, being then 19. yeeres old, and the king 50. She was conducted into Portugall by Caſtilhide, in the yere 1518. a little before the arriuall of King Charles in Spaine: the marriage was celebrated at Crato, with great pompe and ſtate: of which marriage were borne the infants D. Charles, and D. Marie. G

D. Ioane Queene of Caſtille, Arragon, Nauarre, Naples, Sicile, Sardinia &c. for whoſe incapacitie, the reigne of D. Charles her ſonne beganne, being the firſt of that name, and the two and twentieth king of Caſtille.

Caſtille. 16 AFter the deceaſe of King Ferdinand, Queene Ioane his daughter ſucceeded in all his realmes, lands, and ſeigniories. Charles archduke of Auſtria, and erle of Flanders her eldeſt ſonne, who ſhould inherite all thoſe great eſtates after her, was then in Flaunders: for whoſe abſence, and for the Queenes incapacitie, Cardinall Francis Ximenes of Ciſneros, according to the teſtament of the deceaſed King, tooke vpon him the gouernement of Caſtille, with the conſent of all the Councell and Nobilitie of the realme: notwithſtanding that the gouernours and miniſters of the infant D. Ferdinand, would, by vertue of the firſt teſtament made at Burgos, haue him intrude himſelfe into the gouernment of affaires, as regent. He hauing written to them of the councel to come vnto him to Guadalupe, and vſing too high titles in his letters, one of the councell, ſaid freely vnto him that preſented the Infantaes letters, Tell him that wee will be ſhortly at Guadalupe, where knowing well our dueties, we will doe him the honour and reuerence that belongs vnto him, & that we haue no other king but Ceſar, The prince Charles was not yet choſen emperor: but that word was taken as a preſage of his future election. The firſt care of cardinall Ximenes, was to make an agreement with doctor Adrian, who had brought letters and authoritie from prince Charles, by the which he declared him his lieutenant, in caſe that the king D. Ferdinand ſhould die, during his legation in Spaine. The accord was thus made, that vntill they had other newes from prince Charles, they ſhould ioyntly ſigne all diſpatches. After which they were to pacifie a trouble that was of no ſmall conſequence; for D. Pedro Portocarrero, called the Deafe, brother to the duke of Eſcalona, the ſtemme of the Marqueſſe of Villeneuue at this day, had obtained after the deceaſe of the great captaine, who aſpired to the maſterſhip of S. Ieams, bulls and prouiſion from the pope, of that maſterſhip, & did ſollicite the commanders of the Order, to aſſemble togither to receiue him: but prince Charles during his grandfathers life, had alſo obtained a later prouiſion, by the means of D. Bernardin of Caruajal, of all theſe three maſterſhips, in his perſon, and it is moſt certaine that king Ferdinand was not priuie to it, ſeeing that he would haue giuen them to the infant D. Ferdinand. The cardinall being aduertiſed of theſe things, he ſent (with the aduiſe of doctor Adrian, and the Councel) Villafanna, one of the Alcaides of the court with letters & force, to ſuppreſſe Portocarrero, and to ſtay this aſſembly of the commaunders; whereunto they obeyed, euen Portocarrero himſelfe, who deſiſted from his enterpriſe. This Cardinall had a watchfull eie vpon the actions of the Infant D. Ferdinand, and of thoſe which did gouerne him, being alwayes neere vnto his perſon, for he feared leſt the noblemen of Caſtille, who deſired ſome alteration in the State, would corrupt him, and make vſe of his name. He prouided in ſuch ſort for queene Germaine in this beginning (to whom all things were difficule) that ſhee might not want money for the entertainement of her houſe and royall dignitie. The place of reſidence for the councel was choſen at Madrid, for that it was commodious for the cardinal, being not farre from his archbiſhopricke of Toledo, from whence they ſent Peter of Campreal, & Rengifo of Auila, to carrie newes vnto prince Charles of the death of the king his grandfather, and of all that paſt ſince. The prince was then at Gand, where he had bin borne & bred vp, and his brother D. Ferdinand in Spaine, the one inſtructed in the maners & faſhions of the Flemings, the other in thoſe of Spaine; which made the Spaniards to cheriſh the yonger more, and did much trouble the Cardinall Ximenes. The chiefe men which at that time did gouern the perſon of prince Charles, & his affairs, were Iohn Sauage preſident of Cardinall Ximenes gouernor of Caſtille.

Accord for the gouernement of Spaine.

Contention for the maſterſhip of S. Ieams.

Prouidence of Cardinall Ximenes for the peace of Spaine.

H I K L M

A of Bourgondie, and afterwards Chauncellour, the Lord of Cheures, and Laxaus, Chamberlaines, Laurence Gorrebot great maſter, and Charles of Lannoy Maſter of the Horſe. Hee had a Phiſition of Milan, called Peter Marlian, a learned man and of great experience, who was the inuentor of that Mott Plus vltra, the which prince Charles vſed betwixt Hercules pillers, hee was afterwards biſhop of Tuy, but againſt the will of cardinall Ximenes. The lord of Cheures was of greateſt authority about the prince, hauing bred him vp: hee was ſo hated of King Ferdinand as a little before his death, in a certaine treaty made with doctour Adrian, hee would haue it expreſly reſerued that Cheures ſhould be chaſed away, the which did much diſcontent him, who for that cauſe conceiued a great hatred againſt doctor Adrian, but hee was forced to yeeld that to the B King, that hee might winne his loue to prince Charles, for hee ſawe his intent was to debaſe him, to aduaunce the Infant D. Ferdinand, if hee could. Of Spaniards D. Iohn Manuel was in ſome credite in the court of Flaunders, a flatterer and breeder of debate betwixt King Ferdinand and Philip of Auſtria his ſonne in lawe, for the which hee was put in priſon by the lady Marguerite gouerneſſe of Flaunders: but after the kings death hee was preſently ſet at libertie by prince Charles. D. Antonio of Eſtuniga brother to the duke of Bejar was alſo honoured in that Court, D. Pedro Portocarrero ſonne to him that was deafe, of whom wee haue ſpoken, D. Lewis of Cordoua, D. Alphonſo Manriques, the biſhop of Badajos, and Pedro Mota archbiſhoppe of Seuile, a famous preacher, and Secretary to the prince. Such was the eſtate of his Court, when hee re- C ceiued newes of the death of the king his grandfather, for the which hee ſhewed a griefe befitting nature, and the neereneſſe of bloud that was betwixt them: hee commended him for the election which hee had made of the cardinall Francis Ximenes, and did write vnto the Infant his brother, to the widow Queene, and to the councell, giuing them hope that hee would bee ſoone in Spaine. In his firſt letters to the Gouernours and the Councell hee did intitle himſelfe Prince: but ſome of the Councell of Flanders, ſeeing Queene Ioane weake of her ſences, and to bee but a vaine maske of royall dignitie, they were of opinion that hee ſhould take the title of King, the which hee did, for that ſaid hee, it was conformable to the cuſtome of the princes of Flaunders and Germanie, and that it was the aduice of the Emperour Maximilian, and of Pope Leo; the D which was not well liked of in Spaine: notwithſtanding ſeeing hee had once taken it, it would haue beene diſhonourable to haue left it, and therefore hee continued this title, the cardinall Ximenes cauſing the reſt to allow of it: and thereupon they did aduaunce the Standard and Armes of the new King Charles, in the towne of Madrid. The Arragonois (ſtrict defenders of their Lawes) would neuer allow of this title of King, during the life of Queene Ioane: of whom D. Alphonſo of Arragon, archbiſhoppe of Saragoſſe was gouernor.

1516

Cheures gouernour to prince Charles.

Title of King allowed in Caſtille to prince Charles during his mothers life, but not in Arragon.

18 Whileſt theſe things were done at Madrid by cardinall Ximenes, there grew new tumults, the which did firſt diſquiet Andaluſia, and afterwards all the Prouinces of Spaine. The chiefe of this tumult was D. Pedro Giron, eldeſt ſonne to the earle of Vre- E gna, who entred the countrey of the duke of Medina Sidonia with forces, and beſieged Luzero a ſea towne, with an intent to ſeaze vpon the whole Duchie, if hee could. And this was the cauſe of his enterpriſe: D. Iohn of Guzman duke of Medina Sidonia married two ſiſters ſucceſſiuely, one after an other, daughters to the Duke of Bejar; by the firſt hee had two children, D. Henrie, and D. Mentia; and by the ſecond one ſonne called D. Aluaro: D. Mentia was married to D. Pedro Giron: D. Henrie was vnapt for generation, and dyed without children: D. Aluaro borne of the ſecond venter, married, as we haue ſaid, with D. Anne of Arragon, daughter to D. Alphonſo of Arragon: which marriage was made by the King D. Ferdinand, in hope that D. Al- F uaro ſhould ſucceede in all the ſeigniories of Duke Iohn his father: who beeing dead, hee was put in poſſeſſion of the Duchie of Medina Sidonia, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of D. Pedro Giron, who ſaied, that D. Aluaro was a baſtard, borne in inceſt, not beeing tollerable neyther by Diuine nor Humane Lawes to marrie two ſiſters: and if Popes had at anie time ſuffered it, it was for ſome great good and benefite to the Common weale, which had no ſuch conſideration in the fact of Quarrell betwixt Pedro Giron, and the duke of Medina Sidonia.

1516 the deceaſed duke D. Iohn: but for all his reaſons D. Aluaro enioyed the poſſeſſion, bee- G ing fauoured and ſupported by king Ferdinand whileſt hee liued, but being dead D. Pe- dro Giron thought, that prince Charles beeing abſent, and the gouernement in the hands of a monke. Hauing therefore gathered together a good troupe of licentious fellowes hee went to field, and firſt attempted the towne of Luzero, but D. Pedro of Arras had preuented him, and put himſelfe into the place, to defend it; beſides, the caſtle was held in the kings name, with a garriſon, by D. Gomes de Solis, as it is the manner of Spaine in polices vpon the ſea, although they belong to priuate Lords. So as D. Pedros attempt was vaine. In the meane time cardinall Ximenes being aduertiſed of this tumult, hee had meanes to prouide for it, commaunding (by the aduice of the Councell) the inhabitants of Seuile and Cordoua, to aſſiſt the duke of Medina, Sidonia, and captaine H Solis with forces. Then D. Anthony Fonſeca was ſent with certaine enſignes of foot, and with him an Alcade of the court, called Corneille, to diſperſe D. Pedroes troupes, and to puniſh thoſe that ſhould be taken, as troublers of the publike peace, and guiltie of high treaſon: wherewith D. Pedro Giron being terrified, hee retired for that time, but within few dayes after hee incited the Conſtable D. Inigo Fernandes of Velaſco, his vncle by the mothers ſide, who on the other ſide was no good friend to Cardinall Ximenes, drawing many other noblemen to his deſignes and enterpriſes: paſſing by Madrid with a great troupe, hee ſtayed there keeping himſelfe in his lodging, and would not vouchſafe to viſite the Cardinall, who was the kings lieuetenant, but as if hee would braue him, and in a manner threaten him, to incenſe the noblemen of Caſtille againſt him, hee ſent him I word that he was come to viſite his kinſemen and friends: whereunto the Cardinall (who knew well to what end all his courſes tended) made no other anſwer, but that hee ſhould goe on in a good houre, and continue his officious voyage. There were great ſignes of a mutinous and rebellious heart in the anſwer which hee made to ſome of his friends, demaunding of him why hee vndertooke theſe things, without any reſpect or reuerence to Arrogant anſwer of D. Pedro Giron. Cardinall Ximenes, who preſented there the kings perſon: And what thankes, ſaid hee, will the king giue vs, if wee reſpect and honour his lieutenants as much as himſelfe? but he was much miſtaken, for there was no compariſon betwixt his meanes, and of all thoſe of his partie, and the power of Cardinall Ximenes, who beſides the authoritie which he had as regent, was ſo rich, both in reuenues and treaſure which hee had gathered toge- K ther, as hee was well able to entertaine an army, without any helpe of the kings money.
D. Pedro Giron in this frenzie went towards his vncle D. Inigo Fernandes of Velaſco, knowing that he hated the Cardinall, for that hee vnderſtood that hee had propounded to retire all that which priuate noblemen did hold of the reuenues of the crowne, if they did not ſhew good titles, and were grounded vpon lawfull cauſes: and therefore, fearing hee ſhould be depriued of certaine impoſts hee drew from the ſea, hee deſired to ſee the Cardinalls authority abated. There were meanes plotted betwixt the vncle and the nephew, to attaine vnto that which they pretended: and to fortifie themſelues they did write, or went in perſon to all them that they knew to bee anie way diſcontented with Faction againſt the Cardinall Ximenes. Cardinall Ximenes: the duke of Benauent was one, whom they had forbidden to finiſh L a fort which he had begunne to build at Cibales: the duke of Albuquerque, and the erle of Medina Celi, for the affinity which they had with the earle of Vregna, offered themſelues to be ready againſt all perſons that would offend him or his; and they did alſo hold ſome of the kings rents. D. Frederike of Portugall biſhop of Siguenſa, fearing to be de-priued of his biſhoprike, to giue it to doctor Carualal, ioyned with that faction. Aboue all they deſired to draw vnto them the duke of the Infantazgo, the head of the familie of Mendoza, whoſe power and riches they held a ſufficient counterpoize to ouerſway the Cardinall their aduerſary. The duke offered himſelfe freely to be theirs in all enterpriſes, ſo as it were not againſt the ſtate and the gouernment of the realme: for he meant not to Inuective made by the Conſtable againſt the Cardinall. attempt any thing that ſhould contradict the will of the deceaſed king D. Ferdinand, nor M the will of king Charles: wherefore all theſe noblemen went vnto him to Guadalajara, whereas the Conſtable D. Inigo Fernandes of Velaſco, made a long inuectiue againſt the Cardinall, whom he called raſh, inſupportable, an obſcure man, of an vnknowne beginning, an enemy to nobilitie, vnworthy to commaund and goeuerne thoſe realmes, which charge

A charge did belong more rightly to them, then to a monke, who abuſed the authoritie, 1516 to the diſhonour and ſcorne of the nobility. That if they ſaid, hee was appoynted to that degree by the teſtament of the deceaſed king D. Ferdinand, let them remember that they had endured indignities enow in his time, without fearing his vaine comaundements after his death: but let him ſhew his letters of power and authority from king Charles: elſe for his part hee was not reſolued to obey him. The duke of the Infantazgo, the chiefe in this aſſembly, ſeeing euery man moued at the Conſtables words, I haue, ſaid hee, ma- Wiſe ſpeech of the duke of the Infantazgo.
ny occaſions to complaine of cardinall Ximenes, euen in this, that contrarie to his faith and promiſe hee hath hindered the marriage betwixt my nephew and his neece, and that » B now he ſeeks to diminiſh my patrimonie what hee can: but theſe are but priuate wrongs, » for the which I would not cauſe the leaſt alteration in the world, in our kings abſence: and » I will ſay more vnto you, that I haue alwayes knowne this man to be ſo vpright, as the » authoritie, power, nor credite of any man cannot moue him: you ſee what great reue- » nues hee hath, and what lands and countries hee enioyes, whereunto the publique au- » thority is now ioyned: Thinke you that in this action hee will ſhew himſelfe leſſe con- » ſtant and reſolute than hee hath beene? No doubtleſſe, and hee will be very violent to » moue the people againſt vs, of whom wee are already but too much hated: wherefore » my friends, let vs attempt nothing againſt the commonweale, the which wee muſt of » neceſſitie doe, if wee vndertake anie thing againſt cardinall Ximenes: let vs finde out »
C ſome other meanes to maintayne our dignities, which may be allowed of all men, and » then eſteeme mee vnworthy the ranke which I hold, and the houſe from whence I am » deſcended, if I be not the firſt to maintayne the honour of nobilitie, againſt the inſo- » lencie of this man, and I will imploy all my forces and meanes, for the defence of you » my kinſemen and alies. When the duke of the Infantazgo had thus ſpoken, the aſſiſtants » conſidering the weight of his reaſons, were much cooled: wherefore it was concluded, that they ſhould ſend vnto king Charles, D. Aluaro Gomez, the dukes ſonne in law, a wiſe and an eloquent man, who in the name of theſe Lords, ſhould beſeech him to take from cardinall Ximenes the authority and gouernement of the realmes, for the cauſes which they gaue him by ample inſtructions. This done, the duke of the Infantazgo feaſted the D whole aſſembly for certayne dayes with great ſports and ſtate; of all which the cardinall was particularly aduertiſed, by his friends and ſpies, but not regarding it much, for hee was priuie to their meanes and faculties, calling this nobilitie but ſhadowes and ſcarre-crowes, who liued in continuall delight, and ſuperfluous expences wherewith they Nobilitie that ſpends much, cannot maintaine an enterpriſe.
were ſo conſumed and indebted, as moſt commonly they had nothing left them to main-tayne their raſh enterpriſes, but their tongues, and a vaine pride without any power: Notwithſtanding, foraſmuch as theſe conuenticles and priuate aſſemblies could not but breed troubles in the ſtate, hee did aduertiſe them by graue men to deſiſt for their owne good, from ſuch practiſes and enterpriſes, the which hee would haue them know hee had meanes to reſiſt, and to make them vaine, without imploying the kings treaſure, E but with his owne eſtate; yea, were there queſtion to put an army to field, whereby they ſhould ſoone finde their owne weakeneſſe: wherefore hee did admoniſh them, that ſee-ing they muſt of force be the kings ſubiects, and obey his lawes, not to put themſelues in daunger. Hereby this ſtirre ceaſed without any further bruite, and the aſſembly of Guadalajara was diſperſed: ſo as many of them which had beene there, did ſoone after practiſe by all meanes to inſinuate into the cardinalles fauour, namely the duke of the In- fantazgo and the Conſtable. This wiſe and induſtrious man, knowing what croſſes hee Wiſedome of Cardinall Ximenes to maintaine his authoritie.
might haue daily in the gouernement of ſo great affaires, amongeſt a nobility which did both hate and enuy him, hee knew well how to prouide for his dignity, the ſafety of his perſon, and the peace of Spaine. He had D. Diego Lopes of Ayala a moſt faithfull ſollici-F tor of his affaires in the court of king Charles, by whoſe ſollicitation and diligence, hee deſired letters patents with full and royall authority in all things, and that namely hee ſhould haue free liberty in matters of ſtate to doe that which he ſhould thinke profitable for the ſafety of the kingdomes: the like authority ouer Iuſtice, to eſtabliſh, alter and depoſe, as hee ſhould thinke fit, and in like manner ouer the treaſure, for hee was not contented with the authoritie which was giuen him by the teſtament of the deceaſed

King

1516 King D. Ferdinand confirmed, by priuate letters and meſſages from the king, if hee had G not letters drawne in forme of a publique Decree, and the reſoulution of the princes Councell: Notwithſtanding, without attending them, hee put one thing in execution which had beene formerly proiected, and attempted by the deceaſed King D. Ferdinand, the execution whereof had beene hindered by the Kings infirmitie and death: That is, he ordayned for the defence of the realme in generall, as well againſt foreine enemies, as home-bred mutines, legions and bands of ordinarie ſouldiers, taken out of the citizens and burgeſſes of the good townes of Spaine, men of good fame, dwellers, and hauing as they ſay, fire and family, remembring that hee had heard the deceaſed King diſcourſe, That an army of ſuch men was more profitable, and of greater effect in any kinde, than that which was leuied of vagabond people, and ill liuers, whereof moſt companies that H are extraordinarily raiſed doe conſiſt, who haue no courage but to ſpoile, and are more hurtfull to friends then enemies; whereas the other louing their honour, their goods, wiues and children, are animated to fight more couragiouſly againſt an enemy, for their defence, and fearing the Lawes, for that they haue ſomething to looſe, they abſtaine from doing wrong vnto their friends: beſides, it is a ready force, and is ſodainely aſſembled, which keepes them in awe that would ſeeke to inuade and ſpoyle the realme, or moue ſeditions and tumults. This ordinance hauing beene concluded in the Councell at Madrid, contayned, That ſuch as ſhould bee fit to beare armes, ſhould giue in their names, and be inrolled by certaine Commiſſaries deputed, and that they ſhould enioy many exemptions of taxes, ſubſidies, lodgings and other charges accuſtomed to bee I impoſed, and leuied vpon the people, to whom ſhould be giuen captaines, officers, trumpets, drummes and fifes, payed with the kings money: They ſhould arme and be readie when they ſhould be commaunded, and ſhould come euery Sunday to be muſtered before the people. This Edict being proclaimed throughout the townes of Caſtille, was receiued and found good, with great ioy and contentment: ſo as in an inſtant there were aboue thirtie thouſand men inrolled, euery one thinking it was an eaſie way to attaine vnto a degree of gentrie: and in trueth they could not haue deſired a thing more profitable and more delightfull: for the youth which is corrupted through idleneſſe, and giuen to vice and damnable pleaſures; by this meanes they gaue themſelues to manage armes, to ride horſes, to leape, runne, ſwimme and other ſuch exerciſes, as were in- K ioyned them, and giuen them in diſcipline by old experimented captaynes, and it was a pleaſing ſight to behold their troupes well armed to march in good order. For the which cardinall Ximenes did purchaſe the reputation of a wiſe and prudent Gouernor, yea with foreine kings and princes, thinking, as it is true, that there is no force like vnto it, when it is moderated with good iuſtice, eſpecially in the beginning, by meanes whereof, we reade that great and populous nations haue been eaſily vanquiſhed by ſmall potentates. The ſeditious and men deſirous of innouations in Spaine, were ſo ſcandalized at this Edict, as there was nothing to be generally heard but murmuring, and ill words of the cardinall Ximenes: Whereto tend theſe militarie troupes? What new ſhew of armes doth this Cardinall bring vs? Did hee thinke that Spaine was too quiet? Did hee L enuy our peace? There needed nothing elſe in the kings abſence, but to arme the multitude, to make him more inſolent, and to authorize him to ruine the nobilitie: Let this wilfull man (who likes of no councell but his owne) be well aduiſed what hee doeth, and of what conſequence it is to put armes and force in the hands of a raſcall multitude, in ſo proud a nation, whereof hee will ſee ſo many troubles and miſeries to grow, as it will be impoſſible for him to preuent them. Moreouer they ſaid, that it was the very meanes to make good townes deſart and vnpeopled, and to draw away their Artizans and men of trade, who leauing their ſhoppes, would haue no care but to be gallants, and to walke like gentlemen, abandoning themſelues to all inſolencies and exceſſe, whereby it would M happen that townes vnfurniſhed of things neceſſarie for the life of man, ſhould by little and little be reduced to want and pouerty, which they could not in long time recouer, notwithſtanding any diligence whatſoeuer. By theſe and ſuch like ſpeeches, the inhabitants of Leon, Burgos, Salamanca, Medina del Campo, Arenalo, Madrigal, Olmedo, and in a manner all the townes that were beyond the mountaines, beganne to oppoſe againſt Legionary ſouldiers inſtituted by cardinall Ximenes.

Men that haue families fitter to make ſouldiers to defend a realme then vagabonds.

Murmuring of the Spaniards againſt the cardinall for the militarie order.

A gainſt the Edict, ſo as it could not bee put in execution in their iuriſdiction : but that which moſt contradicted the Cardinalls commaundement was the towne of Vailledolit, whereas the Commiſſaries that were ſent to make the enrollments, were outraged and put in priſon : and as one fault drawes on another, they tooke armes, and put themſelues in defence againſt Cardinall Ximenes, as againſt an enemie, ſhaking off the yoake of his commaundement, and reſiſting him as an oppreſſour of their libertie, and an inuentour and bringer in by force and violence, new and vnaccuſtomed things; whereof the cardinall was preſently aduertiſed, by ſuch as were of his partie in that towne, and for that cauſe ſuffered many indignities. The cauſe of theſe diſorders and rebellions was the bad intelligence which was betwixt the cardinal and D. Antonie of Rojas biſhop of Granado, B the chiefe of the roiall councell, and ſome other councellors, who did hate and enuy him, and did ſecretly giue it out, that thoſe ordinances were not allowed by the Councell, but meere inuentions proceeding onely from the Cardinalles braine : whoſe teſtimonie, as men which held a ranke in the affaires of the realme, was of great weight among the people, and was a great argument of the miſeries which diuiſion of Councellors brings vnto a State : whereunto we muſt adde the practiſes of the great men of that countrey, accuſtomed to play the Kings, the meanes whereof were taken away by this ordinance, to their great griefe. They that did moſt animate the inhabitants of Vailledolit to rebellion, were the admirall of Caſtille, and the biſhoppe of Aſturia : for the admirall hauing great C authoritie, and hereditary rights in the gouernement of the towne, deſcending from the Henriques his predeceſſors, although hee were a very deere friend to the Cardinall, yet when hee heard at Madrid, that they would put this Edict in practiſe at Vailledolit, hee ſaid openly that he would neuer ſuffer it : and making more eſteeme of his owne priuate intereſt, then of the Cardinalls friendſhip, he went to Vailledolit, where calling his brethren, kinſfolks and friends together, he procured euery one, by his credit to oppoſe himſelfe. The biſhop who had been Scholemaſter and Gouernor to the infant D. Ferdinand, ſeeing that by the Cardinalles diligence and care hee could not get any thing, hee grew diſcontented, and poured oyle into this fire, which ran through the cities of Burgos, Leon and others : wherewith Cardinall Ximenes was much troubled : for although that hee D had all the country on this ſide the mountaines, namely Andaluſia, Toledo, Murcia, and alſo beyond them the cities of Zamora, Toro, Auila and others that were obedient, yet hee thought it a hard matter to vſe force, doubting that the contumacie of them of Vailledolit and Burgos would keepe the reſt from perſeuering : wherefore hee proceeded againſt theſe froward people with all the mildneſſe hee could, admoniſhing them, that if they had any ancient priuiledges which did exempt them from ſuch charges, they ſhould produce them, and they ſhould haue iuſtice done them : but they beeing ſupported by the fauour of great men their neighbours, did not reſpect the Cardinalls friendlie admonition, but made anſwer, that whileſt they had breath and life, they would defend their liberties againſt his manifeſt tyrannie, vntill that their king D. Charles ſhould come into E Spaine. Theſe differences continued the following yeere : for the Cardinall would not proceed rigorouſly in this buſineſſe vntill that he had newes from the King, whom he did aduertiſe particularly of that which hee had done, and of the cauſes which had moued him to make theſe legionaries : ſoliciting D. Diego Lopes of Ajala his Agent in Court, that he ſhould purſue the letters patents, and the authority which he deſired to be confirmed vnto him : elſe it was neceſſary for his honour to giue ouer that charge, by reaſon of the great difficulties and oppoſitions which hee found. And for that hee knew that the rebells had ſent vnto the king, and to Monſieur de Chevres, meſſages, which did fill their eares with many ſlaunders, accuſing thoſe legions and companies ordayned by him, of infinit concuſſions and ſpoyles, and ſhewing that there was no charge more inF ſupportable nor leſſe neceſſary then that, he ſent him inſtructions to ſhew the contrarie, and that it was the onely meanes that kings his predeceſſors had obſerued to be obeyed, euer ſince the Gothes, vnto king Henry the fourth, who had alwayes a great gard of horſemen entertayned, the which after he had caſhiered, by the perſuaſion of ſome, or through negligence and indiſcretion, he found himſelfe afterwards ingaged in thoſe troubles and miſeries that hiſtories ſpeake of. Wherefore ſeeing that time and occaſion required the like

1516

Sedition of Vailledolit againſt Ximenes.

Diuiſion among Councellors in a State is dangerous.

Lets of the Cardinalls military Edict.

1516 like remedy, to force many great men to the obseruation of the Lawes, hee had reui- G ued this most necessary remedie, with the which hee meant to preserue him the realme of his predecessors, without any charge vnto his coffers. For this cause hee besought the king not to giue eare vnto the slaunderous reports of his ill willers, who desired nothing but troubles, seeing hee had had so great proofes of his loyalty and affection: and that it would please him to write sharpe letters to the townes that would not obey him, that they might bee drawne to their dueties, a contempt or rebellion being of great importance, the which can not be light, no not in light matters: And for that since the warre of Granado Spaine was much vnfurnished of armes, that it was necessarie to send out of Flaunders, and the neighbour countries, great store of corslets, harque-Acts of Cardinall Ximenes approoued by the King. buzes, pikes and other armes: the which was faithfully sollicited by Diego Lopes, and H fauourably graunted by the King; so as at the comming of those Letters into Spaine, the inhabitants of Vailledolit and others, seeing that the Cardinalles councell was allowed by the prince, submitted themselues, and gaue ouer their factions. There were foure Sindics of the people appointed at Vailledolit, who should assist at the Councell, and might oppose against all decrees and resolutions which should bee made to the pre-iudice of the King, or commonweale, and if they would proceede, then to aduertise Rebellions pacified in Castille. the King. This was thought verie fit and necessarie by the Vailledolitanes, the chiefe whereof were too much obliged to the Admirall and Earle of Benauent. Thus ended the rebellion of those townes against the Cardinall, who by meanes of these prouisions maintained himselfe in his charge and authoritie. These militarie Orders haue been I in our time practised by King Philip the second, hauing appoynted bands and captaines, and graunted immunities to the souldiers throughout all his townes. And for that the Cardinall had prouided in vaine for all inconueniences which might happen at land, if he should not in like maner assure the realme towards the Sea, he added to the old gallies which hee found in Spaine, twentie new, which were built and rigged at the Defeat of Turks at sea by the Spanish gallies. charge of the people, dwelling vpon the Sea coast, vnder colour to defend them from the incursions and surprizes of the Moores, Turkes and pyrates: the which prooued honourable for him, for soone after that they were readie, the Spanish armie tooke six Turkish gallies with the slaughter of aboue six hundred Turks, and brought them to Alicant. This Cardinall forgetting nothing that might serue for the publique good, K hee repaired the forts and publique monuments which went to ruine, amongst which was the Atarazana, or Arcenal of Seuile. His care and diligence extended to the I-Orders for the Indies. lands and West Indies, where, by his pietie and wisedome, the Ilanders beganne to taste some libertie. At that time there was resident in Madrid, D. Diego Colombus Ad-mirall of the Indies, who had beene called home into Spaine by the deceased King D.
Ferdinand, by reason of some quarrelles betwixt him and some that had charge at the Indies, and for many complaints and accusations framed against him by his enemies.
After the kings decease hee did sollicite Cardinall Ximenes the Regent to take knowledge of his affaires, and to suffer him to execute his charge: wherefore hee thought it fitte to send some good and learned men to be informed of these quarrells at the Indies, L and to that end hee made choise of two friers, of the Order of Saint Ieroſme, the one was Lewis of Figuero prior of the monasterie of Mejorada of Olmedo, and the other Cardinall Ximenes causeth information to be taken at the Indies of the Spaniards. Alphonso of Saint Iohn prior of Ortega of Burgos, to whom hee ioyned Bernardin Manzanedo, and gaue them charge to passe into the Iland of Saint Dominicke or Hispaniola, and there to take an exact information of the insolencies and abuses of euerie man, and especially of the quarrells betwixt the Admirall and the Spaniards, and to inquire of all things that were profitable or necessary for the publique gouernement, and especially for the quiet and good vsage of the naturall Indians, who at that time were oppressed with cruell seruitude, recommending especially vnto them the instruction of those M people in religion. Afterwards hee appoynted that Alphonso Suares should follow them for President of the Iustice, a man learned in the Lawes, and vertuous. The friers being come into the Iland, beganne to execute their charge very diligently, and with discretion, and did order many things, whereof this is memorable. King Ferdinand deceased, had distributed the Ilanders and Indians to certaine captaines, and other Spaniards,

A ards, who had employed themſelues in theſe diſcoueries and conqueſts, to haue the care and defence of them, as Lordes of their vaſſalls and ſubiects, and for this reaſon were called Commandataires, for that theſe poore Indians were recommended vnto them: many of theſe hauing left the Indies, were returned into Spaine; and there remayned: from whome the Fathers (diſannulling the king D. Fernamands Edict) tooke their vaſſalles and ſubiects, ſaying, that it was not reaſonable the abſent liuing in idleneſſe and delights, ſhould enioy the fruites due to their vertue, who ſayling ouer the ſpacious Ocean with ſo great daunger, did ſweate continually vnder their armes to extend the Empire of the Crowne of Spaine, and religion: wherefore the Ilanders were diuided by them to the olde inhabitants reſiding at the Indies, according to euerie B mans merite and dignitie. Then they thought that theſe miſerable Indians were ſlaues by the Lawes of armes; by reaſon whereof their maſters did intreate them cruelly, cauſing them to draw and to carrie burthens like horſes or aſſes, the which ſeemed verie inhumane to theſe fathers, and ſtrange from all Chriſtian pietie: wherefore ſomewhat to moderate that which they could not altogether helpe: they ordayned that this people liuing then in the fieldes and deſart places, of whom they made no more accompt then of beaſts, ſhould bee drawne into townes and villages, and liue vnder ſome forme of policie and municipall Lawe, taking from their maſters this great authoritie and power which they pretended of life and death, letting them know, that they C ſhould vſe them as vaſſalls, and not abuſe them as ſlaues. 1516

Thus the Fathers thought to prouide for the libertie of this people, againſt the tyrannie of the ſouldiers: where they found great difficulties and debates, the which is vſually ſeene when they ſeeke to aboliſh any peruerſe cuſtome; ſo as their holy diligence did afterwards cauſe a very bad effect, through the wickedneſſe of the Spaniards, who ſeeing the ſame order obſerued by the fathers in other Ilands, and places of thoſe regions, whereas the like diuiſions and diſtributions had beene aſſigned, as well by the Admirall Colombus and others, thinking that hereafter there would come others, ſo as in the end the Indians ſhould be ſet at full libertie, whereat the Spaniards were ſo mad, as ſurcharging their ſubiects and vaſſalls with inſupportable trauel they made them ſhrinke Cruelty of the Spaniards to the Indians. D vnder their burthens, and die. They ſaie, that by the induſtrie of theſe friers, the art of drawing and refining of ſugar was much bettered and augmented, and therefore they were much honoured in Spaine, as the authors and inuentors of many profitable things.

It happened at that time, that ſome without the priuitie of Cardinall Ximenes, had gotten leaue of King Charles in Flaunders, to carrie foure hundred Ethiopian Moores to the Ilands, ſuch as the Portugalles were accuſtomed to bring into Spaine, vnder colour that the art of drawing and trimming their ſugars required great and ſtrong labour, which the weake bodied Indians could not vndergoe: which the Cardinall vnderſtanding hee preſently aduertiſed the King of the daunger hee foreſawe therein; for E theſe Moores are more ſtrong and giuen to armes: wherefore hee beſought him to conſider what a ſubiect of ſedition thoſe men which had obtayned this leaue of him, carried to the Indians, a ſimple and rude people, who without doubt would learne of them to bee hardie and warrelike, and to rebell afterwards againſt the Spaniards. This councell was contemned by the king, or rather by Monſieur de Cheures who gouerned him, thinking that the Cardinall did not ſo much blame their trafficke of ſlaues for the good of the Common weale, as for that hee beeing Gouernour of Spaine, thought it ſhould not be allowed without his priuitie; but he found afterwards by the euent, how wiſe the Cardinalles aduice was. For in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and two and twentie, by the conſpiracie of fortie of theſe Moores, they did cauſe a ſeruile warre F in the Iſland of Hiſpaniola, the which was hardly quencht by the vertue and diligence of Melchior de Caſtro, and Francis d'Auila Inhabitants there. Moores ſtrong and fit for the warre.

Nauarre.

20 The gouernement of Caſtille was not yet aſſured from troubles, when as they had newes, that Iohn of Albret king of Nauarre came with a great armie of French, for the recouerie of his realme, wherewith the Cardinall was troubled, hauing not ſufficient

1516 ent forces to aſſure ſo many affaires : knowing well that D. Frederic of Acugna, vice- G roy of Nauarre was not prouided as hee ought : wherefore by the aduice, and at the requeſt of the chiefe noblemen, hee gaue the defence of the realme to D. Antonio Manrique de Lara, ſonne to D. Pedro Duke of Nagera, who willingly offered himſelfe D Antonio Manrique de Lara viceroy of Nauarre. to take that charge in ſo dangerous a time, hauing his lands neere vnto Nauarre, from whence he might drawe ſpeedie ſuccours at all euents : and it is a bruite continued from time to time that it was propounded in the councell of Caſtille, not onely to demantle all the Townes and places of ſtrength within the realme, by reaſon of the mutinies which did riſe at that time in Nauarre, but alſo to leaue the land waſt to ſerue to feede Councell barbarous to make the countrie of Nauarre deſart their troupes : the demantling did afterwards take place, but as for the deſolation of the fields it was held too barbarous. D. Inigo Fernandes of Velaſco, Conſtable of Ca- H ſtille, an inueterate enemie to the Duke of Nagera, ſought to diſappoint his ſonne of his gouernement, pretending that hee had aliances, with the faction of Gramont, and did ſtill feare the ruine of it : wherefore hee made proteſtations againſt this decree made in Councell, whereby the neceſſarie prouiſions were ſo delayed in this apparent daunger, as if the French had aduaunced with more ſpeede, they might eaſily haue beene maſters of Pampelone, and of the whole realme.

Their armie entring ſlowly by the Pyrenees on the ſide of Moya and Iſana, it was ſtayed in the valley of Roncal, and defeated by the diligence of colonell D. Ferdinand Villalua of Plaiſance : The Marſhall D. Pedro, who was the Leader, and his brother Diego Velez, with other Noblemen Nauarrois, were taken and ſent into Caſtille, to diuers priſons, whileſt that king Iohn was at the ſiege of the Caſtle of Saint Iohn, at I the foot of the Pyrenee mountaines, who hearing of the defeat of his men, returned into Fraunce, out of all hope euer to recouer his realme. It was bruited, that there were found in a coffer amongſt the Marſhalles baggage that was taken, certayne Letters of D. Lewis of Beaumont Conſtable of Nauarre, and of other Noblemen Nauarrois, who were grieued to ſee that auncient and noble Crowne reduced to a prouince. Others ſay, that the counteſſe D. Briande Manrique, his wife, ſiſter to the Duke of Nagera, choſen Viceroy of Nauarre, hauing diſcouered theſe practiſes, by certayne papers which fell into their hands, ſhee aduertiſed Cardinall Ximenes, who gaue commaundement vnto Frederic d'Acugna the Viceroy, to ſeaze vpon the Conſta- K bles perſon, but as captaine Picarro would haue laied hands on him, hee eſcaped and ſtoode vpon his gard, vntill the comming of the Duke of Nagera his brother in lawe, to be Viceroy of the realme : for this cauſe the counteſſe his wife durſt neuer afterwards come in his company.

Forts demanteled in Nauarre. The affaires of Nauarre beeing aſſured for Caſtille by the defeate of the French armie, the Cardinall cauſed them to beginne to demantle the forts throughout the realme, by the perſuaſion of colonell Villalua, or for that hee had formerly conceiued it in his fantaſie, the which they that haue come after haue found profitable : for it is certayne that the Nauarrois could not forget their proprietarie and lawfull kings; and there is no doubt but if the forts had ſtoode ſtill, they would haue ſought meanes to re- L bell : but ſeeing themſelues without anie retreats, they haue contayned themſelues :
beſides, in doing it, the Cardinall would ſpare a great expence, which hee muſt haue imployed in the entertainement of ſo many garriſons, as was neceſſarie in a Realme newly conquered : To conclude, all were demanteled and ruined, except the citie of Pampelona, the Caſtle of Eſtella, and the townes of Lombier, and Pont de la Roine, which the Conſtable D. Lewis of Beaumont obtayned for a time of his brother in law :
the Caſtle of Mazille a place ſtrong by ſcituation and art, vpon the riuer of Arragon, eſcaped this furie by the vertue of D. Anna of Velaſco, Marqueſſe of Falſes, who drew vp the bridge againſt the Commiſſaries deputed for theſe demolitions, ſaying, M that ſhee would keepe the place well vntill the comming of King Charles, and ſo hindered them.

Among other buildings which fell in this calamitie, the Conuent of Saint Frauncis of Olita an auncient place, and reuerenced, was much lamented. The death of co-

lonell

A lonell Villalua followed ſoone after, ſuſpected to haue beene aduanced by the Conſtable Lewis of Beamont, who meeting him neere vnto his houſe of Lerin vpon the way to Eſtella, inuited him to ſup with him, where it was thought hee had poiſon giuen him, whereof hee dyed as ſoone as hee came to Eſtella: This was for the hatred which hee had pourchaſed among all the Nauarrois, for that hee had beene the inſtrument of the demanteling of the forts of Nauarre. 1517 Death of Collonell Villalua

King Iohn of Albret dyed alſo, this yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and ſeuenteene, of griefe, ſeeing his affaires deſperate; and his bodie was laied in the Cathedrall church of Leſcar in Bearn, for his will was to be interred in the great church of ſaint B Marie of Pampelona: His death happened fiue yeares nine moneths and twenty daies after that hee was diſpoſſeſt of his realme. The offices of colonell Villalua were confirmed to his ſonne, by the interceſſion of Cardinall Ximenes, who gaue this profitable councell vnto the king, to giue the ſuruiuancy of eſtates to their children that died in his ſeruice, as an incouragement to carrie themſelues well and faithfully in their charges: yet hee was not of opinion to giue him the place of Colonell which his father had, holding that this great power and commandement ouer many men, ſhould not bee ſuffered in armes, being the cauſe of confuſion and diſorder, being a naturall thing and moſt neceſſarie, ſaid hee, that all ſhould looke vnto one head. Colonell Villalua was a valiant man, ſoudaine and actiue, ſharpe witted, of a great courage, and C a good ſouldier in all occaſions: and as for his vertues they compared him to Hanibal, ſo the imperfection of his body did increaſe his fame, for he was blind of an eye, like vnto Haniball. Queene Catherine ſuruiued her husband about eight moneths, and ordained by her will that her body ſhould bee buried in the Cathedrall church of Saint Marie of Pampelone, to preſerue the right to the realme of Nauarre, leauing Henry of Albret her ſonne, heire thereof: She died at Mont de Marſan, being ſeuen and forty yeares olde: her body was left as it were in depoſito, at Leſcar in Bearn, by her husband. Henrie of Albret was then foureteene yeares old, and did intitle himſelfe king of Nauarre: the Viceroy of which realme at his entrie into his gouernment, aſſembled the eſtates at Pampelona, cauſing them to ſwear to king Charles of Auſtria, and to the queene D. Ioane his mother, D hee alſo ſwearing on their behalfes to obſerue the priuiledges of the countrie. And for that by reaſon of the faction, wherewith that realme had been in former times diuided, they had been accuſtomed to chuſe a councel or court of iuſtice of like number, of either part of Gramont and Beaumont, the preſident of which councell being choſen by lot out of one of the factions, did commonly oppreſſe the contrarie party, the Cardinall cauſed the order eſtabliſhed firſt by king Iohn of Albret, and continued by king Ferdinand to bee followed: which was to giue them a Preſident that was a ſtranger, notwithſtanding the Nauarrois did ſolicit in the kings court in Flanders, to haue the auncient cuſtome practiſed again. He alſo tooke the gouernment of Pampelone from an Arragonois, called Ferrera, and gaue it to a Caſtillan, letting the king vnderſtand that the Arragonois & Nauar- E rois did alwaies diſagree. He did alſo reſiſt the Cardinall of Albret, who throgh the popes fauour would enioy his biſhopricke of Pampelone, from whence hee had beene expelled. 1517 Death of Iohn of Albret king of Nauarre. Qualities of Colonel Villalua. Death of queen Catherine of Nauarre.

21 Nauarre being pacified, there grew troubles in the realme of Granado, by reaſon of the rights and iuſtice of the Admiraltie. It is an auncient order in Spaine, as in many other realmes, that the admirall hath charge of the Sea-coaſts, and of armes and warre at ſea, and of ciuill and criminall iuſtice ouer all ſea-faring men, as well Mariners, & paſſengers as Souldiers. And therefore in euery Prouince which lies vpon the ſea, where there are ports, ſhips, & any cõmerce he hath his Iudges, as at Seuile, Malaga, and ſuch like, & ſets vp gibbets and other ſuch markes of ſupreme iuſtice. They of Malaga F had often tryed in the time of king Ferdinand to free themſelues from this iuriſdiction, and to aboliſh it in their towne, ſaying, that it did but hinder iuſtice, and giue way to ill liuers, to auoid deſerued puniſhment: for in Sea-townes whither men come from diuers places, and many times vnciuil, if any one bee called in queſtion for any crime, he requires to be ſent vnto the admiraltie, and moſt commonly by theſe declinatories eſcapes the puniſhment that ſhould be inflicted vpon him by the royal Iudges. In like maner the garri- Caſtille. Admiralty in Caſtille and the Iuriſdiction.

1517 ſons which were vpon the Sea-coaſts did abuſe theſe things, appealing ſometime from G the kings juſtice, ſometimes from the admiraltie. Being not able to obtain any prouiſion therein from king Ferdinand, at ſuch time as the Cardinal gouerned, they ſent into Flanders, to get an abolition of this juſtice from king Charles of Auſtria. But, as a multitude hauing once a deſire, hath no patience, order nor mean, thoſe of Malaga, without ex-Tumult at Malaga. pecting of any anſwer, did tumultuouſly chaſe away the judges and beat down the gib-bets, and all other markes of the Admiralty in their towne and iuriſdiction: whereof the high admirall complained to Cardinall Ximenes, who was Regent, and to the coun-cell, who thinking by admonitions and threats to ſuppreſſe the heat of this people, they receiued anſwere, that they would not ſubmit themſelues to any judgement touching H the differences betwixt them and the admiral, vntil that king Charles their ſoueraigne lord were arriued in Spaine: and meaning to maintaine themſelues in this opinion againſt any force that ſhould be offered them, they took armes, and planted all the artillerie they had vpon their towers & wals, making one peece of admirable greatnes, by a generall contribution of the people, whereon they did graue theſe words in latin, Malacitanæ libertatis Aſ-ſertores, F.C. that is to ſay, the defenders of the Malaquins libertie haue cauſed it to bee made. The multitude was entertained in this rebellion for a time, by ſome of their citizens, to whome the Flemiſh lords that were neere vnto the kings perſon, did write letters, and promiſe fauor: but the Cardinal after that he had vſed al mild remedies, ſent an Malaquins ſuppreſt. army of the legionaries, according to his inſtitution, in the which were 6000 foot and 400 I horſe, led by D. Anthonio de la Cueua: whereupon the Malaquins fainting, when as the army came but to Antequera, they ſent word that they were ready to obey the Cardinals commandements, ſending two deputies vnto him, who in the cities name beſought him to take them to mercy, and to abſtaine from bloud. D Anthony hauing aduertiſed the Cardinall of the Malaquins ſubmiſſion, hee had commandement to end matters with mildnes and clemency, and to yeeld all hee might vnto them, preſeruing the kings honour and dignitie. There were fiue of the chiefe authors of the ſedition hanged, & the reſt were pardoned. Of which things the Cardinall did aduertiſe the king, letting him vnderſtand how preiudiciall it would be to the common-weale, if his councel of Flanders did ſo eaſily vndo that which had bin concluded with mature deliberation in the councell of Spain; K Gouernors ſhould be maintained in their reputation. beſeeching him therein to haue a care of his authority, the which was ioyned to the royal authoritie, holding, that the chiefeſt foundation of the publike peace, did conſiſt in the reputation of the gouernour.

22 In Caſtille Iohn Velaſques of Cuellar, ſuperintendent of the treaſure, ſon to doctor
Guttiere Velaſques, ſought to keepe the caſtle of Areualo by force, which place the queen
D. Iſabella, wife to king Iohn the ſecond, had had for her dwelling, and had beene commit-Contention for the towne of Areualo. ted, as alſo the affaires of the widow queene, to the cuſtodie of doctor Guttiere, & then to his ſonne after his death: but the Cardinal had newly, by the aduice of king Charles, giuen that place, with Olmedo, Madrigal, and Sancta Maria de Nieua, with their reuenues, vnto queen Germaine, widow to king Ferdinand, in exchange of 30000 ducats of rent which the L king her husband had left her by his wil, to be taken out of the reuenues of Naples: wherupon Velaſques ſeeing himſelf put from the poſſeſſion of the Caſtle of Areualo, which he did think ſhould haue bin perpetual, he durſt preſume to hold it by force, being preſt ther-unto by D. Maria of Velaſco his wife, who was at that time as much hated of Q. Germaine, as ſhee had beene formerly beloued: and fauoured by her; beſides that many noblemen deſiring to ſee Velaſques aduanced, either for loue, or for aliance that was betwixt them, & not greatly affecting queen Germaine; they incouraged him to commit this inſolency, promiſing him aide at all euents: but ſuch promiſes are moſt commonly vaine & de-fectiue, when as the ſoueraigne magiſtrate purſues his right, euery man fearing when it comes to a matter of fact, to incur the puniſhment of a rebell. Againſt this purpoſe of Ve- M laſques, the Cardinal, after his accuſtomed maner, vſed al mild courſes, cauſing the king to write kind letters vnto him, and this preuailing little, he afterwards added threats: but he gaue more credit to his wife, & to the perſuaſions of the admirall, the conſtable, the earle of Benauent, the duke of the Infantazgo & others, who enuied the cardinal, of which the admirall ſhewed letters ſigned by them al, promiſing that if the Cardinall attempted any thing

A thing againſt the town of Areualo, they would ſend him ſuccours, & therfore the Inhabitants ſhould take courage to maintein themſelues vnder the juriſdiction of the crown, rather than to receiue a woman for their lady & miſtreſſe, being aſſured that k. Charles, being in the countrey, he would like of their conſtancy, and diſpoſe otherwiſe of their affaires. The inhabitants of Areualo being animated heereby, they reiected all good Councell: wherfore the Cardinal ſent an Alcaide of the court thither, with ſome ſouldiers, to reduce them to their duties, who ſummoned them by a trompet to obey the kings commandement, elſe he would proceed againſt them with al rigour, as rebels, & would make Velaſcos proceſſe condemning him as a traitor, which note ſhold paſſe to all his poſterity; & would confiſcate his goods. Theſe ſommations being reiterated according to the forme of Iu- 1517
B ſtice, & with ſolemnities and ceremonies, Velaſco ſeeing that neither the admirall nor the other noblemen, which had promiſed him ſo much aſſiſtance, did not make any offer to defend him, he thought it better for him to yeeld vnto the Alcaide, thē to attend the rigor of armes, or the proceeding of juſtice, wherfore hee diſmiſt the ſouldiers which were in garriſon in the Caſtle; the which with the towne were deliuered vp vnto Alcaide. Some daies after Velaſques went to court, & ſubmitted himſelfe & his affaires to the Cardinals pleaſure, who receiued him courteouſly, promiſing him al aſſiſtance & fauor to the king, & did comfort him for the great afflictions which he had ſuffered, eſpecially for the late death of his eldeſt ſon, which grief did ſoon bring him to his end at Madrid, although ſome did ſay that he was poiſoned.

C Theſe things done in fauour of the royall authority, by Cardinall Ximenes, he found meanes to maintaine them of Areualo & Olmedo in their priuiledges and liberties, & to keep them from comming into the power of Q. Germaine, whom he did not loue, for that he ſaw himſelf contemned by her, & that ſhe did incline to the party of the Infant D. Ferdinand, & of his gouernors, who were oppoſite vnto him: wherupon he did write vnto king Charles in Flanders, ſhewing him by old & new examples how much it did import for the ſafety of Caſtille, that Areualo & Olmedo places of ſtrength and fit to trouble the realm ſhould remain vnited to the crown, & not be in the poſſeſſion of any priuat lord, obiecting that which D. Iohn king of Nauarre & Arragō, had attempted, by the opportunity of thoſe two places, againſt D. Iohn 2 king of Caſtille: ſaying moreouer, that Q. Germain had cauſe
D content her ſelf with the large reuenues of Madrigal alone, wherwith ſhe had bin ſatisfied before the troubles of Areualo: That if he had ſuppreſt the inhabitants & Velaſques, it was more to teach them to obey the kings commandement, than for that he thought it expedient that place ſhould bee giuen to the queene, to whom he had granted it, before hee was truely aduertiſed of the eſtate of her affaires; adding to his letters a copy of the priuiledges granted by auncient kings to the townes of Areualo and Olmedo: wherfore hee did eaſily obtaine from the kings, that which hee pretended; at the leaſt hee kept theſe townes in their liberty, and cauſed the matter to be deferred vntill his comming.

E 23 The pitiful eſtate of D. Ioane queen of Caſtille, did much trouble the Cardinall Ximenes, being afflicted with a miſerable infirmity; for this princeſſe was poſſeſt with a cruell melācholike humor, ſo as ſhe led a moſt lamentable life in the caſtle of Tordeſillas, wheras k. Ferdinand her father had lodged her, a pleaſant & commodious place. Lewis Ferrier of Valencia had charge of her, being alſo captain of the caſtle of Tordeſillas, but he was vnfit for ſuch a buſines; for whether by his ſlownes, growing by reaſon of his age, or throgh ignorance, he could neuer get her to lodge in any pleaſant and well ayred chamber of the caſtle, but would alwaies lurke in darke and obſcure places neere the ground, fit to entertain and augment her malancholike humor: ſhe did abhorre ſoft and delicate beds, and
F would lie vpon the ground, and if ſhe did lay herſelfe vpon a board couered with a Carpet, it was by great importunity: it was not poſſible to make her weare a furred gowne in winter, nor any thing that was rich: She was often three daies together without eating; neither could the prayers nor perſuaſions of her Seruants preuaile any thing with her: ſhe often complained that ſhe was kept like a priſoner, and that they with-held her from the gouernment of affaiers, like a priuat perſon.

Eſtate of queen Ioan of Caſtille, mother to king Charles.

Ambition raigning in Queene Ioane.

The Cardinall was much grieued for theſe things; & ſomewhat to remedie it, holding 1517 for certaine that the negligence of Lewis Ferrier did feed the malice of her infirmity, hee G diſmiſt him by reaſon of his great age, putting in his place Ferdinand Duca called Strat, of Talauera, a man of a Noble family, wiſe and well aduiſed, who carried himſelfe ſo diſcreetly in his charge, as in a ſhort time hee did moderate this violent humour in the Queene, and got her to bee content to haue her chamber made cleane, and many earthen diſhes wherein they did commonly ſerue her to bee carried away: for ſhee had an humor to make them leaue the diſhes full of meat in her chamber, not ſuffering them to carrie any one away, ſo as the meat corrupting, made a ſtinking ſauour: then by little and little he procured her to lie in a bed; hee perſuaded her to goe abroad to church, and made her to haue ſome feeling and apprehenſion that ſhee was a H Queene, and ſo acknowledged: and ſo by little and little made her familiar, & brought her to a more milde and humane kinde of life: the which did much pleaſe king Charles her ſonne, who thanked Cardinall Ximenes by his letters.

The diſpleaſure which Lewis Ferrier had conceiued for his diſplacing, was augmented by the diſmiſſion of his ſonne, from the gouernement of Toledo, for his miſdemeanors and negligence, which cauſed infinite confuſions; in whoſe place the earle of Palma, of the family of Portocarrero was made gouernour, a man worthy of great honour, who was receiued notwithſtanding the oppoſitions of the faction of Ayala: for the citie of Toledo, hath beene long diuided into two factions of Sylua and of Ayala. This was pacified by the diligence of the earle of Fuenſalida, who was one of the I heads of it, a deare friend to Cardinall Ximenes. Doctor Gallego being ſent to Toledo to informe of the life and behauiour of the gouernour of Ferrier, diſplaced by the Cardinall and the kings councell, by a memorable example, and ſhewing his auncient ſeueritie, hee cauſed ſome officers and miniſters of juſtice to be publikely whipt, being conuicted of corruption and other crimes, and would haue puniſhed Arroios treaſurer of the Calatraua more grieuouſly, if hee had not fled away, being accuſed of infinite villanies, rapes, & violences committed about his commandery of Zoria; whereof being depriued by ſentence, the Cardinal gaue it vnto Sancho Cabrera. By theſe offices of piety and juſtice, the Cardinall made himſelfe to be obeied, feared, beloued and reuerenced in Caſtille, keeping the realme in peace, and prouiding in the meane time for thoſe K things which might ſerue for future and vnexpected accidents. Hee appointed arcenals or ſtorehouſes for artillerie, engines, and all munition of warre, in three places of Spain: At Medina del Campo, beyond the mountaines, in Caſtille the old: in the realm of Toledo, at Alcala of Henares; and at Malaga in Granado, that when any tumult or ſedition ſhould ariſe, they might haue ſpeedy meanes to ſuppreſſe it: As for that of Medina del Campo, it is moſt certaine that it was then made. He had an humour to haue coyned a peece of money, on the which ſhould be grauen the Image of Saint Francis, but the kings councell holding it to be ſomewhat ambitious in the Cardinall, who was a frier, oppoſed themſelues. He began a commendable and moſt profitable thing in all great eſtates, that is, hee obtained a decree from king Charles, by the which there was commandement giuen to bring in all ſort of regiſters, accomps, memorials, inſtructions, & ſuch like writings, concerning the publike affaires, of the realm, or the ſtate of the kings houſe, which might be in the hãds of the counſellers and ſoueraign Iudges, or of thoſe which had beene imployed in embaſſages to foreine Princes and common-weales, and other perſons whatſoeuer, to be kept in certaine places, to be vſed when time and neceſſity ſhould require: the which if it had been executed, poſteritie had beene better ſatisfied of that which had paſt in precedent times, and better informed of that which was to be done. By ſome little which was done according to this decree, the Cardinal came to the knowledge of many things, eſpecially of that which concerned the militarie orders of Spaine, as the reuenues & ancient rights of the maſters, & of their tables, of the common money of com- M manderies, & the duties of commanders & their juſtice and Chapters; which things were vnknowne to the kings officers, the maſterſhips hauing beene retained and held by kings, and then annexed to the crowne: ſo as there were infinite fraudes and abuſes committed, which gaue occaſion to the great commanders of thoſe orders, to make oppoſitions, and to ſeeke to exempt themſelues out of the Cardinalls power, yea

Miniſters of iuſtice puniſhed exemplary.

Storehouſes for munition in Spaine.

Search of auncient writings by Cardinall Ximenes.

A yea of the king himſelfe: the prouiſion of Conanderies, was one of the quarrels which they debated, ſaying, that it ſhould bee Canonically done, according vnto the orders which they held, and not giuen to any, but to them of their orders, reſpectiuely: but it is hard to kicke againſt the power of kings: wherefore all that the commanders could alleage was eaſily refelled by the Cardinall, who could giue good interpretations to their Papall Bulles, and other inſtructions which they produced. Through the Cardinalls diligence, by the reuiſion of the ancient accompts, hee found that there had been imbezeled from the king aboue forty Millions of Marauidis euerie yeare, the fraud conſiſting chiefly in that the commanders were in old B time to aſſiſt their maſters in the warres againſt the moores, with a certaine number of Souldiers entertained at their charges, the which they concealed, and freed themſelues, leauing the care and charge to the king. Finding that ſome townes belonging to theſe maſterſhips had beene vſurped, hee reſtored them to the kings reuenues, wherein he did chiefly make vſe of the labour and diligence of Touilla and Cabrera, commanders of the orders of Calatraua. He made inquirie of the manners and carriage of the iudges of thoſe orders, and cenſured them, diſplacing ſome, and inſtituting others: Hee had reſolued to doe the like to them of the Chanceries and great councells, as wel following the court, as of Vailledolit, Granado, Galicia, and others, with ſpeciall commandement from the king, which hee had procured to that end: hee did with great diligence and ſe- C ueritie cut off many gifts, fees and entertainments, which were not greatly neceſſarie; the which did much eaſe the kings cofers, not fearing to offend his greateſt and deareſt friends, for the profit of his Prince, wherby he purchaſed many enemies: finally, imitating the emperor Seuerus, a moſt worthy Prince, he wold not haue any one receiue wages from the king, nor to haue an office in the ſtate, that were not profitable and neceſſarie for the common-weale; and he diſapointed all thoſe rats, which did but deuour, retaining onely in court, the Iudges or Councellors of the great Chancelie, the officers and ordinarie miniſters of the roiall Pallace, the garriſons of the frontiers, the foure prouoſts of juſtice, whome they call Alcaydes, and their archers, the marſhall of the lodgings, and harbingers, gards of the body, and ſuch like. But it is doubtfull touching the taking away of of- D ficers fees, whether he did it of his owne motion, or by the kings commandement: for hee complained by ſome letters to the king, for that they gaue him alwaies an odious charge to take away, and neuer to giue any thing. But howſoeuer, he was of opinion that ſparing was moſt neceſſarie and commendable in a prince, who muſt conſider that all that hee ſpends comes out of the bowels of his people, complaining greatly that in leſſe than foure months that he had begunne to gouerne the realm, king Charles had giuen away aboue eighteene millions of Marauidis. Aboue all things, he held that a multitude of Collectors and receiuers, and a great number of treaſurers were verie pernitious and hurtfull to a ſtate: wherefore he deſired that ſome man of a noble houſe, diligent and expert, were made ſuperintendent of all the kings money, whoſe charge ſhould be to diſtribute the or- E dinarie expenſes, as need ſhould require, and to reſerue the remainder, to bee imployed in vnexpected affaires, and in liberalities well imployed by king; and vnder him ſuch a number of deputies as ſhould be neceſſarie: He held, that it was a great confuſion in the managing of the treaſure, to inuert and imploy one kind of money to another vſe than it had beene aſſigned: of which rules he did continually aduertiſe the king his maſter by his letters, and gaue an accompt of his gouernment, ſhewing with how little charge, in a ſmall time that he had been his lieutenant in Caſtille, he had effected great matters; Hee had pacified the tumults in Andaluſia, repulſt the French in Nauarre, ſuppreſt the contempt and rebellion of the Malaquins, held the frontiers wel manned, clenſed the ſea from pyrats, and aſſured the coaſt, made an enterprize againſt Alger, freed Bugia, Pegnon and F Melille from feare and the aſſaults of Horuſco Barberouſſe, ſuccoured Argille for the king of Portugal, and with all diſcharged great debts, which D. Ferdinand his grandfather did owe. That if he with a limited authority, and for another, amideſt the enuy and croſſes of his ill willers, could effect ſuch great matters, by the means of ſparing & good huſbandrie, much more might he doe it, who was a king, and whoſe greatnes was without the touch of enuie.

1517

Husbandrie of Cardinall Ximenes.

Multitude of officers in the treaſorie hurtfull to the realm

1517 Alger held by Horuſco Barberouſſe.

26 As for the expedition of Alger, whereof hee makes mention in his letters, it had not been verie happy: it was after this maner. Alger a ſea towne which ſome hold to bee Cirte, the chiefe of the realme of Iuba and Siphax, but they are deceiued: Others ſay it was the Colonie of Salde in Mauritania Ceſarienſis: it was then in a maner tributarie to the Spaniards, but it was much afflicted by the diſſenſion of two brethren Moores, who contended for the Seigneurie. The inhabitants deſirous to ſhake off this yoake, had called Horuſco Barberouſſe to defend their liberties, who running along the coaſt of Afrike, with his younger bother Haredin, had beene lately repulſt from Bugia, a Spaniſh towne, with the loſſe of an army, about the death of king Ferdinand. This famous Pyrat hauing thus ſeaſed vpon that citie, cõmodious for theft & Pyracies, he made himſelf king of Alger, hauing ſlaine Celim the lawfull prince, and then hee began to ſpoile vpon the coaſt of Spaine, and did not onely moleſt the Chriſtians, but he did tyrannize ouer the pety kings of Afrike of his owne ſect: ſo as hee vndertooke to piſpoſſeſſe Albuzeuen king of Tunis, whome hauing ſlaine, hee purſued Iahia his ſonne ſo neere, as hee forced him to leaue the countrie, and to flie into Spaine, where addreſſing himſelfe vnto Cardinall Ximenes, and relating his miſerie vnto him, he beſought him that hee might recouer his aunceſtors realme. The Cardinall hauing giuen him good hope, cauſed men to bee leuied in Spaine, and galleys and ſhips to bee made ready to paſſe into Afrike, againſt this Pyrat Barberouſſe: the charge of which army hee gaue to Diego Vera, maſter of the ordnance, a raſh and indiſcreet man, but it was firſt refuſed by Ferdinand Andrado, who excuſed himſelfe, holding it perilous to lead new men and vnexperienced (ſuch as the Cardinall ment to ſend to the warre.) The army of Diego Vera, being about eight thouſand men, hauing weighed anchor they came neere vnto Alger in October: The Moores being long before aduertiſed of this preparation which was made againſt them, were ready to ſtop their landing, and at all euents had manned the towne of Alger with good ſouldiers, both of horſe and foot, among the which there were ſixe hundred Turkiſh archers, verie good ſouldiers, whome Horuſco had brought out of Aſia for his ordinarie gard. Diego Vera approaching neere the towne, he diuided his armie into foure parts, againſt the aduice of other Captaines, the which was verie hurtful vnto him, for the Barbarians were in all places ſtronger than the Aſſayants, either in aſſault, ſallie or skirmiſh: ſo as the Chriſtian army was chaſed and diſpearſt with a horrible ſlaughter, Diego Vera hauing abandoned all, and hiding himſelfe with his ſonne a good part of the day among the rocks, hee ſaued himſelfe in the firſt veſſell that he found at anchor: and being returned into Spaine he was receiued of all men with taunts and ſcoffes, the children ſinging ſongs in the ſtreets, to his diſhonour and diſgrace, ſaying, that Diego Vera was to weake to wreſtle againſt Horuſco, who had but one arme, with ſuch like. After which the Spaniards were neuer ſucceſful in any enterpriſe againſt Alger.

The newes of this rout was brought to Cardinall Ximenes, when as hee was diſputing in an aſſembly of Diuines: and they ſay, that hauing read the letters, hee ſhewed no ſigne of heauines, but ſaid onely, that the Spaniſh army had beene defeated in Afrike, but God be thanked, the loſſe was not great: for Spaine by this meanes ſhould bee purged of a great number of lewd inſolent companions, whom hee had ſent in this expedition, remembring what king Ferdinand was wont to ſay, that it was neceſſary after a time to ſend men out of the countrie to ſome foreine warre: for it was like a potion of Rubarbe to a mans body, which carried away all ſharpe and cholericke humors hindering the ſweet harmony of the whole conſtitution: ſo did Pericles that famous captaine of the Athenians vſe to doe, and other men of worth: hee made the loſſe leſſe in certaine letters writen vnto the king, ſaying, that there were but a thouand of the whole army ſlaine and taken priſoners, laying the whole blame vpon Diego Vera.

Edict againſt the Genouois traffiking into Spaine.

27 About that time and not farre from the warre of Alger, there was a cruell edict made againſt the Genouois trafiquing in the towns and ports of Spain, by the which they were commanded to void the country within a ſhort ſpace, vpon pain of confiſcation of their goods & loſſe of their liues: the cauſe was the error & indiſcretion of ſome, aſwell Spaniards, as Genouois, but the fault was chiefly in D. Berenguelo, lord of Muſcot a Cattellan,

A Cattellan commaunder of the Spanish gallies. And thus it was, there was a captaine of 1517 a brigantine or foist, named Iohn Riue, borne at Toledo, who being not imployed in the Cause of the Edict against the Genouois.
kings seruice, did steale at sea both from friend and enemie; so as meeting on a time certaine marchants ships of Genoua, hauing an aduantage ouer them in a calme, he had put them to ransome: for the which the Genouois hauing made their complaints, being friends to Spaine, they attended but an occasion to make Iohn Riue repaire this injurie, and to punish him as he deserued. It happened that three great ships of Genoua, being in the port of Carthagena, to carrie away wools, at the same time the commonweale of Genoua had sent forth three gallies well furnished with men and ordnance, as well for B the safetie of those marchants ships, as to seeke out the pyrat Iohn Riue, who had spoyled their companions: and as by chance all these vessels of Genoua were at Carthagena, behold the Spanish armie arriues, being commaunded by D. Berenguelo, with whom Iohn Riue was, who was presently knowne by the Genouois, and therefore they addrest themselues to D. Berenguelo, intreating him to deliuer him vnto them, who had ransomed and spoyled them, to the end they might represent him to the Iustice, or punish him themselues, according to the league betwixt the deceased kings of Arragon and the common-weale of Genoua. Whereof D. Berenguelo, through his arrogancie, and also for that he was a Cattelan, and by consequence an enemie to the Genouois, made no reckoning. Refusall of iustice cause of a great tumult in Spaine.
Wherewith the Genouois being incensed, following after the foist of Iohn Riue, they did C so plie her with their canon, as they had almost sunke her. D. Berenguelo growing in a rage for this fact, leauing the Genouois gallies which were armed, and had committed the fault, he went against the Genouois ships which lay in the port, to assayle them, who presently put their boats downe into the water with certaine peeces of ordnance, and put themselues in defence. D. Berenguelo, when he saw them in fight, left them, and went to land. There was a furious incounter betwixt the Genouois and the gallies of Spaine, wanting their head; two of them were so ill handled with their great shot, as the one sunke, and the other, being all broken, ran on ground, and was also lost. The towne (being moued at this noyse, and solicited by the cries of D. Berenguelo, saying, That they must not in any sort suffer so great an outrage, which was against the Maiestie of the king, D that strangers should presume to assaile his gallies in the port of Carthagena) was presently all in armes: the fight grew so hot, as the towne against the Genouois gallies and ships, and they against the towne, shot continually one at another, making a pitifull ruine of buildings, and killing of men, vntill that night parted them. The cardinall tooke this fact of the Genouois verie ill, as contemners of him and of the king his master; being also displeased with D. Berenguelo, whereupon followed that edict. He also sought by all meanes vnto the king, to haue D. Berenguelo depriued of the charge of the gallies, shewing his vnworthinesse of such a commaunder, and the great fault which he had committed: and also that the truce of an hundred yeares, concluded betwixt the kings of Arragon, and the commonwele of Genoua being expired, it seemed they would reuiue with E great hatred, the old quarell for the island of Sardinia. D. Berenguelo, besides that hee had friends and fauourers in the Court of Flanders, hee made the cardinals pursuit in vaine, by a victorie which he got soone after against foure Turkish gallies, the fight con- Victorie of D. Berenguelo against the Turks tinuing almost a whole day, which was the onely remarkable thing hee did in six yeares space, that he had beene generall of the gallies. The commonweale of Genoua sent em-bassadours into Flanders, to king Charles, excusing themselues of this fact, and saying, That it was the fault of priuat men, and not of the citie, against whom they had proceed-ded by way of iustice, condemning the commaunders and captaines to loose their liues, and the souldiers and mariners to other punishments, according to their merits, as soone as they should be returned home: But God preuented the execution of their decrees, for F these vessels being retired to the port of Villefranche neere to Nice, they had by a sudden whirlewind beene swallowed vp in the sea, with the losse of aboue three hundred men. Wherefore they besought the king, seeing that these wicked breakers of the pub-like league, were diuinely punished, that he would be pleased to grant a restitution of their goods which had beene seised on in Spaine, and disannull that rigorous Edict. King Charles pacified by this embassage, pardoned the offence, and reuoked the Edict, against
the

1517 the cardinals will, who was verie obſtinate in that which he had once conceiued, and did G
Cardinal Ximenes an enemie to the Genouois. ſtill ſolicite the king to breed jealouſies in his head againſt that commonweale, and to bring them into diſgrace with him; ſaying, that they had intelligence with the French: giuing infinit croſſes to theſe poore Genouois. Yet in the end, by their diligence and perſeuerance, they juſtified themſelues, and obtained reſtitution, and an abolition of the Edict, the cardinall, their aduerſarie (being ſomewhat pacified) conſenting thereunto. He Edict againſt the Genouois reuoked. oppoſed himſelfe with great vehemencie, againſt the purſuits of the new Chriſtians (as they call them) in Court, that the judgements of the Inquiſition might bee executed againſt them, touching that which concernes witneſſes, according to the forme of other criminall cauſes; for the accuſed were not allowed to except againſt the witneſſes, which H
Proceeding vniuſt againſt the accuſed by the Inquiſition. were not confronted againſt them, nor yet named: which gaue occaſion and boldneſſe vnto judges, which were greedie of the bloud and wealth of theſe poore men, to commit many cruelties and abuſes in their charges. Finally, this cardinall did ſo labour with the king and Pope, whereas they of Arragon were alſo ſutors, as the lawes of the tribunall of the Inquiſition, practiſed in the time of king Ferdinand, remained firme.

Contention for the biſhoprick of Siguenſa. 29 About that time there fell out a great debate in the citie of Siguenſa, for the reſtitution of the cardinall D. Bernardin of Caruajal, ſometimes biſhop of that ſea, whereof he had beene depriued by Pope Iulio, by reaſon of the Councell of Piſa. Cardinall Ximenes fauouring his reintegration to his dignitie, goods, and honours, made by Pope Leo, he had for oppoſite D. Frederic of Portugall, ſubrogated into that biſhopricke, after the I depoſition of D. Bernardin, who would not leaue it: So as ſome holding with cardinall Carnaial, and others with D. Frederic, the dioceſſe was diuided, & their contentions came to armes. The place where the greateſt exceſſe was committed, was Almazan, a towne of the earle of Montagus juriſdiction, whither they were reſolued to ſend an Alcayde of the Court, to ſuppreſſe this tumult. This Alcaide called Ferdinand Calderon, ſhewed himſelf ſo cruell in his proceedings againſt this poore people, as the earle their lord telling him, that his too great ſeueritie ſhould rather be called outrage then juſtice: and hauing by ſundrie meſſages aduertiſed the kings Councell, and beſought them, to commaund Calderon to retire: but ſeeing that they made no account of it, he came himſelfe well accompanied to Almazan, and forced him to leaue the towne. Wherewith the Councell, eſpecially K doctor Adrian, who was now a cardinall, and companion to cardinall Ximenes in the gouernement of Caſtille, being incenſed, ſent a perſonall adjournement for the earle of Montagu, and meant to make his proceſſe, as hauing offended the kings Majeſtie. But cardinall Ximenes oppoſed himſelfe, ſhewing that he might lawfully doe that which he had done, ſeeing that vpon his many complaints made vnto the Councell, againſt the exceſſe of Ferdinand Calderon there was no order taken: and ſo he cauſed this purſuit to ceaſe. The difference for the biſhopricke of Siguenſa, ended in like maner, by the death of D. Guttiere of Toledo, biſhop of Plaiſance: which place was giuen to the cardinall of Caruajal, and D. Frederic left in the poſſeſſion of Siguenſa. And for that the gouernements of cities and prouinces of Spaine, had beene for a long time diſtributed confuſedly, & with- L Nobilitie inſtituted to commaund. out diſtinction of perſons, whether noble or vnnoble, it was concluded to reſtore the ancient cuſtome, and conformable to nature, that nobilitie inſtituted to commaund, and to exerciſe honourable charges, ſhould be imployed: wherefore there were many changes of old gouernours throughout all Spaine. True it is, that the Biſcanes and they of Palence had no gentlemen at that time, but two famous Lawyers for their gouernours, that is, Leon and Gallego. In ſome places cardinall Ximenes was preuented by ſuch as obtained them by the kings fauour, and of the Flemiſh courteors; wherewith he was much diſcontented, eſpecially for the gouernement of Burgos, the which was giuen without his priuitie to D. Pedro of Caſtille, who deliuered the fort of Lara into the hands of the Sherifes and Comminaltie of the towne, and they gaue the gard thereof to Ieffrey of Conde, a Fle- M ming, who had beene marſhall of the lodging to the deceaſed king Philip, an inconſtant man, and a prater, and therefore much hated by cardinall Ximenes. Of this and of many Cardinal Ximenes impatient of iniuries, by reaſon of his ambition. other things done by D. Pedro, he made ſundrie complaints vnto the king. So impatient he was of any injurie, as he thought that whatſoeuer king Charles ordained, touching the affaires of Spaine, if it came not from him, and his aduertiſements and counſels, it was done done in contempt of him, condemning it as pernitious, and as ſubiects of ſeditions; accuſing the noblemen and counſellors of Flanders of raſhneſſe, who being ignorant of the lawes and maners of the Spaniards, medled with the diſpoſition of the gouernments of Spaine, the which did wholly depend of the Viceroyes authoritie and reputation, and of the kings councell which was in the countrey. He did honour and cheriſh doctor Adrian Florent verie much, for that he yeelded vnto him: He procured him the biſhopricke of Tortoſa, the which made his way to a cardinals hat, and afterwards to the Papacie. He ſought alſo by all meanes to procure him the dignitie of Inquiſitor generall of Arragon, as he himſelfe had that of Caſtille; but he could not. The ſecretarie Mote of Burgos, a diuine, was verie deere vnto him, whom he made biſhop of Badajos, and would haue made him cardinall, and Archbiſhop of Toledo, had not the cardinall died ſo ſoone, which hindered him from enjoying of thoſe dignities whereof he held himſelfe ſure, but he was deceiued. Mote had beene preacher to king Philip, after whoſe deceaſe he would haue retired into Flanders, for that in hatred of the king D. Ferdinand, he and all the ſeruants of the deceaſed, ſought to draw the Emperour Maximilian into Spaine, to contend for the gouernement of thoſe realmes, for prince Charles his grand child. To haue the better acceſſe vnto the young princes court, he begged letters of fauour almoſt from all the chiefe noblemen of Spaine. King Ferdinand knowing that this preacher was full of ſpleene againſt him, yet would he not hinder his voyage for Flanders, ſhewing therein a generous mind: but he gaue order, that when he ſhould be readie to depart, all his letters of recommendation ſhould be ſtolne from him; the which was cunningly performed by the care of D. Bernardin of Velaſco, the kings ſonne in law, who had great meanes in that citie to doe it. Mote not diſcouering what was done, goes on his way, and being arriued in Flanders, where they were alreadie aduertiſed that he ſhould come, accompanied with many letters of fauour, when he opened his male he found not any, whereat he was much abaſhed, and therefore for a time was held of all thoſe courteors for a man of a ſhallow braine. Notwithſtanding his vertue and eloquence made him a way to king Charles his fauour, and aduanced him to honour, by the meanes of cardinall Ximenes: who alſo procured honours and titles to many others, whoſe qualities and behauiour were pleaſing vnto him, as to D. Iohn Pacheco, ſonne to the earle of Eſcalona, the title of earle of Saint Stephen; to D. William Peres of Ajala, that of earle of Gomera, which is one of the iſlands of the Canaries, which he obtained of the king for him. Such was the gouernement and carriage of cardinall Ximenes, who was feared and reſpected both of great and ſmall in Caſtille.

1517

THE

THE 27 BOOKE OF THE Hiſtorie of Spaine.

The Contents.

1 Diſagreement betwixt cardinall Ximenes and the noblemen of Flanders. Three gouernors in Caſtille.
2 Seditions in Caſtille, vnder pretext of the Flemings greedineſſe.
3 Exactions of the Pope hindered by cardinall Ximenes.
4 Proceſſe ambitiouſly ended by cardinall Ximenes, among the great men. Contempt of iuſtice, rebellions, and other inſolencies ſuppreſt by him.
5 Profanation of the order of cardinals by Pope Leo.
6 Cardinall Francis Ximenes poyſoned, by his enemies.
7 Reformation of the houſe of the Infant D. Ferdinand, brother to king Charles of Auſtria, by cardinall Ximenes.
8 Arriuall of king Charles of Auſtria in Spaine. Diſgrace, diſcharge, and death of cardinall Ximenes.
9 Behauiour and qualities of cardinall Ximenes.
10 Bible printed in Spaine in many languages, by the diligence of cardinall Ximenes.
11 Buildings made by this cardinall.
12 Eſtates at Vailledolit. Crowning of Charles of Auſtria king of Caſtille.
13 Election of Charles of Auſtria to be Emperour: his departure out of Spaine.
14 Sedition in Caſtille againſt cardinall Adrian and the gouernors.
15 Enterpriſe of king Henrie of Albret, for the recouerie of his realme of Nauarre. The taking of Pampelone.
16 The beginning and progreſſe of the Ieſuites.
17 Sect of Theatines differing from the Ieſuites.
18 Vnfortunate exploits of the lord of Aſperraut in Nauarre.
19 Another expedition of the French into Guipuſcoa, vnder the lord of Boniuet: and the taking of Fontarrabie.
20 Adrian Pope. Continuance of the warre of Nauarre. The Emperours returne into Spaine.
21 Fontarraby recouered by the Spaniards. The gouernors of that fort ſucceſſiuely vnto our time
22 Taking of king Francis at Pauia.
23 Mariage of the Emperour Charles the fift.
24 Rome ſackt by the Spaniards.
25 Mariage of king Henrie of Albret with Marguerite of France.
26 Nauigation of Ferdinand Magellanes to the South.
27 Mariage of duke Charles of Sauoy, and D. Beatrix of Portugall.
28 D Iohn the third of that name, and 15 king of Portugall.
29 Continuation of the nauigation to the Eaſt, and the wonderfull voyage of Iohn Sebaſtian del Cano.
30 Mariage of D. Iohn king of Portugal, with D. Katherine, ſiſter to the Emperour Charles.
31 Vn-

A 31 Vnprofitable voyage of the Caſtillans to the Molucques.
32 Treatie of Cambray.
33 Coronation of the Emperor at Bolonia.
34 Peru diſcouered.
35 Muley Haſcen, king of Tunes, expelled by Barberouſſe, and reſtored by the Emperour.
36 Voyage of Prouence by the Emperour.
37 Portugals aſſailed by the Turkes in the Eaſt.
38 Enteruiew of Pope, Emperour, and French king, at Nice.
39 Troubles for the impoſt in diuers places.
B 40 Emperours voyage to Algier.
41 Warre betwixt the Emperour and French king, and then a peace concluded.
42 Muley Haſcen, king of Tunes, againe diſpoſſeſt.

For the continuance of the royall lines of Spaine in this ſeuen and twentieth Booke, mention is made for

CASTILLE, of LEON, ARRAGON, NAVARRE.
23 D. Charles 1.—44 the ſame 1.—21 the ſame 1.—37 the ſame 4.

C THe ſeueritie and integritie of cardinall Ximenes, in the gouernement of affaires, could not be long ſupportable to the Spaniards, who are hautie and proud, and accuſtomed to ſerue their kings being preſent; and much leſſe to the Flemings, who were neere vnto king Charles, who deſirous to make vſe of their credit and authoritie, did ſtill buſie themſelues with the great affaires of Spaine, and made their profit, to the cardinals great griefe, he oppoſing himſelf againſt them in all he could: ſo as all things tended to confuſion, as well among the Spaniards, who deſired the comming of their prince into the countrey, the which might quench 1517
D many quarels, and content thoſe that did enuie the cardinals greatneſſe, as with the noblemen Flemings, who entertained the king in Flanders, vpon diuers colours, thinking it a fit meanes to compaſſe their deſignes, if he did not vndertake this voyage; and in truth theſe had the aduantage, the king being in their power. And to take ſome courſe for the miſchiefes which he feared might happen in Spaine, by reaſon of the kings abſence, it was concluded to ſend the lord of Chaux thither, who had beene much fauoured by king Philip, and was chamberlaine to Charles his ſonne; a man fitter to entertaine a prince with pleaſant diſcourſe, and to keep him companie, than to manage the great affaires of a kingdome. To him was giuen the third place in the gouernement of Caſtille, with cardinall Ximenes, and doctor Adrian, who had procured the comming of this third,
E writing into Flanders, That he was not ſufficient to reſiſt cardinall Ximenes, a hautie man, who (not able to endure a companion) did manage all things at his pleaſure. The comming of Chaux was verie pleaſing to the noblemen, and to the people of Spaine, who were diſcontented with the cardinall, and he was receiued with all royall honours, againſt the which the cardinall did not in any ſort oppoſe himſelfe, ſhewing therein, as in all other things, a great magnanimitie and conſtancie, although he knew that he was ſent to check his authoritie and greatneſſe. All the great noblemen of Spaine, without attending any commaundement from cardinall Ximenes the Viceroy, went to meet him, being accompanied with great numbers of their friends and vaſſals: and comming neere to Madrid, there went forth to incounter him, doctor Adrian, accompanied with two of the Popes
F Nonces, the biſhop of Burgos, D. Anthonie Fonſeca, his brother, and by the commanders of the militarie orders, hauing with them a great traine of commaunders of euerie order, the Rector or gouernour of the towne, the Sheriſes and moſt apparent burgeſſes, the embaſſadours or deputies of Arragon, the royall Councell, the Inquiſition, the chamber of accounts, and other officers of the kings houſe, euerie one going in his ranke and order, with whom there joyned the biſhop of Auila, with the cardinals traine: And of noblemen,

The lord of Chaux third gouernor in Spain by the procurement of doctor Adrian.

1517 blemen, the marqueſſe of Villena, the earle of Vregna, the marqueſſe of Comares and G Aguilar, D. Bertrand de la Cueua, eldeſt ſonne to the duke of Albuquerque, the earle of Orepeſa, and others. Such as were not there were kept backe by a diſeaſe which did run generally ouer all Spaine. Cardinall Ximenes, in regard of his place of Viceroy, ſtayed in the palace, and receiued monſieur de Chaux, at the entrie of the great chamber of the lodging, which was prepared for him, and that night he feaſted him with great ſtate, and entertained him with much pleaſant diſcourſe, lodging him for that time in the chamber where the biſhop of Auila was accuſtomed to lodge, for that the Infant D. Ferdinand, the widow queene Germaine, and the cardinall, were commonly lodged in the caſtle, and held a great part of it. Thus was this nobleman receiued and honoured, being the firſt H that was ſent into Spaine with authoritie, ſince that Charles of Auſtria tooke vpon him the title of king. The great lords of Spaine came to viſit monſieur de Chaux, and courted him: but the cardinall had no great care to impart the affaires vnto him, nor to call him, vnleſſe he came of himſelfe, yet holding ſtill the firſt place in all expeditions, the which he made knowne to him and doctor Adrian; who hauing on a time ſigned ſome Cardinall Ximenes maintaines his authoritie reſolutely. diſpatches, leauing a place for the cardinall to ſigne vnder them, being preſented vnto him thus ſigned, he tare them in peeces, and cauſed others to be made, and ſigned them aboue, the which were of as great effect: And thus he continued vntill the kings com-ming, although before he would haue doctor Adrian ſigne all things with him.

1 The Flemiſh nobilitie being aduertiſed of this harſh proceeding, it made them I thinke, that this cardinall would one day trouble both them and the king: wherefore to abate (as they thought) his greatneſſe, they procured to haue a fourth ſent into Spaine, vnder colour of ſome priuat buſineſſe, with equall authoritie to the reſt. This was Ar-maſtof, a man that was ſomewhat graue: yet they might ſay, that of all that companie the cardinall was moſt judicious, and continued his accuſtomed courſe, notwithſtanding any thing that they could doe. But they ſtayed not here, for they often reſolued in Flanders, to ſend ſome great prince to gouerne Spaine, to whom the cardinall ſhould be forced to yeeld; or ſome other of iudgement and vnderſtanding, to oppoſe him againſt this great ſpirit. Some were of opinion to intreat the Emperour Maximilian to take vpon him this charge; others, Lewis, cont Palatin, allied to the king; and ſome, to giue the au- K thoritie to the Infant D. Ferdinand: many gaue their voyces to the Chancellor Saunage.
As for Maximilian, he was ingaged in the warres of Italie: to aduance Ferdinand, that was not ſafe nor conuenient, and it had beene alwayes their care, which loued the peace and vnion of theſe two brethren, that the Infant ſhould be neerely lookt vnto, leaſt that mu-tines ſhould make him their ſhield. The cont Palatin was held fit, yea to take charge of the Infant, the which did not altogether diſpleaſe the cardinall; for he had deſired euer ſince the death of the Catholike king, to remoue ſuch from about him, as, in his opinion, had bred him vp ill, yet he deſired rather not to obey any one; to which end he writ to Cardinall Ximenes cannot endure a companiõ in the gouernment of Caſtille. the king, beſeeching him, not to ſend any into Spaine, with whom he muſt alwayes quarell, but rather to giue him leaue to retire to his dioceſſe, where hee would looke to his L owne priuat affaires, and liue religiouſly in reſt: for he did foreſee, that the enuie of ſome, and the couetouſneſſe of many, would alwayes ſeeke to croſſe his good deſignes and re-ſolutions to ſerue the commonweale, they tending to no other end, but to cauſe ſome great tumult in Spaine, wherein he deſired not to be ingaged, but rather to looke on a farre off: aduertiſing him, that the onely remedie of theſe inconueniences was, to commit the affaires to his tried faith, and to relie onely vpon him, not ſuffering any Fleming, nor any of his Councell a farre off (no not himſelfe vntill he were at age) to meddle in Spaine with the prouiſion of Eſtates, and order of juſtice, with gouernments of prouin-ces, leuying of the kings money, nor with garriſons of frontires, and their commaunders:
but onely retaine vnto himſelfe the diſpoſition of biſhoprickes being void, commaunde- M ries, and benefices of knights of militarie orders, and to vſe his royall bountie with good Cardinall Ximenes will diuide the royall authoritie betwixt the king and himſelfe. meaſure: his cardinall diuiding betwixt the king and him the royall ſoueraignte, the which euerie man of judgement thought expedient, conſidering his conſtant reſolution to maintaine juſtice and right in all things; adding ſtill this concluding reaſon. For that, ſaid he, the Flemings vnderſtand nothing in our affaires in Spaine, and that the king by reaſon

A reaſon of his tender age, cannot vndergoe ſo great a burthen, full of care and trouble: By reaſon whereof he cauſed himſelfe to be ſo hated, as many Councels were held againſt him, and without doubt his dayes were ſhortened. The courteors diſſembled, expecting but an opportunitie to tumble him from this high degree, in the which hee maintained himſelfe inuincible, againſt their wills, who writ vnto him, That hee ſhould continue to doe well, aſſuring him that they would aſſiſt him with all their meanes, and ſolicite the kings paſſage into Spaine; aduiſing him, for the effecting thereof, to ſend a good armie of ſhips well furniſhed into Flanders. 1517

This voyage was much preſt by the Emperour Maximilian, as moſt neceſſarie, and B therefore he came to Bruſſels to ſee the king, and to conferre with him, fearing leaſt his long ſtay there would cauſe ſome alteration in the State; comparing thoſe people, being moued, to a colt, which being ſtung with a hornet, kickes at euerie one, ſparing not his owne damme. This conference put the cardinall into a jealouſie, writing to monſieur de Cheures, That the enteruiew of great men, did neuer bring profit neither to themſelues, nor to their affaires, prouing it by many examples and great reaſons. The Spaniards ſeeing that the time paſt away in vaine hopes of their princes comming, they began to make conuenticles, and to runne into the courſe (but by another way) of former ſeditions: For, ſayed they, the Flemings not able to forbeare to meddle with the affayres of Spaine, whereof they had made ſhew not to care, they leaue vs not 2
C any eſtate, charge, nor benefice, but it is ſold to them that will giue moſt, and prophaned by vnworthie men: The great treaſures of the realme gathered together, and religiouſly preſerued by cardinall Ximenes, for the kings comming, are ſpoyled by ſtrangers, and tranſported out of Spaine, the which is not tollerable to a free nation, well affected to the honour and greatneſſe of their prince, and to the publicke good. They of Burgos, Leon, Vailledolit, and all that countrey of Spaine, being incenſed with theſe complaints and quarels, they appointed a day to reſolue on ſome remedies for theſe great diſorders, or how they might withſtand the greedineſſe of the Flemiſh courteors. Many thought it fit to perſuade the king to chaſe all Flemings from abont him, and to take Spaniards in their places, ſuch as were vnderſtanding men, to counſell him. Others
D ſayed, That beſides the difficultie to obtaine it, it was to bee feared that Spaine would in ſhort time be as corrupt as the reſt, and more cunning in their villanies; holding, that the beſt courſe to reſtraine the couetouſneſſe of courteors, by a publike decree, by the which power ſhould be taken from the king, to giue the eſtates, offices, or benefices of Spaine to ſtrangers. That there ſhould be no readie money carried out of the countrey without great cauſe, and that no neceſſarie money for the kings houſe, ſhould be ſent by cardinall Ximenes, without conſent of the townes. Many other things of this kind were then propounded, profitable, in truth, for the publike, but derogating ſomewhat from the authoritie and Maieſtie royall: for thereby they did open a gate vnto the people to commit great inſolencies, the which they found by experience, after the death of cardinal
E Ximenes, who moderating what he could the peoples heat, could not preuent the decrees of theſe aſſemblies for the publike good, ſome gouernors conſenting thereunto, and ſigning them, as D. Pedro of Caſtille, at Burgos, and others: yet the Leonnois could neuer induce D. Frederic of Zamora, their gouernour, to conſent vnto ſuch decrees, whereof the towne and Comminalties did afterwards aduertiſe the cardinall and the kings Councell, ſending deputies to treat with them of the affaires of the commonweale afflicted, and to intreat them to appoint a place and time for a generall aſſemblie to that end. The cardinall and the Councell knew well, that the deſire of the townes was juſt, yet they ſought to moderate them, fearing ſome popular tumults, perſuading them to forbeare
F an aſſemblie, vntill they had more certaine newes of the kings comming, who they vnderſtood made preparation to imbarke ſpeedily. In the meane time they did aduertiſe the king of all that had paſt, excuſing the Spaniards, for that they did not in any ſort doubt of the kings good will, and judgement to know, that all the admonitions & counſels which they gaue him, were holy and juſt, but they complained of the Flemings that were about his perſon, who could make their diligences vaine, and get vnto themſelues, both before the kings comming and after, the riches of Spaine without meaſure: ſo as it

Greedineſſe of the Flemings gouerning king Charles.

Demaunds of the townes of Spaine.

Cardinall and Councell fauour the Spaniards demaunds againſt the Flemings.

1517 was thought the Chancellor Sauuage had gotten for his part in leſſe than foure moneths, G
Rapacity of the Flemings. aboue fiue hundred thouſand crownes: and if we will conjecture how monſieur de Cheures and the reſt profited, we cannot imagine what great ſummes theſe theſts amounted vnto. The Spaniards ſeeing the kings comming to be daily delayed, the cardinall and Spaniards demaund the Eſtates. the Councell were againe importuned for a generall aſſemblie of the Eſtates, where they promiſed not to treat of any thing, but to ſolicite the king to come into Spaine, to maintaine the lawes and rights of the countrey; to ſuppreſſe the couetouſneſſe of courteors, and the ambition of ſuters for eſtates and offices: elſe, the people did proteſt, that they would ſend embaſſadours vnto the king, and prouide that the commonweale ſhould take no harme, by ſuch meanes as God ſhould put into their hands. The H cardinall not able with reaſon to denie their juſt demaund, he appointed an aſſemblie in the next moneth of September 1517, protracting it of purpoſe to Autumne, beleeuing that about that time the king might arriue in Spaine; and in the meane time he prepared a fleet of ſhips for his voyage, the which he ſent him, poſts running continually from Spaine to Flanders, and back againe, to aduance this comming, without the which they ſaw no meanes to maintaine the realme in peace: the cardinall holding (and rightly) it to be a pernitious thing, when as the people, hauing cauſe of grieuance, preſumes to complaine publikely: for when as they haue once loſt the reuerence which they owe vnto the ſuperiour, there is no more any reſtraint; and popular complaints and quarels are eaſily receiued and beleeued, by ſuch as haue a deſire to trouble the State, I whereof the number is alwayes great in great realmes. The place aſſigned for the aſſemblie, was at Madrid, the Viceroyes and the Councels place of reſidence. Many ſlanderous libels were at that time caſt abroad, euerie man cenſuring the cardinals actions ac-Libels caſt abroad. cording to his owne conceits: and ſeeing it was now a time of back-biting, and that ſome one had begun, doctor Adrian, monſieur de Cheures, Francis Ruis, monſieur de Chaux, and others, were not ſpared. But cardinall Ximenes contemned theſe things, with a manly courage; ſaying, That they muſt leaue this ſolace to the multitude, to moderate their afflictions, which they could not otherwiſe reuenge; whereas the Flemings, who were not accuſtomed to this ſtinging, ſeemed to be much diſcontented: ſo as it is no wonder if Adrian comming to bee Pope, cauſed the ſtatues of Marforio K and Paſquil to be caſt into the riuer of Tiber, whom they made to carrie the libels that were ſet vp in Rome: whereupon, they ſay, that the Spaniſh embaſſadour which was then in Rome, ſaid vnto him, That it was to be feared, by this drowning the frogs would preſently learne to ſing bad ſongs.

3 The cardinall being come to Toledo, to viſit (attending the kings comming) his dioceſſe, and the monaſteries of Nunnes which he cauſed to be built, as well in that citie as at Illeſca, being accompanied by doctor Adrian, he heard the complaints of the Clergie, for that Pope Leo, by vertue of the laſt decree of the Councell of Latran, demaunded the tenth of the reuenues of all their benefices, vpon colour to defend the Chriſtian religion againſt Infidels; for that Selim Emperour of the Turkes, L
Exactions of Pope Leo hindered by cardinall Ximenes. hauing vanquiſhed the Sultan of Ægypt, did threaten Chriſtendome, and namely Italie: Wherefore he not onely ſent this yeare into Spaine, but into all others regions of Europe, whereas the Popes name and authoritie was reuerenced, to exact this money for three yeares, with many Indulgences and pardons to them that ſhould contribute money willingly, and extraordinarily, whereof there followed great troubles in Chriſtendome, yet with a lightning of the Goſpell.

Cardinall Ximenes, whoſe authoritie was great with the Pope, was ſolicited not onely by the Clergie of Caſtille, but alſo by that of Arragon (where they doe all by an auncient right enjoy great priuiledges and liberties) to take this cauſe in hand, and to bee a mediator vnto the Pope, that the Clergie of Spaine might not bee M made tributarie. The cardinall did willingly offer to take vpon him the protection of this order, but hee did admoniſh them, not to make any aſſemblies to that end, Clergie of Spain free from the exaction of the tenth penie of their benefices. but when hee ſhould commaund them. In the meane time hee did manage this buſineſſe ſo politikely at Rome, by the miniſterie of Artega, his Agent, as hee kept Spaine free from this exaction, but in caſe of great neceſſitie: and hauing

after

A after the manner of auncient kings, called the deputies of the Clergie to the Court at Madrid, he gaue them this good newes, and attended willingly their reſolution, which was, not to contribute any thing. They ſay, that this tenth penie for three yeres, was duly leuied in Italie, in the territories of the Church, and no where elſe, but his Bulls of Indulgences, and the preaching of the Croiſado, was generall. 1517

4 There were many great ſuits in Spaine, which through the fraud and tergiuerſation of parties, and their counſels, were delayed and drawne into length, the which the cardinall deſired to haue determined before the kings comming, but he was ſuſpected: Wherfore three of the greateſt noblemen of Spaine, in a manner at one inſtant, as it were con-
B ſpiring together, did greatly croſſe him, that is, the duke of the Infantazgo, chiefe of the houſe of Mendoſa, D. Frederic of Toledo, duke of Alua, and the earle of Vregna, Giron. The duke of the Infantazgo remembred how that the cardinall had hindered the mariage betwixt D. Pedro Gonſales of Mendoſa, his nephew, and D. Ioane of Ciſneros, the cardinals neece: wherefore being incenſed againſt him, he thought there was ſome indirect dealing with his aduerſe partie, the earle of Caſtro, againſt whom hee had his ſuit, for the place of Belenna, neere vnto Guadalajara; by reaſon whereof he deſired to prolong the cauſe vntill the kings comming, of whom hauing obtained letters for his part, and the cardinall alſo for his part others of a contrarie tenour, to haue the cauſe judged by the kings councell; in the end the cardinall obtained that which he pretended,
C and a ſentence was giuen in fauour of the earle: about which time there comming a promoter from Alcala of Henares, for the cardinall, touching ſome proceedings at Guadalajara, the duke of the Infantazgo cauſed him to be chaſed away with cudgels, threatening to hang this poore petie-fogger, if he returned any more; ſaying, That he did incroach vpon the juriſdiction of his brother D. Bernardin, archdeacon of Guadalajara. For which exceſſe the cardinall gaue it out, that he would be reuenged of the duke, and that he would call him in queſtion, for that religion was violated, in that they had wronged an officer which did belong vnto the Church, and alſo for that the fact was againſt the publike peace, and that he would abate his greatneſſe. The duke being incenſed, and deſirous to braue the cardinall, he ſent a chaplaine of his vnto him, to deliuer him a D meſſage full of diſgrace and threatning. This poore prieſt being forced to goe to Alcala of Henares, whereas the cardinall was, hee fell on his knees before him, and craued leaue to doe his meſſage. They were nothing but reproaches of his baſe condition, growne proud to ſee himſelfe ſo highly aduanced, adding ſome vaine threats, the which did little moue the cardinall, who hauing heard all that hee would ſay with a conſtant countenance, he anſwered him quietly: Goe backe vnto thy maſter, whom thou ſhalt find repenting the fooliſh words which thou haſt deliuered me: and in truth before the prieſt returned, the dukes choler being paſt, he would haue giuen much that he had not ſent him, blaming all his familiar friends and houſhold ſeruants, that they had not pacified his rage, yea hee was diſpleaſed with the chaplaine, for that hee was ſo readie to E obey him. This queſtion, and all the ſpleene which the cardinall had againſt the duke, was afterwards pacified by the conſtable D. Inigo Fernandes of Velaſco, who made them dine together at Fontcarillo, whereas the duke made ſo many excuſes vnto the cardinall, as he remained ſatisfied. They ſay, that after the ceremonie of their reconciliation was ended, the lodging wherein they were was preſently enuironed by Iohn de Spinoſa, captaine of the Viceroyes gard, with his archers and light horſe, the which did amaze the noblemen that were there aſſembled, thinking that it was a plot layed by the cardinall, but hee aſſured them that it was the importune diligence of Spinoſa, who was come thither without any commiſſion, for the which, he ſaid, hee was much offended with him.

Exceſſe committed by the duke of Infantazgo.

Magnanimitie of cardinall Ximenes

Reconciliation of cardinall Ximenes and the duke of Infantazgo.

Policie of cardinall Ximenes to keepe the noblemen in feare.

F The earle of Vregnaes quarell was more daungerous, and harder to be reconciled, the which did produce many violent effects. This earle ſoone after the deceaſe of king Ferdinand, had alſo ſhewed himſelfe oppoſite to cardinall Ximenes, and had aſſiſted D. Pedro his ſonne in the tumult of Medina Sidonia, whom he ſhould rather haue admoniſhed to proceed by way of juſtice. Certaine officers comming to execute a ſentence of the Chancerie of Granado, & to recouer certaine of the kings cuſtomes of Oſona, he had ſent them

1517 away beaten and wounded, notwithſtanding that they ſhewed him letters from cardinall G
Outrage committed by the earle of Vregna Ximenes, who being buſied in other affairs, diſſembled theſe things, vntil ſome fitter opportunitie, the which was offered, when as the cardinall, according to his reſolution to end all old ſuits, would haue the cauſe judged, which depended betwixt the earle of Vregna and D. Guttiere of Quixada, in the court of Chancerie at Vailledolit, for the towne of Villefratre neere vnto Vailledolit, whereof the earle kept forcible poſſeſſion, Quixada purſuing the reſtitution, the which he obtained, whereat the earle being incenſed, he complained, that the ſentence was vniuſt. By vertue whereof an vſher and other miniſters of juſtice comming to Villefratre, to put Quixada in poſſeſſion, they were outragiouſly intreated, and beaten by D. Roderigo Giron, the earles ſonne, D. Bernardin of Velaſco, the con- H Court of parliament violated. ſtables ſonne, D. Bertrand de la Cueua, ſon to the duke of Albuquerque, D. Ferdinand Henriques, ſonne to the Admirall, and other young and ill aduiſed noblemen, who were there preſent: Whereof complaint being made vnto the Court, the Preſident D. Diego Ramires of Villaſcuſan, biſhop of Malaga, notwithſtanding that he was a verie mild man, yet moued with the foulenеſſe of the fact, he commaunded ſome legionarie ſouldiers in Vailledolit, and the neighbour places, to arme, to aſſiſt juſtice, to execute the ſentence of the court, and to puniſh thoſe rebels, going himſelfe in perſon towards Villefratre. The conſtable, who was wiſe, knowing the danger into the which theſe young men did runne, poſted thither, before that the Preſident went to field, and made them abandon the place, and giue way to the execution of the ſentence of the court: whereupon the biſhop I of Malaga diſmiſt his ſouldiers, and thanked the conſtable for this good office, and ſo remained ſatisfied without any further proceeding. But the cardinall, who was not of ſo tractable a nature, was much offended at this fact, adding this to other quarels he had a-Purſuits of the cardinall againſt them that had violated Iuſtice. gainſt the earle of Vregna and his houſe; wherefore he ſent out warrant to apprehend them that had reſiſted the juſtice, and Sarmiento the Prouoſt of the court, to ruine Villefratre, and to make the proceſſe of ſuch as had committed this contempt. The young noblemen, who had left the place by the conſtables perſuaſion, ſeeing that they proceeded criminally againſt them, they returned vnto their old frenzie, and put themſelues againe into Villefratre, with ſome troupes of ſouldiers raiſed at Villapando, a place belonging to the conſtable, being reſolued to keepe it in deſpight of cardinall Ximenes. This K buſineſſe tended to ſedition and great trouble, and many there were which did much blame the cardinals ſeueritie and obſtinacie, to haue purſued theſe noblemen, after ſo good an office done by the conſtable, and their obedience, yea he might aſſure himſelfe that the dukes of the Infantazgo and Alba, would bandie themſelues againſt him, whereby the whole realme, by reaſon of their great alliances and power, would bee drawne into confuſion: But the cardinall was well pleaſed to oppoſe himſelfe againſt great men, ſearching ſuch occaſions ambitiouſly, to ſhew his magnanimitie, dexteritie, and conſtancie to maintaine juſtice. Finally, they proceeded by the courſe of juſtice againſt the aboue named, whoſe names were proclaimed, and they ſummoned to appeare at Madrid and at Vailledolit, and giue an account for violating the lawes L and offending the Majeſtie: and there were declarations ſet vp, according to the ſolemnities of juſtice, obſerued in Spaine in ſuch affaires, vpon paine to bee held conuicted of thoſe crimes, condemned and puniſhed according vnto law: The which did much grieue the fathers of theſe young noblemen, who aſſembled at Tudela, to conſult what was to be done, or, as ſome write, at Portillo; namely, the earle of Benauent, the conſtable, the dukes of Alba and Albuquerque, and a deputie for the duke of the Infantazgo, who knowing the cardinals power, and auſtere diſpoſition, reſolued to proceed in this buſineſſe with all quiet and peaceable meanes: wherefore they ſent vnto him, to deſire him to haue regard vnto the youth of their children; but on the other M ſide they did write vnto the king, complaining of the cardinals ſowre diſpoſition, whereby Spaine was oppreſt, and filled full of troubles. The cardinall in like maner did not faile to aduertiſe the king of what had paſt at Villefratre, and of the raſhneſſe, diſobedience, and contempt of theſe noblemen, omitting nothing of the rigor of juſtice in this action: wherfore there was apparence of ſome great tumult, for theſe noblemē made many aſſemblies, and the biſhop of Zamora was already come to Vailledolit (who was afterwards ſtrangled

in

A in the caſtle of Aquila) and the earle of Alba de Liſta, with troupes of men, in fauour of the earle of Vregna, who notwithſtanding were forced to depart the towne, by the aduice of them of the Chauncerie, for that they did ſolicite the people to ſedition. They did alſo ſurpriſe a packet of the conſtables, directed to the earle of Vregna, to whom he promiſed to rayſe all the countrey of Burgos, and that of the mountaines: whereby it appeared, that the demonſtrations he made to pacifie things, and to bee a neuter in this buſineſſe, were but fained. On the other ſide, the duke of Alba, a ſecret enemie to the cardinall, by reaſon of the commiſſion which he, in his opinion, had purchaſed, to depriue his ſonne of the priorie of Saint Iohn, he offered all his power and meanes to the B duke of Albuquerque, againſt the cardinall. In the meane time the Alcayde proceeded againſt them that were within Villefratre, who to omit nothing that might make their cauſe odious, had made an image attired like a cardinall, the which they cauſed to be dragd vp and downe the towne, in deriſion of cardinall Ximenes: but in the end theſe vaine young lords finding that their forces might not equall the Viceroyes power, they diſlodged by night, and left the place. Then Sarmiento proceeding in the proceſſe, pronounced ſentence, by the which the towne of Villefratre was condemned to be burnt to aſhes, and the ground of it to be ſowne with ſalt, and neuer more to be built, for that the miniſters of royall juſtice had beene outraged there, and the decrees of the court of Vailledolit contemned: the earle of Vregna, Rodrigo his ſonne, and their other C confederats and adherents, conuicted of high treaſon, and condemned to Guttiere of Quixade, in his charges, dammage, and intereſt. This ſentence was preſently put in execution, the towne was reduced to powder, firſt with the canon, and then with fire: ſeuen of the inhabitants which had outraged the vſher, when they did beat him, and cried out, That they knew no other lord but the earle of Vregna, were publikely whipt: a ſeruant of the Admirals being accuſed to haue leuied men ſecretly in fauour of the rebels, was alſo condemned by Sarmiento to be whipt. This ſentence was executed vpon a feſtiuall day, againſt cuſtome and al example. Which rigorous acts did much afflict all the great noblemen of Spaine, among the which the duke of Eſcalona, who was then at Madrid, kept his chamber ſix dayes for griefe, and would not ſpeake to any man; and then being viſited by D. Francis Ruis, biſhop of Auila, he complained much of the cardinals rough and inexorable ſeueritie, a man without friendſhip or humanitie, to haue ſo vilely intreated the earle of Vregna, his kinſman, whereby he would tread vnder his feet the dignitie of great and famous houſes of Spaine, and ſhew himſelfe an enemie to nobilitie. The conſtable, with the duke of the Infantazgo, and other noblemen, gaue the cardinall to vnderſtand, That ſeeing he had proceeded ſo furiouſly againſt Villefratre, to the great contempt and prejudice of the earle of Vregna, he ſhould doe well to ſatisfie himſelfe, and not purſue the houſe of Giron any farther. But the Admirall Henriques, who had neuer ſhewed himſelfe an open enemie to the cardinall, being come to Madrid, ſpake vnto him with great mildneſſe and modeſtie, ſhewing him the wrong he did vnto himſelfe, as well as to the whole E realme (holding the ranke of Archbiſhop of Toledo, and primat) ſo to blemiſh the honor of the great houſes of Spaine, ſo well deſeruing of their kings, not onely in theſe publike executions, but by accuſations and reports written vnto the king, whereof they were well aduertiſed, and other bad offices. Wherefore he admoniſhed him, That if he loued the quiet of the realme, and deſired to doe the king ſeruice, he ſhould moderate his auſtere behauiour, and intreat men and their affaires with more equitie, and leſſe choler. Whereunto the cardinall, with a ſetled ſpirit, anſwered, That he intreated him to thinke, that he was neuer any of thoſe, which ſought to win the fauour of kings, or to maintaine their reputation in the world by crueltie, or doing injurie to any other: but he had endeuoured to acquit himſelfe duly of that great charge which had bin committed vnto him, F to gouerne the realm. And if they would inquire of that which he had written, and of the offices which he had done with the king, they ſhould find he had not bin ſo inciuile as they thought, & as euery one did publiſh, according to his paſſions. As for the proceſſe of Giron, matters were proceeded ſo far, as the king himſelfe did ſet down an order. Thus matters remained in ſuſpence, vntil the king had ſignified his pleaſure, who did approue al the cardinal & juſtice had done, referring the reſt to his judgemẽt: the which the duke of Eſca-

1517

Sentence againſt the town of Villefratre, and the execution thereof.

Complaints againſt cardinall Ximenes.

Admonition of the Admirall of Caſtille to cardinall Ximenes.

Anſwer of cardinall Ximenes to the Admirall of Caſtille.

Proceedings of the cardinall allowed by the king.

1517 lona, with the other friends, kinſmen, and allies of the earle of Vregna, ſeeing they knew G not what to reſolue, but to pacifie the cardinall, ſeeking by all meanes to haue his fauour:
by which meanes they obtained, that the earle repreſenting himſelfe in juſtice, & ſubmitting himſelfe thereunto, all offences were pardoned, D. Francis Ruis, biſhop of Auila, preſiding in counſell, and pronouncing the ſentence.

Cauſes of the duke of Albaes diſcontentment.

The diſcontentment which D. Frederic of Toledo, duke of Alba, had againſt the cardinall, grew for the priorie of S. Iohn of Ieruſalem, of the knights of Rhodes, the which D.
Diego his third ſon held then, & had enioyed it ſix yeres. This dignitie is eſteemed among the greateſt of Spaine, whereof the prior Valenzuela had beene depriued in the life of king Ferdinand, for his ill deſeruings, and D. Aluaro of Eſtuniga canonically aduanced, who H had reſigned it vnto his nephew D. Anthonie of Eſtuniga, with the conſent of king Philip, and confirmation of Pope Leo: but king Ferdinand, after the death of Philip, returning to the gouernment of Caſtille, & deſirous to gratifie the duke of Alba, from whom he had drawne many good ſeruices, he tooke this priorie from D. Anthonie, and did inueſt the aboue named D. Diego of Toledo, againſt the auncient order, and againſt the lawes and cuſtomes of Spaine, begging therein the authoritie of the great maſter of Rhodes, who was diſcontented that the Pope ſhould take vpon him to conferre that priorie to D. Anthonie of Eſtuniga, cauſing the grant of the order to be brought expreſly from Rhodes to that end, D. Anthonie complaining in vaine to the Pope, both of the king and great maſter, who for his laſt refuge retired into Flanders, to king Charles, beſeeching him to I confirme and maintaine that which his father Philip had done: the which hee obtained, when as he was aduertiſed of the death of king Ferdinand; for king Charles did write in his fauour vnto the Pope. And ſo D. Diego of Toledo, and D. Anthonie of Eſtuniga, began to fall to ſuit for this priorie, at Rome, where D. Anthonie did win his cauſe, and got letters of execution from the Pope, with the which, and the Popes fauourable letters, he came vnto king Charles, who ſent him into Spaine to cardinall Ximenes, whom he commaunded to take into his hands all the places of the priorie, admoniſhing the duke of Alba and his ſon, to retire their men, and to referre the controuerſie to him to compromiſe:
and if the duke of Alba ſhould refuſe, he ſhould then cauſe the kings letters and ſentence to be executed, forcing them to obey that ſhould oppoſe themſelues, notwithſtanding a- K ny oppoſitions. The duke of Bejar, with his brother D. Anthonie of Eſtuniga, preſented theſe letters and commaundement from the king to the cardinall: the which the duke of Alba vnderſtanding, being out of hope to procure any delay from the cardinall (for hee was well acquainted with the nature of the man, and knew well that he deſired to ſee this proceſſe, in the which there had paſt many threats and injurious words, ended) hee reſolued to oppoſe himſelfe, and to croſſe his proceedings by force. He had of his part the duke of Eſcalona, and many other noblemen, the which did trouble his aduerſe partie. At that time the cardinall was troubled with a tertian ague, the which did animate the duke of Alba and his partie, and gaue them hope to prolong the proceſſe, and to keepe the poſſeſſion vntill that the king (ſaid they) were better informed. But being ſomewhat recoue- L red of his ſickneſſe, he called both parties, and enioyned them to lay aſide armes, vntill he were better informed of the right. The cardinall would haue the places ſequeſtred, according to the kings letters, wherin ſeeing great difficultie by the practiſes and force vſed on the duke of Albaes part, in the end he propounded to execute the kings letters, brought by D. Anthonie of Eſtuniga: wherein there was a diuiſion among the counſellors, ſome holding that the duke of Albaes cauſe was more juſt; and for that, ſaid they, there was ſome obſcuritie in the letters, not being certaine, whether the duke of Alba referring the matter to the kings arbitrement, might ſtill hold the poſſeſſion, as depoſitarie, vntill the cauſe were ended, or elſe vntil the king ſhold name another depoſitarie, into whoſe hands the places & the priorie ſhould be deliuered, they thought it therefore neceſſarie to haue M another warrant, of which aduice were doctor Adrian & the ſeignior of Chaux. The cardinall banding himſelf againſt all theſe difficulties, he brought all the councel to that point, as they concluded the kings letters ſhould be executed. The duke of Alba forgetting nothing that might helpe his cauſe, imploied in his fauor queene Germaine, the French king, and the king of England, by whoſe meanes king Charles was not ſo reſolute to reſtore
D. An-

A D. Anthonie of Estuniga to his Priory: whereof the Cardinall being aduertised, hee wrote letters of complaint vnto the king, to the Lord of Cheures, and to the whole councell of Flanders, shewing them how necessarie constancie and perseuerance were in such like ordinances and decrees: then hee thought it good to call the duke of Alba vnto him, to whome in the presence of the councell, and the earle of Osorno, hee said friendly, that he should temper the heat which hee saw in him in the pursuite of his rights, and that there would be meanes, if he himself did not hinder it, to reconcile all things without tumult or armes: wherefore he did aduise him to put the priory into the kings hands, to dispose according vnto right and justice, assuring him that if hee did it willingly, hee would B mitigate much of the rigour of the commandement which hee had receiued from the king, and that hee would deliuer the Priorie into the hands of D. Pedro Bazan, who hee knew was much affected to his house, and hee should keepe it vntill the kings comming: promising moreouer that he would then cause the deliuerie of it to D. Anthonie to bee staied for three moneths, that in the meane time hee might worke his best meanes. These conditions were contemned by the Duke of Alba, who departed, saying, that the Cardinall might doe better if hee list, and not derogate any thing from the kings authority: and going from Madrid with this discontent, hee went to his kinsmen and friends, to conferre with them of the enterprize which hee had in his braine, all dissuading him, from opposing himselfe against the Cardinall, witnes C the calamity of them of Villefratre and of the earle of Vregna, for the which they gaue him such reasons, as at that time hee yeelded to their counsels. But falling afterwards into furie, the Cardinal was forced to come to the last remedy, calling together his Legionary companies, both horse and foot, as well to gard and fortifie the councell and justice, as to suppresse the mutines, and keepe them from ioyning together: which forces did incounter and put to rout about a thousand foote and some horse of the duke of Albas, and stript them in the dioceese of Toledo. After which rout the duke comming to himselfe, hee imployed the fauour of Queene Germaine and doctor Adrian, and came to Madrid, where hee was so tractable, as hee yeelded the Priorie at the Cardinals discretion, for hee shewed him with what vprightnesse he pro- D ceeded in this businesse, and let him read the orignall letters hee had receiued of the kings commandement, to the end hee might know it was no cause that hee did affect and seeke, adding that hee should consider with himselfe wherein hee might assist him preseruing his honour, and the king his masters seruice, assuring him that hee would not faile him: to whome the duke made answere, that hee would not intreat any other thing of him, but after that his sonne should be depriued of the priory, the king would remember that their house had alwaies been affectionat to the crowne, and haue regard vnto it: and for that hee had vnderstood that he would leaue the priory in deposito in the hands of D. Ferdinand Andrada who had married D. Francis of Estuniga, kinswoman to his aduerse party, he desired it might be giuen to some other, to the end that E his enemies might haue no subiect to scorne at his calamity. The Cardinall who was alwaies vanquished by them that yeelded vnto, him said, that it was reasonable, ordaining that the Priory should be deliuered into the hands of D. Ferdinand Andrada, & he should instantly redeliuer it to D. Anthonie of Cordoua, brother to the earle of Cabra. These things concluded at Madrid, the duke sent letters to D. Diego his son, to leaue the priory, & by the Cardinal to D. Ferdinand of Andrada, to cease from all acts of hostilitie. Thus the quarrel for the priorie of S. Iohn was ended, the which notwithstāding after the death of Cardinal Ximenes, D. Diego recouered, and enioyed partly with the consent, and partly against the wil of k. Charles himselfe, who decreed that D. Diego of Toledo, and D. Anthonie of Estuniga, should enioy it in common: but D. Anthonie dying at Perpignan, he left the F whole possession to his competitor. 1517

Speech of Cardinall Ximenes to the duke of Alba.

Defeat of the duke of Albas men by the Cardinals companies.

Duke of Alba submits himself to Cardinall Ximenes.

There remained another cause to determine, which the Cardinal did affect: it was the processe of the earle of Ribadeo in Gallicia, of a small circuit, but good, fertile and pleasant; The earle of which place hath this priuiledge, that on twelfe day he dines at the king of Castilles table, & hath the roabe that he weares that day. This earledome had been held by D. Rodrigo of Villandradra, who hauing married two lawfull wiues, and those put away

Controuersie for the earledome of Ribadeo.

1517 away for barrenneſſe, had in the end taken to wife a ſlaue of his made free, called Leonora, by whom he had D. Roderigo his ſonne and only preſumtiue heire, to whom the admiral had giuen a baſe daughter of his to wife. Againſt this D. Roderigo, there contented for the ſucceſſion, D. Maria of Vlloa, maried to the earle of Salines, who was neece to the old earle of Villindrada, daughter to his ſiſter, ſaying, that D. Roderigo was not lawfull; which ſute had beene commenced long before the death of king Ferdinand. Cardinall Ximenes fauoured D. Roderigos cauſe: but as many of the Councell inclined more to the reaſons of D. Maria, the cauſe was ſent to the Chancerie of Vailledolit: yea, D. Maria had ſuch fauour in court, as the title and right was granted vnto her ſonne by the kings letters, the which did much trouble the Cardinall, ſeeing himſelfe vanquiſhed by a woman; he that had gouerned the greateſt Lords of Spaine at his pleaſure.

Authority of Cardinall Ximenes vanquiſhed by a womã

5 This yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and ſeuenteene, Pope Leo created one and thirty Cardinals, among which Doctor Adrian Florent was one, for the which he was much blamed, againſt the which Cardinall de Monte, vncle to Pope Iulio the third, and others, oppoſed themſelues, ſaying, that to make ſo many at one time, was to profane that ſacred order. He had almoſt made Raphael of Vrbin, an excellent painter, Cardinal, to free himſelfe by a hat of a great ſum of money which he ought him for pictures; with which hope being fed, he deferred to marrie with the Neece of the Cardinall of Bibiena, which was offred him, but his ſodaine death depriued the painter both of the one and other.

Profanation of the Cardinals order by Pope Leo.

Cardinall Ximenes being ſolicited by the king and the Flemiſh Lords, to ſend a fleet into Flanders, to conduct him, he rigged out a good number of ſhips, where Gomes of Buytron was admirall, cauſing the ports of Biſcay, Aſturia, and Galicia, to be viſited, for that it was bruted the plague was in many places, appointing victuals and other neceſſaries to be carried to refreſh and eaſe the court, whereſoeuer the fleet ſhould arriue: himſelfe in the meane time leauing Madrid, went towards Aranda of Duero, where hee reſolued to attend the kings comming, that aboade ſeeming vnto him verie healthfull and pleaſant, and by reaſon of the conuent of Franciſcane friers, ſituated in the next village of Aguilera: in paſſing hee made his laſt viſit of Tordelaguna, the place of his birth.

Nauie ſent into Flanders for K. Charles.

6 There were in his company, the Infant D. Ferdinand, doctor Adrian now made Cardinall, and Armaſtof: from Tordelaguna he came to Bozeguillas, a borough in the mountaine, where dyning they did verily beleeue that hee was poiſoned, which made him fall into a lingring conſumption, till hee dyed of it: for hauing dyned hee found himſelfe verie ill, after which there came bloud out at his eares, and at the ioyning of his nayles, the ſuſpition of poiſon was augmented by a certaine horſeman vnknowen, who that morning hauing met neere vnto Bozeguillas the Prouinciall Marquine, with other monkes that went vnto the Cardinall, hee willed them to make haſt to be there before he ſat downe to dinner: and to aduiſe him not to eate of a great trout which ſhould bee ſet before him, for without doubt it was poiſoned: If you arriue ſaid hee, too late, care then for the health of his ſoule, for his body will bee paſt helpe. This ſpeech was deliuered by Marquine, but late vnto the Cardinall, who gaue little credit, ſaying, that if his infirmitie came of poiſon, hee thought it came from Flaunders, and that hee had beene infected at Madrid, by the eyes, in reading of a letter which was brought out of that countrey, ſince which time hee had not beene well; whatſoeuer it were, hee was ready to goe when God ſhould call him, who ſends infirmities, and takes them away at his pleaſure.

Cardinall Ximenes poiſoned.

They obſerue that hee ſaid often to the Phiſitians, that hee ſhould die by the treachery and wickednes of traitors; and it was commonly reported that Francis Carillo, who was ſewer to the Cardinall, hauing eaten of this trout, was verie ſick; and they did vndoubtedly beleeue that the Flemings ſought his death: for they had diſcouered by his letters, that his intent was to procure the king to diſmiſſe them all, and ſend them home to their houſes, and to be ſerued by Spaniards in their places. The blame of this vild act was laid vpon Baracaldo, one of his ſecretaries, who had done other treacheries to the Cardinall his maſter; yet the Cardinall did ſtill vſe his ſeruice vnto his dying day: which breeds ſome doubt whether it were he or ſome other that committed this crime, whereof there were many

A many contrarie arguments. Cardinall Ximenes cauſed himſelfe to bee carried to Aranda, whereas whilſt he ſtriues againſt his infirmitie, the towne of Vailledolit fell into new tumults, vpon a conceit the people had, that the brute of the kings comming was but counterfeit, and that this great preparation was to ſend the infant D. Ferdinand into Flanders: So as Spaine remaining deſtitute of her princes, being in the hands of an old Monke, halfe rotten, and neere his end, muſt of neceſſity bee ruined by inteſtine ſeditions, or be a prey to forein nations. To pacifie this mutiny, and to certifie them of the truth of the kings comming, the Cardinall ſent vnto them, and ſatisfied them. 1517 Tumult of Vailledolit.

7 Hee had yet one exploit to doe which hee thought expedient and neceſſarie, B yet full of enuie, which was to reforme the Infant D. Ferdinands houſe, and to take from him thoſe that had bred him vp and ſerued him, eſpecially D. Pedro Nugnes, of Guzman treaſurer of the Calatraua, his gouernor, and D. Aluaro Oſorio, a Iacobin, biſhop of Aſtorga his ſchoolemaſter: D. Pedro had neuer beene allowed by the Cardinall, in that charge, and he had often ſought to croſſe him, whereupon there grew great hatred betwixt them, the which Oſorio had entertained and increaſed, as well for ſome ambition, wherein hee ſaw himſelfe hindered by the Cardinall, as through emulation which hath beene long betwixt thoſe two orders, the biſhop being a Iacobin, and the Cardinall a Franciſcaine. It was commonly bruted, and euery man did beleeue it; that Oſorio had beene the cauſe and breeder of ſeditions at Vailledolit, and Cardinall Ximenes knewe that C hee did continually maligne him to the Flemiſh lords: that hee ſought to inſinuate himſelfe into the fauour of the emperour Maximilian, and that hee had treated of a marriage betwixt the emperour and Queene Germaine: And many held opinion that D. Pedro Nugnes of Guzman, had had a conceit to carrie the Infant D. Ferdinand into Arragon, with an intent and hope to make him king of that country, whereunto the people would eaſily haue conſented for the memorie and name of their deceaceaſed king D. Ferdinand, who had loued the Infant dearely, and other things (ſome true, ſome falſe) which were ſpoken in Spaine: whatſoeuer was the cauſe D. Pedro Nugnes and the biſhop of Aſtorga were in no grace with the Cardinall; wherefore hee did write often to the king, and cauſed the lords of the councell to be delt with- D all, to haue them diſcharged: ſo as a little before king Charles his comming into Spaine, there was a diſpatch ſent by the king, by the which the Cardinall was commanded to diſcharge D. Pedro Nugnes of Guzman gouernour, D. Aluaro Oſorio Schoole-maſter; D. Gonſalo of Guzman, Chamberlaine, and Sancho de Paredes, ſteward to the Infant, and ſend them home to their houſes, letting them know that the king was verie well ſatisfied with their good ſeruices, but their ages did now require reſt, and that hee would haue regard vnto their merits, and remember them: as for the reſt of the Infants houſe, hee left it to the Cardinall, to diſpoſe as he ſhould think fit. This packet by the Poſt-maſters fault came not to the Cardinals hands before all the contents were diuulged, which cauſed the more difficultie in the execution of the E kings will, for the Poſt-maſter thinking it to be newes how that the king was imbarkt to come into Spaine, he kept the packet fiue daies, before he deliuered it to the Cardinall, to whome it was directed, and in the meane time ſent this good news to the noblemen, to draw preſents from them: then Cardinall Ximenes being ill diſpoſed of his perſon in the conuent of Aguilera, this Poſt-maſter thought it indifferent to giue the packet to Cardinall Adrian or to him, the which he did: Adrian, whether through curioſitie or otherwiſe, opened it, & finding letters directed to the Infant, hee gaue him them, without any further apprehenſion, who by this meanes vnderſtood what was ordained of him, and of his ſeruants, & of the change of his houſe, whereof hee did preſently aduertiſe them, before the Cardinal had ſeen the kings letters: wherwith they being wonderfully diſcontented, and ſeeing no other remedy they implored the Infants aide, which was of no great F moment, beſeeching him to remember their fidelity and good ſeruices, letting him vnderſtand that all this was done to debaſe him, and keep him vnder, at the Cardinals pleaſure, who had procured and practiſed this alteration.

Reformation of the Infant D. Ferdinands houſe by the Cardinall.

Franciſcans and Iacobins inueterate enemies.

Secrets of Cardinall Ximenes diſcouered.

The Infant beeing perſuaded by his Maſters, came the next day in great choler to the Conuent of Aguilera, hauing in his companye the Biſhoppe Oſorio, 1517 Oſorio (for D. Pero Nugnes was ſick:) & doctor Adrian by reaſon of the error which he had committed in opening the pacquet, and giuing the letters to the Infant, before he had imparted them to Cardinall Ximenes, durſt not ſhew himſelfe. G

Intreaty of the infant D. Ferdinand to the Cardinall.

Being come vnto the Cardinall, he complained greatly (and with teares in his eyes) of the wrong he did him, in ſeeking to depriue him without any lawfull cauſe, of ſo good & faithfull ſeruants, the which he would neuer haue beleeued of him, whome hee held to be his deare friend: and thereupon he intreated him, and coniured him by the memorie of Queene Iſabell, and the great aduancement hee had receiued from her, not to ſuffer this indignity to be done vnto him, to take from him ſo worthy a perſon as his gouernour, ſo fit a Schoole-maſter as the biſhop Oſorio, ſo many ſeruants which had attended him faithfully, and with whome hee had beene nouriſhed and bred vp with great content; and that hee would not ſuffer him to receiue that diſpleaſure, to ſee them ignominiouſly and wrongfully diſgraced. The Cardinall ſought by mild words to pacifie the incenſed courage of this Prince, laying before him the king his brothers pleaſure, aſſuring him that all thoſe things tended to his aduancement, ſo as hee would ſhew himſelfe obedient and tractable. As for the iniurie whereof hee complained, hee intreated him to thinke it was otherwiſe, and to beleeue that hee was a man of yeares and experience, and that hee loued him dearely; hee confeſſed that hee ought to haue a care of the honour and good of his ſeruants, but hee muſt withall thinke that the king his brother was dearer vnto him: And therefore hee exhorted him that leauing theſe paſſions which his ſeruants had bred in him, he ſhould wholy adhere to him; who was the greateſt king in Chriſtendome againſt whoſe will it were neither ſafe nor conuenient for him to oppoſe himſelfe; and if hee did perſiſt to complaine, and to ſhew a diſcontentment for that which the king commanded to bee done, hee ſhould bee aſſured that hee would bring himſelfe, his affaires, and his ſeruants into great danger. For all this the Infant D. Ferdinand, (being young and incenſed) was not ſatisfied, but anſwering the Cardinall, I haue, ſaid hee, taſted of your friendſhip in many occaſions, but now it failes mee at my greateſt need, neither doe I know which way it is fled: but ſeeing that I find that you are reſolued to ruine mee and mine, whome you may eaſe and comfort much with a ſmall delay, I muſt of neceſſitie find meanes to defend and preſerue our ſelues. H I K

Cardinall Ximenes inexorable.

Speech of Cardinall Ximenes to the Infant D. Ferdinand.

At theſe words the Cardinall finding himſelfe toucht, Do (ſaid he) what you pleaſe, but I ſweare vnto you by the life of king Charles your brother, that to morrow ſhall not paſſe before his commandements bee executed, the which it behooues you to obey before all others, yea though all Spaine had conſpired to hinder it. This made the Infant take vnto him a manly courage, and to lay aſide or diſſemble his childiſh affections: wherefore hee departed from the Cardinall with a ſetled countenance, & without any ſhew of perturbation, and ſo returned to Aranda, where before his arriuall, hee found himſelfe garded, with the towne and all the approaches, by the ſouldiers of Cabanille, and Eſpinola, captaines of the guard, who were ſent and inſtructed by the Cardinall, who knew how to execute their charge, and keepe the Infant or any of his houſe from attempting any thing. All that night was ſpent in complaints in the Infants lodging, who ſlept not; hee would ſay often that hee would bee reuenged of the Cardinall, and when they asked him what hee would doe againſt a man ſo well garded, and who had all the forces of Spaine at his command: well, I will make ſhew to goe and viſit my mother, and then will I goe where I pleaſe, and the firſt that ſhall offer to hinder mee, let him aſſure himſelfe I will kill him, with other ſuch ſpeeches of a yong man.

Diligence of Cardinall Ximenes to execute his deſires.

L

Day being come, the Infant by the aduice of his ſeruants, ſent to intreat the kings councell, and the Popes two Noncios to come vnto him, to whome hee ſaid: That the king his brother had ſent commandement to take his ſeruants from him, the which was grieuous vnto him, but hee would obey, yet hee intreated them to doe one good Office for an Infant of the houſe of Caſtille, to complaine vnto the king by their letters, of the great wrong was done him, ſeeing they knewe well that they had bred him vp, ſerued and accompained him faithfully and honeſtly: the which M

they

A they promiſed to doe. Cardinall Ximenes by the meanes of Cardinall Adrian, drew D. Pedro Nugnes of Guzman, D. Aluaro Oſorio, and Gonſall de Guzman, to come vnto him vnto the Conuent of Aguilera, to heare the reaſons why they were diſcharged, and to anſwere the complaints they made of him, who hauing heard what hee would ſay vnto them, anſwered and replyed, in the end they ſaide that they were ready to doe that which hee ſhould commaund them; but they intreated him to perſuade the king, (with whome they knew hee had grace and credit) to haue regard vnto their honors and intereſts, and they did wiſely to anſwere ſo, and ſhew themſelues obedient: for if they had done otherwiſe, hee would not haue ſuffe- B red them to returne to Aranda, but would haue ſtayed them priſoners vntill the kings comming; attending the which the charge of the Infant D. Ferdinand was giuen to the Marqueſſe of Aguilar, in the abſence of D. Alfonſo Telles, whome the king had appointed to that place. There were eight and twentie of the Infants ſeruants diſcharged, in whoſe places there were ſubrogated men of baſe condition, and obſcure families, to cut off all occaſions to vndertake great enterpriſes, and this Cardinall was ſo ſeuere as hee would not ſuffer the Infant to haue the young Vicont of Altamire, whome he loued dearely for his dexterity and good faſhion, for that hee was nephew to D. Aluaro Oſorio: There remained onely of all the old Seruants of that houſe Alfonſo Caſtilege, for that being giuen to muſicke and poetrie, hee ſeemed to bee C free from ambition, or any deſire of alteration. Theſe things thus done, being vnderſtood at Court, the lords of the Councell ſent letters from the king to the Cardinall for the Marqueſſe of Aſtorga, and the earle of Lemos, kinſman to D. Pedro Nugnes of Guzman, and to D. Aluaro Oſorio, admoniſhing them not to oppoſe themſelues to any act done by him, but hee did not vouchſafe to giue them theſe letters; ſo confident hee was in the authority which hee held, repreſenting the kings perſon, and ſo hee had often done, not caring much for that which the Spaniards ſuſpected or feared.

1517

Seuerity of Cardinall Ximenes.

The Marqueſſe of Aguilar gouerned himſelfe ſo well with his maſter, as hee himſelfe did write vnto the king his brother, and beſought him not to giue that charge D vnto any other: the which had beene appointed for D. Alfonſo Telles.

Marques of Aguilar gouernour to the Infant D. Ferdinand.

There was a brute throughout Spaine, that the Cardinals infirmity had ſo weakened him, as leauing all affaires, hee liued retyred in his Conuent of friers, not ſeeing any man, and in effect the bloud came more aboundantly out at his eares than before, and hee was much tormented in his body, and as in old men all remedies are difficult and of ſmall effect, they knew not what to hope of him: wherefore D. Pedro Giron watching for all occaſions to mutine, went to Armes, to inuade the countrie of Medina Sidonia, and the Moores alſo hearing theſe newes, did moleſt the coaſt of Granado, making ſpoile of all they incountred, for the which the Cardinall prouided notwithſtanding his infirmitie, for againſt D. Pedro hee oppoſed the E earle of Luna, who kept him in awe, being aſſiſted by D. Anna of Arragon, wife to the duke of Medina, who gaue him her iewels for the charges of the warre. The earle of Vregna his father, remembring the error committed at Villefratre, which was not yet forgotten, hee beſought the Cardinall, not to impute theſe new broiles to him, promiſing that hee would cauſe his ſonne D. Pedro to lay aſide armes, and ſo hee did: yet the Cardinall did write letters vnto the king full of accuſations againſt theſe Girons, perſuading him ſo to puniſh them once for all, as they ſhould haue no more deſire to fall into ſuch errors, and others might take example by them.

D. Pedro Giron cauſeth new troubles.

About that time the Turkes who had newly ſeazed vpon Alger, vnder Horuſco Barberouſſe, meant to make an enterpriſe vpon Oran, which was the Cardinalls conqueſt, and therefore hee did much affect it, and the king being then at Sea, had news F of it, the which did trouble them much, holding it a great loſſe if this landing place in Afrik were taken from the Chriſtians. But God prouided for it, for the Mores and Arabian Africans iealous that the Turkes ſhould ſettle themſelues in their countrie, aſſembled in great multitudes, and incountred them, which came againſt Oran, and defeated them, freeing the Spaniards, who attended a ſiege, from that paine and care.

King

1517 Ariuall of king Charles at the Aſturies.

8 King Charles hauing taken ſhip in Flanders about the beginning of September, G hee came in the end of that month to the moſt vneaſie coaſt of all the Aſturies, about Tazane, a place full of rocks, and not frequented by ſeafaring men, not farre from Villeuicieuſe. The mountaine people of that countrie not knowing what they were which landed vpon their coaſt, hauing put their wiues and children into the moſt inacceſſible places of the mountaines, they betooke them to armes, and ranne in troups to the Sea ſhoare, thinking they had beene French-men or ſome other enemies, which came to ſpoyle the countrie: the which they perceiuing which were yet at ſea, and the king himſelfe, hee commanded to diſplay the royall ſtandard, that hee might bee knowne. The Aſturians diſcouering the Lions and Caſtles, knew that it was their king, and laying H downe their armes, they came to ſalute him vpon their knees, accompaning him to Villeuicieuſe, the which by a good equiuocation they called Villadichoſa, which ſignifies a happy Towne, which ſight was moſt pleaſing vnto the king: there hee reſted himſelfe after his ſea trauell, being accompained by his ſiſter D. Leonora then Queene of Portugall.

There were with him the lord of Cheures, the Chancellor Saunage, Charles of Lanoy, & other Flemiſh lords: and in a ſhort time there came many noblemen of Spaine vnto him, among which were D. Inigo Fernandes of Velaſco the Conſtable, a man of great poſſeſſions, in that barren countrey, being accompained with 700 horſe, all his kinſmen, friends, and vaſſals, who had giuen order that ſtore of victuals ſhould be broght vnto them as they I paſt: there came other noblemen to kiſſe their princes hand, and then they returned preſently, that they might not incõmodate his houſhold and train in the ſtreits of the mountaines, vntill that he were come into a more open country, and better prouided. The Cardinal who lay in his Conuent, ſcarce able to breath, was ſo glad at the news of the kings ariuall, as he left his bed, ſung maſſe, and eat in the Refectorie among the friers, the which did much diſcontent the Flemiſh Courtiers, who deſired that hee had beene dead before that the king ſhould conferre with him; for they were well aduertiſed that hee ſought to chaſe them from the councell, and from all affaires, whereof hee had often treated by his letters and agents with the king wherfore they informed themſelues curiouſly of his phiſitions, how long he would liue, thinking that his death was neer, & therefore they ſtaied K

Practiſes of the Flemiſh courtiers to keepe the king from ſeeing of the Cardinall

the king as long as they could vpon the way, deſiring much that he were dead before the king ſhould ſee him. Some councelled the king to goe firſt and viſit the realme of Arragon, before he ſtaied in Caſtille, the which the Cardinall hindred all he could, informing him of many inconueniences which would happen by that councell: and beſeeching him moſt humbly not to determine any thing touching his publike or priuate affaires, before hee had giuen him a full information of the eſtate of his realme: hee did alſo councel him to ſend the infant D. Ferdinand his brother, as ſoone as might bee into Germany, to the emperour his grandfather, thinking that hee could not take a better reſolution, neither for his owne affaires, nor for the good of the Infant, then to ſend him thither, and to bee a meanes that all, or a good part of Maximilians ſucceſſion might L come vnto him, ſeeing that by the grace of God, he was king and lord of ſo many realmes and rich eſtates.

This councell was followed after the Cardinals death, not at the Flemings ſute, who it may bee had other deſignes, for the lord of Cheures deſired to keep him vnder, & ſoon after would haue had him giue water vnto the king his brother: who, being diſcontented to ſee his brother ſo abaſe himſelf, ſaid, that Ximenes councel was better. Wherupon he ordained that the Infant ſhold be conducted into Germany. The king being come to Saint Vincent of Barquera, D. Anthony of Rojas, Biſhop of Granado, Preſident of the Councell royall (who had beene alwaies oppoſit to the Cardinall) went from Aranda with all the Councell, not making him acquainted therewith, to go and meet with the king; and the M better to excuſe their fact, they would haue carried with them the Infant D. Ferdinand, if the Marqueſſe of Aguilar had not hindred it. The Cardinall finding himſelfe wronged herewith, ſent two of the kings letters to the Preſident, by the which hee and the whole councell were commanded not to depart without him; but they ſtaied not for all that, thinking that the Cardinals authority was much decaied: but hee mooued with this contempt,

A contempt, ſent to the king, complaining of D. Antonio de Roias, and of the councells departure, in contempt of his letters, terming thē forſakers of the commonweale, & of the affaires of eſtate, proteſting, that if before his comming they had preſumed to doe ſuch a thing, he would haue puniſhed them in ſuch ſort, as within 3 dayes both the preſident & the councell had bin renued, and had depriued thē of their dignities with diſgrace: wherfore he beſought him to obſerue the honor and dignity of his councel of Spain, & to cauſe them to returne, to the end they might all togither go to meet him, as it was fit: the which was done to the preſidents great diſcontent and ſhame, who returned with al his train to Aranda. The maſters of accounts did not abandon the cardinall: to whom the admirall Henriques an dother noblemen, who were ready to go & meet the K. offred to go in his company: but he thinking that 1517

B there were other conſiderations in theſe noblemen than in the Senat he gaue them thanks, intreating them to goe before and without him. Winter which comes ſooner, and is more ſharp in the region beyond the mountains, than in other parts of Spaine, preſt the cardinall to leaue the conuent of Aguilera which place was too moiſt for his health: wherfore he remoued to Roa a towne in the county of Siruelas, where he had learned his firſt letters in his infancie, cauſing himſelfe to be caried thither in a cloſe litter, and clad in furs: carrying with him the infant D. Ferdinand. Roa is 16 leagues neerer to Vailledolit than Aranda, and it is a cōmodious place to take the way to Vailedolit or to Segobia, as if it had bin don of purpoſe. For his part hee deſired the court ſhould rather go to Segobia than to Vailledolit, whereas the K. might conſult of his affairs, & aſſemble the ſtates, the which he diſſuaded much at this

C his firſt ariual, ſaying, that their ſpirits were yet inflamed with the forepaſſed mutinies, doubting not but there would be many raſh and impertinent articles preferred, wherefore it was expediēt to deferre it for a time, & to ſuffer thoſe humors to ſettle: being of great importāce, that the people ſhould meet and ſee their prince at the firſt with all humility, obedience and feare, which aduice was contemned, to the great preiudice and danger of the realme.

Aſſembly of the Eſtates diſliked by the cardinal Ximenes at the kings ariuall.

In the mean time there came deputies from Toledo to the king, beſeeching him to chuſe that citie, which was great, ſpacious and healthfull, and ſituated in a fertile countrey, for his firſt abode, the which would haue bin very pleaſing to the cardinall who was archbiſhop of Toledo: but the Flemiſh courtiers took no delight to be ſo far from the ſea: wherefore the king hauing giuen good reception to the deputies, he ſent them back, making choice rather

D of the towne of Vailledolit; but before his comming thither, he would go viſite his mother D. Ioane at Tordeſillas, writing the cauſes vnto the Cardinall, and to his brother D. Ferdinand, which had moued him thereunto: his reſolution ſeemed full of pietie, but conſidering the indiſpoſition of this princeſſe, it was not needfull to conferre ſo long with her of affaires, as he did. During the Kings abode at Tordeſillas, the lodgings were made at Vailledolit, where the Cardinall beganne to find that the Flemings could doe more than he in Spaine, for his ſeruants demanding the lodging of doctor Bernardin for him, being in a wholeſome place, and fit for his infirmity, the harbenger Terremonde refuſed it him, hauing marked it for Queene Germaine, wherein the Cardinall had infinite troubleſome difficulties, being not accuſtomed to intreate, although he obtained it: (it was knowen afterwards, that the duke

E of Alba had beene the motiue of this vnworthy vſage of a man of ſo great authority:) but as for his traine it was lodged in a village without the towne: and yet he muſt haue patience, it auailed him nothing to complayne of this contempt and diſgrace, which he had neuer tried being in a meaner eſtate, no not when the kings D. Ferdinand, and D. Philippe were togeſther in that towne, with a great traine of noblemen and knights, and all their ordinary gards, ſaying, that it was a poore recompence, after ſo much toyle and ſweat, to receiue a wrong in the place of a reward, whereof he blamed the K. officers who were ſtrangers & ignorant of the cuſtoms of Spaine. But the worſt was, when he receiued letters from the K. by the which he was commanded to attend him at Mojados vpon the way to Tordeſillas, where he deſi-

Interuiew betwixt K. Charles and his mother vnneceſſary.

Signe of the Cardinalls diſgrace.

Letter of diſcharge from the Cardinal to the King.

red to confer with him, and to haue his councell in affaires both of his realme and houſe, to

F thend he might diſcharge him of ſo great a burthen, & ſuffer him to retire to his own houſe, to liue in reſt, where God would cōfort & recompence him, for ſo many good offices which he had done for the realm, ſeeing he thought it was not in the power of any man to do it, & that for his part hee would euer remember it, and honour and reuerence him as his father. Theſe letters were written at the perſuaſion of Mote Biſh. of Badajos, an affectionat ſeruant

1517 to the L. of Cheures, & yet much bound to the Cardinall, who hauing receiued them, conceiued ſo great a griefe to ſee himſelfe put backe, as within few hours after he died, his feuer encreaſing which he had gotten the day before theſe ſtrange news: feeling his end to draw neer, he had ſome little cõference with ſome of his people of the mercy of God, & of the vanity of this world, & forgetting no ceremonies which his order & profeſſion required, he recõmended his ſoul to God & to al the Saints, namely, to the virgin Mary, to S. Peter, S Paul, S. Iaques, and S. Michael, but eſpecially to S. Francis, vnder whoſe rule he had liued, and to the protectors and patrons of his church of Toledo, S. Eugenius, and Idelfonſe or Alphonſo. Being thus prouided, & with the praiers & ſuffrages of ſome prieſts which aſſiſted him, he ended his dais, leauing a great griefe to many, but it may be the number of thoſe that were glad of it exceeded. He was no ſooner dead, but 2 Spaniſh captaines Vadillo & Collozo, going out of the Antichamber into the chamber where he died, began to lay hand vpon ſome plate and other things, thinking that all was to be ſackt, but they were balmed by the colonel Spinoſa, D. Alphonſo of Areillan erle of Aguilar, & other noblemen, who were better taught. His body was imbalmed, and being attired in his pontificall robes, he was laid for a time bare faced vpon a rich bed, whereas euery man came and kiſt his hands, being inuited thereunto by the ſound of a trumpet, with promiſe of pardon for their ſins: Then according to his wil, he was carried to Alcala of Henares, where he was founder of that goodly Vniuerſitie, and there with great honour and funerall pomp, he was interred in the church of S. Idelfonſe, as he had ordained, where his tombe is to be ſeene of white marble, with his Image in his archbiſhops weed, excellently well cut, enuironed with a grate of yron, whereas are 16 ſpaces, repreſenting the deeds of this Prelate, artificially grauen. The people of Alcala ſhewed him ſmall reuerence, for preſently after his funerall they went and beat downe and raſed the houſes and farmes, which he had cauſed to be built without the towne for Benedict his nephew: and they of the vniuerſity and colledge of S. Idelfonſe diſannulled many things which he had brought in, and chaſed away the chanon Cardegna, who was treaſurer and ſuperintendent of that colledge. Such was the end of this cardinall, a famous man for his great wiſdome & iudgement in the gouernment of the affaires of ſtate, conſtancie in his reſolutions, and magnanimitie in the execution of his enterpriſes, ſeuere, rigorous, and inexorable: a terror to great men, not yielding to force nor flattery, being exceeding ambitious & deſirous of honor, the which he ſhewed in his ſower diſpoſition, fit for them that gouerne great Eſtates. His conſtitution of body did repreſent the qualities of his mind, for he was of a great ſtature, ſtrong & luſtie: his pace was graue, his voice ſtrong & firm, his face long and drie, a large forehead without any wrinckles, reaſonable big eies, hollow, but quicke ſighted, and alwayes moiſt, long noſed & crooked like an Egle; his great teeth ſtucke out, ſo as ſome called him Elephant, & thick lipt. His skull being found in the yere 1565 in the vault where it had bin laied, ſeemed to be all of one peece without any ſeame: he deliuered his conceptions in few words, & neuer ſtraid frõ the purpoſe, no not in his greateſt choler: if he promiſed to do any man good, he always performed more than he ſpake: he did ſeldome vſe to ieſt, yet he took delight to heare them that were quick conceited, & would laugh at them that were pleſant in their ſpeeches: he kept a mad man, who ſomtimes had bin learned & a diuine, & was delighted to heare him reherſe many paſſages which he had retained, the which he repeated without any reaſon, & yet ſomtimes not ill applied: he would be pleaſant with a Spaniſh captaine called Maderol, who had made many promiſes, but done little good in all his life, counſelling him to become a monk to do penance for his ſins: & in theſe things he recreated his ſpirits, being charged with great affairs. Finally, he loued learning, & to heare the diſputations of learned men, & oftentimes of yong ſcholers. This prelat being well informed of the great profit which the world might draw from the knowledge of tongs he did intertain men that were learned in them: & to imploy thẽ in matters fit for his religious profeſſion, & to the end the ſtudious of the holy ſcripture might taſt the word of God frõ the original ſprings, he cauſed the bible to be printed in many tongs: that is, the book of the old teſtament diſtinguiſhed into 3 parts, whereof the firſt contained the Hebrue text, the ſecond the cõmon tranſlation into Latin which we vſe: & the third the Greeke of the 70 Interpretors, with his tranſlation in Latin. As for the new Teſtament it contained the Greek text, & the common tranſlation in Latin, very well corrected: and in the end of the volume, a dictionary of Hebrew words interpreted, very ample & copious; a Death of the Cardinall frier Francis Ximenes of Ciſneros.

Cardinall Ximenes little reſpected by the people and vniuerſitie of Alcala.

9 Diſpoſition of Cardinall Ximenes.

Bible printed in many tongues.

A a worke of great labour, sumptuous and stately, witnessing the greatnes of this cardinalls courage, who was not danted with any difficulty. Herein he vsed the care, learning, and iudgement of Demetrius Candiot, John of Vergara, Anthony Nebritencis, Lopes of Estuniga, Fernand of Vailledolit, worthy professors in the Greek and Latin tongs; Alphonso of Alcala a philition, Paul Cornel, and Alphanso Zamora, learned men in the Hebrew tong. These men were very careful to examine the old volumes that were most correct and approued of both testaments, wherein they had no small help and ease by the library of the Vatican at Rome, through the bounty of Pope Leo, who refused not any thing to cardinall Ximenes. The Latin explication of the translation of the 70 Interpreters, was the worke of Demetrius, of Fernand of Vailledolit, and of Alphonso of Estuniga, assisted by some of their B disciples learned men, Iohn Vergara was also inuited and called by them to take part of this charge, who interpreted some of those bookes which he was wont to call Sapientiales: as Ecclesiasticus, the which he could not finish as he desired, by reason of his indispositiō; for hee had an intent to make large Annotations. The Bible was begun by these men in the yeare 1502, who spent 15 whole yeares, with great care and toile to turne ouer infinite volumes and copies, gathered together from many parts of the world, with wonderful charge, for proofe wherof Gometius saies, that he had often heard Alphonso Zamora, professor in the Hebrew tongue, affirme, that for 7 Hebrew copies which are kept in the Vniuersitie of Alcala of Henares, were payed 4000 crownes of gold. Being ended by Iohn Brocario of Alcala, it was dedicated to pope Leo, whereof the world hath receiued C great profit. This Cardinall hauing his mind continually attentiue to great matters, was somtimes oppresst with melancholy, which made him to vndertake things rather through furie than councell, but very seldome, as the conuersion of the Moores of Granado, and the enterprises of Afrike, attepted with too great affection & zeale without any ground. The quarrels which he had with great mē with such obstinatiō as we haue said, proceeded frō the loue of Iustice, magnanimity & vertue: for he would teach them to liue according to equity. The chanons of Toledo were his chiefe councellors, without whose aduice he would neuer attempt any thing of importāce: he would, as it was fit, that whatsoeuer had bin decreed after mature deliberation, should be instantly put in execution: he censured of mens errors, not by the effect, but by the intent. Although in publike affaires, he were D impatient of al reply, & bold speech, yet in that which concerned himselfe, he often indured the liberty of another mans tong: the which he shewed to Contrera the preacher, who blaming him one day in his presence, for that he being a frier did often weare sables & other rich furres, he was inuited to dine with him, where he commended his preaching, but he excused that which he did reprehend in him, saying, that men aduanced to dignity and great charges, had need of precious ornaments, and rich attire, as well on their persons as in their houses, for that doth breed maiesty in him, and causeth reuerence in subiects. They write that these ornaments were vsed superficially by the Cardinal, for, as for his vnder habit and his sleeping, he alwayes carried himselfe according to the Order of Saint Francis: he daily said his prayers, either alone, or accompanied, the doore being shut, that E he might not be diuerted. He had great compassion of great persons vnworthily afflicted, and did releeue them with mony, as to D. Guiomar of Castro ducheesse of Nagera, being chased from her house by her husband, whom he did nourish and comfort in the city of Toledo with as great honor, as the duke himselfe could haue done her, blaming his churlishnes the more, for that he had bin made duke by king Henry the fourth in fauor of this woman, with whom, as we haue said, he seemed to be in loue.

When there was any great benefice void in the church of Toledo, hee gaue it either to the sonne of some prince or great nobleman, or to some one of the learnedest men of Spaine; saying, That nobility gaue fauour, and learning authority to the clergie: fF nally, hee was liberall, and very charitable to the poore, and careful of his household seruants. He spent a good part of his reuenues in religious buildings, which preserue his memorie: as at Tordelaguna, where hee was borne the conuent of Franciscan friers, intitled of the virgine Mary, a goodly and stately worke: at Toledo the conuent of Saint Iohn penitent: and one of the like title at Alcala of Henares; two Conuents, one of Franciscans, and the other of Iacobins, in the city of Oran: but aboue all, the building

Men imployed to peruse the Bible.

Cardinall Ximenes oppresst with melancholy

A louer of iustice.

Execution must be speedie after mature deliberation.

Cardinall Ximenes, though a frier, yet he wēt richly apparelled.

Discretion in giuing of benefices.

Buildings made at the charge of Cardinall Ximenes.

1518 of the colledge of Saint Idelfonſe or Alphonſo, in the vniuerſitie of Alcala of Henares is G moſt famous, and the inſtitution of the company, which ſhould be all Diuines. This man was ſo ſeuere, as he had attempted to reduce all the Orders of monkes to their ancient and firſt ſimplicitie and puritie. After this prelats death, D. Alphonſo of Arragon archbiſh-of Saragoſſe, baſe ſonne to the deceaſed king D. Ferdinand, came to Tordeſillas, to ſalute the king his nephew, and alſo to get the archbiſhopricke of Toledo, if he might; but the lord of Cheures, who would haue it for William of Crouy his nephew, ſtayed his comming, ſo as this prince was forced to go to Vailledolit, there to attend the King, who hauing ſeen him, and complayning to all the noblemen of Spaine, of the wrong the lord of Cheures had done him, he returnd into Arragon, fruſtrate of that which he pretended.

12 The king hauing cauſed the Eſtates of Caſtille to aſſemble at Vailledolit, in Sep- H tember 1518, he was declared king of Caſtille, Toledo, Granado, and other dependances in Spaine; hee receiued and tooke the othe after the accuſtomed manner: wherein Coronation of King Charles the firſt of that name. there was ſome difficultie made by ſome great noblemen, for that Queene Ioane his mother did yet liue; notwithſtanding it paſt: and hauing there ordayned many things touching the gouernement of Caſtille, he paſt into Arragon, to haue alike aſſembly and ſolemnity, in regard of thoſe realmes and the lands depending. Being in Arragon he was ſolicited to ſend embaſſadors to Mompellier, to conferre with the deputies of the French king, and of Henrie of Albret, touching the rights of the realme of Nauarre, held and en-ioyed by him, in the name of D. Ioane his mother, and his owne, by hereditary title, whereof there had bin another parliament held at Noion: whither were ſent the lord of Cheu- I Conference of deputies touching the realme of Nauarre. res, the chancellor Iohn Sauuage, who was of Bruges, D. Ant. of Eſtuniga one of the priors of S Iohn, the great commander of Caſtille, doctor Carualal, with other knights and learned men: but all this conference was to no effect, for he that was in poſſeſſion, would hold it: beſides Arthur Goiffier, L. of Boiſſi dying, was a hinderance to it. At that time D.
Ant. Manriques duke of Nagera was viceroy of Nauarre, hauing for aſſiſtant D. Roderigo of Mercado biſhop of Auila, at which time the new king Charles had cauſed the marſhall D.
Pedro of Nauarre to be deliuered out of priſon, being in the caſtle of Atienſa, & preſt him much to take the othe, & to do him homage, as to his king; but he who bare an affection to his maſter, refuſed it: by reaſon whereof he ended his dais in the priſon of Simancas. The K. being at Barcelone he had news of his election to the empire of Germany: wherefore K he went towards Vailledolit, to make preparation for his iorny, & order for the affaires of Caſtille, which were very confuſed. But hee was forced to make haſt, and to leaue many 13 things vndecided, being aduertiſed of the conſpiracies & leagues betwixt the towns and Charles choſen emperour of Germany. great lords of the realme, for the defence of the priuiledges and liberties of the countrey, againſt the greedines & vſurpations of the Flemiſh councelors, who gouerned this yong prince: among the which the chiefe was, as we haue ſaid, the L. of Cheurs. The K. for that he would not be ingaged in theſe Spaniſh mutinies, with whoſe humours he was not acquainted, he parted as it were flying away, & imbarked at the Groin, a famous port in Galicia, leauing for gouernors cardinal Adrian, & the conſtable. D. Inigo Fernandes of Velaſ- L co, to whom he afterwards ioyned D. Frederic Henriques, great admirall of Caſtille. Being landed in the low countries, he went preſently to Aix la Chapelle, where he receiued the Departure of the emperour Charles out of Caſtille forced. imperiall crowne, in the yere 1520, being 20 yeres old. The firſt Acts of his gouernment, were to ſuppres by mild & quiet means the doctrine preached by Luther, which increaſed much in Germany. To this end, & for ſome other matters of importance concerning the empire, he cauſed the princes and eſtates to aſſemble at Worms, wheras Luther appeared hauing a paſport, and was heard diſputing againſt doctor Eckius & others, but there came no fruits of it. But in Spaine there grew great ſeditions and tumults, in the towns and prouinces of Caſtille, many townes & noblemen complaining of the breach of the lawes and 14 priuiledges of the realme, and of the bad gouernment of the Flemiſh lords, who by their M Ciuile warre in Caſtille. great couetouſnes, had drawne vnto them great ſums of mony, vnder the kings authority, vſurped the eſtates, offices, & benefices of the realme, & cauſed a profanation in a manner of all things, as if they had bin in a country of conqueſt: ſo as the people being moued vpon ſo apparent occaſions, the exceſſe and troubles which ciuile diſſentions are accuſtomed to produce, followed ſoone after.

Cardinall

1519

A Cardinall Adrian & the conſtable thinking to ſuppreſſe this miſchiefe in the breeding, made the fire greater; for hauing ſent againſt thē of Segobia, Ronquillo Alcaide or prouoſt of the court, a man of a ſower diſpoſition, rigorous in his executions, & proud and inſolēt in his threats, hauing made the ſummations & ſolemnities required in Iuſtice, he began to burne, ruine, cut & pul vp, take & kil al that he found about Segobia: whereat the inhabitants of Toledo being incenſed, they took armes and went to field chaſing away this prouoſt. They being once armed in one place, the ſedition grew generall: Burgos, Vailledolit, Salamāca, Auila, Zamora, Leon, Toro, and other chiefe places rebelled openly, & had many noblemen & knights of their faction, yet they were more led by their owne priuate intereſts then the publike good. The deputies of all theſe cities thus mutined came to A-

B uila, where they made a league with the noblemen, the principall whereof were D. Iohn de Padilla of Toledo, D. Anthony d'Acugna biſhop of Zamora, D. Pedro Giron, of whom mention hath bin often made. Cardinall Adrian had bin already forced to flie from Vailledolit, by the help of a prieſt, who conueied him away by night, breaking a piece of the towne wall, notwithſtanding that D. Pedro Giron & D. Iohn de Padilla had aſſured him that there was nothing intended againſt him, & that his innocencie was well knowen. The preſident and councellors of the Audience and Chancery were in like maner fled, of the which doctor Vargas eſcaped by a ſinke. The people being maſters in all the towns made choice of captains of their owne ſort, ſmiths, belfounders, skinners, tailers and ſuch like, who forgat nothing to make them deteſtable, in all couetouſneſſe, cruelty, and other wicked actions.

C At Segobia they did hang the rector betwixt 2 ſergeants, thinking to aduiſe them ſomething for the good of the publike peace: they of Auila did raſe the houſe of Pedro Ponce, for that he would not ſigne the league with the reſt. The conſtable was chaſed from Burgos, who with the earle of Alua de Liſta and others were purſued by the conſpirators with publike Edicts, who had ſommoned with ſolemnities and order of iuſtice, all the princes and great noblemen of the realme to ioyne with them, for the defence, ſaid they, of the lawes & liberties of Spaine: in default wherof to proceed againſt them as traitors to their country. The gouernors ſeeing this great reuolt, furniſhed themſelues with armes & all other means to defend themſelues & to ſuppreſſe the rebells. Anthony Fonſeca being ſent Medina del Campo, with a good number of horſe, to bring the artilery which was kept in

D the ſtorehouſe of that town, he found ſuch reſiſtance, as he was forced, partly through choler, & partly by a ſtratagem of war, to ſet fire in diuers parts of the town, to the end he might draw the people (who were earneſt to defend the artillery) to go & ſaue their houſes which were on fire: but their obſtinacie was ſuch as they had rather ſuffer their goods to be burnt, then abādon the artillery to Fonſeca, who was forced to returne without it: ſo vpon this occaſion they of Medina ioyned with the league: In which towne there was great ſtore of merchādiſe of all ſorts, mouables & other riches of ineſtimable value burnt. The conſpirators hauing put their army to field ſeiſed vpon Tordeſillas, where Q. Ioane (being diſtract) kept, her they ſaluted for their Q. & gaue her a gard of 300 prieſts, leuied by the Biſh. of Zamora in his dioces, whom he commanded to ſweare and renounce God, &

E to looke like ſouldiers: and if hee did ſee any one that did handle his portaiſe, hee would beate him with a cudgell. The emperor being aduertiſed of all theſe miſeries, hee wrote vnto the Admirall D. Frederic Henriques, which was then in Cattelogne, to take the charge of gouernor with the reſt, & to ſeek by all means to pacifie thoſe troubles. D Frederic ioyned with the gouernors with equall authority & did what he could to pacifie al, notwithſtanding that the Confederats had taken and ſpoiled Vruegna, Tordehumes, and Villabraſſica, lands belonging vnto him, & had ſackt his brothers palace, & committed other indignities in contempt of him, and to his preiudice, yet notwithſtanding hee went and ſent diuers times to the rebells: but the diſeaſe required a ſharper remedy: for

F in trueth there was no more any queſtion to reforme abuſes, and correct the faults of the common weale: all were now growen into a furie to ouerthrow the eſtate. As for the noblemen and knights their owne greedy deſires had thruſt them into armes. D. Pedro Giron would be duke of Medina Sidonia, and win his cauſe by the ſword, D. Iohn de Padilla promiſed to himſelfe the maſterſhip of S. Iaques, others hauing priuat quarrelles, would bereuenged and ſpoyle their enemies: and as for the Townes, if their firſt motion had Exceſſe of Ronquillo prouoſt of the court.

Townes conſpired.

Inſolencie againſt the Cardinall's and the Kings officers.

Tordeſillas taken by the conſpirators.

1520 ſome lawfull cauſe, their manner of proceeding, and their forme of demaunding, had G ſpoyled all, and made them and their cauſe odious: wherefore the war beganne to grow hote: Iohn de Padilla, and Iohn Brauo being come to Villapanda, with part of the forces of the League, it ſeemed to the emperors captaines that an opportunitie was offered, to re-couer Todeſillas, and to deliuer Queene Ioane, who was held as a priſoner by the rebels: Tordeſillas recouered. the which ſucceeded well without anie great loſſe or difficultie, for the place was not ſtrong: There were many of the ſeditious taken there: Tordeſillas was ſackt, yea the Queene and her ſeruants lodgings, yet all was reſtored vnto them againe. It is written, that when they battred the towne, a prieſt of the biſhop of Zamoras being behind a loop hole ſlew 11 men with his peece; and to diſcharge himſelfe ſomewhat of this guilt, or to giue ſome eaſe to his ſoule at whom he aimd, at euery ſhot he made a croſſe with his har- H quebuze: In the end this prieſt was ſlaine with an arrow. After this prize the Conſtable and the Admirall who were commaunders for the emperour, marched againſt the enemies, who went towards Toro, with an intent to ioyne with their other confederats, who Battell of Villa Lara, and defeat of the rebells. had gathered togither a rable of 8000 raſcalls out of the townes and dioceſſe of Zamora, but they were ouertaken neere vnto Villa Lara, and fought with: where notwithſtanding that they had great numbers of men, and that Padilla and Brauo performed the parts of valiant and hardy captaines, yet they were defeated and taken. This defeat pacified all tumults, and made them all more quiet. The confederate cities laboured euery one apart to returne into fauour, and did eaſily obtayne pardon, yea the city of Burgos before this rout had left the ſocietie of the reſt. The biſhop of Zamora hearing of the defeat of I Puniſhment of rebells. his companions, thought to eſcape, but he was ſtaied in Nauarre, and afterwards ſtrangled. D. Iohn of Padilla and Iohn Brauo were condemned to looſe their heads: D. Maria wife to Iohn of Padilla, fell into the like miſerie, a woman of a great courage, but decei-ued by the falſe predictions of diuines and ſorcerers, whom ſhe beleeued: their palace at Toledo, by the ſame ſentence was ruined, and the ſoyle ſowen with ſalt, and therein a pillar erected, for a perpetuall memorie of their rebellion: D. Pedro Giron who had left the other conſpirators, by the perſuaſion of his friends and kinſmen (whereof the Con-ſtable was the chiefe) was confined to Oran, with many other knights. Many men of leſſe note felt the rigor of Iuſtice; and many alſo were pardoned. Thus ended the ciuile warre and ſedition in Spaine, which grew by reaſon of the exceſſe and violent gouerne- K ment of the Flemings, who ſuffered the Spaniards to end it, whileſt that they were Iudges of their puniſhments and rewardes, for that the emperour was gouerned by their councell.

Nauarre. 15 Whenas this rebellion in Caſtille happened, the gouernours finding themſelues weake and ill prouided of many things, they were forced to vſe the ſouldiers which were in the garriſons of Nauarre, and to draw many peeces of ordonance, out of Pampelone, and places of that realme, which gaue occaſion to ſome well affected to the houſe of Albret and Foix, and to Henry of Albret the true heire of that realme, to haue ſecret intelligences, in Bearn and in Fraunce, in whoſe fauour king Francis ſent Andrew of Foix, L Lord of Aſperraut, or Eſparre yonger brother to Odet of Foix Lord of Lautrech, who being receiued by them of the faction of Gramont tooke the caſtle of Saint Iohn de Pied de Pampelone abandoned by the Caſtillans. Port: wherefore D. Anthonie Manrique Duke of Nagera finding himſelfe ſurprized, the city of Pampelone beginning alſo to mutine, he left it, and returned into Caſtille, abandoning his houſe to the ſacke of the people.

16 At that time there was in Nauarre following armes, Inigo of Loyola, the firſt author of the Ieſuits, an obſtinate enemy to the houſe of Albret, who whenas the viceroy Beginning of the Ieſuites. Manrique diſlodged, remained in the caſtle of Pampelone in garriſon, with the other ſouldiers of the emperour. It hapned that this caſtle being aſſailed by the people, there was a canon ſhot made by them of the towne, at a certaine place, whereas this man had M both his feet ſo bruiſed with ſtones which the bullet had ſcattred, as hee fell from the top of the caſtle to the bottome, but being ordained for an inſtrument to this new kinde of plant in the church, he was taken vp, and his life preſerued. He was ſonne to Bertrand of Inigo of Loyola and his familie. Loyola and Ognez in the prouince of Guipuſcoa, in the iuriſdiction of Aſpeytia, which in old time was called Miranda of Yraurgui. After this miſchance he was carried to his fathers

A thers houſe at Loyola, which is in the middeſt of the prouince of Guipuſcoa, where ſeeing himſelfe maimed and vnable euer after to beare armes, he changed his mind and profeſſion, and quitting the world, he gaue himſelfe to ſpirituall things, following the direction which he had, according to the religion which was then eſteemed amongſt men: His firſt religious exploit was to goe and viſit the place of Monſerrat, where hee ſpent nine days; then he gaue all his goods vnto the poore, and retired himſelfe into the mountaines of Manreſa, where hee began to lead a ſolitarie life, for the ſpace of ſeuen months. Afterwards he went to Barcelona, from whence he paſt by ſea to Venice, and finding the pilgrims ſhip ready to depart, he put himſelfe into it, & went to Paleſtina to ſeek the places of that land whereof mention is made in the holy Scripture: but the father gardian of
B the Franciſcans of mount Sion forced him to returne: and for that hee was but ignorant, he began to ſtudy his Grammar at Barcelona, after which he frequented the vniuerſitie of Alcala of Henares, going always bare footed, although he were lame, which maner of liuing many did interpret to be very ſuperſtition: wherefore he was apprehended, and let goe againe by the iudgement of doctor Iohn of Figueroa, with charge that he ſhould goe no more bare footed: this made him leaue Alcala and goe to Salamanca, where he was more derided: wherfore ſeeing himſelfe croſt in his ſtudies by theſe perſecutions, he left Spaine and came to Paris, where he heard maſter Peter Faber, and there he remained not long, being vext by ſome and ſupported by others, in the end allowed by maſter Ori, they
C held an opinion that he was a holy man, and of a ſcholer he became a maſter, hauing for his followers his maſter Peter Faber, Diego Laynes, Iohn Coduri, Claude Gay, Paſqual Brouet, Francis Xauierre, Alphonſo Sameron, Simon Rodrigues, and Nicholas of Bouadilla, ſtudents in diuinitie, all which ſubmitted themſelues to an Order ſet downe by Inigo, and did vow perpetuall pouertie & chaſtitie. Hauing wrought this in France, he returned into Spaine, honored with the degree of Maſter in the vniuerſitie of Paris, and retired himſelfe to the place of his birth, not to his fathers houſe of Loyola, but to the hoſpitall of Aſpeytia, and would not be knowne: there he began to preach, as well in the church of Saint Sebaſtian of Soreaſu, as in other places of that countrey, with ſo great a concourſe and repution, as it was (ſaid they) wonderfull, ſo as in the end being diſcouered by a clerke of D Nauarre, who had ſtudied at Paris, he was made knowne vnto his parents, who ſought by all means poſſible to retire him from that begging kind of life, but in vaine. Hee had concluded with his companions abouenamed, to make a voyage with them to the holie Land, wherefore he went to meet them at Venice where the Rendez-vous was: from whence they went to Rome, and ſtayed there all Lent in the yeare 1537, and obtayned leaue of pope Paul the third to performe their pilgrimage: whereupon they returned to Venice, but finding that the paſſage was ſtopt by reaſon of the warre betwixt that commonweale and the Turke, they were forced to ſtay there, and by that means the Ieſuits were firſt knowne in Italie, not without great croſſes, from the which they were delinered by the iudgement of Gaſpar of Ottis, who diſputed in their cauſe. Deſirous to be of E greater fame, they got leaue to heare in Confeſſion, and ſome of them receiued Orders to ſay maſſe; then they diſperſed themſelues in the Venetians terriorie, preaching and doing other workes of their profeſſion, purchaſing great fame, eſpecially with the ignorant, ſo as in the yeare 1538 they came all to Rome, whereas they obtayned from pope Paul confirmation & approbation of their maner of liuing, and of the ſtatutes and orders of their ſect, by the aid and fauor of cardinall Contareno, and they were receiued vnder the protection of the ſea of Rome, but only viuæ vocis oraculo, referring them for the expedition of the perpetuation of their ſect, to cardinall Guidiccion of Luca, the which was effected with the more eaſe, foraſmuch as there were at that time in Rome, doctor Iohn of Figueroa, maſter Ori, and Gaſpar of Ottis, who gaue ample information of the life, man-
F ners and intention of Inigo of Loyola, whom they had knowne at Alcala, Paris and Venice. Cardinall Guidiccion, notwithſtanding that hee had a little before ſet forth a booke De non multiplicandis religionibus, not only imbraced and allowed them, but became their ſolicitor: wherefore they were confirmed and allowed by letters and bulles, the firſt of October 1540, giuen at Tiuoli, vnder the name and title of the company of Ieſus, with liberty to receiue into their company, being then but tenne, to the number of threeſcore;

1521

Studies of Inigo of Loyola.

Firſt Ieſuits.

Sect of Ieſuits confirmed at Rome.

Cardinall Guidiccion firſt patron to the Ieſuits.

by

1521 by prouiſion. The eleuenth which was retayned into this Order was called Anthony of Araos, borne at Vergara in Guipuſcoa. D. Iohn the third king of Portugall, being aduertiſed of this new brood, by his embaſſador D. Pedro Mazcaneras, deſired to haue ſome into his countrey: wherefore he cauſed ſuit to bee made vnto the Pope, to ſend ſome vnto him: For this cauſe there were ſent into Portugall, Francis Xauierre a Nauarrois, and Simon Rodrigues a Portugall, brothers of this Company of Ieſus: Simon Rodrigues remained in Portugall, Xauierre paſt to the Eaſt Indies to preach, and there died. In the yeare 1543 they had leaue from pope Paul to increaſe their number as much as they would, and to receiue all that would enter into the Order: and then in the yeare 1545 hee graunted them all the priuiledges, faculties and graces which they now enioy. Afterwards Peter Fabri and Anthony of Araos came into Caſtille, and conſequently the reſt, ſo as Spaine hath neuer wanted of this brood. After the death of Paul the third, pope Iulio de Monte his ſucceſſor, did in a manner beginne the firſt Acts of his papacie, by a confirmation of this Order in the yeare 1550. By the conuerſation of doctor Anthony of Araos, D. Franciſco Borgia and of Arragon, Duke of Gandie and Marqueſſe of Lombay, conceiued a great loue to this ſect, in the which he was the more confirmed by the perſuaſion of his wife D. Leonora de Caſtro, a Portugall, much deuoted to the Ieſuits: ſo as D. Franciſco went out of Spaine with this doctor, who was the firſt Prouinciall of Caſtille, towards Rome, where he reſolued to make himſelfe a Ieſuite, and to leaue his temporall eſtates, whereunto he was admitted by father Inigo of Loyola, author of that Order. The duke and doctor Anthonie being returned into Spaine, the duke made renunciation of the duchie of Gandie, and of his other lands, vnto his ſonne D. Charles Borgia and of Arragon, in the Ieſuits Colledge of Ognate, where he tooke the habite, and receiued all the Orders: and ſoone after he would that his ſecond ſonne D. Iohn Borgia and of Arragon, ſhould marry D. Laurence of Loyola and Ognez, daughter to D. Bertrand of Loyola nephew to father Inigo, who with the aid and fauour of cardinall Iohn Mouron, did build the Germane colledge at Rome, to inſtruct the youth of that nation againſt Luthers doctrine: Before his death he ſaw ſixteene Prouincialls of his Inſtitution and Order, and aboue a hundred and ſeuentie colledges, the which ſince haue multiplied ſtrangely. He died at Rome in the yeare 1556 being threeſcore and one yeeres old, hee was buried in the chiefe houſe, and head of that Order, called Sancta Maria de la Strada. We haue ſeen the abouenamed D. Franciſco Borgia d'Arragon generall of this Order in our time. There are three ſorts of religious in it, one of profeſt who can hold no goods, the other probationers, and the third collegialls, and it is lawfull for theſe two to poſſeſſe what they will. The Ieſuits are not Theatins: for they whom they called Theatins, had an other beginning, and another kind of life; they were certaine gentlemen and others moued with deuotion, who gaue themſelues to prayers, ſinging, and other ſuch works, and were firſt called of the company of the loue of God, to whom there being ioyned Iohn Peter Carrafa a Neapolitane, biſhop of Chieti, and being reputed as a worthy man, the head of thoſe religious, they began to call them Chietins, and then corrupting the word Theatins. Theſe Chietins were in credit in the time of pope Clement the ſeuenth, who by reaſon of the ſacke of Rome, being retired to Oſtia, and there finding certaine Venetian gallies, they paſt to Venice, and there made their abode eleuen yeares, before that Inigo of Loyola and his companions came there. The Ieſuits comming afterwards from Venice to Rome, for that they could not performe their voyage to the holy Land, the people thought that they were the Chietins or Theatins which were returned, and confounded theſe two Orders through ignorance, whereof there is great difference. This Iohn Peter Carrafa came afterwards to be pope, and was called Paul the fourth. Of the Theatins there are not many other colledges or houſes to be found, but at Venice, Rome, Naples, and Pauia. The Ieſuits are alſo called in Arragon Iniguiſts, of the name of their author, and in Portugall Apoſtles, but in all other places Ieſuits, according to the Popes Bulles and Brieſes. This we find in the Spaniſh Hiſtories of the Inſtitution of the Ieſuits, inſerted here of purpoſe, at the time of the reuolt of Pampelone, in the yeare 1521 where Inigo of Loyola their firſt Inſtitutor was. There was at that time an ample ſubiect prepared for theſe Ieſuites to practiſe their charities, and, withall, a fit and pleaſing abode for them,

Duke of Gandie becomes a Ieſuite.

17 Sect of Theatins differs from the Ieſuites.

A them, and other religious Spaniards, at the weſt Indies by Fernand Cortes, who hauing runne along the coaſts of the firme land at this new world, going vp Northward, and there by ſundry conqueſts hauing drawne vnto him many of thoſe Indian people he entred into the country, and aſſailed the city of Mexico, took it, and conquered that realme with an incredible facilitie. It is at this preſent called Noua Hiſpania. This great citie which was one of the wonders of the world, by reaſon of the ſituation was taken in Auguſt this yeare 1521, where the king Motezuma was ſlaine, and aboue a hundred thouſand of his ſubiects. 1521

Mexico at the Indies taken by the Chriſtians.

Returning now to the hiſtorie of Nauarre, we ſay, that as ſoone as the duke of Nagera was retired, they of Pampelone did chooſe the ſignior of Oſoien for their captaine, who B had ſerued the catholike king, Monſieur Aſperault purſuing his conqueſts was met in the Pyrenee mountaines by ſome deputies of the valley of Roncal, who yeelded him obedience, and gaue him aduertiſement of the eſtate of the couutrie, with whom hee paſt to Pampelone, and made himſelfe maſter thereof in the name of king Henrie. D. Lewis of Beaumout earle of Lerin deſired to come to him, but they refuſed him a ſafeconduct for his returne. The lord of Aſperaut finding no reſiſtance in the whole realme, he reduced it in few days vnder the obedience of its naturall king: and making vſe of the ciuile wars of Caſtille, hauing good intelligence with the comminalties, he paſt the riuer of Ebro, and laid ſiege to Logrogne, through a raſh and ill digeſted councell. D. Pedro Velez of Gue- C uare had put himſelfe into the place, with ſome ſouldiers, who reſiſted the French armie vertuouſly, they being much fauored by the victorie of Villa Laria, which the viceroys of Caſtille had woon againſt the commons: by reaſon whereof the Victors aduanced with the Duke of Nagera, who had leuied men from Burgos vnto the ſea, making his ſonne D. Iohn Manrique de Lara colonell of the Guipuſcoans, a yong Lord but fifteene yeares old: and of the Biſcains Gomes Gonſales de Butron, Lord of Muxica and of Butron: which forces being great, forced the French to raiſe their ſiege, and repaſſing the riuer, to returne into Nauarre, the Caſtillan army following them ſo neere, as whereas the French ſupt, the Caſtillans dined the next day. The armies beeing come neere vnto Pampelone, the Lord of Aſperraut being accompanied by many Nauarrois, was of opinion to turne D head, and to hazard a battell, but very inconſideratly: for at that time he was not ſtrong enough to incounter the power which came againſt him, neyther had he the patience to attend ſome of his forces which were at Tafalla, with the ſeignior of Ollaoqui, and at Pampelone, and a new leuie of ſixe thouſand Nauarrois, which might haue ioyned with him the next day, or the day after, wherefore being neere one vnto another, after that the artillery had played, when they came to ioyne, the French horſemen behaued themſelues woorthily: but the footemen, who were moſt part Gaſcoins, could not indure the force of the Caſtillans, but were preſently put to rout, which made them to giue the field, and to leaue the victory vnto the viceroyes. In this battell which was gi- uen neere vnto the borough of Noayn, and the port of Reniega, there died of French E and Nauarrois neere fiue thouſand, and amongſt them D. Charles of Mauleon, and D. Iohn of Saraza, captaine Martin, and Charles of Nauaſques, or of Nouailles: the generall alſo of the French armie being hurt by a man at armes of the company of the Earle of Alba de Liſta, yeelded to D. Francis of Beaumont: the Lord of Turnon was alſo taken, D. Pedro of Nauarre ſonne to the Marſhall D. Pedro priſoner at Simanca, ſaued himſelfe in France, with D. Arnold of Gramont, D. Frederic of Nauarre, and others in great numbers. Through the fauour of this victorie Pampelone was recouered without anie difficultie, by the Caſtillans: and after their example all the other places of the realme yeelded, except ſome ſtrong caſtles in the mountaynes. The Lord of Aſperaut was blamed to haue hazarded a battell, being weake and within the realme, without anie con- F ſtraint, but hee excuſed himſelfe, for that hee had diſcouered a great diſorder amongſt the enemies, which promiſed him an aſſured victory, but he was deceiued: it had beene more ſafe for him to haue ſtood vpon his gard, contenting himſelfe with that which hee had wonne in ſo ſhort a time, without ſtriking ſtroake, and not to haue inuaded the lands of Caſtille: a while after hee was ſet at libertie, paying tenne thouſand crownes raunſome, by D. Francis of Beaumont, againſt the willes of the Viceroys of Caſtille, who

The lord of Aſperaut makes himſelfe maſter of Pampelone.

Logrogne beſieged by the French.

French retire from Logrogne.

Rout of the lord of Aſperaut and the French army at Noayn.

Pampelone recouered by the Caſtillans.

1521 who made D. Franciſco of Eſtuniga and Auillaneda earle of Miranda, viceroy of Nauarre, in the place of the duke of Nagera. This yeare the biſhopricke of Pampelone was voide, by the death of Cardinall Amand of Albret, and Cardinall Alexander Ceſarin Ramain was aduanced to that place.

D. Francis of Eſtuniga earle of Miranda viceroy of Nauarre.

19 King Francis diſcontented with the bad ſucceſſe of the Lord of Aſperauts armie, hee reſolued to inuade Spaine with a greater power by Guipuſcoa, whither hee ſent the Lord of Boniuet, Admirall of Ftaunce, who at his firſt entrance tooke the Caſtle of Beoyuia, into the which he put captayne Beaufils in garriſon: then leading his army againſt Fontarrabie, he beſieged it, and planted his battery in the moſt conuenient places: Diego de Vera was gouernour within it, who either through negligence, or want of means, had ill furniſhed it with victualles, ſo as the third day of the ſiege they beganne to want; yet notwithſtanding he made ſome reſiſtance, and endured an aſſault: but ſeeing there was no meanes to holde it, hee yeelded the place vpon compoſition, the ſouldiers departing with their armes, and their colours flying. This yeelding fell out verie happily for the French armie: for had it beene delayed but two dayes, they had beene forced to diſlodge, for that there fell ſuch aboundaunce of raine, as the brookes beeing ſwelled in thoſe vallies, would haue carried away both men and baggage. The Admirall Boniuet put a garriſon of three thouſand Gaſcoines into Fontarrabie, vnder the commaund of the Lord of Lude, hauing rampared vp the breaches, and furniſhed it well with victualls. There was ſent out of Spaine vnto that frontire, to make head againſt the French D. Bertrand de la Cueua, ſonne to the duke of Albuquerque, who prouided for the towne of Saint Sebaſtian and other forts of that countrey. About that time the emperour ſent a commaundement from Bruſſells, to the earle of Miranda viceroy of Nauarre, to ruine all the walles and forts of Nauarre to preuent another rebellion; all which was executed, but at Pampelone, Lombier, Pont de la Roine, and at the caſtle of Eſtella. It was reſolued to fortifie Pampelone, and therefore the monaſteries neere adioyning were ruined, and the monks drawne into the towne.

Admirall of Boniuet enters Guipuſcoa.

Fontarraby beſieged and take by the French.

Demolitions in Nauarre.

20 Pope Leo dying this yeare 1521, cardinal Adrian biſhop of Tortoſa, who was then gouernor in Spaine, with the abouenamed viceroies, was choſen pope in the 62 yeare of his age: and retayning his name, he was called Adrian the ſixt. The newes of his election was brought him to Victoria, where the viceroys were, full of care for the loſſe of Fontarraby: paſſing from thence towards Arragon & Cattelogne, he imbarked, and left Spaine to go to Rome to receiue the pontificall crowne, the which he enioyed but few daies.

Adrian choſen Pope.

1522 The yeare following 1522 was taken the fort of Maja, not far from Baione, by the diligence of the earle of Miranda, viceroy, and D. Lewis of Beaumont, earle of Lerin, the which was defended by Iames Velez of Matran a Nauarrois, with others of the faction of Gramont, a place held impregnable for the ſituation, the which notwithſtanding being extraordinarily preſt, was yeelded by the ſaid Madran, who was led with his ſonne priſoner to Pampelone, where they died both within 14 dayes. By this priſe king Henry was quite ſpoyled of all that did belong to the realme of Nauarre towards Spaine.

Maja an vnpregnable fort.

The garriſon of Gaſcoins which were within Fontarraby, was held very ſhort, by them that were at Yrum, Vranſu in the valley of Ojarcum, in the Renterie, and other neighbour places. There was within the towne a captaine called Iohn of Æſe, who was newly fled out of Spaine vpon a quarrel which he had with Pedro of Vrdaniuia, ſeignior of the houſe of Aranzate: This captaine being deſirous to be reuenged of his enemie, vndertooke to ſurpriſe him in his houſe, which he knew verie well, beeing of the countrey, where hee had inioyed the ſeigniory of Ibarolle: wherefore going one night out of Fontarraby with about ſix hundred men, he marched with great ſilence vnto a houſe called Vreder, where the dogges hearing the noyſe of them that paſt, beganne to bay, ſo as the maſter of the houſe who was a farmer, comming forth in his ſhirt to ſee what it was, was taken, bound, and carried ſo farre as Ojarcum, where before all things the ſouldiers tooke away the clappers of the belles, leſt being diſcouered they ſhould giue an alarme. Then going to the houſe of Pedro of Vrdaniuia, they did inueſt it and ſeeke to force it: but hee who was valiant and reſolute, and knowing the paſſages to ſaue himſelfe, eſcaped. Captaine Iohn of Æſe and his ſouldiers ſeeing themſelues fruſtrate of their pray, reſolued before the alarme

A larme were giuen in the Countrey, to returne as ſpeedily as they might, and they had beene wiſe if they could haue effected it: but beeing deſirous of ſpoyle, they lingered there about certayne packes of merchandize which were come thither from Lyon for Medina del Campo, with a paſport, ſo as the people of thoſe vallies beeing ſolicited by the Lord Aranzate, with cries, and other ſuch ſignes and aduertiſements as hee could giue them, aſſembled to the number of three hundred, whereof ſome following the French behind, and ſome getting before them by vnknowne wayes, and cutting off their paſſage, they fought with them in ſuch ſort as they put them to rout and ſlew aboue halfe of them, and tooke many priſoners, they looſing but one man, and ſome hurt. 1522

B Iohn of Æſe eſcaped by the mountaine of Iazquiuell, with few men, and got into Fontarrabie: whoſe goods were confiſcate by the Emperour, and giuen to captayne Ambulodi. The Caſtle of Beoyuia, was of verie great importance for the French, that would make warre in Spaine, for it is the onely paſſage by the which they may bring artillerie into Guipuſcoa; notwithſtanding beeing very ill aduiſed, they reſolued for the ſparing of men and money, to ruine it, which captaine Beaufils hauing begunne, by the commaundement of the Earle of Lude, in few dayes hee ſapt and vndermined the walles at the foote, the which hee vnderpropt with piles, which were made hollow and filled with poulder, with an intent to giue fire to it, and to ouerthrow all: the which he hauing done very ſecretly, as he thought, it was notwithſtanding diſcouered by one of his

C owne gunners, called great Iohn of Liborne, who for ſome queſtion hee had had with a ſouldier, was retired to the Spaniards, and had reuealed this buſineſſe to D. Lewis de la Cuena, brother to the generall D. Bertrand: wherefore a great number of men of thoſe vallies, being all ſouldiers, did preſently aſſemble, and were ſodainly led by the ſaid commaunder againſt this caſtle, euen as the French, hauing drawne forth their Artillerie, and all that was within it, did abandon it, and hauing already kindled certayne matches to conduct the fire to the poulder and pillars which ſupported the walles, which the Spaniards preuented with great diligence, quenching theſe matches, and ſo preſerued the Caſtle, whoſe walles they did repaire, rampire vp, and fortifie againe, and as a matter of great moment could keepe it well. Ochua of Aſua was made captayne of that Ca-

Beoyuia a caſtle of great importance abandoned by the French.

D ſtle with an hundred ſouldiers. The French finding their owne errour, ſought afterwards to recouer it, there beeing an enterpriſe made by ſome gentlemen of the Countrey of Labbord, amongſt which were the Lords of Ortubia and Semper, who hauing leuied about a thouſand men of that Countrey, and ioyned vnto them a regiment of Germans old ſouldiers, which were in that frontire in the Kings pay, they led them to the paſſage of the riuer of Bidaſo, which diuides Fraunce and Spaine, where they were ſtaied by the reſiſtaunce which they of the Caſtle made with their artillerie, and the Commons of the Countrie: whereupon ſeeking an other foard, and other wayes by the mountaines, thinking to ſurprize the garriſon, they found ſuch reſiſtance of all the Spaniſh forces, which had beene drawne thither, as they were defeated, and in a maner all

E ſlaine. This was called the rout of Saint Martial, for that it was giuen on Saint Martialls dav, the laſt of Iune, this yeare 1522. In the which the emperour Charles returned into Spaine and landed at Saint Ander the fiue and twentieth of Iuly, from whence hee paſſed to Vailledolit, where hee heard the embaſſadors of many princes, and alſo the deputies of the realme of Valencia, who came to craue pardon, for that they had ioyned in vnion with the rebells of Spaine, and were the laſt which ſubmitted, whereof they excuſed themſelues vpon the hard vſage of their viceroy D. Iaques of Mendoſa, whom hauing fauourably heard, he comprehended them in the generall pardon, which he cauſed to be publiſhed, himſelfe being preſent, and ſitting in his royall throne in view of all the world: he depriued Mendoſa of the gouernement of Valence, by meanes whereof all the Rout of Saint Martiall.

Returne of the emperour into Spaine.

F ſtrong places and caſtles of the realme, were yeelded vnto him. In that of Xatiua there had beene till that time detained D. Ferdinand of Arragon duke of Calabria, ſonne to D. Frederic the diſpoſſeſſed king of Naples, who died afterwards in France: him he deliuered, and kept him neere him, with honour and fit entertainment: commending him that hauing bin ſolicited by the rebells to be their head, he had refuſed it: and in time he cauſed him to marry Queene Germaine (who had beene wife to king Ferdinand his grandfather,

and

1522 and was then married againe to the Marqueſſe of Brandeburgh, who died ſoone after) to which Queene Germaine he gaue at that time the gouernement of Valencia. G

Rebellion in Maiorca.

Seeing the troubls ended vpon the firm land of Spain, he had news that the city of Maiorca, & the whole Iland were reuolted, at the inſtigation of a poore Artiſan called Calon, wherupon he ſpeedily diſpatcht the viceroy with ſome gallies: who thinking to reclaime them by mildnes, was beaten back by them with their artillery, & forced to go out of the hauen with his gallies, being incenſed the more for that he had refuſed to ſhew them the letters of pardon, which he ſaid he brought them from the emperour, before they had laid downe armes, and deliuered him the towne. And in this fury they began to fall vpon them which aduiſed them to acknowledge their prince, and to yeelde vnto his mercie. The Viceroy being fortified with more ſhipping, went to an other part of the Iland, H where hee landed his men: there many of the Ilanders came vnto him, and offered him ſeruice: hauing muſtered his armie, he found that he had aboue tenne thouſand fighting men, with the which ſeeking to inueſt and beſiege the citie, the rebelles ſallied couragiouſly forth, and came twice to handy ſtroakes, and were twice repulſed within their walles, the which cauſed great trouble within the towne: for many fainting would haue the gates opened, and make triall of the Emperours clemencie: but the greateſt and ſtrongeſt part, being obſtinately deſperate, reiected this wholeſome councell with outrages, hanging and cruelly murthering thoſe that were of this aduice, if they could get them, ſetting their heads vpon the publique places and towers of the towne, a grieuous and fearefull ſpectacle: And then they diſcharged their rage vpon the wiues, chil- I dren, goods and houſes of them that were abſent with all barbarous cruelty. Wherefore they were beſieged and battered both by ſea and land: ſo as ſeeing themſelues forced, not able long to hold out, and without hope of any ſuccours, or meanes to eſcape after that they had indured ſome aſſaults, and ſhewed that they had courage, they yeelded, vpon condition that the people ſhould be pardoned, yet there were twelue reſerued at the Viceroyes diſcretion, the which were deliuered vnto him: among them was Calon the Maiorquins vanquiſhed and puniſhed.

Author of the rebellion, found in a priuie where hee was hidden, who being led ſo defiled to his puniſhment vpon an Aſſe, and his companions following him on foot, they were all pincht with hot yrons and quartered, and their heads ſet vpon the towers and gates of the citie, which payed a certaine ſumme of money in conſideration of a fine, K and for the charges of the warre. Theſe troubles being thus ſuppreſt, the Emperour ſpent ſome dayes in ſports, and would himſelfe runne at the tilt, to the great contentment of the Spaniſh nobilitie, with whom hee got the reputation to bee a good man at armes.

Combat betwixt two Arragonois

During the Emperours abode at Vailledolit, he granted the combat to two gentlemen of Arragon, and did ſee them fight with thoſe ceremonies which were then vſed in combats, both in Spaine and elſewhere: the report whereof it may be will not be vnpleaſing vnto the Reader; for that now they are left off, and they proceed after another maner.

Peter Toreilla and Ieronme Anca (for ſo the contendants were named) both borne at Sa- L ragoſſe, great friends before and alied, yong and fierie, neither of them being yet fiue and twenty yeares old: falling out at play, they had beene already in field, vnaccompanied with their rapiers and cloakes, where it happened that after many thruſts and blows, and neither hurt, either of them hauing very good knowledge in his weapon, Anca with an ouerthwart blow ſtrucke his aduerſaries weapon out of his hand, who ſeeing himſelfe diſarmed, confeſſed generouſly that he was vanquiſhed. But he intreated Anca to do him this curteſie, to reſt ſatisfied with the victorie, and not to tell any one that they had bin in field, as their quarrell was alſo ſecret, and no man had beene acquainted therewith, the which he hauing promiſed they imbraced each other, and returned good friends to their lodgings, thinking that not any one had ſeene them fight. Two or three dayes after To- M reilla vnderſtood that all the court talked of this fact, whereat beeing much grieued, hee blamed Ieroſme Anca, ſaying, that hee had fayled of his promiſe, and that through vanitie, and to diſhonour him, he had publiſhed that which had paſſed betwixt them. Anca proteſted that hee had neuer ſpoken of it, but one had told him that a Curate of the next

A next village, walking at the time of their fighting about a troup of his that was feeding, had ſeen them fight, & had told it, for the which hee was ſorry. The Curate being demanded touching this matter, anſwered doubtfully & ſeemed to ſpeake all in fauour of Ieroſim Anca, which did confirme the other in his opinion, that he had broken his faith: ſo as hee told him reſolutely, that he had done at act vnworthie of a knight of honour, and that he muſt do him reaſon by arms: who admitting no excuſe, he made his petition to the emperour, that he would be pleaſed to graunt him the combate againſt his enemy, to make it knowne that hee was a traitor, diſloyall and vnworthy to beare the name of a gentleman, and withall hee ſent him a challenge. The emperour referred this difference to the iudge- 1522
B ment of his Conſtable D. Inigo Fernandes of Velaſco, who did what hee could to reconcile thē, but ſeeing there was no means, he put them into the field, with the formalties vſed in thoſe times. In the publike place at Vailledolit there was a plot meaſured out, which was 50 paces long, & 36 broad, & railed roūd about. On either ſide lōg waies without the liſts was a ſcaffold ſet vp, one on the one ſide for the emperor, & the other for the Conſtable, either of them being couered with rich tapeſtrie, & in them chaires couered with cloth of gold. At the other two ends were two other ſcaffolds built lower for the kinſmen and friends of the cōbatants, and ioyning to either of them was a pauilion in which the chāpi-ons ſhold take their armes: the place had bin made very euen and couered with ſand, that they ſhould not ſlip. About 11 of the clock the emperour came accompained with a great
C nobility, the marſhals of the field and his gards both of horſe & foot. Being ſet in his ſeat vnder a cloth of eſtate, they deliuered a golden rod into his hand, the which being caſt by him ſhould part the combat. Soon after came the Conſtable with a graue & ſetled countenance, being aboue 60 yeres old, he did weare a long roabe of cloth of golde, and was mounted vpon a Genet of Spaine, richly furniſhed, hauing alighted from his horſe, hee came and paſt before the emperour, to whom he made a low obeyſance, there marching before him forty gentlemen & a Squire carrying the royall ſword ſhethed as his Maieſties li'utenant, and after him another Squire carrying the Conſtables armes and his coat of armes. After whome came other gentlemen pages, or young Squires richly apparreiled in blew ſatten imbrodered with gold and ſiluer. Hauing in this pompe gone about the D campe and viewed it, he went vnto his ſeat which was right againſt the emperour, whoſe gards did preſently compaſſe in the field without the liſts. Then Toreilla the challenger preſented himſelfe being accompained by his godfather, the duke of Beiar & Albuquerque, the admirall of Caſtille, and many other noblemen and gentlemen: hee was attyred in a ſhort Iuppe of ſilke, imbrodered with gold, & furred with ſables, before whom there was carried a battle axe and a ſword, a ſcutcheon with his armes, & a caſſacke to weare vpon his armes. Hauing preſented himſelfe in this manner before the emperour, hee made him a low obeyſance, and hauing done the like vnto the Conſtable, hee went to the pauilion which was prepared for him. On the other ſide Ierome Anca entred the liſts, accompa-ned after the ſame maner, and with the like furniture, except his Iuppe, which was furred
E with ermines; the Marqueſſe of Brandeburge was his godfather, and hee was followed by the dukes of Nagera, of Alua, and of Benanent, the Marqueſſe of Aguilar, and of other noblemen and knights, who hauing made the like ſubmiſſions to the emperor and Conſtable, hee went to the pauillion which was prepared for him; and the ſcut-cheons and coates of armes of both combatants were carried and planted before the Conſtables ſcaffold. During theſe ſhewes, the ayre did eccho againe with the ſound of drummes and trumpets, the which being commanded to ceaſe, the two knights were brought by their Godfathers before the Conſtable, where a booke of the Goſpell and a Crucifix being preſented vnto them, they putting their hands into a prieſts hands did ſweare that they came to this triall of armes, with an intent to defend F a iuſt quarrell, wherein they would behaue themſelues like loyall knights, without fraud, charms, or any inchanted ſword, or without vſing the naturall vertue of any herbes, ſtones, or any other thing, proteſting to imploy only the force and dexterity of body and mind, truſting only in God, S. George & the virgin Mary, and with the aduice & councell of their godfathers, who cauſed a cofer to be broght before the cōſtable, in the which were the armes, wherwith the champions ſhould fight, and be couered, the which were weigh-

1522 ed in his preſence,according to the laws & cuſtoms of combats,by the which the weight G was limited to 90 pounds of the country,at the leaſt.This done,they were choſen & carried to either Pauillion,where the champions did arm themſelues in the preſence of ſome that were appointed by the Conſtable,to witnes that there was no fraud ; whileſt they were arming,the trumpets and drums ſounding againe. The conſtable went from his ſeat, to diſpoſe of that which was fit within the liſts,the which he did with great grauitie & ceremonies:Then he wēt & ſat him down at one of the corners of the field, accōpained with 12 knights,ſending the like number to the other oppoſit corner, commanding them that they ſhold not remoue frō thence before the end of the combat.To either of the other two corners,he ſent 3 noblemen of quality inſtructed in like maner.Then hauing commanded H ſilence,one of the marſhals of the field cried out with a loud voice in the emperours name going to euery one of the 4 corners,that it was forbidden vpon pain of death for any one to make a noiſe whileſt the champions did fight,nor to make any ſigne by deed, voice or word,neither in ſpitting,coffing,blowing of the noſe,neezing or whiſtling,nor by beating of hands or feet, lifting vp of the hands ,nor by ſhaking of the head,or any motion of the bodie to giue them aduertiſement , courage , feare or amazement , nor otherwiſe to in-ſtruct them in what they haue to do,except their godfathers in their charge & duty: And then the two kinghts entred the field in compleat armor,holding in their hands their bat-tel axes,& their ſwords by their ſides: Peter Toreilla the firſt,(for that he was challenger) accompained with his godfather,preſented himſelf before the conſtable, who demanded I of him what he was,& for what cauſe he was entred ſo armed?hauing receiued his anſwer he cauſed him to put off his head peece to know him,& then he cauſed him to put it on againe, & ſent him to one of the corners of the camp,where he was receiued by the three noblemen,that were plaſt there. Then he paſt to the other corner oppoſit,& being ſet in the mideſt of the 12 knights that were left there by him,he made the like demands & ceremonies to Ierom Anca,who was alſo preſented vnto him by his godfather, & from thēce ſent to the other corner right againſt his aduerſary,wher he was in like maner receiued by 3 noblemen. After al this the conſtable went to his firſt ſeat,& then the trūpets did ſound again,which hauing done,the knights which ſhold fight,& their godfathers fel vpō their knees & praied, which done,either of the godfathers hauing imbraced his chāpion,& ex- K horted him to fight valiantly,he bad him farewel,& then they rerired into their Pauilliōs.
After which,one cried out that they ſhold let the good champions go.Then they came & affronted one another couragiouſly,fighting a long time with their battel axes, ſomtimes one reeling,ſomtimes another,vntil they had broken them in peeces.Being thus vnarmed they had no leaſure to draw their ſwords,they were ſo neere one vnto another ,ſo as they fell to handy gripes,one ſeeking to ouerthrow another: But the emperor who would not loſe thē,caſt his rod,in ſign that they ſhold part them, ſaying that they had done enough, and that he held them both for good knights,wherupon all they that were ſet at the foure corners,being 30 in al,ran,but they had great difficulty to part them,they wer ſo incenſed one againſt another, crying & contendiug for honor and victorie,whereas either of them L thought he had the aduantage.In the end the reſpect of the emperour made them retire, yet wold they not be friends,but threatned one another bitterly, contemning the conſtables perſuaſions,who told them that they ſhold reſt ſatisfied & reuerence the emperours teſtimony,who had pronounced with his own mouth,that either of thē had behaued him ſelf valiantly,& had done his duty,ſo as their honors were vntoucht.The emperor was cō-ſtrained throgh their obſtinacy to ſend them both to priſon, frō whence they parted not, vntil they were reōciled,at the leaſt in ſhew,for they were neuer perfect friends. If of two bad things we muſt chuſe the one,as ſome think it neceſſary,the maner of cōbats practiſed in the time of our predeceſſors , wold ſeem more tollerable then that which is vſed at this day;for in that they made a certain kind of trial of doubtful things.The princes leue,or of M his lieutenants was required, who firſt of al took knowledge whether the cauſe did merit, that two men of quality and honor ſhold hazard their liues who might ſerue the publike in better affaies , or their Soueraigne , or their owne families. If after mature deliberation they held it fit to grant the combate,they came vnto it with great ceremonies, as we haue ſhewed,witneſſing that in thoſe times they made no little eſteem of the life of men.

men. They did carefully procure a certain equality, preuenting surprises, by any aduãtage, in armes, strength and dexterity of horse or otherwise. They made them sweare that there was no slander in them, but that they came to fight for a iust quarel, & to defend their honors. The point wherin it did consist in those daies, was to reuerence God, their princes, & the lords of the fee, & to be loyal & true to al men, curteous, quiet & modest amõg friends & valiant & couragious against their enemies in war. If it were known that in this point of honor, any one were falsly blamed, or wronged by deed, with aduantage of time, place, or company, with vnequall and extraordinary armes, or that hee had otherwise iust cause to complaine, they caused speedy reparation to be done of the wrong, as the cause required, either by the lawe, or militarie customes, which did neuer allow the combate when there was any other remedy. Much lesse did they suffer a gentlemã of honor to come to the vncertain triall of armes, with one that was conuicted of rashnes or manifest slander. He that was vanquished in the combat was held guilty of that wherof he was accused, or a slanderer & a lyar, & if he did liue he was punished ignominiously by degradation, & sometimes by death. The combat was most cõmonly continued or staied according to the pleasure of the prince, or of iudges that were appointed, who most commonly did part the champions before they came to the extremity, declaring them both vpon the place to be good & hardie knights, which did also shew a wise affection to preserue the nobility to better vses. If any were found so froward & disobedient, as, not able to get leaue to fight in the countrie of their natural prince, should go vnto some other soueraign, neere or far off, to grant them a place of combat; hauing fought, they were not to return into their country, for they were held for mutins, yea felons, & guilty of high treason, & there was great difficulty to obtain letters of abolitiõ for such offẽces. But in our daies al this is out of vse, & their proceedings in combats is very different. For if it happen that any man offend another without cause or reason, the point of honor is, that he must maintaine his deed, & not giue any excuse, nor confesse that he hath erred, for that were a signe of base cowardise: It were better (saith the point of honour) to be insolent and rash, than to subiect himselfe to that modestie which wold be taken for weaknes in a man that maketh profession of armes. An other that hath taken iest for iniury, or is offended at a free word spoken by his friend, the which in effect is not iniurious, will take it in soil maner as he will admit of no excuse nor reparation: what? must he so little esteem honor? It were better (saith the point of honor) to be quarrelous, froward & vnsociable, than to vse such facilitie, & base courtesie derogating from cheualry: there is no friendship that binds, he must needs fight. If the prince or some great officer wil heare, and end their quarell: they fear those Iudgements more than lightning, they fly, they wilbe followed, & they fight in corners, whether it be that they are ashamed to discouer the ground of their quarrell, which is most cõmonly so fooliish & impertinent, as they would blush to speake of it; or that they are possest with a thirstlesse desire to shed mãs bloud, & with an appetite of reuenge, accompaned with pride & vanitie. It were better (saith the point of honor) to be rebellious & vnciuil, then to submit himself to that discipline; for they would say it were want of courage, & that he wold fly the lists. And thereupon they conclude, according to the point of honor, that it is not in the king to rule it, according to the limitations of his justice; & that gentlemen doe not know any other justice or equity, than the custom of duels receiued among gentlemen, which giues this prerogatiue, priuiledge & authority, to do all, & not to suffer any thing, & to maintein themselues by the sword in this possession, although it be vniust, and vsurped but of late. Thus they are easily drawen to the combat a this day, and they must not seeme to drawe backe vpon any pretext whatsoeuer, neither of God, the king, nor his edicts: he must goe being called, else he shalbe held base & ignoble, & thenceforth shalbe exposed to the outrages of him that did challenge him with such aduantage as he shal please: for it were better (saith the point of honor) to be a murtherer, than to go to field with one that had refused a challenge. Be they ready to fight; either wil make prouision of a long rapier, of an excellent horse, with other such helps which shal be neither visited nor measured: for there are neither godfathers nor witnesses in their combats. Euery one must looke to himselfe (saith the point of honor) & it were better to exceed sõmething in that respect, than to be short; although we may iustly say afterwards, that the honor of the victiory belõgs rather to the armes & horse than to the knight. Yet they goe in their shirts, & the point of honor

Point of honour of the ancients.

Moderne combats and the Maximes of the point of honor at this day.

1522 wel obſerued require, that they run one another throgh like boars, rather thã to ſlip a ſide, G when the thruſt comes, or to ſeeke to auoid it by fenſing, & it were better to die (ſaith the point of honor) then to ſeem by any geſture or countenãce to fear death. It is then a wonder that theſe men ordained for murther & ſlaughter, who thinke they are not come into the world but to kil or be killed, ſhould vouchſafe to arm themſelues, when they go to the war, & they ſhold not impute it to want of corage to couer themſelues with harneſſe, like vnto the Cimbrians and ancient gaules, for there is in a maner the like reaſon. But behold the moſt ſubtill and very quinteſſence of the point of honour: It is lawful for them that go to fight in duel, to inuite a ſecond & a third if they wil, the which ſhalbe bound to fight againſt the like number choſen by the other part, & kil them with whom they neuer had a- H ny quarrel, yea, their deare friends, at it often happens: It is the law of duels; It were better (ſaith the point of honor) to be a murtherer of his own ſoul, than to refuſe a knight which doth him the honor to intreate him to ſecond him in his quarrel, bee it iuſt or vniuſt. If it happen that the ſecond kils him againſt whom he fights, he muſt come & ſuccor his partner, and help him to kill his enemy, although it ſeeme outrageous to fall two vpon one, who it may be is alſo ſore wounded. Theſe are tollerated murthers; and it were better (ſaith the point of honor) ſo to kill him who thou thinkeſt hath wronged thee, than to leaue him his life, vnleſſe he demand it of thee: For it is the fruit of duels, either to kil his aduerſarie, or to brag that he hath giuen him his life. Being returned from fighting, much contented when they haue vanquiſhed, they wil tel wonders of courteſies, done vnto him I whom they haue thus ſlaine: He is dead (wil they ſay) through his own folly, by his ouerweening, by his oſtinacie, wherein they cannot be gainſaied, for that they flie all witneſſes and ludges.

If he that ſuruiues be wounded and dies ſoone after; he comforts himſelf in that point of honor, that he hath done himſelf right by his ſword, and that he hath cauſed his aduer-ſarie to die firſt. But for the health of their ſoules, they think they haue prouided ſufficient-ly, if going to the combat with an heart vlcered with a deadly hatred againſt their neighbour, poſſeſt with a ſpirit of reuenge, and a vaine opinion of their excellency, dignitie, and valour, they fall vpon their kneos, entring into ſome Church or Chappell, and pray vnto God heartily that hee will giue them the grace to kill their enemie, or to force him K to acknowledge his life from them. They will confeſſe themſelues to a prieſt or ſome religious man, they wil demaund abſolution of the ſinne which they are going to do, & will giue money to haue maſſes ſaid for him or them that ſhall die in this fight. Yet it is the leaſt of their cares: for if they meet with any church man that hath wit and conſcience, who ſeeks by holy admonitions to diuert them from this bad reſolution, and refuſeth to abſolue them, they will ſay that hee vnderſtands not the point of honor, and will goe from him in a rage or will mocke at him. It is not from God that theſe duelliſts haue learned or wil learne that which doth truely honour Nobility: But they doe rather ſeeke to inſtruct themſelues in their falſe point of honor, by the precepts and ſuggeſtions of the enemy of mankind, who was a murtherer from the beginning, and who is alwaies delighted in L murther & bloud. By the inſtigation & conduct of this godfather, we ſee them go cheere-fully to yeeld vp their curſed ſoules, moſt of this humor liuing without god, without king, without law, without friendſhip, & without knowledge of ciuil vertues, hauing for their ſole vertue, a violence which they call courage, the which they haue common with brute beaſts. If there were euer barbariſm like vnto this ſince the foundatiõ of the world was laid they may iudge which be mẽ, hauing retained ſome light of reaſon, & may conclude pertinently, that there is not any thing among human actiõs in this miſerable age, that is more repugnãt to the law of god, more abſurd in nature, more preiudicial to good gouernmẽt, more in contẽpt of kings & magiſtrats, & to conclude more offenſiue before God & man, than theſe modern duels. Not that we ſhould allow or giue place to the ancient maner of M cõbats, wheras there is a king, or ſome other ſoueraign power, who ought not to grãt nor ſuffer them according to the rules of juſtice wel adminiſtred: & without the authoritie of which ſoueraigne power, it is not lawful for any whatſoeuer to draw his ſword, according to the laws of Chriſtendome. Being moſt certain that combats, in the beſt form that they were euer practiſed (if it be not againſt an enemy that prouokes in opẽ war) are the inuentions of cruel & barbarous nations which are ignorant of piety, juſtice, and gouernment.

Returning

A Returning to our Hiſtorie, wee find this yere 1522, Iames of Aillon, earle of Lude, gouernor of Fontarraby, being ſo long diſquieted by the enemy, & wanting things neceſſary for the defence of a town of war, which attended a ſiege hourly, he aduertiſed the French king his maſter of his eſtate, intreating him to releeue him, & to ſend another gouernor: the which the king performed aſwel as he could, for he was otherwiſe buſied, the war being hot both in Italy, & Picardy, betwixt him & the emperor: The marſhall of Chaſtillon was ſent thither, who dying at Dax, his charge was giuē to the marſhal Chabanes, who victualled Fontarrabie, in view of the enemy, & changed the garriſon, drawing forth the earle of Lude, and making captain Frauget gouernor in his place, who had alwaies had the B reputation of a good ſoldier, but he loſt it in this charge. They of Fontarrabie hauing a little before made a ſally vpō the enemy which lay at Yrun, it had ſucceeded ill, in the which they had loſt the ſignior of Chanfarron, & many good ſoldiers; and after the comming of captain Frauget, they made many skirmiſhes, moſt of them preiudiciall to the French. 1522

Frauget gouernour of Fontarrabie.

In the yere 1523, the marſhall D. Pedro of Nauarre a priſoner in the fort of Symanca died, whoſe death was diuerſly publiſhed: it is moſt certain that it was violently, & by the ſword; the Spaniards impute the fault to himſelf, ſaying, that being too much affected to K. Henry of Albret his naturall Prince, & ſeeing himſelf ſo long detained in priſon, for that he would not ſwear to another, he fel into ſuch deſpaire, as hee ſlue himſelfe: hee left one ſon of the ſame name, who did then ſerue the Frēch k. in Fōtarrabie. At Rome Pope Adrian alſo dyed, the 20 month of his raigne, in whoſe place Iulio de Medicis was choſen, & was C named Clement 7. The ſame yere the emperor entred into Pampelone, where prouiding for the defence of his coūtrie of Guipuſcoa, he ſent the conſtable D. Inigo Fernādes of Velaſco, with the prince of Orang, who led an army of about 24000 mē, by the pace of Beoyuia into Bearn, & camped before Saluaterra, the which yeelded, where ſtaying, they made ſhew that they would conquer the country of Bearn, or attempt Bayone, and ſo they held the minds of men in ſuſpēce. The lord of Lautrec, gouernor of Guienne, gaue good order both for Bayone & Fontarrabie, being doubtful what deſigne the enemy had, who hauing remained 4 daies at Saluaterra, returned into Guipuſcoa, hauing done nothing memorable in that voyage, but taken the Caſtle of Vidaxone, belonging to the lord of Gramont: D a great part of this army died of cold and want in this voyage. 1523

Death of the Marſhall D. Pedro of Nauarre.

Emperors [illegible] into Pampelon.

Exploits of the Spaniſh army in Bearn.

21 In the beginning of the yere 1524, the emperour leauing Nauarre, retyred to Victoria, where he reſolued of the ſiege of Fontarrabie, which was begun in the beginning of February, the Conſtable of Caſtille being generall of the army, aſſiſted by the prince of Orange, and many other noblemen and knights of name, among which was William of Roccandolphe Colonel of 3000 Germans: the batterie was planted towards Miranda, againſt the queens baſtion, & it was furious & continuall, yet they gaue not any aſſault, for the Spaniards deſired to take it by famin & without the loſſe of their men: the place was reaſonably wel furniſhed to endure a long ſiege, yet captain Frauget yeelded it vpon compoſition, to depart with their armes & baggage ſaued, & their colours flying, as the Spa- E niards had done, Frauget excuſed himſelfe, vpon the intelligences which D. Pedro of Nauarre had with the enemies: notwithſtanding he was degraded of his nobilitie, vpon a ſcaffold in the citie of Lion. D. Pedro of Nauarre was ſonne to the Marſhall D. Pedro, who died a priſoner in the Caſtle of Symanca, and was nephew to the Conſtable of Caſtille, by whome being ſolicited, he went to emperors ſeruice. The place was found well furniſhed of all things, whereunto hauing added other prouiſions, the gard and defence thereof was giuen to Sancho Martines de Leyua, brother to Anthony de Lyna, who was then reputed a wiſe and diſcreet Captaine in the warres of Italie. Beſides the gouernment of that towne, Sancho Martines was corrector of the Prouince of Guipuſcoa, the which hath not hapned to any one, to haue had the charge of warre and of Iuſtice. Thoſe which haue go- F uerned in Fontarrabie, ſucceſſiuely vnto our time, after Sancho Martines; were D. Sancho de Leyua his ſon; then D. Diego of Caruajal lord of Xodar, & in our time D. Iohn d' Acugna. 1524

Siege laid by the Spaniards to Fontarrabie.

Fontarrabie yeelded to the emperour.

Puniſhment of Captaine Frauget for the yeelding of Fontarrabie.

In Nauarre the king appointed D. Diego of Auellaneda, biſhop of Tuy, to bee Viceroy, gouernor & reformer of the Iuſtice. And then the knights of the faction of Gramōt, which had followed the kings of the houſe of Albret, returned into their country, & to the emperors ſeruice, to whom they did ſweare, as to their king, namely D. Pedro of Na-

Diego d' Auellaneda viceroy of Nauarre.

1524 uarre, who obtained the dignity of Marſhall, which his father had held, and the Mar- G
Gramontoies returne into Nauarre to the emperours ſeruice. quiſate of Cortes, Hee was deſcended from D. Lionell, ſonne to king Charles, the ſecond of that name. As for the earle of Saint Stephens, when as he came to the emperors ſeruice he had the title of Marqueſſe of Falſes giuen him, and the office of high chamberlaine of Nauarre, with other fauors; ſince which time that realme hath beene held by the houſe of Caſtille, in peace, and without troubles.

Francis the French king taken at Pauia. 22 On Saint Mathias day, being the 24 day of Februarie that yeare 1524, the computation of the yeare beginning at our Lady day, was that memorable battaile of Pauia, where the French were defeated, and king Francis taken priſoner by the imperials, whereof the chiefe were Cont Charles of Launoy, viceroy of Naples. Ferdinand d' Aualos Mar- H queſſe of Peſcaire, and Charles duke of Bourbon, who for ſome diſcontentment had left France, and followed the emperours party. What were the cauſes of this great ouerthrow, and what ſucceeded after, ye may read at large in the Hiſtory of France, whereunto I referre the Reader, to auoid needleſſe repetitions. The emperor was aduertiſed of this defeat and priſion the tenth of March; the news were pleaſing vnto him, as wee may conieƈture, yet he ſhewed himſelf verie modeſt, ſhewing no tokens of pride for this great Worthy Councel of the biſhop of Oſma. ſucceſſe. There were two opinions debated in his councel, the biſhop of Oſma was author of the one, to ſuffer this great priſoner to depart freely, & to bind him vnto him by a frank and brotherly deliuerance; the other was to keep him ſtill, and to draw from him all the profit and aduantages that might be. This laſt aduice proceeded from D. Frederic of Tole- I do duke of Alua, & was followed by the emperor, wherefore there were certaine articles drawn and ſent with al ſpeed vnto the king, by the lord of Reux, who reieƈted them, as vnreaſonable.

Hereupon the Viceroy of Naples perſuaded the king not to take it in ill part, if he were 1525 led into Spain, to treat himſelf with the emperour touching his libertie, aſſuring him that he deſired it, ſhewing him letters from his friends in court. But his intention was in the meane time to lead him to the caſtle of Naples, and there to attend the opportunitie of a paſſage, for they were not ſtrong enough at ſea for the French, who had Andrew Dorias Galleys at their deuotion; Neither did hee much truſt his armie at land, which wanting pay, hee feared would mutine; Beſides, he was iealous of the Pope, Venetians and other K
Potentates of Italie, who were diſcontented at the proſperitie of the emperour his maiſter, wherefore being thus reſolued, he conduƈted the king to Genoa, and from thence to Porto Fino: whereas the marſhall of Montmorency comming vnto him with ſixe French galleys, without any ſouldiers, by the commandement of the Queene Regent, the kings Paſſage of king Francis being Priſoner into Spaine. mother, he changed his aduice, & hauing furniſhed thoſe galleys with Spaniſh ſouldiers, and ioyning them to thoſe which he had, thinking that he might eaſily paſſe, whileſt that the French expeƈted his going to Naples, he ſuddenly bent his courſe for Spain; & lāded the priſoner at Barcelona, before that it was known, or that he had aduertiſed the emperor and from thence hee conduƈted him to Valencia: But paſſing by Tortoſa, the king was in great danger among the mutyned Spaniards, who purſued the Viceroy tumultuoſly for L their pay, forcing him with their ſhot to eſcape ouer the top of his lodging, the bullets flying nere vnto the kings perſon. The emperor hearing of his arriual, cōmanded he ſhold be put into the caſtle of Xatiua, a place ordained in old time to be a priſon for great men: but the viceroy obtained that he might liue in certain houſes of pleaſure, about Valencia vntil that he had commandement to conduƈt him to Madrid. The emperor was reſolued not to ſee him before thee had concluded for his liberty, for the treating whereof, beſides the archbiſhop of Ambrun, who was afterwards Cardinal of Tournon, and Selua the firſt Preſident of Paris, he gaue a ſafe cōduƈt to Marguerite of France, duches of Alanſon, who arriued at Barcelona in September, & paſſing from thence by Saragoſſe ſhee came to Ma- M drid, whether ſhe found the emperor was come to viſit the king, who had bin brought almoſt to deaths doore with a violent feuer.

This had a ſhew of charity, to comfort him, giuing hope that he ſhould be ſoone ſet at liberty, but it was rather a curioſity, that he might viſibly ſee in what eſtate he was, fearing to loſe the fruits of his prize if he ſhould die. It is ſaid, that being in conſultation whether hee ſhould ſee him or not, hee was diſſuaded by his Chauncellour, who told him, that if

A if he ſaw him, and did not ſet him freely at libertie, the world would thinke that hee had been brought thither by couetouſneſſe, thruſt on with a mercinarie charitie, and a ſeruile feare, to looſe by the priſoners death the price of his ranſome: a noble aduice, and worthie to be obſerued. But the ducheſſe of Alanſons preſence was the beſt remedie to recouer the king, where ſhe remained almoſt three monethes: what ſhe effected, and vpon what tearmes the king was deliuered, you may read in its proper hiſtorie. 1526 Gouernours counſell.

23 Theſe things paſt in the yeare 1526, in the which the Emperour Charles maried D. Iſabella of Portugal, daughter to the king D. Manuel. D. Alphonſo Fonſeca, Archbiſhop of Toledo, and primat of Spaine, with D. Ferdinand of Arragon, duke of Cala- Mariage of the Emperor Charls
B bria, were ſent to receiue this princeſſe, who conducted her with great ſtate to Seuile, where the mariage was celebrated. Of this mariage was borne, the one and twentieth day of May, in the yeare 1527, D. Philip, who ſucceeded in all the realmes, lands, and 1527 ſeigniories of the Emperour, as well hereditarie as conquered. A memorable yeare, for that by the Emperours armie, conſiſting for the moſt part of Spaniards, whereof Charles 24 duke of Bourbon was generall, the citie of Rome was taken and ſackt, and Pope Clement, with many cardinals, ranſomed, and hardly intreated; the greedie and inſolent ſouldiers not ſparing the cardinals of their owne nation, prophaning by all acts of crueltie Rome taken & ſackt.
and exceſſe, in their diſordered appetites, the places and perſons dedicated and vowed to religion, notwithſtanding that the prince, for whom they made warre, heire of the realms
C of Spaine, carried the title of Catholike, purchaſed by his predeceſſors, for the good offices they had done to Popes and to the ſea of Rome. The ſame yeare king Francis being 25 returned into his realme, he cauſed the mariage to be accompliſhed betwixt D. Henrie of Mariage of king Henry of Albret Albret, and Marguerite of France, widow to the duke of Alanſon, father and mother to queene Ioane, heire to the realme of Nauarre.

King Francis being come from his impriſonment diſcontented, he entred willingly into league with the Pope, the king of England, the Venetians and Florentines, for the li- League againſt the Emperor.
bertie of Italie: But when as he vnderſtood the cruelties vſed by the Imperiall armie at Rome, he allied himſelfe more ſtrictly with the king of England, vnder colour to free the Pope and the territories of the Church; whereupon the lord of Lautrec was appointed D to lead an armie into Italie, at their common charge.

The Emperour being aduertiſed, that king Francis not onely refuſed to performe his promiſe, but had alſo declared himſelfe his enemie, he cauſed monſieur de Gramont, his embaſſadour in Spaine, to be put in gard, and the French king did the like to Nicholas Perenot of Granuelle. Theſe kings ſent two kings at Armes into Spaine, namely, Guienne and Clarencious, to proclaime war againſt the Emperour, but before their arriuall the embaſſadors were releaſed. They proclaiming war againſt the emperour, and complaining of the Popes impriſonment, receiued this anſwer, as ſome write.

That he might not proclaime warre againſt him, being by right his priſoner, although Anſwer made by the Emperor to the French king.
he were at libertie, hauing giuen his ſonnes for hoſtages, that not obſeruing his promiſe,
E which he had ſolemnly ſworne, for that he was hindered by his ſubiects, he ſhould return againe to priſon, for that he could not by the law of nations, being not yet freed from his oath, proteſt warre againſt him. But if he did repent him of this accord, he ſhould returne into his power, and breaking the firſt contract, the French ſhould recouer that which they had held. That he did wonder at the complaints of thoſe kings touching the Popes affliction, as if they were ignorant, that all had beene done without his priuitie, and that he had long ſince giuen commaundement the Pope ſhould bee ſet at libertie. Du Bellaie writes, That king Francis talking to Perrenot, touching the Emperours ſpeech, anſwered, Speech of king Francis touching his promiſe to the Emperor.
That he was not Charles his priſoner, neither had he euer giuen his faith, but had made a promiſe by force, being depriued of his libertie: but being now free in his kingdome, he
F did not know any man that could force him to keepe that promiſe, neither was he voluntarily bound to obſerue that which conſtraint and impriſonment had made him to promiſe.

In Spaine the Infant D. Philip, being a yeare old, was ſworne and declared Prince of Genealogie of Caſtille.
the Aſturies, and heire of the realmes of Caſtille, and the dependances, with the lands annexed, in the towne of Vailledolit: after which the Emperour Charles and D. Iſabella had 1528 had another ſonne named D. Ferdinand, who liued little, and two daughters, D. Maria, who was maried to Maximilian of Auſtria, her couſen german, ſonne to Ferdinand, and D. Ioane, maried to D. Iohn of Portugall, grand child to the king D. Manuel: Wherefore I haue thought it fit to returne vnto his actions, during the three yeares which hee liued after his third mariage, which was in the yeare 1518, who begat of his wife D. Leonora the Infant D. Charles, and D. Maria an after birth. G

Genealogie of Portugal.

Portugal.

26 In the diſcourſe of the raigne of D. Manuel, we made mention of two of his diſcontented ſubiects, D. Ferdinand of Magellanes, and Ruis Fallero, who had addreſt themſelues vnto the Councell of the Indies in Caſtille, and demaunded leaue and meanes to diſcouer the rich iſlands of the Molucques, the which they obtained at the comming of K. Charls, who being at Barcelona, ſent them with letters & neceſſarie prouiſions, to Seuille, there to prepare themſelues for ſo long and ſo important a voyage. Ferdinand Magellanes maried in Seuille, with the the daughter of Edward Baruoſa, captaine of the arcenall of that citie; and for that Ruis Fallero, his companion, fell madde, he was forced to make his preparation without him, hauing fiue ſhips, that is, the Victorie (the pilot whereof was Iohn Sebaſtian del Cano, borne at Guetaria in Guipuſcoa, he that in the ſame voyage went about the world) S. Anthonie, S. Iames, the Conception, and the Trinitie, in which ſhips were two hundred thirtie ſeuen men, ſouldiers and mariners, with the which he parted in the yeare 1519, from the port of S. Lucar, and paſſing by the iſlands of the Canaries, and Cape Verd, he ſailed toward Saint Auguſtines cape, betwixt the South and the West, vntill that he came three and twentie degrees beyond the Equinoctiall, where he found a land whoſe inhabitants were wild Giants, & of ſo great a ſtature, as ſome were eleuen, twelue, and thirteene ſpannes high: which countrey he called The land of Giants. He ſtayed in it May, Iune, Iulie, and Auguſt, which is the Winter in thoſe quarters. The king D. Manuel was much diſcontented, that king Charles, his brother in law, had imployed theſe Portugals, and attempted this voyage, to his great prejudice; yet he did comfort himſelfe with a conceit, that Magellanes could not performe what he had promiſed. This voyage of Magellanes was verie difficult and full of lets, by reaſon of the diſcord betwixt him and his companions; ſo as one of his ſhips, called S. Anthonie, returned into Spaine, leauing the reſt as farre as the ſtrait or cape, called Eleuen thouſand Virgines, fiftie three degrees beyond the Equinoctiall, whereas the nights haue but ſix houres in the end of October. And they ſo called this cape, for that they toucht there on Saint Vrſulaes day, which is the one and twentieth of October. The fame of the iſlands of the Molucques, and others which were rich in ſpices, was ſo great, and of the profit which might be made there, if they could find meanes to ſhorten their voyage, as not onely the Spa- Spaniards, but other nations, ſought out wayes for this traffique and negotiation. Paul Centurion, a marchant of Genoua, going for this cauſe into Muſcouie, gaue Baſilius, prince of that countrey, to vnderſtand, that there was meanes to bring the ſpices into his countrey, by diuers riuers which he declared vnto him; ſaying, That thoſe which the Portugals brought into Europe, were for the moſt part corrupted and falſified. The way which he meant, was, to bring the marchandiſe vp the riuer of Indus, vnto Bater, from whence they muſt carrie them by land to the riuer of Camu, and from thence by Citraca, and the Caſpian ſea, to bring them into the riuers of Volga, Oeca, and Moſque. But this paſſage had beene with greater charge, paine, and danger, than Centurion did conceiue, yea to diſtribute them after they were come into Muſcouie, by Liuonia, Polonia, Pruſſia, Saxonie, and other parts of Germanie. H I K L

Voyage of Ferdinand Magellanes.

Land of Giants who haue Winter when we haue Summer.

Ferdinand Magellanes, beſides the ſhip which returned into Spaine, loſt another in a ſtorme: with the three others he paſt the ſtrait which was called by him Magellan, the which is aboue ſixſcore leagues long, and ſcarce two leagues broad, the entries of the which from the North to the South ſeas, are about two and fiftie degrees from the Equinoctiall: the waters are verie deepe, the ſhore full of high rockes, and barren, couered continually with ſnow. In this paſſage, & for a great ſpace in the South ſeas, they thought to die of hunger: in the end they came to the iſland of Inuagaua, repaſſing the line eleuen degrees, which they called Good ſigne, where they found wherewithall to ſatisfie their hunger; and from thence they came to the iſland of Sebut, where they paſt the feaſt of M

Straits of Magellan.

A of Eaſter, in the yeare 1521, and perſuaded the king of that countrey, called Hamabar, to become a Chriſtian, receiuing victuals and preſents from him, with information of the Molucques. In the ſame iſland there was another king, enemie to Hamabar, called Calpulapo, lord of Mautan, againſt whom Ferdinand Magellanes going to fight, was ſlaine there in battell, the 27 of Aprill 1521. Iohn Serran, who was chiefe pilot of the armie, remaining the chiefe, was ſoone after taken by king Hamabar, who had been called Charles at his baptiſme, and put to death with ſeuentie other Spaniards. Wherefore the three ſhips parted from thence, hauing but an hundred and fifteene men remaining, and came to Cohol, where they burnt one of their ſhips: there they trimmed vp the two others, and then went B to Bornoy, where they were courteouſly intreated by the king Sirapida, a great and mightie lord, who releeued them with all neceſſaries: in which countrey they ſaw great riches and deuiſes of gold and ſiluer. Then paſſing by the iſland of Cinbubon, they came to the iſland of Tidore, which is one of the fiue of the Molucques, whereof the other foure are, Terrenate, where, ſeuen monethes before this arriuall, died Francis Serran, a Portugal, kinſman to Magellanes, who gaue him firſt knowledge of theſe iſlands, & incouraged him to go thither, Mate, Matille, and Machian, which lye vnder the Equinoctiall, or thereabouts, verie ſmall, but abounding in riches, being diſtant from Spaine aboue an hundred and ſeuentie degrees. The king of Tidore, called Almanſor, although he were a Mahumetiſt, ſuffered theſe Spaniards to traffique freely, and was pleaſed with their arriuall, and C with the friendſhip of the king of Caſtille. The diſcouerie of theſe iſlands in the time of the king D. Manuel, did cauſe great controuerſies betwixt Caſtille and Portugal, the Portugals pretending that they were thereby intereſſed, and hindered in their courſe aſſigned for their nauigation: Yet the king D. Manuel moued no debate, for before that the newes of this diſcouerie was knowne in Spaine, he ended his dayes, towards the end whereof there happened a great plague, and famine, in Portugal. During which afflictions the mariage was concluded betwixt the Infanta D. Beatrix, ſecond daughter to the king D. Manuel, and Charles duke of Sauoy, to whom ſhe was ſent this yeare 1521, with a fleet of three and twentie ſaile, of the which D. Martin of Caſtilblanc, earle of Villanoua, was generall, being accompanied by D. Martin of Acoſta, biſhop of Lisbone, with D other noblemen, and by D. Leonora de Sylua, and a daughter of the earle of Faro, with many waiting women. The Infanta was then ſixteene yeares old and ſeuen monethes. After the returne of this fleet, about the end of the yeare, the king D. Manuel died, little lamented by the Clergie of his countrey, of whom he had leuied new and vnaccuſtomed ſubſidies, hauing raigned ſix and twentie yeares and three monethes, in the three and fiftieth yeare of his age. He was buried in the monaſterie of Belem, which he himſelfe had cauſed to be built.

1528

Death of Ferdinand Magellanes.

Fiue iſlands of Molucques.

27

Mariage betwixt the duke of Sauoy and D. Beatrix of Portugal.

Death of the king D. Manuel

D. Iohn, third of that name, fifteenth King of Portugall.

E

28 HIs ſonne D. Iohn ſucceeded him, the third of that name, at the ſolemnitie of whoſe reception there were preſent ſome of the Infants his brethren, D. Iago duke of Bragance, the maſter of S. Iames, the earle of Tentugal, the earle of Taroca, D. Iohn de Meneſes, prior of Saint Iohn, the great maſter, the marqueſſe of Tournouo, and Villa Real, with other noblemen and gentlemen of the realme, and the cardinall D. Alphonſo his brother, in whoſe hands the oath was taken. This prince was fat and vnweldie, verie religious, and a louer of learned and valiant men. He was founder of the Vniuerſitie of Co- Vniuerſitie of Coimbra erected. F imbra, and of the royall colledge of Saint Paul, the which he endowed with great reuenues, and large ſtipends, for the Regents and Doctors: wherein hee was followed and aſſiſted by the cardinall D. Henrie, his brother, who built in the citie of Ebora the colledge of Ieſuites, with profeſſors in the tongues and ſciences, both ſacred and prophane. Colledge of Ieſuites built at Ebora. The queene D. Leonora, widow to king Manuel, was in the yeare 1522, deliuered of an after birth, named D. Maria, which was not maried.

This

1528 This new king continued the nauigations begun by his predeceſſors with great affecti- G on, and had great contention with the Emperour Charles, in regard of the Molucques, whereas the ſhips of Caſtille had beene well entertained, as we haue ſaid, by Almanſor, king of the iſland of Tidore, whereas the Caſtillans ſtayed fiue whole monethes, and made a kind of bargaine, by the which king Almanſor promiſed to giue ſo many cloues for a certaine meaſure of red cloth, blew cloth, or linnen, and ſo proportionably of other ſpices. The two ſhips of Caſtille remaining of Ferdinand Magellanes armie, that is, the Victorie and the Trinitie, diuided themſelues, and diſpoſed of their returne, ſo as the Trinitie ſhould shape his courſe to Panama, vpon the coaſt of new Spaine, which they held 29 to be but a ſhort voyage; and Iohn Sebaſtian del Cano, with the Victorie following the Por- H Voyage of Iohn Sebaſtian del Cano. tugals voyage, ſhould returne into Spaine, by the cap Bon Eſperance. The Victorie then parting from Tidore in the moneth of Aprill 1522, with fortie ſeuen Spaniards, and thirteene men of the iſland of Tidore, they came to Zumatra, in old time called Taprobana, and then repaſſing vnder the Equinoctiall, and the Winter Tropike, they doubled the cap of Bon Eſperance, and arriued in the port of S. Lucar of Barameda, in September, hauing beene about three yeares in this long and dangerous voyage, in the which it is thought that this Iohn Sebaſtian del Cano, made aboue foureteene thouſand leagues at ſea. The other ſhip, called the Trinitie, commaunded by a captaine called Spinoſa, ſayling towards new Spaine, was put back by contrarie winds, to Tidore, whither Anthonio Brito, a captain for the king D. Iohn, was come with fiue ſhips of Portugal, by whom the Caſtil- I lans were taken and ſpoyled, and carried, being fortie eight, to Malaca; ſo as of fiue ſhips which parted with Fernando Magellanes, the Victorie onely returned into Spaine, beſides that of S. Anthonie which would not follow him.

The voyage of the Eaſt Indies hath alwayes beene more ſucceſſull for the Portugals than Caſtillans: and at that time the king D Iohn intreated the Emperour Charles, not to ſuffer his ſubiects to goe to the Molucques, to auoid the ruine of armies, which are ſent to diſcouer thoſe countries: whereunto he yeelded (not knowing what Anthonio Brito had done to the Caſtillans that were in the Trinitie at Tidore) vntill that expert men in the Conference for the limits of the Nauigation betwixt Caſtille and Portugal. Mathematikes and Nauigation, had decided it. This cauſe was debated in the yere 1524, at Yelbes, whither came, for the king of Portugal, the Licentiate Anthonie of Azeuedo, K Cotigno, Diego Lopes of Sequeira, Pero Alphonſo of Aguiar, Franciſco de Melo, Simon of Tabira, and others: and at Badajos, the Licentiats, Acugna, Barrientos, and Pedro Manuel, D. Ferdinand Colombus, ſon to the Admirall Chriſtopher Colombus, Iohn Sebaſtian del Cano, Pero Ruis of Burgos, & others, for the Emperor. Theſe deputies of either part hauing conferred many dayes vpon a bridge on the riuer of Caja, which diuides Portugal from Caſtille, they parted in greater diſorder and confuſion than before, the Caſtillans maintaining, That the Molucques, yea, and the iſlands of Zumatra and Malaca, with a good part of China, fell in their ſtrait and Nauigation, according to the line drawne by Pope Alexander the ſixt, and the accord made betwixt king Iohn the ſecond, and king Ferdinand the fift, in the towne of Tordeſillas: The Portugals affirming the contrarie, with their L reaſons.

In the yeare 1525 died queene Leonora, widow to king Iohn the ſecond, who was called The mother of the poore, for her great charitie. She had the hoſpitall of las Caldas, Mariage of D. Iohn king of Portugal, and the Emperors ſiſter. and the monaſterie of the mother of God, to be built. In which yeare king Iohn the third then raigning, being two and twentie yeares old, maried D. Catherina, daughter to king Philip of Auſtria, and ſiſter to the Emperour Charles, being then eighteene yeares old: which mariage was ſolemnized at Ebora. Of this mariage were borne the Infants following, D. Alphonſo, who liued little, D. Maria, borne at Coimbra, in the yeare 1526, ſhe was princeſſe of Caſtille, D. Catherina, who liued but a while, nor her ſiſter D. Beatrix, D. Manuel, who in like maner died ſoone, D. Philip, and D. Iohn, who were borne at Ebora, and M D. Anthonie at Lisbone.

Caſtille. Vnfortunat voiage of the Caſtillans to the Molucques. 31 The Emperour Charles, perſuaded by them that had beene at Caja, betwixt Badajos and Yelbes, rigged out ſeuen ſhips of Biſcaie at the Groine, to ſeeke a paſſage to the Molucques, by the land of Bacalaos and Labrador towards the North, if they might find any, meaning to make a ſtorehouſe for ſpices at the Groine, from whence they might be

A diſtributed into Spaine, France, Flanders, Germanie, England, and other regions: from the which D. Iohn king of Portugal ſought to diuert him by intreaties and reaſons, offering to pay the charges of the armie, and to giue him many other gifts, which the Emperour refuſed, perſiſting ſtill in his reſolution: Wherefore theſe ſeuen ſhips parted from the Groine, being commaunded by Garci Geoffrey of Loayſa, borne at Cité Real, a knight of S. Iohn, who had Iohn Sebaſtian del Cano for his lieutenant, who were all loſt, or went aſtray, except the Admirall, which came to Tidore, without her generall Garci Geoffrey, who died at ſea. D. Garcia Henrtques of Ebora, was then generall for the king of Portugal at the Molucques. In the yeare 1528 Fernando Cortez, gouernour and conqueror of 1528
B new Spaine, ſent from the countries conquered by him, two ſhips, by the kings commandement, wherof Aluaro of Sahauedra Ceron, was captaine, to ſeeke out the Molucques, but he was as vnfortunat as the reſt: which made the Emperour to yeeld more eaſily to an agreement with king Iohn, his brother in law, being preſt by other weightie affaires, which called him into Italie, for the Crowne of the Empire, which hee ſhould receiue from the hands of Pope Clement; for which voyage the king of Portugal lent him three hundred and fiftie thouſand ducats, in conſideration whereof the Emperour engaged, or ſuſpended the controuerſie for the Molucques; wherein the Licentiat, Anthonie of Azeuedo, deputed by the king of Portugal, hauing negligently negotiated, and left the buſineſſe almoſt in the ſame tearmes as it was at the conference of Badajos and Yelbes, was
C puniſhed: whereby, in time, the quarell was reuiued betwixt the Portugals and Caſtillans.

In the yeare 1529 Lewis of Beaumont, earle of Lerin, and conſtable of Nauarre, died there, whom his ſon ſucceeded in all his lands and dignities, bearing the ſame name. The Emperour Charles did alwayes honour him much, acknowledging him for his kinſman, for that he was deſcended, by the mothers ſide, from D. Iohn king of Nauarre and Arragon. 1529

32 The treatie of Cambray was concluded the yeare following 1530, in the which Louyſe of Sauoy, mother to the French king, and Marguerite of Auſtria, the Emperours aunt, had long laboured to reconcile theſe two princes: By the which the Infants of 1530 Treatie of Cambray.
D France were deliuered, in regard of two millions and fiue hundred and fiftie thouſand crownes, payable at ſeuerall paiments, as well readie as otherwiſe, in diſcharge of the Emperour to the king of England: and it was ſaid, that the king ſhould renounce the ſoueraigntie of Flanders and Artois, and his pretenſions to the duchie of Milan, and realme of Naples. That he ſhould marie the queene D. Leonora, and if there came a ſonne of this mariage, he ſhould be duke of Bourgondie, with many other conditions, which are to be ſeene in the ſaid treatie, and here omitted, for that they did not hold. The articles of this treatie being performed, as farre as might be at that time, the Emperour came to Barcelone, from whence he paſt to Genoua, in Andrew Dorias gallies, who hauing a little before left the French kings ſeruice, was come vnto the Emperours. From Genoua he went to 33
E Bolonia la Graſſe, whereas Pope Clement attended him, and there he receiued the Imperiall Crownes, one of yron, which the Emperours haue beene accuſtomed to receiue at Milan, and one of gold, which he ſhould take at Rome; but the Romans had not yet forgotten the ſacke and ſpoyle which the Spaniards had made. This coronation, which was performed on Saint Mathias day, verie happily for the Emperour, had beene purchaſed of the Pope, with the price of the Florentines libertie, and the change of their commonweale into a principalitie. After this ſolemnitie the Emperour hauing heard certaine princes, and the embaſſadours of many Eſtates in Italie, he tooke his way to Trent, and paſt into Germanie. Whileſt that they were making preparation for the Emperours coronation in Bolonia, he receiued aduertiſement, That D. Iſabella, his wife, was deliuered Coronation of the Emperour at Bolonia.
F of another ſonne, whom he would haue called Ferdinand, by his grandfathers name. There was great joy and triumph for this birth both in Spaine and Italie, and eſpecially in Bolonia; but this joy was of ſmall continuance, for he died within few monethes after his birth. Ferdinand Infant of Spaine borne.

At the Emperours paſſage into Italie, to his coronation, hee had beene attended on by the gallies of Spaine, of the which Roderigo Portundo was generall, who in his returne backe, Roderigo Portundo defeated and ſlaine by pirats.

1530 backe, hearing that there were certain pyrats of Barbarie in thoſe ſeas, the chiefe of which G was Haydin Rays of Smirna, called Chaſe-diuell, which ſpoyled all men, he reſolued to defeat them: wherefore hauing well furniſhed eight of his gallies, both with ſouldiers and ſlaues, and leauing the other ſeuen in the iſland of Yuiſa, he directed his courſe towards Formentana, where he vnderſtood the pyrats lay with certaine galliots and foiſts, but he knew not their number. But as he was of an vndaunted courage, and diſcourſed with reaſon, that thoſe ſmall barkes of the Barbarians, commaunded by diuers men, and for their owne priuat intereſts, would rather flie than fight, he did not reſpect the number of his enemies, but, after the Spartane maner, ſought where they were. All which, it may be, had ſucceeded happily, if he had not aduanced too haſtily with his Admirall, the which H was boorded, and he ſlaine by the pirats, before the other gallies could ſuccour him, the which, as they aduanced one after another without any order, they were enuironed, and fought withall by the enemies: ſo as of the eight gallies onely one eſcaped by flight, the reſt were taken, and all the Chriſtians ſlaine, or made ſlaues. Iohn the ſonne of the generall Portundo, was taken priſoner. With this noble ſpoyle Haydin Rays preſented himſelfe to Haradin Barberouſſe, who by the death of Horuſco his brother, remained king of Alger, and head of all the pyrats of Barbarie: ſo as growne confident (being ſo fortified with gallies and ſlaues) to be able to attempt ſome matter of importance; whereon whileſt he did meditate, he drew into his companie Sinan Ceſut of Smirna, who was called the Iew, a famous pyrat, who retired with his veſſels to Gerbe. He called alſo another deſperat pi- I rat, called Alicotto of Caramania, who ſcoured the ſeas with foure foiſts, and two gallies, the which he had taken when Florence was beſieged, at Montargentaro, where they had laden certaine munition, conducted from Naples, for that enterpriſe. Barberouſſe hauing at the leaſt 60 veſſels of warre, great and ſmall, had reſolued to ſurpriſe Cales in Spaine, and to get a rich bootie, by reaſon of a Faire that was kept there. Whileſt that he prepared all things which he held neceſſarie, he commaunded Alicotto to goe and conduct biſket, artillerie, and other neceſſaries, to the armie lying at Alger. During this preparation in Africke, Andrew Doria went to ſea with a great armie, deſirous to purge that ſea of py-rats, and to reuenge the wrong and great loſſe which the Emperour had ſuſtained by the raſhneſſe of Portundo. Being therefore aduertiſed, that the Barbarians armie was diuided, K and where it lay, he went towards Cercelli, whereas Alicotto remained with 17 veſſels; where he arriued ſo ſuddenly, as the pyrat had not any time but to vnfurniſh his veſſels, to chaſe the Chriſtian ſlaues into a caue, or ſecret priſon vnder ground, and to retire himſelfe with his men into the caſtle, ſending meſſengers with all ſpeed vnto the Moores of the Andrew Doria takes many gallies of pyrats. neighbour mountaines, to come and ſuccour him. Doria being arriued, he became maſter of the town without any difficultie, and of the port, where he tooke two gallies, and ſeuen galliots, and burnt the reſt. He cauſed a diligent ſearch to be made for the ſlaues, and finding them, he ſet aboue 1000 free. Notwithſtanding he loſt about 400 ſouldiers, who going raſhly to ſpoile the towne, were cut in peeces by the Moores which came, and by the Turkes which ſallied out of the caſtle with Alicotto, or elſe forced to run into the ſea, Doria L hauing cauſed his gallies to go from the ſhore, to the end he might fight for his own ſafetie, there were ſixtie taken & made ſlaues, with George Palauicino, an Enſign. And this loſſe which Alicotto made of gallies and galliots, was the ſafetie of Cales.

1531 The yeare 1531 was memorable for the earthquake and inundations at ſea, which hap-Inundations. pened as well in Spaine as in Africk and Flanders, whereas many towns & buildings were ruined, and much land drowned, and infinit numbers of ſhips ſwallowed vp by the won-derfull ſpring tides, with the loſſe of a great number of men. This was at ſuch time as the Ferdinand choſen king of Romans. Infant D. Ferdinand was choſen king of Romans at Coullen, & that Germanie was threatened extraordinarily by Solyman the Turke, who hauing raiſed a huge armie, entred ſoon after into Hungarie, with an intent to beſiege Vienna, the chiefe citie of Auſtria, and the M rampar of Chriſtendome on that ſide: to withſtand whoſe power the Emperor, being aſ-ſiſted by the princes of Germanie, went thither in perſon, which diſappointed the deſigns of that great enemie. He being retired, the Emperor returned into Italie, whereas Pope 1532 Clement & he had an enteruiew at Bolonia, in ſhew to treat of a general Councell, which League betwixt the Pope and Emperour. was not verie pleaſing vnto the Pope, although he made ſhew to inuite all princes: but
the

A the chiefe end of this enteruiew, was, to make a league betwixt them, and the other Potentates of of Italie, for the assurance of their estates against the enterprises of the French: Which done, the king returned to Genoua, where he imbarked in Februarie, in the yeare 1533, and past into Spaine. 1533

34 During these affaires the Castillans continued with great vehemencie, their discouerie of new lands, whereas Francis Picarro, borne at Trugillo, who had liued long at the Indies, discouered the countrey of Peru, from whence such aboundance of treasure hath come: by reason whereof the Emperour made him marqueſſe of Atauilles. He had some time before discouered an iſland, and in it a towne, which he called Saint Iago. Continuing his course, he coasted along the firme land of Peru, and there planted a colonie, which he named Saint Michael: then entring farre into the countrey, he found a fit opportunitie to doe his businesse, in a warre which fell out betwixt two brethren, contending for the realme of Cusco; whereof the one was called Guascar, and the other Atabalipa. Guascar finding himselfe the weaker, had recourse vnto Picarro and the Spaniards, who promised to succour him; but it was with an intent to ruine them both. Ferdinand Picarro was happily come to the Indies at that time, with new forces from Spain, who hauing joined with the forces of his brother Francis, and the Indians of Guascar, they made a strong armie, sufficient to assaile Atabalipa. He for his part attentiue to all occasions of warre, did not stay vntill the enemie came vnto him, but went to meet them, hauing in his armie aboue sixscore thousand Indians, and gaue them battell about the towne of Caxamalcan, yet (as some write) within the circuit of the same towne, which was verie great, into the which Picarro had put himselfe, finding it without dwellers, and was there entertained at that time by the Barbarian king, vnder colour of treating friendship with him; but they could not agree. The Spanish captaine had caused Atabalipa to be summoned, and solicited, That he should not disdaine to submit himselfe to the Emperour Charles, as his vassall, and to pay him tribute; and moreouer, to make himselfe a Christian; else they threatened him, that the Pope would depriue him of his realme, and would giue it wholly vnto the Emperour: the which he might well doe (sayed they) for hee was Gods lieutenant on earth, of God, who had made all the world of nothing, and who, to deliuer and saue men from the slaueric of the euill spirit, had made himselfe man, had died vpon the crosse, and was called Christ Iesus. Father Vincent, a Iacobine Monke, was messenger of this summons. To whom Atabalipa answered, That hee did much esteeme and desire the Emperours friendship, and would send him presents, as to his friend; but to pay him tribute, he would not doe it, the kings of Cusco being accustomed to make others tributarie. That as for the Pope, whose power hee did alledge, hee held him for some madde man, seeing he presumed to giue vnto another that which was not in his power, and where he had no right. And in regard of Iesus Christ, and of his seruice, he saied, that he had no knowledge of it, and therefore he would not leaue the auncient gods of Cusco, and especially for that he vnderstood by him, that Christ was alreadie dead. He would therefore adhere rather to the Sonne and the Moone, which died not. And touching that which he did assure him, that the Christians God had made heauen and earth of nothing, and finally all the world, he demaunded of him where he had learned it; for he thought that the world had euer beene, or at the least many thousands of yeares: wondering much, that the Monke, who was not yet much aduanced in the first hundred of the course of his life, did speake so confidently of such ancient things. Frier Vincent replied, That the Emperour Charles was a great Monarch, whom many kings, as mightie as the king of Cusco, obeyed, and therefore he should not make triall of his force, nor compare himselfe vnto him: and holding in the one hand a Crucifix, and in the other a Bible, he told Atabalipa, that that Image had instructed him what the creation of the world had beene, and the booke contained the certaine historie. The king taking this booke in his hand, opened it, and turned it ouer, he smelt to it, and layed his eare to it, hearkening if it spake any thing vnto him; but seeing there was no feeling in it, and that it spake not any thing, he cast it to the ground, saying, That both the booke and Monke mockt him. Wherefore Frier Vincent hauing taken vp his booke, returned to Picarro, to whom hauing related all, he persuaded him to take some cruell reuenge of the impietie

Peru discouered.

Colonie of S. Michael.

1533 pietie of that Infidell king. The two armies therefore being ſo neere, as one might ſay, G they were mingled within the circuit of the great citie of Caxamalcan, the Spaniards ran vpon the Indians with a great thunder of muskets and artillerie, and the ſound of drums and trumpets: wherewith the Indians being not acquainted, were daunted and confounded: Atabalipa himſelfe was ſo amazed, as forgetting the duetie of a generall, not gi-uing them any ſigne, nor commaunding to fight, he ſaw them ſlaine by heapes, neere vnto the place where he was ſet vpon an high ſeat of gold, carried on his gards ſhoulders, Atabalipa de-feated & taken who ſought to retire him out of the preaſe, and to flie away with him; but they were ſtaied, and their king ouerthrowne and taken, being abandoned by all his people, moſt of them eſcaping by flight. H

By this victorie, and the taking of the king of Cuſco, the Spaniards made themſelues, eaſily, maſters of all the townes of that great and rich kingdome, and the ſouldiers were inſtantly made rich with the ſpoyle of the kings mouables, and of the noblemen of his traine, with a wonderfull quantitie of gold, ſiluer, and ſlaues, among the which there were found fiue hundred maids and wiues, which did ſerue king Atabalipa, who for a time was honourably garded, in hope to be ſet at libertie, for the which he promiſed to glut the couetouſneſſe of the Spaniards, whom he ſaw to be verie greedie after gold and ſiluer; yea he offered to goe into Spaine, or whereas the Emperour ſhould be, and was perſuaded to be baptiſed. But notwithſtanding all this, they ſtrangled him cruelly, and hauing halfe burnt him, they cauſed his bodie to be laid in a chappell built to that end I in the market place of Caximalcan, for that they would haue all men honor his funerall, excuſing themſelues of the execution, vnder colour of juſtice; for that (ſaid they) hee had treacherouſly made ſecret leuies of ſouldiers in the realme of Quito, to ſurpriſe the Spaniards, and to free himſelfe by force out of their hands: and alſo, for that he had put his brother Guaſcar to death, after the ſame maner, being their allie. The which he diſſembled not, for that (ſaid he) he had attempted to take away his life, to raigne. In the place of him that was dead, there was ſet vp by Francis Picarro the gouernor, for a ſhew, another brother of his, called Mangan (others name him alſo Atabalipa) who diſcouered vnto them part of the treaſures: ſo as the preſent fruits of this victorie amounted to many millions, drawne as well out of the kings houſes, as out of the Indians tombes, being accuſtomed K to burie with the dead bodie, the moſt precious things they had: and in like maner from their temples in the towne of Pauca Canu, & in that of Cuſco, which is the chiefe of the realme. This great citie of Cuſco is ſituated 17 degrees beyond the Equinoctiall line, towards the South ſea, in a temperat region, yet their Winters are ſomewhat ſharp in their ſeaſon, that is, when we haue Summer, for thoſe people are almoſt Antipodes to vs, & the cold continues, and is the greater, for that the high mountaines of that countrey, are moſt part of the yeare couered with ſnow. Soone after this conqueſt of Picarro, Iames of Alma-gra, who had a good ſhare in the honor thereof, went and inuaded the region of Chile, or Chiliane, but he found more difficultie than he expected: for beſides that his men were in daunger of death through cold, hee found ſtronger reſiſtance, the people being L Diſcipline of them of Peru at the warre. more warlike than they of Cuſco; whom notwithſtanding the Spaniards do not repreſent vnto vs, without dexteritie, or martial diſcipline: for they witnes, that in their armies they did obſerue a foreward, a battel, & a rereward; that they had ſcours, and forlorne hopes, which were excellent caſters in ſlings, as in old time they of Majorca were, who furiouſly began the fight, caſting a ſhowre of hard poliſhed ſtones, as big as an egge, & carrying a a targuet on the left arme. Their chiefe battalion where their king was, did conſiſt of men richly armed, with cueraſſes quilted with cotton, & bonets of the ſame, reaſonably ſtrong to reſiſt a handie ſtroke, enriched with plates and threds of gold and ſiluer: and for offenſiue armes, ſome had clubs about foure foot long, and the heads as big as two fiſts, hauing fiue or ſix ſharpe pikes of mettall; others carried hatchets like vnto our halbeards, which M they could handle well. As for their rereward or ſubſidiarie ſquadrons, to releue the reſt, they were all pikes, whoſe heads were better armed than ours bee. Frauncis Picar-ro found the Indians of Peru in this equipage to reſiſt him, it may bee (ſay they that haue written of his enterpriſes) to make his conqueſts more admirable vnto vs: For not confeſſing that either he or any one of his captaines made any account
of

A of the Indians of the countrey, whom they had drawne vnto their partie, and joyned with them in the aboue mentioned combat of Caxamalcan and others, they vaunt, that this great king Atabalipa, was vanquiſhed with all that great multitude of men of war which did accompanie him, by leſſe than fiue hundred foot, and an hundred and twentie horſe of the Spaniſh nation, whereof moſt of the footmen were croſſebowes, hauing few harquebuſes: yet they confeſſe that they had ſome peeces of ordnance, whereunto they attribute ſome part of their victories, ſaying, That the Indians were almoſt dead for feare, ſeeing theſe engines ſpit fire, and hearing the noyſe thereof, wherewith they had neuer been acquainted; the which hath ſome likelyhood. 1533

B Atabalipa was ſonne to a warlike and valiant prince, called Cuſco, who comming out of the prouince of Quito, which is directly vnder the Equinoctiall line, towards the South ſea, had conquered by armes from many other kings and lords, thoſe ample regions whereof his ſonne was in an inſtant diſpoſſeſt, at the comming of theſe Spaniards: and hauing there built the citie of Cuſco, had called it by his owne name, and made it the ſeat of his empire, which was aboue three hundred leagues long and broad, ſtretching from the South to the Weſt. At his death he left an hundred children, males and females, moſt of which liued when Atabalipa was defeated and taken. To Gueſcar (whom ſome alſo cal Cuſco) he had left the greateſt part of his conquered countries, and had giuen to Atabalipa the realme of Quito, where he was borne. But Gueſcar, not ſatisfied vnleſſe he might haue all, Beginning of Atabalipa.

C did firſt moue war to diſpoſſeſſe his brother, wherein he was vnfortunat: for after many vnhappie incounters, he was quite defeated, and taken, by Chilicuchima, lieutenant to Atabalipa, by whoſe commandement, although he were a priſoner in the Spaniards hands, he was ſtrangled: the which did ſo diſpleaſe the gouernor Francis Picarro, as he conceiued a mortall hatred againſt the king and his lieutenant, not ceaſing vntill he had put them to death; yet after that he had diſcouered, by their meanes, the treaſures of the realme, had ſeiſed of a good part of them, and was aſſured the reſt could not eſcape him. In the diſtribution of which treaſure he did afterwards ſhew himſelfe verie vniuſt and falſe, as well towards his ſouldiers, as to the Emperor his maſter, whom he did fruſtrate of a good part of his right of the fifts. It ſeemed that God, by this ſudden & eaſie conqueſt, had prepared

D a fit ſubiect for the Emperor Charles to ſettle a perfect eſtate at Peru; but his miniſters did corrupt it. All things were there according to a mans deſire, to execute a great and memorable deſigne: the which had bin admirable to poſteritie, were it in regard of the glorie of God, or temporall commodities, in regard of the riches, and all ſorts of bleſſings, the which heauen and all the elements doe powre downe aboundantly vpon that region, but eſpecially for the aptneſſe of the people, who were found ciuile and capable of reaſon, much more than they that had bin firſt diſcouered at the iſlands, or vpon the continent of thoſe Weſterne Indies towards the North ſea. They did not find them naked, and without ſhame, but apparelled, both men and women, handſome in their garments, induſtrious in their buildings, and in all other arts and workes; tillers of the ground, feeders of Maners of the people of Peru.

E paſtures, marchants, ſociable and courteous, as wel among themſelues as to ſtrangers, and religious alſo, although it were after the Pagan maner: whoſe imperfections ſhould not be cenſured with rigor, but excuſed, with an intention to reforme them in time, by good examples of pietie and charitie, and by juſtice well and duely miniſtred: conſidering that in their religion and maners, they were not more ſauage and barbarous than the firſt auncient Spaniards, before they were ciuilized and inſtructed, of whom we haue made mention in the beginning of this hiſtorie. They did beleeue the immortalitie of the ſoule, & the reſurrection of the body, and therfore they buried their dead with honour, and did graue markes vpon their tombs, which did ſhew the forepaſſed life of the deceaſed: into whoſe tombs they did caſt precious jewels, and brought meat and drinke thither, and many

F times their wiues and ſeruants did ſhut them in there, & did willingly ſtarue themſelues. They did puniſh adulterie with death, and did put out the eyes of theeues. Their childrens children, or ſome other of their bloud, did inherit their goods, and not their owne children, except thoſe of kings. Men might take as many wiues as they would, and did often marie their owne ſiſters. Thus among the ſeedes of pietie, humanitie, and policie, they had errours and blemiſhes, like ſenſuall people, which knew not

1533 the true God nor his juſtice. The which they did not meaſure by the perfect rule of nature, but according to their corrupt imaginations and their breeding, deſtitute of light and good gouernement. Through this defect they did worſhip the ſtarres as gods, and eſpecially an Idoll, which had its temple in the citie of Pancacami, who ſpake Oracles vnto them, and from whom they attended all their proſperities. It is the vſuall courſe of the Gentiles, to whom the myſteries of ſaluation are not reuealed, which are ſpeciall graces. And had not theſe poore Peruſians, vices in that regard, which were common with the auncient Ægyptians, Grecians, Romans, and other ſuch famous nations, who haue beene happily drawne from Paganiſme to Chriſtianitie, among whom the world hath ſeene ſo many goodly Churches to flouriſh, by the bountie of kings and Emperours, and by the doctrine, diligence, and exemplarie life of good biſhops? But the Spaniards nor their commaunders had no ſuch intent, as their actions written doe witneſſe. G H

It was ſufficient for them to commaund theſe ignorant people proudly, to make profeſſion of Chriſtians, in aſſiſting at the ceremonies, vpon paine of death, or ſeruitude. And it fell out often, I know not through what charitie, that many which for feare had cauſed themſelues to be baptiſed, were by them inſtantly ſlaine, that they might haue no leaſure to denie it: And thus, they ſayed, they procured their ſoules health. Theſe courſes, which could not bee pleaſing vnto God, drew his warth vpon the heads of the Picarres, and their companions, who made miſerable ends: for it was not long before Francis Picarro, and Iames of Almagra, fell into a great quarell for the gouernement of Peru, and ſo to ciuile warre, whereof followed their puniſhment and ruine: A worthie reward for their cruelties and rapes, as wee will hereafter ſhew. Theſe two men haue beene the chiefe leaders and conducters of the enterpriſe of Peru, both ſouldiers, but of obſcure and baſe families: for Francis Picarro was a baſtard, borne of an vnchaſt woman, who had left him at the doore of a church at Trugillo, from whence a captaine, called Gonſal of Nauarre, cauſed him to be taken, and to be bred vp at a farme of his in the countrey, like a clowne: But being growne great, he ran away to Seuile, and ſo paſt to the Indies, where he got reputation: and being held for the ſonne of the foreſayd captaine, there came vnto him three of his brethren, by the fathers ſide, Ferdinand Gonſaluo, and Iohn Picarro, and a brother by the mothers ſide, called Francis Martin of Alcantara. As for Iames of Almagra, he was borne at Almagra, but of ſo obſcure a father, as no man euer could learne his name. He was in like manner valiant, but hee and Picarro were both groſſe witted, and ſo ignorant, as they could neither read nor write; fit men to conquer and deſtroy, but not to edifie and preſerue, ambitious, and without gouernement, as they did teſtifie by their actions. Simon of Alcaſaua, a fugitiue of Portugal, was alſo ſent to the Molucques by the Caſtillans; but through his owne importunities hee was ſlaine by his men, before hee came to the ſtrait of Magellan. I K

Beginning of Francis Picarro and Iames of Almagra.

1534 35 The Emperour being in Spaine, he was ſolicited by Muley Haſcen, king of Tunes, who had beene diſpoſſeſt by Haradin Barberouſſe, to reſtore him to his realme, promiſing to hold it of the Crowne of Spaine. This occaſion was willingly imbraced, as neceſſarie for the good of Chriſtendome, and verie honourable for the Emperour in particular: for Haradin hauing ſucceeded his brother Horuſco in the realme of Alger, he was growne into great fauour with Solyman the great Turke, who had made him generall of his gallies, and with whoſe forces he had ſeiſed vpon Tunes, threatning all the Princes and Potentates about the Mediterranean ſea, both Chriſtians and Mahometiſts. Although we haue formerly made ſome mention of theſe two famous pyrats, yet, in my opinion, it will not be impertinent, if we relate more particularly what they were, and by what meanes they came to that greatneſſe wherein our fathers haue ſeene them: reporting, vpon this occaſion, ſome of their deſperate enterpriſes, vpon the coaſt of Africke, where they began firſt to appeare; to the end that by this notable example they which haue fame for their onely object, may know, that neither the nobilitie of the race, nor the vertue of predeceſſors, nor wealth, nor the ſeruices of Court, can bring men to great and eminent honours, but their owne induſtrie and valour. Horuſco then, and Haradin, brethren, ſurnamed Barberouſſe, were borne in the countrey of Turkie, or Turcomania, which the L M

Muley Haſcen king of Tunes diſpoſſeſt by Barberouſſe, & reſtored by the Emperour.

Vertue fitteſt to aduance a man.

Barberouſſes brethren.

A auncients called Cilicia, or Tarſis: Some ſay, they were borne in the towne of Metelin, in the iſland of Lesbos, whoſe father was a Chriſtian, but he did not continue in it; a poore pyrat, or theefe robbing at ſea: Their mother was a Spaniard, of the towne of Marchena, taken by this pyrat at ſea, who held her for his lawfull wife. Their firſt inſtitution and breeding was in their fathers trade, vnder a pyrat called Camal, and afterwards they put themſelues in pay with the Emperour of the Turkes, which was Selim, father to great Solyman. Being ſent for a conuoy to a Treaſurer, who went to pay the garriſons of Coron and Modon, townes of Morea, they ſtript him, and fled with the money: with which money hauing armed out a foiſt, or brigantine, they joyned with Crocut, being B then purſued by Selim his brother. He being dead, they fled for feare of puniſhment, and went to ſea: Their firſt prey was of two marchants ſhips of Siracuſa in Sicile; with which bootie hauing furniſhed themſelues better, it happened, that theeuing with too great aſſurance, they were taken by Peter Victorie, captaine of the Popes gallies; but through bad gard, this taker was himſelfe taken, and loſt two gallies. Being thus fortified, and growne more cunning, they got ſuch reputation, as in a ſhort time Horuſco, who was the elder, was acknowledged for head and conducter of all the pyrats vpon the coaſt of Barbarie, hauing for his lieutenants Haradin, his younger brother, and Scanderraiz, their brother in law. In this fauour hee preſumed to ſurpriſe the citie of Bugia, one of the beſt peopled in Africke, the which was then vnder the protection of the kings D. C Ferdinand and D. Iſabella, of Caſtille, and garded by a ſtrong garriſon of Spaniards: but his enterpriſe ſucceeded not; for being maſter of one of the three caſtles, or towers, which are in that citie, as he fought for the reſt, he was repulſt, and forced to leaue his prey, with the loſſe of an arme, ſo as euer after he wore one of ſiluer. Hauing fayled in this enterpriſe, he retired to Alger, the lord whereof was called Celim Beni Tumi, whom he ſuccoured, in ſhew, againſt a brother of his, who made warre againſt him, and then hee ſlue him in treaſon, vnder colour of friendſhip, making himſelfe Lord of the towne. 1534

This was no act of vertue, but of hardineſſe and policie, the which is much eſteemed in this later age. Hauing gotten Alger, he ſeiſed vpon the towne of Circele, by the D like meanes, the which is the auncient Carcena. Into this he put Scanderraiz for gouernour, and left the gard of Alger to Haradin his brother, and continuing to moleſt the world, he did alſo ſeiſe vpon the rich towne of Tunes, ſituated betwixt Alger and Oran, the lord whereof hauing fled into Spaine, hee had perſuaded cardinall Ximenes to ſend armie of Spaniards into Africke, againſt this theefe, vnder Diego de Vera, who was defeated there, and loſt about eight thouſand men, as we haue noted in the precedent booke.

Horuſco being puft vp with theſe good haps, he aſpired to greater matters, and to make himſelfe king of Tremeſſen, a great and mightie citie, and the chiefe in all Mauritania, ſometimes called Ceſarienſis. To attaine vnto the which, he thought to helpe himſelfe Moores ſuperſtitious. E with ſuperſtition, to the which the Moores and Arabians are more giuen than all the people of the earth, procuring certaine Morabites (which are religious hermits of Mahomets ſect) who (to bring the king of Tremeſſen in hatred of his ſubiects) gaue them to vnderſtand, That he had ſecret acquaintance with the Chriſtians, and that they Religion a cloke for tyrats. ſhould be all damned if they did not chaſe him away: the which they did, with the helpe which Horuſco Barberouſſe gaue them. To couer his deſigne, which was, to ſubdue them, he counſelled them to draw a nephew of the kings (whom they had chaſed away) out of priſon, hauing beene long kept in yrons by him, and to make him king; the which they had a will to effect: But this tyrant, ſeeing them to proceed ſlowly, and hee impatient and blinded with ambition, ſlue this young prince, and ſought to F ſeiſe vpon the citie, in deſpight of the inhabitants, whereof he ſlue many of the principals, which was his ruine: for the diſpoſſeſſed king was called home, and had meanes to recouer his kingdome, with the forces of Spaine, which he obtained eaſily. He purſued his aduerſarie ſo, as he forced him to flie into the mountaine of Abez, vpon the confines of Bugia, & to ſhut himſelfe in a caſtle, where being beſieged, neceſſitie forced him forth to fight, where he was vanquiſhed & ſlain, and his head caried to Tremeſſen & frō thence 1534 into Spaine to the great contentment of the Moores and Spaniards, for he was a ſubtile G and dangerous enemie: Pride growing through proſperitie ruined him: But Haradin go-uerned himſelfe more diſcreetly, and did manage his fortune with more honour. Thus we ſee, that thoſe which hazard themſelues in daungerous enterpriſes, doe moſt commonly miſcarrie, and make ſuch as follow after them wiſe by their raſhneſſe, to whom they haue made the way.

Haradin, by the death of his brother, remaining lord of Alger, one of the beſt ports of all Africke, he was no more held a pyrat, but a prince, and withall a great captaine at ſea: ſo as Sultan Solyman, Emperour of Conſtantinople, made his Baſſa and his Admi-rall, with whoſe incomparable forces he made himſelfe a terrour to all the countries of H Europe, Aſia, and Africke, which lay vpon the ſea; where hauing taken infinit booties, and ſpoyled many townes, in the end he made himſelfe maſter of the citie and realme of Tunes, in the yeare 1535, by this occaſion.

Abdul Hedi ſtemme of the laſt king of Tunes.

A little before there had raigned in Tunes Mahomet, deſcended from Abdul Hedi, who was a Moore of Andaluzia, borne at Seuile; he was wiſe and diſcreet: and being made by the king of Marroc gouernour of the citie of Tunes, which had rebelled, and had beene taken againe and puniſhed, he following the example of many others, had made himſelfe lord of his gouernement, when as after the battell of Muradat in Spaine, woon by the Chriſtians, there was a generall reuolt in Africke, againſt the Almohades, Emperours, and great Miralmumins of the Moores, and Alarabes at Marroc. This Mahomet, I iſſued from this race, had had many children by many wiues, who ſeeing himſelfe old, and deſirous to prouide a ſucceſſor to his realme after his owne humor, for certaine conſiderations, he made choyce of the youngeſt of all, called Haſcen, whom hee had by an Arabian woman, called Gezia, and would haue him ſucceed him to the Crowne. It is this Muley Haſcen for whoſe reſtitution the Emperour was perſuaded to lead an armie into Africke. This jealous prince was no ſooner ſeated in the royall throne, but he put Mamon, his elder brother, to death, and after diſpatcht all his other brethren and kinſmen: (theſe be the fruits of Polygamie, in the followers of Mahomet their Prophet) Arraxide onely eſcaped, and fled to Bixacara, a towne of Numidia, where, with the aid of certaine Xecques, or lords Numidians, hee gathered ſome forces together, K to inuade Muley Haſcen; but it was in vaine: wherefore he had recourſe to Haradin Barberouſſe, king of Alger, who hauing receiued him courteouſly, aduiſed him to go with him to Conſtantinople, to informe the great Turke of his misfortunes; promi-ſing to preſent him vnto him, and to doe him all fauour and good offices. Being come to Solymans Court, Barberouſſe was preſently diſpatcht with a good number of gallies, well furniſhed with ſouldiers, to come to Tunes, giuing it out, that hee carried backe Arraxide, to make him king, who notwithſtanding was ſtayed at Conſtantinople.

Muley Haſcen, a paracide, couetous, voluptuous, iniurious, and a coward, amazed at this great preparation of armes, which came to aſſayle him, ſtaied not, but fled to his kinſ- L men by the mothers ſide, Iſmael and Dorar Alarabas, of the linage of Vled Aixa, which are a member of Vled Yahaya, of thoſe which led a vagabond life in the plaines and deſarts of Africke and Numidia: a mightie people, but diſloyall, and of no friendſhip. Finding not ſuch ſuccours there as he expected, he followed the aduice of a Genouois renegado, called Ximaa, which was, to implore ayd of the Emperor Charles: and this Genouois was he which made a voyage into Spaine, who could ſo perſuade the Emperour, and ſeaſon his requeſt with liuelie reaſons, and infinit promiſes, as he obtained that which he pretended, which was, To perſuade the Emperor and his counſel, that it was both profitable and neceſſarie for him to reſtore Muley Haſcen to his realm: Euery one weighing the importance of this buſineſſe, and foreſeeing how it might prejudice Italie and Spaine, if the Turkes, M which did alreadie hold many ports vpon the coaſt of Barbarie, ſhould ſet footing into Tunes, a great and mightie citie, fit for the ſituation (which is neere vnto the ruines of old Carthage, ſometimes concurring in power with the Romans) to make ordinarie and prejudiciall impreſſions in that State. Barberouſſe, who had found the place void of ſouldiers, or Commander, did eaſily ſeiſe vpon the towne, caſtle, and fort of Goulette, which

A which ſtands on the entrie of the lake which the Sea makes there. But hee did not thinke the Chriſtians had taken this ſo ill, as hee found by experience, and therefore hee was not ſo carefull to prouide all things neceſſarie to preſerue ſuch a conqueſt, againſt the power which the emperor brought: who as ſoone as this honorable enterpriſe was concluded, hee did aduertiſe all Chriſtian princes, and inuited them to contribute men, money, and ſhips to this warre, whether hee would goe in perſon. The rendes-vous was appointed at the port of Cailleri in Sardynia, whether the emperour came with the gal- leys of Spain, thoſe of Genoua, and the particular galleys of Andrew Doria. D. Iohn king of Portugal ſent him twenty galleys, and one great gallion, vnder the command of D. Lewis B his Brother. 1535

Forces of the Emperour at his going to Tunes.

The Pope armed nine galleys at Genoua, at his owne charge, of the which Paul Iuſtinian had the command, and Virgilio Vrſino, earle of Anguilare had the leading of the ſoldiers that were in them: And hee ſuffered him to leuie the tenths of the Clergie of Spaine. The knights of Malta ſent foure galleys. All which ioyned at Cailleri, where (before the emperors comming) there arriued the royall galleys of Naples and Sicile, with many galliots and foiſts, armed by the noblemen of Naples and Sicile, at their owne charge, in which the Marques of Guaſt was trãſported with the old Spaniſh ſouldiers which he had drawne out of the garriſons of Italie. Thither alſo came many round and flat bottomed veſſels, carrying victuals, munition, artillerie, horſe, and a good number of foot, newly le- C uied to that end in Spaine, Italy & Germany, ſo as there was found when this army weigh- ed anchor, three hundred and ſixtie ſaile, carrying beſides the Court, the traine of noble- men, and many voluntaries, ſeuen hundred men at armes, two thouſand light horſe, and 12 thouſand biſoques or new ſouldiers, fiue thouſand old ſouldiers, Spaniards, and ſixe thou- ſand Italian foot, & ſeuen thouſand Lanſquenets, men of experience. Theſe forces being not leſſe than forty thouſand men, parted with a proſperous wind from the Iſlãd of Sardi- nia, and came to land the fiue and twentieth of Iune, this yere 1535 at a place called Por- to Farina, neere to the ruines of old Vtica, about ſixe leagues diſtant from Tunes. There order was giuen by the emperour, for the landing of his men; the firſt were the old Spa- niſh arquebuzies and the Italians, that they might keepe off the Moores, who had ſhewed D themſelues both horſe and foot, to diſturbe their landing, wherin the Marqueſſe of Guaſt who was general of the foot, ſhewed great iudgement, for he wold not ſuffer the ſouldiers to leaue their ſtandings and to purſue the enemy, vntill the army were landed with the victuals and munition, and the quarters made and fortified with a Trench: in the which they found great difficulty for that the ſand was looſe & not fit for that purpoſe, neither had they any bauines or other matter to binde it with all. The army being lodged, the em- perour called a Councel, where it was propounded, whether they ſhold firſt aſſault Gou- lette, or goe directly to fight with the enemy in Tunes, which was much more eaſie than that of Goulette: whereas attempting that fort firſt, being ſtrong by ſituation, defended by valiant men, commanded by iudicious captaines, and hauing great ſtore of artillery, and E which did moſt import, not being able to take their ſuccours from them, neither by the lake, nor by land on the eaſt part, either the action would proue deſperate, and they ſhold conſume their forces there in vaine, or at the leaſt they ſhould ſpend ſo much time there, as not onely Baberouſſe would grow ſtronger in men, & be of greater reputation; but the Chriſtians campe being wonderfully afflicted with the violent heat of the Sunne in that region, and vnder that clymat, and, which did more import, the waters which they dranke being halfe ſalt, in ſhort time being corrupted, would breed a great mortalitie, ſo as they ſhould be forced rather to ſeeke to ſaue the relikes of their army, than to attempt any new enterpriſe. But the moſt judicious ſhewing how dangerous it was to leaue ſuch a fort as Goulette, with a great garriſon, and ſo neere vnto Tunis behind, that the army aduancing, F they ſhould be in extreame want of victuals, the which not being able to bee conducted but from the army, the enemies horſe being many and venturous, ſcouring the fields con- tinually, would at the leaſt force the Chriſtians to keep the greateſt part of their horſe and of their beſt foot, to gard their victuals which were ingaged. It was therefore reſolued firſt to attempt Goulette: which fort Barberouſſe had furniſhed with great care: it is a great ſquare Tower, with large rampers and flankers, and is ſet vpon the mouth or entrie of Councell held by the emperour for the beſee- ging of Goulett.

Goulette the fort.

1535 of the Lake, which extends from it vnto the Citie, and is foure leagues broad: G (Campana writes that it is twelue miles long, and fiue miles broad.) The Citie of Tunes was great and well peopled, but at that time the walles were weake and low, hauing three ſuburbs open, greater and farre better peopled than the towne, in the which there dwelt many kindes of Merchants, ſome of the moſt induſtrious Artiſans, and among them ſome other rich people, who were delicate and idle. For the gard of theſe places, Barberouſſe had about eight thouſand good ſouldiers, whereof he had put a Forces of Barberouſſe in Tunes. good part into the fort of Goulette (ſome write they were three thouſand men) commanded by Sinan Cefutt of Smirna, called the Iew, and Naid, ſurnamed Chaſediuels. The reſt were with Barberouſſe, who had alſo leuied great numbers of Moores and Alarabes, both H horſe and foot, whome hee ſent, or led himſelfe continually to the warre, and made continuall skirmiſhes to moleſt the emperours campe, to hinder the approaches, and the batterie which was planted againſt this fort, the which they muſt force and take before they came vnto the citie, vnleſſe they would bee betwixt two enemies, ſubiect to the great and ordinarie ſallies of either of them, eſpecially of the Moores, who ouerrunning the countrie, which was well knowne to them, might hinder the victuals, ſurpriſe them that went to forrage, ſeeking aboue all things water, which is rare in that countrie, and take from them the commoditie of the ſea, if they had gone farre, and left this fort ſtanding, and ſo had ruined the imperiall armie. Whileſt they are buſie at this worke, and about fiue weekes after the emperours arriuall, Muley Haſcen I creepes out of his holes, and comes vnto the campe (hauing had a good conuoye ſent vnto him) with two hundred horſe, or there abouts, Moores, ill attyred and ragged, mounted vpon geldings or mares, peaſantlie clownes. Hauing ſaluted the emperour, and kindly receiued by him, they conferred long together by truchmen, but they ſoone diſcouered that this Prince had neither friends nor meanes, although hee vaunted that hee had left, not farre from thence, ſixteene thouſand horſe Alarabes, and eight hundred camels laden with victuals and refreſhings, of the which they neuer ſaw head nor taile, aſſuring impudently that hee had great intelligences within the Towne, with the chiefe inhabitants, who notwithſtanding neuer made any ſigne that they would fauour him. K

Thus the winde carried away all the goodly promiſes, which his embaſſador had made in Spaine to the emperour, for he kept not any one, were it through inconſtancy or impoſſibilitie. Notwithſtanding the emperor continued conſtant in his reſolulion, to chaſe away Barberouſſe, and to reſtore this exiled king, to the poſſeſſion of his realme, for he had made no accompt to be aſſiſted by the Moores, and had beene drawne vnto this enterpriſe more for his owne priuate intereſt, then for any other conſideration, and therefore he was come well prouided. Notwithſtanding all the attempts of the Barbarians, Goulette was battered by land with forty peeces of ordnance planted in two batteries, and by ſea with aboue 200, for the galleys being put into ſquadrons, whileſt that one approached to diſcharge, the other retired to charge their peeces, and ſo they continued from the break of day vntill L noone, whileſt that the two batteries at land thundred continually. The which did ſo ruine the tower, as the greateſt part of it falling, it couered or made moſt of the ordnance, within it vnprofitable: The ruines of the tower had made the way eaſie for an aſſault, ſo as the Spaniards, Italians, and Germanes being put in order, one nation after another, at their time appointed they preſented themſelues with ladders to the aſſault with ſo great reſolution, as al the defence of the moors & Turkes was in vain, ſo as a great part of them were ſlaine or wounded fighting, neither was the ſlaughter leſſe of them that fled along the lake, or that ſought to eſcape by ſwimming, for they were ſlain by the ſhot, or thruſt throgh by the Germans pikes, if they came neere the ſhore, ſo as it was reported there died aboue 1500, and not without the loſſe of ſome men of worth among the Chri- M ſtians, yet Campana writes there were not aboue thirty ſlaine. Goulette being taken it was Goulette taken by the emperour bruted that they had taken 300 peeces of ordinance, & all Barberouſſes fleet which was in the chanel of the lake; the number whereof is diuerſly reported, ſome write 20 gallies, 20 galliots, and fiue foyſts, others ſeuentie & two, and ſome affirme they were 107. Three daies after the taking of this fort Fernād Gonſago came vnto the camp, who hauing certain veſſels

A veſſels appointed him by the viceroy of Sicile, brought many refreſhings, for the which but eſpecially for his owne valour, hee was ioyfully receiued by the emperour, and by the whole army. There grew now ſome diuerſitie of opinions touching the continuance of the warre, ſome cold flegmatike complections, were of opiuion the emperor ſhold reſt ſatisfied with the taking of Goulette, which was held impregnable, the which hee ſhould fortifie and furniſh with a great garriſon, and good prouiſion of victuals to liue and defend it, with a deſigne to returne the next yere to beſiege Tunes, Alger, and the other townes vpon that coaſt of Afrike. Their reaſons were grounded vpon the great difficulties which the army did then ſuffer, in their drink, wheras the ſcorching ſun did cauſe great thirſt, and
B did force the poore ſouldiers to drink the pit water which was verie ſalt, which bred many infirmities, & many died of it, wherfore ſeeing the army much diminiſhed by the former enterpriſes, and hearing that the enemy grew daily ſtronger, & that he did ſhortly expect a great number of Arabiãs, which he had hired, they perſuaded the emperor that he might with his honor return into Europe, & prepare, as we haue ſaid, for the next yere. But this was contrarie to the greatnes of Cæſars minde, who diſcouered with better reaſons the weakenes of his enemy hauing loſt Gouletta; the little confidence the Turkes had in the Arabians & Moors, & the good diſpoſition of the Chriſtian army, eſpecially after ſo great a victory, the which althogh it were diminiſhed in numbers, yet it was increaſed incourage and reſolution, ſo as Barberouſſe ſhould haue means to furniſh himſelf better for the next
C yere, & to obtaine greater forces from the Turk, to defend his poſſeſſion in Afrike, the cõqueſt wherof (which was not now vneaſie, hauing found the enemy in a maner vnprouided) would afterwards proue vnpoſſible, beſides it was not for the dignitie of ſo great an army, honoured with the preſence of the Chriſtian Emperour, to goe away contented with the taking of a Tower. The captaines of greateſt reſolution and experience were of the ſame opinion, the which was mainteined by Muley Haſcen with great reaſons, who diſcourſed particularly of the nature of that nation, of the deſignes of Barberouſſe, and of remedies for the thirſt, perſuading them to the enterpriſe of Tunes, and of the eaſineſſe to take it; affirming that the enemie would neuer be drawne to a battell, neither had he meanes to keepe the citie many daies: His reaſons were beleeued, and although his
D deſire to returne into his realme, with the hazard of another, made him to be the leſſe credited, yet the authoritie and will of the emperor, who was the authour of this councell, did confirme it. Barberouſſe on the other ſide was wonderfully grieued for the loſſe of Gouletta, ſo as hee could not forbeare to complaine of Sinan the Iew, who might haue eſcaped, flying away with his men, from ſo great a daunger, in the which hee had loſt many Ianiſaries, and other good ſouldiers. It is written that Barberouſſe was once in an humour to haue ſlain all the Chriſtian ſlaues that were found there, the which for his better ſecuritie, being diuers thouſands, he had already impriſoned in the caſtle: and that Sinan the Iew, and others of authority had diuerted him from that wicked and cruell reſolution, ſhewing him, that ſo foule and brutiſh a fact, would not onely bee a perpetuall
E blemiſh to his name, but alſo bring him into diſgrace with Solyman, who was a generous Prince, and hated all ſuch baſe and wicked actions, as that would be, to kil people who being in a ſtrait priſon, neither had nor could offend him. Being then diſſuaded from theſe cruel imaginations which rage & greefe for his former loſſe did ſuggeſt, he began to prouide for the reſt, taking councell of ſuch as were about him what was to be done for their common health, with this reſolution ſtill, to keepe himſelfe cloſe, and to defend the citie, and not to come to battell with the enemy, hoping that in Autumne they ſhould be forced to leaue that coaſt, & it might be their fleet would be beaten, & diſperſt with ſtormes. The emperour being not freed from that feare, was carefull to haue the ruines of the fort of Goulette repaired, whereof he gaue the charge to Andrew Doria, with his ſea-forces,
F who cauſed it to hee clenſed from the infection of dead bodies, which were found there, both men and beaſts, and the breaches to be raiſed: Hee tooke an Inuentorie of all the goods that were in it, where were found (as we haue ſaid) three hundred peeces of ordnance, great and ſmall; great ſtore of armes of all ſorts, with an incredible quantitie of victualls, powder, and all other munition, Engines, and implements neceſſarie for the defence of places.

1535

Ferdinand Gonzaga comes to Goulette to the emperour.

Councell of the Imperialiſts to continue the warre of Naples.

The

1535 The emperour ſeing all things in a readineſſe, hee commanded euerie ſouldier ſhold carrie a bottle, full of water taken out of the prouiſion of the nauie, hee marcht that way the twentieth of Iuly. Comming within fiue miles of the citie, they found certaine welles of freſh water, which bred great diſorder among the ſouldiers, who were verie greedy to drinke, ſo as the emperour was forced to come thither in perſon, to ſtay the ſouldiers greedy rage, who deſired rather to drink and die preſently, as many did, for that the enemy had poiſoned the waters, than to ſuffer a little, & to preſerue themſelues, at the leaſt to die fighting. Hauing paſt this danger with no ſmal difficulty, they diſcouered Barberouſſes armie, who was come forth of the citie, in ſhew to giue the emperour battel. The number of his army is diuerſly ſet downe: Vlloa writes that he had 70000 moors and Arabians, and 7000 Turkes, whereof two thouſand ſerued on horſebacke, and Guazzo affirms that he had twelue peeces of ordinance in front: others write that by the report of ſome Chriſtian ſlaues, who had ſeene him take view of his men two daies before, he had 20000 horſe, and aboue 100000 foot, moors and Arabians, beſides his Turks, vpon whome hee did chiefly relie. The two armies being in ſight one of another, and it being generally beleeued by the Chriſtians that they ſhould fight, their captains ſought to incourage them with good words, notwithſtanding that they were all verie ready and willing: the prince of Salerne made a ſpeech vnto the Italians, Alarcon to the Spaniards, and Eberſtin to the Germanes, and to all the nations the emperor himſelfe, who going among them all, promiſed them a certain victorie, and filled them all with an aſſured hope, & importunate deſire to charge the enemie, who ſtretching themſelues out in length, thoght to terrifie, diſorder and put the Chriſtians to flight. Barberouſſe had ſtaied within three miles of Tunes, who began as ſoone as euer the imperiall armie approched to diſcharge his artillerie, but without any great effect: On the other ſide D. Fernand Gonzaga, who ſerued that day without any charge, but being among the formoſt, charged the enemies, and ſlue a Captaine of the Moores with his lance, making ſuch a ſlaughter of the enemies, as hee was that day noted aboue the reſt: Hee was nobly followed by others, and the Spaniſh Harquebuziers did ſo gall the Barbarians with their ſhot, as hauing ſcarce begun to fight they baſely fled: neither did Barberouſſe ſhew any courage that day, who had no intent to hazard his life and ſtate vpon a battell, but to flie ſpeedily into the Citie.

Forces of Barberouſſe in Tunes.

Battell betwixt the Chriſtians & Barberouſſe in Afrike.

There was no great ſlaughter of the enemy in this action, for that they fled preſently, beſides the Chriſtians horſemen could not purſue them being but weake, and much leſſe might the foot men do it, being tyred with their march in the ſand, and with the extreme heat: wherefore the emperour lodged his army that night vpon the place whereas Barberouſſe had ſtood in battel, fortifying it with the carts of his baggage, yet ſtanding alwaies ready in armes being ſo neere his enemy. Barberouſſe being returned into Tunes, full of diſdaine for this diſgrace, being a proud man, he conſulted what was to be done, ſeeming verie confident to be able to defend the citie: and then he entred againe into a reſolution to murther the Chriſtian ſlaues, and he was againe diſſuaded by his own people; God diſappointing ſo wicked a councel, to make the Chriſtiãs victorie more eaſie; for this pretended crueltie of Barberouſſe being bruted abroad, it did moue two renegados to compaſſion, Giaffer Aga, and Meni, the firſt was borne in Cataro, and was called Vinſenzo, the ſecond a Spaniard, whoſe name was Franciſco, who was much fauored by Barberouſſe. They opening the priſon doores to theſe wretches, who ſome write were ſixe thouſand, ſome ten thouſand, and they hauing broken their chaines, wherewith they were bound, got ſtaues and ſuch other weapons, & became maſters of the Caſtle, driuing away thoſe few Turkes that were left there in gard, and with all they ſeazed vpon the treaſure, victuals, & armes, which Barberouſſe had left there: who being aduertiſed thereof, poſted preſently thither, ſeeking firſt by good words, and then by threats to be let in, but it was in vaine, they chaſing him away with reproches, and the hazard of his life, if he had ſtaied.

Barberouſſe flies into Tunes.

Chriſtian ſlaues ſeaze vpon the Caſtle of Tunes.

All this hapned the day after the Battell, the emperour preparing to drawe neere the towne, when as thoſe ſlaues ſought to make ſignes vnto him to approach, but the diſtance would not ſuffer them to be ſeene, and yet the emperour finding that there was ſome alteration, he ſent two companies of horſe to diſcouer it. In the meane time Barberouſſe finding himſelfe in bad termes, and fearing the inconſtancie of the Moores, hee reſolued

A ſolued to leaue the citie, by the gate next the mountaine, and went towards Bona, being followed by ſeuen thouſand Turkes whome hee had preſerued to ſerue him at need: The Chriſtian army marching towards Tunes, they were met vpon the way by the Embaſſadors of the citie, who offered to yeeld vnto the emperour, and to receiue what conditions he ſhould impoſe, ſo as he would ſecure them from ſacke, wherein ſome write that Muley Haſcen intreated the emperor: ſo as at the emperours firſt entrance into Tunes, the ſouldiers carried themſelues mildly; But ſoone after as ſome affirme, at the inſtigation of Muley Haſcen, who deſired to be reuenged of the inhabitants, which did not ſeeme to fauour him during the ſiege, the Spaniards fell to the ſpoile, vſing all kinde of exceſſe and 1535

Retreat of Barberouſſe from Tunes.

B acts of hoſtilitie, as if they had beene in a towne taken by force, and aſſault. The Germanes alſo ſlue many Moores, and fell to their feeding, being ſorrie they found no wine in their ſellers, for thoſe people drunke not any.

The ſacke continued foure and twentie houres, ſome write three daies, together, with great ſlaughter, and then it ceaſed, the emperour commanding euerie man vpon greeuous paines, to retire vnto his quarter. They ſay that this ſacke was not much leſſe than that of Rome, and that euerie ſouldier was rich. The Marqueſſe of Guaſt guided by a ſlaue, found thirty thouſand ducats, buried in a caue of the caſtle, wherewith acquainting the emperour, he gaue him them. The emperour lodged within the Caſtle which was reaſonably well built, and newly accommodated by Barberouſſe. There were great

C numbers of ſlaues found, wherof there were eightie and one Frenchmen, all which were ſet at libertie, apparelled and ſent home vpon the retreat of the army. There was found in Tunes taken by the emperour.

it much ancient armor guilt & grauen, which ſome thoght were the ſpoiles of the French armie, which Saint Lewis had ſometime led into that countrie, where hee dyed, and many of his armie, of the bloudy-flix. The emperour hauing remained ſome daies within the citie, and conferred diuers times with king Muley Haſcen, touching his future gouernment and agreed vpon conditions, according to the which theſe two princes and their ſubiects ſhould liue, traffike, and conuerſe together, hee returned to the campe, making the more haſt to depart, to the end that ſuch as were fled into the mountaines might retum without feare to their houſes. The armie was lodged cloſe about a village called Lu-

D de, two miles from Goulette, where there paſt a little brooke of freſh water, whereof the countrie was much deſtitute, which was the greateſt diſcommoditie they had in all this warre: from thence they went to the firſt lodging they had made before the taking of that fort, neere vnto a Tower which they called of waters, which was the common watering place of the countrie. Thither came Muley Haſcen to the emperour to confirm and ſweare the articles, which were theſe.

Articles of Accord betwixt the emperour & king of Tunes.

1 That king Muley Haſcen did confeſſe and would acknowledge, for him & his ſucceſſors kings of Tunes, that hauing beene chaſed out of his eſtate, he had recouered it by the grace of God, and by the arms and vertue of the emperor Charles king of Spaine, who had taken Goulette, an impregnable fort, and chaſed away his enemy Haradin Barberouſſe.

E 2 That in regard of ſo great a fauour, he ſhold ſet at libertie, all the Chriſtians of what age, ſexe, or condition ſoeuer, that were detained priſoners within his realme, what offences ſoeuer they had committed, without puniſhment, price or ranſome; and that from thenceforth there ſhould not any of the emperors ſubiects, nor of his brothers D. Ferdinands king of Romans, be made ſlaues within the realme of Tunes.

3 That it ſhould be lawful for al Chriſtians to traffike at Tunes, and places depending theron, ſtay, inhabit, purchaſe lands, build chappels & churches, & exerciſe their religion.

4 That the moors of Spain which had receiued the baptiſme of Chriſt ſhold not be receiued into the realm of Tunes, if they did not ſhew letters of permiſſiō from the emperor or his ſucceſſors kings of Spain, or from their lieutenants, viceroyes, or Magiſtrates.

F 5 That Muley Haſcen did reſigne vnto the emperor and his ſucceſſors kings of Spaine, all the right which hee had to any towns of Africke, places and Iſlands held then by Barberouſſe and the Turkes to enioy them in propriety, if they did conquer them.

6 That Goulette, and two miles of the countrie round about, ſhold remaine in ſoueraigntie to the kings of Spaine, who might put in any garriſon, and fortifie it as they pleaſed.

7 That

1535 7 That the inhabitants of Goulette, and the territorie about it, & the ſouldiers of the garriſon ſhould bee free both by ſea and land, from all impoſts and cuſtomes for that which they ſhould buy for their own vſe, and if they traded in Merchandize, they ſhould be vſed like to them of the country. G

8 That they of Goulette ſhould not bee hindered to receiue the tolles and cuſtomes of the kings of Tunes.

9 That to entertaine the garriſon of Goulette, the kings of Tunes ſhould pay vnto the gouernours twelue thouſand crownes yearely, at two paiments, in Auguſt and Februarie.

10 That the fiſhing for corrall and the trade thereof, ſhould be reſerued for the emperour, and his ſucceſſors, kings of Spaine, to diſpoſe at their pleaſures. H

11 That in acknowledgement of the benefits done by the emperour to Muley Haſcen, hee and his ſucceſſours ſhould honour the kings of Spaine for euer, as their Patrons and protectors, and for an homage of that protection, they ſhould bee bound to giue them euerie yeare ſixe faire horſes, and twelue exquiſite faulcons, the which he ſhould deliuer into the hands of the gouernour of Goulette, the three and twentieth of Auguſt, vpon paine to looſe fifty thouſand crownes for the firſt time he ſhould faile, and for the ſecond a hundred thouſand, and if they ſhould continue to neglect this duety, to forfeit their realme to the king of Spaine, who might iuſtly diſpoſſeſſe them.

12 That vpon the like paine the kings of Tunes ſhould not make any leagues nor alliances with any princes or ſtates, Chriſtians or Mahumetiſts, to the preiudice of the emperour or his ſucceſſors. I

13 That there ſhould no entrance bee giuen, in the ports of the realme of Tunes, to any Pyrats, or robbers at Sea, common enemies, nor to the priuate enemies one of another.

14 Laſtly that there ſhould be good, ſincere, & perpetuall friendſhip, & free commerce maintained, betwixt theſe Princes and their ſubiects, and right & iuſtice mutually done.

Theſe articles were ſworne and ſigned in this forme reciprocally in the emperours campe neere vnto Goulette, the thirteenth day of Auguſt, in the yere of Chriſt 1535, and in the yeare 942 of Mahumet, the ſixt day of the moone of the month Caſa. K

King Muley Haſcen taking the othe drew out halfe his Cymiter, & touching the blade hee ſware by the prophet Mahumet, and by the Alcaron, that hee would faithfully obſerue all the contents thereof, and neuer breake them: and the emperour ſware and promiſed the ſame, kiſſing his right hand, and taking hold of a cloake which a knight of Saint Iames there preſent did weare, on the which there was a croſſe, he kiſt it alſo. And of this contract there were foure copies made, two in the Spaniſh, and two in the Arabian tongue, reſpectiuely kept and carried by the officers and Secretaries of theſe princes. There was alſo added to the ſaid articles:

That from that time there ſhould bee a ſupreme Iudge and Councell in Goulette, the which in the emperours name ſhould iudge without appeale, of all ciuill and criminall L cauſes, where any of his Majeſties ſubjects ſhould be a partie, traffiking or going into any countrie of the realme of Tunes: And in regard of the towne of Afrike then held by the Turkes, if it came by any meanes into the power of the kings of Tunes, the emperour and his ſucceſſors kings of Spaine ſhould diſpoſe thereof as they ſhould thinke good. For witneſſes to the ſaid accord & articles, there were ſet downe for the emperor Nicholas Perenot ſeignior of Granuelle, doctor Fernand of Gueuara, and Anthonie Peres, councellors of State; And for the king of Tunes, Aluar Gomeſis Mahumet of Tunes, Hamet Gamaza, and Abeder Heymin Maier, his councellors, kinſmen, and officers.

This done Muley Haſcen retyred to Tunes, and the emperour gaue order for his returne. He had a great deſire to ſet vpon the towne of Africke, which lyes right againſt M Sicile, & was verie cõmodious, for the Turks which held it, to make enterpriſes, but ſeeing Autumne approach, which ſhuts vp the Seas for Galleys, hee deferred it to an other ſeaſon. Hee left D. Bernardine of Mendoſa, brother to the Marqueſſe of Mondejar gouernor of Goulette, with a thouſand Spaniards, of the old bãds. He ſent Andrew Doria, along the weſtern coaſt, to learne what was become of Barberouſſe, and to watch what Emperors retreat from Tunes.

A what he would vndertake, who found that at his diſlodging from Tunes he had retired to Bone, and that hauing ſome notice of Dorias approach with forty gallies, he had left the place voyde, whereon Doria ſeazed without any difficulty; who by the Emperours commaundement put a garriſon into the caſtle, and left the towne at the diſpoſition of the king of Tunes, thinking that the Moores inhabiting there would maintaine themſelues in peace better vnder his obedience. There is a ſuburbe at Tunes without the port called Bethelmenara, containing about a thouſand houſholds, where there dwelt certaine Chriſtians, called by reaſon of that ſuburbe Rabbattins, whoſe predeceſſours had bin brought thither by Ioſeph Almanſor king, and Caliph of Marroc, ruler ouer all Afrike, ſome 300 yeres ſince. Of thoſe which made profeſſion of the Chriſtian religion, the kings of Tunes did commonly make the gardes of their perſons, for moſt of them made profeſſion of armes: and carried the countenaunce of gentlemen; they held lands by homage of the king, and were rich The Emperour carried ſome of theſe Rabattins into Europe, and did them good. Hee diſmiſt the infant D. Lewis of Portugall from Tunes, with his galleys, and did witneſſe by his letters vnto king Iohn his brother, that in this voyage hee had giuen preat proofes of his iudgement and valour, and with this opportunitie he ſent ſome of the noblemen and youth, which had accompanied him, into Spaine.

1535

Bone in Afrike taken by Andrew Doria.

B Rabattins Chriſtians at Tunes.

Barberouſſe flying from Tunes, being come from the riuer of Maggiordech, one of his chiefe pirates called Aidino of Smirne, being very drie, drunke of that water and burſt. At C his comming to Bone, he drew 14 gallies vnfurniſhed out of a neere lake, which had been kept there for the like need, and hauing ſodenly cauſed them to be armed, and all things ready to goe forth, fearing to meet with the emperours armie, he had cauſed that port to be fortified, but it appearing not, he went towards the Eaſt, meaning firſt to be reuenged of the Chriſtians in ſome ſort: wherefore hauing paſſed to Alger, and there prouided for his affaires, and furniſhed his army well, he ſailed towards the Iland of Minorca, where comming neere vnto the port of Maone, he ſet vp certain Chriſtian flags which hee had taken the yeare before: the Ilanders thinking it to be a part of the Emperours armie, receiued them ioyfully; where afterwards they tooke great ſpoiles of goods and people: hee ſackt a ſhippe of Portugall there, and ſlew Gonſaluo Perelia the captaine after a long D fight: and ſo retiring with his prey to Alger, he ſet ſaile towards Conſtantinople.

Minorca ſpoiled by Barbaroſſe.

The Emperour hauing diſmiſt part of his army from Goulette, he paſſed with the reſt into Sicile, where he landed at Trapani, from whence he came to Palerme the thirteenth of September, where he made a ſolemne entrie: ſoone after they of the Iland made him a preſent of two hundred and fiftie thouſand crownes, as well for the charges he had bin at, as for the preparation he meant to make the next yeare againſt Barberouſſe, whom he deſired to chaſe out of Afrike, eſpecially from Alger. Going out of Sicile, he paſt from Meſſina to Naples, which city he had not ſeene: in his voyage hee was ſumptuouſly receiued as wel by the whole ſtate, as by priuate princes his ſubiects, eſpecially by the princes of Biſignuno and Salerno, vntill he came to Naples, where being royally receiued, E that noble citie, the head of that kingdome, would not faile to make an extraordinarie demonſtration of their loue vnto their prince; ſo as on the third day of Februarie one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and ſix they reſolued in the monaſterie of Saint Laurence, the Emperour being preſent, to giue him a million and fiue hundred thouſand ducats, the which was ſpeedily effected.

Emperor comes into Sicile.

1536

Gift of the realme of Naples to the emperour.

During the emperours abſence D. Iſabella the empreſſe was gouerneſſe in Spaine as ſhe had alwaies beene, with a councell of ſtate appointed to aſſiſt her: by whoſe aduice and order D. Guttiere de Vargas Biſhop of Plaiſance cauſed a fleete of fiue ſhippes to be finiſhed, the which had beene long before vndertaken, in the preſence of D. Iohn then prince of Portugall, who was come in pilgrimage into Caſtille. Theſe ſhippes be- F ing well furniſhed were ſent vnto the Molucques, of the which onely one paſt the ſtreit of Magellan, which diſcouered the ſhoare of that continent, from the going out of the ſtreit vnto Arequipa 25 degrees from the Equinoctiall.

Ships ſent out of Caſtille to the Molucques.

36 After the emperours returne from Tunes to Naples, a new warre being kindled betwixt him and the French king, by reaſon of the duke of Sauoy, the Emperours brother in law, whom the French ſought to ſpoile of his eſtate. Hee was not able to reſiſt ſo Emperours voyage into Prouence.

1536 potent an enemy, and therefore he had recourſe vnto the emperour for aid, who hauing G gathered togither a goodly army, cõſulted with his captains of the maner how he ſhould make warre, whether he ſhould ſtay in Piedmont, and recouer that which the French had taken from the Sauoiard, of which opinion the marqueſſe of Guaſt & D. Fernand of Gonzaga were, who aledged ſome reaſons to maintaine their opinion, or that he ſhould paſſe preſently into Prouence, & leaue ſuch forces to recouer Piedmont as ſhould be thought fit, the which Anthony de Leua and Andrew Doria, did maintaine, but eſpecially the emperor himſelfe, who was confident for the enterpriſe of Prouence, and to that end he made an eloquent Oration vnto his Councell, in theſe termes.

Oration made by Charles the fift vpon his paſſage into Prouence.

If the war we vndertake, & the enemy againſt whom we are to fight, were not knowen vnto vs, & withal, we were not aſſured in our ſelues that we ſhold bring this war to a good H end, without doubt we ſhould not blame this your councell, or, to ſpeak more properly, " conſideration; but ſhould rather commend it, and follow it. But knowing that we make " warre againſt one that hath broken his faith, a perfidious man, who hauing no regard that
" the duke of Sauoy was comprehended in the treatie of Cambray hath made warre againſt
" him, the which he knew to be againſt vs; we doubt not but God the iuſt Iudge of a viola" ted peace, and of the breach of faith, will take a ſeuere reuenge.
" I wil adde thus much more, that we ſhall warre againſt the ſame enemy, ouer whom we " haue bin victorious for theſe 20 yeares: by which victories (to proue againſt that which " you haue ſaid that we haue wonne, & that they may confeſſe they haue loſt,) we hold ſtill
" the duchie of Milan, a glorious remembrance, & a rich ſpoile of our vanquiſhed enemie; I
" the which ſhould giue hope and courage to you that be winners, and feare and diſpaire to " them. Beſides, let vs compare our forces with our enemies, we ſhall find ours to exceed " them both in number and valour: we ſee no ſuch danger as you pretend, although we di-
" uide our army, paſſe the Alpes, & go into France to aſſaile our enemy. But to anſwer firſt
" vnto this, & then to returne vnto our former propoſition: It is not vnknowen, and we can
" proue it by examples, how many being afflicted with warre in their owne eſtates, haue " freed themſelues by tranſporting the war into their enemies countries, & haue made con" queſts of their aduerſaries ſtates: But in our caſe we will rather ground vpon firme and
" ſound reaſons, than vpon examples, the which can hardly be found equal in al circumſtan-
" ces. You are of opinion, that before we trãſport the war into France, we ſhould chaſe the K
" enemy out of Piedmont, ſo as there may be no relikes remayning: and we on thother ſide,
" induced by many reaſons, hold it much better, that paſſing into France we tranſport the " warre thither, rather than to nouriſh it in our owne and our friends countrey, and main-
" taine it in Italie, the which hath beene ſo many yeares afflicted, and therefore it is reaſon
" we ſhould preſerue it, and giue it ſome time of reſt, after ſo great and tedious miſeries:
" ſo as it hauing felt for theſe 30 yeares, by meanes of the French, thoſe miſeries which do
" accompany war, let France in like manner taſt of ſpoiles, burning, rapes, let it taſt of the " feare, terrour, amazement and flight of citizens, let it make proofe of the ſacking of hou-
" ſes, deſolations, ruines, and the burning of cities. It fittes not to haue the citie of Turin,
" or the country of Piedmont the reward of our victories, but Paris, yea the very Crowne L
" of France. We haue too long ſuffered that king, to make war in anothers country, I pray
" you let vs make him labour to defend his owne dominions, and let vs trie if the French be " as much worth at home as abroad. But it may be their nature and diſpoſition is not well
" knowen vnto you, whom you haue ſo often knowen by experience: At the firſt charge
" they are ſomewhat worth, but after ſome reſiſtance, they faint, and looſe their force: Be-
" ſides, we haue knowne that king to haue bin of ſo great a mind (we will not ſay ſo raſh)
" as he will hold it a great diſhonor to ſuffer vs to enter and remain in his confines without
" giuing vs battel: The which if he do, who is there among you that wil doubt of a victory?
" Hold this for certain, that there is no other means to end the war, but that either he muſt
" adde Spaine and the empire, to that which he now enioyes; or we conquer the realme of M
" France to our other poſſeſſions: for the effecting whereof we come to ſeek him in the bo-
" wells of his owne realme. We muſt not grow old here, expecting when he ſhould come,
" and giue him meanes to preſerue his owne country, from whence he is continually ſup-
" plied with money, whereby he entertaines his armie here at our coſt, who inrich themſelues

A ſelues with ſpoile of thoſe things, which ſhould ſerue to pay our ſouldiers. And for that ,, 1536 which you feare, that the French king may leuy new ſouldiers more commodiouſly; there ,, is nothing more impoſſible to do, nor more vaine to ſpeake, for that in bringing an armie ,, hither, it drawes new ſouldiers with the hope of ſpoile, beeing accuſtomed to ſteale and ,, ſpoile in a Country wonne by the ſword; the which without doubt they cannot doe in ,, Fraunce: for beeing kept in Martiall diſcipline by the king, the reſpect of their countrey ,, binding them, they will hold themſelues for aduenturers, when it ſhalbe lawfull for ,, them to liue with their owne pay, though hardly: ſo as few will expoſe themſelues to ,, wounds and death, for the miſerable gaine of an ordinarie pay: and if the ſouldiers will ,, ſeeke to haue it augmented, they muſt afflict the people; ſo as what the enemie can not ,,
B get by warre, the companies will iniuriouſly take away, they will ſpoile the victualles and ,, diminiſh the treaſure, raiſing tumults, ſeditions and rebellions; and the rather, if the mat- ,, ter proceed in ſuch ſort, as the king himſelfe be the cauſe of this ſpectacle, wherein wee ,, ſhall ſee a manifeſt example of Gods iudgement: And ſo hee which hath ſo often afflicted ,, anothers countrie with fire, ſword and ſpoile, ſhal be now forced, ruining and burning ,, his owne countrie, not only to beare it, but alſo to do it himſelfe. But me thinkes I heare ,, ſome of you feare, that he wil do that before our army arriue, whereunto he ſhall be for- ,, ced. This ſhould not moue you, neyther can there be any thing to hinder vs, but wee ,, ſhold abound in victuals, hauing prouided for it; ſo as piercing into the heart of France, ,, we ſhall haue great abundance, and without any charge. As for your doubt, that the king ,, C will gather forces together on this ſide the Alpes whileſt that wee are in France, and this ,, country deſtitute of ſouldiers; we aſſure you that we haue prouided him ſo much worke ,, in other places, as he can hardly bend his thoghts to any other buſines: for that beſides this ,, army which will make him oppoſe all the vigour and force he hath, and another, which ,, it may be you haue heard of ſhall be led by Naſſau and Roſſan, to inuade the confines of ,, Picardy; there is yet a third which ſhould come and ioyne with vs in Prouence, the which ,,
at the empreſſe intreaty, our people of Spaine haue leuied: and to that end we haue ſent ,, 23 gallies thither, & one with a particular commiſſion, to informe her of my intention, & ,, of the prefixed time of my voiage: we haue alſo taken order that an other ſhall be made ,, ready, the which during the hotteſt of the war, paſſing through Champaine, ſhall inuade ,, D Burgundy, and with the help of ſome of thoſe two prouinces, which are affected vnto vs, ,, that army will worke no leſſe effects than either of the other three. So as the king being ,, thus buſied in many places, and with ſuch great preparations of war, hauing no meanes ,, to leuy at one inſtant ſufficient forces to reſiſt ſo great a maſſe of armies, it can not be but ,, on ſome ſide we ſhal pierce into the bowells of his realme, let him prepare what army he ,, can. Let vs not feare to diuide our forces; Let vs leaue what ſhalbe fit for the ſiege of Tu- ,, rin, & the reſt which we ſhall lead with vs ſhalbe able to vanquiſh him fighting, ſpecially, ,, if (as you haue propounded) he ſhal think to diuide his forces, to man thoſe places which ,, he meanes to fortifie againſt vs. Adde (the which you know aſwell as my ſelfe) what the ,, French footmen are, whereas they deſire to be more eſteemd for their horſmen, which in- ,, E deed they practiſe more, & proue better; at this time they are much vnfurniſhed. It is not ,, vnknowen vnto you, that at Foſſan & Conflans we haue ſpoild them of 250 horſe of ſer- ,, uice; there are 200 now in Turin which can not hope for any better ſucceſſe: and of the ,, other companies which came hither, halfe of them are conſumed with the toile. So as ,, you are not to fight with that old caualerie of France, but with ſome relikes thereof: Be- ,, ſides, they hauing heretofore wholy relied vpon the German footmen and the Suitzers, ,, of whom they thought to haue what numbers they pleaſed, we doe aſſure you that tho- ,, row the helpe of God, and our diligence, they ſhal not haue any, concealing what meanes ,, we haue vſed to cauſe a good number of them that were with him to abandon him: And ,,
F from the Suitzers we haue gotten a firme promiſe (wherein we ſuppoſe they wil not faile) ,, not to ſuffer any one to go out of the country to ſerue any Prince. Matters ſtanding vp- ,, on theſe termes, let vs continue conſtant in our firſt reſolution: that we leaue a conueni- ,, ent army for the recouery of Turin, and that we paſſe into France with the reſt and with ,, ſuch men as ſhalbe leuied in Italie, & nothing ſtaied by thoſe difficulties which you haue ,, wiſely conſidered, we may go by the riuer of Prouence. As for the difficulties which you ,,

1536 haue propounded touching the entrance, we wil neuer ſuffer the French to depriue vs of G " that honor, to haue endured it more conſtantly than we. Concerning victualles, there is " ſufficient prouided, which ſhalbe brought by ſea, with the artillerie, munition, and other " neceſſaries, which otherwiſe would be very chargeable. Finally, the intemperatnes of the " aire, which it ſeemes you feare in Prouence; hold it not worſe than that of Afrike, the " which our ſouldiers haue conſtantly indured. And therefore all duly conſidered, I do not " ſee why we ſhould rather feare danger, than glorie in this victory, hauing to deale with an " enemy who is vnprouided of valiant men.

Army of Charls the fifi going into Prouence.

After this ſpeech the enterpriſe was concluded, and preparation made accordingly, they write that the emperour had in his army 24000 Germans, 14000 Spaniards, 12000 Italiās & 5000 horſe. The marques of Guaſt was general of the foot; the D. of Alua was H generall of the men at armes; and D. Fernand of Gonzague, of the light horſe. How they entred, & what they did in this enterpriſe, you may reade at large in the French hiſtory.

The prince D. Philip of Spaine, being now tenne yeares old, gaue great ſignes of wiſedome and ſufficiencie hereafter, to gouerne thoſe realmes, whereunto hee was borne an hereditarie ſucceſſor. And to make his ſtudies the more eaſie, they appointed him for his Scholemaſter Iohn Martin Siliceo a man not onely very learned, but of an innocent life, whoſe merits did afterwards make him archbiſhop of Toledo and cardinall: D. Iohn of Eſtuniga or Zuniga, a knight of great wiſedome and iudgement, and commander maior of Caſtille, was made his gouernour: and to giue him an honourable Competitor in all his ſtudies, and a ſweet companion in that tender age, two yeres before D. Lewis his couſin, I the eldeſt ſonne of Sauoy, had paſſed out of Italie into Spaine: But this yoong prince of great hope died this yeare on Chriſtmaſſe day at Madrid, to the great griefe of the prince D. Philip, who loued him deerely, and of the whole court, in the 13 yeare of his age.

Lewis prince of Sauoy dies in Spaine.

India. Exploits of the Portugalls.

37 I will now relate ſomething of the progreſſe of the Portugalls nauigations at the eaſt Indies, and how the Turkes came and beſieged them in Diu, a towne which the Portugalls had ſo fortified, as they neither feared the fraud nor force of that barbarous and inconſtant nation. But the better to vnderſtād the war which was brought thither this yere by the Turke, wee will make a repetition of ſome things that went before. In the yeare 1532 the king of Portugall had ſent Nonio d'Acugna generall to the Indies, who hauing a K deſire to get footing in the realme of Cambaia, hee ſent Antonio Silueria with a great army, to diſcouer that riuer, and to informe himſelf wel what might be expected. This captaine made great proofes of his valor in that country, ſpoiling and burning ſome townes, and ſtriking a great terror into that people of the Portugalls name. It followed after that the Baſcia of Egipt, called Soliman by commandement from Soliman the great Turk, who could not quietly indure the Portugalles good ſucceſſe at the Indies, whereby his kingdomes had receiued ſo great loſſe, being diſappointed of the nauigation for ſpices, and other merchandiſe from the eaſt, the which were brought by the Arabic gulph, vnto the ports of Egipt, and ſo diſtributed by his merchants ouer all Europe; he ſent 2 Sangiacs, Muſtapha and Safar treaſourer of that prouince to take Aden, a ſtrong towne with a port in the ſaid gulph. Whileſt that the Turks labored to take city, being valiantly defended L by the king, it hapned that Antonio Silueria ſcouring thoſe ſeas with a fleet of Portugall ſhips, he heard of the Turks attempt, and not pleaſed they ſhould extend their forces beyond Egipt, he bent his courſe that way; whoſe ariual did ſo terrify the Turks, being griedie of that conqueſt, & growne ſtrong by the numbers that were come vnto them in hope of prey, as they diſlodged. After which Silueria put the King in mind of the fauour he had done him, and did ſo magnifie the force & power of king Iohn of Portugal, as he drew him to put himſelf vnder his protection, ſo as he ſhould always defend him againſt the Turke, for acknowledgement whereof he ſhould pay a yerely tribute of 10000 crownes to the king of Portugall, or as they ſay, Serafini, money of Ormuz: But this Barbarian did not M keep his faith long, for Silueria being gone, there came a ſhip ladē with pepper to the port of Aden, the which he ſpoiled, & trecherouſly ſlue the men. There hapned worſe after the Turks flight, who being 600, and aboue 1000 Arabians, vnder the ſame Muſtapha & Safar, and in the ſame ſhips, they went to ſeek their reuenge by thoſe riuers, ſo as comming to Diu at ſuch time as Nonio d'Acugna the Portugall gouernor was there, with a great armie

Nonio d'Acugna aſſailes Diu in vaine.

of

A of aboue 300 ſail wel furniſht, with an intent to get that citie, hauing ſeazed vpon a ſtrõg Iland called Betelem, not much aboue 7 leagues from Diu, they were a great aide to Tocan who was lord of it. Theſe ſuccors (Muſtapha hauing brought valiant men, harquebuziers, much artillerie, and himſelfe a good ſouldier) made Nonios attempts vaine, ſo as being often repulſt with loſſe, he was in the end forced to depart & returne with his army to Goa, leauing Antonio Saldania and Iames Silueria with ſome ſhips & ſouldiers at Betelem, for that they ſhould cõtinually annoy the ſea coaſts of Cambaia, as they did: for the ſummer following Silueria entred into Diu, and ſackt and burnt the towne, with ſome places thereabouts, for that Muſtapha knowing that the Portugalls would not willingly deſiſt from that enterpriſe, and that they ſhould need greater forces to reſiſt them, he was gone B into Turkie, as an embaſſador for that king, to let the great Turke vnderſtand how much it imported him, to take him vnder his protection, & to get footing in thoſe Indian ſeas, hauing a great deſire to chaſe away the Portugalls, whoſe power was feared in thoſe ſeas. But Acugna grieued at the diſgrace he had receiued by his retreat, made ready a nauie of 80 ſhips, in the which were 4000 valiant ſoldiers, & hauing called Iames Silueria with his forces to him, he preſented himſelf before Bazaino a ſea towne, which the K. of Cambaia did fortified with all induſtry, but it could not reſiſt the Portugals valor, who ruined al the fortifications. There came a new gouernor of the Portugall army at the Indies, called Martin Alphonſo de Soſa who made ſome attempt in Cambaia, & took the caſtle of Panam by force, thẽ like a conqueror he ran vp that riuer as far as Diu, forcing that lord to ſue for G peace, and to yield Bazain and the neighbor Iland of Salſeta vnto King Iohn.

Bazaino at the Indies taken by the Portugalls.

An. 1535 Badurto K. of Cambaia finding himſelf ingaged in dangerous wars, he craued aid frõ the Portugals, & gaue thẽ liberty to build a fort at Diu, the which they caled Thomas, for that it was begun on that ſaints day, & another neer vnto it, which they named S. Iames, either of them being ſtrõgly walled; this fort was raiſed in 49 days, whereat the K. wondred. To whom afterward the Portugals gaue great aid, & recouered for him certein places which he had loſt; thẽ leauing Emanuel de Soſa in the fort with 800 ſoldiers, & good ſtore of artillery, the gouernor returned to Goa. Soon after Badurio repented him that he had yielded ſo much to the Portugals in his realm, ſo as in the yere 1536 he commanded Tinarao gouernour of Diu, that vpon ſome fained colour he ſhould ſeeke to build a ſtrong D wall oppoſite to the Portugals fort, the which being denied him, there fel a deadly hatred betwixt them. The viceroy Acugna, hearing that this king making a ſhew of friendſhip, ſought to ruine the Chriſtians, he ſailed to Diu with a great army, where faining himſelfe ſick, he drew the ill-aduiſed king, to viſit him in his ſhip; but in his returne he was ſlaine by the Portugalls, with ſome of his people that had accompanied him, in which action there were ſome Portugalls alſo ſlaine, among the which was Emanuel de Soſa cãptaine of that fort. It was eaſie thẽ for the Portugals to ſeaze vpon Diu, & vpon the whole Iland, whereas they got good ſtore of mony of the kings treaſure, abundance of victualls, inſtruments of war and ſhips of all ſorts. In the beginning of this yere 1537 they began to fortifie the caſtle better, fearing ſome new alteration of thoſe Barbarians, knowing how much they E were diſcontented for the death of Badurio, in whoſe place they preſently ſet a child, his nephew by the ſiſter, whom certain lords of the coũtry took the gouernmẽt of with great authority, ſo as the realme ſeemed to be diuided among many, which was leſſe dangerous for the Portugals: The gouernment of the fort at Diu, in the place of Soſa, who was ſlain, was giuen to Antonio Silueria, and 600 ſoldiers appointed him for his garriſon; who could not long reſt, beeing ſtill annoyed by them of the countrey; fearing moreouer that they ſhould be ſoon ſet vpon by the Turks forces, hauing diſcouered that Badurio a litle before his death, had with rich preſents obtained great ſuccours from Ottoman, and that after his death his wife went vnto the Turks court, and made greater inſtance: wherefore the great F Turke cauſed a great army to be prepared at Suez, a port in the farthеſt boſome of the red ſea, Soliman the Eunuch, Baſcha of Egipt, who had the charge of it, ſurpaſſing ſo many difficulties as it ſeemed incredible: And hauing cauſed timber to be cut in Caramania, he made it to be tranſported wrought to Damieta, and then by the riuer of Nile to Caire, where the veſſells being made, and ready to ioyne, they were in the end carried vpon Camels backs to Suez 80 miles. This army as ſome write, was of 63 gallies, of 26 barkes, to Fort built at Diu by the Portugalls.

Badurio king of Cambaia ſlaine by the Portugalles.

Army of Turkes prepared againſt the Portugalles.

1537 the which there ioyned 6 galleons, 6 galeots, 2 foiſts or Olcadi, 20 ſhips of burthen, and G many other ſmall barkes; ſo as they might well carry, beſides the men of ſeruice, 20000 ſoldiers, among the which were 4000 Ianizaries, with ſo much artillery, as they thought neceſſary for ſo great an enterpriſe. Towards the end of Iune, Solyman went from Suez with this army: in his voiage he ſtrangled Zebith Nocoda lord of that place, by whom he had bin bountifully entertained: then continuing his courſe, on the 5 of Iuly, he came to Aden, a famous citie & port, ſtanding vpon the left point of the Perſian gulph. Here the Eunuch gaue a new teſtimony of his treacherous crueltie, for firſt he craftily ſent ſome of his men into the city, where they were friendly entertained, and then he procured that K.
(who we ſaid had contracted friendſhip with the Portugalls) to come and viſit him in his ſhips, fayning himſelfe ſick, where this king complaining much of the tyranny that was v- H King of Aden hanged at a mainyard by the Turkes. ſed againſt him, being made acquainted with Solymans mind, he was preſently hung vp at the maine yard, with ſome of his people which had accõpanied him. The army ſtaid ſome daies at Aden, firſt ſacking the city, & then leauing a good garriſon to keep it for the Ottomans, and then they ſailed towards Diu, where they ariued the 4. of Septemb. There they found the Portugalls ready to receiue them as enemies, for approaching neere 2 of their gallies were ſunck with the Artillery, ſo as they were forced to retire, and to be more warie in their landing, which they did afterward with the great ordnance to batter the caſtle.
Solimans army was much augmented, by ſome lords of the country that ioyned with him; among whom there was one called Coffaro, his mother a Turk, his father a Chriſtian, born in Chio; others ſay that his name was Cozazaffer, a renegado, borne in Calabria, who had I Fort at Diu held by the Portugalls beſieged by the Turkes. bin very deere to the deceaſed K. of Cambaia, and had brought vnto him 20000 ſouldiers gathered vp in the country. They ioyntly beſieged the fort both by ſea and land; Silueria hauing but few ſouldiers in regard of the enemies number, & his continuall toile; & with all he had not much poulder for the vſe of his artillery; wherof he did aduertiſe the viceroy being in Goa, craning ſuccors, and aſſuring him that they had made what defence was fit for them. There were in Diu, beſides the chiefe fort held by the Portugals 2 towers of a reaſonable ſtrength, in the one there were 60, in the other 50 ſouldiers, and being both battred by the Turks (who had trecherouſly ſackt the citie in entring, without reſpect that they had declared thẽſelues friends) the one was yielded vpon conditions, but il obſerued, for hauing promiſed liberty to the Portugall ſouldiers, they made them gally ſlaues. The K Baſcha did alſo batter the caſtle, ſhewing more furie then iudgement: Silueria defended it with great iudgement & valor, making ſallies vpon the enemie, & diſappointing all their deſigns: the Turks, beſides their huge artillery had with their pioners raiſed a mount a-gainſt the fort ſo high as they might look into it, & diſcouer what they did, annoying the defendants much with their ſhot. But the Portugalls did ſpeedily preuent it, making di-uers Trauerſes, imploying therein all their cotton, timber, or whatſoeuer elſe they had.
The Turks & they of Cambaia preſt the ſiege hard, but more by land than by ſea, for that they held it weakeſt on that ſide, ſo as battering a tower they made a great ruine, by the which they were in great danger to loſe the whole caſtle, the enimy ſeeking twiſe a day to force it, which they continued all the month of October. Silueria did ſodenly caſt vp a tra- L uers with good flanks, wherby they might brauely defend thẽſelues, making great ſlaugh-ter of the Turks. On the 20 of October they attempted to take a tower ſtanding towards the ſea, for the defence of the Caſtle by ſcalado, but they were repulſt with great loſſe: yet the next day they came with 10 gallies, & 33 armed barks, with great numbers of ſoldiers, to force the tower, but in vaine; for they were not only forced to retire by 50 Chriſtians which defended it, but alſo flanked by the artillery of the caſtle, there were in 2 dais aboue Sallie of the Portugalls vpon the Turkes at Diu. 800 ſlain, & many veſſels ſunck. Three daies after at noon day, when they leaſt expected, there was a ſally made by 150 Portugalls, who entred the Turks trẽches, that were ſleeping, with ſuch reſolution, as they ſlew about 260, & ſo diſordered the whole army, as they could ſcarce put thẽſelues in defence, but ſeeing the nũber ſo ſmall, they offred to charge M them, yet ſo late, as they had time to retire into the fort in good order, with the loſſe of 3 men only, & 6 hurt. Soon after Silueria ſent a frigot to Goa, to craue aid frõ Acugna, who Garcia Norogna viceroy at the Indies. had already ſent 16 galeots, with poulder, match, & ſome ſoldiers, but they were not yet come to Diu. At the cõming of this ſecõd meſſage to Goa, Garcia of Norogna was come to be viceroy,

A viceroy, who took vpon him the charge to prepare a great armie, to ſuccor the beſieged, and to fight with the enemie, if need were. Arriuing the 11 of September, and taking vpon him the gouernment: he gaue libertie to Acugna to returne into Europe, but he died in his voyage neere vnto cap Bone Eſperance, hauing bin gouernor for his K. teme yeres at the Indies, with much honor and reputation. Norogno came wel prouided from Portugall, for this war, for that they had intelligence of the Turks preparation in Egipt, bringing 7000 ſoldiers in 11 ſhips; being at Goa he prepared 12 great ſhips of burthen, called hulks, 16 galeons, 25 caruels, 29 gallies of 26 banks, 15 galeots, and 20 foiſts, which in al made 117 great & ſmal, but al wel armed. The 1 of Nouember Soliman Baſcha made his firſt attempt to force the caſtle of Diu, but he found a braue reſiſtance. Silueria hauing the B night before diſcouered the Turks intentions by their preparations. At the break of day there approched neere vnto the tower vpon the ſea, about 50 barkes and 12 gallies full of ſoldiers & engins, making a ſhew to aſſaile it, but it was only to draw their force thither, from the land part, where they meant to make their greateſt attempt. But Silueria like a diſcreet captaine, knowing the ſtrength of that part towards the ſea, brought his greateſt force, where there was moſt need, & where the enemy was likely to vſe his greateſt force. And ſo it fel out; for firſt of all there were 3000 Turks, which preſented themſelues to the aſſault, who for an houres ſpace were brauely affronted by the Portugalls, and in the end repulſed with great loſſe: but the Baſcha renued the fight with brauer men, but fewer in number, which did not a little terrifie Silueria, who had ſeen many of his men ſlaine in the C firſt aſſault. He therefore commaunded his lieutenant Roderigo of Araue, who was in the tower towards the Sea, to come vnto him with his freſh band: the which was ſpeedily effected, but vnfortunatly for him, being ſlain with a ſhot, in whoſe place Emanuel Vaſconcello was put, being followed by 30 freſh ſoludiers, for that the enemy omitted no force. Vaſconcello carried himſelf brauely, the enemy being vpon the breach, whereas they were come to the ſword, & in the end repulſt. Hauing had ſom litle reſt, behold ther ſallied out of the trēches aboue 6000 Ianiſaries, Turks, & others of the realm of Cābaia, which Solimā had choſen & reſerued for the laſt, to ouerthrow the Portugals forces, which wer alredy much weakened; and at the ſame inſtant he cauſed a generall aſſault to be giuen to the whole caſtle. The enemy aduanced to the rampires, and the Portugalls made reſiſtance, D Silueria went from place to place with a few choice ſouldiers, and comming where hee "ſaw greateſt need, he turned him vnto his company, and ſaid: Ah countrymen, do you "not remember that you are the ſouldiers of Chriſt, for the confeſſion of whoſe faith we "haue put on theſe armes, follow me then, & ſacrifice your liues glorioufly in his ſeruice, "who refuſed not to ſuffer a ſhameful death for our health. And without ſpeaking more words, ſhaking his ſword, he went wher he ſaw moſt of the enemies, whereas he made ſuch reſiſtance as after 5 houres that this laſt aſſault continued, he made the enemies attempts vaine. At the laſt night gaue an end to this cruell aſſault, not without great ſlaughter of the Mahumetans; they had loſt that day, as ſome write aboue 3500, beſides hurt men, of the Portugals there were 70 ſlaine, & aboue 300 wounded, ſo as they ſay, there remained E only 12 vntoucht. But the numbers of the ſlaine and wounded are diuerſly reported, yet they al affirm, that if the enemy had giuen another aſſault, they could not haue withſtood it, wanting both men & munition, for they had no poulder but what their ordnance was charged with, ſo as Silueria to prouide for a future miſchiefe, cauſed thoſe peeces which were towards the ſea to be drawne away in the night, & to be planted towards the land. But the Baſcha ſeeing his attempts vaine, laied the blame proudly vpon Coffaro, & other Lords of the countrey, who had aſſured him that the fort was very weake, and not able to make two days defence: moreouer he ſaid they had abuſed him, and not aſſiſted him, with ſuch forces as they had promiſed him in the beginning, & aſſured the great Turk in Conſtantinople; ſo as full of wrath & ſhame, he knew not what to reſolue, for that there was a F bruit of a Portugal army which was preparing at Goa, doubting they wold fight with him both by ſea & land, truſting litle in them of Cābaia, who in effect hated him generally, for the ſacking of Diu & other great wrongs the Turkes had done them: Beſides, they feared that this cruel man hauing chaſed away the Portugals, would put their new king to death, and ſeaze tyrannouſly on the whole Countrey. Whileſt they ſtood vpon theſe termes,

1537

Death of Nonio Acugna.

Army of Portugalles prepared againſt the Turkes.

Aſſault giuen by the Turkes at Diu.

Turkes valiantly repulſed at Diu.

the 1537 the 16 galeots ſent by Acugna arriued happily, being come the night after the 2 day of Nouember within ſight of Diu, foure miles off from the enemies army, the commanders thought it a politike ſtratagem, euery one to carry 4 lanthorns, the which ſucceeded haply; for the enemies thinking they had bin ſo many ſhips as they ſaw lights, and beleeuing it had bin the whole army, they lay cloſe and would not hazard to meet them: ſo as being fauored by the darknes of the night, and the enemies feare, being terrified with the former ſucceſſe, and the opinion they had of the army, they entred happily into the riuer, which made the port of the caſtle, bringing great ioy to their friends, who were in that poore eſtate. The Baſcha being firſt in doubt, was now reſolued to riſe, hauing no hope to better his condition; whoſe riſing was with ſuch diſorder and feare, as it ſeemed a very flight. Soliman leauing at land about 150 pieces of ordnance as Goez writes, 1000 Turks that were wounded, & another thouſand which were gone forth to forrage, all which were ſlain by them of the country, to reuenge the iniuries they had receiued. The Portugalles got the artillery, with ſome goods of value to repaire the loſſes they had ſuſtained in thoſe combats. The Turkiſh army being gone from Diu in this confuſion, Soliman reuenged his diſgrace vpon thoſe miſerable Portugalls, which had bin taken in the Tower, whom he had treacherouſly kept in priſon, cauſing them to be all murdred.

Turks retire flying from Diu.

The new gouernor Norogna, hearing that his men were freed, that ther was no need to goe with an army to Diu, he reſolued to ſecure all things in the prouince, in quieting the peopls minds, the which was eaſy to effect, throgh the reputatiõ which the Portugals had gotten, in defending themſelues againſt the Turks forces, & by the hatred which they had purchaſed by their thefts. He therfore made a peace with Mamudio the new K. ſiſters ſon to the deceaſed Badurio. Vpon theſe conditions, That the Portugalls ſhould be maſters of the fort, & port of Diu, but the king ſhould haue half the cuſtoms of the ſaid port; & that he might raiſe a wall right againſt the fort, but ſo farre off, as it ſhould no way annoy nor hinder it; which concluded, he prouided for the gard of the caſtell, ſending Iames Soſa for gouernor, in Siluerioes place, who required reſt after ſo honourable a ſeruice, he had 900 men giuen him for garriſon, with all fit prouiſiõs. This yong king was not long quiet, but ſolicited by the ambition of ſome, and by his grandmother, deſirous to reuenge the death of her ſon, he began to make warre againſt the Portugalls, vpon a pretext to recouer Bazain, whereof there had been no mention made in the laſt accord: but it proued a war of no moment.

Mamudio K. of Cambaia: and an accord made by him with the Portugalls.

38 After the Emperours retreat out of France, the war being hot in Piedmont, pope Paul conſidering how many miſeries this warre brought vnto Chriſtendome, & fearing and foreſeeing the ruine of Italy if it continued, hee procured an enteruiew of thoſe two princes and himſelfe in the towne of Nice, where there was no means to reconcile them: there was onely a truce concluded for ten yeares, of either ſide the Alpes, both of them holding what they had gotten: the pope hoping during this long truce there would be ſome means found to conclude a peace. The emperor returning frõ Nice towards Spain, he was ſtaid by the weather about Marſeilles, where the king ſent to intreat him to enter, and to reſt himſelfe vntill the wind were faire: for the which he gaue him thanks, letting him vnderſtand, that he deſired they might ſee one another at Aigues mortes. Whereunto the king conſented, and went thither from Auignon, being vpon his returne towards France. The emperor landed, and dined with the king in Aigues mortes, & the king entred afterwards confidently into the emperors galley, where they diſcourſed long together, but what it was few men vnderſtood, yet they parted with great ſhews of friendſhip.

Enteruiew of the Pope, Emperour, and French king at Nice.

Emperour and French king meet at Aigueſmortes.

1539 This yeare one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and nine, the emperour, the yong prince Philippe his ſonne, his two daughters, and the whole Court, were full of ſorrow and heauineſſe for the death of the empreſſe Iſabella; ſhe died the firſt day of Maie being deliuered of a ſonne, which followed her ſoone after, they were both much lamented by the young Prince, who beganne to feele the heauie croſſes whereunto the miſerable condition of man is ſubiect. Shee was carried from Toledo where ſhee died, with a funerall pompe befitting ſo great an Empreſſe, to bee buried in the royall Chappell of Granado, which honours were afterwardes religiouſly reiterated in all the Cities ſubiect to the Emperour her husband, and by King Iohn of Portugall, her brother,

Death of the empreſſe Iſabella.

A brother. After her death the emperour Charles remained alwayes a widower, during the which he had a base son by a maid whose name and family was concealed: he was called D. Iohn of Austria, whom he did not aduow vntill his death. 1539 D. Iohn of Austria.

39 The emperor being a prince of a great courage and high attempts, imbraced many actions, so as his reuenues could hardly supply the charge, wherefore he sought to draw mony from the people & towns that were subiect vnto him, by diuers means, by subuentions, impositions, loans and extraordinary beneuolences. Among others he would haue the Castillans make him a present whereunto the Nobility should contribute, without exemption of any, hauing caused it to be propounded in an assembly of the lords & noble men of the countrey, giuing them to vnderstand it was for the charges of the war he made Impositions cause of trouble
B against infidells, whereof the profit and honor was common to them with him. Whereunto answer was by D. Inigo of Velasco constable of Castille in all their names: That the Nobilitie would neuer suffer their freedoms and liberties to be broken; whereat the emperor was very much discontented; & there hapned at the same time an accident, whereby he might see that the nobility of Castille, were not easie to be gouerned as they pleased that councelled him: and this it was. There being a turney held without the city of Toledo, where the court lay, whē the sport was ended, & the emperor desirous to return towards the citie, the presse being great, an Alcaide or Prouost meaning to hasten those that marched before, he strucke the duke of the Infantasgos horse with a riding rod vpon the croper, he being the chief of the Mēdosas, & one of the greatest noblemen of Spain, Act of choler done by the Infantasgo.
C who sodenly drawing his sword struck the Alcaide on the head, telling him that he shold learn to execute his charge with respect: whereupon the dukes seruants would haue slain him presently, but he staied them. The Alcaide being al bloudy, presented himself before the emperor, wherat he seeming to be offended, doctor Ronquillo one of the 3 prouosts of the emperors palace, aduanced as if he would lay hold on the duke to carry him to prison: but he was willed to forbeare vnlesse he would receiue as much as the other, and that hee should go and learne his duety better: wherein Ronquillo shewed himselfe nothing obstinate. The duke retired to his lodging being followed by al the nobilitie, leauing the emperour in a maner alone: who dissembled this act, lest hee should cause some trouble in Castille, where they had so freely refused him the donatiue, which he had demanded, and D the better to couer his discontentment, hee caused the Alcaide to be put in prison, as hauing exceeded in his charge, sending the duke of the Infantasgo word, that he wold cause him to be hanged to giue him satisfaction. The duke came and gaue the king thanks with al humility, sued for his deliuery, had him cured at his charge, and gaue him 500 crowns, wherein he shewed himselfe generous. The emperour soone after passed into Flanders, where he vnderstood that the Gantois were rebelled by reason of subsidies and impostes, which Queene Marie of Hungarie gouernesse of that country had laied vpon them; and discharged his choler vpon that people. Satisfaction done by the emperour to the duke of the Infantasgo. Rebellion of the Gantois for impostes.

The Emperour at his going out of Spaine towards Flanders, he left the prince D. Philip his sonne, his lieutenant and vicegerent there, being then not foureteene yeares old, he 1540
E was assisted by the same Councell that the empresse his mother had, he took his way thorow France, where he was roially entertained, and accompanied by the Infants of France. Henry Dauphin of Viennois, and Charles duke of Orleans, whom the king his father desired much to see duke of Milan. What passed in his voyage betwixt him and the French, the French historie relates. But the Gantois were seuerely punished, and kept in awe by a strong Citadell, which was built, furnished and garded at their owne charge: the Emperour beeing the more incensed for that hee heard of nothing but mutinies and rebellions in all places for want of money: for that at the same time that hee punished them of Gant, the Spanish souldiers which were in Lombardie mutined against the Marquesse of Guast gouernour of Milan, for want of pay, but they were pacified by Citadell of Gant built.
F a generall taxation layed vpon the Countrey, the which they did willingly paie. D. Bernardin of Mendosa had more difficultie to content his mutined garrison in Goulette, beeing forced to shew his wisedome and to saue both himselfe and the place from their furious disobedience and mutinie, which made him feare that they had some intelligence which the Moores of Tunes or the Turks of Alger, and that they would de- Mutinie of the Spaniards in Lombardie.

liuer

1541 liuer the fort into their hands. The duty we owe vnto God, and reasons of State march not in one ranke in our policies. D. Bernardin hauing aduertised D. Fernand Gonzague viceroy of Sicile, of the danger wherein he was, and had good correspondency with him, he intreated, coniured and flattred the Spaniards in such sort as he filled them with hope to receiue their pay in short time, holding them in this expectation vntil the comming of the gallies of Sicile, bringing new souldiers to change this garrison: and then it behoued him to lie, and assure them with the most religious othes that might be, that their money was all ready at Messina, to be paied them as soone as they should land, and that the emperour remembring the good and faithful seruices they had done him, and desirous to reward it, drew them out of that barbarous land, to lodge them in a more pleasant and delightfull country where they should be freed from their toile, perswading them with such good words, as they gaue him credit, and imbarked in the same gallies: But they were much amazed, that comming to the port of Messina they would not suffer them to enter into the citie, and that they told them there was no mony for them, and that they sought to diuide them into diuers garrisons, vntill that the Emperour had otherwise disposed, wherefore being transported with furie and shame, to haue been thus circumuented, they began to ouerrunne the country, and to spoile houses in open villages, with all the insolencies that might be imagined: they first of all gaue an assault to the towne of Castro reall, and had almost forced it: their insolencies were such, as ioyning other mad men vnto them, they were a terrour to all the Iland, the viceroy being forced to assemble the nobilitie and commons to suppresse them by armes, seeking in the meane time to winne and draw away the heads and ringleaders of this mutinie, so as hauing won some with othes and promises of impunitie, and hope of pay, he had meanes to disperse them into diuerse small troupes, afterwards he caused the most seditious to be easily apprehended and to be executed by way of Iustice, filling the townes and high waies with gibets well furnished, for examples sake. This seueritie caused the Spanish nation to beare a deadly hatred to D. Fernand.

Rebellion at Goulette.

Punishment of the mutinous Spanish souldiers.

Portugall.

The Castillans of the east Indies, whereof D. Antonio of Gueuara was gouernor, sent forth in the yeare 1541 a new army to the Molucques, vnder the command of captaine Villalobos, which arriued safely at Tidore and Gilolo, but hee was as vnfortunate as the rest, which had gone before him, he himselfe with his ships and men falling into the Portugalls hands, hauing retreats and forts in those Ilands, and could not indure the Castillans should vndertake that voyage. The like successe they all haue had, which haue since attempted it: whereby it seemed that it was the will of God the Portugalls should inioy them: who haue vsed this nauigation with great honour and profit, as well to their owne nation, as to other countries of Europe: hauing made storehouses for that trade, and for the distribution of their merchandise and drugges, in the city of Lisbone, euen vnto the kings palace, vpon the riuer of Tayo, the which are called the house of the Indies. To giue more ornament to the realme of Portugall, the city of Ebora had beene the yere before 1540 made an Archbishopricke at the instance and request of the king D. Iohn in fauor of cardinall Henry infant of Portugall, the kings brother, who was the first Archbishop, hauing the bishop of Silues for his suffragan. So as from that time there were three Metropolitans in Portugall, Braga, Lisbone, and Ebora.

1541 Portugalls will not suffer the Castillans to saile to the Molucques.

Ebora made an archbishopricke

The Emperor hauing setled his affaires in the Netherlands, he went by Metz to Spire, and from thence to Ratisbone, where hee had appointed an imperiall diet, as well to prouide for the warre against the Turke, as to bring the Protestants vnder the obedience of the Pope and Church of Rome, which was a faire publique pretext: but hee had other designes for the aduauncement of his owne house, which hee did hope to attaine vnto, vnder colour of religion, as it appeared, and vsing at that time this shadow of religion, hee thought to stay the French king from making war (being much offended, for that Cesar Fregose and Anthony Rinson his embassadours, were murthered vpon the riuer Po, going to Venice) by vndertaking the conquest of Alger, for the which hauing assembled what forces hee thought sufficient out of Germanie, Italie and Spaine, hauing seene Pope Paul at Luques, reiecting obstinately the wise councell of Andrew Doria and other great Captaines, aduising him to deferre the enterprise vntill the Castille.

Voyage of the emperor to Alger.

A the Spring following (by reaſon of the ſeaſon of Autume which would be come before hee ſhould land his men, and the bad diſpoſition of that yeare: but he imbarqued in the port of Luna, and came in view of Alger with aboue two hundred and fiftie veſſelles, of the which there were threeſcore & fiue gallies which caried two and twenty thouſand foot entertained, with ſome three thouſand voluntaries, and twelue hundred horſe, beſides the traine of noblemen and captains which did accompany him, whereof the chiefe were D. Fernand Gonzague Viceroy of Sicile, D. Fernand of Toledo duke of Alua, Andrew Doria prince of Melfi, Virginio Vrſino earle of Anguilara, Auguſtine Spinola, and Camillo Colonna. Barberouſſe had left Aſſan Aga a renegado of Sardinia gouernour in Alger, being accompanied (beſides the Moores inhabitants) by many Turkes, of the which there B were 800 horſemen, for the defence of the towne, & without it there were great numbers of horſe and foot, Alarabes and Africans entertained, or otherwiſe drawne thither with the hope of ſpoile: For this vagabond nation doe like vnto rauens or vultures, who by a certaine inſtinct follow armies, being aſſured to finde whereon to feede: So this people when they heare of any tumult in the country, they ſtay not till they be inuited, but flie thither in great troups, as people which haue no other care nor imploiment but to theue, by whom the emperours army was much annoyed in the landing, which was on the Eaſt ſide towards Cape Metafuſo, within 7 miles of Alger. They diuided the army into three batallions; on the left hand were the Spaniards with Aluaro de Sande marſhal of the field, and with D. Fernand Gonzague viceroy of Sicile, and the duke of Camerino. In the battel C where the emperors perſon was, the Germans marcht; and on the right hand towards the ſea, were the Italians with their colonels, the earle of Santa Fiora, and other noblemen aduenturers. That day they marched only 2 miles, and ſtaied neere vnto a fountaine that night, hauing ſtill ſight of the Moores and Arabians on horſe backe, but they durſt not approch to charge the Chriſtians; but at night thinking they had beene at reſt, they came downe from a neere mountaine on the ſouth ſide with great cries, & charged the Chriſtians, by whom they were eaſily repulſed with loſſe. The Emperour at his firſt landing had ſent to trie Aſſan Aga the gouernour, if hee would yeeld vp the place to his Majeſtie for reward, and not ſubiect himſelfe to the danger of a mighty and victorious enemy. But the Aga anſwered with a ſmiling countenaunce, that hee was to defend that place a- D gainſt the Chriſtians, as it had beene done twice to their great loſſe, and ſome write, that hee grew thus confident, not that hee found himſelfe ſo well furniſhed for his defence; but through the words of an old Inchauntreſſe, who hauing foretold the vnfortunate attempts of D. Diego de Vera, and D. Hugo de Moncada, had alſo affirmed that the Emperour of Chriſtendome ſhould ſuffer great loſſe there. The next day they marched three miles, and camped within two miles of Alger, in a place ſtrong by nature, being flanked by two torrents which fall from the mountaines, the Spaniſh foot (whereof the Duke of Alua generall of the horſe was the chiefe) took their lodging vpon a little hill, from which the army might haue been much annoyed. The ſea being alſo growne ſomewhat calme after a great ſtorme, the gallies came within canon ſhot of Alger, and the E ſhippes drawing neere, they did with great toile vnſhip their horſes, there being a great skirmiſh betwixt the Spaniards and Moores vpon the hill. But in the meane time they gaue order to land their victualls, artillerie and munition. Towards night the ſea began to ſwel againe, & there fell ſuch abundance of raine all night, with a cold northern wind, which is dangerous vpon that coaſt, as both the campe at land, and the army at ſea did ſuffer much, and the enemies imbracing this occaſion, thinking they could not be much annoyed with the Chriſtians ſhot, meant to aſſaile them at the breake of day. And ſo the Arabians which were abroad, and the Turkes and Moores within the city being ioyned, made a great attempt on the Spaniards and Italians quarters, towards the mountaine and the ſea ſhoare, the Germans being ſomething more backward: but the Spaniards re- F pulſt the enimy valiantly, although they could not vſe their harquebuſes, & did win much more commendation than the Italians, who keeping a gard vpon a bridge which was vpon one of thoſe torrents, ſuffered them to winne that paſſage, ſo as the enemies horſemen came euen vnto their quarter. Camillo Colonna was that day in gard, who with great valour withſtood the Barbarians force, and putting them to flight, chaſed them beyond the

1541

Aſſan Aga gouernour of Algier.

Diſpoſition of the Alarabes of Afrike.

Imperiall armie landed at Alger.

Italians aſſailed by the Turkes at Alger.

1541 the bridge, thinking it ſufficient : But it was the opinion of D. Ferdinand of Gonzaga to G purſue the enemy, that they of the towne not being able to vſe their artillerie by reaſon of the raine, the Chriſtians in their purſuite might happely enter pell mell with the Turkes, and ſo ſending Spinolaes regiment after them, they purſued them vnto the port of Algier, the which they finding ſhut, the Turkes went about the wall, and being wel acquainted with thoſe places, eſcaped from the Italians : who retiring incouraged the enemie to ſally forth, and to purſue them with great numbers; they being new ſouldiers, tired with the raine and myre, not knowing the country, and wearied firſt with purſuing the enemy, they fainted and disbanded, ſo as the Barbarians made a great ſlaughter of them, for Aſſan Aga ſallying forth with his horſemen, and freſh foot, they were eaſily put to rout, but ſome knights of Rhodes, colonell Spinola, count John Franciſco de Bagna, H with ſome few captaines and old ſouldiers, making a ſtand at a bridge, withſtood the enemies force: And yet worſe would haue happened conſidering their great aduauntage of armes, vſing arrowes and ſtones, whenas the Chriſtians could not vſe their harquebuſes; vnleſſe the emperour, who that day, and alwayes performed the duety of a captaine, a ſergeant, and a ſouldier, had not come to ſuccour them with ſome companies of Germans; whereof the firſt being put to flight, he with an inuincible mind giuing courage to the reſt both with words and action, in the end he repulſed the enemy, and retired his men out of that dayes daunger, hauing loſt aboue 300 men, and 200 hurt, but few men of accõpt: D. Carlo of Lanoye ſonne to the prince of Sulmona was wounded. But the fortune of the armie at ſea was more miſerable, which toſt with the waues and windes, had I Shipwracke of the imperiall army in Algier. continued from midnight vntill noone the next day, in a hard and inſupportable conflict, againſt the furious violence of thoſe enemies. The ſhips which had no other ſhelter, but to commit themſelues to the mercy of the raging windes, ſought to vnburthen themſ-ſelues, caſting their ordonance or any thing elſe of weight into the ſea, & cutting downe their maſts; yet many periſhed, being either ſwallowed vp in the ſea, or beating one a-gainſt an other were driuen on ſhoare, to be a prey the Barbarians. With the like miſfortune, but with more art, and force, the gallies did ſtriue. Doria, and the other captains of iudgement laboring to preſerue them with many anchors, & with the induſtrie of their oares, they alſo caſting their artillery ouer boord; but they ſtill finding thẽſelues in exceeding great danger, ſome hoping to ſaue their liues at land, cut their cables, and ranne on K ground, which was a moſt miſerable ſpectacle: for the gallies breaking, whileſt that the men tired with the toile, being vp to the chin in water, ſought to ſaue themſelues, & held it for a happineſſe to be accepted for ſlaues, the Arabians and Moores which ſtood ready, to make the vnfortunate condition of thoſe Chriſtians more miſerable, ſhewed themſelues to be greedy of their blood and death, killing them moſt barbarouſly without any mercy. Amongſt which Iannettin Doria Admirall ranne on ground neere vnto the Emperours campe, ſo as it might well be relieued by his maieſtie, who preſently ſent ſome companies of Italians, to ſuppreſſe the furie of the Arabians, and ſaued that valiant yong man, with the greateſt part of his companie. There periſhed foureteene gallies, ſome write fifteene after this manner, whereof eleuen did belong to prince Doria, and the L reſt to Anthony Doria, to Naples, and Spaine; of greater veſſelles ſome ſay ſeuentie, and ſome a hundred and fifty, of ſhippes, carauells, and pinaces. At night it grew ſomewhat calme, ſo as in the morning the gallies drew neere vnto the ſhoare, where they lay firſt, but towards euening the wind grew high againe, ſo as prince Doria did perſuade them to retire to cape Matafuſo, holding that place to be leſſe daungerous, for that there were few rockes, the which the emperour perceiuing, and ſeeing that there were no victualls in the campe, the ſouldiers hauing beene the day before without any meate, he reſolued to riſe and march that day ſix miles with his whole armie. The which he had put in good order, for that the enemy was ſtill behind him & on his flankes, yet they durſt not charge them, the ſick & hurt men being put in the middeſt of the ſquadrons, vſing al care to ſaue M them, yet many were ſlaine by thoſe Barbarians, being ſo weake as they could not be carried. For wanting all kind of victuall, they had relieued themſelues thoſe two daies with the roots of dates which they call palmette, & horſe-fleſh, ſome being ſlaine to that end.
They came that day vnto a riuer, which the Moores call Agaraz, the which was ſo riſen

with

A with the raine, as it was not poſſible to wade through, where, by reaſon thereof, and to ſee if they could get any victualls, they ſtaied that night, and gathering together the maſts and yardes of broken ſhips in that riuer, they made a bridge to paſſe the Germanes and Italians the next day, the Spaniards hauing found out a foard ſomewhat higher. The Turkes and Moores of Alger did not purſue the armie any further, and the Arabians did little annoy them, ſo as within two daies they came vnto their galleys. 1541 Hunger in the Emperors army.

Heere the emperour did ſomewhat refreſh his army, drawing ſome victualls out of the ſhips, and then hee gaue order for their ſhipping, which was on the laſt day of October. The inuincible and vndaunted courage of the emperour, was ad-

B mirable, who was a great conſolation to thoſe afflicted troupes: but in the ſhipping of the armie there was great pietie noted in him; thinking it impoſſible that ſhips ſhaken with the rage of the Sea, ſhould carrie ſo much people, hee commaunded that all the horſes whatſoeuer ſhould bee caſt into the Sea, were they of neuer ſo great price, not regarding the intreaties of their owners, deſiring rather to ſaue the baſeſt ſoldier being a man and a Chriſtian, than thoſe noble inſtruments of warre. D. Fernand of Gonzaga, ſtaied two daies to imbarke, who coaſting along Barbarie towards the Eaſt, had a ſhorter paſſage into Sicile. The Sea grew rough again, and they ſtaied not long to haue more particuler directions, the emperour hauing giuen order where his troupes ſhould land. Conſtancy and pietie of the emperor Charles

C There is a memorable accident reported of two ſhips full of Spaniards, which in the tempeſt were driuen on ſhoare neere vnto Algier, the Souldiers within them ſeeking to preſerue their liues by being ſlaues, but the cruell Arabians thirſting after mans bloud, refuſing to accept them, they made a braue and generous reſolution, ſo as keeping cloſe together, they marcht fighting euen to the verie gate of Alger, where they gaue Aſſan Aga to vnderſtand that they were come to yeeld themſelues his ſlaues, hoping that hee being borne a Chriſtian, wold not ſuffer them to be torn in peeces by the rage of the Arabians, whoſe liues might be a greater benefit, & ſo they were preſerued by that renegado with more ſhew of humanity. The gallies which were with the emperors perſon, running the ſame fortune recouered the port of Bugia, and there they refreſht themſelues a little, Spaniards preſerue their liues generouſly againſt the Arabians.

D and then the ſeas being ſomewhat calmed, they ſailed towards Spaine, where the emperour landed at Carthagene, from whence hee ſent to Occagna to viſit his daughters, hauing firſt met with the Prince, D. Philippe, who went ſpeedily to doe his daety, and to reioyce at his returne, who with an inuincible courage, ſpeaking little of his loſſe, ſhewed how we ſhould beare the croſſes of humane accidents. Prince Doria who yeelded not to any in greatneſſe of minde and conſtancy, being arriued in Italie, where the miſerable ſucceſſe of this enterpriſe, was already knowne, he did comfort ſuch as came to condole with him for his loſſe, and ſought to comfort him. But the emperours bountie repaired his great loſſe, for he did not onely giue him three thouſand ducats of yerely rent for euer out Emperour Charles his returne into Spaine from the rout of Algier.

E of the fines at Naples, but he alſo made him Protonotarie of that kingdome, which is the fift of the ſeuen principall offices; the which the prince Iohn Andrew his nephew doth now enioy. Bountie of the emperour to Prince Doria.

41 At the emperours returne from Alger, hee found himſelfe ingaged in a difficult warre, againſt the French king, the which would not ſuffer him to make any long aboad in Spaine. The king pretended that the truce had beene broken, and the faith violated by the Marqueſſe of Guaſt his lieutenant in Lombardie, by reaſon of the murther of Fregoſe and Rinſon: which fact being ſufficiently verified, it was diſſembled by him; where-upon the French king, began the warre in many places: In Brabant and thereabouts by the lord of Longuenall, and Martin van Rouſſe: In the duchie of Luxembourge by the the duke of Orleance: The Dauphin Henry was come into the countie of Roſſillon, & did 41 Warre betwixt the French king & the emperor.

F beſeege the Towne of Perpignan with forty thouſand foot, two thouſand men at armes, two thouſand light horſe, and great ſtore of artillerie, one of the goodlieſt armies the French had of long time drawne together; the which proued to bee of no effect, for that proceeding ſo ſlowly, the duke of Alua had meanes to put ſome troupes into the town (which was ill furniſhed) by land, and D. Bernardin of Mendoſa newly made generall of the galleys of Spaine, to ſupplie it with victuals and all other kind of munition by ſea, 1542 ſo as the Prince ſeeing it was not eaſie to force, and hearing of great ſuccours G which did aduance both from Spaine and Italie, hee retyred. In Italie the Lord of Langey made warre for the king, and in Picardie the duke of Vendoſme: what the ſucceſſe was, the French Hiſtorie will fully ſatisfie you.

The emperour feeling yet the bad ſucceſſe of this affaires of Barbarie, and ſtung by the French in ſo many places, fainted not: but that which did moſt trouble him, was the duetie he ought vnto Germanie as emperour: for beſides that Sultan Solyman had newly repulſt the forces of the empire from before Buda, hee was aduertiſed that hee prepared to returne this yeare in perſon into Hungarie with a mighty armie: and that which toucht him nerer, he vnderſtood that by the perſuaſion of the French king, and of Captaine H Paulin, his embaſſador in the Eaſt, Barberouſſe was at Sea, with a great number of gallies and foiſts, with an intent to inuade his Countries of Naples and Sicile, and to ſpoile Spaine if hee might finde any opportunitie.

To preuent all theſe miſchiefes, hee went to Barcelone to paſſe into Italie: where whileſt they made the gallies readie for his paſſage, and that the Souldiers came which ſhould goe with him, hee went into Nauarre, and cauſed ſome roades to bee made into the neere frontier of Fraunce, and the Towne of Saint Iohn de Luz to bee burnt. And ſeeing himſelfe thus preſt, hee held the ſupport of Henry the eight, king of England, to bee needfull, with whome hee entred into leagne.

S. Iohn de Luz burnt by the Spaniards.

Hauing concluded together how they ſhould make warre, the emperour came to Ge- I noua with forty gallies, and ſome troupes, when as Barberouſſe ſackt and burnt the coaſt of Calabria, and had taken the town of Regium in the ſtreit againſt Sicile. Then the Turkiſh armie came to Oſtia, which did much amaze the Romanes, but they did only water, and ſo paſt, not doing any harme to the territories of the church, which were recommended by the French king, then leauing the riuer of Genoua, hee came to Marcelles.

The French king had ſent Frances of Bourbon, duke of Anguien to bee his lieutenant in Prouence, and to receiue the Turkes armie, who attending Barberouſſe, and thinking to ſurpriſe the Caſtle of Nice, had like to haue beene ſurpriſed himſelfe, by Iannetin Doria, who watcht for him within the Port, with twentie gallies; for hee beleeuing one who had laied this double plot, aduentured to goe with ſome K of the kings galleys, whereof foure which hee had cauſed to aduance were taken, and hee himſelfe eſcaped by flight. Barberouſſe being come, Doria quit the Port and Towne of Nice to the Turkes, who ſackt and burnt it, but the Caſtle held good, being valiantly defended by Paul Simeon, a knight of Malta, the place being of it ſelfe vneaſie to batter, and worſe to aſſaile, but after a while they tooke an occaſion to leaue the ſiege. Barberouſſe retyred with his gallies to Antibo, being much diſcontented againſt the French, for the bad prouiſion hee had found in Prouence, for the warre, for hee ſaw many neceſſarie prouiſions to faile them ſuddenly, and that the kings men were often forced to borrow powder, match and other neceſſaries from the Turkes; ſo as hee grew often into ſuch a rage, as hee did threaten Captaine Paulin to L put him in chaines, and to carrie him to Conſtantinople, there to bee puniſhed as an abuſer and lyer, hauing made infinite promiſes to the great Turke, whereof hee ſaw no effects; the which hee had done if the prince of Anguien had not ſomewhat pacified him with good words. Being at Antibo, he vnderſtood that the Marqueſſe of Guaſt and the duke of Sauoy were come into the port of Villafranca, with prince Dorias gallies, and that being ready to enter into Port, they had been ſurpriſed with ſo great a ſtorme, as foure gallies thinking to get to ſea, had been caſt againſt the rockes and broken, and that, wherin the Marqueſſe was, in danger to be ſunke: The Turke ready for al occaſions went thither with his gallies, but he came to late: he gathered vp part of the ſhip-wracke, and drew the ordnance out of the ſea: After which he went & wintred at Tolon, from whence M he ſent fiue and twenty gallies to Alger, with the ſpoiles which hee had taken, the which they increaſed with many poore priſoners of either ſex, paſſing along the coaſt of Catelogne and Valencia, and with a ſhip and a galley, which they found neere vnto Palamos, which they carried away.

Barberouſſe beſiegeth the Caſtle of Nice.

Fernando Cortez depriued of his gouernment of Mexico.

I muſt ſpeak ſome thing of Fernando Cortez, who conquered Mexico, from whence hee

was

A was called being viceroy, by the meanes of ſome which enuied his greatnes, being accuſed in Spaine vnto the emperour, and forced to come and yeeld himſelfe a priſoner, in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and forty: he could not ſo ſooneiuſtifie his innocencie, although hee were in a maner ſet at libertie, following the emperour to the warre of Alger, yet hee had no command; and as one in diſgrace with his Maieſtie, hee was neuer called to councell in thoſe dangerous accidents, although hee were a great Captaine, and had beene tryed in greater difficulties, whereof hee had giuen good proofes in all his attempts. 1542

Hee carried with him indiſcreetly in this expedition, fiue admirable emeralds, the B which hee loſt, whoſe forme and qualitie being held rare and precious, it is fit there ſhould be ſome mention made of them. One of them which was valued at forty thouſand ducats, had the forme of a cup, the button whereof was a great pearle, and the foot of pure golde, the ſecond was like a little bell, the clapper was of pearle verie properly made: the third had the figure of a fiſh, on the head whereof there were eies of gold, artificially wrought, the fourth was cut like a horne, and the fift like a roſe. After the return from that vnfortunate attempt of Alger, he laboured fiue yeres to proue his innocencie, and in the end had leaue from the emperour to returne to Mexico, and to hold his firſt honours and eſtates, but he could neuer enioy them, for being ſixtie yeares olde, hee died in the beginning of December one thouſand fiue hundred forty ſeuen, leauing an honorable teſtimony behind him, to haue beene valiant, modeſt, and religious. Emeralds, fiue exceeding faire

C After the taking of the Citie of Cuſco at Peru by Francis Pizarro, the Spaniards went to take the towne of Quito, which was great and rich, and ſtood in an excellent ayre, almoſt vnder the South line, the which, beſides that it abounds in mines of mettall, hath great ſtore of quicke ſiluer of yellow colour as they write. There came other Spaniards from Panama, vpon the brute of the great ſtore of gold which Pyzarro had found in that prouince, and they ſoone made good purchaſe, though not ſo great as they expected. Proceedings of Pyzarro at Peru.

There came alſo from S. Iago in new Spain, Pedro of Aluarado, with a fleet of ſome ſhips, thinking to effect ſome great matters, but Pizarro would not ſuffer him to make any profit D in the countrie which he had diſcouered, and was his gouernment: wherefore they agreed to leaue his ſhips with Francis for 100000 crowns, and Aluarado returned from whence he came. In the yere 1535 the citie of Lima was inlarged, and many dwellings made for Spaniards by Pizarro, he made it the reſidence for the councel of the realme, and called it the kings citie, chooſing it for his dwelling, & giuing the gouernment of Cuſco to Almagro. Lima called the kings Citie.

This yeare 1542, the emperour cauſed the Prince D. Philip to be ſworne future king of Spaine, by the eſtates of the Countrie, ſeeking to draw his ſubiects to giue him good helps for the future warre, wherein hee was well aſſiſted by the treaſure which came in thoſe daies from the Weſt-Indies for his fift part, beſides a great ſumme of money which was lent him by Merchants, and others, giuing them aſſignements out of the ordinarie re- E uenues of his realmes. He was come to Barcelona, to be neere to Perpignan, or to any other attempt of the French, and there he cauſed the Spaniſh footmen to paſſe, which had been in Sardynia at his returne from Alger; the which he wold haue remaine vpon thoſe frontiers, if need ſhould require, or be tranſported elſewhere vpon any occaſion. From Barcelona he went with the court to Taracona, from thence to Tortoſa, & then to Valencia, the Prince making a ſolemne entrie in all theſe place, where he was entertaind with great feaſts and pompe. D. Philip ſworn future king of Spaine.

After which, they paſt the feaſts of Chriſtmas at Alcala of Henares, whereas their ioy was doubled by the preſence of the two Infants, two marriages being concluded at that time; one of the Prince D. Philip and D. Maria Infanta of Portugall, daughter to king F Iohn the third, the other of D. Iohn prince of Portugall, a youth of fourteene yeares of age, and D. Ioane the emperours ſecond daughter. They continued in Alcala with great feaſting, vntill the end of the yeare, and then went to Madrid, where hee made his entrie the firſt day of the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred forty and three, where they made preparation of new ſolemnities for the future marriage, as alſo for the warre, the emperour beeing reſolued to paſſe into Italy in the Spring. Philip prince of Spaine contracted to the Infant of Portugal

1543 Mariages of the Prince and Infant of Spaine.

The marriage of prince Philip concluded in winter, was celebrated in March after, with great pompe and ſtate, and in like maner that of the Infanta his ſiſter; the Emperor neglecting nothing touching his preparation for warre, as well againſt the French, who had the yeare before annoyed him in many places, as alſo againſt the Moores of Tremeſſen, who according to their naturall inconſtancie, had iniuriouſly rebelled. To ſuppreſſe the which hee had in beginning of this yeare, ſent D. Martin of Cardone, earle of Alcadette into Africke with eight thouſand foot, and about fifteene hundred horſe, what ſucceded there you ſhall heereafter heare. After which hauing prouided a great ſumme of money, and ſuch foote and horſe as ſhould paſſe with him into Italie, hee gaue order for the gouernment of thoſe Realmes vnder the charge of the king D. Philip, to whome hee appointed for his chiefe Councellours, the commaunder Couas, and the Duke of Alua, fore-ſeeing many matters of great importance, and prouiding for them all with great care, as hee that ſought to make his forces greater, to free himſelfe from the moleſtations of Fraunce, and fruſtrate their practiſes which they had in Germanie, where they had thoſe Princes readie to make any alteration, being not greatlie affected to the houſe of Auſtria: wherefore hee ſought to ſettle the greatneſſe of his houſe, for many ages, according vnto humane wiſedome: And therefore hee had matcht D. Philippe his Sonne to the eldeſt daughter of Portugall, and to the ſole Prince of the realme had giuen his ſecond Infanta, onely with foure hundred thouſand crownes dowrie, although his Sonne had receiued double the ſumme, and for Maximilian, eldeſt ſonne to Ferdinand his brother, hee had reſerued his eldeſt daughter for all doubtfull euents of ſucceſſion in thoſe great dominions.

Tremeſſen rebels againſt the emperour

Earle of Alcadette at the enterpriſe of Tremeſſen.

In the beginning of the yeare the emperour (as wee haue ſaid) had ſent the earle of Alcadette to the enterpriſe of Moſtagan; who going with eight thouſand foote and fifteene hundred horſe from Oran, in the beginning of Februarie this yeare, neere vnto Tabida, had a skirmiſh with the Moores, who charged him in the reareward, but it was of no moment. The next day at the paſſing of a riuer neere vnto Tabida, they found a greater armie of Moores, both horſe and foot furniſhed with good ſhot, yet the Spaniards marcht in ſuch order, and ſhewed themſelues ſo valiant, as notwithſtanding that the enemie ſtood ready on the other ſide of the riuer (which they were to wade through) to receiue them, yet they repulſt them with great loſſe, and aduanced to take Tabida.

Hauing reſted there a while, they marcht on the next day, but ſomewhat late, towards Tremeſſen, lodging two leagues from the citie, being continually moleſted by the Moores, with often charging and flying away. The king was in Tremeſſen where hee had leuied what ſouldiers he could both of horſe and foot, hauing entertained about 400 Turkes which were in garriſon vpon that coaſt, ſo as the next morning the earle did with great indgement put his men in battell, leſt that (being farre inferiour in nũber to the enemy) he ſhould be inuironed by ſo great a multitude, & diſordered, being charged in front, flanke, and rere: and therefore he ſo diſpoſed of his troupes, both horſe and foot, as they might fight and ſuccour one another, fortifying his rereward as much as might be, for that he vnderſtood they had laied an ambuſh, and would charge them behind. They had ſent the woman and children with their richeſt mooueables into the mountaines which were neere, to preſerue them whatſoeuer ſhould happen; and the king hauing diſpoſed of his troupes, would not be preſent at the battell, but attend the euent in a place of ſafetie. The two armies being ioyned, the Spaniards ſhewed no leſſe valour then was needful, the enemies foreward being greater then all their army, and although the Moores in the beginning ſhewed great reſolutiõ, & diſcharged a great volley of ſhot, yet they did it ſo diſorderly, and ſo far of, as there was not any one ſlain, and but three lightly hurt, the Spaniards giuing them no time to charge again, & the horſe cõming vpon them with great violence: the fight continued about two houres; and the General hauing placed ſome looſe ſhot in the head of the foreward, they made a great ſpoile of the Moores and Turkes; ſo as in the end the enemy was put to rout on that ſide, whileſt that they fought with great obſtinacy in the rereward. Thither the earle ſent two companies, who charged with ſuch reſolution,

A on, as the Spaniards taking new courage, & the enemie being amazed, hauing ſeen their companions put to rout, the battell was ended (hauing continued about three houres) & the Chriſtians won the victorie, but there was no great ſlaughter of the Moores, who deſired rather to ſaue themſelues by flight than by fighting obſtinatly, to giue their enemies any cauſe to feare a new incounter. The king of Tremeſſen, who expected the doubtfull euent of this battel, hauing a ſigne giuen him by ſmoak that it was loſt, he prouided for his ſafety by flight among the reſt. The earle of Alcadette did win great honor in this battell both for his valor and iudgement, being worthily imitated by his three ſons, D. Alfonſo, D Franciſco, & D. Aluaro, the firſt leading a part of the foreward, & the ſecõd of the rereward: 1543

King of Tremeſſen defeated by the Spaniards flies.

B D. Alfonſo of Villaruolo marſhall of the field, D. Martin of Cordoua, D. Iohn Pacieco with other noblemen of marke, were much commended for their proweſſe that day. This victorie was won the fift of Februarie, the victor hauing loſt few men, and moſt of them were ſlaine with crosbows, whereof there were not aboue a hundred among the Moores, and aboue fiue thouſand Harquebuziers. The Spaniards deſirous to enter the Towne, the generall ſought to ſtay them that night, fearing the ſlaughter would be great, or there wold be ſome great diſorder committed in the ſacke: wherfore he lodged the army without the towne, among certain Oliue trees, giuing good inſtructions vnto the captains, to preuent all dangers which might grow by their too great confidence of the victorie, or the diſorders which doe accompany ſpoiling, as it hath often fallen out, either by the ſmall authoC rity of the generall, or by indiſcretion, on want of militarie diſcipline.

About this time the ſtate of Tunes (which the emperor had conquered and reſtored to Muley Haſcen) fell into great combuſtions, he hauing only retained Goulette, with an homage and ſmall tribute for the kings of Spain, as we haue ſaid. The occaſion was that Muley Haſcen, being deſirous to confer with the emperor, had paſt into Sicile, with an intent to come vnto him to Genoa, or whereſoeuer he ſhould be at his laſt paſſage out of Spaine; after which hee came to Naples, and meaning to continue his courſe by ſea he was ſtaied there ſome daies by a tempeſt, during the which D. Pedro de Toledo, viceroy of Naples, receiued a commandement to will him not to depart from thence, vntill hee receiued farther newes from the emperour, who was buſied with the warres of France, and would not D haue any thing to diuert him. This king as it was reported, had a meaning to demand ſome forces againſt the Turkes which held Conſtantine, a towne within his realme, the which was rich and ſtrong, and did much annoy him, and for that at the time of his paſſage into Sicile, Barberouſſe was at Marſeille, hee feared alſo that in his returne he would fall vpon him. 1545 Moores 42.

Muley Haſcen king of Tunes diſpoſſeſt again.

He thought in like maner that in leauing the countrie he ſhould auoid ſome great accident wherewith the ſtarres did threaten him, if hee remained in Afrike at that ſeaſon, this prince being ſtudious of Aſtrologie, and too credulous of ſuch diuinations. During his abſence, ſuch as loued him not and deſired ſome Innouation in the ſtate, bruted it out that the king was dead at Naples, after that he had beene baptized; and preſt his Sonne Amida, (who had the command of certaine garriſons which were appointed to withſtand the E inuaſions of the Turkes, and the thefts of the Alarabes, which did adhere vnto them,) to haſten his comming vnto the Citie, and to ſeaze vpon the Caſtle and his fathers treaſure, before that his younger brother called Mahumet (who remained in hoſtage at Goulette) ſhould preuent him, and make himſelfe king with the helpe of Francis de Touar, then Gouernour of the fort. Amida did eaſily credit that which it may bee he deſired, and although in the beginning he found ſome reſiſtance, which was made him by the Manuſette of Tunes, (who as it is were the kings Lieutenant general in that Countrie) yet in the end hee preuailed, and ſlue all his fathers friends & ſeruants, yea, hee abuſed his wiues and concubines.

Moores curious and ſuperſtitious.

Sonne diſpoſſeſſeth the father.

Amida inceſtuous.

F Theſe newes being broght to Naples, Muley Haſcen was much troubled, & making great haſt to depart, he made great inſtance to haue ſome forces, the which hee obtained of the viceroy, who ſuffered him to leuie 1800 men, ſuch as were baniſhed & condemned by juſtice, to whom impunitie was promiſed, if they went to this war; & they had a gentleman of the countrie appointed for their commander, whoſe name was Baptiſta Lofredo: with which troupe the King did aſſure himſelfe that hee ſhould bee able to ſurpriſe his re-

1545 bellious ſonne before hee were ſetled. Being come to Goulette the Gouernour G ſought to diſſuade him from going into the Towne, no not to approach too neere, before hee vnderſtood how the people were affected, and whether there were any men of authoritie of his faction, to aſſiſt him: notwithſtanding that, ſome Africanes came to viſite him, promiſing him by ceremonies, othes (ſetting their daggers a-gainſt their throates, according to their manner) to aide him, and to die with him if neede were, whome the gouernour wiſht him not to truſt.

Notwithſtanding all that Touar could ſay vnto the king, and to Lofredo, they would needs march towards the towne, but before they came thither, they knew that they had beene well aduiſed by Touar, for they fell into an ambuſh which Amida had lai- H ed for them, and were charged by ſo great a multitude of horſe and foot, as they had no meanes to ſaue themſelues. In this defeat there were ſlaine aboue thirteene hundred Chriſtians vpon the place; the reſt with great difficulty recouered Goulette, Defeat of Chriſtians. diſarmed (hauing caſt them away) and wounded. Among the which the king had e-ſcaped, had hee not beene diſcouered by the perfumes wherewith hee was annointed according to his cuſtome; whereupon he was hotly purſued and taken.

Being deliuered to his wicked ſonne, hee cauſed his eyes to be preſently put out, King of Tunes taken. the like crueltie hee vſed to Nahaſar and Abdulas his younger brethren, who were Crueltie of the ſonne to his father and Bretheren. taken with the king, to whome hee reproached that hee did him but juſtice, for that he had in like maner made his Vncles blinde, and in the end had ſlaine them, to raigne. I Which being done, Amida renued with Francis of Touar, all the conuentions and accords which his father had made with the emperor, and did the ſame homage. The which Touar thought good to accept by prouiſion, applying himſelfe to the time, drawing (for that hee would not ſeeme too carefull of that which had hapned) a certaine number of ducats from the new tyrant; who alſo deliuered twenty knights, Rabatins of the blind kings gard, who had been impriſoned for that they had ſhewed themſelues too affectionat to his ſeruice; yeelding vp alſo the enſignes, which had beene taken from Lofredo, and his body, without a head, that they might burie it after the maner of Chriſtians: And more-ouer Amida deliuered into his hands for hoſtage a ſonne of his called Seithen. But notwithſtanding all this, Francis de Touar, deteſting the fact of Amida, as vnworthie to bee K tollerated by the emperour, hee did aduertiſe Abdamelec one of the bretheren of Muley Haſcen, (who had eſcaped with Araxid, and liued then in exile with a Lord of Numidia, called Anenſeba,) wiſhing him to come ſpeedily to Tunes, hauing wacht an opportunitie by the abſence of Amida, who was gone to Biſerte to receiue that rich cuſtome of fiſhing which was neere. Abdamelec was not ſloathfull, but comming ſecretly to Goulette, hee found meanes to enter into Tunes by night, with a good number of horſe which had accompained him, going directly to the Caſtle with his head and his face couered, and wrapt in a ſheet after the maner of the Countrie, where hee was receiued without any difficultie, they thinking it to bee Amida who was returned from Biſerte, but they ſoone found their owne error, and being amazed L thought to fall to armes, but they that were moſt forward, were preſently ſlaine, and Amida diſpoſſeſt by Abdamelec his vncle. the reſt ſo terrified, as they yeelded. Abdamelec being Maſter of the Caſtle, hee cau-ſed many of the towne which did fauour him to come, by whome hee was ſaluted and acknowledged for king of Tunes, but hee raigned but thirtie and ſixe daies, dying of a peſtilent burning feuer. Before his death hee drew Muley Haſcen out of priſon, who receiued this good from him whome hee had perſecuted, and retyred to Gou-lette, where hee had left in the hands of Francis Touar, many jewels and mooueables of great price, whereof hee gaue him no verie good accompt. The Tuneſians in Abdamelecs place, did chooſe for their king a Sonne of his called Mahumet, being but twelue yeares old, to whome they gaue foure cheefe men for Councellors and Go- M uernors of his youth, which were Abdulages, who held the dignitie and office of Manufete, Abdelchirin, Meſuar, which is another dignitie, and Xerife, borne at Bugia, a Moore learned in the law of Mahumet, and with them one Iohn Perell, of the or-Diſloyaltie of the Regents to the young king of Tunes. der of the Rabatins. Abdelchirin, for that hee was an honeſt man, was ſlaine by his companions, who afterwards made a Triumuirat betwixt them, committing all exceſſe

A ceſſe and villanie, contemning the kings youth, and promiſing vnto themſelues all impu- 1545 nitie. Among other inſolencies, Perel hauing ſeiſed vpon the Serrail, where the wiues and concubines of Amida were, he rauiſht them all; which haply was the greateſt diſpleaſure Amida receiued, for thoſe people are wonderfull jealous of their wiues: but he tooke a cruell reuenge, hauing ſoone after ſurpriſed the citie, with the helpe of his friends and partiſans, ſo ſuddenly, as the young king had ſcarce leaſure to get into a little barke and flie to Goulette: he cauſed Perel to be cruelly tortured, and hauing cut off his priuie parts, the inſtruments of his ſinne, he cauſed him to be burnt aliue in the market place. He put them alſo to death which had adhered to Abdamelec, and among others fortie Rabatines, B whoſe bodies were eaten with dogs, a puniſhment which he vſed for them which had committed any haynous offence, cauſing them to be torne in peeces aliue, and deuoured by his famiſhed dogs. Amida raigned aboue fifteene yeares after, vntill that Aluch Ali, whom they called Locciali, gouernour of Alger, depriued him, ſurpriſing the towne in the yeare 1560, which hath euer ſince beene held by the Turke, but for ſome ſhort interruption, whereof D. Iohn of Auſtria was the cauſe, as we will ſhew. As for the poore king Muley Haſcen, he cauſed himſelfe to be conducted to Naples, and from thence went to the Emperour to Ausburg, where he reported his misfortunes, and complained much of Francis de Touar, who detained his jewels. The Emperour ended this difference, by a compoſition made betwixt the parties, and he appointed that Muley Haſcen ſhould haue C a pention paid him, during his life, by the Sicilians, and ſo he was ſent back into Italie, and Touar ſoone after called home from his gouernment.

Reuenge of Amida.

THE

THE 28 BOOKE OF THE Hiſtorie of Spaine.

The Contents.

1 Birth of D.Carlo prince of Spaine. I
2 Agreement betwixt Pope Paul the third and the Emperour Charles, to make warre againſt the Proteſtants of Germanie.
3 Warre betwixt the Portugals and Turkes, at the Eaſt Indies.
4 Mariage of Ioane of Albret, heire of Nauarre, with Anthonie duke of Bourbon.
5 D.Philip prince of Spaine goes into Flanders.
6 Muley Baſan, a prince of the Moores, demaunds ſuccours in Spaine.
7 Councell transferred from Trent to Bolonia.
8 Sedition at Peru for the gouernment.
9 Octauio Farneſe excommunicated, cauſe of new warre betwixt France and Spaine.
10 League betwixt the princes of Germanie and the French king, againſt the Emperour. K
11 Mets beſieged by the Emperour.
12 Afrique a towne in the realme of Tunes, taken by the Spaniards.
13 Birth of Henrie of Bourbon, king of France and Nauarre.
14 Birth of D.Sebaſtian, future king of Portugal.
15 Mariage of D.Philip and Marie queene of England.
16 Death of queene Ioane the Emperours mother.
17 Death of Henrie of Albret king of Nauarre.
18 The Emperor Charles giues ouer the gouernment to his ſonne, and retires into Spaine.
19 Truce for fiue yeares betwixt France and Spaine, ſoone broken.
20 Mariage betwixt king Philip and Elizabeth of France, and a peace concluded. L
21 Death of the Emperour Charles the fifth.
22 Death of D.Iohn king of Portugal.
23 Perſecutions in Spaine for religion.
24 Spaniards defeated in the iſland of Gelues, or Zerbi, by the Turkes.
25 End of the Councell of Trent.
26 New biſhop in the Netherlands.
27 Contention betwixt the French and the Spaniſh, for Precedence.
28 Oran defended, and Pegnon de Veles taken by the Spaniards.
29 Malta beſieged by the Turkes, releeued by the armie of Spaine.
30 Enteruiew betwixt Charles the French king, and Elizabeth his ſiſter, queene of Spaine. M 31 The Viceroy of Sicile in diſgrace.

The

A

The Realmes of Caſtille, Leon, Arragon, and Nauarre, remaine vnited in D. Philip the ſecond.

Portugal by the death of the King D. Iohn, is gouerned by Queene Katherine his widow, and the Cardinall D. Henrie, during the Infancie of D. Sebaſtian.

B 1 THis yeare 1545 the Emperour had two ſeuerall aduertiſements, the one of great joy and content, the other of much ſorrow and heauineſſe: He had newes, That the prince D. Philip had his firſt ſon born in Vailledolit, the ninth of Iuly, who at his Chriſtening was called Charls, at the which there were great & ſolemne feaſts prepared; but within three dayes after all was turned into mourning and heauineſſe, by a ſtrange accident: for the princeſſe Marie, the young childs mother, died, for that (as they ſayed) ſhe had eaten ſomething diſorderly, contrarie to the ſtate wherein ſhe was; which happened by the negligence of the ducheſſe of Alua, and the wife of Couos, the high Chauncellor, to whom C the care of her being committed, they abſented themſelues a little, being deſirous to ſee a certaine ſight, ſo as at their returne they found her dead, or dying. The prince felt that force which is vſuall at the loſſe of ſo deere a perſon, yet bearing it with that conſtancie that was fit for his royall mind; but the loue hee bare her, being a princeſſe of ſingular vertues, made him to retire himſelfe for a time. Shee was much lamented and wanted of all men, for her great bountie and charitie. She was honoured with a royall funerall pompe: her bodie remained for a time in Saint Paules church in that towne, in the cuſtodie of the Dominican Friers, vntill that it was carried to the royall chappell of Granado. D. Philip had this ſorrow increaſed ſoone after with a new griefe, for the death of D. Iohn of Tauera, Cardinall, and Archbiſhop of Toledo, vnder whoſe D wiſe gouernement he had beene bred vp from his infancie, ſo as he loued and reſpected him much.

1545 Birth of prince Charls of Spain.

Death of Marie of Portugal, wife to D. Philip.

The Emperour Charles hauing concluded a peace with the French king, he preſently began to imbrace the affaires of Germanie, which were in combuſtion, by reaſon of religion, ſince the preaching and writing of Luther, againſt the Pope, to whom ſome princes of that nation, and many townes, did adhere: Which controuerſie many graue and religious men did beleeue, might haue beene eaſily reconciled by the Emperours onely authoritie, being aſſiſted by the Eſtates and Princes of the Empire, without crauing any other helpe. But, according to the common opinion, this prince and the Popes were poſſeſt with one humor, to rule abſolutely, the Popes aſpiring E to bee ſole Iudges in matters concerning religion, and Charles aſpiring to the like ſoueraigne power in temporall things depending of the Imperiall function, and not to gouerne himſelfe by a certaine neceſſitie, according to the aduice of the aſſemblies of the Eſtates, which they call Diets, by the which hee thought hee was kept in awe.

2 Pope Paul and he concurring in one deſigne, made a league the ſix and twentieth of Iune 1546, by the negotiation of the Councell of Trent, and they concluded to purſue the Councell of Trent, publiſhed the yeare before, and begun in December: and for that the Proteſtants did not allow of it, nor would not ſubmit themſelues vnto it, it was ſaid, the Emperour ſhould force them by armes, and if he entred into any treatie of F peace with them, hee ſhould not doe any thing to the prejudice of the Church of Rome. That the Pope ſhould conſigne an hundred thouſand crownes at Venice, beſides an hundred thouſand which he had alreadie conſigned, to be imployed in this warre. That he ſhould moreouer entertaine twelue thouſand foot, and fiue hundred light horſe, for ſix monethes, ouer the which he ſhould appoint a Legat, colonels and captaines. That the Emperour might for this warre take the one halfe of the reuenues of the Clergie, 1546 League betwixt the Pope and Emperour.

1546 Clergie, and ſell of abbie lands to the value of fiue hundred thouſand crownes: And if any prince ſhould ſeeke to hinder their reſolution, they ſhould joyne their forces together to reſiſt him. This was at ſuch time as the Councell began, whereas they made preparation for warre againſt the Proteſtants, both in Germanie, Spaine, and Italie, the Emperours deſigne extending farther; for his intent was (as it appeared ſince, and was not then vnknowne) That after that he had ruined the Proteſtants, which made the greateſt power of Germanie, he would ſubiect the Eſtates of the Empire to his will, that he might keepe the Empire in his familie, and make it hereditarie. And to giue ſome proofe of this abſolute power which he did affect, he had made a truce with the Turke, the better to attend this warre, without taking the aduice of thoſe princes and States, who had contributed great ſummes of money, to raiſe an armie againſt that common enemie of Chriſtendome. The Proteſtants had long before made a declaration, That they tooke the Pope and Sea of Rome for their aduerſe partie, and therefore they would not haue him for Iudge, accuſing him of impietie, ſacriledge, falſe doctrine, and of vſurpation ouer the magiſtrats appointed by God, and of many other crimes. They offered to giue vndoubted proofes to a free Councell, lawfully called, were it generall, or nationall in Germanie. They complained, That the Emperour had often put them in hope, but now they ſaw themſelues fruſtrat: yea, that contrarie to the decree of the laſt Diet of Spier and Wormes, where it was concluded, That to prepare the way to ſo holy an aſſembly, there ſhould be a conference of Doctors, and men of State of either part, which ſhould bring in writing the meanes to liue in peace and vnitie one with another, attending the determination of ſuch a Councell, and that in the meane time all proceedings againſt the Proteſtants ſhould ceaſe: yet they ſaw the Archbiſhop of Cologne purſued and condemned, for that he ſought to reforme his Clergie; the conference made fruſtrat by the policie and importunitie of ſome Monkes, the Pope to vſe his abſolute authoritie, and all Germanie to be full of armes; their aduerſaries picking quarels, with the priuitie of the Emperour and Pope, ſo as they were forced to defend themſelues, the which was falſly tearmed ſedition. Vpon which diſcontents there were many embaſſadours ſent vnto the Emperour, from the Proteſtant princes, whereof the chiefe were Frederic duke of Saxonie, Elector, and Philip Landgraue of Heſſe, who drew after them many princes and barons of great place, their friends, allies, or vaſſals, with the chiefe Imperiall townes, all which demaunded peace, and aſſurance that it ſhould not be broken by any decree of the Couucell of Trent, and a preſent reformation of the Imperiall Chamber, where there were ſome of their profeſt enemies.

Deſigne of the Emperour againſt Germanie

Demands of the Proteſtants.

To which demaunds the Emperour made dilatorie and ambiguous aunſwers, to win time, to the end hee might draw his forces, which came from all parts, into one bodie: ſo as they, ſeeing no other remedie, began alſo to arme, Ausbourg, Vlme, and other townes of high Germanie, being aſſiſted by the duke of Wirtemberg, came firſt to field, and fell vpon the ſubiects of Ferdinand king of Romans, taking Ereberg at the foot of the Alpes, comming out of Italie, with other places. The duke of Saxonie, the Landgraue and their confederats, raiſed a mightie armie vpon the marches of Franconia, and marcht towards the riuer of Danow, paſſing quietly through the lands of the biſhop of Virtzbourg, and of other Clergie men. The Emperour, who prepared his campe with all ſpeed about Landſhuot, vpon the riuer of Iſer, proclaimed them as troublers of the publicke peace, and guiltie of high treaſon. Being fortified hee came and lodged vpon the riuer of Danow, betwixt Ingolſtade and Ratisbone, hauing receiued tenne thouſand foot, and fiue hundred light horſe, from the Pope, led by cardinall Farneſe, Legat, and Octauio his brother, prince of Parma and Plaiſance, aſſiſted by many worthie captaines, whereof the chiefe were Alexander and Paul Vitelli, Iohn Baptiſta and Frederic Sauelli, Iulio Vrſino, Sforce Paliuicin, Alphonſo of Eſte, and Ralph Bailloni: And they had brought him out of the garriſons of Italie, ſix thouſand Spaniards of the old Regiments, vnder the commaund of Ferdinand of Toledo, duke of Alua, Marſhall generall of the armie, Iohn Baptiſta Caſtaldo, Philip of Launoy, Aluaro Sandis, Alphonſo Viues, and other auncient and approued Captaines.

Proteſtants preclaimed.

Captaines of the Popes armie.

Captaines of the Emperors forces

In

A In this Imperiall armie the cardinall of Ausbourg had the charge of the victuals. 1546
There was with the Emperour, Maximilian, ſonne to the king of Romans, Emanuel Philibert, prince of Piedmont, with many princes and noblemen, Germanes. The Proteſtants armie aduanced, being much ſtronger than the Emperours: they had two generals, the Elector Frederic, and the Landgraue, with equall authoritie, which, it may be, was the ruine of their armie. They had with them Iohn Erneſt, brother to the duke of Saxonie, and Iohn Frederic, his eldeſt ſonne, Philip duke of Brunſwic, and foure of his ſonnes, Francis duke of Lunebourg, Wolfgang prince of Anhalt, Chriſtopher of Heneberg, George of Wirtemberg, Albert of Mansfield, earles, William of Furſtemberg, Recrod and Reffeberg, colonels; with ſix companies of Suiſſes. The two armies lay neere together for ſome dayes, and the Proteſtants offered battell to the Imperials; but the Emperour would none, aſſuring himſelfe, that the enemie could not keepe thoſe great forces long together, and that in the end hee which gets the profit of the warre, hath the honour: beſides, hee expected Maximilian, earle of Bure, with foure thouſand horſe, and ten thouſand foot, of the choice bands of the Netherlands.

Two generals the ruine of an armie.

B

The Landgraue, who was a reſolute ſouldier, and therefore feared more by the Emperour than all the reſt that were in the Proteſtants campe, made offer to force the Emperour to fight, if they would giue him credit; but the Elector would not yeeld to it: ſo as

Heads of the Proteſtants armie diſagree.

C theſe two commaunders not concurring well together, loſt many occaſions. The earle of Bure came to the campe, and many of the Emperours faction in Germanie, ſpoyled the Proteſtants lands, whileſt they were in the armie; yea ſome Proteſtants, being woon by the Emperour with goodly promiſes of aduancement, and perſuading them, that the warre was grounded vpon other cauſes than religion. Among them was Maurice of Saxonie, who deſirous to get the Electorſhip, was entred into duke Frederics countrey with forces, wherewith king Ferdinand had furniſhed him, out of Bohemia and Hungarie, and had by loue, or force, ſeiſed vpon all the townes and places of Turinga, Miſnia, and other prouinces adioyning, vnder a colour of charitie; ſaying, That it was to preſerue the duke Electors countrey and lands, the which would haue beene ruined, if Maurice of Saxonie ſerues the Emperour.

D any other had beene imployed by the Emperour in that conqueſt: yet the Bohemians and Hungarians vſed as great crueltie and violence, as if they had made warre againſt the Turkes. The Proteſtants armie being verie great, and not able to draw the Emperour to battell, being in ſome want of victuals, but much more of money, the which they were forced to beg from the townes and comminalties, the confederat princes haning no ſupport from the kings of France and England, as they had expected, hauing ſent embaſſadours vnto them with full inſtructions, touching that which the Emperour practiſed by this warre, to the preiudice of Germanie, and the neighbour Eſtates. The heads being alſo jealous of their owne houſes and lands, which they ſaw inuaded whileſt they laboured for the common cauſe, they thought to draw the warre neerer to their owne commo-

E dities, whereupon they diſlodged, and marched towards Norling, the Emperour ſtill coaſting them.

The townes of Vlme, Ausbourg, and others, holding the Proteſtants partie, ſeeing the armie retire farre from them, hauing done nothing of import, they began to think of their eſtates, and the rather, for that the Imperiall armie increaſed daily, there being a freſh ſupplie of ſix hundred men at armes come from Naples, vnder the conduct of Iohn Baptiſta Spinelli: and the confederats being retired, they made ſhew as if they would beſiege Vlme, one of the richeſt townes of all Germanie. Being troubled with theſe conſiderations, and terrified when as they vnderſtood that the Landgraue had left the duke of Saxonie, and was retired home to his houſe, leauing the whole conduct of the warre to him,

Proteſtants league diſſolued

F and that the duke marcht towards his owne countrey, without any longer delay they ſent vnto the Emperour, to make their peace. Vlme was one of the firſt that obtained pardon, paying an hundred thouſand crownes, and twelue peeces of ordnance, with 1547 their furniture, and receiuing a garriſon of ten companies of foot. Ausbourg did the like, and paid an hundred and fiftie thouſand crownes, and twelue peeces of ordnance, and receiued the like garriſon.

Di-

1546 Diuers other townes yeelded alſo, and in the end the duke of Wittenberg would make triall of the Emperours clemencie: ſo as being aſſured of high Germanie, he began to follow the Proteſtants armie, and came to Nuremberg. The Prince Elector tooke ſome ſmall townes in his way, bending towards Francfort, to draw money as well from his friends as from the Clergie; and then he turned towards his countrey, his armie decreaſing much, for that many, ſeeing the Emperour to proſper, abandoned him. He being come into Turinga and Miſnia, Maurice diſlodged, hauing put good garriſons into Leipſie and Dreſda, which places he onely preſerued, for all the reſt the Electors recouered, and then he retyred to Ferdinand, and they both together came and ioyned with the Emperours campe at Egre, vpon the confines of Bohemia. The earle of Bure was come towards Francfort, with commaundement to enter into the Landgraues countrey, for whom many princes, and among them Maurice, his ſonne in law, did ſue vnto the Emperour for his pardon; but to ſmall effect, for he had a great deſire to haue him, thinking him alone ſufficient to raiſe the Proteſtant affaires, if they were ruined. Bure tooke Darmaſt by compoſition, and then Francfort, where they were in great feare to looſe their Faires, which many of their neighbours did affect. Strasbourg, a great and rich citie, did alſo compound. The Emperour comming with great ſpeed to the riuer of Elbe, hauing found a foord, where the Spaniards did him great ſeruice (for the paſſage was defended by the Proteſtants armie) he paſt his troupes, and purſued the Elector, who ſought to recouer Wittenberg, the chiefe towne of his Electorat, being ſtrong and well fortified: but he ſtayed him neere vnto the foreſt of Lochane, the Elector hauing ſcarce halfe his forces, for he had not leaſure to gather them together, being diſperſed. Being thus forced to fight with diſaduantage, he was vanquiſhed and taken, being wounded in the face. Erneſt of Brunſwic, ſonne to Philip, was taken with the Elector: his eldeſt ſonne recouered Wittenberg, being hurt, whither many others eſcaped from this conflict. The Emperour hauing thus his prince his priſoner, vſed him roughly in ſpeech, and king Ferdinand more. He was giuen in gard to the duke of Alua, who committed him to Alphonſo Viues to keepe ſafely. Within few dayes the Emperour gaue ſentence of death againſt him; the which notwithſtanding was reuoked, at the ſuit of the marqueſſe of Brandebourg: but to redeem his life, he was forced to vndergo hard conditions. Among others, he did quit the dignitie of Elector, which was giuen to Maurice, with all his lands, by the Emperor, who did confiſcat them, as being guiltie of high treaſon, he and his children promiſing to obey the Imperiall chamber, ſuch as the Emperour ſhould erect; and for his entertainment, Maurice was charged to pay him a yearely pention of fiftie thouſand crownes: The towne of Wittenberg, and the caſtle of Goth, were deliuered to Maurice, leauing it to his diſcretion, to ſuffer Frederics children to dwell in Goth: and as for himſelfe, hee ſhould remaine the Emperours priſoner. There were many other ſharpe conditions impoſed vpon him, all which he ſigned, and refuſed but one article, which was, a promiſe to obey the decrees of the Councell of Trent, the which hee conſtantly reiected, ſaying, That he had rather die than yeeld to it: wherefore the Emperour cauſed it to be raſed out. Duke Maurice being now Elector, and hauing ioyned to his owne patrimonie the inheritance of prince Frederic of Saxonie, he began to be a ſuitor for the Landgraue of Heſſe, his father in law, imploying all his friends, as the marqueſſe of Brandebourg did in like maner, who in the end obtained a promiſe from the Emperour, to pardon his life, to remit all other puniſhments due to rebels, to leaue him his country, with one fort, furniſhed with artillerie: ſo as he did renounce all leagues, to the preiudice of him or his brother Ferdinand, obey the Imperial Chamber which the Emperor ſhould eſtabliſh, giue him all the reſt of his ordnance, pay him within foure moneths 150000 crownes, for the charges of the warre, to deliuer the priſoners which he held, and come and craue pardon of the Emperour.

Landgraue feared by the Emperour.

Defeat of the Elector of Saxony, and his taking.

Conditions impoſed vpon the Elector of Saxonie.

Conſtancie of the Elector Frederic.

Conditions propounded by the Emperor to the Landgraue.

The Landgraue hauing accepted theſe conditions, by the aduice of his counſellors, conſidering the preſent danger, he came to Hale in Saxonie, to the Emperor, on the eight and twentieth of Iune, where, before he preſented himſelfe vnto him, they brought him the former articles to ſigne: but for that they had added many things which were not contained in thoſe which the marqueſſe of Brandebourg and duke Maurice had ſent him,

he

A he would not doe any thing; for the which there was great queſtion betwixt him and the biſhop of Arras, who would needs haue him ſigne it. Among other things, they had added, That the Emperour did reſerue vnto himſelfe the interpretation of euerie article, and that the Landgraue did ſubmit himſelfe to the decrees of the Councell of Trent, for the which he ſhould giue caution. 1547

The Landgraue being preſt and threatened, remembring that Brandebourg and the new Elector, had promiſed to maintaine the confeſſion of Ausbourg, he ſigned, That he would obey the decrees of a holy, free, and generall Councell, where both head and members ſhould be reformed, as Maurice and Brandebourg would doe. This done, they B led him into a hall, whereas the Emperour was ſet vpon a throne, where kneeling downe before him, and confeſſing, That he had offended his Maieſtie, and deſerued puniſhment, he craued pardon, and implored his clemencie. The Emperour made anſwer by George Selde, That although he had deſerued grieuous puniſhment, yet vſing his clemencie, and yeelding to the intreaties of many princes and noblemen, whom he deſired to gratifie, he remitted the puniſhment which he had deſerued, either by loſſe of life and goods, or by perpetuall impriſonment. Which done, the Landgraue was carried backe to the duke of Aluaes lodging, where he ſupt; where, hauing plaied late at dice, he was amazed, when as offering to goe away, he was ſtaied, and had a gard giuen him: whereat the marqueſſe of Brandebourg and Maurice were much diſcontented, but there was no remedie, the C duke of Alba and the biſhop of Arras ſaying, That it was the Emperours pleaſure. This proceeding, which the Empetour ſought to juſtifie by gloſſes, depriued him of the fruit which he pretended of his enterpriſes: ſo eaſily are mans deſignes and imaginations ouerthrowne. Submiſſion of the Landgraue.

3 We muſt now returne to the Portugals at the Eaſt Indies, where the Turks ſought to expell them. They hauing honourably defended their fort at Diu, and concluded a peace with the Indians of Cambaia, in the yeare 1537, whereas the young king Mamudo had ſucceeded after the death of his vncle Badurio, into whoſe fauour Zaffer the Renegado did ſtill ſeeke to inſinuate himſelfe, and to whoſe wicked practiſes this laſt warre is chiefely attributed; deuiſing ſtill how hee might expell the Portugals, for D the effecting whereof he made ſuch ſecret preparations as hee thought neceſſarie, drawing men together from other barbarous nations, making of armes, ordnance, and harquebuſes: hauing with exceeding charge drawne fiue maſter workemen from Conſtantinople, and yet they circumuented the Chriſtians, making them beleeue, that it was to make warre againſt the king of Patano, an auncient enemie, which confined vpon them; and yet they ſought with great ſecrecie to incenſe the lords of the neighbour prouinces, againſt the Portugals: Notwithſtanding they intreated them verie louingly, and obſequiouſly, knowing that it was pleaſing vnto the king. With which policie they had made them ſo ſecure and careleſſe, as they were wholly giuen to the gaine of marchandiſe, and to propagate the faith of Chriſt in thoſe parts. The Portu- E gals then were growne ſo ſecure, and had ſo neglected all care of warre, as whereas Garcia of Noragna had left nine hundred foot in garriſon at Diu, there were not then aboue two hundred and fiftie, vnder the gouernement of Iohn Maſcaregna, who had ſucceeded Iames de Soſa; and, which was worſe, they had no munition to make fortie dayes defence, and for that the ſouldiers had wanted their pay, many of them had ſold their armes; all which was well knowne to Zaffer, and to king Mamudio, which made their deſignes more eaſie, and their hopes greater to bee freed from the Portugals. To make their enterpriſe more eaſie, Zaffer began to giue it out, That the king had giuen him that citie, and that hee would ſoone come and take poſſeſſion thereof: And although it ſeemed ſtrange, it being one of the chiefe townes of Cambaia, and F brought great profit vnto the king by trade of marchandiſe, yet it was the more credible, for that the towne was reduced in a manner vnder the Portugals dominion, and many times annoyed by the Turkes, ſo as it was not ſo beneficiall to the lord as it had beene, who long before had giuen another ſtrong place, called Sorrato, vnto Zaffer, beſides many other places which he had either purchaſed, or gotten by fauour. He writ vnto Maſ- Portugals at the Indies.

1547 caregna, as a friend, rejoycing, that by the kings bountie he had meanes to be his neigh- G
Iohn Maſcaregna gouernour at Diu. bour continually, and to enjoy more freely the fruits of their friendſhip: but knowing how diſtaſtful new lords were vnto their ſubjects, he ſhould be forced to come with ſome numbers of ſouldiers, to keepe them in awe that ſhould not like of his gouernement in the beginning: whereof he thought it good to aduertiſe him, to the end that Maſcaregna ſhould not ſuſpect, that they would not entertaine peace with king Iohn and the Portugals. But Maſcaregna began, in the end, to fall into conſideration of theſe things, thinking, that theſe great preparations could not be againſt the king of Patana (as they had giuen it out) who notwithſtanding did not moue; which made him feare that it was againſt the fort of Diu: Whereupon he did write to D. Iohn de Caſtro, Viceroy of the In- H dies, remaining then at Goa: Hee did alſo write vnto Anthonio Soſa, gouernour of Chaul, and to William Meneſes, gouernour of Bazain, to let them vnderſtand in what a ſtrait the fort of Diu was, and what need he had of helpe; and therefore they two ſhould ſeeke to ſtop the victuals which ſhould come by ſea from that coaſt vnto the enemies, who ſtayed not long to enter the towne of Diu, with Zaffer, being then about fiue Diu beſieged by the king of Cambaia. thouſand, but with ſuch a number of pioners and labourers, for their workes, as ſome affirme, they were almoſt thirtie thouſand. Moſt of the ſouldiers were Turkes and Abiſſins.

Among other aduantages which the king of Cambaia, and Zaffer, his generall in this enterpriſe, had gotten, this was moſt important, to haue begun the warre in the beginning I of Winter, the which begins, in thoſe countries, when as the Spring begins with vs, about the beginning of March. But Maſcaregna knowing with what policie the enemie had wouen this web, and ſeeking, with the like diſſembling, to win time, and to prouide for himſelfe, he diſſembled the jealouſie he had of Zaffers deſigne: he ſeemed content with his comming to Diu, and to diſcouer his mind fully, hee ſent Simon Feo, a man of great judgement, to viſit him, and to congratulate his comming, who, with like counterfeiting, was joyfully and honourably receiued by the Renegado, yet ſeeking to effect his deſignes, he began to diſcouer plainely to what end he was come thither. He propounded vnto Feo, That hee would build a wall which ſhould diuide the commerce of the fort from the towne (the which had beene granted at the peace making, K ſo as it were no hinderance to the fort) whereof Zaffer made not any mention; but hee complained, that the traffique at ſea was reduced to that point, as the king of Cambaia, to his great diſhonour, could not diſpoſe of it, being expelled out of the poſſeſſion by their violence, whom ſome few yeares before hee had of courteſie receiued into his realme, to make them partakers, as other ſtrangers, of the trade of marchandiſe in thoſe countries.

All this being related to Maſcaregna by Feo, he found, that the Barbarian deſired as much to haue an occaſion to fall to open warre, as he ſought to auoid it for the reaſons aboue mentioned, and therefore he ſent again to Zaffer, to let him vnderſtand, That whereas by order from the king he would renew ſome treatie touching the Nauigation, it muſt bee L done with the Viceroy Caſtro, who being not farre off, would ſoone reſolue, and according to equitie: Touching the building of the wall, hee was not to hinder it, perſuading himſelfe it ſhould be according to the concluſion of the peace; whereof he ſent a copie by Feo. The Renegado tooke occaſion vpon this writing to breake out into armes, who growing into a rage, tare it, and put the embaſſadour into priſon: Then giuing the Portugals no more reſpite, hee began to make his approaches, and to aſſault the fort. Maſcaregna foreſeeing all this, had made ſuch prouiſions as time would giue him leaue, and hauing an eſpeciall care of their want of victuals, he had ſent away the weakeſt women, with the children, and other vnprofitable perſons, in two marchants ſhips, to Bazain and Chaul: and for that the fort was large, hauing ſeuen bulwarkes, and hee M ſo weakely manned, hee diuided his ſouldiers and commaunders, appointing twentie to euerie bulwarke, and the reſt where neceſſitie ſhould require. He had alſo drawne into the fort many Chriſtian marchants which did traffique in the towne, and did prouide for all things neceſſarie for a ſiege.

The

A The ſeat of this rocke was in an iſland where the towne ſtood, made by a riuer which fals into the ſea: (Some haue written, it is Indus, making no difference betwixt Diul and Diu:) That part of the iſland which lies betwixt the ſea and the riuer, makes an angle, and riſeth with certaine ſteepe rockes; there the fort is built: ſo as on two parts towards the ſea and the riuer, it is ſafe. Towards the citie, beſides the ſtrong walls and bulwarks, there was a large deepe ditch, which did ſtretch from the ſea vnto the riuer. Within the riuer, right againſt the fort, there was a ſtrong tower, not eaſie to bee battered, for that towards the chanell (which was betwixt it and the fort, whereas the marchants ſhips lay) there could no enemies ſhip come in, being ſubiect to the canon on either ſide: B but in the other chanell they had entrance, but in ſmall barkes, the water was ſo low; and yet the ſouldiers could not wade through. The Portugals reſerued two ſhips in the great chanell, the which vnder the commaund of Iames Latta, hauing alſo armed two ſmaller veſſels like gallies, Maſcaregna commaunded they ſhould ſcoure that coaſt, to ſtop the victuals and other commodities which came to the enemies: Wherein Latta ſhewed ſuch diligence, as in a ſhort time hee had taken foureteene barkes, laden with victuals and diuers other things for the vſe of the armie. But Zaffer, who had long before deuiſed how this enterpriſe ſhould bee gouerned, and therefore had brought ſuch a multitude of labourers, in one night he cauſed a fort to bee made vpon a little hill betwixt the towne and the caſtle; and hauing made Fort raiſed by the Barbarians againſt Diu. C the outward part of ſtone, many foot thicke, within hee filled it with earth, leauing ſome loope holes for ordnance. The like hee made in the towne, the which was ſo high, as it did equall the higheſt part of the fort, hauing ſafe parapets: Hee armed the wall on the out ſide with ſackes of cotton, to defend it from the enemies ordnance. This fort being ſeene in the morning, did not amaze the defendants, being prepared to reſiſt the Barbarians aſſaults euen vnto the laſt gaſpe, for the honour of Chriſts name, and the ſeruice of their king, labouring with all induſtrie and valour, to fruſtrate the deſignes of a treacherous enemie: and then the ordnance of either ſide began that cruell warre, which did much honour the Portugals name in all the Eaſt.

D To the firſt fort Zaffer added a ſecond and a third, with the like ſpeed, both towards the ſea ſhore: and for that the ground was ſtonie and hard, ſo as they could not well make their trenches, but with loſſe of time, they aduanced a wall of ſtone, trauerſed in ſuch wiſe one before another, as whileſt they aduanced, they were ſafe from the ordnance of the caſtle; and with this art they might eaſily come within a ſtones caſt. There hee began to rayſe a ſtrong rampar of ſtone, thirteene foot thicke, and behind fortified it with earth, the which they brought from the ſea vnto the riuer, and ſo they enuironed the fort on that ſide towards the citie, where it might be aſſaulted: And for that there was a great diſtance betwixt the firſt great forts, they made ſome leſſer along the wall, in the which they placed ſmall Corps de gard, to de- E fend the workes againſt the enemies ſallies; this renegado planting ordnance and ſmall ſhot, with great judgement, to batter the fort continually.

Hee had a deſigne alſo to take the tower vpon the riuer, and thereby not onely make the way more eaſie to take the fort, but alſo hinder ſuch ſuccours as ſhould come by ſea vnto the Portugals, for being maſter of that port, the armie which came from Goa, ſhould with great difficultie land any men. To attempt this tower, they had prepared a great marchants ſhip which they had kept in the hauen, making a fort of wood vpon it; and fortifying it with cotton againſt the defendants ſhot, and it was made ſo high, as being brought vnder the tower at a full ſea, it did reach to the top of it: With theſe and with certaine floates of plankes which they thought to F make faſt at a low water, they reſolued to aſſault the tower; whereof Maſcaregna was aduertiſed, who feared the ſucceſſe would be daungerous: Wherefore he commaunded Latta, That he ſhould come in the night with his two ſhips, and fire that engine within the port: for being depriued of that ſhip, they ſhould hardly at that ſeaſon prouide another, the riuers being carefully kept by the Portugals. On the fiue

1547 and twentieth of Aprill Latta went with all the ſilence that might be, to burne this ſhip, G yet he was diſcouered by the noyſe of them that rowed, giuing an alarme vnto the ene-mie: notwithſtanding, hauing but twentie ſouldiers with him, hee went on to execute his deſigne, whereas they found another let, for that it was not poſſible for them to fa-ſten the wild fire which they had brought, vnto the ſhip: yet hee left not to effect his de-ſigne after another manner; for ſome of them leaping, with great reſolution, into the ſhip, and cutting the cables ſpeedily, they towed her, in deſpight of the enemie, into the chanell vnder the fort, where they burnt it at their eaſe, making great joy for this hap-pie ſucceſſe on Eaſter day.

On the eighteenth of May Fernando of Caſtro, the Viceroyes ſonne, arriued with eight H barks, like gallies, who by reaſon of the contrarie ſeaſon, could not haue come ſooner, without verie great danger, he brought them ſome ſmall ſuccours of men and munition, promiſing him, in his fathers name, that they ſhould haue greater ſuccours, as time would permit. His arriuall renewed their joy, and taking a view what ſouldiers they had, they found 450 valiant men, which were better than two thouſand hirelings, and gaue hope of a victorie, although their enemies were hardie and reſolute, and furniſhed with all things to annoy them. They did trouble them of the fort with their continuall ſhooting, and ſlue many, yet they had made no royall batterie, with any intent to giue an aſſault, neither were their defences taken away, as the art of warre required: the which was reſerued, for that king Mamudio would haue the honour to be preſent at ſo I important an action: Wherefore, on the fiue and twentieth of Iune, he being come into the towne, at the breake of day, there were ſuddenly three great peeces of ordnance planted vpon the Barbarians trenches, which they called Baſilisks, with other ſmall pee-Batterie againſt the fort of Diu. ces of batterie, againſt two bulwarkes, one called Saint Iames, and the other Saint Thomas, and the curtaine betwixt them. Maſcaregna had prouided for all this, who had not onely cauſed a platforme to be made for the defence thereof, but alſo, fearing they would vndermine that of Saint Thomas, he cauſed a countermine to be made, but with exceeding great toyle, by reaſon of the hardneſſe of the ſtone whereon it ſtood: vpon which bulwarke he did alſo plant two great peeces, with the which hee did wonderfully annoy the enemie, breaking two of their Baſiliskes, and diſmounting the third. They continu- K ed their batterie fiue dayes againſt thoſe two bulwarkes, and did ſomewhat ruine that of Saint Thomas, and they did ſo ſpoyle the parapets of Saint Iames, as the gunners could not ſtand to charge their peeces: yet for all this they ſaw no meanes to take the fort, and they were rather fit to conſume the beſieged at leaſure, than to make way for an aſſault. Afterwards they planted another batterie againſt Saint Iohns bulwarke, which was weaker, reſoluing to ſeeke to force it and the other two, which they found to bee in bad eſtate: wherefore they began to batter them anew with many great peeces. In the meane time there fell out an accident, which did ſo terrifie king Mamudio, as, doubting of his life, hee returned to Madaba, and was neuer more ſeene in the campe; for that a peece being diſcharged from the fort, ſlue a kinſman of his, which L was verie neere him: Yet Zaffer continuing his deſigne, hee ruined Saint Thomas, Saint Iohn, and the curtaine, verie much, whoſe breaches falling into the ditch, they began to make the way euen for the Barbarians to goe to the aſſault.

They had alſo rayſed in the neereſt trench a caualier, or mount, from whence they might looke into the fort, ſo as the Portugals could not ſafely goe to their places of gard, without great daunger: and therefore Maſcaregna was forced to rayſe vp a platforme againſt it, whereon hee planted fortie harquebuſiers, vnder Anthonio Pezanna, to driue the enemie from thence, which could not bee done without great toyle, and the loſſe of many: ſo as the number of the beſieged decreaſed dayly, but they increaſed in courage and reſolution. The harquebuſiers vp- M on the platforme, not performing that which was needfull, they raiſed another caualier neere vnto the church, on the which hauing planted a Baſiliske, they made ſuch ſpoyle of the enemies, as no man durſt ſtay there. It ſeemed the ruines of the bulwarkes were ſuch, as if they might fill vp the ditch to come to the aſſault, there would bee no great

A great difficultie to force the fort, and therefore with a long and infinit toyle he began to dig certaine trenches to fill vp the ditch: and for that they would not be troubled in the carriage of it, they were couered ouer head with quarters of timber and chaulke layed thicke vpon it, to defend it from fire and ſhot. Carrying ſtuffe by this chanell, and caſting it into the ditch, they made their worke in ſuch ſort, as they were not annoyed, nor yet ſeene by the defendants: for the which they found a remedie, in opening a little doore, whereby they were accuſtomed to goe into the ditch: but it was ſtopped vp with the ruines, and it did behooue them to cleanſe it, and make vſe thereof, the which they did verie ſecretly in the night, to feed the enemie the lon- 1547
B ger with that hope. But they in the end finding that their worke did not aduance, and diſcouering the reaſon, they drew Zaffer himſelfe thither to view the place, and to prouide ſome remedie; a happie accident for the beſieged: for whileſt that hee went carefully vp and downe conſidering of all things, putting his head aboue the trench, and leaning vpon his hand, a great ſhot came and tooke away his hand, and the top of his head, ſo as he fell downe dead. Hee being ſlaine, the armie was in ſome confuſion to name a ſucceſſour, ſo as attending order from the king, he declared that Rumecan the ſonne of Zaffer deceaſed, ſhould hold his place, who in his fathers life time had beene generall of the ordnance. This man ſhewed himſelfe much more carefull and vnderſtanding, than either friends or enemies did at the firſt beleeue, ſo as
C following euerie action without reſt, and trying all poſſible meanes, they rayſed vp the caualier againe with new matter, being halfe ruined, where hauing planted two Baſiliskes, they made ſo great a ruine, as they ſtopt vp the doore by the which the Chriſtians came forth, to emptie the ditch, ſo as they could no more oppoſe themſelues, being tyred by a multitude of their enemies, which came daily in great numbers to the campe, and the beſieged decreaſing wonderfully; and therefore they had ſent another Fregate to the Viceroy, to ſolicite him to ſend them greater ſuccours.

Zaffer generall of the armie againſt Diu, ſlain.

The enemies hauing filled vp the ditch, and torne the bulwarkes of Saint Iohn and Saint Thomas verie ſore, they ſought to climbe vp, hauing ſet vp long beames and
D peeces of wood croſſe, like ladders, with ſuch obſtinacie, as the vndaunted valour of the defendants was not ſufficient to repulſe them, vſing many meanes to annoy them, whereof one wrought great effect. They tyed certaine piles together with chaynes of yron, and betwixt euerie pile they put pitch, rozen, and other matter to burne, the which being fired, and caſt vpon the enemie, it did burne and ſpoyle them, and at the leaſt did ſtay their furie, yet neither fire, yron, nor ſtones, could terrifie them: Seeing therefore that place in great daunger, and the little fort made neere to Saint Iohns bulwarke being weake, from the which both it and the curtaine were defended by Antonio Pazanna, with fortie ſouldiers, hee was commaunded, if need required, to goe and ſuccour D. Fernando de Caſtro with ſome of his men,
E who on the nineteenth of Iulie had with great valour repulſt the enemies, which were come in great numbers vpon the breach. But the enemie hauing now made the ditch euen, he reſolued the next day to giue a generall aſſault, going the night before to their temples, and praying with great affection, after the manner of the Gentiles, to their imaginarie gods: Which Fernando Caruaial, captaine of the tower vpon the water, ſeeing, hee aduertiſed Maſcaregna, that hee might prepare for his defence with ſuch forces as he had remaining. Two houres before day the Barbarians preſented themſelues to the aſſault: their greateſt force was againſt Saint Thomas bulwarke, where Lewis de Soſa with certaine choice ſouldiers behaued themſelues worthily, though with ſome loſſe. And at this time the Portugals leauing the places of leaſt dan-
F ger, to ſuccour where need required, had left the corner of the fort next vnto the ſea without defendants, where (by reaſon of the height of the rocks) they did not thinke the enemie would make any attempt: but they (whether diſcouering it then, or ſuſpecting it before, as it is likely) being not yet day, and the tide being gone had left the water very low, ſent ſome of their moſt actiue and reſolute ſouldiers with ladders, who (being threeſcore in number) mounted without diſcouerie. In the end they were diſcouered to be not only Aſſault giuen at Diu.

Aſſault generall at Diu.

1547 vpon the walls, but within the houſes, where falling to ſpoyle, they found ſome little reſiſtance made by the women who were there remaining, who both there and at the wals, did vſe armes, and aſſiſt their husbands and brethren in ſo great danger. Whereof Maſcaregna being aduertiſed, he with a diſcreet ſecrecie (for that he would not amaze them that defended the breach) taking ſome ſouldiers with him from places leaſt in danger, went and charged the enemie, whereof ſome he ſlue, the reſt caſt themſelues from thoſe rocks into the ſea, but few eſcaped. They fought obſtinatly at S. Thomas bulwarke, where there were about 1000 of the aſſailants ſlaine, and they were ſo wearied, as they were forced to retire: but ſoone after, hauing brought freſh ſouldiers, they gaue a more furious aſſault than before, and were as valiantly repulſt by the Chriſtians: and it is reported for a wonder, that in this cruell incounter there were onely ſeuen Portugals ſlaine, but many were hurt. Two dayes after they gaue another aſſault, whereas they loſt aboue three hundred ſouldiers, in which Fernando de Caſtro, and Lewis de Soſa, did win much honor. The like did Francis of Almeida, who hauing the gard of S. Thomas, about noone time, when as other men vſe to take their reſt, the enemies ran furiouſly to the aſſault, the which he with twentie fiue ſouldiers maintained valiantly, vntill that ſome others came to ſecond them; where the fight was cruel for ſome houres, with great loſſe to the Barbarians, where they loſt 800 men. But the defendants began to be out of hope of victorie, their numbers being diminiſhed by death, and weakened, for that many were hurt, and the aſſaylants on the other ſide were much fortified, there being come vnto the campe, a ſupplie of foureteene thouſand ſouldiers, vnder a certaine lord of Cambaia, called Moiatecan: beſides, within the fort they had great want of victuals, and many hurt and ſicke for want of good feeding. Afterwards the Barbarians began to make mines, with great ſecrecie, making ſhew of other approaches; but on Saint Laurence day, hauing brought one to perfection, vnder S. Johns bulwarke, they made offer of an aſſault, to draw many thither to defend it; but when they thought it time, they retired without the compaſſe of the mine, and then gaue fire to it, which blue all that building into the ayre: in which accident there dyed aboue ſixtie valiant ſouldiers, and men of account, among which were D. Fernando de Caſtro, the Viceroyes ſonne, a young man of great worth, Iohn of Almeida, Lewis Mello, Diego Sotomaior, Aluaro Ferriera, Roderigo Soſa, Lorenzo Faria, Iohn Brandano, George of Almeida, Triſtan Soſa, Francis Lupio, and Garcia Ferracia. It is written, That Maſcaregna doubting of ſome fraud, when he ſaw the Barbarians retire, aduertiſed Fernando de Caſtro, That he ſhould leaue that place; but he was not obeyed. The Infidels would not looſe the opportunitie of this ruine, but ſuddenly aduanced to enter into the place, where they found foure ſouldiers onely to make reſiſtance, for that of twentie which were remaining aliue, the reſt were ſo amazed at this accident, as they could not doe any ſeruice. In the meane time thoſe foure, more by the aſſiſtance of God than any humane force, ſtaied the enemies furie, vntill the comming of Maſcaregna with ſome choyce ſouldiers, who repulſt the enemie, being fauoured by the approaching night: And in the meane time others labouring behind, they had raiſed vp a wall of ſtone, without morter, ſixteene ſpans thicke, the which they did afterwards rampar with earth: and thus they repaired the ruines of that baſtion. They continued their mines in other places, eſpecially vnder Saint Thomas, where the Portugals countermines auailing them nothing, they ruined a great part of it. The like they did to others, and were aduanced into the place, and had gotten footing into Saint Iames church, from whence the Portugals could not expell them, ſo as they drew a wall through the middeſt, and it remained a lodging for them both ſome dayes.

A ſecond aſſault.

A third aſſault.

Bulwarke of S. Iohn blowne vp with a mine.

The Viceroy being aduertiſed of the progreſſe of this ſiege, foreſeeing their need, ſent another ſonne of his, called D. Aluaro, with foureteene veſſels; who parting from Goa on Saint Iames day, which was in thoſe countries the verie height of the Spring, he arriued (notwithſtanding the foule weather) at Bazain: and for that he knew it would be impoſſible (by reaſon of ſtormes) to come all together to Diu, he gaue order, they ſhould all get thither as they could; ſo as all of them arriued ſoone or late, as they could worke it out at ſea. D. Aluaro de Caſtro, and Francis de Meneſes, arriued the eighth of Auguſt with the greateſt part, hauing not brought aboue 400 ſouldiers, who had much courage, but not

Succours ſent from Goa to Diu.

A not ſo much militarie judgement, as the ſtate of their affaires required. They pretended that ſtanding alwaies vpon their defence, they had loſt much, and therefore they ſhould ſally forth couragiouſly vpon the enemy, and hinder his proceedings. 1547

The good reaſons of Maſcaregna, did ſomewhat reſtraine their forwardneſſe: when as hearing that the enemy ſought to draw two great peeces of ordnãce out of one of the ruined Baſtions, they held it an inſupportable affront, forcing Maſcaregna to giue thẽ leaue to ſallie forth, who to auoide a greater miſchiefe by a ſedition, yeelded to this neceſſarie remedie, to whome he ſpake after this manner. That it was fit ſouldiers ſhould bee gouerned by their Captaine, and not gouerne him; that they ſhould attend their enſigne B and not take it by violence, as it did behoue a commander and his Councellors, to know how to mannage warre. But you hauing now in a manner laid violent hands vpon me, and preſented your ſelues before me with ſeditious words and lookes, the Maieſtie of command is ouer-ruled by an vnreaſonable deſire, by an indiſcreet hope: Goe on and God make it ſucceſſefull vnto you; let them know your valour and the force of your armes: I will be content to follow you, who by right ſhold lead you; & although it be in an vnſeaſonable time, yet will I be partaker of your toile and daunger. Remember that in going into the enemies trenches, & in fighting, you continue as valiant and reſolute as you haue ſhewed your ſelues before the fight.

Importunitie of ſome Portugals

After which ſpeech, when occaſion & time ſerued, he diuided his little army into three C ſmall ſquadrons leauing ſome few to gard the fort. The firſt he gaue to Aluaro de Caſtro, the ſecond to Francis de Meneſes, and himſelfe remained with the third to ſuccour where need ſhould require: which action was performed with as little diſcretion as it was begunne: For they were no ſooner in the enemies trenches but they began to doubt of the euent, and although they did terrifie thoſe that were then in gard, killing ſome, and putting the reſt to flight; yet when as they ſaw the great ſquadron, began to march from the bodie of the armie, they were ſo ſurpriſed with feare, as they had no care but how to ſaue themſelues by flight, neither could they which had retained more valor, make the retreat without diſorder. The loſſe was great, for among a hundred that were ſlaine, there were diuers of great worth, as Francis de Meneſes, who led the ſecond ſquadron, Francis of Almei- D da, Lupo de Soſa, and Edward de Meneſes, ſonne to the earle of Feria, who would not be partaker of his companions defect, but making a ſtand to withſtand the furie of the Barbarians, contemning their horrible cries, and fighting valiantly, exhorting the reſt both by his words & example, to vanquiſh with the ſword and not by flight, he dyed honourably. D. Aluaro de Caſtro mounting vp a wall, had a great blow on the hinder part of his head with a ſtone caſt out of a ſling, the which battering his head peece did hurt him verie ſore, cauſing him to fall backeward, where hee had beene ſlaine, if Maſcaregna had not come preſently to ſuccour him, & carried him into the fort, as he did all the reſt that were wounded. This vnfortunate action, which hapned the firſt of September, did much weaken that ſmall garriſon: yet Maſcaregna fainted not, but prouided ſuch remedies for E his defence, as time and meanes would giue his leaue: The enemie did ſo ruine the Bulwarkes and courtines with his mines, as planting diuers peeces of artillerie in thoſe mines againſt the Portugals, they did wonderfully annoy them within the fort, wherefore the beſeeged were forced to labour day and night, and to make new defences, either fighting or working continually, hauing little leaſure to eat, or reſt, their number being ſo ſmall.

The Viceroy D. Iohn de Caſtro had beene aduertiſed of the death of his ſonne, who ſuppreſſing his particuler greefe, vſed great diligence to prouide a remedie for the generall good; He therefore firſt of all diſpatcht Aluaro de Acugna with order to gather together thoſe few Portugall ſhips, that were in thoſe ſeas, and hauing put ſouldiers into them F to ſaile preſently to Diu, the which hee effected, comming thether the laſt of September, with fiue ſhips and ſo many men as the garriſon was encreaſed to twelue hundred, ſo as they might with more eaſe make head againſt the enemy. Soone after hee ſent fiue other ſhips from Goa with foure hundred ſouldiers, and with them many Artificats, and ſome Architects for the vſe of building, ſo as they grew daily more confident, neither did they feare, (hauing heard that a certaine kinſman of Zaffers who had Succour brought to Diu.

beene

1547 beene ſent to Caire to leuie men, came ſailing towards Diu) to incounter him with G
Victorie of the Portugals at ſea their armie, whome hauing fought with all, defeated and taken him with many others priſoners, the reſt being ſunke or diſperſed at Sea, they returned ioyfull to their Companions. They would not ſaue one of their priſoners aliue, but beeing ſlaine, they caſt their heads into the current of the riuer, to carrie newes vnto the enemie, except that of Xaffers kinſman, which was ſet vpon the top of a launce. But the Viceroy with all his diligence, could not draw ſuch an armie together, as hee might hope to raiſe the ſiege, before the middeſt of October: ſo as hauing about ſeuenty ſhips great and ſmall, hee beganne his voyage, and hauing ſurmounted all difficulties, being forced by foule weather to ſtay ſome daies at Bazain, hee came to the H
D. Iohn Caſtro the viceroy comes to relieue Diu. coaſt of Diu, the ſeuenth day of Nouember: where hee preſently ſent for Maſcaregna, being deſirous to vnderſtand particularly in what eſtate they were, where they tooke councell how to put ſouldiers into the fort, and to charge the enemies camp, which being done, Maſcaregna returned, and prepared to receiue the ſuccours on the ſide towards the Sea, where the enemie leaſt ſuſpected it; and hauing planted ordnance in all places, where they might annoy them, they did it in ſuch ſort as it did much aduance their affaires, neither did the enemies ſhew themſelues feareſull; but they anſwered them with the like art and courage, and foreſeeing that they meant to charge the campe at one inſtant, both from their armie at Sea, and their fort at land, they did fortifie that part towards the riuer, with a gard of fifteene thouſand Souldiers. I

The Viceroy had fore-ſeene all this, and therefore hee vſed a politike ſtratagem, on the ninth day at night, hauing drawne two thouſand ſouldiers out of the ſhips into the fort, hee cauſed the whole fleet to ſtand as it were in armes, ſome holding burning torches, ſome held two launces, and ſome an ower in oare hand, and a match light in the other, all men of no ſeruice, cauſing the ſhips to moue but ſoftly, as if they would giue an aſſault to that part of the riuer, where the enemies feared moſt, and to gouerne all theſe things hee had left ſome captaines, himſelfe being gone to land.

All things being readie, the ſouldiers hauing reconciled themſelues vnto God, in K the morning they went out of the fort, the Viceroy hauing cauſed all the gates to bee ſet wide open, and leauing a gard within the fort, commaunded by Anthonio Corigia, they did not feare with fiue and twentie hundred ſouldiers, to goe and charge an armie of forty thouſand in their owne trenches. The enemie was verie watchfull of the landing of the Armie, where they moſt feared the daunger, for that they were perſuaded there could not come any great numbers from the beſeeged, wherefore they had placed the beſt of their forces on that ſide, which made the Portugals victorie the more eaſie. Maſcaregna had the fore-ward, with foure hundred choiſe Souldiers, who beeing entred into the Barbarians trenches, had fought valiantly, and they began to retyre, when as freſh men arriuing, hee had good need of ſuc- L cours, and ſo they did fight often that day, with an interchangeable inclination of victorie, yet the Portugals aduanced ſtill; and hauing wonne one of their forts, in the end by their exceeding valour and the fauour of heauen, they defeated the Victorie gotten by the Portugals at Diu. Barbarians, and put them to flight, ſome eſcaping by a bridge which they had made, ioyning the Iſland to the firme land, all the reſt of what age and ſexe ſoeuer, were made ſubiect to the reuenging ſword of the Conqueror, who incenſed with crueltie vſed againſt them at that ſeege, and with the treachcrie of them of Cambaia, would not ſuffer any one to bee taken priſoner, except Iuzartano a Captaine of Cambaia, much eſteemed, who was in the Viceroies power. The ſouldiers hatred was ſo great, as they not onely ſlue men, women with childe, and infants, but euen their tame cattell. M

Rumecano the Sonne of Zaffer (who had the chiefe charge of the army) was found dead, with Audecano a Captaine of Cambaia, who came the day before vnto the armie with fiue thouſand Souldiers, and Idalcano a Captaine of ſtrange ſouldiers. They tooke the royall Standard of Cambaia, with many others, they recouered their loſt ordnance, and tooke thirtie and fiue peeces of the enemies: but the ſpoile gotten afterwards

A wards in Diu did much inrich the Souldiers. They write that this cruell ſeege continued eight moneths: there dyed one thouſand fiue hundred Portugals, and in this laſt battell onely ſixtie, and foure thouſand Infidels. The Viceroy hauing taken order for the repayring and new building of the fort, haning alſo rewarded the well deſeruing ſouldiers, returned to Malaga. 1547

4 During the warre in Germanie, whereof wee haue formerly made mention, there was a marriage concluded in Fraunce, betwixt Ioane of Albret, the heire of Nauarre, and Anthonie of Bourbon, duke of Vendoſme, a prince of the bloud royall of France, the marriage was celebrated at Molins, in Bourbonois. This realme of Nauarre B was reduced vnto a Prouince, when as the duke of Alua ſeaſed thereon in the name of the king D. Ferdinand in execution of the ſentence of pope Iulio the ſecond, and had been alwaies gouerned by Viceroys and Lieutenants, as wee haue ſaid. In the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and two, D. Iohn de Lauega, Lord of Grayal, was viceroy, in whoſe time D. Ferdinand Aluares of Toledo, grand childe to the duke of Alua, raſed the wals of Lombier, which ſtood vntill that time: D. Lewis of Mendoſa, Marqueſſe of Montdejar ſucceeded the Lord of Grajal in the gouernment of Nauarre, in the yere one thouſand fiue hundred forty and three; and in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred forty and ſixe, D. Aluaro Gomes Manrique of Mendoſa, entred into the gouernment, and ſucceſſiuely in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred forty and ſeuen, D. Lewis Velaſco, at which C time this marriage was conſummated.

Nauarre.

Mariage of Ioane heire of Nauarre to Anthony duke of Bourbon.

The emperour hauing gotten ſo great and abſolute a victorie, as hee thought he now held the reynes of all Germanie in his hand, he ſends D. Ferdinād of Toledo, duke of Alua into Spaine, to perſuade his Son to come vnto him into the low countries; whether he went carrying his priſoners with him in triūph, leauing Ferdinād king of Romans his brother to gouerne the affaires of the empire in his abſence, and for that D. Philip comming out of Spaine, he muſt leaue ſome great one there, with the title of gouernor; and to giue that dignitie to any lord of the countrie, it would breed jealouſie in the reſt, he reſolued to ſend Maximilian of Auſtria, prince of Hungarie, his nephew thither, to whome hee had deſigned for wife D. Maria his owne daughter, with a diſpenſation from the pope, for they D were couſin Germans. This Prince came and imbarked at Genoua, ſoone after the duke of Aluas departure, being accōpained by the Cardinal of Trent, the yong duke of Brunſwike, the earle of Mansfield and other noble men, & arriued at Barcelona, with a proſperous wind, whereas all the chiefe noblemen of Arragon and Caſtille came and met him; as their Gouernour and Viceroy, and conducted him to Vailledolit, where the marriage betwixt him & D. Maria was ſolemnized. Theſe princes being maried, they gouerned Spain for a time in prince Philips abſence, who parted in the ſame fleet, & in the ſame veſſel that had brought Maximilian. Being arriued at Genoua, he ſtaied there fifteen daies, where he was viſited and honoured with gifts and preſents, by al the princes and potentates of Italie, and by the eſtates of the emperour his father. From Genoua he came to Milan, where E he had a ſolemne entrie made him, and then by Mantoua & Trent hee continued his voyage throgh Germany, & came to Bruſſelles, where the emperor attended him, who made a progreſſe with him through all the prouinces of his hereditarie countrie, cauſing an oth of fealtie to be taken vnto him as to his onely heire.

Caſtille.

Prince Philip goes into Flanders.

At the eſtates of Caſtille who were held at Vailledolit in the yeare 1548, it was decreed that the emperour ſhould be intreated againe, (as he had beene often) to pay the money which he had borrowed of the king of Portugall, by colour whereof he did not purſue his right vnto the Molucqus, for the which there were deputies ſent vnto him into Flanders, who offered him in the name of the eſtates, to diſcharge that debt, ſo as hee would graunt them that trade for ſixe yeares, making the landing and entring of Spices at the Groin, as F he had formerly ordained; which ſixe yeares being expired, the emperour ſhould receiue the benefit of the trade: whereunto he gaue no great eare, for that hee would not diſpleaſe D. Iohn king of Portugall, to whome he bare great affection. 1548

6 At that time there came vnto Maximilian of Auſtria, and D. Maria of Caſtille his wife, gouerning in Spaine, Muley Buaſon, a Prince of the Moores, and Lord of Veles de la Gomera in Afrike, who had beene brought into Spaine by D. Bernardine de Mendoſa

Muley Buaſon a Moore demands ſuccor in Spaine

1548 Mendoſa, generall of the galleys, to demaund ſuccour, againſt Muley Mahumet Xerife G of Marroc, who had expelled Muley Hamet his kinſman, of the race of the Merins, out of the realme of Fez. This Moore was honourably entertained by Maximilian, but touching his chiefe buſineſſe, hee aduiſed him to goe vnto the emperour, the which hee did, and paſt through Fraunce, but hee could not obtaine that which hee pretended, notwithſtanding that hee offered to doe homage to the emperour, and to pay him tribute for the realme of Fez. Hee knew well there was no great aſſurance in the promiſes of thoſe Barbariens, who are naturally diſloyall, and that it was in vaine to make any enterpriſes in Afrike, if hee did not altogether follow it; elſe it would prooue but a fruitleſſe toile and charge. After long ſoliciting, Buaſon return- H ned into Spaine, and made a like ſute vnto D. Iohn king of Portugall, who gaue him ſome ſuccours, the which had like to haue ruined him, but afterwards hee made good vſe of them.

Councell tranſferred from Trent to Bolonia.

7 The Councell continued at Trent vnto the ſeuenth Seſſion, touching the doctrine and reformation of Prelates, and the Pope ſeeing that Germanie was in ſuch a combuſtion, as there was no likelihood of any reconciliation, hee thought it expedient for his affaires of Cologne to draw the Councell out of Germany, and transferre it to Bolonia, a towne belonging to the church, cauſing a decree to bee made in the eight Seſſion, as if this tranſlation had come from the motion of the Fathers that were aſſembled, by reaſon of the indiſpoſition of many which fell ſicke through the bad conſtituion I of the ayre, and the diſcommodities of the cold and moiſt countrie. The Legats went, and were followed by the Prelates and Doctors of Italie, but the Germanes were diſcontented: wherefore the emperor vpon the complaints which were made, ſent his embaſſadors vnto the Councell of Bolonia, (which hee called an aſſembly) which were Francis Vargas, and Martin Velaſco, to the end the Councell might be ſetled againe at Trent.

The Princes and States of the empire being aſſembled at Ausbourge, did alſo write verie earneſtly vnto the Pope, beſeeching him to cauſe his Legats to returne to Trent, and to contiuue the Councel there, vnleſſe he wold ſpoile that which had bin wel begun. The Pope referred it to the fathers that were at Bolonia; who could not be induced to retract that which they had reſolued by a common conſent, and as it were (ſaid they) by the inſpi- K ration of the holy Ghoſt.

The emperour being diſcontented at the Popes obſtinacie, thought to finde ſome meanes to reconcile the controuerſies in Religion, without attending a councell any longer, for the which hee cauſed a booke to be made, which he called Interin, containing in ſubſtance all the doctrine of the church of Rome, & the ceremonies thereof; and to giue occaſion to the Proteſtants to receiue it, they were allowed to communicat vnder both kindes, and for Preeſts to marrie. It was cenſured by the Pope in thoſe two articles, and was reiected by ſome of the Proteſtāt Princes: but afterwards the Councel was returned againe to Trent, after the death of Paul the third, vnder Pope Iulio the third.

Interin of the emperor reiected by the Pope and Proteſtants

1550 Sedition at Peru for the gouernment.

8 The emperour being come this yeare, one thouſand fiue hundred and fiftie, out of L the Netherlands, to an imperiall aſſembly at Ausbourge, doctor D. Pedro Guaſca, (being newly come from Peru, where he had commanded foure yeares) came vnto him to giue an accompt of his gouernment, of the fruits whereof hee brought him a great ſumme of gold, the which did much further his affaires. This man by his wiſdome and good gouernment, had ended the ſedition and rebellion of the Pizares in that countrie, which had continued many yeares much vnpleaſing to the emperour; and therefore he was verie welcome: wherefore I haue thought it conuenient to make a breefe relation of the whole action. Wee haue formerly made mention of the quarrell betwixt Francis Pizarro and Iames of Almagra, either of them ſeeking to command ambitiouſly ouer his companion in that rich countrie, which they happily conquered with mutuall M duetie, and their common armes: wherein they had gotten great honour if they could haue mainteined themſelues, but they grew into factions, and to ciuill warre, pretending nothing leſſe in the end, then to make themſelues abſolute Lords, and it hapned after many attempts and enterpriſes, to the preiudice one of another, that Francis Pizarro had beene vanquiſhed in a great incounter, in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred

A dred ſortie two and his brother Ferdinand taken, who notwithſtanding was ſoone after ſet at libertie, yet not without great difficulty. 1550

Hauing afterwards repaired their forces, and comming againe to fight, the miſfortune fell vpon Almagro, who being led to Cuſco, hee was there publikely, but vniuſtly, beheaded, by the commaundement of Ferdinand Pizarro, who was a little be-
B fore his priſoner. The ſon of Iames of Almagra carrying the ſame name, born in that coũtry of an Indian woman, deſirous to reuenge the vniuſt death of his father, found meanes to come by night into Lima, (otherwiſe called the towne of kings) where hee ſurpriſed Francis Pizarro, and a brother of his, and cut their throates in their owne lodging, and if
B Gonſaluo Pizarro their other brother had beene there, hee had paſt the ſame way, but hee was gone to make warre at Quintoa, in the prouince of Cauclane. Francis Pizarro murthered.

Gonſaluo, being aduertiſed of this accident hapned to his bretheren, brought backe his Souldiers, and beganne to make a cruell purſuite againſt young Iames of Almagra, and hee on the other ſide to make head againſt him, ſo as the whole Countrie was for ſome yeares miſerably afflicted with theſe factions, vntill that the emperour ſent a gouernour thither with ſome forces called Vaſco de Caſtro, who did ſomewhat ſuppreſſe theſe ſeditions, going firſt againſt Iames of Almagra, whome hee beſeeged in Cuſco, forcing the Inhabitants to deliuer him, hee cauſing his head to bee cut off without any long proceſſe.

C Ferdinand Pizarro, (who had put his father to the like death) beeing come at that time into Spaine with great treaſure, it may bee for that hee would not bee in Peru at the comming of Vaſco de Caſtro, and giue an accompt vnto him of his actions) was there committed to priſon in the Caſtle of Medina, where ſometime after at the inſtance of the kings Atturney generall, and vpon the accuſations which were ſent from the Indies, his proceſſe being made, hee was condemned to looſe his head, and the chiefe reaſon was, for that hee had vniuſtly and raſhly put Iames of Almagra the father to death.

It is ſaid, that through the quarrels of theſe mutines vnto that time, there had periſhed one hundred and fiftie thouſand Indians, ſometimes taking part with the D one, ſometimes with the other. By the death of the heads it ſeemed the troubles had beene ended and ſuppreſt, there remaining none but Gonſaluo Pizarro, who kept himſelfe cloſe: but the change of the Gouernour made them greater than before. For it ſeeming to the emperour, or to the chiefe of his Councell, that Vaſco de Caſtro was not fit to gouerne that prouince of Peru, hee called him home, and ſent Vaſco Nugnes de Velez, in his place, with ſo abſolute and ſeuere a Commiſſion, as ſeeking to execute it, he cauſed in a maner all the Spaniards that were in that countrie, to reuolt with the Indians, hauing for the firſt act of his Tragedie declared all them guiltie of treaſon, which had carried armes, were it for the Pizarres, or the Almagras, not conſidering how farre this generalitie did extend, for among all the Spa-
E niards which dwelt at Peru, and the ſouldiers entertained there ſince the Conqueſt therof for the emperours ſeruice, there was not any one which had not followed ſome one of the parties, wherefore there were infinite appellations to the Councell of Spaine, and to the emperour, whereunto the new gouernour refuſing to yeeld, and ſtopping their paſſage into Spaine, which were deputed to carrie the juſtifications of ſo many men that were condemned, they were forced to rebell, choſing Gonſaluo Pizarro for their Captaine, the which he willingly accepted, being already incenſed, for the death of his brethren, but eſpecially for Ferdinand, whom they had beheaded in Spaine, beginning to make ſharpe warre againſt Vaſco Nugnes, and them that followed him, in the which a great number of his old Spaniſh ſouldiers periſhed. This new gouernour although he were vnfortunate in F his exploits and enterpriſes, yet he continued in his ſeueritie or rather inſolency, ſo as ſuch as were about him, appointed to be his coũſellors by the emperor, were forced to lay hold of him, & deliuer him to the cuſtody of Iohn Aluares, for that he had ſlain William Suares of Caruajal, with his own hãd, for ſome priuat hatred, hauing an intent to ſend him into Spain by the firſt wind, as an vnprofitable perſon, yea prejudicial to the quiet of the coũtry, that he might giue an accõpt to the emperor of his actions, but the violence of the rebels, & of Sentence inconſiderate and vniuſt. Gonſaluo Picarro head of the rebels,

their

1550 their commaunder, Gonſalno was ſuch after this reſtraint of the Gouernour, (they of the Councell diſagreeing among themſelues) as they were forced with all ſpeede to deliuer him, to goueme this warre, the which prooued difficult, for Picarro being aſſiſted by Francis of Caruaial, a great Captaine, and an old experienced Souldier, hee then declared himſelfe openly againſt the Emperour, and contended for the Soueraigntie of Peru, hauing made the Towne of Cuſco the chiefe of that countrie, his ſtore-houſe for the warre. Vaſco Nugnes ſtriuing to reſiſt them ſomewhat raſhlie, was ſlaine in an Incounter neere vnto the towne of Quitoa, and his head was carried to Cuſco, and there made a publike ſpectacle, and ſcorne to all men, a brother of his called Vela Nugnes, being then a priſoner, who had no better fortune afterwards.

Death of the gouernour Vaſco Nugnes.

To bee reunnged of this rout, Iohn Aluares, Iames de Silua, and Iames de Ceuton remaining heads of the emperours part, vntill there were ſome other order taken, gathered all the ſouldiers they could together, but they were alſo defeated by Francis Caruaiall, ſo as they had great difficultie to mainteine their maſters authoritie vnto the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and ſixe, that the Emperour after long deliberation, and by the aduiſe and choiſe of his Councell, ſent D. Pedro Guaſca thether, a clergie man and of the Councell of the Inquiſition, a graue, wiſe, and diſcreet man, to whome hee gaue a more ample power than to any of the precedent Gouernours, with the title of Preſident of the royall audience of Peru: parting from Seuile that yeare, he came to Nombre de Dios, notwithſtanding that he vnderſtood that there was there in garriſon Ferdinand, Mexia de Guſman, vnder Pedro Alfonſo Hinoioſa, Gouernour in that Countrie for the party of Gonſaluo Piarro, who had a little before put Melchior Verdugo, one of the emperours Captaines to rout, and chaſed him as farre as the fort of Carthagena, which is vpon the North Sea, Hinoioſa remaine at Panama, which is oppoſit vpon the South ſea. It is the narroweſt place of all the firme land of the Indies, betwixt the two Seas. D. Pedro Guaſca did in this action ſhew a great reſolution, for hee had beene aduertiſed at the neere Iſlands of this rout, and that the port of Carthagena was the onely landing place for him, yet hee would needs caſt anchor neere vnto Nombre de Dios, which place was held by the ſaid Mexia, with a garriſon of eighteene hundred Spaniards, where hee ſent Alfonſo Aluaredo to land, in ioyning him to aduertiſe Mexia of his comming, and to ſound him how hee ſtood affected. The which Aluaredo performed ſo well, as Mexia and hee parted good friends in effect, though they made ſhew to the contrarie. For ſome daies after the Preſident Guaſca was receiued honourably into that place, yea, with ioy and content of the whole garriſon. Thus this religious man being politike and modeſt, did for the firſt fruits of his comming, winne this fort and them that held it, without any tumult or blowes, who thinking himſelfe well fortified, began with grauitie and authoritie to ſollicit the rebels and their leaders, , that they ſhould acknowledge their errors, to repaire the which, hee gaue to vnderſtand, that they had nothing to doe, but to imbrace the emperors clemency, and the grace and pardon which hee offered them. Hinoioſa who was at Panama vpon the South ſea, had beene aduertiſed of the preſidents arriuall, and although he were none of the moſt obſtinate rebels, yet would hee ſee how hee would carrie himſelfe at his firſt entrie into his gouernment, being ſomewhat diſcontented that Mexia had ſpoken with him without his leaue and priuitie, writing in choller vnto him; but Mexia was nothing amazed thereat, but by the Preſidents aduice went freely to Panama, to Hinioioſa; what diſcourſe they had, the euents did ſhew: for Mexia returned as freely as hee went, and preſently the Preſident departed, and went towards Panama, where hee wrought ſo with good words, perſuaſions and promiſes, as he drew Pedro Alfonſo of Hinoioſa, and all them that were with him to the emperours obedience. They ſay, that the greateſt motiue to make them reſolue was, that they ſaw with the Preſident the Marſhall Alfonſo of Aluaredo, who had bin a dear friend to Franciſco Pizarro. Theſe things ſucceeding thus happely, the preſident holding it a great aduantage to haue won Hinoioſa, hee thought it now time to preſſe Gonzaluo Pizarro, to come vnto himſelfe, and to acknowledge his maſter. He gaue him hope of

D. Pedro Guaſca gouernour at Peru.

Dexteritie of Guaſca to win the rebels at Peru.

A of good vſage, if he did obey, if not, he proteſted his vtter ruine, writing vnto him, and 1550 ſending him letters in the Emperors name (from whom he had brought many blanks ſigned) the bearer whereof was Ferdinand Paniaguada borne at Placentia in Spaine. The emperors letters were dated at Venloo in Guelderland the 17 of February 1546, & the Preſidents the 26 of September following. Gonſaluo was at the time of this diſpatch in the citie of Kings (ſo called for that the firſt foundations thereof were laid, the day before the feaſt of Kings, which wee call Twelfe day) where hauing ſome intelligence of the Preſidents comming, hee had called all the heads of his party vnto him, to conſult what was to be done; in the end they reſolued to ſend vnto the emperour, and to informe him of the cauſes of their riſing, and to iuſtifie themſelues for the death of the gouernour Nugnes, and it was concluded, that the Deputies ſhould carry letters from all the townes in B Peru, and that they ſhould demand the generall gouernement for Gonſaluo Pizarro: That in paſſing by Panama, they ſhould informe themſelues of the preſident Guaſcas authority, and ſhould acquaint him with the cauſe of their voyage, with proteſtation, that if hee attempted any thing, or did preſume to enter into the Countrey of Peru in armes, before their returne and the Emperours anſwer, they would reſiſt him by armes. The deputies were Ieroſme Loyoſa Archbiſhop of the city of Kings, Laurence of Aldana (who commanded the garriſon there) Thomas of ſaint Martin prouinciall of the order of ſaint Dominicke at Peru, and Gomes de Solis de Carceres, ſome of which being ſuſpect to Pizarro (namely the prouinciall) he was glad to be rid of him, and to eſtrange him from his deſignes, procuring C the biſhop of Sancta Martha to goe the voiage with them. Thus the deputies being diſpatcht, they imbarked in diuers ſhips, and ſailed towards Panama, cauſing Laurence Aldana to aduance, and aduertiſe them what was done there. In the meane time there was a conſpiracie diſcouered againſt the perſon of Gonſaluo, which had beene practiſed, as they ſaid, by Vela Nugnes, the deceaſed gouernors brother, who was then a priſoner, following Pizarro, but not in cuſtodie, for the which he loſt his head, being publiquely executed, to the great griefe both of Spaniards and Indians, who ſawe well that this would make the peace more difficult. Laurence Aldana being come to Panama, and hauing conferred with Hinoioſa, and ſpoken vnto the preſident, he was preſently wonne by them, he forgat his companions, and took an othe to the Emperour, perſuading the preſident Guaſca, to D go to field to fight with the rebells, if they giue him not a good anſwer. The other deputies comming neere to Panama, and aduertiſed what Aldana had done, did the like, and ioyned with the preſident: who gaue foure ſhippes of warre to Aldana, with ſome ſouldiers, commanding him to run vp Southerly and Weſtward, and to trie if he could ſeaze vpon the port & towne of Kings, there to make a body of all thoſe that deſired to maintain the Emperors maieſtie, and to giue all hindrances he could to Pizarro: he left a good garriſon at Panama, he paied his ſouldiers bountifully, he made Hinoioſa generall of the imperiall army in field, he confirmed all the other captaines in their firſt places, and filled them with hopes and promiſes to haue better: He cauſed the prouinciall Thomas of Saint Martin, a man of great authoritie with the Spaniards, to imbarke with Laurence Aldana,
E being fit to fortifie the imperiall party, to whom he gaue many blanks ſigned by the Emperour, that he might fill them with letters directed to the captaines that were with Gonſaluo Pizarro: He ſent D. Iohn de Mendoſa into new Spaine, to D. Antonio de Mendoſa the viceroy to bring him ſome ſuccors, and others were ſent by him to the gouernors of Saint Domingo and other prouinces, to the ſame effect. Whileſt that Pizarro expected newes from Panama, and from his deputies, they brought Fernand Paniaguada bound vnto him, who (as we haue ſaid) had bin ſent from the preſident Guaſca vnto him, with letters from the emperour, and had beene ſtaied by him who commanded in the fort of Saint Michael for the rebells: The Councell was aſſembled to heare the charge and report of this priſo- Gonſaluo abandoned by his chiefe adherents.
F ner, but Pizarro ſuppreſt the letters. Being heard, al their opinions were nothing but Rodomontades, rebellions, fire and murder, and to conclude that they muſt keep the Emperors army from entring into Peru: whereupon they ſent for Francis de Caruaial, who held the ſecond place among the rebells, and was then at Plata: he came to Pizarro with 150 Spaniards, 30 field peeces, and about 400000 crownes; paſſing by the towne of Kings, they told him that they had diſcouered foure ſhippes at ſea, but they knew not what they

1550 were, nor whither they went: Iames de Mora gouernour of the fort of Truxillo, was G ſent forth to diſcouer them, who found that it was the little fleete of Laurence Aldana, with whom hee ſpake in the port of Malabriga, and hearing what had paſſed at Panama, hee ſtaied with him encreaſing his armie with his ſhippe, and ſo they went all to Truxillo: from which place Mora was ſent towards Caxamalcan, a neere Prouince to draw all them together which had a deſire to ſerue the Emperour, carrying with him many blankes, the which hee filled with good words, aſſurances of pardon and promiſes to the Captaines of that Countrie, all which in a manner did abandon Pizarro, who beeing at that time much troubled for the reuolt of Iames de Mora, thinking to prouide for the fort of Truxillo, hee ſent Doctor Garcia de Leon thither, but hee reuolted in like manner, and added an other ſhippe with twentie ſouldiers to Aldanas fleete. H
Gonſaluo Pizarro was then certified to what end Aldana was come into that Sea: beeing Captains of Pizarros partie. full of rage that hee had beene thus abandoned, hee deuiſed with himſelfe how hee might ſtay the reſt, beeing reſolute to make warre with all violence. Hee went to field with about a thouſand Spaniſh footemen, and three hundred horſe, and a great number of Indians which followed him. The Captaines of whom hee made accompt, were Francis of Caruajal his lieutenant (pretending to ſhare the fruites of his victories with him) Doctor Caruaial and Doctor Cepeda, Iohn Acoſta, Velez de Guenara, Iohn Torrens, and ſome others of leſſe note. In his armie the Generalles Standard was with the Emperours armes alone, but all other enſignes and cornets had Pizarros blaſons and deuiſes, teſtifying that hee termed himſelfe King of Peru. Martin Silueiran and I Alphonſo de Mendoſa were left to gard the towne of Plata. Anthonie Robles was made gouernor of Cuſco, and others in other places: all which hee enioyned to ſend ſouldi-ers and money ſpeedily to the campe, and to publiſh his declarations and patents in their gouernements, that hee was not in armes againſt the Emperour, but againſt D. Pedro Guaſca, who ambitiouſly contrary to the Emperours commaundement, had proclaimed warre againſt him, and aſſailed him firſt. All that were ſurprized going to ioyne with the imperiall troupes were forced to march vnder his enſignes, or to die. Hee cau-ſed Peter of Vlloa a Iacobin frier, to bee put in yrons, for that hee went in the diſguiſed habite of a ſouldier amongſt the troupes publiſhing the Emperours pardon, which he offered to all thoſe that would returne vnto his ſeruice: and hee ſent Iohn Acoſta to- K wards the ſea, to hinder the deſcent of Laurence Aldana, who had newly withdrawne the gouernour of Guanico, and all the ſouldiers, and had ſent them to ioyne with the troupes of Iames de Mora, at Caxamalcan, in reuenge whereof Pizarro cauſed Guanico to bee fired. To encreaſe his miſeries, the Inhabitants of Cuſco, diſdaining to Cuſco reuolts from Pizarro. be gouerned by Anthony Robles, a man of no worth, in the night they opened the gates to Iames Ceuton, who, liuing in the mountaines and woods in great miſerie, euer ſince that hee and his companions had beene defeated, ſeeking to reuenge the death of the gouernour Vaſco Nugnes, had now come out of his holes, vpon the occaſion of this warre, which was made by the Preſident, and had put himſelfe into the citie with ſome tattered ſouldiers, which hee had gathered together, beeing fauoured and fortified by L them of Cuſco, both Spaniards and Indians; where hee defeated the gouernour Robles, who going towards Pizarros campe, with moſt part of his garriſon, and one hundred thouſand ducats, hearing of Ceutons enterpriſe, had turned head: They fought within the walles, where hee was defeated, taken and his head cut off, retaining all his ſouldiers which were appointed to ſuccour the rebelles, by force or faire meanes. So as Ceuton finding himſelfe fortified with foure hundred foote, and two hundred horſe, he led them to the fort of Plata, to chaſe away Alphonſo de Mendoſa who had the gard thereof.

Cuſco being wonne, the townes and forts of Saint Michael, Mercadille, and Procellin, Towns & forts abandon Pizarro their gouernors, and ſouldiers, abandoned Gonſaluo Pizarro; all which garriſons went M and ioyned with Iames de Mora at Caxamalcan. Lucas Martines who ſhould haue garded Arequipa, could not get thither, for hee was ſtaied priſoner by the way by his owne ſouldiers; who made choiſe of Ieroſme Villega for their head, and went to Ceutons troups.
Againſt whom Pizarro marched, cauſing Iohn Acoſta to aduaunce with thoſe forces he had

A had with him at Quitoa, but confounded with such ordinarie reuolts, not knowing whom hee should trust, hee beganne to vse crueltie, and without anie other reason then distrust, he caused some captains to be slain in his presence, the which did not secure him no more than a new oath, which hee caused the souldiers which hee had remaining to take. Laurence of Aldana with his fleete of six shippes had come neere vnto the towne of Kings, and had caused three of his shippes to enter into the channell of the riuer, to see if hee could execute the Presidents charge, wherefore Gonsaluo Pizarro marched thither, and lodged his armie neere vnto the shoare, hauing commaunded the inhabitants to bee in armes, and some of them to follow him vpon paine of death. Whilest he laie there in campe, there passed many messengers and mediators from either part, to come B to some composition, according to the Presidents instructions, who desired to end this warre by the mildest meanes that might bee, but it was in vaine; Pizarro could not auoyde his owne ruine, neyther could hee by anie care or diligence stay his men from running to the imperialls campe, which should haue made him resolue to embrace the pardon which was offered him. Euerie day there were some wanting in his campe, notwithstanding that hee put them cruelly to death that could be taken: Francis Brano Lagunas, beeing taken by his horsemen which were sent forth to scout, hee commaunded that hee should be strangled, but at the intreatie of many, especially of D. Agnes Brano, wife to D. Nicholas of Ribera hee gaue him his life, notwithstanding Lagunas fled away, wherewith Pizarro was in a manner madde, and hee grew so furious, as no man C durst come neere him vnlesse hee called him. His affaires beeing in these bad termes, all that were in his armie, were amazed and discouraged, but hee himselfe and his owne followers were most of all, whenas they vnderstood that Iames Maldonado aduertized by Martin de Robles, that they sought him to put him to death, was fled vnto the enemie, and that Martin de Robles, who had leaue to goe to the towne of Kings that was neere, had gone to horse backe the next day earely in the morning; and going forth by the port which leadeth to Truxillo, hee had said openly, that hee went to the President Guasca, the Emperours lieutenant, and that whosoeuer loued his life, and would not die like a traitour, should follow him, and leaue the tyrant Pizarro. The same night Martin Lopes fled out of the campe, and there grew such a tumult, as the souldiers were D readie to kill Gonsaluo: wherewith hee was so terrified, as hee dislodged, and went and camped two leagues farther from the towne, giuing the charge of marshall of the campe to Doctor Caruaial, commanding him to keepe a carefull gard that none disbanded, but hee also abandoned him that night, leauing willingly his rich moueables and furniture, where hee had many goodly horses of seruice, and about twentie thousand ducats in coine, and got to Truxillo, beeing soone after followed by manie other gentlemen of name and qualitie: Gonsaluo Pizarro did not beare the retreate of anie one more impatiently, than of Doctor Caruaial, complayning often that hee himselfe had made him reuolt: for that (said hee) hee had made shew to trust more in Iohn Acosta than in him, hauing lately sent him towards Cusco, by the mountaines, to trie if he might recouer that E citie which Ceuton had left in the peoples hands without anie garrison, and also for that hee had refused to giue him the daughter of Francis Pizarro his neece in marriage: And it is remarkeable, that beeing in these perplexities, hee sawe with his owne eyes two of the common souldiers flie out of the campe, trusting to the swiftnesse of their horses, crying out as loud as they could, God saue the Emperour, and confound the tyrant Gonsaluo Pizarro. Then hee resolued to dislodge from thence, taking the way to Arequipa, whether hee brought not the fourth part of his men, for most of them had left him by the way, so as beeing come into the prouince of Nascana, he had not aboue 300 men in his armie: Hee had recommended the towne of Kings, to Anthonie Ribera, Martin F Pizarro, Anthonie de Lyon, and other Spaniards, whom hee held faithfull vnto him, but whenas they sawe him retired, they called the people into a field without the towne, where they had planted a standard with the Emperours armes, and there they caused the letters of a generall pardon to be published, which they had formerly receiued and kept, the which was ioyfully embraced by them all: Then hauing taken the othe, they did

1550

Cruelties of Pizarro.

Pizarro abandoned by his souldiers.

1550 aduertiſe Laurence Aldana (who lay there by at anchor) that hee ſhould come and take G poſſeſſion of the towne in the Emperours name, the which hee did, leauing the charge of his ſhippes to Iohn Fernandes, aduertiſing the Preſident Guaſca preſently of all that had paſſed: and that Gonſaluo Pizarro was gone from thence ſome eight dayes iourney, with a ſmall traine. As for Iohn Acoſta who had beene ſent to Cuſco, he had like to haue beene ſlaine by the way, by Pasceco, Sotomaior, and other conſpirators, who eſcaped and came to Aldana.

Acoſta being freed from this daunger hauing cauſed ſome of the conſpirators which he had taken, to be ſtrangled, hee came to Cuſco, and was let in (for there were no ſouldiers in the towne) there hee reformed the gouernement, diſplacing thoſe Magiſtrates which Ceuton had made, and ſubſtituting others, leauing a ſufficient garriſon vnder the H commaund of Iohn Vaſco, Taxia, and with the reſt of his troupes hee went to ſeeke Pizarro towards Arequipa; but hee was not farre gone, before that they of Cuſco had changed all that he had done, and reſtored Ceutons old officers. Ceuton who went to Plata, drew vnto the Emperours ſeruice Alphonſo de Mendoſa with all his ſouldiers, and then all together beganne to follow Pizarro, to ſee that hee ſhould not eſcape out of the Countrey of Peru, all the townes beeing in a manner reduced (ſome hauing expelled, and ſome hauing ſlaine their gouernours with their garriſons) and vnwillingly acknowledged the Emperour and the Preſident Guaſca his lieutenant generall, who vpon the newes of this happie ſucceſſe, went from Panama by ſea, with fiue hundred Spaniards, old ſouldiers, and great prouiſion of armes, and munition: he came neere vnto Toinben, whither Embaſſadours and Deputies came vnto him from all partes, to offer him men, money, obedience and ſeruice in ſuch aboundaunce, as hee had reaſon to countermaund the ſuccours which hee had demaunded of the viceroy of new Spaine, and of other gouernours of the Prouinces of the weſt Indies. From thence hee ſent Hinoioſa to Caxamalcan to commaund the troups, which were there aſſembled, and himſelfe came with the armie to Truxillo, appoynting them all a time to come in the valley of Sanſaua. Gonſaluo Pizarro beeing come to Arequipa, hee found not any creature there, for all were gone to ioyne with Ceutons troupes, who aduaunced to fight with him, the which Victorie of Pizarro. hee did, but to his owne loſſe: for hee was defeated, and forced to flie, hauing three hundred and foure ſcore ſouldiers ſlaine vpon the place, with ſome captaines, and almoſt as many taken priſoners, with which Pizarro fortified his army, diſtributing them among his bands: and of his part there were onely one hundred men ſlaine. By this good ſucceſſe ſome others were induced to runne the ſame fortune with him, he promiſing them great recompences: ſo as holding his forces to be ſufficient, hee returned towards Cuſco, with an intent to fight with the imperiall army, whereſoeuer hee ſhould
Army imperiall purſuing Pizarro. find it, the which beeing aſſembled in the valley of Sanſaua, there were found to be ſixteene hundred harquebuziers, fiue hundred pikes, and ſeuen hundred horſe Spaniards, whereof the captaines were Peter Alphonſo of Hinoioſa, commaunding in qualitie of Generall, Aluaredes marſhall of the campe, Doctor Caruaial, Pedro of Vlloa, and other Captaines: Gabriel de Roias was maſter of the artillerie: The leaders of the horſemen L were Pedro Cabrera, Gomes of Aluarado, Iohn Sauedra, Iames Mora, Ferdinand Mexia, Roderigo Salezar, and Alphonſo Mendoſa, all which had reuolted from Pizarro. The Preſident had for his councell, the Archbiſhop of the towne of Kings, Thomas S. Martin, prouinciall of the preaching friers, with many others. Peter Valduuia gouernour of the Prouince of Chiliane, came and ioyned with his armie, a man of great experience in matters of warre, worthie to be oppoſed againſt Francis Caruaial, who was the moſt redoubted captaine the enemy had; and in the end vnfortunate Ceuton came and ioyned with them, with about fortie horſe. Being all together, they marched towards Cuſco, whither they vnderſtood that Gonſaluo Pizarro was come with his army. The Countrey by the which M the imperialls did march, was rough, deſart, and without victualles, ſo as they ſuffered much, vntill they came to Andaguara, where the Countrey is peopled, and furniſhed with victualles and other commodities: wherefore they ſtayed long there, for that they would not be conſumed with trauell, and the tediouſneſſe of the winter, if the enemie

ſhould

A ſhould ſeeke to prolong the warre, the which he might eaſily doe, hauing the towne of Cuſco, and the riuer which paſſeth by the valley of Seguiſagrane at his deuotion. In the Spring time of the yeare, one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and eight, the Preſident cauſed his army to diſlodge from Andaguara, and croſſed many narrow paſſages of the mountaines without any difficultie, and many riuers, whereas Pizarro might haue annoyed them much, if hee had not beene negligent, and then came and lodged vpon the declining of the hilles, in a diſcommodious place, aboue the valley of Seguiſagrane, in the which Pizarro was camped, who wanted not any thing, hauing the towne and riuer behind him at his commaundement; whereas the imperialls ſuffered much hunger, cold, and other diſcommoditities: yet notwithſtanding the Preſident did forbeare to fight, B being aduertiſed that a good number of the Spaniards that were with Pizarro, did but watch an oportunitie to abandon him, and to reuolt, which he deſired might be before they did fight, that he might haue the weaker oppoſition. But they could not temporize long in that bad lodging, whereas the cold which was great in that ſeaſon, did ſo benumme the ſouldiers, as they could ſcarce hold their armes; and alſo for the neereneſſe of the two armies which were daily in skirmiſh; ſo as they were forced to come to a generall battell, the which was ſoone ended. For the ordnance was ſcarce diſcharged, but many of Pizarros armie diſbanded openly, among which were Doctor Cepeda, Garci Lazo de la Vega, and Alphonſo Peres Hita captaines; and all the ſouldiers which remained at the rout of Ceuton, went away in one ſquadron to the imperialls, which made the reſt C retire and to flie the battell, ſome going towards the citie of Cuſco, which was fiue leagues off, and others to other places: they that were moſt affected to Gonſaluo, and moſt guiltie remained about him, who being foure in number, were of opinion to caſt themſelues into their enemies troups, and to die fighting valiantly, rather than to be led bound to an ignominious death; but Gonſaluo told them, that ſeeing Fortune had turned her backe, it were better to die Chriſtianlike, acknowledging their faults, than to periſh like pagans in ſuch vanities. Being then enuironed by the imperiall horſemen, he yielded his armes to Pedro de Vlloa, great Prouoſt of the armie, who led him before the Preſident, by whom hee was much blamed for his obſtinacie, yet hee ſhewed himſelfe nothing deiected, but anſwered reſolutely to whatſoeuer was demaunded. Being giuen in D gard to Iames de Ceuton, he was for ſome daies well and modeſtly intreated, not ſuffering any one to diſquiet him either in word or deed. All the other Commaunders were in a manner taken that day, either with Gonſaluo, or in the purſuite, except Francis Carnaial, who was afterwards found and deliuered by his owne ſouldiers, being hidden among the reeds in a moore, thinking to renue the warre if hee might eſcape. All the reſt were ſomewhat lamented, but not hee, for hee was exceeding cruell, and the chiefe author of Pizarros rebellion, and it was ſaid that by his inhumane councell, Pizarro had cauſed aboue ſixe hundred gentlemen to be murthered, and thrice as many good ſouldiers, Spaniards, with an infinite number of Indians, and that he neuer was at the death of anie one, but he did reuile him with all the opprobrious words he could inuent. The rebelles E campe remained a prey to the imperialls, whereby they were greatly enriched: and to preſerue the citie of Cuſco from ſacke, and to containe euery one in his duetie, and to preuent reuenges, which do commonly follow ciuill victories, Ferdinand Mexia, and Martin Robles were ſent thither with two companies. Afterwards the priſoners proceſſes were formally made. The chiefe of the rebellion were condemned to die, as guiltie of treaſon. Gonſaluo Pizarro had his head cut off, the which was for a time ſet in the market place in the citie of Kings, for a publike ſpectacle with this Inſcription. This is the head of the Traitor and Tyrant Gonſaluo Pizarro, who being rebelled, and hauing taken armes in the realme of Peru, againſt the moſt mightie Emperour Charles the fift, his prince, was vanquiſhed F fighting againſt the ſtandard royall in the valley of Saguiſagrane, and hath beene thus worthily puniſhed. All his goods were forfeited: his proud palace which hee had built in the citie of Cuſco was ruined, the ſoile ſowed with ſalt, and a pillar erected with a table containing the ſentence of his condemnation. He died cõſtantly retaining his accuſtomed proud looke, he was royally attired in ſilke imbrodered with gold and pearle; which the executioner had. His bodie put into a coffin was honeſtly buried in Cuſco. Francis Caruaial

1550

Defeat of Pizarro.

Death of Gonſaluo Pizarro.

1550 was executed in like manner with nine other captaines, but their bodies were quartered G and hung in the high wayes. Many alſo of the moſt ſeditious were hung vpon trees on the high wayes. The Preſident hauing thus puniſhed the chiefe mutines and rebelles, hee cauſed a generall pardon to be publiſhed in Cuſco to all the reſt, forbidding any one to reproach the fault hereafter, vpon paine of death.

This victorie was wonne the ninth day of Aprill, one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and eight, happie doubtleſſe for the Emperour, for if Pizarro had wonne it, Peru had bin loſt for him, and Spaine depriued of the treaſures of that Countrey, which are great and incredible. The Preſident found himſelfe much troubled when hee came to reward ſuch as hee had drawne from Pizarros faction, to whom he had made great promiſes, for there was not any common ſouldier but he held himſelfe worthy of a gouernement: and H he could not pleaſe them all, but he ſupplied this defect with ſtore of ducats, which abound in that golden region. Then hee beganne to ſettle ſome order in regard of the Spaniards, which were feudatarie Lords ouer the Indians, how they ſhould carrie themſelues to the Indians their ſubiects. He erected a Parliament or royall Audience in the city of Kings; to the which any man that was grieued might appeale, and giuing hope to them that remayned at Peru, by the aduertiſement he ſaied he had receiued from the Emperour, to haue a Viceroy very ſoone hee bad them farewell, and went away in December one thouſand fiue hundred forty and nine, carrying with him about two millions of gold for the Emperors part. He came from the city of Kings to Panama, where hauing reſted ſome dayes, hee went by land with his baggage to Nombre de Dios, vp- I on the north ſea, where he arriued happily: For, had hee ſtaied a little longer at Panama, hee had beene in danger neuer to haue ſeene Spaine more. For that certaine other re-belles led by Fernand and Pedro Contreras (whoſe father was Viceroy of Nicaragua) came and ſeazed vpon Panama, thinking the Preſident had beene there, and ſpoyled it:
and miſſing him, they purſued him, thinking to finde him vpon the way, and to ſtrippe him of his treaſure, making an attempt to enter into Nombre de Dios, but they were repulſed by the garriſon and the Inhabitants. The gouernors and garriſons that were neere made a head, and went to field, and diſperſed them in ſome incounters, in one of the Contreras other rebells. which one of the Contreras was ſlaine, and the other loſt, ſo as hee was neuer more heard of. K

This ſecond reuolt did ſomewhat ſtay the voyage of the Preſident D. Pedro Guaſca, who embarqued in Iuly 1550, hauing ſuppreſſed two importaunt rebellions at the Weſt Indies, beeing followed by a great number of noblemen Spaniards, who were rich in gold and ſiluer of the ſpoiles which they had taken, or for recompences in theſe ſeditions; he arriued happily at Saint Lucar of Barameda, and from thence went to Se-uile, where hauing reſted ſome dayes, hee paſſed into Germanie to the emperour, whom hee found at Ausbourg, by whom hee was graciouſly receiued and honoured for his good ſeruices, who in reward thereof ſome moneths after made him Biſhop of Valencia which fell void.

But let vs returne to that princes affaires in Germanie, and what hee had to treat of L at Ausbourg, whereas all things did ſucceed according to his deſire, the negotiations of great Kings being like vnto other mens, ſeaſoned with ſweet and ſower, by him that gouerns the whole world, and for the good of men, who elſe would forget him if they ſhould alwayes proſper. This mightie Emperour, a Conquerour and wiſe, according to the world, and the common opinion of all men, finding after much toile, by a hard and preiudiciall experience, that hee was farre from that which hee pretended to doe for the good of his houſe, by armes and force, againſt the libertie of the Electors, and Emperour ſolicites D. Ferdinand to reſigne the dignitie of king of Romans to his ſon Philippe. the Eſtates of the empire, hee ſought to attaine vnto it by the meanes of ſome conuention, and therefore hee did preſſe his brother Ferdinand to reſigne vnto prince Philip his M ſonne his right and dignitie of King of Romans, whereupon they grew to a great quarrel, to pacifie the which Mary Queene of Hungarie their ſiſter, was forced to returne to Auſbourg, from whence ſhee parted alittle before: he purſued this reſignation by all the meanes and policie hee could, for that it was the next infallible ſteppe to bring D. Philippe to the empire, but Ferdinand would neuer yeelde to it, thinking that if hee made

this

A this daungerous alienation, all his sonnes (hauing a good number) should remayne without estates and meanes, wherein hee had reason. Hee had sent into Spaine for Maximilian his sonne to come to the diet, beeing a milde and courteous prince, and very pleasing to all Germanie. D. Philippe hauing sayled to be king of Romans, parted from Ausbourgh, and tooke his way towardes Genoua to returne into Spaine to gouerne it.

1550
Returne of prince Philip into Spaine.

Peter Lewis Farnese Duke of Placentia and Parma, hauing beene slaine the yere before by his owne subiects, some thought by the Emperours procurement, for that Fernand Gonzague gouernour of Milan, did instantly seaze vpon the towne of Placentia, Octauio Farnese his sonne, distrusting the Emperour his father in lawe, hauing married his
B base daughter, and seeing himselfe contemned by the new Pope, hee sought support and protection from the French; whereat pope Iulio was so offended as hee thundered out a sentence of Excommunication against him, by the which hee declared him fallen from his estate, giuing it in prey to the Emperour: whereupon D. Fernand Gonzague spoyled the territorie of Parma and the French sent succours to Duke Octauio, which caused a new warre betwixt the Emperour and the French king.

9
Octauio Farnese excommunicated, the cause of new warre.

1551

This warre beganne in the yeare of our Lord God, one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and one, by meanes whereof the Germanes freed themselues from manie violences,
C which had beene offered them both in generall and in particular by the Emperour, beeing made proud with his victories, which hee sought to make all men feele, as well Catholikes, as Protestants, vnder diuers pretexts; of some to be satisfied for the charges of the warre, which hee saied hee had made for the libertie of Germanie; of others by the waie of chastisement, for that they had reuolted, wherein hee saied that he proceeded mildely, quitting much of his right to ease and spare them. By this meanes there was neyther towne nor countrey, estate nor condition of men, amongst the Germanes, which were not vexed by taxes, and by sower speeches and threats, if they presumed to tell him of his duetie, or to put him in mind of his conuentions and promises. Finally, hee would haue all depend vpon his owne will. Thus he heaped vp a great treasure; and they say, that hee had wrested from the Princes and Protestant townes, a-D boue fiue hundred peeces of great ordnance, wherewith he did furnish his places and forts in Italie, Flaunders and Spaine. In these discontents the Towne of Magdebourg vpon Elbe, which had beene proclaymed and streightly besieged, for that it resisted his Edicts, was now more slowly prest, so as they had meanes to free themselues vpon honest conditions, Maurice Duke of Saxonie thinking it best to compound this warre, hee beeing the chiefe of it, and to attend the deliuerie of the Landgraue of Hesse his father in lawe, whom hee had brought the Emperour, vpon a promise, that hee would not detaine him prisoner, and yet hee kept him, and carried him vp and downe as it were in triumph: Whereupon hee often besought the Emperour to haue regard vn-
E to his honour, which was ingaged, and seeing him make no accompt to set him at libertie, hee entred into league with Albert of Brandebourg, the Landgraues children, and others, and all they with the French King, who marched speedily with a great armie towards the Rhine, giuing it out, that it was to restore the Germanes his good neighbours, and auncient friends to the French, to their true and first libertie, which was taken from them by Charles of Austria, tearming himselfe Emperour. The Protestant Princes went to armes also, and committed great spoyles in Germanie. But that warre was ended by the deliuerie of the Landgraue, and by some things that were granted or promised to the Protestants.

Magdebourg deliuered.

10
League betwixt the princes of Germany and the French king against the emperour.

1552

The French King beeing come neere Strausbourgh, and hearing of this accord made by Duke Maurice without him, hee returned discontented, retayning for his
F charges and paynes, Metz, Thoule, and Verdun, Townes belonging to the Empire: And the Emperour finding himselfe bound to recouer them, hee stayed not, but came and layd siege to Metz in the beginning of winter: What the successe was you may read in the French historie.

Metz besieged by the emperor

The

1552 The fathers being yet at Trent, Maximilian of Auſtria with his wife D. Maria of Spaine paſſed there, beeing returned out of Spaine, who croſſing from Barcelone to Genoua, had beene in ſome daunger, being purſued by the gallies of Fraunce, whereof Leon Stroſſy was generall. A little before hee had entred into the port of Barcelone, and carried away ſome veſſells which had beene prepared for Maximilians paſſage, wherof the imperialls complained, ſaying that there was no open warre.

Port of Barcelone ſpoiled by Leon Stroſſy.

Whileſt the Emperour toyled both mind and body in Germany, betwixt the ſtorms of the Councell, the Proteſtants, and his owne affections, being alſo entred into a new warre againſt the French king: the Turkes and pirats of Afrike ſpoiled the coaſts of Naples and Sicile, whereof Spaine was not free. The chiefe Leader of theſe theeues was Dragut Rais (whom others call Orgut) who had ſurprized the towne ſometimes called Aphrodiſium, and in our time was named Afrike by vs, and Mehedie by the Moores, belonging to the realme of Tunes, ſometimes a rich towne oppoſite to Sicile. This Dragut had ſucceeded Barbarouſſe in boldneſſe and policie, and was bred vp vnder him; of a poore gallie boy, hee grew a noble pirate: hee had beene taken about the Iland of Corſica by Ianetin Doria, and made a gallie ſlaue; but after ſome time he deliuered him for a ſmall ranſome, to the great preiudice of Chriſtendome. Being growne more inſolent than before, he committed infinite ſpoiles vpon Sicile, Calabria, Naples, and the coaſts of Genoua and Spaine, and thruſt on with the like ambition to the two brethren Barbarouſſes hee would haue a retreate for the ſafety of his theſts, and be alſo called Xec or King. Whereupon hee ſurprized this towne of Afrike, which was then well peopled and of great trafficke: by the wealth whereof he made himſelfe fearefull to all the coaſts of Italie and Spaine, and of late ſcouring the Tyrene Seas, whileſt that the gallies were buſie to paſſe and repaſſe the princes D. Philippe and Maximilian, had ſacked and burnt Rapallo. So as the Emperour was daily importuned to chaſe him out of that dangerous neſt, who commanded D. Iohn de Vega, viceroy of Sicile, and Andrew Doria prince of Melfi, the chiefe Author of this enterprize, to gather an army together with all ſpeed for this action. Many voluntaries came to reuenge the publike and priuate wrongs, and to win honour, but eſpecially with the hope of ſpoyle, which they thought would be very rich, for beſides the great booties, which Dragut brought, he had with large rewardes drawne many merchants thither, and namely the Iewes which were expelled Spaine and Portugall were retired to that towne. Andrew Doria ſoliciting the preparation of the fleete, whereof hee was generall, the Emperour hauing giuen the charge at land to the viceroy of Italie: and for that he thought that before the whole armie ſhould be ready to goe into Barbarie, this cunning pirate might doe ſome harme vnto the Chriſtians, he therefore aduertized D. Bernardin de Mendoſa generall of the gallies of Spaine, to ſtand vpon his gard on that coaſt. Hauing then receiued three gallies from the duke of Florence, foure from Malta, and three from the Pope, with thoſe of Naples and Sicile, making in all foure and fiftie gallies, well manned both with ſouldiers and mariners, in the end of Iune they bent their courſe towards the towne of Afrike: hauing viewed it, and burnt ſome veſſelles belonging to the Moores, it was reſolued firſt of all to take Muniſterio a little towne neere it with a caſtle, the which hauing few inhabitants, Dragut had fortified with a good garriſon of Turkes beeing to bee feared that whileſt they were at the ſiege of Afrike, he might annoy them continually from thence, if the pirate who was then abroad ſhould make his retreate thither with any number of veſſelles, as hee was pretended to doe, neither was hee out of hope to ſuccour them. The towne was taken with ſmall toile, but finding it a worke of more difficultie, to force the caſtle, beeing brauely defended by the Moores and Turkes, they cauſed D. Garcia de Toledo generall of the gallies of Naples to land, who battering the Caſtle with eleuen peeces of ordonnance, made a breach, the which they defended long, but in vaine, for in the end they were all ſlaine or taken priſoners: the Chriſtians hauing loſt aboue three ſcore of their beſt ſouldiers, beſides a cannon breaking in one of the gallies, it ſplit and ſuncke, yet they ſaued all the men and furniture. Then they turned towardes Afrike, Doria hauing furniſhed himſelfe with munition at Goulette, and ſent to leuie more men in Naples

12 Afrike a towne in the realme of Tunes taken by the Spaniards.

Muniſterio in Afrike taken by the Chriſtians.

A ples and Sicile: and then did D. Iohn de Vega paſſe, hauing left his ſonne D. Aluaro to gouerne the Iland. They ſpent ſome time about this new prouiſion, ſo as the Turkes within Afrike had more leiſure to fortifie themſelues, both with men and all other neceſſaries: which made the ſiege tedious and difficult to the great loſſe of the Chriſtians, for that Dragut hauing an intent to draw the army from that enterpriſe, ſpoiled the coaſts of Italie, and burnt ſome weake places, doing the like at ſea to the Merchants; ſo as Bernardin of Mendoſa had worke to defend the coaſt of Spaine, whileſt that this pirate annoyed the Ilands of Majorca, Corſica, and Elba: but this could not remoue Doria from his reſolution, who held it an vnprofitable thing to ſpend that ſummer in running after Dragut. The Chriſtians fleete being returned well furniſhed to beſiege the towne of A- 1552
B frike, and the ſituation and ſtrength thereof being well obſerued by Vega and other captaines of experience, there were diuers opinions among them, for the difficulties that were propounded by one and other. The towne ſtands vpon a long tongue of land, right againſt Sicile, being three miles in compaſſe, it lookes towards Malta, and Gerbe, and is enuironed by the ſea on three partes, the fourth beeing to be attempted by land, and therefore it was ſo ſecured as it could not be battred with anie armed veſſells, but on two narrow flankes, the reſt of the channell beeing ſo ſhallow, as no veſſell of anie burthen could approach; ſo as they found this enterpriſe more difficult than they did at the firſt conceiue it. They held the wall towards the firme land to be well fortified, with fiue towers of equall diſtance, and a great rauelin in the moſt eminent place, the which did
C come farre forth, and was well flanked. The queſtion then was, on which ſide they ſhould batter it, for to attempt it by ſea they held it impoſſible, for that none but ſmall gallies could come neere it: ſome would haue the rauelin firſt battered by land, for that it would annoy them much that ſhould goe vnto the aſſault, if they ſhould batter the curtine: And others maintained that it was more eaſie to make a breach in the Curtine, and hauing battered the defences which flanked it, to ſecure themſelues with it, and with ſome trauerſe: for that it was not the cuſtome of warre to attempt a place where it was ſtrongeſt; but weakeſt: with this aduice they planted their ordnance, and beganne to batter from the breake of daie vntill night, finding that old wall more hard to ruine than they expected: wherefore hauing viewed the breach, and finding it not ſufficient, they left
D it to make another: And in the meane time they had ſo battred the defences of the rauelin, as the defendants could no more vſe them, and the rather, for that the Spaniards were ſo farre aduaunced with their trenches, as they ouerthrew any that ſhewed themſelues with their ſmall ſhot, ſo as they thought they might well attempt it there by ſcalado. They had already retired their ordnance from their firſt batterie, holding it fruitleſſe, and wholy relying vpon their ſecond: wherewith the Generalls were much grieued (not well agreeing among themſelues) knowing what a blemiſh to their reputations, and a loſſe to Chriſtendome their retreat would bee: wherefore they laied hold of that courſe, which was held to bee the onelie meanes to take the towne: They had ſpent great ſtore of munition in their batteries, and beganne to be ſcanted; and E therefore they were fully reſolued to ſcale the rauelin, and to make a diuerſion towards the ſea, the gallies ſhould at the ſame inſtant make an offer to aſſaile the towne on that ſide. Wherefore on the ſecond daie of Iuly the Spaniards of the regiment of Sicile, gaue an aſſault to the rauelin, with great courage and reſolution, and entred it, where they might haue preuayled, if they of the gallies had come forwards with the like courage, or at the leaſt with that order that was ſet downe: but hauing ſhewed themſelues too late, they made no diuerſion, and they that had entred the rauelin, were repulſed with great loſſe: which ſucceſſe did wonderfully afflict the whole campe, not knowing what courſe to take to ſaue their honours, ſo as there was ſmall hope in this ſiege, through the diſagreement of the Commaunders, either of their ſeeking to execute
F his charge apart, whenas the ſituation of the place required an vnion both of minds and forces.

Situation of the towne of Afrike.

Aſſault giuen in vaine at Afrike.

They wanted ſouldiers by their continuall skirmiſhes, the Moores and Turkes defending it with an vndaunted courage; they wanted munition, and were ſhortened for victualles, hauing none but what came from Sicile, which could be in time prouided.

It

1553 It was therefore reſolued to ſend Marc Centurione to Genoua for new men, who brought G in tenne gallies twelue hundred Spaniſh foot, which were giuen him by the gouernour of Milan, and ſome munition from the common weale of Genoua, and the Duke of Florence, which fortified the campe and gaue them courage to make new enterpriſes.
They were aduertiſed by a Moore, that Dragut beeing retired into Barbarie, was reſolued to relieue them by land, who hauing made the Moores his friends, by his great bounty and valour, gathered a great number of them together, which ioyned to ſeuen hundred Turkes, hee thought might worke ſome good effect, who making often attempts, and they of the towne ſallying out at the ſame inſtant, did much annoy the Chriſtians, till in the end many beeing ſlaine in a furious skirmiſh, and many more hurt, hee diſpaired of euer doing good. It was not without loſſe to the victors, who had manie H Dragut ſeeks to releeue the towne of Afrike ſlaine, and of great valour; amongſt which was Fernando de Toledo: Some ſay hee was gouernour of Goulette, and others, marſhall of the campe to the Spaniſh foot. Matters being thus bettered within the campe, for that after this attempt, Dragut had retired himſelfe to Gerbe, to attend the ruine of his neſt, they reſolued to make triall of their laſt force, and not ſuffer themſelues to be ſurprized with the fall of the leafe, which vpon that coaſt would hazard the loſſe of their fleete. They concluded therefore to make three batteries, two by land, and one by ſea; with a caualier or mount made of timber and earth, and ſet vpon two gallies, whereon they might plant ſome peeces of batterie. I

This being brought vnto the wall towards the ſea, wrought a wonderfull effect, and ſo did thoſe at land, for that vſe had taught them better the nature of that place, where they had made many attempts and ſpent much munition. On the tenth day of Srptem-ber they came to the aſſault with great reſolution and good order in all three places; where they found very great reſiſtance, but it was firſt entred by the ſea, where they found the wall weakeſt, and therefore had made the greater breach: they wonne it foot by foot, and in the end many of them being retired into the rauelin to make their laſt reſiſtance vnder a Turke, which was their leader, they neuer gaue it ouer, vntill death; Afrike taken by D. Iohn de Vega. ſo as the ſlaughter was great: There were manie priſoners taken, ſome ſay aboue tenne thouſand, others but ſeuen thouſand. The wealth was not ſo great as was expected, K for that euer ſince Dragut was Lord thereof, it was nothing but a retreat for theeues and pirats. The priſoners were carried into Sicile, whereas the women and children were ſold good cheape, the men that were fit for labour, were diſtributed among the gallies.
The viceroy cauſed the breaches and ruines to be repayred, and left a garriſon of Spaniards there, vnder the commaund of D. Aluaro his ſonne. Whileſt that the armie remained there for the finiſhing of the fortifications, they had a cruell ſtorme, which continued foure daies, and did them much harme, after which they returned all home ſafely, to the great ioy of all Italie, for this victorie. Muley Haſcen the diſpoſſeſſed king of Tunes died at this ſiege. Soone after the Viceroyes returne, it was reſolued in the Emperours councell, that the towne of Afrike ſhould be raſed, as a place lying too farre off, of great L charge, and hard to be kept.

Birth of Henrie Burbon King of France and of Nauarre. 13 This yere one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and three Ioane of Albret the preſumptiue heire of Nauarre, was deliuered of a ſonne, and he was named Henrie, who ſhould ioyne the rights of Nauarre to them of the houſe Bourbon which made him apprehend the Crowne of France.

Dragut after the loſſe of the towne of Afrike, beeing retired into the Iland of Gerbe, hee aduertized Sultan Solyman of his loſſe, who retained him into his ſeruice, and honored him with charges. Doria beeing aduertized in the Spring, that Dragut was gone to Gerbe, whereas by a long narrow channell, hee entred into a poole, where hee might at eaſe trimme his gallies, and goe out to his theeuing at pleaſure, Dorias ar- M Dragut beſie-ged at Gerby by Doria eſcapes cunningly. mie came ſodainely vpon him and beſieged him, who to defend his veſſelles had a Tower which garded the channell, and withall, hee had built a Baſtion to couer him.
Notwithſtanding they muſt in a ſhort time haue all periſhed with hunger; both hee with his Turkes, and the Moore which was Lord of that Iland, who beeing loath to breake his faith, would not yeelde him priſoner to Doria, yet hee perſuaded him

to

A to finde some meanes to escape, else they should bee all famished, for that the Iland was but little, barren, and had small prouisions to liue withall. Being then forced by necessitie, hee set all his Turkes, Moores, and slaues to worke, who beganne to make a channell in a lower part, the which hee continued daie and night vntill hee came vnto the sea, neyther was hee discouered by the enemies. And so in the night time hee escaped this imminent daunger with admiration, Doria being much discontented that the Turke had circumuented him with such a stratageme, and moreouer that in his retreate hee had taken two of his gallies: but not so satisfied, pursuing this pirate, hee lost seuen more, which were cast away in a storme, with the death of aboue a thousand persons. The Turkes armie beeing then at sea, B and Dragut ioyned with it, beeing in all a hundred and fiue gallies, and thirtie other vesselles, they entred into the streight of Messina, and tooke the towne of Augusta in Sicile, which in auncient times was called Megara, from thence he landed in the Iland of Malta, and attempted the strong Castell of Saint Angelo in vaine: then comming to the Iland of Goze, they sacked it, and carried away many slaues. Finally he came into Barbarie, and tooke Tripoly from the Knights of Malta, hauing held it forty yeeres. 1554

And new Dorias gallies lost.

There was some discord betwixt Amida King of Tunes, and D. Lewis Perez gouernour of Goulette, who pretended that the Barbarian after the vsuall manner of the Moores had broken his faith with the Emperour, touching the accord made with C Muley Hascen, when he was put in possession, and therefore he annoyed him much: so as Amida fearing worse, made a new accord, and bound himselfe to giue euerie yeare vnto the Emperour twelue thousand crownes, to pay the garrison of Goulette, and moreouer fifteene Barbarie horses, and eighteene faulcons, to furnish wood for the vse of Goulette, to release all Christian slaues within his realme, and not to suffer anie more to be made, and finally, that hee should not receiue anie pirates, but should aide and defend the Emperour with all his forces against any one that should seeke to offend him.

Amida a King of Tunes makes a new accord with the emperour.

The marriage of D. Iohn prince of Portugall, sonne to King Iohn the third, and of D. Ioane the Emperours daughter, was consummated in the yeere one thousand fiue D hundred fiftie and foure, the which confirmed the friendship and alliances betwixt their houses and states. But this yong prince who was not fully seuenteene yeeres old, dyed within a yere after his marriage, leauing the princesse his wife with child, who eighteene dayes after was deliuered of a sonne, whom they named D. Sebastian, King Iohn and Queene Katherine hauing not any more children remaining: D. Ioane being risen from her child-bed, went into Castille to goueme the realme in the name of the Emperour Charles her father. 1554 Portugall. 14 Birth of D. Sebastian of Portugall.

The Emperour finding himselfe much broken and troubled with many infirmities, made his will about that time at Brussells, committing in the meane time the execution of many things to his sonne D. Philip, for that which concerned the affaires of Italie: And E as for Flanders and the Countries adioyning, he himselfe with Queene Marie his sister, widow to Lewis king of Hungarie, would goueme.

15 This yeare a marriage was concluded betwixt D. Philippe prince of Spaine, and Marie Queene of England, for the effecting whereof the Prince made preparation to go into England, hauing foure score great shippes and fortie carauells, in the which, besides the noblemen and knights which did attend the Prince, with their ordinarie traine there were foure thousand foote, Spaniards to defend the fleete, and to serue in Flaunders, in the warre against the French: he tooke shipping in Biscay hauing a prosperous wind, leauing for gouernesse in Spaine D. Ioane his sister, who (as we haue said) was in the beginning of the yeare, left a widow by the prince of Portugall. About the middest of F Iulie hee came within sight of Hampton, where there was a fleete of sixe and thirtie shippes, some of the Queenes, some of the low Countries attended to gard him, it being dangerous sailing vpon that coast; there came from Southampton a shippe royally appointed, being followed by tenne others, which were sent by the Queene to receiue the princes person, and his whole Court, in the which were many noblemen of England

Marriage of D. Philip and Marie Queene of England.

1555 land ſent to that end, and to preſent vnto him the order of the Garter, which he receiued with a ioyfull countenance, and put the garter on his left leg. Hee would not haue anie go into the ſhip with him, but the duke of Alba, Ruy Gomes de Silua, Antonio de Toledo and Pedro Lopes, the firſt was his lord ſteward, the ſecond lord chamberlain, the third maſter of his horſe, and the laſt a ſteward alſo; but afterwards other noblemen and the whole court landed, with their furniture, which continued three days. During the princes ſtay there, he was entertained with all the ſtate that might be deſired, from thence he went to Wincheſter, where the Queene attended him, and where the marriage was celebrated. On the 25 of that month, there was firſt read the renunciation of the emperour his father, by the which he reſigned vnto him the realme of Naples, & then the articles of the capitulation made in regard of that marriage. The Emperour would not, neyther did the Engliſh thinke it fit their Queene ſhould marrie with any one that had not the title of a King, ſo as the realme of Naples was aſſigned vnto him, and ſoone after the Duchie of Milan. Whereupon the Marques of Peſcara was ſent to Naples, to take poſſeſſion in his name, which ceremonie was done the 25 of Nouember, with great ſolemnity in the preſence of cardinall Pacheco, then viceroy, and of the prince of Biſignano, who was created Sindic of the city to that end.

Philippe made king of Naples.

Death of pope Iulio the third.

In the yeere 1555 died pope Iulio de Monte, hee was of a quiet diſpoſition, louing his people, but irreſolute in his greateſt affaires; which grew of a deſire he had to be friend both to the French king and Emperour, who hauing not that art that was requiſite to reconcile their old quarrels, hee found himſelfe often deceiued in his deſignes, and was not beloued of any of them. He was ſucceeded by Marcel Ceruin of Montepulciano, cardinall of Sancta Croix, a man of a verie good life, giuing great hope of his good gouernment; but hee died within three weekes after his election, confirming a common opinion in the people of Rome, that the Popes which change not their name, die preſently. His ſucceſſour Iohn Peter Caraffa cardinall of Oſtia, failed not to change his name, whom they named Paul the fourth; hee was called Chietin or Thietin, of the name of an Order of religious men, whereof hee had beene the Author, at ſuch time as hee was Biſhop of Chieti or Thieti in Abruzzo, he was alſo ſurnamed the Warrior.

Death of pope Marcel.

Pope Paul the fourth.

Death of queen Ioane the emperours mother.

16 The ſame yeare Queene Ioane mother to the Emperour died in the towne of Tordeſillas, hauing beene alwayes troubled in her ſences, and diſtracted, ſince the death of king Philippe her husband, vntill that ſhe was threeſcore and fifteene yeeres old: this princeſſe troubling her ſelfe infinitely for that ſhe thought ſhe was contemned, and that they kept her as a priſoner, this ambitious humour of commaund would not ſuffer her to take any reſt, ſo as this ſharpe and violent humor of melancholie, which ſhe had as it were by inheritance from the Queene D. Iſabella a Portugall, wife to D. Iohn the ſecond King of Caſtille her grandmother, was continued and augmented in her.

Death of Henry of Albret king Nauarre.

17 Henry of Albret king of Nauarre died about that time at Pau, in the fiftieth yeare of his age. He ordayned as the Kings his predeceſſours had done, that he would be buried in Pampelone, whoſe bodie was layd at Leſcar in Bearne. To whoſe poſſeſſions, and right to the realme of Nauarre, Ioane of Albret his onely daughter ſucceeded, beeing married to Anthonie of Burbon duke of Vendoſme. This realme detained by the Emperour, was in the meane time gouerned by Viceroyes: about the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and fiftie by D. Barnardin Cardenas duke of Magueda, in whoſe time D. Philippe prince of the Aſturies, and heire of Caſtille, Arragon &c. was ſworne prince of Viana: and in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and two D. Bertrand de la Cueua duke of Albuquerque took vpon him the gouernement; it is hee that was in Guipuſcoa whenas the French held Fontarrabie. By him there were certaine light enterpriſes made vpon the frontires of France, and vpon the towne of Saint Iohn de Lus in the precedent warres, and by the diligence of the ſaid Duke of Albuquerque, the prince D. Philip was declared king of Nauarre with the emperours conſent, by the Eſtates of the Countrey, beeing aſſembled at Pampelone, in the yeere one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and ſixe. About this time D. Pedro of Nauarre Marqueſſe of Cortes, and Marſhall of the realme of Nauarre, died at Toledo, leauing for heire to his poſſeſsions D. Ieronima of Nauarre, in fauour of whom her husband D. Iohn de Benauides, was made marſhall.

Gouernors of Nauarre.

Death of D. Pedro of Nauarre Marqueſſe of Cortes.

The

A The warre had beene verie hot theſe laſt yeares betwixt the French and the imperials, vpon the frontiers of Artois and Picardie, and in Piedmont, the which had extended into Tuſcaine, whereas Peter Stroſſy, who commanded the French forces, was defeated in battell by the Marqueſſe of Marignan Generall for the emperour. Sienna had beene long beſeeged by the Imperials, and defended by the French, but in the end it was yeelded, and made ſubiect to the duke of Florence. But the French notwithſtanding this bad ſucceſſe in Tuſcaine, began to grow ſtrong in Piedmont, and ſeemed to threaten the duchie of Milan, where there wanted a Gouernour, D. Ferdinand Gonzague being called in Flaunders to iuſtifie himſelfe, as hee did, of the ſlaun- 1555

Sienna loſeth her liberty.

B ders wherewith hee was taxed by D. Iohn de Luna a Spaniard, Caſtellan of Milan and the Chaunceller Tauerne. Ruy Gomez de Silua imbraced this occaſion, who beeing much beloued by king Philip, and finding the duke of Alba to be a great competitor in his Maieſties fauour, hee had practiſed long by all the policies of a Courteour to ſend him from Court, beſides hee was ſuſpected to fauour them that did moleſt Fernand Gonzague, to the end that being called thence, the duke might haue meanes to bee ſent thither, with a large authoritie, the which ſucceeded according to his deſire for the warre increaſing in Piedment, and ill mannaged by them that commanded, the king reſolued, the emperours Councell being alſo of that minde, to ſend the duke of Alba, to reduce it into ſome better eſtate. But he would not accept of that charge,

C which indeed was great and weighty, if hee might not haue ſuch authoritie giuen him, as hee might gouerne with honour, and hope of good ſucceſſe. Wherefore hee obtained a title, which was neuer before graunted to any of the emperours Miniſters, paſſing with full power and authoritie to gouerne the realme of Naples, and the duchie of Milan, as well in peace as in warre, and to gouerne all as if his Majeſtie were there in perſon. And for that hee knew how weake the forces were in Italie, for want of money, before his departure he would haue great prouiſion made both from the lowe countries, Spaine and Italie; ſo as with an opinion to doe great matters, not onely by the fame of his authoritie and valour, but by the great ſum of money which was aſſigned him, he gaue order for his ſpeedy paſſage beyond the Alpes. Hee ſent Commiſſions

Duke of Alba ſent Viceroy into Italie.

D before to haue men, artillerie, munition, victuals, and pioners in a readineſſe, and himſelfe came in poſt the twelfth of Iune to Milan, the ſucceſſe of that warre you may read in its proper hiſtorie. The duke of Alba hearing of ſome alteration intended vpon the confines of the realmes of Naples, was inuited to goe thither (notwithſtanding that the king had already ſent Bernardine of Mendoſa thither, with the title of Lieutenant, in the place of Cardinall Pacecco, who went away hearing of the dukes arriuall in Italie) making Iohn Baptiſta Caſtaldo his Lieutenant in the ſtate of Milan.

18 The emperour this yeare one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and fiue, broken with toyles of the world, and willing to free himſelfe of ſo great a burthen, and to ſatisfie the deſire of his ſonne king Philip, to whom although he had giuen the title of King of Na-

Emperour Charles reſignes the Gouernment to his ſon

E ples, and afterwards of duke of Milan, yet the gouernment remained at the diſpoſition of the emperors councell, he reſolued to renounce the abſolute gouernment with the titles of al thoſe realmes & ſtates, except the empire, to the which his brother Ferdinand ſhould ſucceed. So calling his ſonne into Flaunders, he made this renunciation with great ceremonies, in the town of Bruſſels, the fiue and twentieth day of October in a great aſſemblie of the Nobilitie, Prelates, and deputies of towns, the Queene of Hungarie, and Maximilian the emperours ſonne in law, with ſome other princes being preſent, but all Spaniards, officers & others of what qualitie ſoeuer, were put out of the hall, and not any ſuffered to ſtay, but ſuch as had buſines, or had beene called. So as from that time all matters were handled by the ſaid kings Councell, and he was called both king of Spaine and Ca-

F tholike. But before the reſignation of all his realmes and eſtates in this honourable aſſemblie, he gaue theſe inſtructions vnto his Sonne for the better gouernment of his eſtate.

1555

The inſtructions of the emperour Charles, when hee reſigned his eſtates, vnto his Sonne Philip. G

IHaue reſolued (moſt deare ſon) to come now to the point of reſigning into your hands the full adminiſtration and abſolute gouernment of al my eſtates & realms, as I haue often told you; wherefore my pleaſure is, that againſt the morning you giue order for the performance of this act with all due ceremonies: you ſhall alſo giue order with ſpeed, by ſending meſſengers into euery part, that both gouernors, inferior magiſtrates and people, acknowledge you (as in duty they are boũd) for their ſuperior, yeelding you due obediẽce, H & that al perſons (except ſuch as are ſubiect to the empire) take the oth of allegeance. The like oth I wil haue the generals of armies & al the commanders of martial forces take, that they may from henceforth in the point of loyalty depend vpon your ſelfe & no other. The more rare this preſident is of princes which haue bin content to reſigne their eſtates vnto their ſucceſſors, the greater are the ſigns not only of my loue to you, but of the aſſurance I haue of your good inclination, & my great care to ſee your eſtate ſetled. I could defer this act (as moſt princes doe) vntill my death; but hauing a deſire rather to imitate the ſmaller number of fathers in this point, I haue choſen willingly by this act in my life time, to make my ſelf a ſuperior, rather than a cõpanion to any. It is a weak trial of the valor & reſolution of a prince, to ſubdue kingdoms by force, in compariſon of conquering himſelf, being thus I far cõtent not only to bridle al ambition & deſire of rule, but to ſubmit himſelfe to a certain kind of obedience. Againſt this courſe, ſenſuality doth ſtriue with all her force, and in exchange of al worldlie ſatisfactiõs which are enioyed by the prerogatiue of abſolute authoritie, ſetteth before our eies the rigor of the laws, to which as to a common bounder, princes (ſetting their authoritie aſide) muſt leuell all their actions, as well as priuat men. To blind our vnderſtanding farther with like vailes, the ſame ſenſuall conſideration ſtirreth vp by way of admonition a prouident forecaſt of diuers inconueniences whereinto many fall, that haue made themſelues ſubiect to the will of other men, by the diuerſitie of their conceits and cenſures, the which by the corruption of the care of priuat intereſt are apt to ſwarue from the right rule of integritie. It may be that ſome wil be terrified with K this common ſuppoſition; that princes which are once poſſeſſed of authoritie may reſigne it at their owne pleaſures, but they muſt reſume it at the pleaſures of other men. Yet fatherly affection hath preuailed in me more than all theſe zealous conſiderations, and duetie alſo in ſome part, for finding my ſelfe now aged (which may bee accompted greater in regard of my ſickely eſtate) my ſatietie of glory in this world, and wearineſſe of toile; finding moreouer that by my continuall trauell vnto this day, I could not ſatiſfie in any part the duetie which belongeth vnto the profeſſion of a Chriſtian; I find my ſelfe inflamed with a moſt earneſt deſire to free my ſelfe from ſo manie troubleſome incombrances, and then retire my ſelfe to a meere religious kind of life, and more fit for a Chriſtian. On the other ſide the conſideration of your age, being now ripe and fit for go- L uernment, together with the expectation which you haue gotten in the world by managing the greateſt affaires of Spaine with great iudgement, do moue me the rather to proceed in my reſolution. Being moued by all theſe good conſiderations, I haue thought it fit to lay this weighty burthen vpon your ſhoulders, and to eaſe mine owne, which time and trauell haue now weakened and diſabled. I do confidently hope that the ſubiects of al my prouinces ſhal haue cauſe to thanke God firſt, and then me, for this reſolution, in reſpect of the gratious vſage they ſhall receiue at your hands, ſucceeding in my place: neither is it hurtfull vnto your ſelfe, that by his occaſion during my life, you ſhall ſettle your ſelfe more firmely in my dominions.

It remaineth then (my moſt deere Sonne) that with the ſame tender and father- M ly affection which hath moued me to this, I put you in minde alſo, that aboue all things you ſet before your eyes, the feare of God, which ought to be the ground of ciuill gouernment, and ſo to frame (as much as in you lies) the hearts of your ſubiects, keeping carefully in mind that which wee cannot prouide (by reaſon of this ſhort & tranſitory life) by any other means, more worthily & more honorably, thẽ by leauing vnto the world

when

A when we are gone a good report of our commendable actions. Perſuade not your ſelfe (deare ſonne) that becauſe the prerogatiue of commanding many eſtates giues great ſatiſfaction and libertie in this world, which euer flattereth the ſenſe of man, that it is not in like manner accompained with many croſſes, and often intermingled with a kind of ſubiection, either by the reſtleſſe iealouſie with which the mindes of Princes that demeane themſelues diſorderly are tormented, or in reſpect of the cõtinual care which they take for the preſeruation of their eſtates. Deceiue not your ſelfe in beleeuing that the regiment hath any kind of proportion with thoſe mightie burthens which are impoſed on you by my giuing place; for whereas Spain is a realme of ancient ſucceſſion, and therefore firme
B and ſecure, the eſtates of Flaunders, Italie, and Germanie, are more ſtrange vnto you, beſides they are more variable and troubleſome in their owne diſpoſition, and their opportunity of crauing aide from Princes which are mighty & buſie which confine vpon their countries is more dangerous. Ad hereunto that many kingdoms bring many cares, for euerie ſinal addition (where the burthen was ſufficient before) putteth al things out of order, euen as a ſtomacke which hath once receiued what ſufficeth nature, euery ſuperfluous bit cauſeth an indigeſtiõ & ſurfet of that which ſhold ſerue for ſuſtenance. He makes a great tryal of himſelfe that gouerns one ſtate well, but to gouern more than one well, is almoſt aboue the force of man. No man can at one time attend diuers actions, for euerie ſhip muſt haue her proper pilot, euery armie his general, & much more doth euery eſtate
C craue a particuler gouernor. But the greedines of mã hath ſo much exceeded theſe prefixed boũds, & forced reaſon with ſuch violẽt aſſaults, as the greater princes are the more deſirous they are to get. It is now held baſenes, not onely to depart from any thing alreadie gotten, being more than enough, but not to ſeek by al means to increaſe it. But ſeeing reaſon is ſo far ouermaſtred herein by ſenſualitie, and that our age is wholy diſpoſed to ambitious deſigns, I wil forbeare to ſpend any more idle words, in perſuading you to that, the contrarie wherof is generally obſerued. I wil rather yeeld this libertie to the worlds abuſe; with this excuſe notwithſtanding, that either all, or the greater part (and eſpecially thoſe that are accompted generous) do the like, and would euer do, if opportunity and meanes were anſwerable to their deſires. But yet I require you with all loue, that you endeuour
D by all meanes to correct this common error, and aſpiring humor in your ſelfe, ayming at a greater good, which is, to gouern wel thoſe ſubiects that are vnder your command: the which is honorable to the world, & acceptable in the ſight of God. To this end I muſt let you vnderſtand that the liues of princes ſtand like glaſſes before their ſubiects eyes, who looking daily into the ſame, as the liuelie mirrors wherunto they ſhould endeuor to conforme their courſes with al obedience & loyalty, they diſcern more eaſily the good & bad that is therein exemplified: wherefore how circumſpect and powerfull ſoeuer princes be, they muſt not thinke that their actions can bee concealed from the world; for although during their own liues they may ſomtimes ſeale vp their ſubiects mouthes, ſtay their tongs and reſtrain their pens, yet ſoon after they wil breake out with greater violence, & inueigh
E more bitterly againſt their honors. Wherfore let your carriage be ſuch towards your ſubiects, that in reſpect of the great care they find you haue of thẽ, they may the better like of your directions, repoſe themſelues vpon your wiſdom, & liue ſecurely & contentedly vnder the protection of your valor, for that the mutuall affection & loue betwixt the prince and his ſubiects, doth vndoubtedly ſpring from this root. Remember alwaies, that it is fit that he which gouerneth a ſtate, ſhold be as vigilant & carefull of the quiet & ſafety therof, as a ſhepheard is of his flock, or houſholder of his familie. To giue a certaine rule concerning this point, I would haue you to vnderſtand that all the cares which princes take of their eſtates are referred to the conſideration of one of theſe two times, that is, either of peace or war, betwixt which two al our actions are ſpent, and therfore it is wiſely ſaid, that
F the maieſty of a prince hath as great need to be aſſiſted with a councel of great policie & wiſe fore-caſt in time of peace, as of a great and ſtrong armie in time of war. Wherefore a princes whole care & courſe ought to be in the firſt time to haue a reſpect to his ſubiects quiet & content, and in the later to their ſecuritie, from whence groweth ſatisfaction on both ſides. And men without all queſtion are more ſecurely gouerned with good intreaty vnder a voluntarie ſubiection, than by inforced ſeruitude, and more firmly kept in obedi-

1555

1555 ence by loue than by violence. A Prince ſhold euer preſer the leauing of his dominions to G his ſucceſſors by meanes of the peoples loue, leſſe abſolute & more durable, than by their feare leſſe durable, yet more abſolute: It is feare that holds the ſubiects loues, and bridleth their inſolent deſires, but no longer than ſome freſh occaſiō is offered to ſhake this ſeruile yoake from their necks, and to ſettle their loues and loyalties vpon ſome other mighetie potentate, who ſhall bee both willing and able to protect them from all wrongs, which being once done, they will neuer be willingly drawne to their firſt obedience. It doth alſo often happen that the ſecret hatred which proceedeth from feare, inforceth them without any reſpect to make attempts for their deliuerie. Some hold that the beſt way for a prince to keepe his people quiet, is to keepe them poore: but in my opinion H they ſtray much from the path of policie: The reaſon is, for that euerie hope or likelyhood of bettering their eſtates vnder other rulers, mooueth them to lay newe plots, and to deſire innouations. I doe as little allow of their policie, who to di-uert their ſubiects from practiſing any alterations hold them in continuall action, eſpecially if their imployments be barbarous and baſe; for beſides that it breakes their hearts, experience doth teach that for deſire of eaſe they will affect alterations, for as the end of feare deſerues reproofe, ſo the meanes that leade thereunto are alſo re-prooueable. How much the way of winning the peoples loue ought to be preferred before the courſe of keeping them in awe, may eaſily appeare by a due conſideration of the cauſes from whence theſe affections haue their beginning: The cauſes of the I peoples loue are juſtice, gracious vſage, and fauours, all which deſerue praiſe: The cauſes of their feare are grieuances, ill vſage and oppreſſion, which merit blame. Looke what the cauſe is, ſuch is commonly the effect, whereby it followes neceſſarily, that as out of loue is drawne a regiment more firme and ſtable, though more moderate, ſo out of feare proceeds a kind of power more abſolute in ſhew, but yet leſſe durable: the like proportion holdes in the peoples hearts, for where they loue there is all ſatisfaction, mirth, ſweet conuerſation and dutifull reſpect, but where they feare, there is ſuſpition, ſtrangenes, diſcontent, quarrels, melancholie. Out of the impreſſions which feare breeds wee can expect no better fruits than hatred, but from that deuotion which loue kindleth aſſured confidence, whereupon we ground the common prouerbe, Loue is among kinſ- K folkes, and feare among enemies. The parts which beſide reſpect of Religion, are required in a Prince for the better gouernment of his eſtates, & ſetling in his ſubiects hearts a loue, and reuerent reſpect both of his perſon & ſtate, are chiefly three, Faith, Iuſtice & Continencie: Faith makes him intire in all his proceedings, and a man of his word, for without it no man would giue credit either to his practiſes or promiſes: Continencie makes him to be reuerenced with reſpect, and imitated with commendation; it giueth him an excellent aduantage in a large field; correcting ſeuerely the faults of ſubiects that offend in that degree, the which he could not doe without bluſhing if himſelfe were culpable: Iuſtice teacheth a prince how to reward the good and to puniſh the bad, to giue euerie man his due, to reſtraine men by correction that are apt to erre, & to incourage others by rewards that L are deſirous to deſerue wel: beſides it makes the princes bloud, his honor, and his eſtate ſecure, without which vertue no force is able to keep the ſubiects faithfully affected to their Soueraigne, for it is the propertie of all people when as they neither find reward of good deſerts, nor puniſhment of offences, to grow firſt into diſtruſt, & then into deſpaire, which paſſions corrupt their mindes, hauing once gotten the maſteric. Wherefore let the due conſideration of what is iuſt and honeſt bee alwaies preferred in all your princely purpoſes, that being once ſetled in the ſubiects hearts, that iuſtice is duely admi-niſtred, they will euer remaine ſatisfied with your direction, eſpecially if beſides this fauour, they liue in aboundance, hauing free traffike to all parts, and quiet-neſſe of minde, for men toile and trauell during the courſe of their liues, not only M for their Princes & ſuperiors, but for themſelues and families. Doubtleſſe, to maintain the people in aboundance of al things neceſſarie for the preſeruation of their liues, is not only commendable in a prince, but doth worke great effectes in winning the hearts of men, the which may bee eaſily prouided for, by a carefull fore-ſight of the times of dearth, making diligent prouiſion for neceſſaries in due time, ſo as the benefitte may who-ly

A lie redound to the peoples eaſe, and not to the princes gaine, by inhaunſing of prices and preferring of priuate benefit before publike content. A prince may alwaies hold himſelfe rich when as his ſubjects that liue vnder him, are rich; for vpon any extremitie he ſhall bee frankely releeued by their beneuolence: good vſage ſetleth their loues, and bindeth their deuotions. Experience teacheth, that fauours of this kind are neuer forgotten, that a ſmall conſideration in time of need winnes more vnfained loue than greater benefits when there is plentie: And that thoſe fauours haue alwaies had deepeſt impreſſions in mens gratefull thought, which concerne maintenance and the preſeruation of life in time of neceſſitie. It is ſufficient for a prince in this cauſe of prouiſion, to take order
B that hee loſe not by the bargaine, or if hee deſire to gaine ſomething for the releeſe of other charges, let it bee no more than an honeſt merchant with a good conſcience may gaine, for to theſe bounds may the politike prouiſion of princes ayme, but no farther, either in reſpect of honour or authoritie. If a Prince will bee beloued of his people, hee muſt giue them cauſe to thinke that hee loueth them; aſſuring himſelfe that their thākfulnes muſt grow from his deſert, their loue from his prouidence, & their content frō the peace and ſecuritie which they enioy vnder him; and that according to the fruits of fauour which the people reape by the Princes policie, they frame themſelues to liue contentedly, vnder the gracious ſhadow and protection of his princely wings, relying vpon his wiſdome and carefull gouernement. Otherwiſe there is no doubt but, ſubiection
C being in it ſelfe both burthenſome and odious, they would ſoone take ſome new courſe to ſettle their quiet and ſecuritie by ſome other means, freeing themſelues from all cauſe of feare, which (as I haue ſaid before) is leſſe durable, and leſſe ſecure, and therefore leſſe pleaſing to the ſtate of a Chriſtian Gouernour. Let no Prince imagin that with ſolemne ſhewes and publike ſights alone ſubiects are delighted and pleaſed in their own conceits, for thoſe things are not acceptable, but whē as their minds are ſatisfied in matters which do import them more. Vpon this ground and to the ſame end I muſt alſo aduiſe you in any caſe to vſe that moderation which is fit in charging the people with tributes or any other kind of impoſitions, for albeit that States cannot bee ruled without ſome kind of releeſe, in reſpect of the manie occaſions and exceſſiue charges wherewith Princes are
D burthened in times of peace, but much more in time of war; yet vnto euerie thing there belongs a meane, which in all occurrents is the perfect rule of humane actions, eſpecially thoſe which any way grieue the ſubiects hearts, conſidering that euerie princes power is grounded vpon their conformitie to his directions and vniforme aſſent to ſerue and honor him: wherfore this meane muſt be ſought out with all care, & being found it muſt be put in practiſe with great temperance, and worthily preferred before all other courſes, ſeeme they neuer ſo commodious and profitable. If the continuall toile of warre hath inforced mee at anie time to holde a heauie hand ouer my ſubiects in this kinde, I proteſt this courſe was alwaies againſt mine owne liking. Touching this point of obſeruing a conuenient meane in all impoſitions and taxes, you muſt conſider that the reuenues
E of a prince, whether they be publike or priuate, are raiſed two waies, the firſt by augmentation of the old, the other by addition of new, for vnto theſe two heads all the intentions to get money which are put in practiſe by the princes of our age may bee reduced.

In like maner the waies by which mony may be drawn from the ſubiect & others, are voluntarie or forced. The voluntarie may be contained in the ſale of cuſtoms, offices, and other like alienations of commodities and rents. That which is forced may in like maner be exemplified in ſuch taxes and ordinarie tributes, as are impoſed vpon the people without recompence: the firſt hath in it a kind of ſweetneſſe, for that it is ſeldome vrged by neceſſitie: wherfore it is requiſit to limit the other kind by this, and when neceſſitie requires
F rather to ſel offices & rents, than to inuent any new grieuāces to the people. I haue many times reſolued with my ſelf to deale after this maner, but haue euer bin diuerted by occurrents from bringing into my ſtate that cuſtom of ſelling of offices, and making magiſtrates for life, which is vſed in the court of Rome, for it is a matter of great import, & a means to bring a ſudden gain into the princes purſe, for the next vacatiō, either by remoue, imploiment, or death, yeeldeth as much or very little leſſe than the ordinarie rent, which by 1555 their accompt is to bee anſwered. No doubt this was a courſe of great conſide- G ration, and of eſpeciall commoditie to the ſuperiour, as may bee gathered by this reaſon of experience: That the Popes in how great pouertie ſoeuer they finde the Church at their firſt entrie to the Sea, yet they neuer want meanes to procure money after the firſt beginning of their gouernment.

It is true that in the Court of Rome, as it ſhould ſeeme, the ſale of Offices, which haue annexed vnto them ordinarie adminiſtration of juſtice, brings not ſo great danger vnto the State, as it would doe in other Realmes, for that auarice is not the chiefe obiect in that place, of mens intents, but rather hope to raiſe themſelues to greater honour from this ground, and acceſſe at all times vnto the Pope, vpon this occaſion, H which carrieth with it many other eſpeciall commodities. But the Princes of the world may in like manner deuiſe to ſet ambition in the eye of Officers, as the obiect and end of their offer to buie Offices, by rewarding ſuch as carrie themſelues well with great honours, and diſgracing thoſe that ſhall deale otherwiſe. By this meanes you may change the obiect of your Officers, from couetouſneſſe to a deſire of rule, and to ſupply the humours of authoritie, which is alwaies acceſſarie to Ambition.

The ſecond meanes to ſeeke reliefe from the ſubiect (which I tearmed forced) is heauie and odious, yet by the good diſcretion of Miniſters which deale in thoſe affaires, and by the preſidents of other countries lying neere about, where they are op- I preſſed by their Gouernours, this griefe may bee much qualified. The Prince in this caſe may doe much good vnto himſelfe, by giuing eaſie acceſſe vnto his perſon when occaſion doth ſerue; for hee muſt take a fit time to acquaint them with his occaſi-ons, hee muſt ſeeke in ſome ſort to free himſelfe of their hard conceite, and eaſe the other part by fauours of an other kinde: hee muſt juſtifie his actions in the iudge-ment of the world, eyther by prouing the cauſe of this grieuance to bee verie vrgent, or colouring the ſame ſo cunningly as it may at the leaſt appeare ſo, or endeuouring to ſend ſome away ſatisfied, if it bee poſſible. This not voluntarie, or forced way, is ſubdiuided into two other parts, into perpetuall burthens, as cuſtomes, or temporarie: as ſubſidies: and this later at the time of the firſt impoſing, makes K people to grieue for a while in reſpect of the paine which pincheth them, but this greefe cannot long endure, for that one inſtant, and one paiment freeth them, eſpe-cially if the prince make proteſtation of his vnwillingneſſe, and with all make apparent to the peoples meane capacitie, the neceſſarie cauſe that vrgeth him thereun-to. The other kind is farre more grieuous and offenſiue, albeit in time the people grow better acquainted with that courſe, and beare it as well as they can, for that there is no remedie. Sodaine impoſitions, although they ſeeme grieuous at the firſt, yet by a prince whoſe lineall ſucceſſion is not well ſetled, ought to bee preferred, as potions which are more ſharp and yet more quicke in operation, are before thoſe that are more gentle, yet long and tedious in curing the ſicke; and the rather in this caſe, for that Princes cofers L are ſuddenly repleniſhed. Aboue all things you muſt haue a great care, that during the leuie of this aid, your Officers adde nothing to the burthen, either by extremitie, diſcur-teſie, or demaund of fees, for we find daily that by ſuch extraordinarie extortions, men are more incenſed in reſpect of the wrong and violence, then with the principall, which is diſburſed for the ſatisfaction of their Soueraigne: The ſubiect is much impoueriſhed by this hard courſe, and yet the Prince reapes no benefit thereby; nay when hee ſhall haue need to craue a new ſupply and aide from them, hee findes them more feeble and leſſe able to relieue his wants. Rents increaſe by raiſing new impoſitions vpon occaſi-on; by bettering the trade, by reducing forfeitures to the princes pleaſure, by limiting all neceſſarie charges, and cutting off ſuch as are ſuperfluous. The field of raiſing new M rents is exceeding large, yet the prince is bound to walke in it with all poſſible reſpect, ſo farre as it concernes the peoples grieuance: hee muſt eſpecially abſtaine from impoſing of heauie cuſtoms vpon ſuch things as his ſubiects are inforced to ſend abroad, as Sicile doth graine, and the Realme of Naples wine and Silke. The like conſideration is to bee had of things brought in from foreine parts for the ſupply of other wants at home: for

vpon

A vpon theſe two reaſons experience and time hath grounded the ordinarie traffique that holdeth betwixt countries for their naturall neceſſities. Wherefore in theſe cauſes princes ought to haue a care that their reuenues may bee aunſwered in a meane, rather than by exceſſe; for the more moderate cuſtomes are, the greater ſtore of needfull things are brought home vnto our doores, in reſpect of the great gaine which marchants make by ſelling at the ſecond hand: and for the like reſpect the greater ſtore of ſuperfluous things are tranſported by the ſubiects into foraine parts. By this meanes the rent is rayſed farre aboue the meaſure which a great impoſition would yeeld: The people want no foraine commodities for their reliefe, and yet their purſes are filled by the vent of ſuperfluous
B things at home; ſo as they may be the better able both to ſatisfie their princes cuſtome, and contribute alſo vpon ſuch reaſonable occaſions as ſhall occurre in policie: vpon other things which are rather brought in for wantonneſſe and pleaſure, than for neceſſarie vſe, a more weightie impoſition may bee layed, for the eſtate (which may well forbeare theſe looſſe commodities) is not damnified thereby, if ſome, to ſatisfie their humors, will needs buy, it skilleth not though they pay ſomewhat deerer for their fantaſies. Beſides, ſome are diſcouraged ſometimes with the great price, which otherwiſe would acquaint themſelues too much with the pleaſures which make men effeminate. Princes that ſeeke to increaſe their old rents, by raiſing of their woonted impoſitions, muſt be careful, that they doe it rather with a limitation of the cuſtomers commoditie and gaine, that le-
C uies it, than with the peoples loſſe, that aunſwers it: for a grieuance in this kind were in effect as ill as any other impoſition. There muſt be a care alſo taken, that a conuenient reſpite may be allowed the ſubiect for the payment of his taske. As for example, if the prince haue need of money in Summer, then to ſeſſe the ſubiects the Winter before; for they are apt to take the time of this delay for a kind fauour. This leuie of money muſt be put into the hands of ordinarie officers, and not to appoint any new to diſquiet them, or to rifle their wealth, vnder colour of ſeruice to the State; for ſuch parts are moſt hatefull vnto them. But, as I ſayed before, a prince ought firſt to conſider, whether it be poſſible by ſelling or ingaging ſome part of his reuenues, to ſupplie the vrgent occaſions of his eſtate, before hee ſeeke to helpe himſelfe by the purſe and ſweat of his ſub-
D iects: for otherwiſe, as the wiſer ſort perceiue that, whatſoeuer they doe or ſay, they ſhall bee ſtill forced to contribute to their ſuperiour; that on the one ſide their old burthens are increaſed, and on the other, all meanes cut off, by which they might haue vent for their commodities; all traffique either ouerthrowen, or much decayed, by the which they were woont to releeue their wants with foraine commodities, it is not poſſible but they will eagrely deſire an alteration, and attempt it by all meanes poſſible. Touching this point of moleſting the ſubiects with impoſitions as little as may be, it importeth much, that they be agreeable to the nature of the countrey where they liue, that the people may beare the burthen more eaſily; for from thoſe places which yeeld nothing but men, princes may not demaund money. England yeeldeth an example of this kind;
E for on that ſide which lyeth next to Scotland, they ſeſſe not their borderers. You your ſelfe may draw ſome money out of Spaine, Germanie, and Flanders, when occaſion doth ſerue, but out of Italie both men and treaſure. Moreoner, when you impoſe any burthen, it is not amiſſe to ſet the rate in the beginning high, that the people may hold it as a fauour, when as, at their requeſt, it is brought to ſome reaſonable tearmes. They may bee eaſed alſo, by admitting their excuſes which they make in reſpect of time, and giuing eare with patience to that which they are able to alledge for ſome tolleration; you muſt alwayes haue a care to leaue them ſatisfied in ſome ſort, at the leaſt to comfort them with kind words, and make them capable of the juſt cauſe that moued you. You muſt lay before them the times, the reaſons, and the occaſions which inforce this courſe, F prouiding alwayes, that all gracious dealing may be thought to proceed from your ſelfe; and whatſoeuer is offenſiue, ſharpe or odious, referre it to your officers. You muſt moreouer haue an eſpeciall care, that all profits ſo deerely purchaſed with the peoples grones, be brought to your owne hands, and not imployed or diſtributed to the priuat vſe of perſons that are put in truſt to gather it vnder you. It importeth alſo your eſtate very much (deere ſonne) to keepe credit with the marchant, which will alwayes ſucceed happily, ſo long

1555

1555 long as you aſſigne vnto them conuenient commodities, in conſideration of their bonds, G and maintaine them euer in ſecuritie, eſpecially with the ſtate of Germanie you muſt take this courſe, for the holding them thus ingaged in your eſtates and realmes, by reaſon of their intereſt and bonds, without erecting of any forts, which they deteſt much. You may no leſſe aſſure your ſelfe of that Eſtate which is of great importance in Italie, than the French king held the Florentines tied vnto him by the trade of Lions, as wee haue found by plaine experience. Now ſeeing it is not poſſible that a prince of many eſtates and countries ſhould alone be able to gouerne them all, nor any one of them (all things conſidered) it is requiſite that this defect be ſupplied by the meanes of miniſters and deputies, that may helpe to ſupport ſo great a burthen: Wherupon it followes of neceſſitie, H that to chuſe ſuch as be worthie and ſufficient in all reſpects, is a matter which doth much import the State; wherefore I will ſpeake vnto at large of this matter, to the end you ſhould not want a rule to know them, and imploy them in the ſeruice of the State. I would haue you conſider, that the properties belonging to worthie miniſters are theſe: Firſt and principally, wiſedome and vnderſtanding how to manage their affaires that are committed to their charge; ſecondly, loue to their ſuperiour; and laſtly, vertue in themſelues: to the end that by wiſedome they may haue knowledge, and by vertue diſpoſition to execute the truſt: for otherwiſe, either through ignorance they ſhall not know, or by frowardneſſe refuſe, or through malice grudge, to diſcharge their dueties. Theſe are the qualities without the which the prince cannot relye vpon their worth, nor the peo- I ple be pleaſed with their actions. But as there is great difficultie both in finding out and obſeruing ſuch, ſo experience doth teach, that all princes which haue been ſerued by men of ſuch ſufficiencie in theſe degrees, haue ruled happily, with great contentment to their ſubiects, and eternall glory to themſelues, notwithſtanding that they haue themſelues bin ſomewhat diſſolute: for what made the name of the Emperor Iuſtinian immortal, beſides his profound knowledge, but the great worth of his counſelors & miniſters, both in peace and war; for by their helpe in both ſeaſons he effected great matters. Doubtleſſe it is an argument of great wiſedome in a prince, when as nature hath not enabled him in the firſt kind of perfection, which is, out of his owne ſufficiencie to rule the State, yet at the leaſt to marſhall himſelfe in the ſecond ranke, which is, of ſuch as imploy men in their ſeruice K that are capable; for thus they draw the quinteſſence of many pregnant wits to their own vſe, and grow to vnderſtand more than a number that know by themſelues: as foure eyes muſt needs ſee more than two, by the courſe of nature. But wee may hold that prince vnfortunat, which reſteth in a third proportion, being neither able of himſelfe, nor willing to giue eare to others that are more ſufficient. A prince can neuer want meanes to repleniſh his owne Court with men fit for his ſeruice, if he will be carefull to ſeeke them out where they are, eſteeme them, and acknowledge their deſerts, by good effects. Let him rather make the firſt motion, and not depriue himſelfe by daintineſſe of a worthie ſeruant:
for that prince is rather proud than politicke, who perſuadeth himſelfe, for that his treaſures are greater than other mens, therefore euerie man ſhould creepe before they L call, eſpecially the wiſe and vertuous, who many times carrie minds as hautie as princes, and in that reſpect deſire not to ſubmit their liberties to the will of any man, preferring the freedome of a meane fortune, before the golden fetters of a prince that either knowes them not, or regards them not. The reaſon is, for that wiſedome and vertue are in themſelues a kind of ſuperioritie, or rather the verie true ſuperioritie it ſelfe, for that we ſee that Empires, treaſure, fortunes, fauours, and natures ornaments, are ſubiect to corruption and change, by alteration of time, or accidents, as it pleaſeth God to diſpoſe: But the riches of the mind, ſuch as wiſedome and vertue are, can neuer be diuided from the partie that poſſeſſeth them. The minds of honeſt men are much eſtranged, when they find how little their ſuperiors eſteeme them, preferring a wicked and lewd M perſon before a loyall heart, a flatterer before a faithfull miniſter, a man puffed vp with vndeſerued fauours, before him that ſeeketh to purchaſe grace by deſert, an idle drone before a painefull officer. Thoſe princes erre exceedingly, which want judgement to conceiue, that vertue cannot bee valued, that it deſerueth more than any one can giue: that all fauours which a prince beſtoweth vpon worthie ſeruants, are both honourable

A rable and profitable, and that a prince cannot imploy his treaſure with greater gaine by 1555 intereſt in any trade, than by rewarding ſuch as are both vertuous and politike. Nothing can bee made more plaine, nothing can be found more neceſſarie, conſidering how impoſſible it is, that any prince ſhould either winne great honour, or atchieue great matters, without able miniſters. Beware you erre not in this point, but ſeeke for worthie ſeruants, and retaine them in your ſeruice with all honour and preferment, ſetting this downe for a Maxime, That in a matter of importance a reſolute and wiſe Counſellor ſhall ſtand you more in ſtead with his ſound aduice and judgement, than your legions of ſouldiers with their armes, or whole mountaines of treaſure in your B cofers.

Doe not beleeue, for that a prince is wiſe and vigilant himſelfe, he therefore needs not any able miniſters; nay, you may obſerue, that the greateſt princes of the world haue alwayes ſought to draw vnto them the greateſt number of rare men. Who was euer attended on by a greater number of this qualitie, than Cæſar? whom I hold to haue beene the greateſt prince that to this day, both in peace and warre, hath either ruled ouer prouinces, or commaunded armies. It ſeemeth rather, that theſe proportions and qualities are linked together with an indiſſoluble knot, that when the prince is valiant and wiſe, ſo are his officer, when the prince is faint-hearted, ſo are his miniſters.

C If we allow a grounded excellencie in the prince, it is to be preſumed, that the ſame can neuer brooke an inſufficiencie in thoſe that attend on him, whereas the weakeneſſe of the princes judgement cannot be capable of his ſeruants excellencie. From hence our common prouerbe taketh his firſt originall; Like will to like: Equals are moſt apt to conſent in loue; and hee that will gheſſe probably of the diſpoſition of a ſtranger, whom hee knoweth not, muſt conſider with whom hee keepeth companie. Conſider of this poynt of imployment and election with an eſpeciall care (my moſt deere ſonne) and herein it ſhall be ſufficient for you to imitate and follow me, your father, alone, who during the courſe of my life haue indeuoured to haue about me men of greateſt eſteeme, both for counſell and execution. To the care which is to bee had in reſpect
D of them, for their vertue, wiſedome, integritie, and loue, I would haue you alſo for your owne part bee carefull to imploy ſuch perſons in the affaires of Italie, as are beſt acqnainted with their humors, and are moſt ſutable to the conditions of that State; prouiding that they may bee throughly inſtructed in thoſe points, without reſpect of any priuate intereſt, or ſpeciall loue or bond to any. The like courſe I would haue you take in Spaine, and your other Eſtates, eſpecially in chuſing the leaders of your armies; for vndoubtedly the fitneſſe of your miniſters for thoſe places which they hold, is a matter of verie great importance in all actions of gouernement. We read of Hanibal, That he was moſt fortunate at land, yet verie vnhappie in all actions belonging to the ſea. And how many doe wee find in generall experience, which are
E exceeding fit for the nature of one people, and vnfit for another. Sometimes wee meet with perſons abſolutely wiſe, and that carrie themſelues with great commendations in all places, and at all times, and vpon all occaſions that are incident to their charge; but wee find them rare: of others that are onely fit for ſpeciall affaires there is no great plentie in the world, and therefore they muſt bee imployed in that facultie wherein they are held moſt ſufficient to ſerue: for it is a matter of no ſmall importance, to make choyce of ſuch a miniſter to any end, as is found moſt excellent in his owne profeſſion.

Make your ſpeciall choyce out of diuers ages, and diuerſitie of gifts, for ſo ſhall you bee ſure to light on thoſe that are moſt fit. Bee carefull that vnder your moſt
F truſtie and moſt ſufficient Counſellors, ſome may bee trayned and inſtructed for the ſeruice, when their date is at an end, leaſt otherwiſe the fortune of your great gouernment ſeeme to be bounded within the terme of their continuance; for priuat perſons haue their periods, but policies in States well gouerned ſhould be perpetuall. Let the Romans ſerue for an example in this caſe, who to preuent the danger that might grow by committing the burthen of direction to one onely man, aſſigned by way of ſucceſsion (in caſe 1555 he ſhould periſh that had the chiefe commaund) ſundrie gouernors vnto euerie armie. In G any caſe beware you do not lay your moſt important cauſes in a time of danger, vpon the ſhoulders of ſuch perſons as were neuer made acquainted with affaires of equall weight:

he

When any ſuch occaſion doth happen, your ſafeſt courſe is, alwaies to preferre the judgement of your eldeſt counſellors, who ſpeake out of experience.

Aime not at honor in the choice of your couuſellors; reſpect thoſe of a middle age, where gifts are anſwerable: for as the yonger ſort is commonly euer credulous and bold, ſo others that are neuer called vntil their later daies, are ſuſpitious, incredulous, irreſolute, and commonly leaue the world before they can be made fit for their calling: but they that haue made proofe of their ſufficiencie for the ſpace of many yeres, and vpon verie dange- H rous occaſions, waxing white headed with the toile of ſeruice, and the cares of gouerne-ment, ought euer to be reuerenced and reſpected, as a neceſſary wreſt to turne the jarring ſtrings of diſagreeing humors at a councell boord, to perfect harmonie. I would alſo haue you in this point of imitating the militarie diſcipline of Rome, to make a medley of your councell, betwixt wiſe old men, and yong men of great hope: for ſuch a ſpeare, like vnto that of the Pithagorians, conſiſting of ſo many ſundrie parts, as treble, meane, & baſe, will yeeld that ſweet conſent which is to be wiſhed in all policie. By this meane princes ſhall not need to make their muſicke of one ſtring, they need not build vpon one hope, nor addict themſelues to one certaine qualitie: for many times among thoſe that are young of yeares, we find perſons old of vnderſtanding, and among aged men, counſellors that haue I greene heads, and flouriſh both in wit and fortitude. In this caſe, ſuch young men are accounted old, and ſuch old eſteemed yong: The middle ſort are to be marſhalled on either ſide, as their conditions and qualities incline to one or other, more or leſſe; for miniſters ought not to be reſpected for their yeares onely, but for their judgements, manners, and conditions in the execution of their charges. And yet, beſides theſe ordinarie obiects, according to the age and qualitie of euerie one, ſeeke alſo to haue knowledge of their natures and priuat affections: for it is not ſufficient for a generall that conducteth an armie through any countrey, to haue a generall Idea of the countrey in his mind: but it is requiſit he ſhould haue a particular knowledge of the countrey it ſelfe, whether it abound with water & other neceſſarie prouiſions, or be in want, which firſt of all cauſeth a dearth, K and then ruine. A prince muſt euer preſuppoſe, that although the quicke conceit of ſome ripe heads, makes them ſoone to take inſtruction of a new charge, recommended by ſuperiors, and to grow fit for the managing thereof, the greater part notwithſtanding is for a time vncapable, and during that time may commit diſorders, and offend the ſubiects in their cuſtomes, priuiledges, and rights: which, ſeeme they neuer ſo ſleight, either in re-ſpect of themſelues, or of any other accidents of leſſe account, yet muſt they needs be valued according to the rate which they had in generall opinion, and the great diſturbance which is bred by want of obſeruation; for ſmall ſpatkles may kindle a great fire, if they be not quencht in due time, with moderation.

Now that you may the better know who are the wiſe and worthie miniſters, that de- L ſerue imploiment in your eſtate, you muſt vnderſtand, that true wiſedome may be gotten by foure meanes eſpecially: The firſt is, by experience of occurrents in the world; wherefore it is ſaid, That they which practiſe much, muſt needs learne much: And this kind of wiſedome our auncеſtors exemplified in their owne kings, the Greekes eſpecially in Aga-memnon and Menalaus: who by varietie of matters put into their hands, and by occaſion of that which by their accidents and conſultations they generally vnderſtand, may eaſily grow wiſe, and learne (as the prouerbe ſaith) at the charges of other men. The ſecond meane is, by the inſtruction of hiſtories; for thus they come to knowledge both of actions and reaſons, in times paſt; they marke their applications and effects, and thereby ſet-ting downe rules vnto themſelues, for the direction of their owne affairs, not onely pur- M chaſe honor and reputation by their knowledge, but wax great by the toile of other men.
Of this kind we may find paternes both in Solon and Socrates. The third courſe is, by traueling into diuers countries, and by obſeruing the diuerſitie of lawes and policies: for this particular collection of foraine wiſdome, may be ſenſibly applied to particular occaſions of their owne. And this kind of wiſedom is aſcribed vnto Vliſſes by Antiquitie. The fourth
meanes

A meanes to attaine vnto it, is, by long life: for although a man ſhould learne but one good leſſon euerie yere, yet time, at length, would make him generally wiſe. Neſtor may ſtand in this degree for a faire preſident, of whom it is plainly ſaid, that he vnderſtood very much for that he had liued very long. And I cannot ſee how a young man may be capable of any of the other three firſt kinds of wiſedome, both for that he cannot in a ſhort time gaine ſo great experience as is neceſſarie to this effect; and moreouer, youth wanteth that well ſeaſoned conſideration that is requiſit: neither are a few yeares ſufficient for men to trauell, and to obſerue that which breedeth judgement. Laſtly in reſpect of the defect and want of time, he cannot draw a true picture of that apprehenſion which old age hath gathered. I denie not, but by the meanes of ſome prudent miniſters & counſellors, a young prince may attaine to all foure kinds at once, if he retaine about him a conuenient number of men, wiſe in their degrees, and not onely vſe their counſell in his great affaires, but with all regard follow it. 1555

B

Wherefore there ought to be great regard had in the choice of theſe men, eſpecially to chuſe wiſe men, which by way of inſtruction and hiſtorie, can conceiue, eſpecially with any ſmall experience of the affairs of the world, and the benefit of their many yeres, which is the moſt ſecure, and leaſt deceitfull mixture of theſe kinds of wiſedome, that can be limited; ſauing that thoſe perſons which are beſt furniſhed with all theſe kinds, ought to be preferred before all others. The wiſedome of miniſters ought to be referred to the ſame

C two times we haue formerly ſpoken of, of peace and warre, whereunto all the conſiderations, forecaſt, and prouiſions of a prince, ought to be directed.

The goodneſſe of miniſters and officers, which is the ſecond part that is required in them, may be judged of by the good name which they do carrie, and by their good behauiours. A man is ſaid to do well foure waies, by chance, by cunning, by the beginning of the habit it ſelfe, and after that by vſe and practiſe, if it be fully perfected. Good workes done by chance, or to a cunning end, are diſtinguiſhed from thoſe that are done at the firſt beginning of the habit, for that they neuer ſpring from any vertuous intention, as the other do, though both may be indifferently accompanied with good effects. And for that the ſecrets of the mind are hard to be diſcouered by the judgement of man, for that God

D alone doth ſee the inward part of our hearts: wherfore men do greatly erre in making vſe of them, being impoſſible to attaine to a perfect knowledge of thoſe perſons, but by a continuall obſeruation of their actions with ſpeciall care. In the firſt kind, which is of things done well by chance, it is not poſſible there ſhould be any good intentiō, for that the partie neuer thinks of that he hath in hand. Much leſſe in the ſecond, where all is directed to a cunning end, for that malice bears the ſway. The third and fourth degrees, where men either begin a vertuous habit, or haue attained it, the intent is alwaies good; yet the effects and operations of the third doe not alwayes fall out ſo happily as of the fourth: for the third proceeds ſometimes from a ſence not fully ſetled, nor throughly corrected by the reſtraint of reaſon, & raines of vertue, which onely ruleth their intents, and accompanieth

E their actions, elſe there ſhould be more difference betwixt the members of this diuiſion. They that by cunning will ſeeme vertuous, in reſpect of endleſſe feare leaſt their ill meaning ſhould be brought to light, ſtanding in the mid way to the marke which is common to all men, like a bow drawne from the other extreame, they are heauie, melancholie, and full of doubts, vpon euerie rumor of the vulgar ſort, they caſt falſe ſhadowes of ſuſpition, linger in miſtruſt, and affright themſelues with fancies: their daies are troubleſome, their nights vnquiet, their cares infinit, and therefore our Sauiour might boldly ſay, Hæ parietes teſtes. But they that are ſincerely and intirely vertuous, relying onely vpon their bountie and worth, liue in continuall peace, with content of mind, and without all feare of oppreſſion. It reſteth in the will and power of the prince himſelfe, to incourage faithfull mini-

F ſters to ſhew their loue and duetie to their ſuperiours, either by binding them by rewards and fauours, or by contenting them with honour and authoritie, or by fitting them with ſuch commodities and pleaſures as they moſt affect, or by ſetling their inclinations to deſerue well, in offering occaſions whereby they make proofe of their fidelities: For as it is moſt proper for mans nature, to proceed with courage where they find their ſeruice thankefully rewarded vpon iuſt cauſe, ſo princes are apt to truſt

vpon

1555 vpon due triall of their miniſters integritie. But the way to make them conſtant and ſure G againſt all aſſaults, is, to tye them, not with any ſingle bond, but with all theſe together, if it bee poſſible. Let no prince thinke, that it is more ſafe, in conſultation touching his affaires of Eſtate, to truſt domeſticals, and ſuch as are moſt deere vnto him for other ordinarie cauſes, but leſſe able to aduiſe, before others that bee farther off, ſo as they bee more fit, onely of feare to ſeeme more vnthankefull to the firſt, and depriue them of their due: for the end will be, that by this opinion hee ſhall preferre men of no worth nor vnderſtanding, before others that are more ſufficient and neceſſa-rie; which is the moſt abſurd and ſenceleſſe errour which hee can commit, touching this point of election of miniſters. I would haue all other conſiderations of riches, fauour, H and all other gifts of fortune, yeeld in your eſteeme to vertue and worthineſſe: for where a prince finds qualities agreeable, it is his part to thinke how to inrich and aduance them; for the meaner their eſtates are whom the prince ſhall raiſe to high degrees, the greater ſhall their bond appeare, and the more ſincere and firme their dueties and affections. In rewarding your ſeruants good deſerts, I would wiſh you to endeuour as much as you may to gratifie them according to your deſires, and to haue an eye to their owne ends:
for ſome ſeeke eaſe onely, and aboundance of commodities belonging to this life; others hunt after honour and authoritie; and ſome couet ſatisfaction in other kinds, according to their ſeuerall humors, or as ſuch fauours either are indeed, or at the leaſt are held by them moſt ſutable to their conditions and qualities: without reſpect of theſe affections of men, a prince ſhould often looſe the thanks which bountie expects: for many deſire rather to faſt than to be crammed againſt appetite. Among other rules it ſhal not be amiſſe to note, that nothing bindeth loue more firmely, than when a prince beſtowes a benefit out of his owne free choice, without the inſtance or ſoliciting of any fauorer. The firſt we muſt aſcribe to the fauour of our Soueraigne alone; the ſecond we may diuide betweene the prince that giueth, and the friend that moueth it. Some haue commended and allowed a diſtruſt and diſagreement betweene miniſters of State, as if it were the beſt meanes to acquaint a prince with the truth: but this courſe was neuer pleaſing to my humor, neither could I euer find how ſo bad a cauſe as diſcord, could euer produce any commendable effects in a princes ſeruice. A kind of emulation is not amiſſe, ſo as it tend onely to K incite honourable minds to ſhew themſelues more worthie of the princes fauour, to de-ſerue better in his ſeruice, and to be fit for a better place when time ſhall ſerue, as we read of two of Cæſars Corporals: but in no wiſe let it grow to malice or miſlike; for the prince may neuer ſhew more fauor to one than to another, as it falleth out ſometimes, for that it will not be poſſible alwayes to keepe the ballance euen, but the partie which receiueth leſſe is tormented with jealouſie, fretted inwardly with ſpight, blinded with diſdaine, and all, in the end, turneth to the prejudice of the princes ſeruice, and the publicke action.

Among theſe, and out of theſe, ought the prince to make choice of a ſufficient number to ſerue him in the place of councell, and imploy the reſt in other ſeruices belonging to the State: for being guided by their aduice & counſell, he can hardly erre, but may rather L reſt aſſured, that his worthie acts ſhal purchaſe honor & immortalitie to his name; wherefore ſtriue to abound in theſe rather than in any other treaſure whatſoeuer: and feare not leaſt facilitie, in being led and directed by the aduice of worthie men, ſhould rob you of the honor which belongeth to your rare deſerts; for that the chiefeſt commendation is not aſcribed vnto him that either giueth counſel, or hath charge to execute, but vnto the prince, vpon whoſe reſolution all depends, and who out of his judgement and diſcretion, aſſignes to euery man that part for which he is moſt fit, in his owne opinion: for although there may be aptneſſe in the timber, yet to make choice of the beſt for building, and imploy it to the beſt vſe, ſhewes the skill of a good workeman. Beſides, if the prince, out of a jealous and ſuſpitious humor, be miſtruſtfull in this point, how eaſie a matter is it at all M times, vpon diuers colours and pretences, to change, alter, or deferre his reſolution, ſo as whatſoeuer they inuent ſhalbe aſcribed to his own perfectiō. A prince can neuer want oc-caſions to ſound their opinions, and to make profit of their deep judgements, without imparting the ſecret of his purpoſes to any one of them.

My meaning was to diſcourſe with you about this point of chuſing able miniſters, at large,

A large, for that, in my opinion, the weight of this ſubiect required no leſſe: wherefore I re- 1555 peat it againe, That a prince can neuer become great, nor maintaine his greatneſſe, without the ſeruice and aſſiſtance of ſufficient counſellors & officers: And therefore (my moſt deere ſonne) I require you carefully to open both your eyes and eares in this reſpect, and to be diligent in ſearching out the qualities of men, for your better inſtruction. All offices, adminiſtrations, and gouernments, which are giuen for a ſhort limited time, are moſt ſecure from thoſe ſuſpitions & jealouſies which long continuance in office and authoritie doth breed; being impoſſible, in ſo ſhort a ſpace, to make parties, or to procure followers.
And although this courſe be not alwayes free from thoſe dangers and diſcommodities,
B which are incident to gouernors, who either want experience, or acquaintance with ſtate, yet a moderate exchange ought, in my conceit, to be preferred before a perpetuitie: for the people (be the gouernors neuer ſo religious and juſt) feele a kind of ſafetie at the leaſt, and as well in this point as in others, delight, in change; vſing the ſame as a counterpoiſe to that irkeſome loathſomeneſſe which groweth out of the continuall vſe of any one thing without alteration.

Let your maner in giuing audience to ſuitors be eaſie, liberal, and ordinarie, wherby not only the ſubiect is pleaſed with the ſame, reputing this acceſſe as a reſtoritiue, for that it giueth them opportunitie to eaſe their grieuances by their ſuperiors fauor: but on the other ſide it maketh the prince more wiſe, when euery day by this means he cõmeth to the C knowledge of new accidents, new impreſſions, & new opinions. The prince alſo commeth to vnderſtand all the affairs, humors, paſsions, and plots of his own ſubiects, and their intereſt, which is, as I ſaid before, one kind of wiſedome. To this end therefore, and for a thouſand other good effects, a prince ought to viſit all his eſtates often, but in ſuch ſort, as many progreſſes and extraordinarie charges which belongs vnto them, may not be burthen-ſome to his ſubiects, and a blemiſh to his owne authoritie: for things that are accounted excellent, if they be made common, they looſe a great part of their eſtimation in the eyes of the world. If their progreſſes be ſeldom, in like maner, they giue ſome ſuſpition of neglect, and careleſſe regard of the peoples good; they giue incouragement to deputies and magiſtrats, to follow their own humors: and moreouer, they make their ſubiects deſpaire D of all hope of refuge to the princes preſence, and of recourſe to the ſame in time of neceſsi-tie: for, as I ſaid before, this is a meane to eaſe the ſubiect, and to curbe the magiſtrat. In giuing audience, let your care be to ſend euerie man away with ſome ſatisfaction, or at the leaſt with good liking of your affabilitie. Heare ſuch as offer you petitions with patience, and anſwer them with compaſsion. Prouide alwaies, that the power of thoſe that are moſt mightie ouerſway not the right of them that are miſerable; haue no reſpect of perſons, but looke only to the juſtice of the cauſe. If any man appeare before you in a rightfull matter, who is otherwiſe ill ſpoken of, regard not at that time his conuerſation, but his complaint, not what he is in life, but what he ſpeaketh. Now to the end the parties which haue re-courſe vnto you, appealing from your officers, or charging them with corruption, may E be more throughly conuinced by due proofe, and more eaſily induced of themſelues to confeſſe their faults, ſtretch out your hand as farre as in honor you may, in granting them new Iudges, or Commiſsioners, who together with other ordinarie officers, will be more carefull to carrie themſelues vprightly in ſuch offices as are aſsigned to their cares. The way to plant a firme reſolution in your officers, to deſerue well, is, to reward them bountifully that haue ſhewed their worth: for by this meanes, by the diſcharge of his duetie in a meane place, he will endeuour to be held worthie of an office of more eſteeme: not-withſtanding there is great reaſon why the prince, vpon theſe occaſions, ſhould haue due reſpect to the credit and honour of his officers, and to vſe ſuch moderation in this kind, as without wrong to the plaintifes, their reputations may be tendered. Examine F weightie cauſes with deliberation, but be carefull to giue quicke diſpatch to matters of ſmall moment, eſpecially if they concerne perſons that are in miſerie. Vſe the like expedition in matters concerning poore men, orphans, dowers, churches, education, maintenance, charges left, tutorſhip, debts, and ſuch like charitable cauſes, of which you are in conſcience bound to haue an eſpeciall care, and to protect them in neceſsitie. That ſtate can neuer proſper where ſuch cauſes are neglected, for that God which makes no diffe-

1555 rence of perſons,but aſſureth vs,That he will alwaies haue one eare open to the ſorrowful G complaints of ſimple ſoules which ſuffer wrong,will puniſh kings and magiſtrats for their contempt euen of their Chriſtian ſubiects. I would exemplifie this danger by ſome ſpeciall example of Gods juſtice in my time: but the verie ground of charitie ſet downe in a word or two,may ſerue, and for the reſt I leaue you to the tenderneſſe of your owne con-ſcience,and the counſel of your Confeſſor. The like courſe muſt be taken with tradeſmen, artiſans,marchants,and husbandmen; for theſe kind of people can neuer follow the court, nor without ruine to their eſtates,ſpend their goods, labour and time about ſuits: for it were better to be ſpeedily diſpatcht with ſome loſſe,than to be tired with a world of Proctors,Aduocates,and Notaries, in hope of getting all; conſidering how much the loſſe H of time,in regard of their trade,importeth them. Whatſoeuer may be ended at one hearing by your ſelfe,diſpatch: what you are not able of your ſelfe to rid, recommend it by way of tables and memorials in other affaires. It ſhall not be amiſſe,for quicke diſpatch of cauſes,to aſſigne to euerie officer his particular taske; for otherwiſe it were not poſſible for one man to run through all. In caſe of neceſſitie the prince may commit his office, for his owne eaſe,to his faithfull miniſters, in imitation of the knife which in old time was vſed in the ſacrifice at Delphos: for there was ſuch a faſhion deuiſed for the reliefe of poore men,which could not long attend without great loſſe,as one man alone was able by the helpe of its many parts,to ſerue all the prieſts. In criminall cauſes,where there is queſtion of life and death,and other capitall puniſhment,proceed benignely with ſeueritie,and ſe- I uerely with benignitie,according to the ſtate and qualitie of the cauſe. Applie your ſen-ces to the circumſtances of the perſon,time, and place, the maner, and ſuch like conſiderations. Be content to imitate the rule of Lesbos in this caſe,which was apt to bend according to the obliquitie of the ſubiect vnto which it was applied by art: So muſt princes follow occaſions,if they will rule with commendation. This is not to make difference of per-ſons touching the right it ſelfe,but to judge of right with wiſedome and diſcretion,according to the ſundrie indifferences that are aptly offered; proceeding notwithſtanding, where we find the like reſpects in all degrees concurre with like conſideration: for the people are not grieued with ſetting downe any reſolution, how grieuous ſoeuer it may ſeeme,but diuerſitie of puniſhments for one and the ſelfeſame fault, where no certaine K reaſon can be found of the diuerſitie. If any conceiues this counſel to be in any ſort repugnant to this Maxime, That all lawes ſhould be equall, inflexible, vnchangeable, &c. hee muſt be anſwered, That it is onely vnderſtood of the dead letter of the law which as it e-uer ſpeaketh and reſolueth in one manner, ſo ought it in reſpect of it ſelfe, to be indifferently interpreted and executed: But there is another reaſon of the liuing law, which is the prince and his miniſters, eſpecially touching Commiſſions which bee receiued from him: for they ought to execute the dead letter of the law with ſuch reſpect and moderation as hath beene mentioned before, ſo as they bend it with equitie, but breake it not with wilfulneſſe: Wherefore there is a certaine power giuen vnto the prince aboue the lawes, and by the rule of conſcience which is imprinted in the heart of him or them that L are ſet vnder him, the cauſe is qualified according to the reaſon of the circumſtance; for rigor is not alwayes right: neither may we ſay, that they rule beſt, which vrge the letter without reſpect to the reaſons; that rather follow the words of a text which is mute,than the due conſideration of a quicke interpretation, which is more ſenſible. Prouided alwayes for the preſeruation of Maieſtie, and maintenance of lawes, That howſoeuer it may pleaſe a prince out of his owne conceit to diſpoſe, in ouerruling any matter, with reſpect either of the perſon or time, augmenting or abating the reward of any good deſert,or puniſhing of any fault, the ſame be not drawne to conſequence, or inforced as a preſident to thoſe that ſhall liue after him. They that gouerne know better how to moderate theſe caſes,than the lawyers that plead; and many things are incident to politicke M direction, which neuer come within the compaſſe of an ordinarie Aduocate. Contention betwixt husbands and wiues, maſters and ſeruants, parents and their children, neighbours, kinſmen,friends,and ſuch like, conjoyned in the ſtrait linke of ordinarie officers, ought rather to be ended by a friendlie arbitrator, with ſpare of charges which belong to ſuits,than by a ſeuere judge,who decideth all things by extremitie. The beſt courſe for a prince

A a prince is to cenſure cauſes by due circumſtances without partialitie; and that the diffe- 1555 rence which ſhall appeare betwixt his moderation and the written law, may rather ſeeme to ariſe out of a right in equitie, than an error in affection. I would haue all the courts of juſtice offend rather in compaſſion than rigor or crueltie, vnleſſe there be a notable example to be made for the terror to the multitude. In all kinds of rewards be bountiful aboue the common courſe, and alwaies chuſe rather to leaue a light offendor (whoſe crimes are not manifeſt) vnpuniſhed, than to condemne an innocent, or to leaue a peece of ſeruice vnrewarded, at the leaſt with fauourable words, with praiſe and cauſe of hope, vntill time and opportunitie may yeeld a more ample ſatisfaction. Be carefull that compaſſion & fa-B cilitie in remitting puniſhments, be tempered with ſuch a reaſonable meane, as it neither incourage men to offend, nor giue occaſion of many errors which grow by too much lenitie. Let it ſuffice, that your ſubiects liue vnder you with induſtrie, and as becommeth men, without giuing ſcandall or ill example to the world. Proceed not to that kind of curioſitie which makes many rulers to inquire & ſearch what men doe in the moſt priuat and ſecret places of their houſes: this humor is many waies offenſiue, for both it breedeth trouble to the prince, and oftentimes great harme to the party, without deſert. Though ſome be not abſolutely chaſt, yet ſo they be found wary in auoiding all cauſe of ſcandall & manifeſt of-ſence, the prince hath reaſon to referre the judgement of the ſecrets of mens hearts vnto God, and the correction of ſecret ſins to his diuine Maieſtie: for where our eyes can no
C way pierce, there is no reaſon that our hands ſhould execute. Keepe one eare alwayes open for the aduerſe partie; beware of ſetling your judgement, eſpecially in cauſes of juſtice vpon the firſt impreſion; for time trauelleth for truth, and oftentimes graue deliberation eaſeth her of her burthen. In thoſe occaſions a moderation ſhold be had in ſuch regard, as neither the ſubiect be induced by too great facility to attempt any practiſe of vnlawful action for the furtherance of his intent, nor diſcouraged by too great rigour for expecting reaſon at your hands; for both extremities are dangerous. Whileſt that you are in choler, or haue made your ſelfe a prey to any other paſſion, or reſpect of priuat intereſt, be verie carefull neuer to giue ſentence, or at the leaſt not to put the ſame in preſent executiõ, leaſt afterwards appeales be made vnto your ſelfe from ſuch vniuſt ſentences and executions, D by the parties that are wronged, when you are come vnto your ſelfe. You may read in hiſtories, of a poore woman that appealed from king Philip, being tranſported with paſſion, to the ſame king Philip, qualified with a due conſideration: and of the penance which was injoyned by S. Ambroſe to Theodoſius, after the maſſacre of Theſſalonica.

Touching the orders of your familie and Court, I haue diſcourſed with you at other times, out of which you may draw rules for the direction of thoſe affaires: be alwayes mindfull that your gards be entertained about your perſon, according to the wonted maner, rather to ſet forth the maieſtie of gouernment, than in reſpect of danger of your life for euidẽt neceſsitie. Touching the wearing of your apparel, there is no doubt but princely garments, fit for your eſtate at certaine times, doe both grace your perſon, and ſtrike a E kind of awe into the peoples hearts: Notwithſtanding to ſute your ſelfe ordinarily more plainly, & according to that faſhion which is moſt generall, doth win great loue, as I haue obſerued by mine owne experience: for nothing pleaſeth the ſubiect more, than to note ſometimes a careleſſe contempt of thoſe outward complements, in which ſome princes ſet their princelie felicitie. The like conſideration muſt be had touching your diet, and other neceſſarie things belonging to your perſon and your Court, with a carefull regard, that neither hatred be purchaſed by exceſſe, nor contempt by too great equalitie.

To the time of peace likewiſe belong diuers kinds of workes worthie of a princes care, which draw the ſubiects eyes to admiration, and his heart to thankefulneſſe. In this
F degree we marſhall whatſoeuer princes either build or repaire for the peoples good, as adorning cities, amending highwayes, repayring bridges, making riuers nauigable, charges in bringing waters, in repairing of churches, hoſpitals, guild-halls, publike places, and towne walls, taking order for the reformation of abuſes in religion, Vniuerſities, Colledges, and judiciall places, in limiting the fees of Counſellors, excluding auarice from courts of conſcience, and corruption of magiſtrats in the bringing vp of orphans, mariage of poore maids, and redemption of priſoners. Bleſſed is the heart that thinketh on thoſe

1555 things, and the hand that putteth them in execution; for by this meanes the ſubiect ſhall G not onely be prouided for in the common courſe of life, but the pleaſures and commodities of perſons, places, and conditions, ſetled in happineſſe: Yet in theſe caſes alſo care muſt be taken, that the people be not ouer burthened; for it is all one to them, whether oppreſſion creepe in by this or any other meanes, which they cannot remedie, and where the people themſelues are vrged to an extraordinarie charge, they hold not the prince to be an author, but an executioner. To the time of peace alſo belong many conſiderations, prouiſions, & forecaſts, concerning war; to the end that whatſoeuer accident happens, the prince be not taken altogether vnprouided on a ſudden, or driuen to ſeeke ſhelter when the ſtorme is imminent. But to auoid confuſion about theſe times, I muſt warne you, for H a concluſion in this point, that as an honorable peace is the end of war, ſo muſt your peace be gouerned by ſuch great diſcretion & diligent foreſight, as the war may alſo be ſecure to the ſtate when it happens. I come now (my moſt deere ſonne) to diſcourſe with you of ſome points belonging to the time of war, whereon it ſtandeth you in hand to thinke aduiſedly, as wel in conſideration of your preſent eſtate, as alſo for the increaſe therof, whenſoeuer juſt occaſion ſhalbe offered. To theſe ends of preſeruation and inlargement by way of counſell and aduice in time of peace, and of armes in time of war, a prince ought wholly to addict himſelfe, and neither ſpare paine, diligence, nor danger, in any enterpriſe, that enable him to attaine them happily. A prince ought to be more heedful to looke into the accidents & occurrents of war, than peace; for that war aboundeth more with vnexpected actions, with diſorders not foreſeene, and when they happen, for the moſt part, are irrecouerable: Againe, for that war is leſſe reſtrained by the curbe of ciuile lawes and officers than peace, depending cõmonly vpon the will of him that is moſt powerful, as moſt commonly it is kindled by a greedie deſire of one to raigne aboue the reſt, and is afterwards maintained by the feare of a neceſſarie defence: both which affections are ſo forcible in the mind, as they will rather conſtraine you to make the ſatisfaction of your will the obiect, than to looke into the means wherby you may compaſſe it. Theſe cares and preparations for war, are moſt neceſſarie for princes & potentates, whoſe vnquiet eſtates are often troubled by foreine enemies, who lay plots to annoy them. Theſe and ſuch reſtleſſe neighbors giue euerie day juſt occaſion to be offended by them. This is your caſe, who being ſeated E betwixt the power of the Turk, & the jealouſie of Chriſtian potentates, could not deſign a matter of any great effect, though you gaue your ſelfe to reſt. But let not this ſcruple greatly trouble you, for that diſcontinuance of profeſſing armes, wil in time do you more harme, than the maintenance of your reputation by them can any way trouble you. Experience doth teach, that all men feare to incenſe an enemie who hath his armes readie drawne to ſtrike. Beſides, as men wax old with time, ſo ſtates are weakened with ſloth, and in effect conſumed by the canker of idleneſſe, whileſt that others that cõtend with martial enemies, are not onely maintained in health, but augmented daily more & more in force and vigor, as mans bodie is by exerciſe. Vpon the laying downe of armes, & diſcharge of troups, the ſubiects grow wanton, and wild at home, finding ſo great a part of their wonted burthen eaſed: and this we daily ſee, that hauing bin long accuſtomed to this pleaſing eaſe, you ſhall hardly bring them again in awe, to haue the patience to endure your impoſitions, & their former frankneſſe and readineſſe to ſupplie your neceſſities. On the other ſide, the multitude of ſouldiers tainted with the libertie of ambition and other humors of camp, wil hardly frame themſelues to lead an honeſt ſober life at home, which hath often bin the cauſe of tumults & vprores in monarchies. Beſides, I cannot ſee how a prince that ruleth many eſtates, can euer ſettle any reſolution to liue in peace, in reſpect of their ambition & greedineſſe that are about him, their emulatiõ and jealouſie that are equall to him, and their feare and ſuſpition that are vnder him: For they that are of the firſt ſort diſpoſe themſelues to giue occaſion of offence, out of a deſire to ſubuert the eſtates of other men, M the ſecond, to ſettle their own fortunes; and the third, to preuent oppreſſions & injuries: wherfore it is wel ſaid in our prouerb, that he which cãnot take hard meaſure at the hands of other men, muſt keep them low that are moſt apt to offer it. It is therfore neceſſary for a prince, eſpecially being poſſeſſed of ſo many eſtates as you are at this time, to diſpoſe your ſelfe effectually to a care of ſuch things as belong to warre, whereof hauing fit occaſion

to

1555

A to diſcourſe at this preſent with you, & taking my beginning from the chiefeſt parts ther-of, I ſay, That this care ſtandeth chiefly vpon arms, forts, and garriſons, vpon order for prouiſions to be made for them, knowledge of the qualitie and conditions of States, & of the people that inhabit them. The care of an armie conſiſteth in the ſetting downe of a certaine and conuenient number, and in giuing good orders and directions for their maner of fight. The number muſt be ſuch as will ſuffice for any braue attempt their Leader will vndertake. The rate will fall out fitly, if no error be committed either in too much or too little; for too little will not ſerue, and exceſſe is euer a cauſe of confuſion. Opinions haue differed exceedingly concerning this point, but the beſt and moſt expert agree, That an B armie conſiſting of 30000 foot, and 4000 horſe, is ſufficient for the execution of any worthie enterpriſe. The reaſons that are brought for proofe hereof are many, & of great force; for this proportion is reaſonable, neither ſuperfluous, nor wanting. According to this proportion an armie may be better diſciplined, it may be better entertained with pay, and ſupplied with victuals and all other things neceſſarie. It is more eaſily repaired after ſome great loſſe, either by ſickneſſe, or any other accident, and it may be better imployed and maintained in all places. The people that receiue them find more eaſe in their charges. A prince may better ſtand vpon his gard with ſuch a force; and a victorie gotten by a reaſo-nable number is more honourable. To conclude, it is in all reſpects moſt agreeable to the maner of ſeruice in our age, as they can beſt judge that haue often had proofe thereof by C their owne experience. Whereas huge armies are, we ſee few come to fight, and therfore a leſſe number might ſerue the turne, as it did the Romans in their warres in many countries, when as they brought multitudes of men: As it ſerued Alexander in ouerrunning Aſia, and might, perhaps, haue ſerued Hanibal againſt the great forces of Rome, if either he had receiued due ſupplie from home in due time, or could haue made the ſouldiers which he was driuen to leuie in other countries, as reſolute as his owne, which was not poſſible.
The Romans during the ſtate of the commonweale, afterwards the Emperours, and the Turks at this day brings greater forces to field. To which preſidents many anſwers may be giuen, eſpecially, That this both was and is done rather for a kind of glory, to extend their forces ouer all, than for any other need of helpe in war: for an armie ſo proportioned, as I D haue ſaid, is ſufficient of it ſelfe for any notable attempt, as may be proued by many effec-tuall reaſons: for hardly ſhall you find a place whereas a greater number than I haue mentioned, can be put in battel, by reaſon of impediments which grow by ditches, riuers, lakes, mountains, woods, & ſuch like, whereas a reaſonable armie may eſcape them by the conduct of a diſcreet General. This proportion is to be kept exactly by ſuch princes as reſolue and are euer inforced to ſtand vpon their gard, & keep their forces in a readineſſe, whether their occaſion be offenſiue or defenſiue: for by this meane they ſhall be able to beare out the charge, and diſpoſe at all times of their companies, as aduantage ſhall be offered. The Turks policie is worthy to be imitated in this point, who notwithſtanding his great numbers, hath drawne the reſolution & glory of his forces to his Ianizaries alone, which are a E certaine number, and more eaſie to be ſatisfied. Theſe ſtanding faſt, the reſt are kept in order by that means, wheras otherwiſe it were very difficult to content all the companies. In the ſame reſpect Cæſar gaue moſt honor to the tenth legion, but with another kind of moderation & reſpect to the reſt than the Turke vſeth. Some thinke, that in reſpect of many occaſions to diminiſh the prefixed number, either by drawing ſome into garriſons, or by imploying them otherwiſe, or by ſome accidents that may fall out, an army ſhould conſiſt of a greater number of ſufficient men: but to one that hath the perfect skill of warre, this number doubtleſſe may ſuffice, ſo as the companies that are withdrawn for other ſeruices be inſtantly ſupplied: for thus ſhall the number & the armie be the ſame, as the tenth legion was euer one and the ſame, notwithſtanding accidents. Neither would I haue you to F perſuade your ſelf, that by often changing armies wax weak, but rather, if ſupply be quickly made, more gallant & more couragious: for thus we reape the benefit of thoſe forward & reſolute men, which being newly come, are far more ready to hazard their liues, for that they know not what the danger means, nor haue not the conſideration & ſtay which time brings: on the other ſide the valor of old ſoldiers is more throughly refined by experience.
By this meanes alſo the readie wayes are opened, to recompence and honour thoſe that 1555 deſerue well, and for correction and infamie for ſuch as deſerue otherwiſe. Theſe meanes G are moſt expedient for the maintenance of armies in the field, and there is no doubt but euery one of thoſe that are valiant and tried, will exceed ten that want experience in any enterpriſe. Next to the proportion of the number, I could wiſh you to be prouident in ſeting downe good rules for the campe, which ought chiefly to be grounded vpon con-ſcience, in obſeruing thoſe things which belong to religion, and leading an vpright & ho-neſt life. Next to this you muſt diſpoſe your ſouldiers minds to dutifull obedience, and due reſpect, not onely to their Generall, but to their commanders. The beſt meanes to ground this reſpectiue awe, is by incouraging with hope, & rewarding vpon good deſerts ſuch perſons as are chiefly noted for their forwardneſſe, and diſgracing others that are o- H therwiſe affected. The firſt attempt of mutinie muſt be preſently corrected; for the remembrance of ſharpe puniſhment will ſticke longer in a ſouldiers mind, than any earneſt exhortation of a Generall. Out of theſe meanes of preparation ſprings a diſpoſition in all men of valour, vertue, and obedience. Beſides the ordinarie exerciſes of the campe, to keepe their minds from idleneſſe, and their bodies from ſloth, you muſt prouide, that by parties made, and ſhadowes of true fight indeed, the profeſſion of armes may grow familiar vnto the ſouldiers, and they made fit for any ſudden attempt. Moreouer, it is fit to diſ-poſe the minds of commanders, as well in campes as garriſons, to commaund with judgement, and to ſerue with diſcretion: In the ſouldiers likewiſe willingneſſe to obey, and a readineſſe to execute; the which may the more eaſily be effected, if order be taken that I the captaines account the ſouldiers their companions, as Cæſar called them Commilitones in this reſpect, and take an eſpeciall care of them in all things that belong to their profit, reputation, and loue. And ſouldiers for their part, the more courteouſly their Leaders in-treat them, the more humbly they ought to obey their commands. An armie being thus prouided for, in that which concerneth the proportion and diſcipline, you muſt imploy your care effectually in ſetting down good orders touching fights; for without great care you may not hope for any proſperous ſucceſſe in martiall affaires, nor preſume of any vi-ctorie. I know that circumſtances alter rules ſometimes in all profeſſions, and in thoſe moſt of all; notwithſtanding Maximes grounded vpon reaſons and experience, will make a man more apt to take his beſt aduantage. Surely it would ſeeme a labour worthie of ſo K great a prince as you ſhalbe, to vſe all poſſible diligence to find out a better way than that which is vſed among the Chriſtians of our time, wherby an armie may be often releeued, and come to trie the fortune of the fight: ſo as the firſt ranke being forced to retire, it may not fall vpon the ſecond, nor the ſecond vpon the third; but that they which are behind aduancing to releeue the firſt, being tired, & forced to recoile, may performe that ſeruice without diſorder, in ſuch ſort as the firſt may no way hinder them: for although the firſt be inforced to retire, yet the other that are freſh, making vp the bodie, by ſtepping into their places, may come to handie ſtrokes with their enemies. Herein conſiſted the chiefe perfection of the Roman diſcipline, and hereof, among my notes, you may find many ſtrange conceits, for that I had an earneſt intent, if time and leaſure would haue giuen me L leaue, to haue ſet downe ſome plot, and made this ground one of the chiefeſt labours in re-ſpect of warre with the Turkiſh Infidels. But in reſpect of my continuall affairs, and being euer turmoiled with endleſſe buſineſſe, I could neuer effect what I intended, nor applie my mind intirely to this ſingular inuention. It may be that God hath reſerued the credit of this ſtratagem to you, wherein you may be ſomewhat aſſiſted by that briefe collection which I haue made for memorie. Surely it is a great diſorder, and a foule diſcredit to the Leaders of our time, that all the force and power of a mightie armie ſhould conſiſt vpon three or foure of the firſt ranks of the battell. This error groweth from the defect of our rules in the marſhalling of our battels and ſquadrons in a direct line, euery man in particular, and all the rankes in generall, ſtanding one directly behind another: for in a direct line M it is not poſsible to giue the firſt any meanes to rerire, but they muſt diſorder them that follow. Wherefore for an introduction to a better methode than hath been hitherto practiſed, it ſhal not be amiſſe to put thoſe three bodies into which an army is diuided, namely, the foreward, battel, and rereward, into three ſquadrons, ſo placed one to anothers ſide, as they may meet together in forme of a triangle.

The

A The firſt ſquadron muſt repreſent the point, the other two the ſides, for being thus diſ- 1555 ioyned & diſſeuered by art, it is an eaſie matter to bring forward the ſecond to fight with out diſturbance to the firſt, and the third without trouble to the other two: Thus cõming to ſucceed their fellows ſide long in continual fight againſt their enemies, another aduantage wil ariſe, which is, they ſhall trie the fortune of the field thrice in one incounter. I doe aſſure my ſelfe, that from this beginning men may proceed to a more perfect knowledge how the ſquadrons themſelues being alſo diuided into leſſer ſquadrons might one retain another by the ſame proportion. A man may aime at ſuch a myſterie by orderly degrees, for the matter being ſo intangled, as experience doth teach, it were no more poſſible to B bring this than any other art at the firſt inuention, to perfection in an inſtant.

It is the labour of a beare to licke miſhapen fruit to faſhion, and of a Lyon to bring militarie rules to certaintie. The want which men may iuſtly find in direction of an army at this day, proceedeth farther yet, for they put the beſt and moſt reſolute ſouldiers in the formoſt rankes, who being forced to giue backe, they cauſe all the reſt by their example to doe the like, as if it were lawfull for them to imitate their actions and thoughts. In ſome ſort they may be excuſed in their imaginations, yet wee ſee that from this error doth commonly grow the ruines of all Companies. The Romanes were farre more diſcreet concerning this point of marſhalling their men, for the firſt front was made verie ſtrong with yong men of great force, whom they called but a third
C part of their old and beſt ſouldiers were mingled with this head-ſtrong youth, both to defend them, & to temper thẽ. The ſecond ſquadron, to the which they gaue the title Primarij, cõſiſted of two parts of old ſoldiers only & a third of yong. The third was anciẽt old ſoldiers called Triarij. By this means neither the ſecond depended of the firſt which were yong for the moſt part, nor the third of the ſecond in which were alſo ſome yong. Beſides, the firſt incoũter was alwaies very furious by the forwardnes of yong ſpirits, who the leſſe they knew of danger in this kind, the more reſolute they were and aduenturous: experience doth teach that to withſtand the furie of a fight, we cannot make our head better than of yong men, ſo as they may be tempered with a third part of old; the ſecond ſhall be better gouerned, and the third more furniſhed with valour, Iudgement and conſideration. Such ought the diſtribution of our forces to bee in this age. Wherefore let no man
D preſume to prefer any before this diſcipline of Rome; for it is verie likely that they which with ſuch proſperous and long continuance of time made the onely true profeſſion of armes, marſhalled their forces in this manner, would euer haue forſaken it, if there had not beene ſome ſpeciall cauſe; and therefore we may reſt aſſured that they had reaſon on their ſide; for proofe whereof I note that when ſoeuer thoſe Phalanges came to ioine with the forces of Rome, being ordered as we haue ſaid, they neuer ſped happily. The reaſon will appeare plainely by comparing both diſciplines, for the Greekes by marſhalling the beſt men in the formoſt Squadron, had a meaning to put valour and reſolutiõ into the reſt which could not be expected generally of all the companies, the greater part
E being a multitude void of experience, & guided onely by their ſence: wheras the Romans had as well regard to preparation of minds, ſo as it was not hard to bring thoſe that were guided by ſence to execute things with good conſideration: wherefore it was ſufficient that onely bodies of men were aſſigned ouer to the corporall whome Scipio left with Syphax, the better to braue the foot of Cartharge, for albeit at the firſt they were lightly eſteemed by the enemie, yet by a courſe of good diſcipline, they became afterwards the meanes whereby the Romanes conquered. Euerie man is able to conſider with him ſelfe to what great vſe this forcing of bodies by good order was, and how much it was eſteemed at the firſt. It were friuolous to ſay that thoſe rules can hardly bee now obſerued with any hope of good ſucceſſe, for that artillerie is crept into our warres;
F for if thoſe ſquadrons had in thoſe daies, and would haue (in caſe artillerie were not in vſe) an aduantage ouer our men, conſidering that this aide is common to both ſides, it followeth that the perfections of thoſe ſquadrons remaine in the ſame aduãtage which it had and ſhould haue without artillerie. Beſides it is euident to ſence that thoſe collaterall Squadrons, are not in halfe the danger of great ſhot, that ours bee, which are ranged this day by a direct line: for a volley of ſhot comming from the head of one battell

1555 battel to another, ſcoureth throgh al the ranks. Let vs ad the deceitful vſe of late artillery G and chiefly to offend the bodies of men in field. But for that the ſmal ſhot may be made to play with great aduantage, where thoſe ſquadrons are cloſe, & other rules of that Romane diſcipline carefully obſerued, you ſhall ſeeke out particular inſtructions among my notes:
And moreouer what fit conſiderations may be vſed in the choiſe of commanders to an armie, what moderation ſhould be obſerued in cauſing the common ſouldiers to depend vpon their Generall, & other commanders put in truſt by him; beſides other meanes for the ſetling of your beſt ſecuritie.

I will now paſſe vnto other things which come into my mind to aduiſe you touching the carriage of your ſelfe in this time of warre: but by the way I muſt once againe H put you in minde with great earneſtneſſe, that this care of finding out the beſt way of marſhalling your forces in the field, ought in reaſon to bee one of the chiefeſt that you muſt imbrace, as well for occurrents of warre, as to make your name immortall among all nations. Your fleets at ſea ought in like maner to haue their particular reſpects, touching which there ſeldom chanceth any cauſe of innouation. The chiefeſt care is, that all neceſſarie imployments that belong to Nauies, be alwaies in readineſſe: That the veſſels be rigged, augmented, and imployed euer in ſome ſeruice for the ſtate, ſo far as is conuenient with ſecuritie. Aboue all things ſettle thoſe affaires in ſuch a certaine courſe, as your gallies and other ſhipping may bee properly belonging to your ſelfe, or to the ſtate, and not to your captaines, officers, or other priuate men, for hauing repoſed the whole I weight of your fortune and reputation vpon the ſafegard of thoſe veſſels, they will not eaſily or willingly be brought to hazard them where the ſmalleſt daunger ſhall appeare.
The charge of getting ſhips of price into their hands, together with the difficulty of repairing and ſupplying them in caſe they ſhould miſcarrie by any miſchance, doth make men ſo feareful of the worſt, as oftentimes a publike opportunitie is loſt, while priuate reſpects are tendred. By taking of this order you ſhall bring all men to depend vpon your ſelfe, and you ſhall neuer need to depend vpon any: I ſpeake not of the large allowance which will be made by officers, when they ſerue themſelues for their owne commoditie.
Cauſe your forces to be viewed and ſurueyed, & their munition to be reuiewed & repaired: where you find the rate ſuperfluous, abate, where too ſcant, augment it. Auoid extre- K mities in any wiſe, either of too much or too little; diſcretion muſt be the meaſure of theſe conſiderations. Be carefull alwaies to furniſh your places of ſtrength, with ſufficient gouernours and truſtie garriſons. Let your number rather offend in exceſſe than want, for of both there is leſſe danger in an ouer-plus, both for that the onely valour and reſolution of the ſouldiers hath often ſupplied the weakeneſſe of the place, in reſpect whereof the Romans euer truſted more to the courage of their men, than to the ſtrength of the place;
as alſo in reſpect of thoſe that fall ſicke and die, or runne to the other ſide, or are cut off by any other meanes, ſo as the whole number is neuer ſeene to fight at one inſtant: fortifie your ſelfe with ſure forces againſt the enemie, with your tents pitched, truſting rather to forts raiſed in the field, than to the ſituation of townes. On the other ſide when you L beginne to quarrell and inuade, you muſt rather aſſaile your enemies by the help of forts, and ſconces, built of purpoſe to annoy him, than ſeeke to win his places of ſtrength, with loſſe of time, and an intollerable charge. This courſe is ſecure and certaine, as the other is deceitfull and dangerous: whereof you ſhall find further proſes among my notes for memorie.

Touching the maner of erecting forts with ſpeed and little charge, and the beſt meanes to ſettle a wauering eſtate, the beſt way is to marke aduiſedly the whole poſition and ſituation of the place, and to faſhion out of it the frame that ſhall be fit; ap-plie your induſtrie to the plot of nature, with ſuch certaine reaſons and vndoubted rules, as both the whole may anſwere to the parts, and the parts vnto the whole in due M proportion and workemanſhip. Thus muſt you proceed from one eſtate vnto another reſpectiuely, ſtanding alwaies thus far reſolute touching the rules of fortification, That although no place can be impregnable, yet it ſhall bee ſufficient that ours be ſuch as the enemie ſhal haue ſmall hope to win them, either in reſpect of long time, or the great expence which ſuch a labour wil require, being threatned by many misfortunes & diſaduan-tages,

A tages. The prouiſions of war conſiſt in victuals, artillerie, munition, ſupplies and coine, which altogether in effect import no more than an abilitie to mainteine continually ſo great a force of trained men, as out of the ſame an armie (when great need requireth) may be drawne by the Soueraigne, or forces ſufficient in all reſpects for the vſes aboue mentioned. Hereupon followeth, that a prince, who either reſolueth or is inforced to ſtand vpon his owne defence, muſt think vpon a kind of warre with which he may be able to rule both the charge and weight that goes with it. Wherefore I had a meaning to ſet downe a certaine order in my armies, which might be ſufficient to bring this to paſſe, but I could neuer find any fit opportunitie to put it in execution. My intent was firſt to leuy a gallant B army of Flemings, Spaniards, and Italians intermixt; being thus aſſembled, I meant to keep them euer in one eſtate, either in warre againſt the Turke, or ſome Chriſtian Princes which I could not auoid without great danger, or great diſhonour: Then I did thinke it good to capitulate with this armie, that al booties of great matters belonging to the publike ſtate, as artillerie, munition and ſuch like things, being gotten either by the ſacke of Townes or ſpoile of the Countrie, ſhould be properly reſerued to the princes chamber, the reſt left vnto the ſouldiers. Notwithſtanding I reſolued to bind the Souldier to ſel & deliuer vnto the Princes officers at a reaſonable price ſet downe, all victualles, garments, houſhold-ſtuffe and other goods pertaining to their neceſſarie vſes or their commodities. Theſe things I would haue kept in ſtore vntill the Souldier ſhould haue need of them a- C gaine, with ſome conuenient profit vnto my ſelfe. By this prouiſion both Prince and Soldiers ſhould be ſupplied, but the ſouldier moſt: for beſides the comfort of receiuing readie money at all times for that they get, they ſhall be alſo ſure of all neceſſarie things at an eaſie price. If we compare it with their loſſe, who buy all things from the Merchant, or the ſtranger who ſtill followeth the campe, it ought not to offend the Souldier, that his Prince ſhould draw ſome little portion to his owne releefe of that vnmeaſurable gaine which otherwiſe would be diuided among cormorants. I thought moreouer that it wold proue profitable to the ſouldier, and ſafe for the Prince, if a certain officer were appointed in the campe, into whoſe hands the ſouldiers (being imploied in any dangerous ſeruice) might confidently commit their money or the pillage of beſt price with full aſſurance D that in caſe it chanced to them otherwiſe than well, all ſhould be deliuered to their heires or to ſuch perſons as they would appoint; imitating in this point thoſe captaines which to be the better aſſured of their ſouldiers, take vp money of the officers in preſſe to pay the companies. Cæſar vſed the ſame policie, and thereby was free from all feare, either of the officers, whoſe credit he had by this means ingaged, or of the ſouldiers whoſe pay was alwaies readie. Beſides other obligations, a reaſonable gain might be afforded after ſo much in the hundred by the yere vnto the ſoldiers, who being aſſured of a ſure place where to leaue their armor or their ſtocke vpon any dangerous imployment, & that their contracts and directions touching thoſe things ſhall be faithfully performed, whatſoeuer happen vnto themſelues, they wil hold it for a greater aduantage to leaue their ſubſtance in a tru- E ſtie hand, rather than to carrie it about with them. If any chance to die without heires in bloud, or limitation, in warre, who ſhould ſucceed him; the goods may iuſtly be aſſigned to the Princes chamber, as wee ſee by the ciuil Law, the prince inheriteth their eſtates that die without any certaine heires. It may be jealouſie, (which the baſer ſort is euer apt to conceiue of the princes policie, to inrich himſelfe) may diſcourage ſome, ſuppoſing vnder euerie bait to find a ſecret hooke, vntill that experience hath cleered the clouds of this falſe imagination, wherefore the way to breake this ice, is to appoint a certaine number of the chiefeſt of the campe, whome we may moſt boldly truſt, to beginne this order, and to bring in their ſhares; for who is either ſo ſuſpitious or fooliſh, be he either priuat ſoldier, captaine, or Colonell, that had rather carrie all his goods about him, in continual ha- F zard both of enemies and boores vpon euerie iniſter accident, than leaue it in ſafety, and with ſome aduantage to themſelues, or to their heires who may recouer it. It may be ſaid that prouiſion for the carriage of theſe things will be chargeable, but that may be holpen by another meanes, if the ſouldier out of the gaine and intereſt of his goods laied downe in truſt, be bound to anſwere it, for that the goods doe ſtill remaine his owne, and the charge is ſatisfied with ouer-plus. Touching theſe carriages, you ſhall find a modell and memoriall 1555

1555 memoriall among my notes, for the priuate ſouldier is greatly eaſed by this new inuenti- G on, hauing nothing to care for but his armes and himſelfe, ſo as the whole campe in generall ſhould be more light: beſides the greateſt part of the treaſure and goods of value belonging to the campe ſhould reſt euer in the princes hand, ſo as hee might vſe them for the furtherance of his attempts in warre, as wee ſee the proofe of things left by like truſt in the hands of merchants. Thus by the money which ſhal remain in the princes hands, by their deceaſe without heires, either by deſcent or diſpoſition of will of ſuch as were the right owners of the ſame, and by the gaine which doth accrue vnto the prince by ſelling victuals and other implements at the ſecond hand (but yet to the ſouldiers eaſe, in reſpect of that which he ſhould pay vnto the merchant or victualler for the like, the H prince may make himſelfe more able to maintein a mightie armie long, as you ſhal diſco-uer more particularly by my notes. But as I haue ſaid before it is expedient that with this the prouiſion of valiant ſouldiers, able leaders, and good orders doe concurre, although the vulgar ſort doe accompt money to bee the ſinewes of all warre. I haue oftentimes had cauſe to iudge of this compariſon, and therefore may be the better beleeued in ſetting downe a difference: It is a ſtrength where other parts more needful are cõpleat, but a ſillie ſinew where the chiefeſt members are diſordred. Allow me thoſe abilities and politike prouiſions in a princes armie with perfection, whereof I ſpake before, and no doubt but the warre will maintain it ſelfe: for we cannot find that a worthie Generall and leader of a good and well directed armie, euer wanted courage to beginne, or I meanes to maintaine the warre, as well with pay by meanes of pillage and ſuch other gaine, as with victuals euen out of the enemies countrie. Beſides a prince may alwaies keepe his troupes in heart, by putting them in hope of honour, profit and all kinds of reward, when time doth ſerue, although prouiſion for the preſent bee ſcant, ſo as they know the princes abilitie and fortune to bee ſufficient to performe his promiſes.
Then may the Prince, imitating the Romans, repoſe greater truſt in ſouldiers that are both valiant and well affected to his gouernement, then either in deepe trenches, or places ſtrongly fortified: I meane ſuch a Prince as either hath a will or is inforced a-gainſt his will to hold his ſword alwaies in his hand, and to looke for hard meaſure.
If all the charges of warre ſhould bee drawne out of a princes cofers, it were not poſſi- K ble it ſhould continue long. To preuent this inconuenience, it ſeemeth good to ſome, to haue the warre made to a profitable end, but it is not verie eaſie as I thinke to giue an inſtance of this aduice, conſidering experience doth teach, that by offenſiue warre the countrie is ruined, the people ſpoiled, and the prince impoueriſhed, and in a defenſiue warre, of what qualitie ſoeuer the gaine be, men may not expect that it ſhould anſwere the charge that doth grow thereby. Imagine that this inconuenience may bee eaſed by good counſell, and applying batterie to the chiefe places onely, which either by their wealth, or the releefe which others bring in by their meanes, may yeeld ſatisfaction and recompence for any charge, without being forced otherwiſe to fight in vaine, or for the opening of a paſſage which is alreadie giuen you, L into the enemies ſtate: yet it cannot bee denied but for many other reſpects, and in ſundrie other caſes, the warre, which without ſuch a kind of releefe is no way tollerable, by meanes thereof is made ſecure and free from all dangers and diſorder of any moment.

Now for that ſupplies are neceſſarie for the maintenance of a continuall armie in one and the ſelfe ſame eſtate; I thinke it verie requiſite for the ſeruice of your campe, that throughout all your realmes and eſtates, the which in your choiſe are fitteſt to ſet out men, a particular muſter bee taken, and a Regiſter preciſely kept of all the youth that are able to beare armes, ſo as it may bee done without offence to the people, or incenſing the hautie hearts with rage and malice againſt their Soueraigne. M As I ſaid before, your tried Souldiers muſt bee kept in practiſe, leaſt their ſpi-rits grow dull and their bodies vnable by ſloth and diſcontinuance, ſo would I wiſh thoſe young ſouldiers were trained by ſufficient leaders, that they may be the better able to ſerue when they are called for. In this generall muſter eſpeciall choiſe ought to bee made of ſuch men as by nature are giuen to the warres, and apt of their diſpoſition,

A ſition; that are in good eſtate to liue, and eſpecially that haue families, for of ſuch, a man may looke for better proofe, and relie more on, for that they haue ſomewhat to loſe at home, they eſteeme their reputation, and feare ſhame and puniſhment more, the which they that haue lands and goods to anſwere for their good behauiour, cannot ſo eaſily auoid as they that haue nothing: Beſides they are incouraged by a reſpect of bloud to a care of their owne houſes. Theſe perſons may in no wiſe be drawne out of families, that haue but one man in them, or ſo few, as the preſſing of one man may indanger the whole familie for want of food, but you muſt preſſe them where they may be ſpared without danger, and incourage them beſides with the hope of credit, and commoditie to bee
B gotten by their merits in the campe, for otherwiſe wee ſee that being brought with diſcontentment to the field, their deſerts proue according. Thanks be giuen to God, you are ſouereigne ouer many great realmes and great eſtates, in which you may raiſe ſuch martiall troupes without offence, as they may not onely bee ſufficient to defend, but to offend others if you liue in vnion of good correſpondencie, with your friends and kinſmen of the houſe of Auſtria: by this agreement you ſhall ſettle your owne power, and become a comfort and ſupport to thoſe that loue you, and a terror to ſuch as enuie you: On the other ſide aſſure your ſelfe that diſcord among neere allies, will blemiſh your authoritie, put heart into your enemies to make deſignes againſt your greatneſſe, and ſo diſtemper your friends, as they ſhall not be able to reſolue which
C way to bend their affections. Standing thus vnited, you ſhall haue great oportunitie (beſides the Italian & Spaniſh forces) to diſpoſe of the Germanes, as your need ſhall require, the which is a martiall and a verie honorable nation. I know that this mixture doth oftentimes cauſe diſorders in a campe: but yet by one that knoweth how to temper this light diſcord with a moderate emulation, they may be imployed to moſt excellent and rare effects, in reſpect of the great difficultie and almoſt impoſſibilitie that euer they ſhould ioine or agree together in offenſiue mutinies, diſtractions and diſobedience of any kind. I cannot forbeare to report vpon this iuſt occaſion what I haue often aduiſed you of before, that you reſpect with all due regard your couſin the king of Bohemia, to the greatneſſe and ineſtimable value of whoſe mind, the greateſt empires are too narrow bounds;
D and doubtleſſe vpon euerie fit occaſion, you ſhall ſee effects anſwerable to this conceit which the world hath of his worthineſſe. Beleeue this confidently, that there is more good to bee expected from the loue which ſpringeth from conſanguinitie (although that ſometimes cauſes of vnkindneſſe may ariſe, than from the faireſt ſhewes and greateſt profeſſions of good will that can bee made by any ſtranger. Now for that all offences and vnkindneſſes are moſt bitter, growing among perſons that are neere in bloud, if they be not quenched in due time: to preuent a greater inconuenience, cut off all iuſt occaſions on your ſide, ſetting downe this leſſon for a rule, that it is an art more worthie commendation to yeeld in ſome ſort to thoſe that are allyed, to continue their affection, than to end quarrels & vnkindneſſes with other perſons, by inforcing them to yeeld to our authority.
E But to conclude my councell touching the care which muſt bee taken of this trained youth, is, that it may alwaies ſerue as a Spring to ſupply the armie: for the better pleaſing of their humors, and winning of their loues, it ſhall be fit to priuiledge them with a libertie to weare weapons, eſpecially on thoſe daies that are appointed for their exerciſes, and to make the beſt ſhew they are able of their forwardneſſe. I would alſo haue them graced with ſome ſpeciall fauour, as occaſion ſerues, and exempted from all ſeruile burthens in Countries. Then would I wiſh you wholy to direct your care to a due conſideration of your eſtate in general, and of the countries in particular vnder you: Look vpon their condition, ſituation and qualitie, conſider both of their aboundance and wants, and of ſufficient meanes to liue, as water, wood and graine, that ſupplie being made from other F places that haue greater ſtore, all loue and kindneſſe may be entertained among people that are ſubiect to one Soueraign power. Though policie did not preſcribe this care, yet chriſtianity wold challẽge it. Cauſe plots to be drawn of al their greateſt riuers, moũtains, ſtreits & paſſages, that by repairing vnto your map vpon any accident, that ſhall happen, you may diſpoſe of things with greater certainty. Be careful not only to know the diſpoſitions & humors of thẽ (which is very neceſſary for great princes) but alſo their alliances

and

1555

1555 and factions, whereby you ſhall be alwaies able both to bridle their vndutifull affections, G and to preuent their practiſes, if they breake out into extremities. The balance of authority is in your hands; all credit comes from your ſelfe, & therefore gouern the ſcales with ſome moderation, ſo as that ſide may be heauieſt which is beſt affected to your party. Pro-uide againſt al dangers, & ſerue your turn by all ſuch oportunities, as may further your intention. If any countrie doth liue in danger of an enemie, that doth fronter vpon them, ſecure them in ſuch ſort by captains, officers, & garriſons, as they may be freed from feare of al wrong. To be ſhort, I would haue you caſt vp an euen reckoning, & make a iuſt accõpt of their inclinations, their power, their wants, their ſtore, their agreement, their diuiſions, their alliances, their habits, their cuſtoms, their affections, their dependances, their affinity, H their cõmodities, & their diſcõmodities, that by eaſing one & charging another, you may turn al things to your beſt content. Then wil it be time to turn your eye to the like conſi-deration of their accompt. In this point you muſt reſolue with ripe iudgement and great care, making fit proportions by comparing ſundry circumſtances of perſons, places, times, natures, cuſtomes, neighbours, officers, adherents, and other accidents, as are incident to ſo ſtrong a knot of ciuill policie. Theſe things being vnderſtood and wiſely pondred by him that hath the helme in hand, there is no doubt but he may euer march vpon a firme ground in any enterpriſe he takes in hãd; for in knowing our own & our enemies ſtrength, in weighing circumſtances with an equall hand, & being able to apply the beſt aduantages, that wiſdom & experience can find, to profitable vſes, conſiſteth both the hope & hap I of victorie. I know that diuers courſes muſt be taken according to the diuers qualities of the nation, & the ſituation of the countrie. Touching the firſt, whether it be peopled, or ſcant of men, armed or naked, valiant or cowardlie, pleaſed or diſcontented.
Touching the ſecond; whether it be full of mountaines, valleyes, plaines, woods or riuers, whether it abound with victuals and al orher commodities that are fit for war, or is barren or beggerly. Aboue all things be ſure you neuer be drawn into quarrels, with any mighty potentate for the reliefe of ſuch as rather burthen than eaſe, indanger than helpe your eſtate, which elſe may turn to your great diſaduãtage. Beſides theſe rules, I wold pre-ſcribe a nũber more of like effect, the which long experience (the mother of true wiſdom) hath imprinted in my heart, which other men perhaps which go more by aime than by art K make ſmall accompt of. War ought alwaies to be vndertaken vpon a iuſt quarrel, and directed to no other end than to a ſafe & honorable peace which cãnot be purchaſed without wars. In war he that ſpendeth moſt in accompt, ſpendeth leaſt in want; doubt of this opinion who liſt, my ſelfe can warrãt it. It is not good to enter into a quarrel without fore-caſt, how to make it good, but after it is once begun, there is neither dalliance nor delay without danger. To him that hath beſt skill & vnderſtanding how to manage war, it will maintein it ſelfe, ſo as good order may be taken from the firſt beginning; and the proofe of euerie peece of councel that experience maketh good, may ſerue for ſound direction in other things that happen afterwards. Let prouiſion of all things be made in the beſt kind, & euer with an ouerplus, for in that which is left can be little loſſe, & althogh there were, yet L there is no proportion betwixt it and the dangers that may grow in weakening braue attempts with ſcarcitie. Let al your proceedings & inuentiõs tend to victory, for that is the final end of the art of war, to which men attaine with ſeaſonable prouiſiõs, diſcreet orders, & wiſe gouernment. In the beginning wiſdome, diligence, & warines is required, courage in the purſuit, & a conſtant reſolution vnto the end: you muſt euer giue the firſt aſſault, rather then attend vntil you be ſet vpon: And althogh your fortune ſhold be ſo bad as to be preuented in this courſe, yet muſt you ſeek by al meanes to diuert that force by the great aduantage that is gotten by making warre vpon ſome other princes countrie, or doing ſome good peece of ſeruice to ſtay the frowns of fortune. Repoſe not the only ſtaie & hope of your martiall proceedings eyther vpon your companies of horſe by land, or your fleet M by ſea, for they are things without ſence or reaſon; & we ſee that at ſea the greater number preuaileth cõmonly, beſides the deceits & vncertainty of the ſea. But touching theſe inſtructions thus ſcattered and other conſiderations to bee obſerued in the whole courſe of war, I wil refer you to my noates which wil giue no ſmal light, how to demean your ſelf vpon all occaſion, the which (conſidering your preſent eſtate) are likely to happen.

I will

A I will now ſpeake firſt of the warre againſt the Turke, as that which I hold to bee of greateſt importance, moſt certaine, and moſt daungerous, as well in reſpect of your profeſſion and faith, which ought to bee preferred by a Prince of your religion and conſcience before all other ends, as alſo the Turke is the mightieſt enemy, that either at this day you haue, or are like to haue. You may aſſure your ſelfe that he is a certaine enemy, not only through the malice which he beareth to your ſelf and faith, but by the grounds of his owne politike, or rather tyrannous eſtate, which preſſe him to bee alwayes readie and in armes to withſtand all attempts. It is hard for him to worke any great effects in Hungary, as well in reſpect of the long courſe of the riuer of Danow, and of the champaine country, as of the ſituation of Vienna, and the neighbourhood of Germanie. In B other places likewiſe his next neighbours are either mightie or troubleſome, and ſuch as in proceſſe of time may bee more eaſily brought vnder than at this inſtant, ſtanding alwayes with their ſwords drawne to defend their liberties: They are not like vnto the Sophie, whoſe deepe wiſedome and great valour makes his forces to bee feared more than the greatneſſe of his owne eſtate: But God knoweth whether his next ſucceſſours will be able to ſupply the want that is found in his fortune. In other places the borders are not all inhabited, for they lie waſte moſt commonly vpon the greateſt parts of the dominions and realmes that are poſſeſſed by this tyrannie for theſe reſpects: And for his ſoueraignetie vpon the ſea ſide, beſides the diſcord and diuiſion which is among the Chriſtian princes of our age, there is no doubt but hee ſhall be drawne to turne his whole forC ces vpon the Ilands, and your eſtates in Italie. It is not probable to thinke that hee will breake with the Venetians before hee breake with you, for doubtleſſe hee will imagine, that in warring againſt Venice, your forces will come in to aide: but beginning firſt with you, it may be hee will hope that the Venetians will remaine neuters. One reaſon may be giuen in this reſpect, which is, their diſcontinuance from all exerciſe of armes for ſo many yeres: Another, for that commonweales conſiſting either of popularitie or peeres, in reſpect of the long life which they preſume to be moſt certaine in their eſtates, and their hope of preferrement from degrees of good to better, which is euer greene, do euer truſt more in the aduantage of time, and ſuch accidents as may fall out in the changes and alterations of the world, than in anie warre that is attempted by great PotenD tates, and will either not at all take armes, or ſo late, as they had done better, not to haue medled. Moreouer, hauing alreadie faſtned their tallons in his ſides, and put a ſharpe bitte into his mouth, by the poſſeſſion of the Ilands of Cipreſſe and Candie, it is likely they will ſtand long vpon their gard, before they will hazard themſelues to offend or defend any man. Adde hereunto that the eſtate of Venice ſtanding wholy vpon merchandize, they can not forbeare the trafficke they haue in the Turkes Dominions. Now wee ſee that the Turke is by little and little growne proud, hauing multiplied your daungers by the greatneſſe of his power, which is now ſo aduaunced to the toppe of Fortunes wheele, as wee may rather hope that it will breake with its owne burthen, or that it may be weakened by policie, or warre, than looke for an ouerthrow by ſome E miracle from heauen, or by the power of Chriſtendome, for as men are ſinfull, ſo God is iuſt.

No doubt but the Turkiſh Empire hath a period, but in Gods fore-knowledge, not in mans fore-caſt, and therefore vntill wee chaunge the courſe of our euill liues, wee ſtriue in vaine to moderate the plagues of his deſerued indignation. I know many haue beene of the mind, and are yet at this day, that it is impoſſible for anie Potentate in Chriſtendome, to ſet downe any courſe by his owne force to keepe vnder this aſpiring miſcreant. And therefore by a generall league and combination of all princes this worke muſt be effected. Notwithſtanding, when I conſider by the light of long experience F what poore effects haue iſſued from this deuice, and what fraude doth often lurke amongſt ſuch conſorts, I am of opinion that you ſhould wholy relie vpon your owne ſtrength: and before the attempting of anie famous enterpriſe, examine what your owne eſtates are able to performe, and then thoſe which your neighbours and allies haue promiſed. I haue found, and you haue reaſon to remember how the French king

1555 carried himſelfe concerning theſe occaſions vpon a cauſleſſe iealouſie, and a priuate G ſpleene: men will haue humours whileſt they mannage the affaires of this world: your wiſeſt courſe is to prouide that they may not preiudice you. The way will be more eaſie by conferring the good will and affection of your allies of the houſe of Auſtria alone.
But for the full accompliſhment hereof with commendable effects, you muſt reſolue according to the proper and true meanes, which are, wiſedome and infallible concluſions out of the grounds of long experience.

The firſt point is to conſider aduiſedly what kind of warre may moſt auaile you, to defend, offend, peruert, or diuert. Touching a defenſiue warre, my opinion was alwayes to haue it abſolutely excluded, for what is it elſe but a laying of our ſelues open to a manifeſt conſumption of ſtrength from time to time, not without great hazard of the H whole in a ſhort ſpace, or by long delayes, as things fall out, and with deſpaire of any ſatisfaction or reſtitution. This kind of warre hath beene generally held by all men of experience that made profeſſion of armes, to be the moſt vnprofitable and moſt daungerous of all the reſt: but whenas men are inforced thereunto by neceſſitie. An offenſiue warre which reaſon perſuadeth to be made againſt him in Greece, both in reſpect of our inferioritie by ſea, and for many other reaſons which concurre, I hold it very hard and in a manner impoſſible to bee brought to any good effect, ſeeing that diuerſions are ſo eaſie and commodious vnto him: for as it is impoſsible to make preparation for ſuch a warre, without diſcouerie, great charge and loſſe of time, ſo the Turke will plainely foreſee our deſignes, and fruſtrate our executions. The warre which wee I call preuentiue ought to bee eſteemed the more fitte, for that the multitude of ſouldiers which the Turke carrieth alwayes with him to maintaine his owne deſignes, and to fruſtrate our purpoſes, is infinite. The courſe of diuerſion can auayle as little, preſuppoſing that offence goe before which I haue ſpecified: whereupon I may conclude, that none of theſe ſimple kindes are for your good: I might proceed and diſcourſe particularly, and according to their ſeuerall tearmes and differences touching euerie one of theſe; but by the ſtrengthening of this diſcourſe with ſundrie other reaſons of importaunce that concurre, it will appeare that out of the concluſions of theſe ſeuerall kindes, there ariſeth a mixt kind of warre, moſt fit for your occaſions:
for ſeeing there is no remedy but you muſt haue warre againſt the Turke as I ſaied be- K fore, ſince wee can neither make a warre meerely offenſiue for the reaſons I haue ſet downe, nor ought once to thinke of a preuenſion without ports, wee muſt preſuppoſe that ſuch a warre may bee defenſiue in act, but offenſiue in proofe, yet ſimply neither offenſiue nor defenſiue, according vnto the ſpeciall rules and notes of both in ſimple tearmes.

Let this warre thus tempered goe forward with a wiſe care to diuert, and ſo by little and little it will take a ſafe courſe to preuent; and in the end prooue meerely offenſiue to the enemie. But before I come to exemplifie this paterne, and ſet downe my plot, I muſt put you once againe in mind, that in making warre againſt the Turke, you muſt relie more vpon ſtratagems and the Art of warre, than in multitudes of men, L watching all oportunities, his troubles and incumbraunces in other warres, his loſſes and ruines by them, the partialities which fall out oftentimes betwixt the ſucceſſours of the State, and the diuiſions amongſt themſelues: All theſe things may induce a better knowledge how to make our partie ſtrong, but aboue all things bind vpon Gods fa-uour. But for that this fauour ought to bee procured, partly by ſuch meanes on our ſide, as are incident to the diſcretion of reaſonable men, you muſt vnderſtand, that nothing can bee more expedient for you, than agreement and intelligence with your friends of the houſe of Auſtria, as on the other ſide proportionally it ſtandeth them in hand, for the better effecting of any enterpriſe, to bee firmely vnited vnto you, and M to acquaint you with their purpoſes. Theſe things prouided for, you may eaſily come to the knowledge of the true courſe which it behoueth you to holde in maintaining this kind of warre: for if by any fit occaſion which ſhall be offered, the Turke beeing either ingaged in other warres, or his eſtate declining at home, you ſhall ſee reaſon to beginne
the

A the quarrell, and to preuent his reſolution. You may doe it beſt towards Hungarie, making your vncle now deſigned Emperour, acquainted with your intent, keeping the warre out of the champane Countries, and farre from the riuer of Danow, whereof the Turke ſtandeth in great neede, in regard of his carriages for ſuch an armie: Beſides, forcing him to paſſe by places which are not fit for his great troupes of horſe and multitudes of ſoote, there is no doubt but you may hope for a verie happie end of your deſignes. But in caſe not any one of theſe occaſions be offred, yet you may procure one by your owne diſcretion, making the yeere, wherein he maketh his preparation to ſerue your turne, by temporizing warily and fruſtrating his deſignes by delayes and ſhifts, according to the circumſtances and aduantages which ſhall be offered. 1555

B The next yeere when either hee doth not, or perhappes can not ſo ſpeedily aduaunce, or arme his troupes as hee deſireth, in reſpect of the great prouiſions hee is inforced to make, then would I haue you to aduaunce, and to fortifie that part of the Countrey which you haue gotten before that hee can bee readie to impeach your courſes vpon the frontires, and defend it with the like reſolution. Againe, vſe the matter in ſuch ſort, as when hee beginnes to caſsiere his companies, and to retire his forces, you may bee ready to renew the warre, and thereby force him to make a new defence. By this meanes you ſhall inforce him to continue his great armie ſtill in pay, which hee is not able to indure, or elſe to bring ſuch meane forces to field as hee may bee eaſily dealt withall, and by conſequence change the manner of his warre, which were no
C meane ſtep to an honorable victorie, for thereupon ſetting downe a new and diſcreet courſe for direction, you may preſume of a moſt fortunate ſucceſſe. Wherefore you haue reaſon both to graunt and offer all kinds of aid, both of men and money, I meane to the King of the Romanes, who ſhall fitly ſerue your turne, to keepe the ballaunce euen, till you finde a fitter opportunitie. And for that wee know, that vpon anie worthie peece of ſeruice the Turkiſh forces are verie apt to ſhrinke, for that they relie wholy vpon their ſtrength, being alſo apparent that this blow muſt be rather giuen by ſtratageme than by force, it ſhall not be amiſſe to touch thoſe meanes which are likely to aduaunce our purpoſes: you muſt be very carefull to drawe them into ſtreit places, where the warre for want of carriages and other neceſſarie prouiſions may proue
D verie cumberſome, as both I haue ſpecified before, and experience hath taught in the warres of Albania. Againe hee muſt bee encountered with ſo ſtrong an armie of foot, as it may bee able to withſtand his troupes of horſemen. Which in reſpect they are for the moſt part vnarmed, might bee eaſily effected. It is a point of eſpeciall conſideration alſo to put forth a ſquadron of choice men to entertaine the Ianiſaries in fight, from the beginning vnto the end of the battell, leauing in like manner conuenient forces to incounter the reſt of his armie: for whereas the manner of the Turkiſh diſcipline is alwayes to reſerue the valour of the Ianiſaries for the laſt ſupplie and recourſe to victorie, when the reſt of the armie ſhall ſee that they haue beene charged from the beginning of the fight, they will, no doubt, bee much troubled with this alteration, E and the Ianiſaries themſelues amazed and diſordered with a ſtratageme vnlooked for. It can not bee obiected, that this deuice will ſerue but once, for in trueth it will force them to forſake that courſe for euer, when they ſhall ſee their policie preuented, by which they haue many times preuayled againſt the enemie. It cannot be denied but by meanes of this prouiſion Hanibal more than once defeated the Romane Legions, and the Romanes themſelues vſing the like ſtratageme againſt the Latines, in the verie bowelles of theyr owne eſtate during the time of their diſſentions and warre, obtained victorie. Aboue all things bend your care to ſtirre the people to rebellion againſt their Gouernours, by good vſage, exemption &c. This may bee brought F to paſſe more ſpeedily, by remouing campes, and erecting forts in the Countrey, both for defence and offence, than by places inhabited, as you may find ſet out at large in my Memorialles: I haue there ſet downe the meanes to make them ſpeedily, and with ſmall charge, the true reaſon by which they may be brought to good effect, the way to hemme in, to cut off, and to ſubdue ſecurely with good prouiſions, the

1555 forces of any great eſtate, with very few of them; as we find that Ceſar himſelfe dwelt in G
France, by the report of his Commentaries. The leaſt beginning of good ſucceſſe, will preſently draw downe the Turke, to make warre againſt them, where you ſhall bee beſt prouided to incounter him: for it ſtandeth him in hand to be iealous (as hee is) of that reputation in armes, and opinion of ſuperioritie aboue all princes, which hee hath hitherto held, for feare of diſorders and reuolts, which euerie little declining of his fortune might cauſe in his mightie eſtate, by reaſon of the diſcontent wherein the people liue in reſpect of his tyrannous gouernement.

You haue likewiſe to conſider of your warres with the crowne of Fraunce, the which are of great conſequence in reſpect of the ſolide and vnited forces of that realme, and the coniunction and league which they may eaſily continue with other Potentates of Chri- H ſtendome, and chiefly with the princes and ſtates of Italie, for the iealouſie wherein they liue of our greatneſſe. But beſides that point whereof I warned you before, ſpeaking of the danger that is in leagues, and the ſmall effect that comes of them, you haue beſides this one ſecure and ſound prouiſion in readineſſe at all times for your further comfort in this verie caſe of France, that ſo often as you ſhall aſſault that king within his owne dominions, which is not hard to doe, conſidering in what manner his realme is enuironed on euery ſide, you ſhall be ſure to draw him backe, and ſo diuert him both from Italie, and from other enterpriſes. Surely the French king warreth in Italie to his great aduantage, as well in reſpect of the peoples diſpoſition to innouations, as of the great gaine he ſometimes makes by one only attempt, in compariſon of his ſmall expences: we ſhould I haue ſeene the proofe not many yeares ſince, if the French could haue made vſe of that aduantage which they held at Ceriſoles, or at the taking of Caſſal, after the great ouerthrow which immediately after the reuolt of Siena the Turkiſh fleete gaue to ours in the Sicilian ſea. Beſides, the Italians are ſo much grieued, being curbed by Milan, Naples, and Sicile, as they are glad of any oportunitie to weaken our ſuſpected forces, and doe willingly offer themſelues to any one that will promiſe to eaſe them of their burthen, and to ſet them free, not foreſeeing that the French, if they were once maſters of the like forts within the body of the ſtate, would be as much, or more offenſiue to their liberties.

The warre of Piedmont will make the French king wearie in a ſhort time, if you indeuour to fight hand to hand as they do: for by a cuſtome which they haue long obſerued, K to leaue no enemie behind, you ſhall verie eaſily bring this to paſſe, if you hold ſome ſtrong towne well fortified againſt their force, proceeding there from hand to hand as you find occaſion: If they diminiſh or abate their armie, increaſe yours, ſo as you may be able to take ſome place of importance, which being weake you may fortifie. Thus by the helpe of places, and of ſo great an eſtate on your backe, you may make warre in winter. And to theſe ends if you be prouoked by occaſion, I had once reſolued for their ſpeedie riddance and diſpatch to cut off their paſſage out of France to Turin, raiſing two or three forts betwixt Turin and the Alpes: for when they ſhall be forced to maintaine a mightie garriſon, and their prouiſions on this ſide the Alpes cut off, it would be hard for them to furniſh themſelues with ſufficient ſtore of victuals and munition out of their owne coun- L trey. In aſſaulting the French King at home, there are two kindes of warre which promiſe proſperous ſucceſſe; the one is by the commodity which you haue to draw your forces ſooner together, and to enter into the heart of his Countrie, where you ſhall find abundance of victualls and other things to maintaine a ſufficient army. Before the French king come into the field, I would haue you ſeeke to make waie for your ſelfe, and ſo to aduaunce, inlarging your owne courſe, and cutting off your enemies beſt oportunities by forts built in the Countrey, as I aduiſed you before ſpeaking of your warres againſt the Turke, which courſe Ceſar himſelfe obſerued, when he made warre in that country. Sometimes oportunitie may be giuen either by the declining of the aduerſe partie vpon M ſome braue attempt of yours, or by your good ſucceſſe and their misfortunes. Whereupon you may ſo preuaile as afterwards you may lay plots to compaſſe that which is not yet conquered. Diuiſions may happen in the countrey, and a thouſand other accidents, eſpecially in this age, whenas loue and charitie ſo decay, whereby an enterpriſe begunne

with

A with iudgement, may be greatly furthered; wiſe men muſt not diſdaine to goe forwards by inſenſible degrees, for ſo goeth the Sunne about the world; for it is impoſſible that a kingdome of ſuch ſtrength, and at vnion within it ſelfe, ſhould bee at one inſtant ſwallowed vp by anie foreine enemie. But if the leaſt part which is one, bee drawne from them, and added to a ſtronger part than their owne, the oddes will grow within a while to be ſo great, as they that find the want will ſmart for it. Surely, if I had vnderſtood the reaſon from the firſt beginning of my proceedings againſt Fraunce, which I haue learned ſince by long experience, and the conſequence of manie braue attempts which I haue made againſt this realme, vndoubtedly I would haue brought ſome rare effects to paſſe: But it may bee that God hath reſerued that for your greater glorie. One onelie
B difficultie is to bee thought on in this caſe, which is, that the French may ſooner enter into Italie by certaine months, conſidering the ſeaſon of the yeere, and forwardneſſe of the Countrey, than wee can enter into Fraunce: But this aduantage muſt be preuented by another ſtratageme: for as ſoone as you find that the King hath entred into his charge, and made his prouiſions, deuiſe to trouble him in Fraunce with ſo ſufficient an armie, as hee may bee conſtrained to increaſe his forces on that ſide, and ſo giue ouer all other intended enterpriſes. It is needleſſe to ſet downe anie other rules for your proceeding in this courſe, ſo long as you are Lord of the Lowe Countries, and firmely vnited to your friends and alies in Germanie. Againſt this miſchiefe I find two certaine remedies, the one by entertaining the French King in Italie, and aſſaulting him in France, at one
C inſtant. The other in making ſhew to be readie, and to ſet forward in ſo good time, as hee ſhall haue other matters to thinke on than his attempts againſt Italie. You ſhall eaſily attaine to your deſired end, in proceeding after this manner, as well in reſpect of the jealouſie which the King in his abſence hath of that eſtate, as to auoid the daunger that may follow, if hee leaue his frontire townes behind his backe enuironed both with forts and troupes, as Ceſar dealt at Marſeilles, making warre againſt Affranius and Petreus. By this meanes ſmaller forces may ſerue your turne, and all the brauerie and terrour which the French intended in their comming forward, ſhall turne to your aduantage, and hauing an other armie ready to aduaunce, you ſhall be maſter of the paſſages and force him to abandon that garriſon which hee left enuironed with your forces vpon the frontire.

D The other way to inuade France, is to ſet vpon the frontires, and then goe forwards; but this requireth too long time, and ſerueth rather to diuert the French Kings courſe from Italie, than to feede our hope with gaining by the match, in reſpect of the little likelihood to winne anie great townes vpon the frontires, for the French king is mightie, and will come armed to reſcue rather than leaue it in daunger: Beſides, the winning of a towne by batterie, requireth a long time, and a wanton charge. It is verie true that the difficultie may be recompenced in ſome ſort, by making choice of ſuch places as import the cauſe wholy, or in the greateſt part; but of all theſe waies the firſt hath moſt valour, and is moſt likely to prooue ſucceſſefull. I remember well, that when I aſſaulted Fraunce towards Landerſey, my intent was to haue entred into the bowells of that
E Realme, before the comming of the Suiſſers, but after that I had made ſome ſtaie about the winning of certaine townes vpon the frontire, the facilitie that I found in preuailing againſt the firſt that were attempted by my forces, made mee to change my mind, and to ingage my ſelfe there, with an aſſured hope that I might with the like ſucceſſe go through with the reſt, before the King ſhould be ſtrong enough to march: but beeing ſtaied there longer than I either thought or expected, the King had oportunitie to make himſelfe ſtronger with eaſe, to defend himſelfe with greater ſecuritie, and to conſtraine mee by force to retire, and to yeeld to an agreement which was then made rather (to tell you plaine) to colour my retreat, than for anie good effect that followed.

F Now if in making warre againſt France you ſhould preuaile in your attempt, to the which (for that it were againſt the skill of Armes) I can not beleeue you will be euer drawne without great likelihood of victorie; you muſt labour effectually to bring it to that point: Purſue your aduantage in ſuch ſort as I haue ſaid, for by this meanes the king being forced for the moſt part to ſupplie his wants from countries farther off, before he ſhalbe ready with new forces, you may come vpon him with a freſh enterpriſe: But if the 1555 worſt ſhould happen vnto you, (which God forbid) you ſhall alwaies haue leiſure to repaire your ſtrength, and ſo much the more freely, both for danger and all other inconueniences, if you can put off the hazard nere to the point of winter, ſo as the credit which he getteth in that action may not further his affaires in Italie: To theſe ends a gallant armie conſiſting of a reaſonable number, ſhall auaile you more than huge multitudes. And againſt France alſo you may greatly ſtrengthen your eſtate, by maintaining a continuall number of foot, to match their ordinarie troupes of horſe, as you ſhall find it ſet downe more plainely in my Reports, with full conſideration of all accidents, augmenting your proportion againſt the Turke, according to the rate wherein he exceeds the French king and others, princes of Europe, in force. It ſtandeth neither with your iudgement nor skill, in any of theſe caſes which I haue ſet down, to giue your firſt onſet vpon anie place which requireth long time, great forces, & exceſſiue charge before it can be won, vnleſſe you be firſt ſure of ſome ſecret intelligence within the towne, or priuie to ſome great defect or want which pincheth them, whether it be of men, munition, leaders, victualls, and ſuch like neceſſarie things which they can not forbeare; or haue ſome certaine knowledge of the vnſetled humors of the people, or of ſome chiefe magiſtrates, or of diuiſion within the bodie of the ſtate it ſelfe, ſo as you may aſſure your ſelfe before the cardes be dealt, to win the great reſt by ſetting it vp.

G H

Theſe occaſions ought not at anie time to be neglected, vnleſſe you meane to abandon the due conſideration of the Art of Warre, for otherwiſe the enemie gaineth too much time for the preparing of his forces, and brings his deſires to paſſe; whereas on the other ſide, it is hard to maintaine an armie long with victualles and other prouiſions at a ſiege without making ſome roome at the firſt for the paſſage of his conuoies. I remember well that I once vndertook an enterpriſe againſt Prouence in France, my Rende-vous was at Marſeilles, which was the cauſe that my hopes were made fruſtrate, and my charges loſt, and withall, my retreat was exceeding daungerous: And which is worſt of all, the eyes of Francis the French King were opened by this meanes, ſo as hee plainely diſcouered the daungers of his realme, and forthwith ſought to ſettle himſelfe at Turin, and to make his reſidence in Piedmont where the French did afterwards make warre to their beſt aduantage, diſcouraging the ready meanes of diuerting all attempts on that ſide againſt Fraunce, beſides the credite which they got by the action with the States of Italie.

I K

If they had knowne (as I haue ſaid) how to vſe this proſperous ſucceſſe to their beſt aduantage, I doubt not but they had often put all the eſtates you holde thereabouts in daunger: Seeke therefore alwayes to aſſault the French King in his owne Realme, and to preuent his firſt attempts, for otherwiſe you cannot when you will ridde your hands of him, by making a diuerſion from Italie, if hee may be ſuffered to put in his foote, for then the difficultie of repairing your armie with ſupplies of Spaniards, conſidering the ſituation will be verie great, wherein all conſiſteth, for they beeing defeated by anie miſchaunce, it giues great incouragement to the States of Italie, to laie new plottes, eſpecially the Venetians whom euerie little blaſt doth eaſily awake. Perſuade not your ſelfe that your deereſt friends in Italie, ſeeing your power decline, will euer adhere to your misfortunes with the hazard of their owne eſtates, but rather ſecretly reconcile themſelues to him that hath the vpper hand, and follow the Victors good fortune. I would not wiſh you to applie your whole care about the recouerie of Siena, which will be hardly effected. I graunt the Duke of Florence hath beene jealous to that State, conſidering his oportunity to annoy them, both by neere neighbourhood, and the power of his authoritie: This plot if it might take effect, will bee a notable preſident to all States, and make them warie how to intermeddle againſt your power: And which importeth your cauſe moſt of all, you ſhall by this meanes cut off all intelligence betweene the French Kings forces, and the States of Italie, who finding the French ſetled within the heart of their Countrey, will be more apt to ioyne with them in friendſhip, and relie vpon their ſtrength, rather than when they ſee them farre off in Piedmont; and much leſſe if they can bee drawne on this ſide the Alpes, whereas their fauour cannot bee commodious, nor their diſpleaſure daungerous. It ſhall alſo much a-

L M

uaile

A uaile in your dealing with the Crowne of Fraunce, to bee fully informed of the humors and affections of all such persons as are in greatest fauour with the King, or that stand for the best offices; thrust your hand secretly into all their competitions, and drawe the strongest partie vnto you with all the Art you can: for neuer can the Theater of publique Actions afforde more fauourable shewes in your behalfe, than when it shall bee moued vnder hand with inuisible deuises. If euer Fortune fauour you so much, as that either by alliance, or anie other kind of agreement, you shall bee able to remoone the French out of Piedmont, wincke at all other things. Doe the best you can whereby the Realme may bee induced to desist from armes; so shall you bee secured from tumults and many other kindes of crosses, which are more daungerous, and not knowne
B to euery man; if afterwards anie occasion be offred of doing your selfe good, forbeare not to lay holde of it. Thus shall you euer be most secure concerning causes which belong to Italie. This is the ground vpon which in the end it behoueth you to settle the strongest sinews of your foreine power, and therefore haue alwayes an eye vnto it with an aduised consideration. 1555.

The reason is not all one for the French to bee now put out of Piedmont, and as if they had neuer held it, for in the opinion of the world it will be more disgrace vnto them, than the winning thereof before did yeeld them profit. Wherefore in all your capitulations and agreements let your eye leuell directly at this end, and your plottes of policie aime alwayes at this marke. For beleeue me son, and I assure you out of my long experi-
C ence, that Piedmont alone will benefit you more, than if on that side which lies next vnto Flaunders, you had bereft him of the third part of his owne kingdome. Seeing then wee are entred so farre into the State of Italie, and ingaged in the highest mysterie of State, wee must proceed a little farther in this politique discourse. I will tell you once againe, that by the life of this one artere the pulse of all your great power doth beate. This waie your eyes must bee euer bent and open to all oportunities: First I would haue you vse all deuotion and curtesie to the holie father, and the apostolike Sea; I would wish you to bee verie kind to the members of the same, as the Cardinalles, Bishoppes, Prelates and other of the Clergie belonging to the Court of Rome. Be euer readie for the defence of them and the Catholike profession. In all elections of Popes,
D see that you labour not by anie vnchristian, vnlawfull, and indirect meanes to preferre anie of those Cardinalles that are your especiall friends: Striue not to make one rather than an other, so as all Competitors bee worthie of the place, for in these sacred actions the holie Ghost doth worke: And it is better to submit our likings to the prouidence of God, which turneth all things to the best, as wee may vnderstand by that which is recorded of Mathias in the Text, than to follow humours or respect particulars.

There is no question but anie of them may bee wonne by due respect, and admit they should become strange, yet after you haue sought to reconcile your selfe into their fauours by such meanes as are prescribed you by the holie Ghost, hauing your territories
E included in the middest of theyr Countrey, you can neuer want the choice of manie meanes belonging to the world; by which for your last refuge, when there is no other meanes, you may insinuate your selfe more eatily into their good opinions: I meane either by alliance with their chiefest friends abroad; or bestowing pensions and sundrie curtesies vpon such persons of the Clergie as they most affect at home, with a thousand such like complements, as may pleasure them daily, without anie hinderance to princes of your qualitie. This is the waie to make the Pope your friend, though at the first hee were elected by a faction of Cardinalles which depend not on your affection, for hardly shall you find anie hawke so haggard but hee will prey vpon all apt aduauntages:
F Hereof you must haue an especiall care, the end whereof is the general good of Christendome, rather than anie respect of your owne priuate interest; though manie perhaps doe not so much regard those bonds which ought to moue them simply to make a Pope, as they doe the profit when a Pope is made to their purpose.

The territories of the Church lie (as we may say) in the very heart of Italie, but so inuironed with yours, as they may serue for a garland: if Siena were once recouered, they should

1555 ſhould then be compaſſed in on all ſides with your forces: So as the way which you ſhall take, according to the rule ſet downe before, ſhal be made more eaſie by your diligence, and the fauours which you meane to beſtow, ſhall more readily bring forth thoſe good fruits which you deſire among them. So long as godly men are preferred to that Sea, ther is no doubt but charitie, religion, & care to keep the ſeamleſſe coat of Chriſt vnrent, will moue them both to tender and deſerue your loue. If men delighted more with worldlie honours ſhould hold thoſe places (which God forbid) yet would they be alwaies glad to make a friend of one whō they are not able to incounter with hoſpitalitie, beſides his deuotion to the popes thēſelues. The curteſies which you may likewiſe vſe to the cardinals your ſpeciall frends, wil much fortifie this warie & diſcreet cōſideration. Apply your care frō time to time to win many friends amōg the cardinals, aſwel old as yōg, the which may be eaſily effected, in giuing thē preferm̄ets & ſuch dignities as they deſire. The like courſe I would haue you hold with the Biſhops & other prelats of that Court: but haue a care to deale moſt bountifully with ſuch perſons as are moſt inward with his Holines. G H

Aboue all things ground your ſelfe vpon the conſcience and equity of your demands, in dealing with the cardinals & other friends; but in caſes that require grace and fauour, ſee that you rely vpon the bountie of the Pope himſelfe, leſt you be deceiued of your expectation. Sticke not to afford all commodities out of your eſtates to the court of Rome, with a bountifull and a willing heart, & if neceſſitie inforce you to breake with the Pope, yet vſe the matter with ſuch temperance and warineſſe, as the world may rightly vnderſtand the reaſon: and acknowledge that the cauſe of this ſtratageme grew not from your deſert, but that you were inforced thereunto for your owne ſafetie. Religion is the bond of loue, and therefore nothing is more contrarie to hope and expectation of good ſucceſſe, than to leaue an ill opinion in the minds of men of your affection towards thoſe that hold the place and credite of Gods miniſters. I

In matters pertaining to accōpts in general, conforme your ſelf at al times with obedience & humblenes to the certen & infallible determination of his Holines, & howſoeuer cauſes of vnkindnes may ariſe, yet let the world ſee your religiō is vnchāgeable. Touching the Venetians you may eaſily take order, if you find it good for your ſelfe to continue in the league with thē, being (as I ſaid before) ſo diſpoſed to rely wholy vpō time as they wil wander between theſe vaine & idle expectations, ſuffring thēſelues willingly to be drawn on from day to day, & conſuming ſtil with a ſoft fire of ambitiō till at length they become a prey to ſome martial power without any great difficulty. Moreouer the Turke, hauing ſhut thē from Corfu, wil ſoone bereaue thē of Cipres & Candie, & reſtraine them much: And conſidering that the trade of Venice ſtandeth wholie vpon merchandiſe, you may neuer vndertake anie enterpriſe vpon hope of their aſſiſtance, eſpecially againſt the Turk, if it be not at ſuch time as they are very lowe, and you in great proſperitie; and yet euen then alſo it might be thought that ieloſie & feare of your good fortune wil work more in their ſuſpitious conceits, than any other due conſideratiō, or reſpect whatſoeuer. Experience hath taught that theſe mean conceits, whoſe humor is to apprehend more than anie can containe, loſe more by emulation than they get by policie; but whenſoeuer you haue cauſe to break league with them, aſſault them firſt, & with all celeritie, for as they do lie in wait to worke vpon the firſt aduantage that their neighbors miſeries doe afford, ſo ſtates which haue often had proofe of this ſtrange inclination, look warily to their attempts, & hold no ſtricter league with thē than ſtands with their owne neceſſities. If then you ſhall begin to plie thē luſtily before they cā haue leiſure to combine with orher ſtates, or make prouiſion for war, a matter ſo long neglected by their ſloath, as it will appeare they haue quite forgotten their firſt alphabet; & as in popular eſtates fear breedeth infinit confuſiōs, ſo may you make your profit of their ignorance. If this be doubted of, you can deſire no plainer proofe, than their want aſwell of carriages, as of policie in letting ſlippe ſo many braue occaſions as theſe late yeeres haue offred. It ſeemes that they preſume out of their ſloathfull humor to maintaine their dignitie by certaine quiet ordinances, and ſober inſtitutions made by their gowne men: & herein fortune hath bin more fauorable to them; but yet it may be ſaid without offence or error, that commonweales ſo qualified, doe neither know nor vnderſtand in what ſort to vſe their power to their beſt benefit. K L M

This

A This weaknes being found, in setting first vpon their estate, I do assure my self, that with 1555 that sodaine alteration, and many other troubles and disorders that will ensue, you may bring some great enterprise to passe, before they be awaked from sleepe, or resolued among themselues what to spend, or whom to relie vpon, what Leaders to imploy, or haue reuiued their old discipline or manner of making warre so many yeeres neglected in their gouernement. Their couetous desires to cut off all cause of charge in time of peace, their ignorance in training men that may be fit to serue when need requires, their want of leaders in the bodie of their owne estate that may withstand the violence of any mightie potentate, that maketh head against their force, will alwayes giue aduantage to your policie, in taking the first start of them: you may boldly imagine that by this means you
B shall inforce them to their owne defence, whereas if you giue them leisure to beginne the warre, and to assault you first in the realme of Naples, they might doe great harme, in respect of their kind vsage towards them, and their ciuil gouernment which is yet fresh in memorie. If you find no likelihood that they will fall to their defence, inforce them what you may, and seeke to preuent their purposes by meanes of diuision in some good sort, for herein consisteth the greatest aduantage of your actions. I must now let you vnderstand that in seeking to assault them first, your greatest care must be by all means possible to thrust into the verie centre of the State, for hauing forced them to put garrisons into all the strong places which they hold, it is not possible they should bee able at the same time to keepe the field. In the meane time you cannot but find some great want in C one or other of their forts, either of leaders, garrisons, prouisions, or paies; you may find out the striuing humors that are set a worke by faction in generall, or of persons discontented in particular. In any one place that your fortune shall be to take, vse your happy beginning as an extreme to further good, and leaue a president and incouragement to others, by your princely dealing with those, so as they may more easily bee brought to yeeld vpon reasonable conditions and honourable offers made to Burgers, Leaders, Souldiers &c. with other meanes which circumstances, time and place shall present to your discreet consideration. If you be once master of the field whatsoeuer is not strong will remaine at your deuotion, or they shall be inforced to come to field, where they can not
D long continue their garrisons being prouided: for hereupon a battell must ensue, which in respect of their long discontinuance of armes, and want of knowledge & experience of the seruice of these times, will be greatly to their disaduantage, and disgrace, so as they may be diuerted first from the realme of Naples, which is one of their best hopes, when they may approch without opposition.

Be carefull also that no other prince in Italie grow too potent, although he seeme to depend wholy vpon your crowne; for in this case you must be no lesse careful to contain those which make shew to be your friends within reasonable bounds, than to keep downe your enemies; holding it for an infallible ground, that they which make profession to follow you, and are most forward in your seruice, would be the first (vpon the least disaduantage and declining of your fortune, and hope to better their owne) that would turne
E vnto the other side. But as the many diuisions and factions in Italie doe make the labour hard, to keepe that which you now hold, as sometimes it happened betwixt the States of Greece and the Romans, you must euer presuppose this principle, that the Estates of Italie desire aboue all things to see a Duke setled at Milan, and a King at Naples; to this end tend all their practises, for that is a meanes to weaken your incroching power, and withall to free themselues from forreine seruitude: The reasons are, for that with petie princes they may treat at all times vpon euen hand, with you they promise faire in iealousie, and perseuere in dissimulation. Againe, a Duke of Milan, or a King of Naples, which had no more estates than that alone to build on, would feare and hope with them, and euer tie himselfe to them in a firme league of friendship, against forreine forces for F his owne securitie, which is the strongest bond.

But with you they neither dare enter into league, lest thereby you should grow more strong, nor warre, lest with an ouer-match you should weigh downe their policie. Besides, a doore well kept is a defence for all that liue vnder one roofe, and in one familie. The Venetians aboue all wish for this, because they might haue great choice in setting

1555 ſetting downe their plottes, and more helpe at their need. The Pope hath alſo beene G as apt as others to combine and practiſe to this end: but your beſt remedie againſt this humour will be to take aduantage of the diuiſions and factions which happen daily among themſelues, and to maintaine by continuall action, your reputation in armes, holding good intelligence in euerie ſtate, appointing able and ſufficient miniſters to attend the Pope; by fiſhing with a golden hooke where the ſtreames are troubled. As for Italie you need not feare anie daunger, if you can deuiſe to keepe them from combining craftily within themſelues, and eſpecially with the French King on that ſide the Alpes, which is not hard to doe, for him that ſtandeth euer watchfully vpon his gard, and hath in his head diſcretion to ſee, and in his hands meanes to preuent their purpoſes. The ſafeſt courſe as I haue aduiſed you before, is to nippe off the firſt buddes of am- H bition before they ripen to your preiudice, or ſeed to the hazard of your gouernement.

Theſe briefe notes (my deare ſonne) I thought good to leaue with you, as certaine grounds and principles, whereunto you may reſort for reſolution of doubts as occaſion ſhall be offered. I am not ignorant that many circumſtances may change the rules, but yet the reaſon of them well obſerued will direct you, in what ſort to deale, howſoeuer freſh occaſions may inforce you ſomewhat to digreſſe and varie from my former obſer-uations. Touching the manner in particular of faſhioning your policie, both in time of peace and warre to the beſt vſe, with extraordinarie plots for the performance of grea-ter actions, rather ſenſibly conceiued in my head vpon likely grounds, than warranted I by certaine proofe during the time of my flouriſhing in the world, I referre you to the compleate diſcourſe which ſhall euer witneſſe both my loue to you, and my trauell for your happineſſe. For a concluſion of this point, I charge you by the intereſt which by nature I may claime, and by the duetie which by the lawe of God you owe me, that in all enterpriſes you ſet the rule of conſcience before your eies, and what ſtratagems and policies ſoeuer you vſe to attaine vnto your deſires, yet let the ground and end be iuſti-fiable in his ſight who weigheth all things, not by humane paſſion, but by his moſt holie ordinance.

Be kind in naturall affection to all the branches of your honourable houſe: Continue league and friendſhip with your ancient allies: Preuent the firſt beginning of your ene-mies attempts: Beware of ſugred words, where reaſon maketh you to ſuſpect ill deeds: Be ſure of ſound aduertiſements from euerie ſtate: Be iuſt at home, and bountiful abroad: ſo ſhall your end be ſutable to your entrie, and both to that vnfained wiſh which your fa-thers loue affordeth you. I will neuer ceaſe to pray for your good ſucceſſe: in you it re-ſteth to proceed in ſuch a courſe as praiſe may ſound your purpoſes.

D. Philip the ſecond of that name, and 23. King of Caſtille &c.

AMong other aduertiſements which the emperour had giuen vnto the king D. Philip L his ſonne, he had exhorted him much to make a peace with the French, and to keep 1556 it; Mary Queene of England did alſo affect it, being deſirous to haue him by her to haue ſome iſſue: whereupon they entred into treatie, and there was a truce concluded for 5
19 yeeres, by the which it was agreed that euerie one ſhould remaine in poſſeſſion of that Truce betwixt the French and Spaniards for fiue yeares. he held. By this truce which was both profitable and honourable for the French, Octauio Farneſe duke of Parma returned into fauour with king Philip. But ſoone after the Pope falling in quarrel with the king of Spaine, touching the Colonnois whom he had excommu-nicated, and depriued of their goods, as rebells to the Church, hauing made his nephew Breach betwixt Pope Paul the fourth, and the king of Spaine. Iohn Caraffe duke of Paliano, & giuen vnto his ſon, but yet an infant, the caſtle of Caui, be- M longing to Marc Anthonie Colonne, with the title of Marqueſſe; the D. of Alba viceroy of Naples, hauing commandement from his maſter to preſſe the reſtitution of the Colonnois to their poſſeſſions, had proteſted that he would do it by force, who (hearing that the Ca-raffes did fortifie Paliano, vpon the confines of the realme of Naples) ſent the erle of San-valentino to the Caraffi, exhorting them that they would not attempt a thing ſo preiudi-ciall to his Maieſtie, and that they ſhould doe all good offices to pacifie the Pope, and to take

A take away the occaſions of theſe tumults, ſeeing that they might expect more from the King of Spaines bountie, by quietneſſe, than from their vncle, by ſuch daungerous and not durable Innouations, which could not produce any thing but warre and ruine. The Earle complayned alſo in the Duke of Albas behalfe, that his Holineſſe had vſed all them fowerly that were friends to the Emperour, and to the King of Spaine, and that hee daily gaue new occaſions to thinke, that his heart was eſtraunged from them, for that to wrong the fauorites, friends, and dependants of the houſe of Auſtria, without reſpect of anie, was a ſigne of much hatred which was borne them, and ſmall accompt that was made of them: beſides arming and leuying new troupes daily, the which were ſent vnto diuerſe places of the frontire, and finally cauſing a fort to bee B built vpon the confines of the realme of Naples, and imploying men therein, that were ſuſpected to the houſe of Auſtria, did ſhew plainely that hee had done them wrong, or meant to wrong them, and then defend it by force. But this was againſt the quiet of Chriſtendome, ſeeking to ouerthrow the hope of a generall peace, which with great toyle was lately grounded vpon a truce: and to receiue into Rome, not only the enemies of his King, but open rebelles, was nothing elſe but to approue their treacherie, and to haue an intent to vſe their councell or ſeruice to preiudice his Maieſty, ſeeing they were ſo familiar, in his Court. The which hee ſhould beleeue hee could not long endure, beeing of ſo generous a mind, and of ſo great power as hee needed not to feare anie man; and if hee had endured vntil that time, it was onely in reſpect of the C holie Sea, deſiring peace aboue all things, whereunto the Pope ſhould bee more inclined than he, in regard of his dignitie and charge.

1556

Earle of Sanſalentino at Rome to treat at accord.

Duke of Alba complaines of the Popes actions.

The Pope anſwered pertinently to euerie one of theſe points, ſhewing that it was not fit for anie man, much leſſe for a Catholike King, or his miniſters to ſeeke (vpon anie colour whatſoeuer) to hinder the Popes authoritie ouer his ſubiects, that he might not take knowledge of their offences and puniſh them, for the reſpect hee ſhould beare to anie Potentate: and that hee (although that the King of Naples were feudatarie to that Sea) tooke no care for that which was doone in that kingdome, much leſſe ſhould hee with ſuch vehemencie ſeeke an accompt in Rome of the Popes actions, who was a free and abſolute Lord: But touching that which was ſpoken of armes and ſoul- D diers, it was neither in that citie nor anie where elſe, a preparation to warre, but for the ſafetie and defence of his perſon and State, ſeeing that hee had cauſe to feare ſecret treaſon, and that which they could not doe by poiſon, they would ſeeke to effect by the ſword, and they that could not depriue him of his life, would with ignominie ſpoile him of his eſtate, hauing before his eyes the example of Clement the ſeuenth by his too great truſt. And as hee could not altogether blame his Maieſties royall conceptions, ſo hee could not excuſe the malice of ſome of his followers, who haue thought therein to pleaſe him, whom hee alſo blamed, for entertaining anie hard conceit in the Kings mind, cauſing him to ſuſpect his Holineſſe actions and his nephews, ſo as happily he had commaunded him to ſend ſome troupes vnto the frontires of the territories of the E Church, vnder Bernardin of Mendoſa, and that they had made other demonſtrations nothing conformable to the peace, which the Duke ſeemed to deſire, according to the intent of the King his maſter. Touching enemies and rebelles which he ſaied he had receiued into Rome, hee anſwered, that hee might well know, that that Citie had beene alwayes a common Countrie, wherewith the King ſhould not be grieued: Beſides, the Duke of Alua, who made all this noyſe, ſhould conſider how much the Pope of Rome was reuerenced and reſpected by him, ſeeing that hee had receiued and fauoured Marc Anthonie Colonna, who had beene excommunicated by him, with all thoſe that ſhould receiue or aſſiſt him. And as for the Kings well taking of it, it was well knowne, and of what power hee was, ſeeing that hauing ſcarce taken in F hand the gouernement of his Realmes, hee would haue ſoueraigne Princes reſpect his Maieſties fauourites, the which hee entertained in other mens eſtates: But notwithſtanding hee did hope that God would fauour the iuſt cauſe, and that beeing forced to take ſome other reſolution, hee truſted to find them that would helpe the oppreſſed.

Anſwer made by the Pope to the duke of Albas complaint.

But

1556

Truce broken betwixt France and Spaine.

But after this they fell to open armes: the Pope apprehending the preparations G which were made by the Spaniards in the realme of Naples, had recourſe vnto the French King, and to the forces of Fraunce, the auncient refuge of Popes oppreſſed. This was an occaſion to breake the truce, and to bring Fraunce and Spaine againe to armes. There had been a league made by the procurement of the cardinall of Lorraine (before the concluſion of the truce) betwixt the Pope, Henrie the French king, and the Duke Ferrara, whereof the Duke ſhould be generall in Italie, in qualitie of the Kings lieutenant. Cardinall Carraffa the Popes Nuntio was ſent into France for Legat, who brought a ſword vnto the king, in ſignification of warre, at whoſe inſtance there were three thouſand foot appoynted to bee ſent to Rome, whereof part were ſpeedily imbarked in thoſe gallies which brought this Legate to Marſeilles. The Pope hee ſtood vp- H on his gard, entertained captaines, and gaue commiſsions to leuie men, cauſing the places about Rome to be fortified. The duke of Alba ſeeing the French king ingaged in this quarrell, entred in hoſtile manner into the territories of the Church, where hee tooke many places, and brought his army neere to the gates of Rome, which made the Pope to importune the French King for ſuccours. Afterwards hee tooke the towne of Oſtia, and the caſtle; the which had wonderfully amazed the Romans, if Peter Stroſſy had not beene, who ſince his defeat, being no friend to the Spaniards, had liued in Rome, and had accompanied Cardinall Carraffa into Fraunce, and returned with him to Rome by the kings commaundement, who imployed himſelfe wholy for the Caraffes who had all I the authoritie, wherefore hee was verie pleaſing vnto them. By his induſtrie and valour, Oſtia with ſome other places were recouered from the Spaniards.

Cardinall Carraffe legate in Fraunce.

Duke of Guiſe ſent into Italie.

The king deſirous to releeue the Pope, ſent Francis of Lorraine Duke of Guiſe into Italie, as the Popes ſouldier, with whom, and with the Duke of Ferrara hee had made certaine conuentions, for the entertainment and ſafetie of the armie, conſiſting of twelue thouſand foot, French, Suiſſes, and Griſons, and two thouſand horſe, with the which he paſſed the Alpes in the heart of winter.

Iohn de Luna flies into Fräce.

About this time D. Iohn de Luna was in Flaunders, who (as wee haue ſaid) had been called thither touching Fernand Gonzague: hee ſeeing himſelfe very ſeuerely handled by the Kings miniſters in that buſineſſe, ſeeking a ſtrict accompt of him of the munition of K the caſtle of Milan, being accuſed to haue imployed it to his owne priuate vſe, hee reſolued to flie from Bruſſels, who comming into Fraunce, was graciouſly receiued by the Chriſtian king, and an honourable penſion giuen him for his maintenaunce. Hee wrote from thence to his ſonne Diego, that hee ſhould deliuer the caſtle of Milan (where he remained in his fathers place) to whomſoeuer his king ſhould commit it, and that neither hee nor his brethren ſhould euer ſwarue from his ſeruice. And ſo it was deliuered by way of prouiſion to Alonſo Peſcioni, by order from the catholike King, and afterwards to Alonſo Figueroa, who was ſent Caſtellan thither, fearing the danger.

Charles reſignes the empire to his brother.

The Emperour Charles hauing the laſt yeare made a reſignation of all his realmes and dominions, ſhewing a rare Preſident of his fatherlie loue, and of a wiſe and temperat L mind, hee reſolued alſo to write vnto his brother touching the gouernement of the Empire, and, leauing the gouernement of his ſtates more free vnto his ſonne, retire himſelfe, and ſpend the remainder of his life in a free and quiet contemplation. Wherefore on the ſeuenth day of September this yeare one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and ſixe he ſent doctor Saler into Germany to his brother Ferdinand with a reſignation of the gouernement of the empire with the Crowne, Scepter, and other Ornaments; pretending, that being vnable to vndergoe that burthen, by reaſon of his age, and the infirmities which did afflict him extraordinarily, hee perſuaded the Electors to confirme the ſaid Ferdinand in his place, being yonger, ſtronger, and more apt to beare the burthen of ſuch an empire, to whom there was giuē by the prouidence of God, for a naturall enemy the Turk, who was M mighty & alwais watchful, the which was now moſt to be feared, for that he heard he was making a great preparation for war. He did write particularly to euery one of the electors touching that buſines, & a very familiar letter vnto his brother, recommending his ſon vnto him, that he would direct and aſsiſt him in all occaſions, with his councel & help. On the 14 day of the moneth he went from Gaand into Zeland, his ſhips attending him at Fleſsingue

A Fleſſingue, but for that the wind was contrary, hee was forced to ſtaie many daies at Zuyt- 1556 bourg a village betwixt Fleſſingue and Middelbourg, which turning faire, hauing taken his leaue of his ſonne, and giuen him his bleſſing, and imbraced all the Princes and Noble- men, he tooke ſhipping with his two ſiſters Mary widow to Lewis King of Hongary, and Leonora firſt widow of Portugal, and then of France, who would needs accompany him in this voiage. Charles the fifth paſſeth into Spaine to a ſolitary life.

He came in a eleuen daies to the coaſt of Spaine, and landed at Laredo in Biſcay, where before that he receiued any of thoſe Noblemen that came to doe their duties to him, hee kneeled downe, and gaue God thankes, for that in the laſt yeeres of his life, hee had ſuffred
B him to come and die in that country, which had alwaies beene moſt deere vnto him, and by whoſe meanes he knew he was come to the hight of that honour and greatneſſe: And then imbracing thoſe Noblemen and Grandos of Spaine very louingly, he paſt by Bourgos to Vailledolit, whereas his Nephew Don Carlo was, to whom he gaue many good inſtructions, putting him chiefly in mind of religion and Iuſtice, where reſting ſome daies, and leauing his ſiſters there, that he might haue no let to attend the life which hee had propounded, he retired himſelfe to the Monaſtery of Saint Iuſt of the Order of Saint Ieroſme de la Vera, neere to Placentia, a deſart place, in the Prouince of Eſtremadura. Here, with foure ſeruants onely to ſerue him in his neceſſity, hee paſt his life in continuall contemplation, giuing great almes and doing other good deeds of charity, for the which hee had re-
C ſerued a hundred thouſand ducats yeerely out of his great poſſeſſions. Pope Paul the fourth hearing of his reſignation, was much troubled, thinking that the Emperor could not doe it, ſeeing it was neceſſary, that beeing deſirous to leaue off that degree, whereunto hee had beene aduanced by the Popes authority, hee ſhould reſigne it into the Popes hands; whoſe office it then was to write vnto the Electors to prouide one that were worthy of that dignity, who was to obtaine the ordinary confirmation from him, wherein Ferdinand afterwards found ſome difficulty.

Queene Leonora being in Caſtille ſhee had a great deſire to ſee the Infanta, D. Maria of Portugall her daughter, who remained at Lisbone, wherein there was ſome difficulty vp- Enterview betwixt the mother and the daughter.
on the point of honour and conuenience, whether the mother ſhould goe into Portugal, D or the daughter into Caſtille, ſo as the Emperour was forced to write ſomewhat ſharply vnto the king D. Iohn. In the end the daughter came to ſee the mother in the city of Badajos, which was the laſt time of their meeting.

The king of Algier with the helpe of an army at ſea of Turkes, of two and forty gallies, and many Moores at land, did much annoy the coaſt of Afrike, and in the end came to O- Oran beſeeged and valiantly defended.
ran thinking to take that towne from the Spaniards. Being incamped there the ſeuenth day of Auguſt, and viewed it where they might plant their battery, they beganne to caſt vp trenches about the wall, planting ſome peeces to batter the caſtle of Alchaizer, but it was very indiſcreetly done, for they lay open both to the artillery of the fort, and to that of the port Tremiſene, ſo as very many of them were ſlaine. Whereupon they were forced to E make new rampars, and to find out a better ſeat for their lodgings, the which were on euery ſide diſcouered, their army being great, for beſides 12000. Turkes, there was an infinite number of Moores, both horſe and foote. They ſtaied there ſome daies before they reſolued to batter it, for that they could not find a conuenient place, but that they ſhould be wonderfully annoyed by the ordnance from the fort, which ſtanding high diſcouered the country round about, and ſhot into their trenches. In the meane time the beſeeged ſallied forth dayly to skirmiſh, and carried away the honour in a manner alwaies: and although there were not aboue two thouſand ſouldiers in the whole garriſon, which were diuided in Merſalcabir, the caſtle Alchaizer and the towne, yet the Earle of Alcaudette the Gouernor ſent them continually forth to annoy the enemy. But the Moores reſoluing in F the end to batter it, and come to an aſſault, on the fifteenth day of Auguſt they beganne to batter the caſtle in two places, where they themſelues receiued the greateſt loſſe; for beſides many others, all their gunners were ſlaine, ſo vnskilfully they had planted their batterie, ſo as at night they withdrew it, knowing that all their endeauors were vaine. The Turkes and Moores flie from Oran.
next day the Turkes began to retire towards the ſea with diſhonor, making all poſſible ſpeed to get into their gallies, which lay at Sorzet, and the Moores on horſe-backe ſauing

1556 themſelues by flight. The reaſon why they receiued no more loſſe by the Spaniards G in their retreat, was for that they heard thereof late, when as moſt of them had recouered their gallies, or were fled away on horſe-backe.

There was ſome ſlaughter made of the Moores that were footmen, but the greateſt part of them were pardoned, for that being of the country, the Spaniards would incenſe them as little as might bee, notwithſtanding that they were treacherous and of no faith.
The Earle tooke ſome of their baggage which the enemies had left behind them for haſt, with one peece of Ordnance, and if they had had three or foure hundred launces to follow then ſodainely, few of the Turkes had eſcaped, for that they were all in a confuſion, and moſt of them without armes. This ſodaine retreat of the Turkes at the enterpriſe of O- H ran, eaſed the Catholike Kings army of much toyle, hauing beene many daies doubt-full, whether they ſhould goe and releeue this towne, or carry the Spaniards into the Realme of Naples, to the Duke of Alua.

1557 After all the broiles in Italy, betwixt the Pope and the King of Spaine, and the taking and retaking of many townes, in the end both parties ſeemed to incline vnto a peace. The Pope being a man of a ſmall diſcours and ignorant of his owne affaires, fearing to bee abandoned by his foraine forces, which hee could not entertaine but with great charges, which his meanes would hardly ſupply, ſuffring himſelfe to bee gouerned by Pope yeelds to treat of a peace. men which deceiued him, and applied all to their owne priuate profits, with ſupreme authority, men of no faith, and which had many practiſes; hee therefore yeelded to their I perſuaſions which did mediat a peace betwixt him and the King of Spaine, amongſt which were the Duke of Florence and the Venetians, deſirous to diuert this warre, which could bring nothing but ſpoiles and ruines. The Duke of Guiſe lying neere to Rome had newes of the battaile of Saint Quentin loſt by the French; wherefore hee perſua-ded the Pope to take ſome courſe for himſelfe for that hee ſhould bee forced to returne with his army or the greateſt part thereof into France, to ſuccour that Realme, which he ſaw in apparent danger.

King of Spaine deſirous of peace with the Pope. King Philip did in like manner write vnto the Venetians, ſhewing how weake the Popes hopes were growne, yet he offred all honourable conditions of peace to his Holineſſe, referring the compoſition to the Iudgement of their common-weale, if the Pope and Vi- K ceroy ſhould diſagree: Hee did alſo ſend commaundement to the Duke of Alba, that hee ſhould procure a peace with all conditions; and ſo as his friends and ſeruants might not bee oppreſt, hee ſhould accept any accord from the Pope, with whom hee meant not to bee any more in diſgrace, and that hee deſired no greater fruites of the victory which hee had newly gotten, than to be at peace with his Holineſſe. The Duke was then ready to inueſt Paliano, but the Cardinall of Santafiora continuing to negotiate this peace, had often ſent Alexander Placidi his Secretary vnto the Viceroy, to let him vnderſtand, that the Pope at the intreaty of many Cardinalls, had yeelded to a peace, and ſent him theſe conditions.

That the Pope was well pleaſed to receiue Philip king of Spaine, and the Duke of Al- L ba into fauour, pardoning all the iniuries they had done vnto the Church, ſo as the Duke with all his troupes did within tenne daies depart out of the territories of the Church leauing the townes and forts taken in that warre free vnto the Pope: and that hee in like manner would cauſe the Duke of Guiſe to depart for France within tenne daies. The Duke of Alba although he knew the king his Maſters mind, and were himſelfe deſirous of peace, Duke of Aluas anſwer touching a peace. yet would he make vſe of the occaſion, and haue it with all aduantages: And therefore hee anſwered the Cardinall, that thoſe propoſitions were to be propounded to men that were vanquiſhed, and not to victors: But if the Pope would haue peace with the king of Spaine, he ſhould accuſe his owne iniuſtice, for ſpoyling the Colonnes, and his error hauing impriſoned ſo many of his Maieſties vaſſalls and ſeruants; making warre againſt M him, and calling in the French to preiudice his ſtates, for the which hee ſhould craue pardon: a propoſition which ſhewed rather the pride of that Nation, than the mind of the Prince, to whom it was no ſmall blemiſh.

The Caraffi ſeeing the preſent danger, & doubting the vaſt deſignes of the Spaniard in this great proſperity, according to the which they doe commonly guide their paſſions, either inſolent

A inſolent or deiected, they perſuaded the Pope to retire into Fraunce, or to ſome other place of ſafetie, leauing garriſons of Frenchmen in all the forts belonging to the Church, to kindle ſuch a fire in Italie, as neither the Spaniards nor their partiſans ſhould euer bee able to quench. But the Pope who naturally did not loue ſtrangers, and had receiued ſmall ſeruice from the French, reiected it as a deſperate Councell, yet being reſolued rather to imbrace any partie than yeelding to the Viceroys propoſitions, to do a thing contrarie to his mind and dignity. 1557

At ſuch time as they treated of this accord, the Viceroy (the more to terrifie the Pope) began to aduance with his armie towards Rome, with an intent to giue an aſ-
B ſault to the Citie, and then retyre, yet it was giuen out that hee had a meaning to take it, but his deſigne was made fruſtrate by the vigilancie of the Caraffi. The duke hauing relation from Palazzo and Moſchera (two of his Captaines, whom he had ſent in the night to view the citie) that giuing a ſudden aſſault towards Port Maior, with the helpe of ſome peeces of artillerie, it might bee eaſily forced, hee remoued with the armie, and ſtaied at Colonna, where the ſixe and twentieth day of Auguſt at night, hee cauſed his armie to march in this order. The light Horſemen were in the foreward, hee made a great Squadron of all the Spaniſh foot, which ſerued for the battell, and the Dutch had the rereward, and on their flankes they had other troupes of horſe. Duke of Alua goes to aſſaile Rome.

And for that they were in ſome doubt of the French which were at Tiuoli, they ſent
C ſome troupes of horſe and foot on the right hand to ſtay the enemie, if they ſhould haue any notice of their enterpriſe. Hee then ſent aboue three hundred before with ladders, and other inſtruments to climbe vp, and to breake open gates if need were, that being brought by ſome neere way neere vnto Port Maior, they might giue a ſudden aſſault, and being ſeconded by ſome horſe which were neere them, they might enter the Citie, and keepe a port vntill that the reſt of the armie arriued.

The order was that they ſhould preſent themſelues vnto the wall about the ſeuenth houre of the night, but there falling a ſmall continuall raine, the waies were ſo broken, as being conſtrained to take a longer courſe, it was breake of day before they arriued, ſo as being diſcouered by ſome of the Countrimen, they aduertiſed them of D the citie, which made them retyre ſpeedily, leauing their ladders againſt the walles, and many cloakes wherewith they had couered themſelues from the raine, yea, and ſome armes, but the ſlackeneſſe of the enemie in the purſute was the cauſe that there were not aboue fiue and twentie or thirtie taken.

Cardinall Caraffy had intelligence by the Secretary Placidi, when he came from the viceroy, that the armie began to riſe; whereupon hee doubted they would aſſaile Rome, or Tiuoli, and take the French vnprouided, ſo as hee gaue them warning ouer night, and hee himſelfe (not making it knowne to the Romanes, in whom he had no great confidence) wacht all night with the duke, and was in armes, doubling the ſentinels whereas they moſt doubted the enemie. Aſcanio de la Corne, who commanded the horſe that
E went to ſecond the 300 foot, ſeeing the lights about the wall, and the gards in a readines, held the enterpriſe to be diſcouered. And to confirme this opinion, foure light horſemen went forth earelie to get ſome bootie, they thinking by reaſon of the darkeneſſe of the night, the number to be greater, and that they had laied an ambuſh, whereupon they retired.

The duke of Alba comming neere vnto Rome, and ſeeing his men had not done any thing, thought that they ſtood readie within to receiue them. And for that he vnderſtood by certaine ſpies, that Stroſſy had led foure hundred Horſe and twelue companies of Gaſcons the euening before out of Tiuoli, it confirmed him in his beleefe, that they were entred into Rome, hauing notice of the Spaniards comming, wher-
F upon he cauſed the armie to retire to Colonna from whence it came: without doubt if hee had but attempted it, Rome had beene taken and ſackt. The citie was ſo ill garded, as a leſſer armie would haue forced it, for that the Romanes were enemies to the Caraffi, for the wrongs they thought they had receiued of them, and of the ſouldiers that were within the citie; of the which the Gaſcons did not ſpare their goods Rome in danger to be ſackt.

1557 nor honors, & the Germans, enemies to the Pope, ſpoiled the church & altars. The Pope G conſidering of theſe things, & lamenting the miſeries of the time, being forced to countenance and not to puniſh thoſe wretches, who called themſelues defenders in name, but in effect were deſtroiers of that miſerable citie, beganne to bee fully reſolued to peace; and the rather for that hee did viſibly ſee the danger wherein hee was, being certified that the Citizens of Rome had reſolued, that if the duke of Alba returned, they would ſend to capitulate with him, and open him the gates vpon honeſt conditions.

The duke of Guiſe, and Peter Stroſſy entred into Rome after this tumult, who talking with the Pope, aduiſed him to accommodate himſelfe vnto the time, as wiſemen doe commonly. They laied before him the vnfortunate loſſe of the French king, H whereby there was no hope of any greater ſuccours, and that hee ſhould remaine without a Generall, for that hee was to returne ſpeedily into Fraunce, which would bee no ſmall preiudice vnto him, for that his Nephewes, who were to gouerne the warre, were of ſmall experience, neither would they beleeue them that vnderſtood more in that art, but intreated them ill, keeping backe their entertainment, ſo as ſeeing his holineſſe without money, and without Captaines, they did not thinke the warre could continue long: wherefore they counſelled him to make the ſpeedieſt and beſt accord he could with the king of Spaine. The Pope gaue an attentiue eare to the free ſpeeches of theſe Noblemen, and reſolued to make an end of the peoples miſeries, wherefore he called the embaſſadour of Venice vnto him, intreating him I to goe and informe that Senate of the eſtate of things, and to exhort them in his name to make ſome good accord with the imperials.

After manie treaties, in the end a Peace was concluded by the Cardinals of Santafiori and Vitelli; and afterwards by Caraffa and the duke of Alba, who met together at Caui. And ſo by either of them hauing full authoritie from the Pope, and the king of Spaine, the following accord was publiſhed the 14 day of September.

Peace betwixt the Pope and the king of Spaine.

1 That the Pope ſhould receiue from the duke of Alba in the name of the king of Spaine, the ſubmiſſions that were neceſſarie to obtaine pardon from his Holineſſe, but afterwards the Catholike king ſhould ſend a man expreſly to that end. And ſo his Holineſſe ſhould receiue the king into fauour, as an obedient Sonne, admitting him to all K the graces of the holy church, like vnto other Chriſtian Princes.

2 That the Pope ſhould renounce the league contracted with the French king, and remaine a Neuter, louing them both equally, as his Sonnes.

3 That his Maieſtie ſhould cauſe the townes and Cities demanteled, which had beene taken and held ſince the beginning of the warre, to bee reſtored, if they did in any ſort belong vnto the Apoſtolike ſea.

4 That the ordnance taken on either part in that warre ſhould be reſtored.

5 That his Holineſſe and his Maieſtie ſhould forgiue all offences that had beene done them, and remit all ſpirituall and temporall puniſhments, graunting them a gerall pardon, with reſtitution of their honors, dignities, faculties, and iuriſdictions, wher- L of they had beene depriued, in regard of that warre. From the which were excepted Marc Antonio Colonna, Aſcanio de la Corgna, and other rebels, the Popes vaſſals, who ſhold remaine in the ſame cenſure and diſgrace, during the Popes pleaſure.

6 That Paliano ſhould bee deliuered into the hands of Iohn Bernardino Carbone, ſonne to the Popes Couſin, but faithfull to both parties, deliuering the fort as it was at that time: and that the ſaid Carbone ſhould ſweare fealtie to the pope and king of Spaine, and to obſerue the articles concluded betwixt the Cardinall Caraffa, and the duke of Alba, hee hauing the gard of Paliano, with eight hundred foot, which ſhould bee paied equally by the Pope and king.

Beſides theſe there were (as ſome write) other ſecret articles concluded betwixt Caraffa M and the duke of Alba, concerning Paliano and that duke.

During theſe broiles betwixt the Pope and the king of Spaine, the warre was as violent vpon the frontiers of Artois & Picardie: where the duke of Sauoy being generall for the king of Spain, entred with an armie of 40000 men, he beſeeged S. Quentin, defeated and

S. Quentin taken.

A and tooke the Conſtable which came for to relieue it, and then tooke the towne: after which the duke of Guiſe was called home out of Italie. 1557

The duke of Sauoy hauing taken Caſtelet, and ſome other places in Picardie, diſſolued his armie: after which the French king hauing raiſed a great armie commaunded by the duke of Guiſe, hee tooke Calis, Guines, and all the land of Oye, from the Engliſh in the heart of winter. Soone after the Marſhall of Termes went with an armie into Flaunders, where hauing taken Bergues and Dunkerke, and beſeeged Grauelin, hee was charged by the earle of Egmont, his armie defeated, and hee himſelfe taken. After which rout the French king leuied new forces, and came B and camped about Amiens: And king Philip on the other ſide being nothing inferiour in forces, lodged neere vnto Dourlans. Whileſt that theſe two mightie armies which lay ſo neere one vnto another, held all the world in expectation of ſome bloudie battell, God inſpired the hearts of theſe two great Princes with a deſire to quench this warre without effuſion of bloud, and to preferre an accord before a doubtfull victorie: wherefore their Deputies being aſſembled in the Abbaie of Cercampe vpon the Marches of Artois, hauing propounded certaine Articles, a peace was more eaſily concluded at Caſtell Cambreſis, vpon the newes of the death of Marie queene of England. The conditions were:

Calis taken.

1558

Marſhall of Termes defeated.

Peace betwixt France and Spaine.

1 That king Philip being a widower, ſhould marrie Elizabeth eldeſt daughter to C king Henrie.

2 That Marguerite of Fraunce the kings Siſter, ſhould bee giuen in marriage to Emanuel Philibert duke of Sauoy, and that in conſideration thereof, all his country, townes, Caſtles and iuriſdictions of Sauoy and Piedmont ſhould bee reſtored, except the towns of Turin, Quier, Pignerol, Chiuas, and Villanoua of Aſt, which ſhould continue three yeares in the French kings hands, and that in the meane time the king of Spain ſhould retaine Aſt and Verceil.

3 That all the Townes and forts which had beene taken in theſe laſt warres, ſhould bee reſtored on either part, whether they did belong to thoſe kings, or to others which had followed their parties, and namely the Iſland of Corſica to the Ge- D nouois, Montferrat to the duke of Mantoua, and the towne and caſtle of Bouillon to the biſhop of Leege.

4 That they of the houſe of Longueuille ſhould bee put in poſſeſſion of the countie of Saint Paul, and the king D. Philip of the county of Charalois, the Soueraigntie reſerued: but there was no mention made of the Siennois.

5 That the two kings ſhould doe their beſt endeuours to entertaine the peace of Chriſtendome, and ſhould procure the continuance and ending of the generall councell begun at Trent.

This yeare one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and eight, queene Leonora ſiſter to the Emperour Charles the fift, died in Februarie, at Talaberuela three leagues from Badajos E ſhee was firſt wife to Emanuell king of Portugall, and then to Francis the French king, ſhe was honoured with a royall funerall pompe: And in September following, the emperour Charles ended all his toiles, and paſt to a better life in the monaſterie of Saint Iuſt, where hee had remained two yeares: his bodie was left there to bee afterwards buried in the monaſterie of Saint Laurence, which king Philip his ſonne did ſince build with great charge and ſtate, in remembrance of the victorie gotten againſt the French, and the taking of the Conſtable on Saint Laurence day, the tenth of Auguſt. Hee left an immortall fame of his valour, more than any of his predeceſſors had done in many hundred yeares before, for that in him all thoſe vertues might be ſeene, which are to bee deſired in one, that ſhold gouerne his people iuſtly, and commaund armes and manage warre iuditiouſly: He was F verie religious and pitifull to the poore, wherein he ſeemed rather prodigal than liberall: In his eating, drinking & apparel he was very temperate & modeſt, ſo as he might wel be a preſident to any priuat mã, as wel as to great princes, in the practiſe of that vertue: He had a care of juſtice, to haue it duly adminiſtred, although the continual wars wherwith he was afflicted made him to endure many defects: He not only ſpake the language of euery nati-

Death of Queen Leonora.

21

Death of the Emperour Charles the fift.

Praiſes of the Emperour Charles.

1558 on where hee commaunded in Europe, but alſo thoſe that were not vnder his gouernment, for hee ſpake the French and Sclauon tongues readily. In other things hee was not learned, but eloquent, ſhewing great grauitie in his ſpeech. It ſeemed that his good fortune did ſtrue with vertue to fauour him: Hee was prompt in execution, and conſtant againſt any apparent daunger, little eſteeming death. Hee was ſo accuſtomed to the toyles of warre, that vntill hee grew aged, it ſeemed no trouble vnto him. Hee liued eight and fiftie yeares ſixe moneths and ſixe and twentie daies, his funerals were celebrated with great pompe throughout all the cities of his realme, yea, throughout Chriſtendome, euerie one ſeeming both in publike in and in priuate, to be partakers of this generall loſſe.

In December after, king Philip his Sonne cauſed his funerall to bee made at Bruſſells with great ſtate and pompe, where all his moſt glorious enterpriſes were repreſented. Spaine this yeare beſides the loſſe of two ſuch great Princes, was not a little annoyed by the Turkes army, which going from Prouence, landed ſome men in the Iſland of Minorca, beyond the port of Maone, and there, after ſome difficultie and loſſe, they tooke Cittadella, where there were not aboue fiue hundred men to defend it, of whome there were aboue foure hundred ſlaine, the Turkes diſdaining that they were forced to batter it, and to giue ſome aſſaults before they could take it. And ſo valour which is wont to bee admired and reſpected of the enemie, did now cauſe a contrarie effect in the hearts of theſe barbarous and cruell men, and hauing ſpoyled the towne and the whole iſland, they returned with many priſoners into Prouence.

Armie of Turks in Minorca.

Death of D. Iohn the third king of Portugal.

22 A little before the emperours death, D. Iohn the third of that name king of Portugall, died at Lisbone, to the great griefe of his ſubiects, by reaſon of the infancie wherein hee left D. Sebaſtian, the heire of the Crowne. Hee was a ſtately and beautifull Prince, and of hautie enterpriſe, hee continued the Nauigation of the Indes, with great happineſſe and reputation, and made the name of Chriſt to bee knowne to many barbarous nations. Hee made many leagues with the Potentates of the Eaſt and South to abate the Turkes power, yea with Tamas king of Perſia, to whome hee gaue ſuccours of men, artillerie, and all other munition for warre, teaching him and his people to warre after the diſcipline vſed in Europe, that they might annoy the Turks: yet he was blamed, that to ſpare money, he had cauſed many forts in Afrike to be raſed which the kings his predeceſſors had won with great charge and loſſe of men. Notwithſtanding, he left manie monuments and marks of his pietie, according to thoſe times: for in fauor of him, the Pope made Miranda Portalegra & Leira, biſhopricks, and the citie of Ebora, an archbiſhprick; he reformed many Abbaies, taking away the ſuperfluous reuenues of the rich, and giuing them to the poore: Hee made an vniuerſity at Coimbra, increaſed the citie of Lisbone much, the which is the greateſt and beſt peopled of all Spaine, and by the perſuaſion of the Clergie receiued the Inquiſition into Portugal, being vntill that time reiected by his Predeceſſors, by reaſon of the abuſe: Hee was a verie great fauourer of the Ieſuites: and dyed in Iune, in the Palace of Riuiere, in the fiue and fiftieth yeare of his age: hee was interred at Belem.

1559 Caſtille.

King Philip being at Gand, hee ſent William of Naſſau Prince of Orange, and D. Fernando Aluares of Toledo, duke of Alba (who had left Italie and his charge to the duke of Seſſe being ſent in his place) into Fraunce, to ſweare and confirme the articles of the peace in his name: and the duke of Alba had an eſpeciall commiſſion, to make the matrimoniall promiſe of the king of Spaine to Elizabeth of Fraunce, according to the accord, and to ſolemnize this act, as it is vſuall for great Princes that are abſent. This was celebrated at Paris in Iulie one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and nine, but the feaſts and ioy of this marriage prooued mornefull for that k. Henry was hurt with the ſplinter of a lance, and died, as you may read at large in the Hiſtorie of France. Before his death he wold haue the mariage of his Siſter Marguerit with the duke of Sauoy conſummated, which was a great content to that poore prince diſpoſſeſt of his ſtate, who feared much that the kings death which was vndoubtfull Marriage of king Philip with Elizabeth of France.

A ſull, would be a great croſſe vnto him. King Philip (after the conſummation of his mari- 1559 age, by the duke of Alba) ſent Ruy Gomez de Sylua vnto his queene, with a rich diamond, valued by ſome at eightie thouſand crownes, by others, at an hundred and fiftie thouſand, with order, that ſhe ſhould prepare her ſelfe to goe into Spaine the next yeare. And hee finding himſelfe freed from troubles, and hauing diſpoſed of the affaires of the Netherlands, appointed gouernours for euerie prouince, and ouer them Marguerite of Auſtria, his ſiſter, ducheſſe of Parma, he tooke ſhipping at Fleſſingue, in Sep- King Philip returns into Spain tember, and arriued at Laredo in Biſcaie, verie happily: for he was no ſooner landed, but there did riſe ſo violent a ſtorme, and ſuch contrarie winds to that nauigation, as, had hee
B beene at ſea, he had beene in verie great danger, or, had he beene in Flanders, he could not haue parted in ſix monethes. They perſuaded him, that his preſence in Spaine was verie neceſſarie, for that by their acquaintance with the Engliſh and Germans, many of the Court, and other Spaniards which had followed the warres, ſeaſoned with Luthers opinions, had ſpred them there: to root out the which the Iudges of the Inquiſition ſayd, that they were too weake, the king being abſent.

23 Being arriued, it was his chiefe care to haue a ſtrict ſearch made for them that Perſecutions in Spaine for religion.
had any ill conceit of the Romiſh religion, and to haue them rigorouſly puniſhed: ſo as that yeare there were two hideous ſpectacles preſented, one at Vailledolit, and another at Seuile, of people of diuers conditions, ſexes, and ages, condemned to bee
C burnt aliue; among which there were ſome of noble families. Some ſayed, it was a ſecret plot betwixt the two kings of France and Spaine, at the concluſion of the peace; for hee of France had begun the like perſecutions within his owne realme, and with his owne officers firſt. The Archbiſhop of Toledo, the chiefe Prelate in Spaine, was much ſuſpected to decline from the Romiſh Church, wherefore he was put in priſon, and his rents ſequeſtred.

This yeare the Roman Sea was voyd, by the death of Pope Paul the fourth, being Death of Pope Paul the fourth foureſcore and three yeares old; before his death being duely informed of the villanies of cardinall Caraffa and his brethren, being his nephewes, hee baniſhed them out of Rome, and depriued them of all their dignities and offices. The cardinall loſt his place D of Legat at Bolonia, the duke of Paliano the commaund of the armes and of the gallies of the Church, and the marqueſſe of Montabello, the gard which hee had of the Popes perſon, and of the palace. This Pope was ſucceeded by Iohn Ange de Medici, a Milanois, and was called Pius the fourth: at his firſt comming to the Sea he cauſed cardinall Caraffa to be put in priſon, and ſtrangled there, and the duke of Paliano, the earle of Alife, and other of his predeceſſors kinſmen, to be beheaded, being conuicted of many crimes. He did intimate the Councell of Trent, which had beene left off ſince the yeare 1552, but it began not vntill the yeare 1562.

During the warres of Europe, Aſia and Africke had not beene at peace; for that famous pyrat Dragut hauing gotten the iſland of Gerbe from Solyman that was lord there-
E of, whom he cauſed to be hanged at Tripoli, giuing the place to another lord, for a tribute of ſix thouſand crownes, and yet ſoone after he depriued him: but thoſe people, not able to endure his tyrannie, tooke armes againſt him, and ſought to make a new lord. Tripoli had alſo beene taken eight yeares before by Dragut, from the knights of Saint Iohn, who to reuenge that diſgrace, ſought to recouer it this yeare. The people of Spaine deſired nothing more, than to keepe vnder the Moores and pyrats of Africke, who being neere vnto them, may eaſily trouble their nauigation, and annoy the Southerne coaſts: Wherefore it was not difficult for Iohn Valette, a French man, great Maſter of Malta, to perſuade the Catholike king, and the Councell of Spaine, to ſend an armie to the conqueſt of Tripoli, from whence Dragut and other pyrats did dayly annoy the F Spaniards. Dragut was much hated, not onely of the Chriſtians, but alſo of the Moores, ouer whom hee vſed moſt cruell tyrannie, ſeeking by treacherie, or by open force, to kill the chiefe Commaunders, and to make himſelfe lord of their States: Among which the king of Caruano was the chiefe, from whom hee had taken a great part of his eſtate: and for that he was of great force, hee was reuerenced among his people,

1559 ple, almoſt like a Pope among the Chriſtians; wherefore it ſeemed hee might helpe much in this enterpriſe, againſt this famous pyrat, if (as hee had made offer) he would ſhew himſelfe fauourable. Valette being incouraged by his offers, hee began to treat with the duke of Medina Celi, then Viceroy of Sicile, and afterwards in the Court of Spaine, by the Commaunder Guimarano, his embaſſadour. At the firſt there was ſome difficultie, the king being in warre againſt France, but a peace concluded, hee reſolued to attempt the enterpriſe of Tripoli, ſending Guimarano with his reſolution, and letters of Commiſſion to them that ſhould haue the execution thereof. Hee carried letters to prince Doria, That hee ſhould with all ſpeed make readie the armie, being now mid Iune; who being verie old, and vnable to beare armes, gaue the charge thereof to Iohn Andrew Doria, being his lieutenant, writing vnto him into Sicile. The duke of Seſſa had commiſſion in the State of Milan, to make readie two thouſand Spaniards for that ſeruice: and Aluaro de Sandy to go thither in perſon with the footmen that were vnder his charge within the realme, and with the two thouſand Spaniards. The Viceroy of Naples had order to ſend two thouſand Spaniards of the regiments of that realme; and the Viceroy of Sicile had the title of Generall in this action.

Tripoli beſieged by the Chriſtians.

Guimarano hauing performed all theſe Commiſſions, in the end hee came to Meſsina, the ſeuenteenth day of Iulie. Euerie man was carefull to execute his Commiſſion, and the great Maſter, to whom the king had giuen the chiefe care to manage this enterpriſe with diſcretion, and to aſsiſt it both with his counſell and force, laboured by all meanes to get the armie forth, that they might performe ſome worthie action before Autumne: But they had ſo many croſſes, as the nauie could not poſsibly get out of the port of Sarragoſſe in Sicile, before the firſt day of December. There were leuied for this enterpriſe by Sandy in the State of Milan, beſides thoſe men aboue mentioned, two thouſand fiue hundred Italians, all old ſouldiers, and three Companies of Germans, which had remained there ſince the laſt warre, commaunded by Stephen Leoparti: and ſo all theſe ſouldiers were ſent to Genoua to imbarke, where they had many difficulties, and the Spaniards mutined, ſo as Sandy and Lorenzo Figueroa had ſome difficultie to pacifie them with foure payes: then putting them into certaine ſhips, the fift of October they went to Meſsina.

Of the two thouſand Spaniards out of the realme of Naples, the Viceroy would giue but fiue hundred, hee fearing to leaue that coaſt without a good gard, for that the Turkes armie, being foureſcore ſayles, was then at Velona, breeding a doubt in the Chriſtians, where this tempeſt would fall: But in effect it was by Solyman to keepe our men from the enterpriſe of Barbarie; for that the great Maſter hauing ſome monethes before ſent two foiſts into Africke, to diſcouer, one of them was taken by Dragut, whereby he vnderſtood the Catholike kings preparations, and his deſignes: ſo as hauing but fiue hundred men in Tripoli, hee ſuddenly hyred to the number of two thouſand Turkes and Moores; writing thereof to Conſtantinople, whereupon hee reſolued to ſend forth this fleet. Moreouer, there were leuied within the realme twelue Companies of Italians. In Sicile alſo there were twelue Companies, among the which, as in thoſe of Naples, there were many baniſhed men, who were fierce and warlike, but verie mutinous.

All theſe men, being aboue thirteene thouſand, were commaunded by valiant captaines: Iohn Andrew Gonzago, ſonne to Fernando, was Colonell of the Italian foot leuied in the State of Milan, and Marſhall of the campe to all the Italians that went in that action: Luigi Oſorio was maſter of the campe to the Spaniards of Sicile: Bernard Aldana was maſter of the ordnance, whereof they carried great ſtore, both for field and batterie: Peter Velaſques was Commiſſarie generall of the armie, and the Commaunder Charles Ieſiers, was Colonell of fiue hundred harquebuſiers, ſent by the great Maſter, beſide foure hundred valiant knights in the gallies, of that Order. There were in Sicile of gallies, three from the Church, whereof the charge was giuen by the Colledge of cardinals (the Sea being voyd) vnto Flaminio of Anguillara, thirteene of Iohn Andrew Dorias, payed by the king, ſeuen of the realme of Naples, gouerned

Number of Chriſtian Armie going to Tripoli.

A ned by Sancio Lieua, tenne of Sicile, commaunded by Berlinghery Requeſens, foure from the duke of Florence, vnder Nicholas Gentile, fiue of the Order of Malta, and one galliot, fiue of Anthonie Dorias, commaunded by his ſonne Scipione, two of Bandinello Saule. To theſe were added two galliots of the duke of Medina Celi, the Generall, one of Lewis Oſorioes, and one of Frederic Staues: ſo as they were in all foure and fiftie, beſides eight and twentie great ſhips, of the which Iohn Andrew Gonzaga was Generall; two galleons, one of Malta, the other of Cicala, with fiue and thirtie brigantines and fregates: ſo as they reckoned in all an hundred and nineteene veſſels. They carried great ſtore of munition for the warre, and victuals to feed 30000 men foure monethes. 1559

B There was ſome difficultie to imbarke the Spaniards of Sicile, mutined, for that there were many monethes pay due vnto them; but Fernando de Sylua, marqueſſe of Fauara, being left lieutenant by the duke, ſatisfied them with two monethes pay. Going from Meſſina to Sarragoſſe, in October, they ſtayed there many daies, by reaſon of the contrarie winds. Their long ſtay there did much prejudice them, for it not onely bred a ſickneſſe among them, whereof there died aboue two thouſand, but alſo many fled away, eſpecially of the Sicilians. The firſt of December the gallies parted from Sarragoſſe, with great hope of a proſperous voyage, the ſhips ſayling towards Cap paſſe ro, being towards night, with an intent to goe to Secci di Palo; who hauing left the ſhips behind, and a contrarie wind blowing in the morning, they were forced to returne againe into

C Sarragoſſe. The gallies fearing if the contrarie windes ſhould grow great, it would breed them great danger in this long voyage, being much before the ſhips, they reſolued to get to Malta. Here the gallies, with the Generall in them, and other men of account, were honourably entertained by the great Maſter, for ſome dayes, the winds being ſtill contrarie to their intended voyage. It was then reſolued, that two and twentie gallies ſhould returne into Sicile, to bring the ſhips to Malta; moſt of which arriued after ſome difficultie: Fiue of them ſtayed vntill the firſt of Ianuarie, and three vnto the twelfth, among which was the galleon of Cicala, which running to Cap paſſero, was there ſpoyled by the Sicilian ſouldiers that were in her, who killing their commaunders, fled away. The like happened vnto a ſhip which carried Sicilians alſo, of the which Vincentio Caſtag-

D nuola was captaine, who was not ſlaine by them, but verie cruelly intreated. Some dayes before there arriued ſeuen Companies of Spaniards, ſent in three ſhips by the Viceroy of Naples, to fill vp his number of two thouſand, according to the kings commaundement. There came in like manner a galleon with many refreſhings from Sicile, and great ſtore of munition.

They were haunted ſtill with that infectious ſickneſſe in Malta, whereof many dyed, giuing in the beginning apparent ſignes of the vnfortunate ſucceſſe of this armie. Thus the ſecret iudgements of God doe often make mens counſels and reſolutions vaine, the which in regard of the cauſe are held good, but are not approued by his diuine prouidence, it may be to confound the wiſedome of men, but without doubt for our offences. 1560 Queene of Spaine conducted into Spaine

E In the yere 1560 Iſabella, or Elizabeth queene of Spaine, was conducted into Spaine, to the king D. Philip her husband, being accompanied by Anthonie of Bourbon, king of Nauarre, with other lords and ladies: ſhe was receiued at Ronceuaux by the cardinal D. Francis of Mendoſa, biſhop of Burgos, D. Inigo Lopez of Mendoſa, duke of the Infantazgo, and many others, who conducted her to Guadalajara, where the mariage was celebrated. At that time D. Gabriel de la Cueua was Viceroy of Nauarre, in the place of D. Bertrand his father, deceaſed, who gaue the new queene a ſtately reception paſſing by Pampelone. The ſame yere the prince D. Charles, ſonne to king Philip, was ſworne, and acknowledged to be true ſucceſſor in the realmes of Caſtille, Nauarre, Arragon, &c. after the accuſtomed maner of Spaine.

F But to the returne to the warre of Barbarie. The Catholike kings nauie ſtayed many dayes at Malta, by reaſon of the contrarie windes; ſo as in the beginning of the yeare the Generall (although he were perſuaded by the great Maſter to ſtay vntill the weather were better ſetled) commaunded the armie to imbarke, and about the middeſt of Februarie he came to the iſland of Gerbe; where hauing diſcouered two ſhips of Alexandria,

1560 Alexandria, laden with marchandiſe, lying within the chanell, they tooke and ſpoyled them: but they vſed no diligence to take two veſſels that went with oares, which lay more within, the which afterwards were no ſmall hurt vnto them. Dragut was there with ſeuen hundred Turkes and Moores, on horſebacke, and three thouſand foot, being then in quarell with the Xec, or lord of the iſland, who alſo had good numbers of Arabians and Moores, and expecting aid from the Chriſtians, was continually in armes againſt his enemies. G

Chriſtians army at Gerbe. Dragut held that part of the iſland which was towards the chanell, hauing kept thoſe two veſſels readie to ſend vnto Conſtantinople, or to flie away, if neceſſitie forced him, hauing no hope to eſcape on the other ſide, whereas the Xec lay with his forces, eſpecially if all the Chriſtians armie were landed, whereof a part went to land, to fetch freſh water, being led by Aluaro de Sandy; where skirmiſhing nine houres together, during their watering, they receiued no great loſſe, and ſlue many enemies: In the retreat Aluaro was ſhot in the flanke, yet could they not poſſibly take any one priſoner, to be informed of the ſtate of things: which was afterwards thought to haue ſtayed the victorie, and to haue ruined their enterpriſe, when as, by the taking of the two galliots, Dragut could not poſſibly haue eſcaped, after which the taking of Tripoli had beene eaſie, neither ſhould hee haue had meanes to ſend to Conſtantinople, to aduertiſe them of the ſtate of things in Barbarie, and to procure an armie. It was knowne afterwards, that there was great ſtore of money and jewels, which Dragut ſent by Vluccialy the pyrat, vnto the Baſſa of the port, to procure ſuccours from the great Turke: ſo as if they had taken and burnt them, they had obtained a happie victorie; the which was not done, partly through the negligence of them that commaunded, and partly by the great diligence of the enemie, who would not haue the Chriſtians know what paſt in the iſland, for that there was not any creature liuing found in the two ſhips, all being fled to land. In the morning before day the Chriſtians parted with their armie, neither could they put any to land in a fregate, to diſcouer the ſtate of the iſland, the Moores were ſo carefull to defend the ſhore. H

Occaſion of a victorie loſt by the Chriſtians. I

Two dayes after there came eight gallies to Gerbe, the which had ſtayed at Malta for ſome prouiſion, where landing vnaduiſedly to water, they were charged by the Turkes, who ſlue an hundred and fiftie good ſouldiers, and tooke ſome priſoners, among which was captaine Pedro Vermudez: and of the chiefe of them that were ſlaine, were foure Spaniards, Adrian Garzia, Alphonſo de Guzman, Pedro Vianega del Rio, and Franciſco Mercato: which diſorder did much trouble the Generall, being now at Secco di Palo with the whole armie; and they were all much diſcontented, to heare afterwards, that a fregate of the knights of Malta, paſſing neere vnto Gerbe, had beene told by two Renegadoes, that Dragut was there, and that Vluccialy was gone with two galliots to Conſtantinople: And, which was worſe, the armie was forced to ſtay ſome dayes at Secco di Palo, by reaſon of contrarie windes, being an hundred and fiftie miles from Tripoli, where drinking freſh water digged in thoſe ſands, but of a peſtiferous qualitie, it brought a peſtilent infirmitie into the armie, whereof many dyed. In the end a South-eaſt wind ariſing, it did hinder their courſe to Tripoli, and ſtaying there infinit numbers dyed, through the corruption of the ayre and water, this peſtilent diſeaſe increaſing daily, hauing waſted a great part of their munition, and broken the Admirals ſhip by the mariners negligence, hauing alſo loſt two ſmaller ſhips laden with victuals, at Cherchenny, they had not many men in the armie for this enterpriſe, expecting footmen from Naples and Sicile, and the Galeon of Cicala, two galliots, and ſome ſhips, which had beene kept backe by contrarie windes. Wherefore they reſolued to returne, and to land at Gerbe, where they arriued the two and twentieth day of March, and on the ſeuen and twentieth Aluaro de Sandy, Marſhall generall of the campe, landed with their men, and ſome field peeces, to lodge in good order, neere vnto certaine wells of freſh water, two miles from the caſtle, towards the Weſt. At their landing Aluaros nephew died of a peſtilent feuer, carrying his name; a young man of great hope: he was much lamented by him, and the whole armie. K

Chriſtians ſlain by the Turkes in watering.

L

M

Chriſtians army land at Gerbe.

Ha-

A Hauing at night made three squadrons of all his men they lodged neere. Sandy not thinking it fit to goe vnto the wells, for that hee found by many coniectures that the Moores had receiued them as enemies, wherefore it would bee dangerous, if lodging late, they should bee charged by the enemy. At night the Xec sent two men with a fayned Embassage, intreating the Generall to goe to Tripoli, for that hee had beene receiued quietly by his subiects, who would take it ill if the Christians should remaine in that Iland; but in effect they came to discouer the campe. They were entertained vntill the morning, and then an answere was giuen them, that they had landed at Gerbe finding the winds contrary to goe to Tripoly, but yet they had done it willingly to put the B Xec in possession of the Island, before they went to Tripoly, which they intended afterwards. They therefore desired to see him well setled, to buy refreshings with their money, take water, and as soone as the windes were faire, goe for Tripoly. In the morning hauing put all their men in battaile, they marched towards the wells, beeing sixe miles off, the souldiers hauing indured much that night for want of water, hauing not brought any out of the gallies, so as they marched with great thirst, Sandy beeing carefull least at their arriuall, disordering themselues hauing a great desire to drinke they should bee charged by the Moores, and receiue some great losse. They marched in three squadrons; in the foreward went the great Commander, with the knights and souldiers of Malta, and with the Germanes and French, which were not in all aboue two C thousand. 1560

Andrew Gonzaga commanded the battaile, consisting of three thousand Italians, and in the rere-ward were three thousand and fiue hundred Spaniards: And of either side they were couered with a wing of three hundred shot, leauing in the midest a conuenient space for the baggage. But if they came to a battaile, one of these wings was to ioyne with the foreward, and the other with the battaile; hauing marched a while, they were staied at a certaine bogge, by a field peece: Sandy with the shot which were towards the shore, aduanced to recouer the wells, which hee found had beene spoiled by the Moores, and filled with stones and sand, so as hee was forced to send for Pioners with tooles to clense them: neither did the Moores yet shew themselues, beeing an apparent signe D that they had an intent to charge them in their lodging, so as they marched in good order, forbidding any man to disband vpon paine of death. Then they met with foure Moores of Authority sent from the Xec, with a designe to view the army, but with an excuse of a friuolous Embassage, where they were entertained with good words, whilest that the army aduanced toward the wells, and then were dismist with a generous answere from the Generall: That seeing the Xec could not come vnto him, beeing staied by his people, that hee should rest satisfied, and that hee would soone bee with him in his castle, reiecting their proposition, that the Duke should aduance with foure horses onely, as the Xec had done, that they might parle together. Yet for all this the Moores, who lay two miles off, couered with a little hill, did not moue, seeing the order of the E Christians army to bee verie firme, wherefore they did forbeare vntill they lodged, imagining that hauing endured much thirst that day and the night before, they would in their lodging fall into a confusion with a desire of drinke. Which did not follow by Aluaro de Sandys great care who caused them still to keepe their rankes: Notwithstanding that Colonel Spinola hauing too eagrely aduanced to entertaine a great skirmish, was in great daunger with some Harguebuziers that were with him. But the Marshall foreseeing this danger, had sent captaine George Ruis with two hundred Harguebuziers of Sicile behind certaine walles to fauour their retreat. The Moores attempted also to breake the rankes of the Christians in other places, with great courage and readinesse, but with little losse that day, onely captaine Ruis being hurt in the shoulder with a F launce, died within few daies after.

Order of the Christians army at Gerbe.

The skirmish ended two houres before night, and the Christians lodged, hauing caused the wells to be clensed during the skirmish.

The day following they fortified their lodging against the enemie, and the gallies were sent for to furnish themselues with water; but three daies after they went forth in battaile, to goe and fight with the enemie, which did not succeed, for the Moores with their

Xec,

1560 Xec, did often intreat the Generall to receiue them for vanquiſhed, offering to bee ſubiects to the King of Spaine. Hauing firſt taken hoſtages, Michel of Baraona a Colonel was ſent with two companies of Spaniards to take poſſeſſion of the caſtle, and the next day the Generall entred, with the chiefe of the army, the Moores ſhewing themſelues very obſequious, bringing aboundance of victuals vnto the campe. The Arabians Mahamidi were alſo paied with their Xec, who had faithfully kept the paſſage of the bridge, as they had beene appointed at Secco di Palo. They afterwards held a Councell, how they might keepe that Iſland at the kings deuotion, the which they held to bee verie neceſſarie, for by that meanes they ſhould take a retreat from the Turkes and Moores which did robbe vpon thoſe ſeas, and withall they ſhould ſecure Sicile, Sardinia, Malta and other places, and to that end they ſhould build a fort, making vſe of the caſtle to keepe their victualls and munition, and for ſome wells: beſides hauing their materialls neere, with other commodities for the ſpeedy doing it. G H

Fort built in the Iſland of Gerbe.

On the ſeuenteenth of March the army began to lodge about the caſtle, where they had appointed to build a fort, Antonio Conte being Ingener, aſſiſted by Bernardo Aldano and Sanchio de Lieua, within two daies after the worke beganne, it being diuided amongſt the Nations after this manner. Being to make foure Bulwarkes, the charge of one was giuen to Andrew Gonzaga, and to the Italians, an other to the great Commander, and to them of that order, the third to Andrew Doria, and them of the gallies, the Generall reſeruing the fourth for himſelfe, ſo as within few daies it was put in defence. But neither the ayre nor the water were healthfull for them that were not accuſtomed vnto it, ſo as many died daily, and more fell ſicke, which was a lamentable ſpectacle. There was an hoſpitall prouided, and the biſhop of Majorca who was alſo gouernour, did what hee could to preſerue the ſouldiers. They had newes that they prepared an army at Conſtantinople; and the great Maſter of Malta doubting ſome danger called home the great Commander with his Gallies and men, the which parted from Gerbe the eight of Aprill, leauing the charge of fyniſhing that Bulwarke to Pedro Vrrea, for that they made great haſt to leaue it defenſible, the Duke reſoluing to imbarke, being verie carefull to furniſh it, although that all things did not ſucceed according to his deſire. The king of Caruano came to viſit him, and there paſt great kindneſſe betwixt them, but the Xec would by no meanes meet him, yet hee came once halfe a mile out of the caſtle to treat with him, beeing accompanied with a great number of Moores. The Generall was earneſt to haue ſtore of victualls brought from the ſhips vnto the campe, but they that were intereſſed ſeemed to haue ſmall care of the publike good. There were two thouſand foot Italians, Spaniards and Dutch appointed for the gard of this fort, with fifty horſe vnder the Colonel Michel of Baraona. There was order giuen to haue the Xec take the oth, who ſhould aduance the armes of Spaine. And then hee reſolued to part with the army in the beginning of May, but hee was ſtaied vpon ſome controuerſie growne betwixt the Chriſtians and the Moores, vpon a light occaſion; but it was wiſely pacified, and ſome that had moſt offended puniſhed. I K L

Xec ſwears obedience and tribute to the King of Spaine.

The fame of the army increaſing, and the ſolemnitie performed the fifth of May, a mile from the campe, in the preſence of Monreal the Generals Secretary, and ſome of his gentlemen, the Xec did ſweare vpon the Alcaron to bee faithfull to the king of Spaine, to pay euery yeere ſixe thouſand crownes, foure Eſtriges, foure Lanerets, foure Falcons, and one Camell, and in like manner the Moores, that were with him did ſweare vaſſalage and fealtie vnto him. Then order was giuen to imbarke the army, wherein they were verie ſlacke and negligent, vntill that there came a meſſage from the Great Maſter to the Generall, aſſuring him that the Turkes gallies being foure ſcore and fiue had parted from Gozo on the eight day of that month at night, with an intent as hee did coniecture to releeue Tripoly, and then to ſeeke out the Chriſtians army, hearing that it was vnfurniſhed of ſouldiars, and out of order. Then euery man deſired to bee at ſea, ſo as the confuſion was great, and their opinion diuers, but moſt concurred to go preſently to ſea. M

The Generall went to Iohn Andrew Doria being not well recouered of a great Infirmitie, to reſolue of all things, leauing a charge with Alnaro to haue his men readie, ſo as returning at night he might not ſtay; Doria being reſolued to put to ſea, and hauing giuen order

A order to the ſhips to follow him, he left a gallie called the Conteſſe, for the duke to im- 1560
barke in, being light, and well furniſhed with ſlaues, that all things being ordered, hee might goe and joyne with the armie. The Generall would not omit any duetie that night, being before the twelfth day, but hauing giuen good inſtructions to the gouernour of the fort, he ſpake with great efficacie to the ſouldiers which remained, aſſuring them, That the armie at ſea being in that accident in greater daunger than the fort, it was fit he ſhould be where the perill was moſt apparent, entertaining them after this manner vntill the day began to breake, when as he with Sandy came vnto the fregare which ſhould carrie them to the gallie that was gouerned by the Commaunder Guimarano. But hee made
B a ſigne vnto him with his hand, that hee ſhould retire to land, for that the Turkes armie began to appeare, with an intent to charge the Chriſtians. After Dorias reſolutions to get out of thoſe ſhelues, there aroſe a contrarie wind, which did hinder him: ſo as the Turkes Generall hauing caſt anker but ſixteene miles from Gerbe, the night before, hauing ſent Cara Muſtafa gouernour of Mitelen and Vluccialy to diſcouer, he vnderſtood in what confuſion the Chriſtians were, being readie to depart, hee then reſolued to ſet vpon them at the breake of day: with which reſolution hee came on with a proſperous wind, when as Scipion going forth with a ſquadron of gallies for the gard, hee was ſo ſuddenly ſurpriſed by the Turkes, as hee had no time to aduertiſe the armie: ſo as euerie man being amazed by this ſudden accident, they had no other care
C but how to flie, but it was done with that confuſion which a ſudden feare of an inuitable daunger doth vſually bring. Iohn Andrew Doria diſtruſting his Admirall gallie, for that it was old and heauie, hee reſolued to draw neere to land, being forced to 24 recouer the fort in a barke, being a mile off: the gallie was preſently abandoned, and Armie of Chriſtians miſerably loſt at Gerbe.
left in the ſlaues hands, who being at libertie, carried it to the enemie. It was a miſerable ſpectacle to ſee that mightie armie ſcattered in an inſtant, ſome one way ſome another. There were ſeuen gallies which fought to ſaue themſelues in the chanell of Gerbe, where moſt of the men leaping into the water, although they were farre from land, ſought to ſaue their liues by ſwimming, ſo as all the ſhore was full of men.

D The Marſhall Sandy ranne thither with a great troupe of ſhot and pikes, to defend them that came to land, for that the Moores, being treacherous and inconſtant, had preſently changed their minds, and ſlue and ſpoyled as many as came vnto their hands. The Generall to auoyd this other miſchiefe, ſent word vnto the Xec, by the king of Caruano, and the Infant of Tunis, That hee ſhould forbid his Moores to annoy the Chriſtians, putting him in mind of his faith formerly giuen. But they prepared to flie alſo, fearing the Turkes, pretending, that they went to gather together ſome Arabians Mahamidy, with the which they would returne, and fauour the Chriſtians; wiſhing them not to truſt the Moores of the iſland, who were not well affected to them. That morning there were nineteene gallies fell into the enemies hands, with the Admi-
E rall, the reſt ſaued themſelues in diuers places, by flight, the which was attributed to the courage and good counſell of the Commaunder Anthonie Maldonato. The great Maſter had called home his gallies to Malta, as hath beene ſayed, to prouide for the daungers of that iſland; but afterwards hee ſent backe three, vnder the commaund of Maldonato, who in this confuſion going to ſea, was followed by many gallies, relying vpon the skill of this knight, the which ſucceeded happily. The duke and Sandy ſtayed vpon the ſhore, to defend thoſe poore wretches which came from the gallies, from the Moores, giuing them clothes and armes, which were prepared for them that ſhould defend the fort.

The ſame day they held a Councell vnder a tent, where were the Generals Iohn An-
F drew Doria, D. Aluaro de Sandy, and the Commaunder Guimerano. Doria ſaid, That it was neceſſarie for them to depart ſpeedily, whileſt that the enemie was buſie in giuing chaſe to the gallies, which he meant to doe in a fregate, carrying them to Malta, or into Sicile, to gather together the diſperſed gallies, and to arme others, to make head againſt the Turkes armie, if hee ſhould ſeeke to annoy any place of the kings. Sandy did counſell

1560 the duke to goe to attend his chiefe charge of Sicile, the which was now in great daun- G ger, and if he did it not he ſhould faile much of his duetie: but for his part, he would remaine in Gerbe, being thereunto bound both by the duetie of his charge, and the ſeruice he ought vnto his king, ſeeing there remained aboue three thouſand, beſides the appointed garriſon, ſome of which eſcaped from the gallies, and ſome were neuer imbarked, being ſicke, and not fit for the warre, and yet they were to be reſpected as Chriſti-ans; beſides, there being many which had followed him in the action, it was not fit hee ſhould ſeeke his owne ſafetie, and abandon them.

Theſe with other his reaſons were allowed of, and it was reſolued, they ſhould depart that euening about Sunne ſet, in nine fregates, ſome other knights and officers follow- H ing them: but a contrarie wind ſtayed them that night. But the next day there happened another diſgrace: for the Generall meaning to keepe the Turkes from the ſhore, whileſt they purſued the gallies that retired into the chanell, hee cauſed the artillerie of the fort to bee mounted, among which was a Culuerin, which being ouercharged, brake, and ſlue ſome that were neere vnto the Generall. The loſſe was exceeding great in thoſe gallies that were taken, not onely of the veſſels, and of many ſouldiers that were in them, but alſo for that there were many men of account ſlaine, or taken priſoners: among which were Flaninio of Anguillara, Generall of the Popes gallies, Sancio de Leua, Generall of them of Naples, Berlingheri of Requeſens, of thoſe of Si-cile, the biſhop of Majorca, Gaſton de la Cerde, the Generals ſonne, with others. But at I the Turkes returne from the chaſe of the gallies, they prepared to fight with the ſhips which were full of ſouldiers, being fiue and twentie, all which they tooke withouttany difficultie. Some write, there were aboue 3000 men taken in the ſhips & gallies, and drowned, ſeeking to flie to land. The Viceroy of Sicile, and Iohn Andrew Doria, eſcaped, and came to Malta, and from thence to Sicile, hauing firſt giuen order, that a fre-gate of aduice ſhould bee ſent to them that were in the fort at Gerbe, of their ſafetie, and that the Commaunder Guimerano was ſent into Spaine, to informe the king of this accident, and to intreat him to ſend D. Bernardin de Mendoſa, Generall of the gallies of Spaine in Sicile, to joyne with ſuch as were eſcaped, and to make the bodie of an armie, whereby they might ſuccour the beſieged at Gerbe. They of the fort were verie joy- K full of theſe newes; and Sandy, who was made Generall by the duke, confirmed them with many good reaſons, that they ſhould vndoubtedly expect it, omitting no paines to fortifie the place.

Pialy Baſſa, who was Generall of the armie, reſoluing to take the fort, did write to Dra-gut (who, a little before the Chriſtians had come the ſecond time to Gerbe, was gone with all his horſemen to Tripoli, to defend it) That he ſhould ſend, or come with all the forces he had, to beſiege Gerbe, ſending him alſo prouiſion of victuals, and munition for that enterpriſe. The Baſſa landed his ſouldiers, and began to fortifie his lodging neere vnto Turkes campe about the fort at Gerbe. the wells where the Chriſtians had camped. Sandy did not thinke it conuenient to make often ſallies, hauing no great ſtore of good men, and too many that were vnprofitable, L which was his greateſt trouble, hauing neither victuals nor water ſufficient for a long ſiege. But he reſolued to draw it in length, for many reſpects, hoping that they ſhould be relieued, it importing his Maieſtie much, not onely for the loſſe of the fort, but alſo of ſo many good ſouldiers, and captaines of qualitie, which were there expoſed to apparent danger. The Baſſa hauing all the garriſon ſouldiers of Barbarie, with other neceſſaries, made his approaches neere vnto the fort, where they were daily in skirmiſh, about cer-Wells loſt by the Chriſtians at Gerbe. taine wells, where the Chriſtians kept a gard without the fort, but in the end they tooke them from the beſieged. The Turkes preſt them with their trenches, and prepared a great batterie againſt the fort; but their greateſt miſerie was, that by the loſſe of their wells, and the great heat in thoſe Southern coũtries, many begã to die of thirſt, hauing but little- M water which they had reſerued in veſſels; for the water which they drew out of the wels was ſo ſalt, as it did cauſe thirſt, and not quench it. Sandy ſeeing how much it did import to be thus kept within the fort, and to be depriued of water, he reſolued to make a great ſal-lie, and to chaſe the enemie from their trenches; the which had beene ſucceſſull, if the ſouldi-

A ſouldiers had kept the order preſcribed them. There went forth fiue hundred Italians, and as many Spaniards, all harquebuſiers, with an hundred Germans, pikes, who ſallying forth by two ports, ſhould come and ioyne together, cloy the ordnance, and kill all that ſhould reſiſt, expreſly forbidding them to fall to the ſpoyle. There were others alſo ſtood readie to ſuccour where need ſhould require. At the breake of day they went forth, killing many of the enemies, in which charge Dragut himſelfe was hurt: they cloyed three peeces of ordnance, tooke ſome Enſignes, and were maſters of the trenches: but forgetting the order was giuen them, ſome being too bold, aduanced ſo farre, as they could not be relieued by their companions, and ſome too greedie, fell to ſpoyle; B whereby they were in ſuch diſorder, as the Turkes imbracing the occaſion, turned head, and charged them, ſtriking ſuch a terrour into them, as they baſely fled. There were many men of worth died fighting valiantly, among the which were the earle Galuano Anguiſola, captaine Carlo d'Aro, and ſome others. The Turkes purſued them that fled euen vnto the fort, where the artillerie from the bulwarkes made a great ſlaughter of them. But the want of water, through the loſſe of their wells, was of ſuch importance for the beſieged, as without doubt it was the cauſe of all their miſeries, and in the end of the loſſe of the fort. They were forced to make their bread with ſalt water, their victuals were verie ſalt, being prouiſion taken out of the ſhips, the ſeaſon of the yeare in that climat was exceeding hot, their toyle great, and continuall, ſo as their thirſt increaſed as their water C decreaſed. Thoſe poore wretches, to flie the occaſions of great thirſt, eat little, ſo as they grew ſo weake, as they could not endure the inſupportable toyle of warre, but died without remedie. Many ſeeing that they muſt die of thirſt, fled to the enemie, and although they knew well, that they went to a perpetuall ſlauerie, yet they ranne when they had any opportunitie, to giue themſelues vnto the enemie for drinke, and to no other end.

1560

Thirſt vnheard of in the fort of Gerbe.

They had not much water remaining in their ceſternes, and that which they digged within the fort was ſalt, like vnto the ſea water: whereupon a Sicilian, called Sebaſtian du Pollere, offered to draw a good quantitie daily by Alambick, and to make it freſh: Sandy promiſed him a great recompence for this inuention, and cauſed the Germanes to make D eighteene Alambickes, hauing no more matter to worke with; but they could not draw aboue fiue and thirtie barrels a day out of their wells, which was a ſmall prouiſion for ſo many thouſands of thirſtie perſons. The ſalt water being diſtilled, was ſo ſweet, as tempering it with the well water, it made a pleaſant mixture: ſo mingling the water of the wells, the diſtilled water, and that of the ceſternes, together, the Generall diuided it among the ſouldiers, giuing a double portion to them that carried armes. The diuiſion of this drinke was verie ſtrange, whereof the gouernour of the fort had the chiefe care, being a matter of great importance, and therefore it was diſtributed in a place where there was a good gard, whereas the ſouldiers paſt in order, hauing a ſpunge hanging at a line, the which being put into a tub of water, he tooke it and ſuckt E as much as was allowed him.

Salt water made freſh by Alambicke.

The Turkes continued their workes, and had aduanced their trenches euen vnto the fort, and the ſouldiers ran daily vnto them, yea they who had the charge not to ſuffer others to run away, were the firſt that went themſelues; and ſome were ſo villanous, as they had plotted to ſet fire on the powder, and to blow vp all. Some affirme that there were fifteene hundred which had fled to the enemie, wherof there were many ſouldiers of known valour, and ſome nobly borne, but not nobly minded, ſelling bodie and ſoule to flie the want of drinke. The Turkes ſought to win the fort by mines, batterie, and aſſaults, and the beſieged repulſt them valiantly. In the end of Iune D. Aluaro de Sandy hauing viewed the prouiſions carefully, and finding that they had not wood for ſix dayes, which was F moſt neceſſarie to diſtill their water, and that they had not ſufficient of ceſterne water left, to ſerue the ſouldiers three dayes, they being aboue a thouſand, ſeeing matters reduced to that extremitie, he called the captaines and chiefe officers to councell, hauing firſt appointed that the ſouldiers ſhould haue double allowance both of meat and freſh water alone, with ſome little wine which had beene reſerued for them that were wounded.

1560 He ſpake vnto them at night, letting them ſee to what eſtate they were brought, and G repeating in what manner they had defended themſelues with iudgement and valour, a-gainſt the violence of their enemies; and that ſeeing themſelues now vanquiſhed rather by hunger and thirſt than by armes, he knew not a more honourable reſolution, than Reſolution of Aluaro de Sandy for their laſt refuge. to put that generous courſe in practiſe, which in moſt deſperate caſes hath giuen a glorious victorie to braue and reſolute ſouldiers. They therefore concluded that night to make a gallant ſallie, and to charge the enemie, who leaſt dreamt of it. In the morning, two houres before day, there went forth at the port towards the ſea, ſix captaines with three hundred men, being choſen out of all the nations, and hee himſelfe followed with the chiefe of all his men, leauing ſome behind to gard the fort: of thoſe that he led hee H commaunded ſome to remaine in the rereward, with certaine captaines, and to kill all them that ſhould disband. He commaunded the foreward to goe directly to the Baſſa and Draguts tents, he himſelfe chuſing to aſſaile the great tent, where there was a great corps de gard. With this order they ſallied forth with great reſolution, ſome marching towards the Generals tent, and ſome towards the other: They paſt three trenches valiantly, to come vnto the tents, and Sandy defeated the corps de gard, where making a great ſlaughter, he put all into confuſion: but hee found himſelfe ſuddenly abandoned by his men, meaning to aduance, not any one remaining with him but Marotto, the Sergeant Major, and captaine Peruccio of Nizza, of the which Marotto was ſoone after wounded and taken priſoner, and yet he fighting ſtill with the enemies, being followed I by Peruccio, who had offered to conduct him to the gallies, in the end hee freed himſelfe, and recouered a gallie, whereas hee neither found victuals nor clothes, being all wet:
wherefore he ſent a meſſenger vnto the fort, to will Iohn d'Alarcone, the Treaſurer, to ſend him clothes, and ſome prouiſion for the ſouldiers of the gallies, with ſome oares, to the end they might conduct him, by the chanell, into the fort, exhorting all them that were yet remaining to defend it ſafely.

The newes of their Generals life was ſome comfort to the captaines and ſouldiers, but they began preſently to deſpaire of all helpe, but by ſome accord with the enemie, hauing water but for two dayes drinke. There were many Chriſtians dyed in this ſallie, but moſt men of commaund, the reſt being either fled vnto the enemie, or got- K ten vnto the fort. The Treaſurer Alarcone went vnto Sandy with prouiſion, and yet they could not part that day, the gallies being battered continually by the Turkes artillerie.
They within the fort were ſo full of confuſion, as they knew not what to reſolue, and although there were ſome captaines which did incourage them to attend the Generalls returne, yet the feare of the greater part was ſuch, as they forced the reſt to yeeld, to another reſolution; and they had alreadie ſet vp a flag on Spinolas bulwarke, in token of a parley: whereunto the Turkes made aunſwer with the like ſigne. Whereupon three captaines with an Enſigne went vnto the campe: but the Turks ſeeing no flag of truce ſet vp in the gallies, as well as in the fort, Pialy commaunded that they ſhould aſſaile them both by land and ſea. Sandy being ſurpriſed with this vnexpected furie, he with captaine L Clement diſpoſed the ſouldiers as well as they could for their defence, finding in them a great willingneſſe and reſolution: but ſeeing afterwards that they made no ſhew of ho-ſtilitie in the fort, and that the Moores, Turkes, and Chriſtians ſeemed to bee vnited, they alſo ſought to eſcape, ſo many flying away, as Sandy had not aboue thirtie men remaining with him; at which time Dromux Arez, a renegado of Genoua, captaine of the Baſſaes Admirall, came vnto the gallies prow, who ſpake vnto Aluaro in Italian:
D. Aluaro de Sandy taken priſoner by the Turkes. My lord, you can no longer defend your ſelfe, fall not therefore into the hands of theſe baſe people, but yeeld your ſelfe, and chuſe a better partie: I will not yeeld my ſelfe to thee nor to any other, aunſwered Sandy, but I will goe with thee, if thou wilt promiſe to bring me vnto the Baſſa: The renegado promiſed him, and receiuing him into M a little boat, being ouer laden, it ſunke, and they were wet. Being then conducted to the Baſſaes tent, hee receiued him with honour, and diſcourſed much with him touching his defence: but he refuſing to accept of any offer vnworthie the name of a Chri-ſtian knight, was conducted to Conſtantinople, and preſented to the great Turke.

Sandy

A Sandy ſeeing the captaines which went forth to capitulate, he blamed them, foretelling them, that they ſhould not haue any thing obſerued, as it fell out: for hauing agreed, That all the officers ſhould come forth freely, with fiue and twentie ſouldiers in a companie, they were moſt of them put to the ſword, and the reſt taken priſoners, onely they had libertie which went forth to capitulate. The fort was ſpoyled, but the gaine was ſmall. The Generall Pialy hauing ſtayed there eight dayes with his fleet, he went and made a ſtately entrie at Tripoli; then returning home, he was forced by contrarie winds to ſtay in a port of Sicile neere to Sarragoſſe: where ſome Turkes, going to water, they receiued much loſſe by the horſemen which garded the coaſt. 1560

Fort at Gerbe taken by the Turkes.

B The next day Lewis Sahauedra went vnto the Baſſa with a ſafeconduct, touching the ranſome of priſoners, lamenting much the miſerie of thoſe noblemen he found there, and wondering at the ſmiling countenance wherewith Sandy entertained him, who ſhewed himſelfe like one that was neuer altered by the croſſes or ſmiles of fortune. The Baſſa gaue him good hope of ranſome; but the wind growing faire in the morning, he weighed anker, and went on his voyage. Comming to Conſtantinople, he entred in great triumph, cauſing the priſoners to be carried to his houſe: In which Aluaro de Sandy ſhewed againe his generous mind; for ſome ſhewing him a bathing houſe, a place appointed for many ſlaues, he refuſed to enter into it, letting the Baſſa vnderſtand, That it was no fit lodging for him: and the Turke (not without wonder at the greatneſſe of his mind) commaunded, that he ſhould haue chambers appointed for him. They were all preſented C with great ſolemnitie before the great Turke, who ſtood behind a window to ſee them, they all refuſing to accept any vnfitting conditions, that were offered them by the great men of the port. Sandy was carried to the tower of Marnero, whereas thoſe priſoners which once enter, doe neuer, or ſeldome, come forth. Sancho de Lieua Berlingheri, and others, were ſent to the tower of Pera.

Pialy Baſſa enters Conſtantinople in triumph.

After this great loſſe, new miſeries purſued ſome of them that eſcaped: for D. Lewis Oſorio, and the vicont of Cigale, being come into Sicile, hauing bought a Turkiſh gallie which had beene taken from Vluccialy the pyrat, a renegado of Calabria, it was taken from them by the Viceroy, in the port of Meſſina: Whereat theſe two captaines being D much moued, they meant to paſſe into Spaine, to complaine vnto the king, going in two of their veſſels; but they were ſet vpon by a gallie and two Turkiſh foiſts, and taken almoſt without any reſiſtance. Cigale was led to Conſtantinople, with Scipio his ſonne: the father dyed there, and the ſonne denied Ieſus Chriſt, from whom came that famous Cigale, who was a Baſſa in our time. The Commaunder Guimerano hauing the reputation of a great mariner, was made Generall of the gallies of Sicile; but at his firſt going forth with ſeuen gallies, hee was incountred by Dragut, neere vnto the iſland of Lipari, hauing eleuen gallies well armed, who tooke him with his ſeuen gallies, and led him away. Among the priſoners was the biſhop of Cattanea, of the houſe of Caraccioli. 1561

E In the king of Spaines countries of the Netherlands, they of the reformed religion increaſing mightily, notwithſtanding the rigorous Edicts which had beene made by the Emperour, the Councell of Spaine thought it fit to bring in the Inquiſition to ſuppreſſe them, appointing certaine Inquiſitors of the Faith, who ſhould haue a care that no forbidden bookes ſhould bee read, nor kept in their houſes, and that no man ſhould diſpute againſt the Romiſh religion. But the king hauing promiſed, That hee would not charge his ſubiects with ſuch an intollerable yoke as the Inquiſition was, and the Inquiſitors finding that they could not by any meanes put it in practiſe, they ſought to bring it in by a couert meanes, vnder colour of making new biſhops in the countrey; to effect the which cardinall Granuelle ſent doctor Sonnius to Rome, as you may read more at large in F the Hiſtorie of the Netherlands.

New biſhops in the Netherlands

This yeare 1561 the king of Spaine made great inſtance at Rome, to haue libertie from the Pope, to diſpoſe of ſome of the tenthes of the Clergie of Spaine, which amounting to a great ſumme yearely, he meant to applie to the good of Chriſtendome, and eſpecially of his realmes of Spaine, arming a great number of gallies more than had bin accuſtomed to defend thoſe coaſts, being continually annoyed with multitudes of pirats, who had

King of Spaine ſeekes to prepare a great fleet with the reuenues of the Clergie.

1561 their retreats in the ports of Barbarie: And as many of the noblemen of Spaine ſhewed themſelues readie to contribute out of their owne reuenues, to ſo good and neceſſarie a worke, ſo the Pope did not refuſe to gratifie the king, but ſtayed his reſolution, for that he would not diſpleaſe the Prelates of Spaine, who did not ſeeme verie willing to beare this burthen; and the Pope deſired more at that time than any other (when as they ſought to draw the Councell againe together) not to giue them any great diſtaſt. G

1562 The warre beginning to grow hot in France, for matters of religion, the Proteſtants being in armes, after the maſſacre of Vaſſy, the French king craued aid from the Pope and king of Spaine, who were verie willing to giue him the beſt ſuccours they could. The Pope, on the ſudden, could not ſend him aboue two thouſand foot, and two hundred harquebuſiers on horſebacke, vnder Fabritio Serbelloni, his nephew, Generall of his forces at Auignon: who finding himſelfe too weake for them of the Religion that were in that countrey, demaunded new ſuccours, and had two companies of lances ſent him: H

King of Spaine ſends ſuccours into France. but the Catholike king offered to ſed tenne thouſand foot, and 3000 horſe, of the which the French accepted 3000 Spaniards, and 3000 Italians; but they came late, after the battell of Dreux.

D. Carlo prince of Spaine grieuouſly ſicke. The prince D. Carlo, ſonne to the king of Spaine, appointed the ſole heire of ſo many realmes, playing at Alcala de Henares with ſome young youthes, his play-fellowes, hee fell vnfortunatly downe the ſtayres in the palace, where they ſtood playing: in which fall hee was ſo hurt in the head, as the Phyſitians diſpaired of his life. In this mourneſull accident the king referred his fatherly affection to the will of God, writing into all his realmes, That they ſhould with their deuout prayers procure the princes long life, if it were for the glorie of his diuine Maieſtie, and the good of his ſubiects. Some write, that hee was ſtrangely cured by the bodie of Saint Diego, who dyed ſome hundred yeares before, a religious man of the Order of Saint Francis, the which the king cauſed to bee brought into the princes preſence. This bodie was kept in a ſhrine of yron, which Henrie the fourth of that name, king of Caſtille, had cauſed to bee made, and layed in a chappell built in honour of him. This ſhrine being brought and opened in the kings preſence, they found, with great admiration, that the bodie was nothing corrupted, nor a haire diminiſhed, but breathing forth a ſweet ſauour: where cauſing the princes bodie, halfe dead, to be layed vpon it, he began preſently to amend, and within few dayes after recouered his perfect health. But euerie man hath free libertie to beleeue it, if he pleaſe. I K

This yeare, beſides the kings priuat ſorrow for the daungerous ſickneſſe of his ſonne, hee had a publicke diſcontent for the loſſe of ſome gallies, neere vnto the port of Herradura. D. Bernardin of Mendoſa, ſome call him Iohn, was Admirall of the fleet of Spaine, who was readie with two and thirtie gallies, well furniſhed, to make an attempt againſt the Moores; but they were ſurpriſed with a cruell ſtorme, and in the end three were ſwallowed vp in the ſea, of the which the Admirall was one, where Mendoſa was, and the reſt were driuen into the neere harbours verie much ſhaken: of the three there was not any liuing creature ſaued, and of the reſt there dyed verie many: ſo as ſome write, they loſt two thouſand perſons, others fiue thouſand. The which, with their former loſſe at Gerbe, was verie grieuous to the houſe of Mendoſa: for the ſame yeare Indico, brother to this Mendoſa the Admirall, ſailing from Genoua towards Spaine in a gallie, it was ſo toſt with contrarie winds, as the mariners not able to help themſelues, they were ſwallowed vp; ſo as Mendoſaes bodie could neuer be found, yet the bodie of the gallie, and of the reſt that were dead, were recouered.

Bernardin, or Iohn de Mendoſa drowned with ſome gallies. L

1563 25 The Prelats being aſſembled againe together this yeare 1563, they began to proſecute their ſeſſions, and it ended in December, hauing continued almoſt eighteene yeres,

Councell of Trent. but with many interruptions, not without the proteſtations of many princes and Chriſtian States, of ſome pretended nullities, as well in the manner of their proceeding, as in the ſubſtance of their decrees. But among all the queſtions, that of Precedence betwixt the kings of France and Spaine, was vrged by their embaſſadours with great vehemencie, and in the end it was ſent by the Fathers to Rome, to be decided by the Pope, and the Conſiſtorie. M

Theſe

A Theſe two great Princes hauing both at the Councell and in Rome, where they attended a definitiue ſentence, their partiſans that were affected, and others which diſcourſed without paſſion, many pertinent reaſons were produced on both ſides, both by word of mouth, and by writing: whereof for that it concernes this ſubiect, I will make a briefe repetition. 1563

26 Controuerſie betwixt the French and Spaniſh for precedencie.

The Spaniards ſaid, that take it how they would, were it for temporall or ſpiritual matters, Spaine was of greater dignitie than Fraunce, and that it was in a maner iudged by law, cuſtome, and the opinions and authoritie of the moſt learned, that the kings of Spaine ſhould haue the prerogatiue for their excellencie and nobilitie, and for their me-
B rits to mankinde, and eſpecially to the Church of Rome. Antiquitie (ſaid they) in theſe matters imports much, whereof Spaine retaines the vndoubted markes: for ſince the firſt peopling of the earth, the name of Spaine hath beene famous to the world, and preſerued in that nation ſince the time of great Hercules Oron, or his nereſt deſcendants which haue raigned there, and hath neuer beene extinguiſhed, whereas the name of the French is new. Markes of the antiquitie of Spaine.

The Spaniards by the conſent of all men, are deſcended from Tubal one of Iaphets children, which his poſteritie hath called Iuball, of whome the mountaine Iubalda, called by Geographers Idubeda, retaines the name: But the Celtes and Gaules to whome the French haue ſucceeded, or (to doe them more honour) with whom they are in a maner in-C corporated, haue their beginning from one Samoteus, who according to Beroſus was the younger Sonne of Tubal. The ſituation of Spaine ads to her dignity, it holding the firſt place in the Geographicall maps: but if the greatneſſe of the countrie giues power to kings, and that they are valued thereby, who knowes not but that Spaine is much greater than France, wherof the kings of Spaine doe yet hold a good part in Soueraigntie? It is, vnqueſtionable, that euer ſince there were kings of Spaine, their dominions haue beene larger then thoſe of France: it is apparent in the raigne of the Spaniſh Gothes, who did not onely hold at one time Spaine bounded by the Spaniſh ſeas, and the Pyrenee mountains, but alſo the country of Languedoc, vnto the riuer of Rhoſne, and that which is now of the realme of France beyond Garonne, and moreouer in Afrik a great part of the coun-
D trie: The greatneſſe of the empire of the king of Spaine at this day is different, who holding the beſt part of Europe, with many places in Afrik vpon the Mediterranean ſea haue diſcouered a fourth part of the world, vnknowne to the ancients, and therby inriched the reſt with temporall commodities, as it hath done that new world with ſpiritual bleſſings, cauſing thoſe barbarous nations to bee inſtructed in the knowledge of God. To which new regions the monarchies of the auncients cannot bee compared in greatneſſe, much leſſe the empire of Fraunce at any ſeaſon. And to increaſe their greatneſſe, wee may adde vnto theſe reuenues the rights which they haue gotten to the empire of Conſtantinople, not only as ſucceſſors to the earls of Flanders, but by cõtracts made with the Paleologues, expelled by the Turks, & in like maner to Ieruſalẽ, which euery one holds to be the chiefe
E in dignitie among al the Chriſtian realms. The gifts of nature are alſo verie conſiderable, where there is any queſtion of the preheminence of realms and countries; wherein Spain excels France without contradiction: for there is no Region in the world more temperate than Spaine, nor better indowed by nature, be it in fertillitie of the land, in bountie of the fruits, or in any commoditie it doth produce, and as for the men, they are actiue both of body and mind, induſtrious, warlike, and fit to commaund, as the world hath found by experience. Spaine hath beene alwaies knowne to be a nurſerie of good ſouldiers, and the mother of great Captaines, and wee need not doubt, but that Hanniball (who made the Romans to ſweat and tremble) if hee had any magnanimitie and courage, hee retained it from the inſtruction and breeding he had in Spaine in his youth. Spaine hath in former F times giuen vnto Rome a Traian, an Adrian, two Theodoſius, all emperours, valiant and tryumphant, with many holy and learned Popes, guiders of the church, among the which Damaſus was great and admirable. As for the Nobilitie of the kings of Spaine which raigne at this day, it is incomparable, for they be ſucceſſours to the kings of the Gothes, and allyed to them in bloud, and are as it were graft into the ſtockes of the famous families of the Baltes and Hamales. But to draw their Genealogie neerer and more perſonally;

Tubal father to the Spaniards.

Situation of Spaine.

Greatneſſe of the king of Spaines dominions.

Right of the kings of Spaine.

Felicitie of the land of Spaine.

Emperors and Popes, Spaniards.

Nobilitie of the kings of Spaine.

Authors

1563 Authours agree that they deſcend fromthe Merouingiens and Carlouingiens, the founders of the eſtate of the French, whereby it followes that they haue right vnto the realme of France, ſo as they cannot be taxed of fraud when as they ſhall ſeeke to ſettle themſelues there to aduaunce their monarchie. If you conſider their proweſſe and victories, wee haue no need to go beyond our owne age: for the emperor Charles the fift, king of Spaine, hath alone wonne more famous victories, than all the other princes of Europe. The French are witneſſes to their coſts, and that mightie and fearefull Germane Nation, which hee ſubdued in leſſe than tenne moneths, and brought all the Princes, Towns and ſtates of the Germane empire vnder his obedience: he repulſed the Ottomans forces both by Sea and land, and conquered the realme of Tunes in Afrik. But it is verie remarkable, that notwithſtanding any warre which Spaine hath endured ſince it was freed from the Romane yoake, being inuaded by the Gothes, Moores, Arabians, and other nations, yet the Spaniards haue alwaies preſerued their libertie, and retained their manners, their language, and their religion, and haue drawne others vnto it, with whome humane changes haue made them to liue and conuerſe. Seeing then by antiquitie, nobilitie, largeneſſe of dominions, power, victories, generous actions, and finally by all that may purchaſe greatneſſe and temporall dignitie to nations and their kings, Spaine is to bee preferred before all; it followes, that the firſt place is due to the kings of Spaine before all other Chriſtian kings, and by conſequence before him of France. But for that the queſtion of this precedence hath beene mooued in a generall Councell and diſputed before the Pope and the ſacred Senate, it is no leſſe requiſit to ſet down the teſtimonies which Spaine and her kings haue of the ſpirituall fauour of God in his Chatholike Church, wherein they ſhall bee found to exceed in graces, and ſpirituall gifts, the kings of France, and all other kings, and their realmes, as alſo in deuotion and merits to the Popes, and to the Sea of Rome, the onely iudge of this controuerſie. It is certaine that Ieſus Chriſt hauing finiſhed the worke of mans redemption, and aſcended into heauen, Spaine among all other Pagan nations was firſt aduertiſed of this great benefit; as alſo by ſignes and wonderfull prodigies, ſhee had the firſt feeling of his comming and birth: for the Spaniards had firſt of all this credit to ſee the Apoſtles perſonally among them, and to heare the Goſpell preached by them, and to beleeue, the which is confirmed by many graue and faithfull authours, and by the ancient and vndoubted traditions of the churches of Spain, ſaying that S. Iames had been ſent by the Apoſtles to the Spaniards, had preached among them, and made many diſciples, who returning to Ieruſalem, had led ſome with them, who aſſiſted at the third General Councell, (whereof mention is made in the fifteenth of the Acts of the Apoſtles) and had their voices there, this holy Apoſtle being preſident: who hauing beene put to death by Herod Agrippa, and his bodie caſt vnto the dogs, it was gathered vp by the ſaid diſciples, and tranſported miraculouſly into Spaine: and by their peaching infinit families had beene conuerted, where afterwards many receiued the Crowne of martyrdom, whoſe memorie is famous in the church: the authoritie whereof commaunds euerie man to beleeue that the virgin Mary being liuing, appeared to Saint Iames in the Citie of Saragoſſe before hee parted from Spaine, exhorting him to cauſe that church to be built, which is there dedicated to her, which is the moſt ancient of the Countrie, and it was not long before the Princes of the Apoſtles, S. Peter & S. Paul came into Spaine, where with an incredible zeale in a maner al the people were conuerted, vnto the Aſturies; wherof Torquatus the Aſturian, was one of the firſt to giue teſtimony of their conſtancie in the faith, for the which he was executed at Rome. The Prelates of Spain, were at the firſt coũcels, eſpecially at the firſt at Nice, wheras Ozius that famous biſhop of Cordoua ſigned the decrees thereof, before Nicaſius biſhop of Gaule: The church of Rome is beholding to this Ozius a Spaniard, for the donation made vnto it by the emperor Conſtantin, who had beene inſtructed by him in the catholike faith. After this ſacred general councell, there were many others held in Spain, of the which that of Illiberi in Granado is famous, wheras Helene the emperors mother was with her grand-child Conſtantin. But ſince there haue bin frequent Councels in that nation, namely in Toledo, during the Goths raigne, where the kings did aſſiſt, & ſhewed themſelues ready to execute their decrees. There is no contradiction, but the Spaine firſt inſtructed in the Goſpell.

Virgin Mary ſeene in Spaine.

Councels in Spaine.

A but the kings of Spaine were made Christians before them of France: the memorie of king Ricaredo is and shall for euer be honourable, who chased Arrianisme out of Spain, & did persecute heretikes, of which Catholike Prince the kings of Spaine which raigne at this day are true successors, for that they suffer not any one within their dominions to speake against the holie Catholike Apostolik and Romish church. To maintein the which without blemish vpon earth, there is nothing like in all the Christian gouernment to the inquisition of Spain, exceeding in holie seueritie and profitable rigour all the inquisitions of other kingdomes and estates. There the lawes and constitutions of Popes are receiued, reuerenced and practised, the which are not in France, whereas the Canon law is abrogated, and whereas they haue often resisted Popes and Councels, censuring their decrees, which are irreprehensible, vnder color of certain pretended liberties of the French church wherof their kings make themselues protectors to the preiudice of the sea of Rome. The first princes which opposed themselues against the spoiles of the Moores inuading Spain, abandoned by the defeat & death of king Roderike the last of the Gothes, haue been holy & wel beloued of God, wherof there are most autentik signs in many places. To D. Garcia Ximenes first king of Sobrarbre, the deliuerer of Spain, was giuen frō heauen for his arms ared crosse vpō a green tree in a field argēt. D. Inigo Arista one of his successors, by the like fauor receiued a crosse argēt in a field Azure. Many miracles are reported to haue hapned at the Christenings of kings of Spain. Some of thē haue cured the kings euil, & many haue expelled diuels. In the citie of Leon, is kept a holy standard brought from heauen by S. Isidorus, one of the Patrons & protectors of Spain, in the which there is painted a bishop on horseback, holding in one hand a crosse, & in the other a sword, vnder which the kings and catholike princes of Spain fighting against the Moores, haue obtained many victories. By the constancy of the kings of Spaine, especially of them of Castille, who haue neuer varied in religion, since king Ricaredo aboue mentioned, they haue had the honor to root the Moores out of Spaine, & to clense the countrie of those blaspheming Iewes. In acknowledgement of which graces, they haue alwaies freely giuen the first fruits of the conquests and glorious victories which they haue obtained against Infidels to Popes and churches, building more goodly abbies, Cathedrall churches, Monasteries and Colledges, than any countrie in the world, and giuing them large indowments; wherof that of Toledo is a strange president, for the archbishop hath aboue 300000 ducats of yearely rent, besides that which concerns the church & chapter, & the rich dignities & Prebends, the reuenues of which archbishoprick exceed the ordinarie of many kings. In Spain, the Ieronimitans haue had their beginning, with the order de la merced, of the redemption of captiues, & many other orders of holy knights, which haue been a terror to the Moores and Infidels. But aboue al, the Iesuits are a worthie brood of Spaine, couragious defenders, & aduācers of the Catholik Apostolike and Romish religion cherished by the kings of Spaine, in fauor of the holy Sea, and continually entertained by them, & sent into all the parts of the world, to make war with their spiritual armes, whilest that they did valiantly, with their materiall armes fight against infidels, & root out heretiks: for which good offices, they do rightly carry the name of Catholike, the which is much more excellent than that of most Christiā which the French kings vse, for sectaries, & they that are straied from the church dare boldly cal themselues Christians, but not Catholiks; the which were absurd for that this appellation is not proper but to those that are of the true familie of Iesus Christ, euer distinguished by this name of Catholik, receiuing no other superlatiue note, and therfore of greater dignity, the which hath been confirmed in the house of Castille & Leon, since the king D. Alfonso the first, who raigned in the yere of our Lord 737 for a marke of their piety & merits. By the which they are both by law and priuiledge from the Pope worthily aduanced to the first seats among Christian kings, and therefore to be preferred before them of France, in all assemblies, both spirituall and temporall.

Richaredo a Catholike king.

Inquisition of Spaine.

Kings of Spaine Saints.

Armes from heauen.

Church of Toledo rich.

Iesuits first bred in Spaine.

Name of Catholike.

Against these reasons the French and their partisans mainteined, that the French king shold haue the precedency, not only for that they had been long in possession, but also by right, hauing wel deserued it, and for many reasons answering those which the Spaniards had obiected. The embassādors of Frāce complained much that the fathers of the Councel had done wrōg vnto their king, in admitting of this action, althogh they had surceased, and Preiudice done to the kings of France by the Councell.

1563 and would not decide it, the which they ſhould haue reiected, hauing alſo allowed them of Spaine to ſit alone out of ranke, by way of prouiſion, vntill that the Pope and the Conſiſtorie of Rome had determined, calling thereby in queſtion the precedence of the kings of France, ouer all other Chriſtian kings, the which had beene ſo many yeares practiſed, & confirmed by the Iudgement of Popes, and the teſtimony of the moſt famous Lawyers, and ancient writers. For Saint Gregory the Pope ſaith, that the king of France doth as much exceed al other kings, as a Royaltie doth a priuat man. Pope Stephen the third ſaith, that the French nation ſhines aboue all others. Baldus doth mainteine that the kings of France carrie the crown of liberty & glory aboue all other kings; That they are as the day ſtar in the middeſt of a cloud cõming from the South, which cannot be darkned. That the banners of France march firſt, ouer the which no other king can pretend any aduãtage of honor. Boniface of Vitalianis an Italian, Auditor de Rota, Suidas a Greek author, & many others haue left in writing, that whẽ they named a king ſimply, it was ment by him of frãce. Beſides, the ranks of Chriſtian kings is ſeen in the Regiſters of the court of Rome; and in thoſe which they cal prouincials in all the Cathedral churches, in which the king of Frãce precedes, & they of England & Spain are ſet after. That it was vnworthy after theſe holie & learned iudgements, to bring it again in queſtiõ: & they held it for an inſupportable iniurie to the kings of France, who in effect are not ſubiect to the Popes iudgement, nor to any other iuriſdiction in this matter, nor in any thing that cõcerns the rights, preheminences & prerogatiues of their crown, which they were to maintain by the means which God had giuen them: whereupon they made a ſharpe inuectiue in open Councel againſt the Pope, by reaſon of ſome former opinions he had declared at Rome: yea they did taxe him bitterly, for that he did chalenge vnto himſelf all power aboue the Councel, ſuffering nothing to be determined but what had bin allowed by him at Rome: That he ſhewed himſelfe too vnthankful & vniuſt to France and to her kings, who had alwaies bin benefactors to the holy Sea, ſeeking to put them from their lawful rank; and cruel to all Chriſtian people, in that he reiected the iuſt demands of all Catholike princes which was, a neceſſarie reformation of the maners of the Clergie, & of that which was corrupted in the diſcipline of the Church, & eſpecially of the abuſes of the court of Rome, That inſtead of bread of health, he gaue Scorpions, ſowing diſcord betwixt the kings of France and Spaine, vnder colour of theſe importune precedencies, tending to cauſe a pernitious warre in Chriſtendome: wherefore they ſaid, that reſeruing the reuerence that was due to the holy Sea of Rome, wherein France and her king meant to continue, they could not acknowledge Pius 4 for a common Father, nor true Pope, but for an vnlawfull vſurper of that dignitie; they proteſted nullity of the acts and decrees of the Councell, which were but repetitions of that which Pius had ſet down; declaring that they had cõmandement from the king their maſter to retire, with all the Prelates of France, leaſt by their preſence they ſhould ſeeme to allow of his attempts againſt the dignities of the kings of France, the priuiledges of their crowne, and the liberties of the French Church.

Teſtimonies of the prehemineuces of the kings of France

People an incorruptible Iudge.

The Partiſans of the French nation both at Rome and at Trent diſcourſed at large both by word & writing: ſeeking to ſatisfie the curious multitud (which it may be is the moſt incorrupted iudge in ſuch cõtrouerſies.) And for that the Spaniards wold bring their nation from Tubal, one of the neere deſcendents of Noah, they to pay them with the like money, laied for a foundation of the antiquitie of the French Nation, that the Gaules and the French were one nation, and one people, iſſued from Gomer, grand-child to Noah, and that this nation of the Gaules did extend from the riuer Tanais, vnto the Weſtern & Atlantik Ocean, in which circuit at this day is contained Spain, France, Germany, Polonia, Ruſſia, with the Gottike & Britiſh Ilands; and theſe people were generally called Gommerians & Gaules, a name taken from their progenitor, Gomer, who was alſo ſurnamed Gal, which ſignifies eſcaped from the waters, that is to ſay, the Deluge. But ſince to diſtinguiſh their troups & mẽbers, as they diſperſed thẽſelues, they took other names, as of Galates, Albins Theutõs, Germãs, Cimmeriãs, Cimbres, Cicãbrians french &c. drawn frõ their aduẽtures or the ſituatiõ of the regions where they lodged, or frõ the princes & captaines which did lead thẽ: yet the name of Gaules hath bin alwaies retained by them which haue held the country on this ſide, or on the weſt part of the riuer of Rhin, for a perpetual marke of their antiquity,

People comprehended vnder the Gaules.

A antiquitie, taken as is ſaid, from the deluge, that all the foreſaid people were in old time of the ſame maners, that is to ſay, free, open, warlike and conquerous, courteous to their friends, fierce to their enemies, vſing for a long time one language, taken at the diuiſion of Babell, which was the Teutonicke, more pure at that time than it hath beene ſince, by reaſon of the mixture of nations: And thereupon the Gaules which dwelt on this ſide, and the Germanes or Teutons, which remained on that ſide the Rhin called Brethren. That the inhabitants of Spaine at this day could not attaine to this antiquitie, although they ſay they are deſcended from Tuball the brother of Gomer, for Gomer Gal was the eldeſt of Iaphets children, as they are ſet downe 1563

B in the holy Scripture, and Tubal was the fift, who made another branch; the which came but late into Spaine, hauing taken another way. That one Iberius iſſuing from him, had giuen the name to Iberia Aſiatica, which at this day is the Countrie of the Georgians, from whence out of doubt the Iberians Spaniards are come, but long after the Deluge: And that on the other ſide ſome wandring troupes came into Spaine vnder the conduct of one Sepherad, whoſe deſcent the Rabins bring alſo from Gomer, of whom there is no other record, but that hauing croſt Afrike, which was held by the poſteritie of Cain, hee had entred by the ſtrait into Spaine, and that hee had called that continent by his name Sepheride, turned ſince into Speride, and in the end into Heſperide. Iberians Spaniards.

C Moreouer (ſaid they) that the names of theſe two ſtemmes or fathers of nations are verie conſiderable in this queſtion of antiquitie and nobilitie, being moſt certaine, that in all the names of theſe firſt men, there was ſomething myſteriall and propheticall, which gaue a note vnto poſteritie. But the word Gomer ſignifies a man perfect and finiſhed, and Tubal ſignifies ſeed, which begins to ſpring. There is an honourable mention made of Gomer, and his deſcendents in all authors, as giuen to religion and ſciences: And if wee ſhall beleeue Beroſus, as wee haue him at this day, and drawe the Gaules from one Samothes brother to Gomer, hee commends him to haue beene the wiſeſt man of his time: whereas there is no worthy mention of Tubal, to ground nobilitie on. When as the Scipture ſpeakes of the children of Tubal, it puts them in the rankes of

D mercers, pedlers, & horſe courſers, frequenting the Tyrians faires & markets. The Spaniards themſelues ſay that Tubal and his people were firſt ſeated in Iberia Aſiatica, from whence they without doubt came, which haue peopled the greateſt part of Spaine, who were therefore called by the Greekes and Latins Iberians, which is the true and moſt ancient name which we find of that region of Europe, which wee call Spaine, which name was broght from Aſia. Before this tranſmigration of the Spaniards or Iberians out of Aſia into Europe, the Gaules, who were alſo called Celtes, had run beyond the Pyrenees, and being as it were in poſſeſſion of Spaine, did this honour to the Iberians that were new come, to giue them paſſage through Gaule, and a dwelling beyond the mountains: and although that afterwards growing inſolent againſt their benefactors, there grew con- Ezechiel 27. Name of Spaine come out of Aſia

E tention and warre betwixt them, yet they were reconciled, and thence comes the name of Celtiberians, a people famous in the war, with whom the Romanes had to do in Spaine; the which were long ſubiect to Princes and Captaines, Gaules and Celtes, whereof the name of Brigus one of their ancient kings (which word is of the ancient Gaule) makes mention: and the names of Celtiques and Callaiques or Galliques haue beene for many ages preſerued among the people of Spain, whereas now the Countries of Portugal, and Gallicia are, for aſſured teſtimonies that the Celtes and Gaules had been ſeated in Spain before that euer the Iberians Aſiatikes had ſet footing there. As for the name of Franc or French, which their nation carries now, they were agreed that it was new, but with all they mainteined that it was moſt honourable, for Franc ſignifies fierce and valiant, free Name of Frace or French.

F from all ſeruitude, actiue, noble, and an honeſt man; and for that they had giuen it to the nation of the Gaules, not conquered by them, but rather freed from the tyrannie of the Romanes, and of the barbarous nations which did ſpoile it, it did nothing derogate from the antiquitie and nobilitie thereof, nor to the fraternitie which they haue alwaies had with the Gaules, ſeeing that both theſe names are ſtill in vſe, and common to the Nation, that of Gaule and Gaulois being much vſed in ſolemne acts both ſpirituall and ciuill.

It

1563 It is certaine that Gaules is as it were the generall name, and French a particular, ſo as the Spaniards in the ſearch of Antiquities cannot find any other, but that the French being ſomewhat diſperſed from the bodie of the Gaules, by the violence of the Romanes, who preſt them, and to whome they would not yeeld but by extremitie, were in the end vnited againe vnder one Crowne, whereas by their vertue they erected a realme in Gaule, of the French familie of the Merouingiens: And they may read in Hiſtories that the Romanes poſſeſſing Gaule, found alwaies them of that nation, dwelling vpon the bankes of Rhin and Meuſe, whereas now bee the Prouinces of Cleues, Iuliers, Gueldres, Holland, Zeland, Frizeland, and the neighbour Countries, knowne to all Authors by the name of Sicambrians, who were hard to mannage, alwaies contending for their libertie, vntill they had freed themſelues from the yoake and tyrannie of the Romanes, which Sicambrians of the Rhin did afterwards take the name of Frances or French, and haue imparted it to others: So as wee may by good prooſes conclude, that when as in the time of the emperour Valentinian, the Sicambrians French erected a realme in Gaule, that they were no new people, but of the ſame nation, whereof a number became more eminent than the reſt, not for any deſire to rule ouer them, but in hatred of the Romanes tyranny, and to repulſe the Bourgongnians, Gothes, and other barbarous Nations, which ſpoiled the Countrie, and held their brethren in ſeruitude.

Sicambrians are French people of Gaule.

Hauing freed them, and ioyning all in one bodie, they erected this French monarchy, which hath exceeded all others in dignitie and valour, adding to the name of Gaule that of Fraunce, in honour and remembrance of their deliuerers, who held the Scepter and Soueraignetie as due vnto them; but the Belges, Celtes, French, Acquitanes, and finally all the Gaules made the bodie of the eſtate, vnder one common bond of ciuill libertie, one honouring another by mutuall courteſies, for as the Gaules had reuerenced the French armes which had freed them from ſeruitude and oppreſſion, ſo the French for their part, had receiued with honour the ciuilitie, lawes, and religion of the Gaules, & made an equalitie of free right betwixt them.

Spaine a prey to the Barbarians.

The Spaniards haue no memorie to brag on, for as Pharamond made warre in the lower part of Gaule Belgike, Spaine was then a prey, and torne in peeces by diuers cruell and barbarous nations, hauing neither feare nor courage to reſiſt them. The Gothes beganne to ſhew themſelues on this ſide the Alpes, and to frame a royall eſtate in Gaule, making their ſeat at Tolouſa, but they held it not long, for the French ſent them ſoone beyond the Pyrenees, to contend with the Vandales, Alanes, & Sueues, who had already wholy ſubdued Spaine, and hauing diuided it among them, fell to iarre about their portions, at the comming of this Gotike nation, who had no cõformitie nor acquaintance with the Spaniards, as the Sicambrians had with the Gaules, but was a meer ſtranger & an enemie, ſeeking nothing but ſpoile. The Spaniards hauing beene conquered by the Gothes from the Romanes, and the aboue named nations, they fell out of one ſeruitude into another, which continued aboue one hundred and twentie yeares; and their condition was very miſerable from Wallia the Arrian king vnto Ricaredo the Chriſtian: for all that time was a meere conqueſt full of deſolations and ruines, without any forme of good gouernment, whileſt that the raigne of the French Gaules was ſetled in pietie and juſtice, and did proſper in armes, ſubduing the Burgongnians, forcing the remainder of the Gothes which were on this ſide the Pyrenee mountains, to goe to their companions in Spaine, and rooting out the reſt of the Romanes in Gaule. Ricaredo and ſome other kings following him held ſome better order in their gouernments, and made lawes grounded vpon naturall equitie & juſtice, the which are at this day in price: There paſt ſome raigns in this natiõ, in the which the princes being made Chriſtians, did willingly take counſell in Spirituall things, of the Clergie in national councels which were often held, and namely at Toledo.

In like maner the Clergie did reuerence the royall authority, and did freely receiue fit orders for their eſtate, in temporal things: & we muſt confeſſe that whileſt this harmony laſted, the Spaniards & their affairs did proſper: but when their Councels were conuerted into aſſemblies of the ſtates (where alſo the Clergie would euer haue moſt authoritie) when as inſtead of treating of the doctrine of Ieſus Chriſt, and the due diſpenſation of Abuſe of Councels in Spaine.

A of his heauenly bleſſings among Chriſtians, ſtudying to refute errors with knowledge and charitie, and to reclaime the manners and affections of men, to the rule of true Iuſtice. By holie Conſtitutions they did handle with contention the preheminences of Prelats in their dioceſſes and iuriſdictions, diſpoſed of the eſtate of Kings houſes, of the honours and offices thereof, and of the gard of their perſons, reconciled quarrelles among great men, and dealt in other ſuch worldly affaires, all vnder the authoritie of Councells, whereby all was corrupted, euery man forgetting his ranke, in the end they found proud and obſtinate Kings in that State, who in diſdaine of the impertinencie and exceſſe of ſuch paſtors (and for their cauſe of religion it ſelfe) abandoned themſelues to all vice and impietie, ſo as God to puniſh them gaue way to the Moores and Arabians, who entred into Spaine, and made ſuch a ſpoile, as both Clergie and Laie men, King and Subiects, Noblemen and Clownes, finally all degrees ſmarted many yeeres. That from theſe lamentable calamities the defenders of the Spaniards preheminence and of their kings, ſeeke I know not by what Art to draw glorie, ſaying with oſtentation, that their nation hath always preſerued (among the Gothes and Sarazins which haue ruled ouer them) their Language, Religion, and Libertie: wherein they ſhew themſelues verie vaine; for as for their libertie, the Hiſtories ſhew the contrarie, neither had they kept their religion pure: And as for their language, they of the French partie ſaid, that the Spaniards had vrged it to no purpoſe, yea if they would conſider it well, they ſhould find, that it gaue them no grace, but did rather blemiſh them. If they will ſay, that in Spaine they neither ſpeake the Gothike, Arabic, nor Africane tongues, they muſt alſo adde that they ſpeake not Spaniſh there. The French doe freely confeſſe that the true Languages of the Gaules and French are not much vſed now in Fraunce. Doe wee not know that either of them ſpake the Roman tongue in thoſe daies? for hauing beene long ſubiect to the Empire of Rome, they were forced to learne the tongue, and to vſe it by an expreſſe Lawe, as all other people did, which were ſubdued by this proud Nation.

1563

B Moores the ſcourge of Gods iuſtice.

Vanities of the Spaniards.

C

This Roman tongue was retained both by the Spaniards and French to this day, yet mingled and corrupted by other tongues: but there is one notable difference, which giues the aduantages to the French, which is, that although they haue ſome words and termes remaining of the Roman tongue, yet haue they very few that are meerly ſtrange,

D but are of the old Sicambrian, German and Teuton tongues, which is the common language of the French, and of all the auncient Gaules, whereas that which the Spaniards vſe at this day, conſiſts of the Roman, Gothike, Arabic, Mooriſh, and African tongues, a perpetuall note (vnleſſe they change it) that they haue ſerued the Gothes, Moores, Arabians, and Africans; the which is yet freſh: And therfore it appeeres that the Gaules being deliuered from the Roman yoake, by the French their Country men, hauing made one body, and one people, haue ſince preſerued their language better and more generouſly than the Spaniards: and (which doth more import) increaſing ſtill in power, dignitie and good gouernement, they haue alwayes maintained their eſtate and libertie, keeping any other nations from ſupplanting them either in al or in part, were hee Chriſtian or E Infidell, and therein they doe much exceed the Spaniards, who haue ſuffered themſelues to be controlled by the Infidell Moores aboue 800 yeeres.

And whereas they thinke to extoll Spaine by reaſon of her ſituation, aboue all the regions of Europe, for that ſay they, it repreſents the head in the Geographicall Maps: they anſwered, that it was a friuolous induction, grounded vpon the ſpeculation of children and idle perſons. That in trueth Spaine makes a chiefe part of Europe, but that proues not that it is the beſt part. If in the deſcription of Authors it be ſet before France, that giues it no preheminence: for by this reaſon Ireland ſhould be preferred before Italie and Spaine it ſelfe, for that Ptolomie and other Coſmographers after him ſet it firſt in Argument taken from the ſituation of Spain vaine.

F their geographicall deſcriptions.

And for that there was no contradiction but to the greateſt Princes greateſt honours are due, they were agreed vpon this point: But the French ſaied, that the honourable greatneſſe which conſiſts in dignitie muſt not be meaſured by the greatneſſe of his dominions, nor the multitude of his ſubiects, as the Spaniards would doe. That ſeeing they did confeſſe that the Realme of Ieruſalem, which did neuer equall the fourth part of 1563 Spaine, ſhould be preferred before all Chriſtian realmes if it were ſtanding, they ſhew plainely that this greatneſſe which giues preheminence, doth not conſiſt in quantitie of ground, but by pietie and iuſtice, by the valor & vertue of kings, and of their ſubiects, & by their bounty, they and their eſtates increaſe in reputation: In all which it is very apparent that France hath the better. But diſcourſing of this greatnes which conſiſts in quantitie, they ſaid that the number of realmes which they reckon within the continent of Spaine, is a vanitie and euident ſigne of the weakenes of that nation and of their ſhame; witneſſing that Spaine hath beene diſmembred into many parts, which hath not hapned in France, ſince it was a realme, in the which they might haue made a doſen better realms than thoſe of Arragon, Granado, Gallicia, and the Caſtilles, being reduced to their auncient limits, the other foreine eſtates, where they commaund, are no profitable acceſſaries to Spaine, as Sicilie, Naples, Sardynia, the Netherlands, no nor the Indies: Theſe members lie too farre off, and doe more trouble than aduaunce their kings affaires. Let the Spaniards then heape together all the realmes, duchies and counties which are of the iuriſdiction of Spaine in Europe, and let them adde thereunto Peru, and new Spaine, and for an increaſe let them bring their pretended rights to the Empire of Conſtantinople, and to the realme of Ieruſalem, France will alwayes ballance all this euen as a ſmall bullet of gold, and will equall in weight a greater maſſe of other mettall. This greatneſſe, ſaid they, of that Spaniſh Empire, is too new to be eſteemed, and too yong to preſume to goe before Fraunce, the which is venerable for his luſtie age, and hath maintained her Crowne aboue 1200 yeeres, with ſo great honor, as it were follie to repeat the attempts of her feudataries and vaſſals, the which ſhee hath happily calmed and quenched. This Spaniſh pride, glorious but of late, is too delicate to ſtand of it ſelfe, the which time will diſcouer. This arrogant preſumption is like vnto the gourd, which being growne in few nights, aduaunced it ſelfe before the Pine tree which had indured many a ſharpe winter, but it withered away with the firſt wind, the Pine ſtanding firme and immoueable.

Dignitie and greatneſſe of ſtates wherein it conſiſts.

The Spaniards Empire is a charge to it ſelf.

Spaine hurtfull to all Chriſtendome.

But as for the commodities which the Spaniards ſay that the greatneſſe of their kings Empire brings to the reſt of Chriſtendome, they anſwered, that it was quite contrarie, & that there was no nation in Chriſtendome but complained of the wrongs & iniuries they receiued from Spaine, neither was there any one pleaſed with any good was brought frō thence, vpon which tearmes France ſtood. The commodities, ſaid they, which people receiue one from another, proceed either from meere liberalitie, or by way of commerce and traffike, or elſe caſually, and as it were by reflection of that which a nation doth for it ſelfe, which notwithſtanding redounds to the profit of their neighbors. They know not in France, what the Spaniſh liberalitie is proceeding from charitie. The commerce and and traffike which theſe two nations haue together, doe without doubt incommodate France, and cauſe a dearth of victualls and other commodities, beſides it doth daily withdraw the labouring people & Artiſans (which are ſaid to be the riches of a country, being inticed with the Indian gold) which hath courſe in Spaine. And it were difficult to find a preſident of any deed or enterpriſe of the Spaniards, which hath turned to the profit or eaſe of the French. But what benefits and good offices haue not the Spaniards receiued of the French nation? ſince the time of the Gothes raigne in Spaine, theſe people being alwayes in the pawes of ſome tyrant, the French were forced to goe and deliuer them. Vpon this occaſion King Dagobert paſſed the Pyrenees, chaſed Suintilla, a diſordered and cruell man, from the royall throne, and ſetled Sizebut a good prince. Lewis 8, and his ſon S. Lewis, to the end they might not diuert the weake kings of Spaine from their warres againſt the Moores, they did charitably diſſemble the wrongs, and the affront which (ſaid they) was done vnto them by D. Berenguela, wife to D. Alphonſo 9 king of Leon, whenas ſhe ſeazed vpon the realme of Caſtille, the inheritance of her eldeſt ſiſter D. Blaunch mothkr of S. Lewis, cauſing her ſon D. Ferdinand to be inueſted, the French being buſied in greater affaires. They will ſay, they haue made warre againſt the Sarazins, the vſurpers of Spaine, when they threatned to inuade Fraunce, and the other regions of Europe; That they haue ſtaied them with their owne forces, and in the end expelled them: It is their cuſtome to bragge, but they cannot giue the lie to ſo many worthie Authors of all nations, and to their owne Annales which ſhew the contrarie. The French are not ſo ma-

French alwaies benefactors to the Spaniards.

litious

litious to deny that the Spaniards haue not caried themſelues valiantly in many incounters againſt the Moores, holding their country and houſes, but to ſay that they alone had ſubdued them, that were not fit. Let them for euer thanke the French, who haue giuen them the means: Let them acknowledge, that to attaine vnto their deliuerie, the French made the way, and brought the ladder, mounting with them, yea before them: whereunto they had neuer attained without the French. Did not Charles Martel prince and gouernor of the French defeat the barbarous Africans, whenas being maſters of all Spaine, they paſſed the Pyrenees, preſuming to deuoure France? Euery man knowes that in two memorable victories, which he obtained againſt them, the one in Touraine, the other in Languedoc, he ſlew aboue 400000, by which routs they were ſo weakened, as the petie Kings of Spaine, who had begunne to lay the weake foundations of the realmes of Ouiedo, Leon, Arragon, and Nauarre, in the mountaines, had ſome leiſure to fortifie themſelues. The ſame Martel, did not he keepe the country of Cattelogne with the forces of France, whereof he made a bulwarke againſt the Sarazins of Saragoſſe, Valencia, & thoſe that were lodged in the neere countrie of Nauarre? They would gladly deface the memorie of ſo many painfull voyages and worthy exploits done for them by the French during the raignes of Charlemaine and his ſonne Lewis, who did ſo long keep the Moores on this ſide the riuer of Ebro, that the Aſturians and Caſtillans might on their ſide aduance againſt the Barbarians, for that it may be they would bluſh at the report of theſe things whereof we cannot ſpeake but to their great diſhonour. They ſhould remember, & can not diſſemble it, that D. Alphonſo 2 of that name king of Leon and Ouiedo, ſurnamed the Chaſt, for that (although he were married) he would not haue any children, ſeeming to haue a deſire to recompence Charles the great for ſo many good offices which hee had receiued, inuited him to come into Spaine, vpon a voluntary promiſe, that he would cauſe him to be acknowledged by his ſubiects, for the lawfull ſucceſſor of his eſtates: then hauing lightly changed his opinion by the perſuaſion of his courtiers, hee did forget both Gods honor and his owne, making a league without any ſcruple with the Moores: whom hee did arme againſt the French, beeing vpon the way, for that ſaid the Spaniards they would not ſubiect themſelues to a ſtranger. This was the cauſe that the French armie receiued a notable rout in their retreat. The French being incenſed at this bad vſage, beganne to neglect the affaires of Spaine for a time, which gaue meanes to the Moores to increaſe their power, and to ſettle themſelues for many yeeres, God letting them know by this ſeuere and long puniſhment, how much he was diſpleaſed with their treacherie & ingratitude, the which ſhewed a manifeſt contempt of religion: Notwithſtanding the French did not forbeare to ſuccour the Spaniards many times at their great neede. Read the Annales of Spaine, you ſhal find, that King D. Alphonſo the firſt of that name in Caſtille, and the 6 of Leon (it is he which took Toledo from the Moores, and vnited it to Caſtille) was vertuouſly aſſiſted by great troups of French, led by the Earles Raymond of Burgundie, Henry of Bezanſon, and Raymond of Tolouſa, who purchaſed him the ſurname of Braue, by reaſon of many goodlie victories, obtained againſt the Moores attributed to this king, although that moſt were done by the French, and their commanders, to whom he was not vnthankfull. For in requitall of their vertues, he married all three to his owne daughters. Raymond of Bourgundie left vnto his ſonne D. Alphonſo Raymond the Royall ſcepter of Caſtille, by the right of his wife D. Vrraca: and Henrie of Bezanſon was the ſtemme of the royall houſe of Portugall. The ſame Spaniſh Hiſtories make mention, that at the ſiege of Saragoſſe, in the yeere of our Lord 1118, being held by the Moores, D. Alphonſo the ſeuenth, who called himſelfe Emperour of Spaine, for that he held all the Chriſtian Realmes in that country, had in his armie the earles William of Poitiers, Rotron of Perche, with them of Cominges and Bigorre, the vicount of Lauedan, the biſhop of Leſcar, with many other French noblemen and knights, by whoſe valour the citie was taken, & made the chiefe of Arragon, and many routs giuen vnto the Infidelles. It was not by the ſole forces of the Spaniards, although they were all vnited, that the famous battel of Muradal was won: it were too great ingratitude, or ſenſleſſe malice, not to acknowledge it, the which their owne Writers doe witneſſe, that in the army of king D. Alphonſo the fourth of that name in Caſtille, there were aboue 100000 ſtrãgers, & moſt French:

1563

Treacherie and ingratitude of the Spaniards to the French.

Generoſitie of the French to the Spaniards.

1563 and in like maner at the battell of Salado, at the ſiege of Algezires, and ſuch like actions, G it is moſt certaine that the Kings of Fraunce, and they of Nauarre, who then came from the French, neither ſpared men, nor treaſure, no not their perſons, witneſſe Philip of Eu-reux king of Nauarre, who died at Seuile or Xeres. They did confeſſe that the Spaniards predeceſſours had fought valiantly againſt the Moores, according to their meanes, but it was for themſelues, and their owne priuate commodities, and to return into their houſes, the which did not much concerne the profit of other chriſtian people. Whereas the French without any priuate deſigne, moued with the only zeale of religion at the ſimple perſuaſion of Popes, and at ſuch time as they did aſſiſt the Spaniards, haue enterprized moſt holy and difficult warres, againſt all the forces of the Eaſt, drawing vpon them the warrelike nations of the Turks, Arabians, Chaldeans, Egiptians, and others of Mahumets H ſect, from whom they took the city of Ieruſalem, all Paleſtina, and Syria towards the ſea, erecting a realme there, which they held and defended valiantly, to the good of all Chriſtendome, wherein the Spaniards cannot ſay that they gaue any aide; and yet they intitle themſelues Kings of Ieruſalem, and aſpire to the Empire of Conſtantinople, which eſtates haue coſt Fraunce ſo much bloud, ſo as they haue no reaſon to quit their rights, beeing grounded vpon a donation and inueſtiture of the Empire of Conſtantinople, made by Pope Leo the tenth to King Francis the firſt, and to his ſucceſſors, when theſe Potentates had enteruiew at Bolonia.

Enterpriſes of the French for the publike good of Chriſtendome

Experience doth teach vs daily, to what vſe the forces and treaſure of the Kings of Spaine are imployed, and of what import they be to the ſtate of Chriſtendome. The nauigation of the weſt Indies, and the poſſeſſion of thoſe great and vaſt deſarts ſeeme verie I honourable and fruitfull vnto them, and they make great oſtentation of the gold, ſiluer, and pearle that comes from thence. Theſe things, which are not worthie to bee put in the ranke of things to be wiſhed for by vertuous men, ſeeme to giue content, and to bring ſome eaſe to this common life, the which we paſſed more ſincerely, and it may bee more commodiouſly before the diſcouerie of theſe countries. In one reſpect they are verie auaileable for the Spaniards and their kings; for they are as it were ſinkes and common ſewers, to draine away and confine all their baniſhed men, bad husbands, bankrupts, infamous perſons, and finally all men that are hurtfull to their other ſubiects, for with ſuch men the weſt Indies are for the moſt part peopled. Moreouer, it is certaine, and it doth K plainely appeere to thoſe that conſider things rightly, that all other regions and ſtates of Europe, yea and Spaine it ſelfe are hurt in many reſpects: for ſince the plentie of Indian gold, al things are more deere and impaired. By this mettall which paſſeth currently with the armes of Spaine, Inuention and Induſtrie are made dull and ſleepie, and thereby Trueth and Honeſtie are corrupted. By this Indian gold, the Kings of Spaine, who were wont to entertaine friendſhip with other Potentates their neighbours, are now growne full of contentions. They entertaine many ſouldiers, and make continuall leuies, beeing neuer without quarrells, ſo as they and their ſubiects are in continuall troubles; as it happens alwayes to thoſe, who to afflict others, looſe their owne quiet and reſt. By this gold the Kings of Spaine preſumed to haue away made to a monarchie in Europe, and haue L ingaged themſelues in vnneceſſarie warres vpon diuers pretexts, which haue kept backe the Chriſtians forces, whileſt that the Turke got Hungarie, and made other lamentable breaches into Chriſtendome; and by this holie or curſed gold, Charles the fift Emperour or King of Spaine, made warre againſt the Germans, vnder colour of religion, though the true cauſe was to force them to ſuffer the Empire to be hereditarie in his houſe. Hee vanquiſhed them, but not without the aide of other Germans, corrupted with his gold, hee triumphed ouer all the princes, eſtates, and townes of the Empire, and thought hee had attained to the height of happineſſe; but behold Henrie the ſecond the French king, ſtaies him ſodainely, with the valour of his Armes, accompanied with Iuſtice, and ma-keth him deſiſt; hearing that the French army approached neere vnto the Rhine: the Germans receiued this good turne at that time of the French their friends, neighbours, and brethren, to recouer their libertie and the dignitie of the Empire. A worthie and freſh example, to ſhew that Fraunce precedes Spaine in qualities which giue ſplendor and dignitie to Kings; that is, in valour accompanied with iuſtice, and in a charitable Diſcommodities by the diſcouerie of the weſt Indies.

Germany freed frō ſeruitude by the French.

prote-

A protectiõ of the oppreſſed: & that true riches conſiſt in ſufficiẽt, which is always found in France. But who could forbeare to ſmile, to heare the ſcorching aire, & the drie & barren ground of Spaine preferred before the milde and temperate climate of Fraunce, whereas the Spaniards ſeek reliefe in all their neceſſities, as euerie man knowes: what good compariſon can be made of the men and fruits which Spain produceth with them of France? whereas ſo many religious, actiue and ready wits are bred, ſuch goodlie and nimble bodies, ſo curteous and pleaſing in behauior, of ſuch inuincible courages in all great and difficult enterpriſes? whereas ſo many great captaines were borne, who planted colonies throughout all the world? a nation which hath made the Turke to tremble, hearing only the name of Franc or French, which hath furniſhed ſo many Popes & ſoueraigne paſtors B to the Church, and ſo perfect, as the Spaniards cannot compare with them, be it in regard of their vertue or number: which hath produced ſo many great emperors, fathers of nations, & amplifiers of the Chriſtian religion, ſons to ſo many noble kings, & of ſo great antiquitie, as no others can attaine vnto it. Let the kings of Spaine glorie of the families of the Bilthes and Hamales raigning among the Gothes, fatall nations, which haue brought nothing but miſeries and ruines into Europe, where in the end they themſelues haue bin ruined and extinct, but that the Spaniards would now make them liue againe amongſt them: But that they are deſcended by iſſue male, frõ the Merouingians or Carlouingians as ſome of their feed chroniclers ſuggeſt, & they themſelues vant, ther is not any but they that ſpeak it, & their profes are very obſcure & vain, and ſubiect to many inuented fables.

C The princes of the familie of Auſtria, from whence the kings of Spaine at this day are deſcended, are iſſued (as the French ſaid) from the earles of Habsbourg, the which Earledome was a verie ſmall thing in that part of Germany, which is now called Ergow, amõg the Suiſſes in the yeere 1272. This place of Habsbourg, wherof they intitled themſelues earles, is now a ruinous caſtle, & hath often changed maſter. As ſome report, it was one Rapat or Ratboth which layd the firſt foundations, as alſo of the Abbey of Murre, where they find ſome charters, from the which they haue drawne their genealogie ſince this Rapat vnto Racul or Rodulphus the fift of that name among thoſe Earles, who was choſen emperour of the Romans, at ſuch time as there was a great ſchiſme among the Germans; & D they found that this houſe had bin firſt brought into credit by a biſhop of Strausbourgh, brother or neere kinſman to the ſaid Rapat. They alſo ſhewed by the teſtimony of ſome writers, that this Rodolphus Earle of Habsbourg was ſo poore, as he was forced for a time to ſerue as ſteward to Ottocaire the titularie king of Bohemia, and that afterwards ayming at the commodities of the Church, he did inſinuate himſelfe into the fauor of an archbiſhop of Mentz, whom he did accompany in a voyage which he made to Rome, and was ſo gratious with him, as at their return, finding the princes of Germany ſtrangely diuided into factions, for the imperiall dignitie which had bin void aboue 25 yeeres, this archbiſhop cauſed Rodulphus to be choſen K. of Romans, by his credit which was great, and by means of the princes contentions, who would not yield one vnto another, & by the ſame fauour he was eaſily confirmed by pope Gregory 10, who was then at Lion, at a generall E Councell. Rodulphus hauing attained to this dignitie, imployed himſelfe happily to pacifie the quarrels of Germany: and as he was politike, he neglected no occaſion to aduance his owne affaires, mannaging his good fortune in ſuch ſort, as he cauſed the duchies of Auſtria, Sueuia, Stiria, and Carinthia to fall into his houſe, with the realme of Bohemia for a ſeaſon, and the Landgrauiat of Alſacia, with other lands and fees of the Empire, the which fell void during the ſaid troubles, moſt of the which haue remained to his poſteritie. So by theſe vnexpected euents, and contrary to all mens expectations this houſe of Habsbourg grew famous, as God doth ſometimes raiſe the poore, and make of a Sheepheard a King, when he pleaſeth. There was ſome light (ſaied they) vnto that time of the F houſe and familie of Auſtria, iſſued without contradiction from the eſtates of Habsbourg, but whereas Writers ſeeke to draw their aunceſtors from the Princes of Auſtracia, of the French race of Merone; It is a meer vanitie & raſhnes for thẽ, to wander through the deſarts of theſe turbulent times, where there is no path, nor way to lead them to the knowledge of ſuch auntient beginnings. For the ground whereof, they ſuppoſe one Sigebert, (who it may be neuer was) frõ whom they would draw the families of the Erles of Habſ-

Beginning of the Kings of Spaine iſſued from the houſe of Auſtria.

1563 bourg and others: and they ſay that he was ſonne to Theodebert king of Auſtraſia, he that G was diſpoſſeſt of his eſtate, and ſlaine at the inſtigation of Queene Brunhalt, by Theodoric king of Burgondie, ſhe being grandmother to theſe 2 princes. That Theodebert and all his ſonnes being ſlaine, except Sigebert, who hauing eſcaped the maſſacre, was ſent into high Burgondie, beyond Mount Iura, where he begat ſonnes and daughters, and that his iſſue was diſperſed into diuers families of Germanie: but the French maintained that this pretended Sigebert was fained and fabulous, as doth appeare by the beſt French writers, who ſay that Brunhalt her ſelfe ſlue all the ſonnes of Theodebert, caſting her ſelfe a little one, being in his ſwathing cloths, againſt the ſtone, whoſe name was Merouee, Theodoric hir other grandchild being alſo poiſoned by her, & ſhe puniſhed by Clotaire king of France; hauing alſo rooted out the vnlawfull race of Theodoric, he vnited the realmes of Auſtraſia & Bur- H gondie to his crowne: afterwards hee gaue Auſtraſia with the title of a realme to his ſon Dagobert, who comming to that of France, inueſted his ſonne Sigebert, who dying king of Auſtraſia, left one onely ſonne called Dagobert in the garde of Grimoald Maior of his palace, who ſent his Pupil into Scotland, where hee cauſed him to bee made a monke, and ſoone after died, and then hee cauſed his owne ſonne Hildebert to be crowned king.
But the French to reuenge this diſloyaltie, brought an armie againſt him, ſlew Hildebert, and carried the father to Paris, where hee died in priſon. Since which Auſtraſia and Burgundy were gouerned by Maiors of the Palace or Viceroyes, vnto Pepin, who was crowned King of Fraunce, by reaſon of the idleneſſe of Childeric the laſt king of the I race of the Merouingians, not by fraud nor violent vſurpation, and much leſſe through the fauour, approbation, or counſell of any Pope, as ſome ſay, but by the election & con-ſent of the princes and eſtates of France, and therefore with a more iuſt title (if there be any compariſon) than that by the which the kings of Spaine doe now hold the realme of Nauarre: for it is a fundamentall right which neuer dies among the French, to haue libertie to chooſe their kings (prouided alwayes that they goe not out of the maſculine line of the blood royall) in caſe of ſome great incapacitie, or for ſome other important accident, which concernes the publique good, and preſeruation of that crowne & ſtate:
which nation among other good humours cannot endure a ſtrangers commaund, no not of their owne princes, when they ſeeke hatefull alliances elſewhere, and that contemning K the honors and ſweetnes of their owne country, they affect the manners and faſhions of ſtrangers: whereof Charles of France duke of Lorraine made trial, after the deceaſe of king Lewis the 5 his nephew, before whom Hugh Capet was preferred, being alſo a prince of the blood, but not ſo neere: whom the French reiected, for that he was wholie giuen to the faſhions of the Germans, which are much more tollerable to the French than thoſe of the Spaniards, who ſeek at this day to pretend a right vnder fained genealogies, to quar-rell for the crowne of France, if opportunitie ſerue: whereupon they did conclude, that if their anceſters could not indure a prince of France Germanized, they ſhould hardly e-uer accommodate themſelues with princes of the German race, but Spaniolized, yea transformed into meere Spaniards, both by nature and education, if they ſhould prooue L directly that the houſe of Auſtria come from the Earles of Habsbourg, were deſcended from the Merouingians and that pretended Sigebert. They added moreouer, that if the hiſtorians of the houſe of Auſtria could prooue, that their fained Sigebert had beene in the world, and could trace out his poſteritie directly to Philip King of Spaine now raign-ing, yet could they not make it appeare, that either he or Theodebert his father were capable of the crowne of France, by reaſon of the vncertainty of their blood, for that queen Brunhalt reported that Theodebert was a ſuppoſed childe, and that hee was not brother to Theoderic, nor ſon to king Childebert of the blood of France. Moreouer, they demanded of theſe curious ſearchers of the rights of the houſe of Auſtria, where theſe princes deſ-cending from the pretended Sigebert were hidden, whenas the ſcepter of the French was transferred into the familie of Charles Martell to Pepin, and then to Hugh Capet: why did they not ſhew themſelues then, or at the leaſt make ſome ſolemn proteſtation to preſerue their pretenſions & rights to the crown of France, if they thought they had any. For they might haue done it ſafely, eſpecially ſince that they of Habsbourg came vnto the empire and were growne mighty: but it is ſtrange that neuer any prince of that race opened his mouth,

A mouth,nor imploied any Chronicler to colour this imaginarie title,no not the emperor Charles 5,who wanted no ambition,ſeeking to lay hold of it by force only,and the right of cõqueſts.D.Philip his ſon is the firſt of his family that talks of this antiẽt Merouingian nobilitie,& hath begun to cauſe inſtructions to be drawne to entertain his greedie deſire to deuour France,imploying alſo with the like deſigne the aliances made by them of his race with the blood of France,by mariages,thinking thereby to maintain in the houſe of Spain ſome hereditary pretẽſions to the realm of France,if he had no other ſupport. The which in good termes of Law is called,to ſlaunder or to cauill, which is when one contends for that which is notorious : for euery man knows that the realm of France is no inheritance, but a ſucceſſion of the males, by reaſon of the blood,and that it reſpects not the women, 1563

B being contrary to the inueterate cuſtome of the French. Thus the French and their partiſans reſtrained the Antiquity & the Nobilitie of the kings of Spaine, & brought them to the houſe of Habsbourg in Germanie , ſaying notwithſtanding that they of Habsbourg and Auſtria haue great reaſon to commend the aliances contracted by marriages with the houſe of France : for if they haue drawne any luſtre from the Germane empire in Rodulphus the firſt , and other Emperours of their familie , they haue made it perfect by the marriages which ſome of them haue contracted with the Princeſſes of the blood of Fraunce : witneſſe the Emperour Maximilian , who hauing married the heire of Burgondie, had ſo great lands and poſſeſſions by her,beſides the companie of a noble ladie,as he made a waie thereby for Philip his ſon, and his deſcendants to attaine vnto their greatnes.

C But comming now to the chiefe points , which ſhould be decided in this queſtion propounded in a generall Councell,which are,the pietie and religion of people & their princes ; and their duties and merits to the church of God,and to his miniſters.The Spaniards (ſaid they of the French partie)tell wonders and miracles vpon the relation of their Writers, and their Spaniſh traditions : That if God hath giuen preheminence in theſe things to their nation, it ought to be allowed and confirmed among men , yea in eccleſiaſticall aſſemblies . They bragge that they firſt ſaw and heard the chiefe Apoſtles in their countrie, and that they had beleeued the Goſpel before all other Gentiles. Hereof they giue no better proofe than the French might doe, if they ſhould ſay that theſe great lights S. Iames, S.Peter, and S.Paul going into Spaine had paſſed through Gaule,going by land ra-

D ther than by ſea,deſiring to profit more,as it is likely, according to their dueties and commiſſions , and that in paſſing they had preached and made Churches. That by this probable reaſon the Gaules had beene inſtructed before the Spaniards, and had ſeene the Apoſtles firſt. As for the Apoſtles diſciples,it is moſt certaine that Gaule did ſee the firſt,& the moſt renowmed,according to good Authors, the which was Creſcentius diſciple to S. Paul : and if we ſhal beleeue traditions,Lazarus,who was raiſed from death by our Sauior, came & preached at Marſeille,Nathaniel in Berry,& Denis Areopagita at Paris. There haue bin councels in Gaule ſince the time of pope Victor, about 180 yeres after our ſauior Ieſus Chriſt,wheras that great doctor Irenæus,gouernor then of the church of Lion,did preſide. Councels in Gaule.

And there is an Epiſtle yet extant written before that time by the Martires of Vienna

E vpon Rhoſne,& from thẽ of Liõ,to cõfort them of Galacia & Phrigia in Aſia,during the perſecutions of the Emperor Commodus. As for the Councell Elibertin(that is Eliberris) that neither the time nor the place where it was held are not verie well quoted by them that haue written , and it is probable that it was not in Spaine , but rather at the foote of the Pyrenean mountaines , vpon the ſtrait of Gaule, where there was alſo an other good towne of the ſame name , reduced to a village in the time of Conſtantine the Great : the which was called in regard of the portion which hee had giuen to Conſtantine his eldeſt ſonne, in the which Gaule and Spaine was comprehended, to which two great prouinces this place confining was commodious: but admit (ſaid they) it had bin held in Spaine, it

F would no more aduãce the Spaniards cauſe, thã the councels of Arles that of the French, aſſembled in a maner at the ſame time , to compound the controuerſies of the Biſhops of Afrike,by the authority imperial of Conſtantine the great,in whoſe empire & long before, Gaule was full of goodly churches,at Arles,Vienna,Lion,Autun,Treues,Angers,Poitiers,in Berry, Auuergne & elſewhere,which were furniſhed with learned & catholike Paſtors,famous by the writings of the learned that were neere that age, the which are come

vnto

1563 vnto vs, and that Synodes were as frequent then and ſome ages after in Gaule, and more then in Spaine, but they were all nationall, or called vpon ſome priuate ſubiects, where if they beleeue that the kings, Gothes, comming into Spaine did aſſiſt, we may beleeue that the kings of France haue done the like in their country. But to maintaine as the Spaniards doe, that the kings of the Gothes raigning in Spaine, were Chriſtians and Catholikes before them of France, there is no ground, vnleſſe they will ſay, that the Arrians were Catholikes and Chriſtians: with which vice all the Gothiſh kings in Spaine were infected vnto Ricarede, who was conuerted by the catholike Doctors, among which was Nigith of Narbona, and hee abiured Arrian hereſie, at the third Councell of Toledo in the yeere 589, a whole age after the conuerſion of Clouis king of Fraunce to the true Chriſtian faith; in the which the kings of France, and the French in generall haue always perſiſted, vnleſſe they will impute to the whole nation the priuate blemiſhes of ſome, which will be found trifles in regard of thoſe which haue beene raiſed in Spaine, for the which it hath bin often troubled, as by the hereſie of Baſilides & Martiall mentioned in S. Cyprians epiſtles, wherof the one was biſhop of Legio Gemina, & the other of Emerita, & that of Priſcilian a Spaniard, which was condemned at the councell of Burdeaux, and him ſelfe with other his confederats executed at Mentz: and in like maner by that of Felix: the which ſhews that hereſies haue been leſſe countenanced in Gaule than in Spaine.

Kings chriſtned in France before them in Spaine.

Hereſies in Spaine.

But leauing theſe old things, ſeeing that prioritie of time doth not carrie it, being ſaid, That in the kingdome of heauen the firſt are many times found laſt; it is requiſit to know, how both Spaine and France haue gouerned themſelues for matter of beleefe and godlie works during theſe later raignes. It were not fitting for the French to contend of the holines of the kings of Spaine, who did riſe firſt after the inuaſion of the Moores; nor to diſpute if their Armes came from heauen, whether S. Iſidores ſtandard be true or a fiction, nor in like maner the graces and gifts which they maintaine to haue been in ſome of their princes, to cure diſeaſes, and to caſt out diuelles. For by the ſame grounds they beleeue that Charlemaigne & Lewis 9, kings of France, are Saints, and their feaſts are celebrated by the Church, that the flowers de Luce of gold, with the holie oyle are gifts from heauen, and that it is moſt apparent the Kings of Fraunce cure the Kings Euill, which things the French would not haue any man call in queſtion. Wherefore let them be allowed of eyther part without preiudice to their rank: but (ſaid the French) the Spaniards ſhould ſhew themſelues hollow hearted, if they ſhould deny that they had not been often retained in the true doctrine, and inſtructed in the exerciſes of Chriſtian religion by the Prelats, and Doctours which Fraunce hath ſent them from time to time, whileſt that the nobilitie of Spaine, and their Kings alſo, defiled themſelues with the too familiar conuerſation of the Moores, when they were not in armes, alying themſelues vnto them by marriages, as D. Alphonſo 5 of Leon did, who without ſcruple gaue his ſiſter D. Thereſia in mariage to Abdala the Moore king of Toledo: and an other Alphonſo 6, of that name at Leon, and 3 of Caſtille maried Caida a Moore. They wil not make any doubt, that by the diligence of D. Bernard Archb. of Toledo a Frenchman borne, and other clergy men of the ſame nation which did aſſiſt him, the exerciſes of the Romiſh ſeruices was brought into that Church, inſteed of the Muſarabic, which they had vſed in Spaine vnto the yeare 1086. Wherfore the exerciſe was called Gallican. And they muſt confeſſe, that for want of worthy men to gouerne the churches of Spaine, the ſaid D. Bernard was conſtrained to furniſh his biſhopriks of Braga, Ozma, Siguenza, S. Iames, Segouia, Palenza, Valencia, Zamorra & others, with Prelats which he had brought from France, in his returne from Rome. And that an other Bernard of Agen ſucceeded him in the archbiſhopricke of Toledo: all learned and holie paſtors, and ſo reputed in their owne Annales.

Marriages profane of the kings of Spaine.

Churches of Spaine gouerned by French Prelates.

The kings of Spaine haue built ſtore of monaſteries and churches, & do entertain many orders of religions, wherof the heads be in Spaine, & haue giuen the firſt fruits of their victories to popes as to Chriſts vicars. The French contradicted it not, ſeeing by the effect that the prelats & clergy men of Spain are very rich: but wil they ſay that they are poore in Fraunce, whereas they finde by a true computation, that of twelue parts of the lands they hold ſeuen, and receiue the reuenews, beſides the tithes, the deuotion of good men, and other caſualties? And as for the heads of religious orders, it is well knowne that the chiefe

Riches of the clergie of France

A chiefe and moſt auncient are in Fraunce much honoured, and that the kings of Fraunce, and other princes of that nation, haue not onely giuen the firſt fruits of their victories to Popes, but they haue giuen them whole realmes. 1564

Whereas the Spaniards brag that by the diſcouerie of the weſt Indies, they haue encreaſed the number of Chriſtians, and gotten a new world vnto the church: The French confeſſe, that doubtleſſe this deſigne in the beginning was royall, and that the reſpect wee owe vnto princes, and Chriſtian charitie doth bind euerie man to beleeue, that ſuch was the intention of the catholike kings D. Ferdinand and D. Iſabella, whenas they firſt gaue meanes to Chriſtopher Columbus to vndertake this voyage: but they maintained that there were neuer Commiſſions worſe executed, nor more malitiouſly diuerted than B thoſe by the Spaniards which haue beene ſent ſince to the Indies, and that in all their gouernement there is not any ſhew of good zeale nor of true religion. If they will ſay, there are many religious men of all Orders, and eſpecially Ieſuites, well entertained, they replied, there were many reapers, ſeeking harueſt to feed them, reaping where they had not ſowen: That ſo many religious men went not thither daily to inſtruct the Indians, but to gather the fat of the earth. That it was well knowne there were few naturall Indians left at the weſt Indies, and that the Spaniards, as well ſouldiers, as fermers, and officers of the mines, had ſlaine and murdered them by millions, and did ſeeke to root out the race of them, vſing them like bruite beaſts, and cauſing them to burſt vnder the burthen of an inſupportable labor, in ſearching into the bowells of the earth to find gold, &
C into the depths of the ſea to draw forth pearles. It is not the way to increaſe the number of Chriſtians, and to get a new world vnto the Church, to captiuat ſo many poore ſoules ſo tyrannouſly, and to take away their liues without reaſon, againſt all humanitie, by ſuch cruell, vile and miſerable ſeruices. That theſe things were not ſpoken at randon, nor inuented; for the cruelties vſed vpon theſe poore Indians, had beene verified by good informations made by the commaundement of the Emperor Charles the fift, vpon the complaints which had beene made by certaine good religious men, who were eie witneſſes of thoſe inſolencies, but yet there followed no great reformation: Finally, that great number which liue there in religious habits, vnder a colour of deuotion, be at leiſure enough, hauing no cure of ſoules, wherewith Spaine and other countries of that iuriſdiction on D this ſide the ſeas, are ouercharged, and cannot well entertaine them without the weſt Indies; and that is the chiefe mark of religion which they can ſhew in regard of thoſe Indies. For it is neither pietie nor charitie which drawes them thither, it is couetouſneſſe and an inſatiable greedines of gold, which entertaines this nauigation; and without doubt this traffike will ceaſe, the memorie of thoſe places, and the name of Ieſus Chriſt will be forgotten, if others than the Spaniards do not raiſe it, as ſoone as their mines be dried vp, as they are in ſome places, and therefore abandoned.

Exceſſe of the Spaniards at the Indies.

As for the Inquiſition which is an other great trophie of the Spaniards reputation with the Church and Chriſtendome, for that (ſay they) it keeps both great and ſmall in obedience: whereunto the French anſwered, that it is hatefull to the beſt Catholikes, &
E to all men of honour in Spaine, by the report of thoſe which haue frequented that countrey; for that it is iniurious vnto them, and by extreme rigour doth ſeeme to note them with infamie, making the world beleeue, that they are not Chriſtians, but by a ſeruile cõſtraint. Beſides, the abuſes which are daily committed, to fill the treaſorie, & to inrich the Inquiſitors, and their miniſters & ſpies, by fines and confiſcations, procured vpon fained & ſuppoſed crimes, make it vnprofitable in it chiefe duty, which is to maintaine the puritie of doctrine, & holines of maners; and therefore this Inquſition practiſed after the maner of Spaine, is abominable to euerie honeſt man. That many haue held this bridle neceſſarie in former ages in Spaine, where there was a great medley of nations, & of diuers
F religions, which made many to beleeue what they thought good of the diuinitie, yea vnto our fathers times: in the which (as it is related in the hiſtorie of the wars which were in Italie during the raigne of D. Ferdinand the fift, and of the emperour Charles his graundchilde) many of the Spaniards which were ſlaine in any incounters or battelles, beeing ſtripped, were found circumciſed: but it may bee the nation beeing now ſomewhat ſetled and reſolued in the religion of Ieſus Chriſt, it ſeemed high time to moderate this Inquiſition of Spaine iniurious and abuſiue.

ſharpe

1563 ſharpe rigour of the Inquiſition of Spaine, and that it ſhould be practiſed with more charitie and modeſtie, if it had no other end, but the glorie of God, and the health of mens ſoules. That in France the vſe is more free and ſincere, to edifie mens ſoules, and not to ruine them, and that the French had no need of ſuch ſpurres; for there was no nation that did more willingly obey the Sea of Rome. The kings of Fraunce haue alwayes ſhewed themſelues moſt deuout; they reuerence the Popes and their authoritie: the holie Decrees and Conſtitutions of lawfull Councells, are in great recommendation with them, reſeruing the dignitie of their eſtate and crowne, which bindes them to be protectors of their clergie, & of the immunities & liberties of the French church. It is an article of their duty, office, & roial charge. Theſe are old rights without diſpute, wherat the ſea of Rome was neuer offended, but when as it hath bin held by ſome, who forgetting all fatherly duty towards France, would adhere too much to the paſſions of their enemies: yet notwithſtanding the kings of France haue bin alwayes ready defenders of the church of Rome, & benefactors and deliuerers of Popes, and their ſole and ſafeſt refuge in all afflictions. And therefore they do rightly carry the ſurname of Moſt Chriſtian, ſince the time of king Clouis, yea of the eldeſt ſon of the catholike church, the which can not be diſputed but by inconſiderate raſhnes, nor ſuppreſt but by ignorance or malice. That the Spaniards did not defend his Holines predeceſſors from the inſolencies of the ſix gouernors, lieutenants to the emperors of Conſtantinople in Italie: nor from the violences of the Kings of Lombardy. It is not by any benefit of the kings of Spaine, that they are lords of the citie of Rome, & that they enioy ſo great a country, and ſo many faire townes. That they are not the forces of Spaine which haue chaſed the Sarazins out of Sicile and Calabria. That the goodlie realms of Naples & Sicile are not come vnto the church by the bounty of the kings of Spaine: but the French made them theſe rich preſents, and haue maintained thē in it. That it was a princeſſe of the blood of France, which gaue vnto the popes that which they hold in Prouence. That Spaniards hands are more accuſtomed to ranſome Popes & cardinals, and to ſpoile, burne & deſtroy the patrimony of S. Peter. Finally, the church of Rome muſt acknowledge all her bountie vpon earth to come from the French nation, and from their kings, & ground vpon theſe new & vndoubted titles, the rights & poſſeſſions of her lands and ſeigniories, & not colour them with a donation from Conſtantine, nor frō the fauour of ſuch a mediator as Ozius biſhop of Cordoua might be, the which haue no ground but vpon Spaniſh reports which are not autentike. By theſe benefits, by the continuall obedience, & by the ready ſuccors ſo often tried, the dignity and preheminence of the crowne of France ſhould be maintained at Rome, in the Councel, & in all places, ſo much the more iuſtly & neceſſarily, for that by long acquaintance, it hath bin made as it were eſſentiall & ſubſtantiall with the Popes dignitie, ſo as for the ſupport thereof, they haue no need but of the crown of France, to reſiſt the attempts of her bad children, which are frequent & dangerous. Moreouer, if they ſhould preſume to put the kings of Fraunce from their ranke, it could not be done but very difficultly, & by a forgetfull & very hatefull ingratitude, which doth not befit the holie Sea, & could not in their opinions fall into the Popes thought, who did then preſide. Concluding, that for the beſt and moſt wholeſome expedient for Chriſtendome, he ſhould containe himſelfe in his paſtorall office, which is, to iudge of cauſes concerning the faith, religion & the diſcipline of the church, & to abſtain (ſpecially during the general aſſembly) to enter into knowledge of a controuerſie, which is meerly temporal, in the which ſoueraigne princes doe not willingly acknowledge any other Iudge but their owne ſwords, & ſo leauing euery one in his poſſeſſion, to admoniſh the king of Spaine, to giue peace vnto the Church, and not to trouble the Councell, nor the publike peace.

Title of Moſt chriſtian.

Office of Popes wherein it conſiſts.

Queſtion of precedence vnde-cided at Rome.

Thus did the French maintaine the precedence of their king, with their naturall freedome and vehemencie againſt the pretenſions of the Spaniards & their partiſans: but the Pope to whom this controuerſie was ſent, would not take vpon him to iudge it, but left it vndecided, as it is at this day; which made the impatient ſpirits of the Spaniards to purſue this queſtion, & to maintaine their pretended rights of prioritie, by writing, wherof there are great volumes printed, with priuiledge from their kings, which the French doe not teouble themſelues to anſwer.

The

A The yeare following 1564 the Acts of the Councell were confirmed by the Pope at Rome, in the open Conſiſtorie of Cardinalles, yet againſt the aduice of ſome fathers, who held this confirmation to be needleſſe, and all Chriſtian princes were commaunded to cauſe the Decrees thereof to be publiſhed and obſerued. At theſe laſt Seſſions of the Councell, D. Claudio Ferdinand of Quignones Earle of Luna, was embaſſador for the king of Spaine, to whom by reaſon of this difference there was a place appointed apart, out of ranke, by prouiſion and without preiudice. 1564

This yeare D. Iohn de Benauides marſhall of Nauarre died, and at the ſame time there died alſo D. Francis of Nauarre, Biſhop of Valentia, who was brother to D. Pedro of Nauarre, the laſt marſhall of the bloud royall deſcended from D. Lyonell. The intereſt to this Nauarre.

B Realme remained in Queene Ioane of Albret, widow to Anthonie of Bourbon, by whom ſhe had two children, Henry and Katherine: In the meane time there were Viceroyes or Lieutenants for the King of Spaine to gouerne it, and about that time D. Gabrieli de la Cueua left the gouernement of Nauarre, to the Licentiat D. Michel Ruis of Otalora, Regent or Preſident of the Iuſtice in that Countrie, and paſſed into Italy to gouerne the eſtate of Milan, but D. Alphonſo of Cordoua and Velaſco Earle of Alcaudete, who had beene gouernor of Oran, and had defended againſt the Turkes which held Alger and the Moores, was ſent thither for viceroy, where at the end of 3 months he died, yet hee cauſed an aſſemblie of the eſtates to be held at Tudele, where it was concluded to make an Vniuerſitie in that towne, that the Nauarrois might haue meanes to ſtudie, and not goe

C out of the Country. After the Earles death D. Ioſeph of Gueuara came to gouerne the Realme of Nauarre. And in the yeare 1565 D. Lewis laſt earle of Lerin of the houſe of Beaumont, and Conſtable of Nauarre died, leauing one onely daughter and heire called D. Brianda de Beaumont, who was maried to D. Diego de Toledo, ſonne to D. Ferdinand Aluarez de Toledo duke of Alba; who in her right was Erle of Lerin, and Conſtable of Nauarre. D. Ieronima of Nauarre, widow to the marſhall of Benauides, being married againe to D. Martin of Cordoua and Velaſco, brother to the Earle of Alcaudette, ſhe brought him the title of Marqueſſe of Corces, and the eſtate of Marſhall of Nauarre. Vniuerſitie at Tudele in Nauarre.

The Pope hauing delayed, during the Councell, to ſatisfie the king of Spaines demaund, touching a ſubuention from his Clergie toward the maintenance of his war, the

D king ſent Lewis d'Auila great Commander of Alcantara to Rome, to ſolicite the diſpatch of this ſupplie from the Clergie, towards his preparation, which was graunted to be 400 thouſand ducats yearely for fiue yeares onely, giuing him hope, that if they might ſee anie good effects, they would continue to aſſiſt him. And the king hearing in what eſtate they ſtood for matters of religion in Fraunce and Flanders, fearing ſome alteration alſo in the ſtate of Milan, he cauſed this embaſſadour to demaund leaue of his Holines, that he might with more ſeueritie reſtraine the curioſity of his ſubiects, & their liberty in matters of faith, the which he might do, bringing the Inquiſitiō into thoſe prouinces, according to the cuſtome of Spaine. And for that he had ſeen what an alteration it had cauſed ſome yeeres before in the realme of Naples, and that being a remedy of great violence it

E could be eaſily applied, he ſought to attēpt it firſt in the ſtate of Milan, for that he doubted that as the Netherlands being ſo much altered, would make ſome great reſiſtance, ſo in like he did hope, that when they ſhould ſee it plāted in the duchie with good effect, they would be moued by their example. The Pope not onely ſeemed difficult to yeelde vnto this demaund, but the whole colledge of Cardinalles proteſted that it was a verie dangerous thing, not only for fear of ſome inſurrection in the beginning, but alſo that in proceſſe of time the miniſters of the office might conuert their extraordinarie authoritie to their owne profit, ſo as not onely a bad conſcience, but great wealth might bring anie man in danger both of life and honour. Notwithſtanding at the kings great inſtance the Clergie of Spain help the King with money.

F Pope did gratifie his Maieſtie, and preſently the duke of Seſſe gaue them of Milan to vnderſtand how deſirous the King and the Pope their countryman were, to ſee that important buſines of the faith firmely ſetled in that duchie. But the gouernor was not willingly heard by them, who ſeemed reſolute not to ſubiect themſelues to ſuch a ſeruitude, ſaying that they would ſend embaſſadors both to the Pope & King, whereupon the duke of Seſſa promiſed to write and diſſuade his Maieſtie, as he did. Inquiſition of Spaine attempted at Milan.

About

1563

Princes of Auſtrio goe into Spaine.

About the end of this yeare there came two ſonnes of Maximilian King of Romans into Italie, Rodulphus and Erneſtus beeing much deſired by their vncle in Spaine, that they might ſpend ſome yeares in that realme, and know the great men of his court, but aboue all to be bred vp with prince Charles, who did trouble his father, for that hauing much wit, hee could hardly be gouerned: ſome ſaying, that this froward diſpoſition, grew by reaſon of the hurt hee had in his head. Theſe two Princes beeing called by the Catholike King, and ſent willingly by the father for diuers reſpects, arriued in December (beeing accompanied by manie German Barons, and by the Cardinall of Auguſta) in the ſtate of Milan, being feaſted in many places.

The King of Spaine hauing beene diſquieted, for ſome alteration which had beene growing among the Moores, who ſince the taking of the realme of Granado, had liued diſperſed in thoſe countries, and were ſuſpected to haue intelligence with the Moores of Afrike and with the Turkes, and that they practiſed ſome notable rebellion: wherefore it was thought fit to diſarme them, and to forbid them to haue anie, vpon grieuous penalties, yea they that were become Chriſtians of that race, ſhewing themſelues not to be ſound in the Faith, retaining much of their firſt breeding. About the ſame time news came vnto the King, that Dragut had beene ſeene at Sea with ſome thirtie gallies and galeots, in the which hee had many ſouldiers with twentie peeces of batterie, whileſt on the other ſide the King of Alger went by land with tenne thouſand foot Moores, and ſome Turkes, and Renegados to beſiege Oran, the which they brought to great extremitie for want of victuals, ſo as they could not haue held out many dayes when as the kings fleet arriued to ſuccour them. The King hearing in what extremitie the beſieged were, wrote firſt into Italie, and into all parts of his dominions, where there were anie gallies, that being preſently furniſhed with victualls, men, and munition, they ſhould come to Barcelone, where he meant to make his fleet vnder the commaund of Iohn Andrew Doria, and then ſend it to ſuccour Oran. Doria and the kings other miniſters went from place to place to gather them togither, the viceroy of Naples ſent 25 gallies to Barcelone, vnder the conduct of Sancho de Leyua: Doria ſtaying ſomewhat long, the King feared hee could not come in time to ſuccour the beſieged, and therefore hee gaue the charge vnto D. Franciſco Inigo de Mendoſa, (others write that it was D. Iohn de Cordoua.) Doria arriuing, was much diſcontented, who hauing ſatisfied the King with good reaſons, went as a priuate man in this action, giuing the command of his gallies to his brother Pagano. There met in the port of Barcelone 34 gallies, and ſome of Spaine, that were repaired ſince the laſt ſhipwracke, ſo as in all they were aboue 40 which bent their courſe towards Afrike, whereat the Turkes and Moores were ſo amazed, as they preſently vpon ſight of them, ſet ſaile, and the armie at land fled to their houſes, abandoning their artillerie and baggage very baſely, ſo as in an inſtant they were freed from that great danger. Some write, that before the army arriued, they fed only vpon horſes and aſſes, ſo as they muſt either haue ſtarued, or yeeld vp a very important place. The Admirall purſued them in their flight, and took 25 galeots and 3 great Moriſco ſhips, forcing the reſt to caſt their ordnance ouer-board, that they might be the lighter to flie; yet they threatned to return the next yeare with forces from the great Turke.

Oran beſieged and well defended.

The catholike King had made great preparation of ſhipping to defend the coaſts of his owne kingdomes from the inuaſions and ſpoiles of Pirates, who hauing a retreat at Pegnon de Velez, might eaſily ſet vpon the ſhippes which paſſed from the ſtrait of Gibraltar into diuers other parts. This rocke ſtands almoſt in the middeſt of the gulph of Velez de la Gomera, which was ſometimes called Bedis or Bilis. And for that in former times Spaine was much annoyed thereby, for that from this rocke which is very high, and diuided by a ſmall diſtance from the land, they diſcouered the ſhippes a farre off at Sea, comming from Spaine, ſo as the Pirats, who had their galleots and frigots ready below, went forth with aduantage to meet them, fought with them, and ſpoiled them, King Ferdinand reſolued to fortifie that place, to reſtraine thoſe theeues which retired into the port of Velez, whither he ſent an army, where they built two caſtles vpon that rocke, putting into them ſufficient men and ordnaunce to gard them: The which the King of Fez ſeeking afterwards to recouer from the Spaniards, they were repulſed with great loſſe, and Pegnon de Velez how ſituated.

A and it was kept for the Spaniards, vntill that in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and twentie, it was betraied by a Spaniſh Souldier, who brought in the Moores to bee reuenged of his Captaine that had taken away his wife. 1564

King Philip to recouer this place, being verie prejudicall to their nauigation, cauſed a fleet to be made readie of about one hundred and 30 ſaile, among the which there were aboue forty ſhips of burthen, Galleots, and leſſer veſſels, with one great Galeon of Portugall: There were eightie and ſeuen gallies, that is, two and twenty of Spaine, eleuen of Naples, ten of Sicile, eight of Portugal, twelue of Doria, eight of Florẽce, three of Sauoy, ſixe of Marc Antonio Colonna, three of Malta, and foure of Marco Centurioni. There was Armie ſent againſt Tegnon de Wels.
B in them aboue ten thouſand Italians, Spaniards and Dutch, among the which were many Noblemen and Gentlemen voluntaries; the chiefe, beſides the General D. Garcia de Toledo, were Franciſco Baredo, who cõmanded the ſhips of Portugal, Sancho de Leyua thoſe of Naples, the Lord of Plombin the duke of Florence galleyes, Iohn Andrew Doria his owne, Marc Antonio Colonna, Chiappin Vitelli commander of the foot of Tuſcaine, Hanibal Altemps with his Germans, Fernando de Sylua and others.

They came not to the port of Malaga, which was appointed for the Rendez-vous, vntill the end of Auguſt, and then the army parted, meeting with the aides of Portugall: being all vnited together, they arriued neere vnto the port of Velez, where they had ſome trouble to vnſhip their ordnance and men: for the reſt they had no great difficultie, for the C Moores and Turkes fainted, when as they ſaw the artillerie (planted in two batteries) began to annoy them, the which would ſoone haue ruined that fort being but ſmall, & therfore they ſtudied rather how to fly than to defend themſelues. So, in the night the greateſt part of them eſcaped in barks; there remained about 25 who yeelded. The Moores came down in great troupes of Horſe, and did skirmiſh with the Chriſtians. The generall Toledo hauing taken this place, furniſhed it with all things neceſſarie, & left a garriſon in it of 800 Spaniards. After which they conſulted if they ſhould vndertake any thing elſe, this conqueſt ſeeming but ſmal in reſpect of the great charge; & they propounded that of Bugia, but conſidering that the ſeaſon of the yere was far ſpent, being in the middeſt of Septem. & that their men had endured much at ſea, eſpecially the galley-ſlaues of Tuſcaine, being
D vnacquainted with thoſe ſeas, & the Germans who were much waſted, ſo as they held it not fit to ingage themſelues in an action which would require time, whereupon they returned with their galleys to winter, and D. Garcia de Toledo went to be Viceroy of Sicile.

King Philip remembring that the emperor Charles his father had ſent Ferdinand Magellanes in the yere 1519, to diſcouer the Moluques and other Ilands thereabouts, ſome of which were more plainly diſcouered in the yere 1542, he gaue order this yeare to D. Lewis de Velaſco viceroy of Mexico, to make ready a great fleet, with the which entring into the Ilands of Philippina diſcouered South ſea, and ſayling towards the weſt, he ſhould diſcouer thoſe places better, whereof they had yet but a generall knowledge, which they held were inhabited by good ſenſible men. But for that the preparation was long, and the charge great, they parted not till to-
E wards Chriſtmaſſe. The fleet being commanded by Velaſco ſailed towards the Moluques, he had with him Michel of Legaſpo, who by order from the king ſhould be gouernour of the firſt place he ſhould diſcouer & hold worthie to leaue a garriſon and to plant a Colony there. They therefore found out Tendaia or Tendain, Punel, Bohol and Pauilogen, all which foure in honor of the king were called Philippine: they alſo ſet footing in the Iland of Luzon, which is bigger than all the reſt, being more towards the North, where the city of Maniglia is built, by the which the whole Iland is alſo called. It was not difficult for the Spaniards to become maſter of thoſe places, for that they of China hauing abandoned the gouernement which they had enioyed, there was not any Lord, but they that had moſt power, did tyrannize ouer the weaker. They found the Countrie fertill, and
F abounding in many things neceſſarie for the vſe of man; but it was a verie commodious dwelling for the great traffike of gold, ſilke, and other rich Merchandize, which they had with them of China, wherefore they planted diuers Colonies in a ſhort ſpace, finding the inhabitants inclined to ciuilitie, eſpecially in the Iſland of Luzon, and the citie of Manigila, Michel Lopes of Legaſpo, remained Gouernour of thoſe places, where hee dyed twelue yeares after, with the title of Adelantado.

1565 The king of Spain being aduertiſed of the great preparations the Turke made at Conſtantinople, to ſend a great fleet to Sea, gaue order for the fortifying of thoſe places which were moſt in danger. But Solymans intent was to attempt Malta, & it did behoue king Philip to defend & preſerue it, for the intereſt of his neer eſtates of Naples & Sicile, this Iland lying verie cõmodiouſly to annoy them, if the Turks ſhold take it and keep it as he might eaſily do, by the care and diligence of the kings of Algier & of Tripoli, mightie Pirates, & his tributaries, who are alwaies in armes, & ready to furniſh it vpon any ſudden occaſion; beſides his own means which are great: whereof hee might make there a good ſtaple, or ſtore-houſe for his warres againſt Europe.

Malta beſeeged by the Turkes.

Deſcription of Malta.

The Iland of Malta is a great and ſpacious rock, about 60 miles in compaſſe, lying betwixt Sicile & Afrik, from the which it is aboue 50 leagues or 200 miles diſtant, & from Sicile 60 miles, or 15 leagues, accompting 4 miles for a good league: towards the North, it looks to Cap Paſſaro in Sicile, and on the South to the towne of Tripoly in Barbarie. This rock is couered ſome ſix foot thick with earth and no more: it doth yeeld excellent fruits, feed ſome cattel, brings hony & cotton which is the inhabitants wealth; it hath many ports & landings, which are reaſonbly ſafe for their ordinary trade, but not to receiue any great fleets. The names of the chiefe are Marſamuſſet, Marſa Scala, Marſa Sirocco, Cala S. Georg, & Cala of S. Paul: Marſa in the Moors tõg ſignifies a port, Cala is a ſhore or ſtrond. The citie is almoſt in the middeſt of the Iland, carrying the name thereof, being inhabited by them of the countrie, but the aboad of the knights who are Lords thereof, is about the port of Marcamuſſet towards Sicile, wheras the ſea makes many ſmal gulphs leauing tongues of earth or rock betwixt both, where they are lodged and well fortified. Vpon one of theſe points which made a paſſage to one of the gulphes, was built a fort called S. Herme, which kept that entrie, & defended the Maltois gallies which lodge within the gulph: right: againſt it on the other ſide towards Sicile is the caſtel S. Ange, the which was ſtrong & wel furniſhed, cõmanding towards the Sea: vnder it was the Borogh (where the knights were lodged, and there make their aſſemblies) wel walled and flanked, to the which is ioyned an other Caſtell called S. Michael. Iohn de la Valette was at that time great maſter of the order, French by nation, a man of great courage & wiſdome, who being well aduertiſed of the furious tempeſt that threatned him, made all prouiſions neceſſarie in ſuch a danger: he ſent for all the knights of his order to come to Malta, he had recourſe to all Chriſtian Princes for aid; he cauſed the Borough and other places of the Iſland to be viewed and fortified; he bought armes, munition, victuals & al other things which hee held neceſſarie to defend a great ſeege. Wherein the Princes of Italy did aſſiſt him liberally, and the Viceroys of Naples and Sicile, had commandement from the king of Spaine to aide him: eſpecially D. Garcia de Toledo of Sicile had charge to keepe the gallies of Sicile and Naples in a readines, with whome ſhould ioyne the gallies of Spaine, the Popes, the duke of Florences, thoſe of Genoua, and the duke of Sauoys, and make a ſufficient power to hinder that ſeege.

Iohn de la Valette great maſter of Malta

The reaſon which made the Turks to vndertake this enterpriſe with ſo great preparation, was a ſurpriſe attempted by the great Maſter of Malta vpon the town of Malaoiſie in Morea, which the ancients called Epidaurum Limeria, but it ſucceeded not.

Turkes army at Malta.

The 28 of May, in the yere 1565 this great armie of enemies came to the Iland of Malta, about the port of Marſa Sirocco, being in number 145 gallies, 8 Maones, which are veſſels which do both ſaile and row, hauing 5 men to euerie oare, but they are not ſo big as the galleaſſes, many foiſts & galleots, with a number of ſhips and veſſels to carrie artilerie, horſes, victuals, pouder & al prouiſion for war; with which Draguts forces ſhold ioin and the gallies of Algier, of Vluccialy, and of all the Pyrats in the Mediterranean ſea, vpon the coaſts of Afrik, Aſia, the Ilands of the Archipelagus, and other places; all which were ſent for to come & ſerue there vnder the great Turks banner, vpon great penalties for thẽ that ſhold faile. Pialy Baſſa had the chief command at ſea, it is he who chaſed the Chriſtiãs from the Iland of Gerbe; and Muſtapha Baſſa was generall at land. At the ariual of this armie the great maſter had with him 500 kinghts of his order, men of reſolution and experience, & 8000 ſoldiers, as wel of the Iland, as others leuied in Italie, and ſome companies of Spaniards & French: whom he diſtributed into the citie, the caſtel of S. Ange, the forts

of

A of S.Herme,& S.Michel,the Borough & other places.D.Garcia being doubtful whether the Turk would ſet vpon Goulette by Tunis,ſent a ſupply of 700 old ſoldiers, Spaniards, thither, beſides the ordinarie garriſon that was entertained. At the Turks landing, which was ſomewhat difficult,for that the ports were ſmal,& the banks of the Ilands ſteep,they were incoũtred by ſome knights & ſoldiers,who ſlue many,but they retired ſoon,for their number was but ſmal; hauing in this skirmiſh loſt Nicholas Delbene,and two other valiant knights.But the Turks landed at this firſt time 30000 fighting men,ſome Ianiſaries, ſome Spachi, who ſerue cõmonly on horſeback,but at that time they had bin imbarked as foot-mẽ, hauing with thẽ great ſtore of ordnance for batterie, among which there were Baſi-
B liſks,whoſe bullets weied aboue 120 poũd.At their lãding they diſarmed al their gallies, except ſome 60 which they kept for their gards, and came & lodged before the fort of S. Herme,by the aduice of Pialy,who deſired to take the port of Marſamuſſet, the which was couered with this fort, that he might lodge his gallies which lay diſperſed in diuers parts of the Iland,for want of commodious ports,and therfore expoſed to many dangers. The camp being lodged & fortified with a rampar, & a fort of earth which they ſuddenly caſt vp,S.Herme and the other places were diligently viewed,the which coſt many Turks and Chriſtians their liues: In the end there was a batterie plãted againſt S.Herme,the which plaied furiouſly,& was often changed & renued and many aſſaults giuen & valiantly de-C fended. The commander Broille was within the place,but he was changed by reaſon of his age, & Monſerrat an Arragonois ſubſtituted in his place: Broille had behaued himſelf valiantly, yet the Turks had won a Rauelin which was without the fort, where they fortified,& filling the ditch which was betwixt both,they gaue raſh and deſperat aſſaults, not making any ſpare of their men.They caſt the yards of their gallies vpon the breaches to ſerue the Aſſailãts for bridges,they had deuiſes to couer their ſhot when they went to an aſſault,and they planted many ladders,but all was in vain for a time,for the defendants ouerthrew or burnt their engins;& repulſt them with great ſlaughter; ſo as ſeeing how difficult it was to take this fort, they were doubtfull whether they ſhould leaue this place, and diſcharge their rage vpon the reſt, into the which all the victuals, cattell and other commodities of the Iland were drawn,eſpecially into the citie,which was not farre from D the fort of S.Herme,where the inhabitants had fortified themſelues with ſome troups of horſe & foot,which had bin giuen them for their gard,cõmanded by the knight Meſquile a Portugal,who made many ſallies & attempts to diuert rhe Turks, who for their part repulſt them roughly into their town: for there was not a hamlet nor houſe there abouts, where they had not planted a gard to ſtop their courſes.Hauing ſpent many daies about the fort of S.Herme,Dragut arriues with a great troup of Turks,in 12 gallies & 3 galleaſſes,the which did much incourage the beſeegers,for he was in great credit among them. He did not allow of their beginning to make war by the ſiege of this ſtrong place,the cõqueſt wherof wold be lõg,& difficult,wiſhing they had firſt attẽpted the city,where there was more hope & more ſpoile, but it was now too late ſaid the Baſſaes, wherfore the bat-
E terie againſt Saint Herme was renued, & diuers new aſſaults giuen,the which were more obſtinately obtained than before,with the loſſe of 4500 turks,& Dragut himſelf was mortally wounded in the head with a ſtone which was driuen by a great ſhot,wherof he died ſoon after; which made the Turks retire. There was alſo come vnto the camp Aluc-Ali, whom wee cal Vluccialy, a renegado of Calabria, who afterwards was made king of Tripoly in the place of Dragut,a great ſoldier.During theſe attẽpts in the Iland of Malta, the great maſter foreſeeing that in time he might be vãquiſhed by the Turks force, which increaſed daily by new ſupplies,& contrariwiſe their men decreaſed by their continuall aſſaults and skirmiſhes, ſo as in the end their number wold grow verie ſmal,he ſent often to Meſſina,where they made ſlow preparatiõ to relieue thẽ,to acquaint D.Garcia with their F eſtate,& in what dãger they were to loſe S.Herme,& afterwards the whole Ilãd,beſeeching him to make haſt, but he neither anſuered his requeſt, nor the neceſſity which preſt thẽ,for D.Garcia beſides that he was tedious & graue after the maner of Spain,he eſteemd himſelf too weak to make any attempt that might auaile the beſieged,ſaying that he muſt gather forces together conſiſting of many peeces,according to the time & will of thẽ that did cõtribute, the which was true,wherfore the Turk hath a great aduantage ouer vs,ha-

1365

Dragut comes to Malta.

Death of Dragut.

1565 hauing alwaies a great nũber of veſſels armed belõging to himſelf, hauing no need to beg G or borrow them of any other, as we do, with great charge & loſſe of time, the which is ve-rie preiudiciall in warre; whereas the Turke hath the aſſignations of his treaſure certaine which may not be diuerted: and in this war of Malta, he had an extraordinarie aduantage, Roſa Sultana his beſt beloued, being dead a little before, ſhe had left a great maſſe of trea-ſure to be eſpecially imploied in war againſt the Chriſtians, for to helpe her ſonne. D. Garcia beſides his naturall ſlownes was growne into a conceit, that it was good to ſuffer the Turke to waſte & conſume themſelues in the Iland of Malta, about thoſe places which he held to be ſtrong and well furniſhed, and that hee ſhould come time enough to aſſaile them, when they were weakened with hunger, which did alreadie preſſe them, and with H other diſcõmodities which follow long ſieges. This was to make war by diſcourſe, but in the mean time he held his arms a croſſe, which is againſt the rules. With much preſſing & importunitie, he did hazard ſome gallies to put certain knights and ſouldiers, which came late, into the borogh of Malta, the which attempting often, ſome entred, and others were many times forced to return from whẽce they came. He alſo ſent to ſea to cut off the victuals that went to the Turks army. The two commanders were not very ſory for Dragut's death, whom they hated deadly: wherefore to haue the honor to haue taken the fort of S.
Herme without him, they doubled their battery with 32 Canons, with the which they ſo ruined the fort as the defendants lay open, & then preſently they gaue a generall aſſault
S. Herme taken by the Turkes. both by land and Sea, the which was ſo cruell and bloudie, as they were forced to yeeld. I Thus the fort of S. Herme was won by the Turkes, the which had coſt the liues of 10000 of their men, & 20000 canon ſhot, in diuers batteries and aſſaults. All that were found liuing in it, were put to the ſword, & among others, 30 valiãt knights, who had bin reſerued by the Ianiſaries to draw a ranſom from them, but others comming in murthered them cruelly: they found 24 canons & culuerins within the place, with ſome remainder of munition, which they imployed againſt the other forts. This loſſe was grecuous to the great Maſter, & to al thoſe that were with him, their number being much decreaſed; for they had loſt aboue 1500 of their beſt men, & among them many knights. Wherefore the reſt being grown mercileſſe, hearing what cruelties the Turkes had ſhewed to them of S. Her-me, they reſolued not to take any more to mercy, & ſo it was ordained by the great maſter, K who had reſolued to dy with al his company; but to ſel their liues dearly vnto the enemy, diſpairing in a maner of all ſuccours from Italie. But theſe deſperate men were ſomewhat reuiued by the vnexpected cõming of Hen. Pariſot the great maſters nephew, who broght him about 500 good ſoldiers, with ſome knights; they had bin 14 daies at ſea, before they could find an oportunity to recouer the Iland, the which they did in the end on the 29 of Iune, landing at a place called Pietra Negra, from whence they ſlipt without diſcouerie into the citie of Malta, and were from thence conducted with a conuoy to the Borough, & receiued there with great contentment & ioy. Some of this new ſupply were put into
S. Michels fort, which they thought would be preſently attempted. The loſſe of S. Herme being vnderſtood in Sicile, many made offer to D. Garcia to hazard themſelues to lead ſuc- L cours to Malta, through the Turks gards, the which could hardly be effected by ſea; for hauing taken S. Herme they were maſters of the entrie which went vnto the Bourg, vnder caſtel S. Ange. Iohn Andrew Doria was confident, that with ten gallies he wold land as many men as he could carry in ſome part of the Iland, & lead them himſelfe into the Bourg:
which D. Garcia would not ſuffer, for that hauing not any newes of the gallies of Spaine, (which was his beſt excuſe in his dilations) he wold not hazard thoſe he had, which were for the ſafetie of Sicile, & the realm of Naples. The Turks hauing clenſed the ruins of the Batteries made by the Turkes at Malta. fort which they had won, they lodged 300 Ianiſaries in it, & then they planted 60 canõs in ſix ſeueral batteries at la Grotte, Coraaſin, Mandraſſe, at Sancta Maria du Secours, at Sancta Marguerita, & elſewhere, making ſo wonderful a thunder, as they were heard into Si- M cile beyond Meſſina, aſſailing the Bourg, and fort of S. Michael both together, by ſea and land, but it pleaſed God ſo to ſtrengthen the beſeeged, as they had alwaies the better a-gainſt the Turks ſince the taking of Saint Herme, who in the end did not fight but with an obſtinate deſpaire, battering the houſes of the Bourg, more than to make a breach to enter: their pouder began alſo to waſt, for at their comming to this ſeege, they had loſt a great

A great ſhip at Sea, in the which were ſixe thouſand barrels of pouder, with ſix hundred Ia- 1565 niſaries, and they had ſent into the Leuant to haue new , with other things which they wanted. In the meane time Haſcen king of Alger, ſon to Barberouſſe, came vnto the campe with ſeuen great gallies, many foiſts and other veſſels, carrying many Turkes and other good Souldiers; for whoſe welcome Mattapha ſeeking to doe ſome extraordinarie exploit againſt the fort of Saint Michael towards the ſea, and againſt the Bourg by land, was repulſt, and loſt aboue fiue and twenty hundred Turkes, ſome were drowned with their barkes, and ſome were ſlaine with the canon and the ſword: at which charge there dyed alſo about two hundred Chriſtians, and many were hurt: yet the Turks fainted not
B for all this, but increaſed their batterie againſt the fort and Bourg, ruining the flankes & courtines, and leauing the beſeeged almoſt naked to the ſhot of the canon, from whome notwithſtanding they could not take any thing, although they did aſſaile them fiercely by all meanes and deuices, caſting bridges made of their maine yardss, ouer their ditches, & vpon their ruines, as they had done at Saint Herme, with many other inuentions, all which were ouerthrown by the Chriſtians, who couered themſelues as wel as they could, but they could not preuent the death of many of them: among others Henrie de la Valette Pariſot, the great maſters nephew was ſlaine: but there hapned an accident which did much fauour the beſeeged, the noiſe of the canon was ſo great, as they of the citie being ſome ſeuen miles off, heard it as eaſily as if it had beene neere them, which made them
C reſolue to ſallie forth with all the men they had able to carrie armes, both horſe and foot, and came and charged a gard of two thouſand Turkes, which was ſet towards the Sea: the which caſt forth ſo great a crie, as their companions which fought at the breaches being amazed, fearing that ſome great ſuccours were arriued and came to compaſſe them in, retired in diſorder, leauing aboue fifteen hundred of their men dead vpon the place, and they of the citie had meanes to retire themſelues before they were diſcouered. In the end newes came of the ſo much deſired and ſo long expected ſuccours, for D. Garcia, being aduertized that thirtie and ſeuen gallies were parted from Spaine, with ſouldiers, to come and ioine with him in Sicile: hee reſolued not to ſtay their comming, making his accompt that if they found him gone, they would ſtay in his place and aſſure Sicile and D Naples at all euents. Hee commaunded that all the Ships laden with Souldiers which attended in diuers ports of Italie, ſhould come to Meſſina, which was the Rendez-vous for the whole army, which being met, the queſtion was how they ſhould lead theſe ſuccors, wherin there appered many difficulties to men that were not aduenturous like vnto D. Garcia and his Spaniſh Councell. Hee had gathered together ſome twelue thouſand good ſouldiers, and fifteene hundred voluntaries of the nobilitie of Italie, who were deſirous to ſhew themſelues and to winne honor, but they wanted gallie ſlaues and mariners for ſuch a number of veſſels, whereof the Turkes had double the number: ſo as there was no meanes to aſſaile the enemies fleet at ſea; and to land men in any part of the Iſland, to make the bodie of an armie, and to giue battell vnto the E Turkes, they feared alſo in this Councell to doe it vnſeaſonably, not knowing what forces the Baſſaes had yet remaining, hauing vnderſtood that, as well at their firſt landing, as afterwards by thoſe that came from Barbarie, and the Pyrats which had ioyned with them, they had had vnder their enſignes aboue fortie thouſand men of Mahumets ſect. They feared alſo they ſhold want victuals in a ſmall, barren & ruinous Iland; and to carrie with them, there was alſo danger how to conuey it ſafely: and they fell into the difficultie to be forced to fight, hauing a conuoie, with diſaduantage, againſt a greater number of enemies.

Beeing in theſe dangerous ſpeculations, in the neceſſities of warre, which require ſpeed and hazard, there was a Spaniard called Andrew Salezar preſented himſelfe, hee
F was an old politike captaine, and could ſpeake the Turkiſh language, who offered to goe as a ſpie into the enemies Campe at Malta, and to bring them certaine newes. Whereupon hee was ſent with two gallies of Malta, which were then at Meſſina, who landed him in ſo commodious a place, as hee got into the Citie without any incounter, where haning remained ſome time, he went diſguiſed into the Turkes campe, & there liued among them ſome daies where he diſcouered the eſtate & neceſſities thereof, & then

Death of Pariſot.

1565 returned in ſafetie to D.Garcia, to whome hee reported that there was a great amaze- G ment among the Turkes by reaſon of thoſe ſuccours, that the Souldiers were tyred with thoſe troubleſome ſeeges, and that there were many ſicke men; that their numbers were not ſo great but tenne thouſand freſh men might winne an honourable victorie, and that they kept gard onely by night; for the Baſſaes fearing theſe ſuccours, they cauſed euerie night two great Squadrons of gallies to goe about the Iſland, the which going from the port of Marcâuſſet, one on the right hand, & the other on the left, they met on the backeſide thereof towards the weſt, and paſſing on made the rouud and came to the ſame port, where they remained, all the day after and ſtirred not. Vpon this report the fleet went forth, with an intent to land their men in the Iſland, and hauing recouered the citie, to H Succours come to the Iland of Malta. march in battell againſt the Turkes. John Andrew Doria was ſent before to giue aduice vnto the great maſter, but hauing contrarie windes the fleet was forced to put to Sea, and was driuen to the Iſland of Fauignana, aboue two hundred miles from Malta, and then it returned, toucht at Sicile, ſailed towards Goze, and in the end came to the aboue mentioned place of Pietra Negra, whereas the men were landed, and in their landing they layed vpon euerie ſouldiers backe a bag of biſcuit, weighing aboue fifty of our pounds, be-ſides their armes, with ſufficient ſhot and pouder, and ſo they marcht in three battailons, two of Spaniards vnder D. Aluaro de Sandy, and one of Italians, vnder Chiappin Vitelli, and all vnder the Marſhall generall of the field, Aſcanio de la Corne, towards the Citie of Malta, where after two reſtings, they arriued, the Maltois going forth to meet them with hor- I ſes, and cattell to eaſe them of the burthens which they did beare.

This done, D.Garcia returned into Sicile, and paſſing in view of the enemie, hee cauſed euerie one of his gallies to diſcharge three peeces, to buſie the Turkes, that they ſhould not goe to incounter the ſuccours, or to diuert them from giuing an aſſault to Saint Michaels fort, if they continued: wherein doubtleſſe hee erred, for if he had gone away and not giuen them this aduertiſement, they had not made any haſt to imbarke, and had vndoubtedly beene ſurpriſed, with great aduantage to the Chriſtians, and the gain of their artillerie and baggage, the which they ſhipt preſently vpon the diſcharge of D. Garcias canon. They had a will to retire, but it ſhould haue beene after a generall aſſault, being reſolued to giue it the ſame day they had this aduertiſement, or the next. The Baſſaes K were in a maner reſolued to fight with the ſuccors, not thinking them to be ſo ſtrong, but hauing ſent fiue hundred of their men forth to skirmiſh with them, they were almoſt all ſlaine, and the reſt of the armie fled to their gallies which they had drawne out of Marcamuſſet, and other places, and ioyned together towards Cale of Saint Paule with ſuch diſ-order, as many were drowned being preſt by the Chriſtians.

They retired towards the Leuant: where ſome ſaid, that D.Garcia loſt a goodly opportunitie, for hauing furniſhed his Gallies with new Souldiers, & being come to Siracuſa, he ſaw this Turkiſh armie retyre cloſe together, & neuer followed them. His excuſe was that he had not ſouldiers enough to fight with them, and therefore hee returned to Malta for his Spaniards, where hauing manned fiftie of his beſt gallies, hee directed his courſe after L the Turkes armie, hoping it would diuide it ſelfe, and that hee might get ſome bootie, but Retreat of the Turkes armie from Malta. he returned empty handed to Meſſina; ſending ſhipping to tranſport the Italians and the reſt of the Spaniards, which he had left at Malta, into their Countries, but ſome of them were caſt away in a tempeſt. Thus Malta was deliuered in time, for they that defended it were reduced to extremitie by a great diſorder which ſeemed to bee in the Councell of Spaine, ſo as the blame ought not to be attributed ſolely to D.Garcia de Toledo, if it had bin taken, for if he ſhewed himſelfe ſlack, and of a ſmall courage to ſuccour the beſeeged, and if hee were not faithfull in the diſpenſation of the treaſure, as ſome would accuſe him, the irreſolution of king Philips Councell, and the malice and croſſes of his enemies in Court, did bring Sicile, Naples, and all Italie in danger of ruine if the Turkes had depriued him of M this aſſured rampar. But God fortified the great Maſter, his knights and ſouldiers, and all the people of the Iland, arming them with patience, courage, and conſtancie, for by human, reaſon they had bin all loſt. They that did aduenture to come out of Sicile, & to enter into the Bourg, haue their ſhare in the honor, neither are they that broght the ſuccors to be excluded. The conſtancy of the great maſter, the reſolution of Pariſot his nephew,
the

A the vndaunted courage of Romegas, the brauerie of Barragan, a Nauarrois, Monſerrat, Miranda, and others which defended the breaches, the willingneſſe of Iohn Andrew Doria to ſuccour them, if they would haue ſuffered him, the reſolution and good conduct of Aſcanio de la Corne, of D. Aluaro de Sandy, of Chauppin Vitelli, and other captaines of the ſuccours, and their ſouldiers, are remarkable in this warre: the which continued foure monethes, from the middeſt of May to the middeſt of September, whereas three hundred and thirteene knights loſt their liues honourably, 3600 ſouldiers, and aboue ſix thouſand of the people, men, women, and children. The Turkes ſpent aboue foureſcore thouſand canon ſhot, and loſt at the leaſt thirtie thouſand men. The great 1565
B Maſter after the retreat of the remainder of their armie, gaue God thankes for this deliuerie, and in like manner the Princes and Eſtates which had aſſiſted him; but he was not without great apprehenſion of the returne of the Barbarians, fearing hee ſhould not be able to reſiſt them, by this former experience: ſo as it was often propounded to abandon the iſland, and not ſeeke obſtinatly to repaire and keepe thoſe lamentable ruines: for except the caſtle of Saint Ange, and the old citie, all the reſt was reduced to powder. But in theſe difficulties their generous reſolutions were comforted, incouraged, and aſſiſted, as well by the Pope, the duke of Florence, and other Princes and States of Italie, as by the king of Spaine, who among other prouiſions appointed three thouſand Pioners, which hee cauſed to bee leuied in Sicile and Naples, to repaire the ruined forts,
C and alſo to begin the new citie which was alreadie proiected, and had beene traced out vpon that peece of ground, at the point whereof had beene the fort of Saint Herme, and which diuides the port of Marcamuſſet from that of the gallies of the religion. This new towne was called Valette, to be a memorie to poſteritie of the vertue and valour of that great knight Iohn de la Valette, who liued not long after his worthie exploits in the defence of this ſiege: to whom there ſucceeded Peter de Monte, who was Admirall of the Order, and had behaued himſelfe valiantly.

Valette a new towne built in the iſland of Malta.

The gouernours of Prouinces, with the Nobilitie of the Netherlands, ſubiects to the king of Spaine, ſeeing the generall diſcontent of all men, tending to a lamentable confuſion, they beſought the ducheſſe of Parma, their Gouerneſſe, to preuent theſe inconue-
D niences, which grew from the crueltie of the Edicts and rigorous perſecutions, from the new biſhops, and feare of the Spaniſh Inquiſition: Whereupon they reſolued to ſend one into Spain, with ample inſtructions, to acquaint the king with all thoſe inconueniences, and the apparent daunger. The earle of Egmont had that charge, hee went into Spaine, he told the king, That mildneſſe was the beſt meanes to preuent this miſchiefe; and was ſent backe with hope and promiſes conformable to his inſtructions; which gaue great content to the Netherlanders at his returne, but the effect proued contrarie, and their hope was turned into deſpaire: For this yeare 1565, in December, the king ſignified his pleaſure to the Gouerneſſe, by his letters, what hee would haue obſerued in the Low Countries, touching matters of religion. He commaunded, That all Edicts made
E by the Emperour his father, or himſelfe, touching matters of religion, ſhould bee duely executed: That the Inquiſitors ſhould bee fauoured in their charges, for the good of religion, it being his pleaſure that the Inquiſition ſhould be put in practiſe: And laſtly, That ſhe ſhould aſſiſt the biſhops to haue the Councell of Trent ſetled: all which was contrarie to that which he had promiſed to the earle of Egmont, and to the expectation of the poore Netherlanders. And for that the Inquiſition was the cauſe of ſo great troubles, and the ſhedding of much innocent bloud, I haue thought it fitting the ſubiect of our hiſtorie, to relate it ſomewhat particularly, as it is now practiſed in Spaine, and its beginning.

Earle of Egmont ſent into Spaine.

D. Ferdinand and D. Iſabella, kings of Caſtille and Arragon, hauing wholly ſubdued
F the Moores and Saraſins of Spaine, and being aſſured of them, they ſuffered them to liue quietly vnder their obedience, paying a certaine tribute, liuing but a toyling life for them that were of a free condition, but yet tollerable, ſeeing they were not queſtioned with for their religion. But as all things in this world are inconſtant, and ſubiect to change, king Ferdinand was perſuaded to chuſe ſome men that might look into the ſuperſtitions and infidelities of theſe Moores, leaſt in the end the Iewiſh and Mahometane religion

Beginning and progreſſe of the Inquiſition.

1565 ligion ſhould ſuppreſſe the Catholike: whereupon hee imployed himſelfe with great G zeale to religion. Wherein he was ſo happie, as, in teſtimonie of his pietie, he was honoured by the Pope, as well for himſelfe, as for his ſucceſſors, kings of Spaine, with the title of Catholike, which Gregorie the third had in the yeare 1230 giuen vnto Alphonſo king of Caſtille. Whereupon many of the Moores, Saraſins, Africanes, and Iewes, were either forced to confeſſe Chriſt, or to abandon the countrey: ſo as many thouſands retired themſelues into Africke, and other places. But they that deſired rather to liue in Spaine with their wiues and children, did either willingly, or by conſtraint, quit their religion, and were baptiſed. But the Spaniards finding afterwards of what force the opinion of a diuinitie grauen in the hearts of men is, be it good or bad, true or falſe, and how H hardly it is rooted out, they being bred vp in it from father to ſonne, they did forbid the Iewes the exerciſe of their religion; and as they could not ſincerely forget, nor leaue the ſaid exerciſe, the Spaniard had recourſe to perſecutions (but with ſome forme of juſtice) to root them out: But king Ferdinands meaning was, to draw them to religion by inſtruction and doctrine, which ſhould conuict them in their errours. And as the Order of Iacobins firſt Inquiſitors. Saint Dominike was then newly inſtituted, and they were called Iacobins, being then in credit for their pietie, ſinceritie, learning, and zeale, before all other Monkes, Preachers, and Doctors, the charge of matters concerning conſcience and religion, was committed to them. And although there were ſome forme of Inquiſition before, yet was it confirmed by theſe Iacobins, who ſeeing that they could not conuert the Iewes neither I by prayers, perſuaſions, nor preaching, they tooke the materiall ſword in hand, to force them to the Chriſtian religion; holding, That any thing which is practiſed (eſpecially religion) although it be by force and conſtraint, turnes to a cuſtome, which growing aun-cient by ſucceſſion of time, is allowed by them that did not feele the firſt conſtraint and ri-gour. This ſword which the Iacobins vſed then, and continues to this day in Spaine, was the cauſe that they ſaid the Inquiſition began in the time of D. Ferdinand king of Arra-gon, for that this manner of reclaiming them was more rigorous than the firſt, againſt the heretikes, whom they called Marans. Thus the Iacobins were the authors of the Inquiſition, which the king allowed, and Pope Sextus confirmed. The king had reaſon to doe it, to root out the curſed doctrine of the Mahometans and Iewes, who committed great K impieties in Spaine.

Theſe Iacobins for the inſtitution of the ſaid Inquiſition, were called defenders of the Chriſtian religion. Their firſt Commiſſions extended but to Iewes and Mahometiſts, but ſince they extended their authoritie ouer all in generall, calling themſelues Inquiſitors of hereticks, to perſecute all them that did not punctually obſerue the orders of the Church of Rome. Whereby in the end they did purchaſe ſuch hatred, as king Ferdinand Iacobins looſe the title of Inquiſitors. was forced to ſet learned Clergie men in their places, who before had beene fauourers of this Inquiſition. But leaſt the Iacobins ſhould take this depriuation ill, the king gaue them authoritie to be preſent at the deliberations and judgements of the Inquiſitors of the Faith: ſo as the examination of ſuch as they call heretikes, is at this day taken by them. L
And although the ſaid Inquiſition were not ſo rigorouſly executed in thoſe dayes, as it is Inquiſition reiected by the Arragonois. now, yet in ſome parts of Spaine the Spaniards themſelues would not receiue it, for the Eſtates of Arragon oppoſed themſelues againſt it (yet reuerently) firſt by words and admonitions; but when he ſought to force them, they fell to armes, and would by no meanes receiue it, the Eſtates conſidering that it would be prejudiciall to the liberties and priuiledges of the realme: ſo as they did not receiue it without great force and effuſion of bloud of either ſide, as appeared by the death of M. Æpile, who being ſent with commiſſion from the king to ſettle it, was murthered in the Cathedrall church of Sarragoſſe, the chiefe citie of the realme of Arragon.

Inquiſitors what they be. Experience hath taught vs what men theſe Inquiſitors bee, who by their wickedneſſe M peruert all; againſt whom no lawes, priuiledges, ſtatutes, nor cuſtomes of the countrey can preuaile; proceeding in all things againſt the accuſed according to their paſſions, be it right or wrong, by all cruell executions vnworthie of Chriſtians, obſeruing no ordinarie courſe of juſtice, but preſuming to deale both with ciuile and criminall cauſes; citing ſometimes before them men of grauitie and authoritie, noblemen and gentlemen, for trifles

A trifles vnfit for children. When any one is accuſed, they ſend a Sergeant (whom they call a Familiar) to cite him to appeare perſonally before the holy office of the Inquiſition; whereunto he muſt of neceſſitie obey. If he denies that wherewith he is charged, they ſuffer him to goe to his houſe, but one of their flies followes him, who obſerues his countenance: if he finds by word or ſhew, that he hath any bad impreſſions, they declare it to the Inquiſitors, who make a new Proces. When as the accuſed appearing at the day appointed confeſſeth freely, or by intricate examinations (to make him forget his firſt aunſwers) they draw any thing from him, the accuſer, or flie, is hidden behind the hangings, to heare if he confeſſed the truth. If he be a towne dweller, they ſend him home to his
B houſe, if he be a ſtranger, they ſend him to priſon. Then they write vnto the curat or biſhop of the dioceſe where the accuſed is reſident, to the end (ſay they) they ſhould not raſhly lay hands vpon the ſheep of a ſtrange paſtor, ſending him word, that they haue one of his flocke in their priſons. 1565 Manner of the Inquiſitions proceeding.

He that hath a dwelling houſe in the towne, being ſent for againe, and committed to priſon, they demaund of him the keyes of his coffers and cloſet, to deliuer them to a publicke Notarie, who muſt take an inuentarie of all his mouables, writings, jewels, or what elſe is in his houſe: which inuentarie is deliuered into the hands of ſome rich neighbour, who keepes it vntill the end of the Proces, all the ſaid goods being forfeited to the king, if the accuſed be condemned: for their cuſtome is (although the ſentence be not capitall) to
C make a prey of his goods, declaring the accuſed to bee vnworthie to enjoy any of them. The accuſed being once in priſon, the keeper ſearcheth him if he haue no knife, papers, or any other thing, ſtripping him to his verie ſhirt. Eight daies after the Inquiſitors will the Gaoler to aduiſe the priſoner to demaund audience: whereupon the poore man intreats him to aske it for him, the which, after much preſſing, he promiſeth, and in the end, after ſome delayes, doth it. Being come into the Auditorie, he intreats them to diſpatch his Proces: then they admoniſh him to diſcharge his conſcience, and to acknowledge his faults, promiſing him all fauour and mercie, ſo as he will conuert. If hee confeſſeth, he is not freed therefore, and if he doth not confeſſe, they ſend him backe to priſon, and tell him that they will diſpatch his Proces. It is in vaine for him to demaund audience againe,
D neither will they tell him whereof he is accuſed, but he muſt diuine it, ſeeking to conuict him by his owne confeſſion. Then they bring him againe before the Inquiſitors, who tell him ſharply, That if you will not otherwiſe diſcharge your conſcience, you ſhal be deliuered into the Atturney generals hands, who will intreat you after another maner, by torture. But when the craftie admonitions of the Inquiſitors cannot ſhake his conſtancie, then they haue recourſe to another practiſe. They cauſe a croſſe and a booke which they call the Meſſall, to be brought, whereon they will haue the accuſed to ſweare: if he refuſeth, he is conuicted, if he ſweares, they inquire firſt of his countrey, kinſmen, profeſſion, companions, and other ſuch like things, from the which they draw great arguments: but they that are well aduiſed will anſwer nothing, if they haue not firſt ſeene the informati-
E ons whereof they are accuſed. In the end they giue it him in writing, to defend himſelfe by his Aduocate, who vndertakes his cauſe, after that his Proces is in queſtion, according to the cuſtome (the which is only to get money from the poore priſoner) on the third day after the Inquiſitors ſend for the priſoner with his Aduocate; then they commaund him to ſpeake the truth, ſeeing in that Auditorie they require nothing elſe: If he doth not confeſſe, then they ſend him backe to priſon. In the end they acquaint him with the depoſitions, but doe not name the witneſſes. But if any man will charge him with any thing, the priſoner, if he be well aduiſed, will inquire of the qualitie of the perſon which hath beene heard againſt him: When as the priſoner can diuine of his accuſer, and doth remember with whom he hath diſcourſed of religion, they grant a confrontation with him. They
F that are beſt aduiſed demaund a copie of the concluſion, to make anſwer thereunto by writing: but if there be two witneſſes, they judge to death, or otherwiſe: one witneſſe alone is ſufficient to put him to the racke.

The kings Atturney is his aduerſe partie, and the witneſſes be his accuſers. Two or three dayes after the priſoner hath beene called before the Iudges, his Aduocate comes and declares vnto him the chiefe points whereof he is accuſed, and doth propound vnto him

the

1565 the moſt pregnant reaſons, and the teſtimonie of his accuſers, to vnderſtand if they bee G true or not. He wils him to conſider what the witneſſes may be, to the end he may take exceptions againſt them; giuing him ſome daies of reſpite, to call to mind what his enemies may be, that haue witneſſed againſt him; if he cannot coniecture who they be, he is conuicted; if he doth name any, they doe not tell him they be they, but his Aduocate doth ſecretly aduertiſe him, and they aske him before the Inquiſitors, what he can reproach a-gainſt them. When as the priſoner will juſtifie himſelfe, and can proue that he hath alwayes beene a friend to Churchmen, that he hath obſerued all Popiſh ceremonies, that he hath frequented Maſſe, gone often to confeſsion, honoured the croſſe, and images, and that he is contrarie to that which his accuſers haue depoſed (the which he muſt com- H monly doe within nine dayes) his cauſe is much bettered; but no juſtification will ſerue if he wants authenticke witneſſes. Afterwards ſome Iacobine Friers, or Doctors of Di-uinitie, examine him of his faith, interpreting his aunſwers according to their owne fantaſies. If he hath ſaid well, in their opinions, they iudge him free, but not without loſſe and preiudice.

Proceeding to the torture. When they haue ſufficient matter, as they thinke, to condemne a priſoner to be extraordinarily rackt, they lead him into a caue through many doors, where he finds the judge with his aſsiſtants ſet, being all masked with blacke cypers, the executioner preſents him-ſelfe in a caſſocke of blacke linnen cloth (ſuch as the Spaniards weare the Thurſday before Eaſter, when they whip themſelues) with a blacke hood ouer his head and face, ha- I uing but two holes before his eies; being thus attired to terrifie the priſoner, as if the di-uell himſelfe ſhould torment him. Then doth the Iudge admoniſh him to tell the truth, proteſting, that if otherwiſe any member of his be broken through torture, the fault ſhold lye vpon himſelfe. Then they ſtrip the poore priſoner naked, hauing nothing couered but his priuie parts. After which they make a ſigne vnto the executioner, what torture hee ſhall ſuffer, the which he is often put to, ſometimes in one ſort, ſometimes in another, vntill that he confeſſe. If he continue conſtant, and confeſſe not any thing, they carrie him into a church, where there are Chirurgians, to put his joynts againe in their places, the which doth double his torments. The patient being in this miſerable eſtate, they wiſh him to confeſſe, where if they find of what religion he is, confeſsing himſelfe, there is a K Notarie hidden, to write his confeſsion; for they make him ſpeake with a lowd voyce, the prieſt telling him, that he hath power to deliuer him out of the Inquiſitors hands. Sometimes poore men, deceiued with theſe words, confeſſe things which make them puniſhable. Whereupon the Inquiſitors giue it out, That this priſoner hath confeſt much, and accuſed ſome of his companions, although there be no ſuch matter: wherewith ſome being terrified, come and accuſe themſelues, before they be called in queſtion, to reconcile themſelues to theſe Inquiſitors.

Proceeding of the Inquiſition to execution. Two daies before that ſentence is to be giuen, they ſend for the priſoners which are condemned to die, whom the Inquiſitors command to declare vnto them all their goods mouable & immouable, and that they conceale not any thing: to the end that they that are L in their houſes be not taxed of theft; or that they themſelues by the will of God do not fal dead to the ground, like to Ananias & Saphira, who fell down dead at the Apoſtles feet, for that they had cõcealed part of their goods. On the day of execution (the night before they that will being confeſſed) the officers of the Inquiſition bring them in the morning, the Sant benita, which is a kind of mandillion, whereon are painted great heads of diuels, and on their heads they weare a miter of paper, whereon is painted a man ſitting ouer a fire, Pompe at an execution of the Inquiſition. which a diuell doth kindle, & torment him. When they lead him to execution the ſchoole boyes go before ſinging Lettanies. Thoſe which are condemned to die, follow them with two Sergeants of the Inquiſition, & ſome Monks and Ieſuites, which exhort the people.
The chanons and prieſts of Cathedrall churches, abbots, priors, & other of the clergie, aſ- M ſiſt at theſe executions. The Aduocate fiſcall, & the Atturney generall, are on horſeback, with one that caries the banner of the Inquiſition diſplaied, being of crimſon damask richly imbrodered, hauing on the one ſide the name & arms of the Pope which confirmed the Inquiſition, & on the other the name and arms of D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, & on the top of the banner a ſiluer croſſe gilt. The Fathers Inquiſitors of the Faith, and all the officers

A officers are there alſo on horſebacke. This troupe is followed by a great multitude of people, which come running in great troupes from farre, to ſee this feaſt, vnto the field, where there are two ſcaffolds made, one for the accuſed, the other for the Inquiſitors; whereas one makes an oration in praiſe of the Inquiſition, and condemnation of hereſies: which being ended, they pronounce with a lowd voyce the ſentences of theſe poore condemned men in order, beginning with them that haue the mildeſt ſentence, and the eaſieſt puniſhment. After the publication of theſe ſentences, the Inquiſitor Major ſings the Collects of Oremus and Quæſumus, for them that are conuerted, praying God to ſhew them mercie, and that they may perſeuere in the Catholike Romiſh Faith vnto death. 1561

B This done, all the Clergie ſings Miſerere mei Deus, &c. which ended, the Inquiſitor Major ſings certaine verſes, and all the other ſinging men anſwer him in Muſicke. Then the Inquiſitor ſings abſolution, by the which the penitents are abſolued from the ſinne of hereſie, but not from the pecuniarie fine, the which is executed without mercie, yea againſt all right and equitie. This abſolution being giuen, the Inquiſitors cauſe them to ſweare vnto the people, That they will liue and die in the Faith, obedience, and religion of the Romiſh Church, and that they ſhall defend it and the Inquiſitors againſt all men, hazarding their bodies and goods againſt them that ſhall offer to reſiſt them: and moreouer, that they abjure all things contrarie to the doctrine, inſtitution, and ceremonies of their Church; and will defend with all their power the ſaid holy office, with all the offi-

C cers or Sergeants, calling them all to witneſſe, for aſſurance of the oath which hee had taken. If there be any Churchman among theſe conuerts, which hath deſerued leſſe puniſhment than death, he is degraded onely by words: but if hee be condemned to dye, then they degrade him as followeth. Firſt they put on him his prieſts habit, as if he were to ſay Maſſe, whereof he is preſently diſrobed, the biſhop (being in his Epiſcopall robes) vſing certaine ceremonies vpon euerie peece they take from him, with words directly contrarie to thoſe which they vſe in giuing the order of prieſthood: then they ſcrape the ends of his fingers, his lips, and his ſhauen crowne, with a peece of glaſſe, or a raſor, to take away the oyle wherewith he was annoynted at his conſecration. Theſe ceremonies are publikely done in the view of all the world. When the ſentences are pronounced, Degrading of a prieſt by the Inquiſition.

D and the prieſt degraded, the temporall officer receiueth them that ſhould die, according to the judgement of the Inquiſitors, and brings them to the place of execution, hauing Iacobines, Ieſuites, or others crying in their eares, to diuert them from the Faith which they haue confeſſed: but when as the Inquiſitors vnderſtand, that they are not truely penitent, they deliuer them into the hands of the ſecular power, beſeeching them to intreat them mildly, and not to breake any member, nor to ſhed one drop of bloud: and to the captiall ſentence they inſert: Seeing the paine we haue taken to conuert this man from his errours is vaine, we deliuer him into the hands of the temporall magiſtrat, to be puniſhed according vnto law and iuſtice, yet we intreat, in caſe that he acknowledge his errours, and turne, that they ſhew him mercie. But the officer proceeds, and cauſeth them to be burnt aliue, being tied to Hipocriſie of the Inquiſitors.

E ſtakes. Such as are not condemned to die, are carried backe to priſon, being conſtrained to looke vpon them that haue dyed conſtantly: but the next day they whip ſome through the ſtreets, ſome are condemned to the gallies, ſome to perpetuall priſon, or for a time, and others to carrie the Sant-benita during their liues, or for a ſeaſon: but if any of them fall into a relapſe, there is no more hope of mercie. And after this cruell maner the Inquiſition of Spaine is practiſed.

30 This yeare there was an enteruiew betwixt Charles the French king, and D. Iſabella his ſiſter, queene of Spaine. This princeſſe parting from Madrid, came by Areualo, Medina del Campo, and by Vailledolit, to Burgos; in all which places ſhe had ſumptuous and ſtately entries made her: then continuing her journey, ſhee entred into Nauarre by Enteruiew betwixt the French king & the queene of Spaine.

F Tudele, Valterre, Caparoſa, Tafalla, and ſo to Pampelone; and paſſing from thence to Huerta, Araguil, and Alſalua, the laſt place of Nauarre, ſhee came into Guipuſcoa, whereas the gentlemen and people did her all the honour they could; for ſhee found deputies well accompanied in nine ſeuerall places, to kiſſe her hand, and to make her thoſe offers which ſubiects are accuſtomed to doe vnto their Queene. The Duke of Anjou, her brother, went to Hernant to meet with her, and paſſing by

Saint

1565 Saint Sebaſtians, la Renterie, Ocarſon, Yrum, and Vranſu, they came vnto the riuer which diuides France from Spaine, where there were boats prepared, into the which the queen mother came to receiue her, and led her vnto king Charles, who attended her on the other banke, at the end of the bridge. After their imbracings and complements, they went all towards Bayone, with a great traine of lords and ladies of both realmes. The queene mother and her three children marcht in one ranke, ſhe holding the right hand, the queene of Spaine next her, the French king joyning to his ſiſter, and the duke of Anjou on the left hand. She ſtayed at Bayone ſeuenteene dayes, and at her returne the queene mother did accompanie her vnto the riuer, and the duke of Anjou vnto Segure. The cauſe of this enteruiew was knowne by many effects which followed: with whom the duke of Alba was ſent, with full authoritie from his maſter. This princeſſe of France hath left vnto king Philip her husband two daughters, D. Iſabella, and D. Catherina. The Spaniſh hiſtories ſay, that ſhe was brought in bed of her eldeſt daughter on the twelfth of Auguſt 1566, in the royall palace of Segouia, who was named D. Iſabella Clara Eugenia, and was baptiſed by the biſhop of Roſſano, the Popes Nuntio, by reaſon of a contention growne betwixt the Archbiſhop of S. Iames, and the biſhop of Segouia; the Archbiſhop ſaying, That hee ought to Chriſten the kings child, being chiefe chaplaine of the kings houſe, and that all that concerned the Spiritualtie in the kings palace, belonged to his charge, the biſhop on the other ſide maintained, That this act belonged vnto him, for that it was done in his dioceſſe. G H I

D. Garcia de Toledo in diſgrace.

31 There were great complaints made in the Court of Caſtille, againſt D. Garcia de Toledo, Viceroy of Sicile, where he had many enemies which taxed him of arrogancie, malicious negligence, and neglect of all good occaſions, yea he was accuſed to haue retained three hundred thouſand crownes, which were ſent him for the war of Malta, and the laſt prouiſion thereof, and that he had ſuffered the remainder of the Turkiſh armie to eſcape, who fled in diſorder (ſaid his ill willers) whom he might eaſily haue defeated. He ſought to purge himſelfe of theſe imputations by his friends, and ſent Alphonſo Ruis, Secretarie of State for that realme, expreſly out of Sicile; but his diſgrace increaſing, he was forced to come in perſon. He was there diſcharged by the king, and ſent home to his houſe, being depriued of all his offices and eſtates. D. Iohn de Auſtria was made Generall at ſea, and the marqueſſe of Peſcare Viceroy of Sicile. K

THE

THE 29 BOOKE OF THE Hiſtorie of Spaine.

The Contents.

1 Troubles in the Low Countries.
2 Tumult made in Spaine by the Moores of Granado.
3 Scio taken by the Turke.
4 Duke of Alba ſent Gouernour into the Low Countries.
5 Sentence of condemnation againſt the Netherlanders.
6 Impriſonment and death of the prince of Spaine, and of the queene.
7 Charles Archduke of Auſtria ſent from the Emperor Maximilian into Spaine.
8 Cauſes which moued the Moores of Granado to rebell.
9 Mariage of the king of Spaine with his neece the Emperours daughter.
10 Rights of the Seigneurie of Venice to the realme of Cypres.
11 League concluded betwixt the Pope, the king of Spaine, and the commonweale of Venice.
12 Famaguſta yeelded to the Turke.
13 Battell betwixt the Chriſtians and Turkes at Lepanto.
14 Duke of Medina Celi ſent to ſucceed the duke of Alba in the Low Countries.
15 Enterpriſe of Tunis made by D. Iohn of Auſtria.
16 Tunis and Goulette recouered againe by the Turkes.
17 D. Sebaſtian king of Portugal goes into Afrike.

TOwards the end of the laſt yere Pope Pius the fourth died, in whoſe place was choſen Frier Michael Giſlieri, of the Order of S. Dominicke, cardinall Alexandrino, and he was called Pius the fifth. He had beene bred vp in diuers charges of the Inquiſition, and therefore he ſought to aduance it being come to this dignitie. The people of Rome knowing him to be of a ſowre and ſeuere diſpoſition, were ſomewhat troubled at his election: which being reported vnto him, We hope in God, ſaid he, ſo to behaue our ſelfe, as they will bee more grieued to heare of our death, than they are now at our creation. But the king of Spaine rejoyced much at this election, commending the authours thereof. He did obſerue him with great reuerence, commanding all his miniſters with whom the Pope was to treat, not to oppoſe themſelues againſt his Holineſſe juſt demaunds. And this yere Bartholmew Caranza, Archbiſhop of Toledo, being called in queſtion by the Inquiſition of Spaine, for misbeliefe, requiring to be judged at Rome, as his Holineſſe ſhould determine, he being not well ſatisfied with his Spaniſh judges, the king wold not refuſe him to the lord of Camojano, who was ſent vnto him to that end, notwithſtanding that it was againſt the priuiledges of the Inquiſition in that realme: wherein the cardinall Sanſiſto being ſent the yere before by the Pope, to judge the cauſe, could not preuaile, the Spaniards ſeeking to maintaine their juriſdiction, and to determine it abſolutely. Notwithſtanding the Archbiſhops perſon was granted to Camoiano, who was caried priſoner to Rome, with his Proces which had beene begun there.

1566 Election of Pope Pius 5.

Archbiſhop of Toledo drawne in queſtion by the Inquiſition.

1566 Pope Pius the fift hauing beene made cardinall by Paul the fourth, a Caraffe, in requi- G tall of this fauour, being aduanced to the Papacie, he cauſed the proces of cardinall Ca- Carraffas proces reuiewed. raffa, and others of that houſe, which had beene executed by his predeceſſors commandement, to be reuiewed, reſtoring the familie of the Caraffas to their honor and fame.

The Pope perſiſting in his accuſtomed rigour againſt them that did ſeeme to decline from the obedience of the Church of Rome, did not faile, after his aſſumption, to admo-niſh all Chriſtian princes to obſerue the decrees of the Councel of Trent, and did quicken the diligence of Inquiſitors in all places: But he had no need to reiterate his commande-ments in that point in Spain, where they had for a long time vſed hard perſecution againſt them whom they called Lutherans, whom king Philip was preſt to root out in other pla- H ces of his obedience, eſpecially in the Low Countries, and to publiſh this Councell, which was ended ſo fauourably for him, as it was rather called the king of Spaines Coun-cell than a generall.

Cauſes of hatred betwixt the Spaniards and Flemings. Betwixt the Spaniards and the nobilitie of the Netherlands, yea betwixt theſe nations there raigned an inueterat hatred, ſince the Infancie of Charles their king; which grew as well by the diuerſitie of manners, as by occaſions which ſprang from charges in Court, being alwayes accompanied with enuie, and many times with attempts of courteors one againſt another, abuſing the fauour of their princes: For the Flemings had been in great credit with the Emperour, and had made their profit of the commodities of Spaine, yea againſt the lawes of the countrey, during his raigne: And at this time in the Court of I king Philip his ſonne, the Spaniards had the aduantage, and were in moſt credit. From I this ſpring grew the priuat diſlikes betwixt the duke of Alba, and other noblemen of Troubles in the Low Countries. Spaine, and the earle of Egmont, prince of Orange, and other great men who had the chiefe gouernments and charges in thoſe hereditarie countries of king Philip. Of whom they thought they might well be reuenged (as reuenge is ſweet and pleaſant to men of that ſort) by reaſon of the publication of the Councel of Trent, and the obſeruation ther-of, and of the Edicts which they called Placards, which the Emperour had made in re-gard of religion, containing many articles of extreame rigour, in imitation of the Inqui-ſition of Spaine, whereof notwithſtanding at the inſtance of the Eſtates of the Coun-trey, he did moderate much of the rigour, and, giuing ouer the gouernment, he did ad- K Aduice giuen by the Emperour Charles to his ſonne. moniſh D. Philip his ſonne, to intreat his ſubiects liuing vnder diuers climats, according to their naturall humors; letting him vnderſtand, that it might be auſteritie was neceſſa-rie for Spaniards, but that the Netherlanders muſt be gouerned with a certaine familiari-tie and mildneſſe. Againſt this good and wholeſome aduice king Philip had other coun-ſell as ſoone as he came into Spaine, being animated as well by them of his Councell that were about him, as by Anthonie Perrenot, cardinall of Arras, who concurred with the king and them in that point, to ſettle a ſoueraigne abſolute power ouer that nation, and to take their priuiledges from them: whereof they had made ſome triall by the creati-on of new biſhops, without the conſent of the Eſtates. Wherein he found great oppoſi-tion, as we haue formerly ſhewed, and as you may read at large in the Netherland Hiſto- L rie, to the which this ſubiect doth more properly belong.

Moſt of the prouinces of the Netherlands being in combuſtion, it was bruted, That the king of Spaine would goe in perſon thither, carrying peace and mildneſſe with him: but the chiefe of them that fauoured religion, were ſoone aduertiſed of a contrarie reſolution Reſolution in Spaine touching the gouernment of the Low Countries. taken in the kings Councel, which was, That the king would not come among them, but that the duke of Alba ſhould be ſent with a great armie, to enter the countrey in hoſtile manner, as you ſhall heare in the following yeare. King Philip was doubtfull indeed, whe-ther he ſhould goe in perſon into the Netherlands, but he knew not well to whom to leaue the gouernement of Spaine, in his abſence, being due to D. Charles his ſonne, whom Charles prince of Spaine vnpleaſing to his father. he truſted not: for whether it were for want of vnderſtanding, as the brute was, or that M he had too much, as hee preſumed, his father had conceiued a bad opinion of him, which ſome of his Counſellours did feed, for that it ſeemed vnto them, that this young prince, both in his words and actions, did ſcorne them, or at the leaſt did not eſteeme them as they deſired. Aboue all, the Inquiſitors were no friends vnto him, as you ſhall heare.

2 Whileſt

A 2 Whilest they consulted in the king of Spaines Councel, how to punish the Netherlanders, the Moores of Granado were called in question, being pursued by the Clergie, and accused of many crimes, especially of secret impietie, as retaining in their hearts the precepts of the law of Mahomet, & hauing their exercises secretly in their houses, although that publikely they aduowed themselues to be Christians, went to Masse, and to other offices and ceremonies in the parishes where they dwelt. Their spleene was chiefly against the inhabitants of the Albaizin, which is a quarter within the citie of Granado, being then peopled with a great number of families of that nation, who were rich and well accommodated; being people which imploied their time in the trade of marchandise, in B making of silkes, and in many gainfull trades: and among them there were some knights, professing nobilitie and armes. Moreouer, in other townes, and in the countrey and mountaines of Granado, and thereabouts, there were aboue an hundred thousand other families of Moores of diuers conditions, some rich, but most labourers and shepheards, liuing vnder the protection of lords which enjoyed the castles, fees, and seigniories, to whom they paied rents & dueties, as subiects, descending from them that remained in the countrey since the realme of Granado had beene conquered by the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Isabella, who had promised in capitulating with the last king of the Moores, That they and their successors might remaine there with all assurance and libertie, and not be forced in their religion, obseruing the lawes in generall, and paying the rights and tributes to the C king, like to his other subiects, yet the same kings breaking their promise by the persuasion of some Prelats, they would force them to be baptised, and receiue instruction in religion, by reason whereof they fell againe to warre against them that dwelt in Alpuxarra, a mountaine countrie, rough, and of hard accesse, joyning vnto the sea, the which after many hard incounters, with diuers euents on either side, was ended by another cõposition: by the which it was concluded, That they that would be Christians should remaine in the countrey, and the rest should passe into Barbarie, whom they should furnish with shipping for their passage. They that remained were called Madejares, and they that passed were tearmed Moores Andaluzes, by the inhabitants of the prouinces depending vpon the realmes of Fez and Marroc, whither they retired themselues. Notwithstanding, D howsoeuer the Moores which remained in Spaine behaued themselues, they were still hated, and held to be vile and abiect persons by the Spaniards, who called them, in reproach, New Christians, and in stead of making them receiue the religion of Iesus Christ gently, they tormented them both in word and deed; which the magistrat could not remedie, or, it may be, would not: for the Clergie, who are exempt from aunswering before any ciuile magistrat, and haue their justice apart, being wonderfully fauoured in Spaine, were they that committed the greatest insolencies against them: yea these poore wretches were continually troubled to giue an account vnto the Inquisitors of their actions, and to vse all meanes possible to obtaine some rest of them that were ordinarily in the countrey: But their superiours, and the Prelats which were of the Coun-E cell at Court, gaue them no rest; so as since the time of D. Ioane the Emperours mother, queene proprietarie of Castille, Arragon, &c. and the Emperours raigne, there had many seuere Edicts beene made against them, and strange restraints in their conuersations and manner of liuing, whereof notwithstanding they had suspended the execution, at their humble suit, and protestation of their innocencies, purging themselues reasonably well of all the imputations wherewith they were by them charged.

1566

Tumult made in Spaine by the Moores of Granado.

Moores ill intreated in Spaine.

At this time in the kings Court and Council, all the old accusations against the Moors were reuiued, and to set an order to the content of the Inquisition, and the Prelats which pursued them, there had beene Commissioners deputed, which were D. Diego d'Espinosa, F President of the Councell, who was afterwards made a cardinall, D. Fernando Aluares de Toledo, duke of Alba, D. Anthonie de Toledo, Prior of the Order of S. Iohn, D. Bernard de Borea, Vicechauncellor of Arragon, the bishop of Origuela, D. Pedro of Desa, of the Councell of the generall Inquisition, the Licenciat Mechaca, and Doctor Velasco, Auditors, or Councellors. These hauing met, made an Edict containing many articles, wherof the chiefe were: That all Moors, new Christians, were commanded to leaue their Commissioners appointed to order the Moores.

Edict against the Moores Mudeiares.

1566 Arabike or Mooriſh tongue, and to vſe the Spaniſh; and therefore they ſhould ſend their G children to ſchooles which ſhould be erected for the vulgar Spaniſh tongue, and to the maſters which ſhould be appointed to teach them. That they ſhould keep no books written in the Arabike tongue in their houſes. That they with their wiues & children ſhold be bound to aſſiſt at ſeruice in their pariſh churches, on Sundayes and other feſtiuall dayes celebrated by the Church. That on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, they ſhould keepe their doores open in the day time, and to a certaine houre of the night, and ſuffer them to enter to ſee what they did. That they ſhould keepe no other armes but their ſwords, and if any were ſuffered through fauour to haue any, they ſhould be markt by the gouer-nours. That all Moores, men and women, of what age and condition ſoeuer, ſhould leaue H their Mooriſh habits and attire, which they had been accuſtomed to vſe, and attire themſelues like other Spaniards. That they ſhould leaue off the vſe of bathes after their manner, and their Mooriſh daunces, which were vndecent, laſciuious, and ſcandalous to Chriſtians. That the Moores reſiding in the Albaizin ſhould not flie into the villages and ju-riſdictions of other lords: for thereby the decrees of juſtice were made void. There were other articles contained in this Edict, confirming the former old ordinances made againſt them, or newly inuented, with rigorous penalties vpon euerie one. This Edict being ſigned by the king, and put into forme, D. Pedro de Deca was diſpatcht to be Preſident of the Chauncerie of Granado, being injoyned to cauſe it to be executed from point to point, according to the forme and tenor thereof, without delay or fauour, not reſpecting the I admonitions of any whatſoeuer. All the Commiſſioners were of this opinion, except the duke of Alba, who aduiſed them to proceed in the execution thereof article after article, after ſome pauſe, and not all at one inſtant. And ſoone after the duke parted to goe into Flanders, to gouerne there according to the ſeuere and injurious inſtructions which he carried with him, and thoſe which he procured to be ſent vnto him.

Scio taken by the Turke.

3 During theſe troubles in the Weſt, the great Turke Solyman ſeiſed vpon the iſland of Scio. The Baſſa Mehemet, vpon a priuat grudge hee had againſt the inhabitants of that iſland, thinking that by their helpe a ſlaue of his was fled, and had carried away a good ſumme of gold, hee perſuaded Solyman to make it ſubiect, making his owne priuat reſpect an apparent reaſon; ſaying, That many ſlaues fled daily away by their fa- K uour and aid; and beſides, they were ſpies to obſerue what was done at the port, and in thoſe ſeas, giuing aduice to Chriſtian princes, and eſpecially to the king of Spaine, the chiefe of that nation being Genouois, and confederats with the ſaid king. Moreouer, he pretended, That they ought two yeres tribute, of ten thouſand ducats a yere, the which had happened by the fraud of their Agent, who kept in Conſtantinople. The Turke was not verie well prouided that yeare at ſea, for his loſſe had beene verie great before Malta, whereas hee had not onely loſt many men of commaund, and eſpecially that famous pyrat Dragut, but alſo the beſt of his forces: And his gallies were ſo weakened, as he could hardly draw foureſcore gallies with ſome galliots together: Yet for that hee would with the ſhew of a great fleet diuide his enemies forces, he yeelded to Mehemets L perſuaſions, commaunding him to annoy the Chriſtians where they might moſt conue-niently, after the taking of Scio. This iſland lyes in the Archipelagus: it is almoſt an hundred miles in circuit: about two hundred yeares ſince it was taken by the Genouois, and giuen to the Iuſtinians their citizens, for their charges, who afterwards had the inue-ſtiture from the Paleologui, paying a certaine rent, which was increaſed to tenne thouſand ducats, by Mahomet the ſecond, king of the Turkes. Thus they had liued at libertie vnto this time, without any annoyance, being gouerned in forme of a commonweale, the gentlemen hauing the chiefe command. Pialy, who was Generall of the fleet, directed his courſe thither, where he arriued on Eaſter day in the morning, and landed vnder a ſhew of friendſhip. Then with a practiſe he drew the gouernor of the towne aboord the Admi- M rall, with 12 men which were euerie yere choſen to be moderators of publike buſineſſe:
Theſe being ſtaied by him, the publike palace and the fort were preſently ſeiſed on by the Turks, who carried away all the chiefe men, and appointed another forme of gouernment for them that did remaine, depending vpon the Turkes Empire. Pialy leauing that iſland, ſailed towards the Adriatike ſea, which put the Venetians into a great jealouſie.

King

A The king of Spaine vnderſtanding that there was no feare of Malta for that yeare, hauing a great fleet & an armie readie, commanded they ſhould attempt Alger. Wherfore they began to ſend certaine ſhips laden with ſouldiers, artillerie, and munition, towards Malaga, whileſt that Garcia de Toledo prepared the gallies, to paſſe with all their power. It happened notwithſtanding, that thoſe ſhips were taken by certaine galliots of Alger, which kept thoſe ſeas. This loſſe was of ſuch importance, as it diſappointed the reſolution for Alger. 1567

Loſſe receiued by the pyrats of Alger.

4 It had beene reſolued the yeare before in the Councell of Spaine, that the duke of Alba ſhould go with an armie into the Low Countries. This Spring he was diſpatcht a-
B way with an ample cõmiſſion, or rather with an vnlimited authoritie; the which was pleaſing vnto him, for the hatred he bare vnto the Netherlanders. As for his armie, there was commaundement giuen to the dukes of Alcala and Terranoua (the one being Viceroy of Naples, and the other of Sicile) to ſend into the duchie of Milan the old regiments of Spaniards which they had in thoſe realmes, and in Sardinia: and commaundement was alſo giuen to Gabriel de la Cueua, duke of Albuquerque, gouernour of Milan, That hee ſhould not only haue the regiment of Lombardie in a readineſſe, but alſo the light horſemen, increaſing their companies from fiftie to an hundred; and that Lopes Zapata, and Sancio d'Auila, ſhould raiſe two more, beſides two of harquebuſiers on horſebacke, Spaniards, leuied by Pedro Montagna, and Gonſaluo Montero. The king had alſo giuen or-
C der in Germanie, that Alberico, earle of Lodron, ſhould raiſe a regiment of 12 companies of foot, and 300 in euerie cõpanie, according to the cuſtome of that nation, & in the county of Bourgondie there ſhould be leuied 300 lances, and 100 harquebuſiers on horſbacke. Franciſco d'Ibara was victualer generall, and D. Garcia de Toledo had charge to tranſport in his gallies the ſaid Spaniſh footmen, vnto the ports of Genoua, that they might be readie in Lombardie at the duke of Albas arriuall. This order being taken in Spaine for the voyage of Flanders, and new ſouldiers (whom they call Beſognes) being ſent into Sicile and Naples, to ſupplie their places that ſhould goe in that action, in the beginning of May the duke of Alba imbarked at Carthagena, in the gallies of Iohn Andrew Doria, and of the duke of Florence: he carried with him ſeuenteene companies of Spaniſh foot, to D fill vp the garriſons of Lombardie, from whence he drew the old ſouldiers, making alſo choiſe of foure companies of theſe new ſouldiers, to lead with him into the Low Countries. He arriued late at Genoua, hauing beene troubled with a feuer vpon the way. He muſtered his army betwixt Alexandria and Aſti, where he found 8800 Spaniſh foot, and 1200 horſe, Italians, Spaniards, and Albaneſes: and the foot were thus diuided; of the regiment of Naples 3230 in 19 companies, vnder Alphonſo Vlloa their colonell; in the regiment of Sardinia (in the which the foure companies of Beſognes were put) were 1720 men in ten companies, commaunded by Gonſaluo de Bracamont: the regiment of Sicile was of 1620 ſouldiers, in ten companies, vnder Iulian Romero; and that of Lombardie, being but 1200 foot, in ten companies, was commanded by Sancio de Londogno. There were ſe-
E uen companies of horſe, Spaniards, wherof fiue were lances, and two harquebuſiers, three of Italians, and two of Albaneſes, all light horſemen. Beſides theſe troupes, and their captaines, he led with him many men of knowne valour, to imploy them in this ſeruice, and to aduance them to charges as they ſhould fall: among which were his baſe ſonne called alſo Fernando Aluarez, who was a knight of Saint Iohn, and Prior of a rich commaunderie, Chiappin Vitelli, marqueſſe of Cetona, Gabriel Serbelloni, a knight alſo of Saint Iohn, Sancio d'Auila, Girolamo de Salinas, Iohn of Epuccia, and Andrew de Salezar, one of which foure laſt was Caſtellan of Pauia, the other of Portercole, the third of Piombyno, and the laſt of Palermo. And beſides theſe, hee led with him Paciotto de Vrbino, an excellent Enginer, hauing gotten him from the duke of Sauoy, whom hee then ſerued. Hee
F made his ſonne Fernando Generall of the horſe, Vitelli was Marſhall of the field, and Serbelloni (beſides the charge of the Artillerie) was made Counſellour at Warre. How hee entred into the countrey, and what his proceedings were, that Hiſtorie doth relate at large. After which they hauing certaine informations ſent them into Spaine, from the duke of Alba, and the aduice of the holy Inquiſition taken therein, all the lay people of the ſaid countries, both noblemen, gentlemen, townes and 5

Duke of Alba ſent into Flanders.

Armie led by the duke of Alba into the Low countries.

1567 comminalties were by the kings ſentence condemned as heretikes, or fauourers of heretikes, or in ſome other ſort guiltie of high treaſon in the higheſt degree, without exception of eſtate, qualitie, condition, age, or ſex; except ſome which were particularly named in the information, which made the inhabitants to flie into diuers other countries.

This yere, in May, there was great ioy and feaſts in Spaine, and in all the kings dominions, for the birth of his ſecond daughter, who was baptiſed, and called Katherine.

1568 But whileſt the warre grew hot in the Low Countries, there happened a tragicall accident in the royall houſe of Spaine. We haue before made mention how that D. Charles was in diſgrace with the king his father: the cauſe (as the Spaniards ſay) was, for that he was viciouſly giuen, and that he ſpake ill of the preſent gouernment: that he had a meaning to attempt againſt the kings perſon, and to raigne in his place, hating him, for that he had often reprehended him, and threatened him, for his diſordered courſes: or, if that ſucceeded not, that he would ſteale away, and flie ſecretly, with ſome of his confederats, into Italie, or ſomewhere elſe, and trie, by confuſion and tumult, to depriue the king of his Eſtates. That he carried himſelfe arrogantly, and incompatible to them that had the chiefe offices in Court, and that he diſdained all thoſe that were appointed to attend on him, yea hee would outrage and ſtrike them. The Inquiſitors expected no good from this prince, neither did the kings Councell, of the which thoſe that were then moſt hated of him, were D. Ruis Gomes de Sylua, a Portugal, the earle of Feria, and D. Anthonie de Toledo. The king was aduertiſed by them of many particularities concerning the princes carriage, and entertained in dislike of him. By their counſell the king reſolued to come from the Eſcuriall to Madrid, where the prince was, and to ſurpriſe him in his chamber in the night, they attending on him, and to take him in his bed. They came, and found the chamber doore ſo well barred, as they were forced to breake it open. The prince hearing the noiſe, leapt out of his bed, and ſeeing the king his father, hee was much troubled, beginning to crie out, What is the reaſon that you will kill me? The king willed him that he would pacifie himſelfe, and that he ſhould goe againe to his bed, telling him, that what he did was for his good. They ſeiſed on his ſword, and ſome ſay that hee had a piſtoll charged and bent: He complained, that they meant to bind him, as if he had beene madde. His chamber and clothes were ſearched, and they left no inſtrument of yron, wherewith he might hurt himſelfe: all his papers and writings were carried away, among the which there were found many copies of letters written to ſome princes, full of complaints of hard vſage which hee receiued from the king, whom he accuſed of crueltie and bad gouernement in his affaires, and it ſeemed hee did inuite them to aſſiſt him, by compaſſion, making great promiſes vnto them. His whole deſigne was alſo diſcouered by certaine remembrances which were found, being reſolued to eſcape away in the gallies, which ſhould paſſe into Italie, whereby they might eaſily ſee whom he loued, and whom he hated in Court, whom he truſted, and whom he would imploy in his enterpriſes. Hee had beene ſeene ſome daies before, to diſcourſe long and verie earneſtly with D. Iohn of Auſtria, Generall at ſea; and it was thought, that hauing acquainted him with his deſignes, hee reuealed them vnto the king, which made him reſolue to put him in gard. The earle of Feria, and D. Ruis Gomes, had that charge, who watcht him carefully in their turnes; and hee was ſerued by two gentlemen, who carried no armes, and vpon the paſſages to his chamber there were gards, who would not ſuffer any other to goe vnto him. This continued ſome dayes: but the king who obſerued all that hee ſpake, cauſed him afterwards to be put into a ſtrong tower, giuing the whole charge and care of him to D. Ruis Gomes: it was the ſame priſon whereas king Francis had beene kept. There hee attempted many times to kill himſelfe, as they ſaid, and being preuented, hee forbare to eat any thing eight dayes together. The king aduertiſed all the noblemen, townes, and comminalties of Spaine, of this impriſonment, that they ſhould not take it ill, letting them vnderſtand, that it was for the good and quiet of them all, forbidding them all expreſly, not to ſpeake nor mediate for the prince. He imparted as much to the embaſſadours, and did write vnto their maſters.

Obiectiõ againſt the prince of Spaine.

Enemies to the prince of Spaine

6 Impriſonment of the prince of Spaine.

Deſignes of the prince diſcouered.

The emperour Maximilian being aduertiſed of this fact, imputed the cauſe to D. Iohn, and

A and was offended with him: for he meant to make the prince D. Charles his Son in law, & (if this accident had not happened) to haue conſummated the marriage within few daies, as the fathers had concluded: & he was ſo much diſcontented, as hee would haue called home the Princes Rodulphus and earneſt his Sonnes, who were bred vp in the Court of Spaine, but the king D. Philip would not ſuffer them to depart, but ſought to pacifie the Emperour with reaſons, either true or probable. But in the end he perſuaded him that the cauſe was moſt vrgent and iuſt to aſſure himſelfe of his Sonnes perſon, whome hee ſhould loue and ſpare if it might be, hauing at that time no more Sonnes. Whatſoeuer was the true cauſe of the Sonnes detention by the father, being not well manifeſted from B Spaine, the prince D. Charles the preſumptiue heire of ſo many realmes, dyed in Iulie; ſome ſay he was poiſoned, others write that he was ſtrangled by foure ſlaues: He was buried in the Monaſterie of S. Dominike, the royall at Madrid, whereas the king D. Pedro the cruel had beene interred. Peter Mathew in his French Hiſtorie, writing of the life and death of king Philip the ſecond, he ſets downe a formall proceeding of the father againſt his Sonne in this action: the which for that this ſubiect is ſo rare and memorable, I haue thoght good alſo to inſert. 1567

Death of the Prince of Spain

After the Princes reſtraint, as wee haue ſaied the king (ſaith hee) propounded to his Councel of conſcience, what puniſhment a kings ſon deſerued, that had made leagues a- C gainſt his eſtates, and conſpired againſt his fathers life, and whether hee might be called in queſtion? His Councell laied two remedies before him, both iuſt and poſſible, the one of grace, and the other of Iuſtice and puniſhment, ſhewing him the difference betwixt the mercie of a father, and the ſinceritie of a king, ſaying, that if by his clemencie he did pardon them which loued him not, hee muſt of force pardon that creature which ſhould be moſt deare vnto him. They deſired him to imitate the emperour Charlemaigne, who imputed the firſt conſpiracie of his Sonne Pepin againſt him, to the follies of youth, & for the ſecond he confined him into a Monaſterie, proteſting that he was a father not a king, nor a iudge againſt his Sonne. The king anſwered that by the law of nature he loued his Son better than himſelfe, but by the law of God the good and ſafetie of his ſubiects was to be preferred. Moreouer hee demanded, if knowing the miſeries which the impunitie of his D Sonnes offences would breed, whether he might with a ſafe conſcience pardon him, and not be guiltie of theſe miſeries. Whereat his Diuines ſhrunke in their ſhoulders, and with teares in their eies ſaid, that the ſafetie and health of his ſubiects ought to be dearer vnto him than his ſonnes, and that hee ought to pardon offences; but ſuch crimes ſhould bee ſuppreſt as abhominable monſters. Hereupon the king committed his Sonne to the cenſure of the Inquiſitors, commending them not to reſpect his authoritie, no more than the meaneſt within his kingdome; and to regard the qualitie of his Sonne, as if he were borne a king, making no diſtinction thereof with the partie accuſed, vntill they found that the exceſſe of his offence would no more admit of this conſideration, remembring that they E carried in their ſoules a liuelie image of the king, which had iudged Angels, and ſhould without diſtinction iudge kings and the Sonnes of kings like vnto other men; referring al vnto their conſciences, and diſcharging his owne.

Mathews vpon the death of Prince Charles

The Inquiſitors, for that he was charged to haue practiſed with Caſtillion Admirall of France, the prince of Orange, and other enemies of the Romiſh Religion, declared him an heretike, and for that hee had conſpired againſt his fathers life, they condemned him to die. The king was his accuſer, and the Inquiſitors his iudges, but the ſentence was ſigned by the king, which done, they preſented many kinds of death in picture vnto the prince, to make choiſe of the eaſieſt. In the end he demanded if there were no pitie in his father, to pardon him, no fauour in his Councell for a Prince of Spaine, nor any wiſdome to excuſe the follies of his youth: when as they told him that his death was determined & could F not be reuoked, and that all the fauour was in the choiſe of the eaſieſt death, hee ſaid that they might put him to what death they pleaſed: that there was no choiſe of any death, ſeeing that they could not giue him that which Cæſar held to be the beſt. Theſe words deliuered with paſſion, were followed with a thouſand imprecations againſt his fortune, againſt the inhumanity of his father, and the crueltie of the Inquiſition, repeating theſe words often: O miſerable Sonne, of a more miſeable father.

Iudgement of the inquiſitors againſt the Prince of Spain

He

1568 He had ſome daies giuen him to prepare himſelfe for death. One morning foure ſlaues entred into his chamber, who awaking him, put him in mind of his laſt houre, and gaue him ſome time to prepare himſelfe vnto God: He ſtart vp ſuddenly and fled to the bed poſt; but two of them held his armes, and the third his feet, and the fourth ſtrangled him with a cord of ſilk. Many hold that he died of letting blod, his feet being put in warm water. But Campana in the liſe of Philip 2 writes, that being in priſon he fel verie ſick, by reaſon of his diſordred diet, and drinking too much cold water, wherewith his ſtomack grew ſo weake as he could not digeſt any meat, which the Phiſitions could not helpe ſo as hee died (as he affirms) of this ſicknes, verie religiouſly and penitenly, to the great griefe of the king & the whol ſtate: & moreouer he writes, that the king being much perplexed for this great loſſe, retired himſelf into his chamber with two ſeruants, & wold not giue any audience, & then for many daies into the monaſterie of S. Ieroſme, a mile without the town, ſequeſtring himſelf of al affairs, writing only to princes & potentates, & cauſing his ſecretaries to write vnto all his realms & ſtates of the death of his deare & only ſon. Thus writers diſcourſe diuerſly of the death of this Prince: the which I leaue to the iuditious Reader to beleeue what he ſhall thinke moſt probable.

Death of the queen of Spain.

Within foure months after the death of the Prince D. Carlo, the Queene D. Iſabella his mother in law died alſo, being broght in bed of her third child before her time, the Phiſitiõs hauing ignorãtly cauſed her to take too much Phiſick, fering ſome other infirmitie; this was the brute of the court of Spain. But in France they had reaſon to think that the life of this princeſſe was ſhortned like vnto that of D. Charles, by ſome notable malice, & by the ſame inſtruments. For they to whom D. Iſabella did belong in bloud, had been verie careſull to auer the cauſes & maner of her death, but not ſo reſolute to call it in queſtion, as Clouis ſons were to reuenge the iniurie done vnto their Siſter in Spaine, where ſhe alſo had beene maried.

Turkett.

As for the Prince, it was verie cõmon in Spain, that the great hatred the king bare him, grew rather from the ſuggeſtions and reports of others, than from his own miſdeeds, for by nature he was neither giuen to any odious vices, neither was he of ſo harſh and ſower a diſpoſition as commonly great men of that coũtrie be. It is true, that D. Charles kept his grauitie to courtiers, that he ſhewed himſelf verie ambitious, & too deſirous to mannage affaires, and to be imploied; and was giuen to ſome kindes of pleaſures. Such as would excuſe him, ſaid, that it was ſeemly and befitting his ranke to be graue, being the ſon of ſo great a king, ſworn prince and acknowledged for ſucceſſor to ſuch rich and great eſtates, and alſo that it is the firſt leſſon & moſt recommended inſtruction of fathers in Spaine, to their children, to ſhew thẽſelues graue in their words & actions, & that it was a cõmendable thing eſpecially in thẽ that were of great houſes. If he were ambitious & deſirous of honor, they were affections incident to princes, & were ſo neceſſarie in them that were to goueme people, as if any had not theſe motions in them, they were the leſſe eſteemed, both in Spain and elſewhere. If he deſired to know & learne by practiſe how eſtates ſhold be gouerned, and juſtice duly adminiſtred, that it is a thing wherein kings children ſhould be bred from their youth, & practiſed therein all their liues, and that it is the nature of all men well bred, feeling the ſeeds of vertue in their minds, to aduance it by their actions; wherein all men know that vertue doth conſiſt. And yet all theſe things commendable in other men, were blamed in Prince Charles, by them who (it may be) would not haue their miſdemeanors diſcouered by the Infant of the houſe. As for worldlie pleaſures, they be, ſaid they, appetites which doe commonly accompany yong noble men, eſpecially being bred vp in the idlenes of court; vices which are tollerable in many of mean condition, & therefore were leſſe ſtrange in great men: but, ſaid they, there was no better means to diuert this prince from delights which are ſuperfluous and hurtfull, than to imploy him betimes in the gouernment affaires; what greater bond, ſaid they, had the king his father to his ſubiects, than to faſhion his onely Sonne, (hee that ſhould raigne after) to command wel, & to make him knowe both by reaſon and experience what the duetie of a king is, both to God and men, that they be not as dum Idols among their Councellers, hauing not iudgement to diſcerne the good from the bad. The thing wherein the Prince was moſt to be blamed, was an inconſiderate raſhneſſe to attaine vnto his intentions, and could Diſpoſition of the prince D. Charles.

Ambition a vice of great men.

Vices common to yong Noblemen.

A could not obserue time nor fit occasions to make his poursuit. The which they thought 1568 proceeded onely from the heat of youth, which might easily haue been corrected by conuersing with men of state, if hee had beene accompained by some men of respect, wise, and willing to moderate these fumes which did rise through the heat of youth. And they complained that the meanes that might haue made D. Charles a vertuous Prince, were hindred by the practises of the kings bad Councellors; who also for his part had shewed himselfe too credulous, & in the end blind in that action, by some secret iudgement of God. These were the ordinarie reasons of temperate spirits, who thought affaires of state might well be managed, and not stray from pietie nor humanity. Adding, that admit the Prince D.
B Charles, had bin found inflexible to all proofes of reason, so as hee had been held incapable to raigne, yet should they not haue taken away his life. That there were Monasteries in Spaine, whether they might haue sequestred him, and sought by the conuersation of some good religious men, to draw him to a contempt of worldlie greatnesse which perisheth, and to the contemplation of heauenly things, and the life to come: whereof both Spaine and other Countries could furnish the like examples.

But the Councell of Spaine consisting of Clergie men and secular, did not like of these old maximes in matters of consequence, and especially they that had more particular knowledge of that which past in the kings house, did greatly apprehend what this tryumphant crowne would come vnto, if king Philip dying, it should fall into the hands of such
C a man as D. Charles his Sonne was, whom they held to bee vnable to vndergoe so great a burthen; & there was great probabilitie that this prince had both his bodie & his spirits, weakened since his fall at Alcala of Henares, whether hee was gone to pay a vow after a long quarten ague, by which fall his braine was somewhat crazed, so as his iudgement did sometimes faile him, not being able to containe himself with the respect which he ought vnto the king, and to them that had the honour to be of his Councell. Considerations of the Councell of Spaine.

Moreouer, whether it were by accident, or by some defect of nature, the facultie of generation was in a maner quencht in him, so as he was held vnable for women: the which did also import the state. All these things gaue a great apprehension to the chiefe of the kings Councel, being guided by worldlie wisdome; the which could not suggest a better
D expedient than to be rid of him, and to find out some fit meanes to effect it. It is certaine that the beginning of the kings hatred to his sonne, was throgh jealousie of State, taking an occasion for that the Prince seemed verie desirous to goe from Court, and to bee imployed in forein expeditions, at the least to accompany them that were sent with charges, to the end, said he, that hee might learne. Whereupon they presently made D. Charles a monster of ambition, who would presently seaze vpon the Prouinces, and take away the kings crown & life to raigne: & yet on the other side they taxed him that he was dull and wanted iudgement, contradicting themselues, for such actions are not attempted by fooles and madmen: the which the king should haue duely considered; but not doing it, he did blemish his house with the most fatal misfortune that could happen vnto it: for he did so
E readily receiue these suspitions, and did so graue them in his heart, as he detested his Son, & he neuer saw him, but he sent him away with sower vsage and threats: and that which did most trouble the Prince, some of the Councellors and mignons of court, presumed (in imitation of the father) to contemne him. He gaue them a great aduantage ouer him, for that when as the Marques of Berghen & the Lord of Montigny came to court, being sent frō the estates of the Low-countries, to present their petition vnto the king touching the breach of their priuiledges by the Cardinall of Granuelle, hee became a solicitor for thē, being moued as he said with the zeale of Iustice, and hatred of ciuil wars, which hee foresaw and detested, blaming them openly which persuaded the king and his Councel thereunto; saying that they were practises of insatiable and cruel vultures, who would gorge
F themselues with the losse of the kings subiects. D. Charles prince of Spaine vnable for women. Zeale inconsiderat of the prince D. Charles.

By these free speeches vsed often when as they treated of the warre of Flanders, and against the Moores of Granado, whereas religion was made the pretext, at the poursuit & by authority of the Inquisition, D. Charles made himselfe odious to them that were the motiues, giuing them great meanes to confirme the king in the opinion wherewith they had seasoned him, that he sought all meanes to trouble the state, & to make himselfe pleasing

1568 ſing vnto the Netherlanders, that he might haue a refuge there, and by that means begin G to make a breach in the Crowne of Spain; adding with all to ſeaſon their imputations, that he was a fauourer of Heretikes, ſo as hee was ſharply and diſdainfully reprehended, Inquiſitors ſharp perſecutors of Prince Charles. and namely by the Inquiſitors, the which did wonderfully incenſe him: ſo as beeing van-quiſhed with impacience, and griefe, he preſumed one day to enter boldly into the priuy Councell chamber, with admiration of all them that were there, but eſpecially of the king, who did preſide, for he feared to ſee or heare ſome impertinencie from his Sonne in that place where he neuer had acceſſe, nor was not then called. Hee demaunded of him with a ſeuere countenance, what hee had to ſay, and what had moued him to come thi„ ther. It is ſaid he, my Lord, to beſeech you to giue me leaue to aske you one thing, and H „ that it will pleaſe you to ſatisfie me before the lords that are here preſent.

The king who feared to heare ſome importune curioſitie, ſought to diſmiſſe him in-„ ſtantly, telling him that hee had other places to heare him, and that hee ſhould re„ tire for that time. But the prince inſiſted, ſaying that it was onely to know if he tooke
„ him for his Sonne, and lawfull ſucceſſour: what demands of a Sonne are yours? ſaid Vertuous admonition of a Son to a father. „ the king; yea you are my ſonne, and depart in the name of God. Seeing then, replyed
„ the Prince, that I am your ſonne, and that by nature I ſhall one day ſucceed you in the „ gouernment of your realmes, I beſeech you take it not in ill part, if in this honourable „ aſſemblie, I let you vnderſtand that I haue not yet found that you haue thought of my „ future condition: for you bred me vp as a ſtranger, giuing me neither cauſe nor means I „ to bee inſtructed in matters of gouernment, or juſtice, importing the good of your „ ſubiects, hauing not yet libertie, being of this age, to come where it is treated, nor to „ conuerſe with ſuch men as you imploy, who rather ſeeke to eſtrange me; which „ giues me iuſt cauſe to complaine vnto you, and to beſeech you my Lord to conſider „ thereon, and to excuſe mee: and then hee departed. Hee was then full two and „ twentie yeares old.

This action miniſtred matter of diſcourſe to them of the Councell, whereas there was no good concluded for Prince Charles, for that the opinions of his enemies, which were the greateſt number, ſwaied it, and the king continued in his conceit that his Sonne was a franticke young man, without iudgement, and that hee had K an intent to inuade ſome Countrie, to put all into Combuſtion, for which cauſe hee deſired to be imployed.

Speech of the Prince to the Duke of Alba. The Prince not content to haue made this bad triall of his fathers inclination towards him, hee continued his courſe, hearing that the duke of Alba had beene appointed to goe to bee gouernour of the Low-Countries: for hauing ſent for him, hee told him that hee deſired nothing more than to goe from Court, intreating him inſtantly to aſſiſt him in ſo honourable and reaſonable a deſire, and to get leaue from the king that hee might goe with him, whome hee did reuerence as a great Commander in the warre, and one of the greateſt ſtateſmen in the world, in whoſe Schole he ſhould thinke himſelfe happie to take inſtruction. L

The Duke vſing many complements, ſeemed alſo to deſire it, ſaying that he could not receiue a greater honour than to commaund vnder him in that trouble-ſome charge, where hee might aſſure himſelfe of his humble ſeruice and aſſiſtance, yet hee gaue him ſome admonitions, knowing well how the king ſtood affected towards him: wherewith hee was diſcontented. This being auoided (for the Duke of Alba, what ſhew ſoeuer hee made, had no will to be troubled with ſuch a Scholer) hee adreſt himſelfe a while after, to increaſe his miſeries, to D. Iohn of Auſtria his vncle, who it may bee had more ambition in his head than he, to whoſe deſignes which were D. Iohn de Auſtria contrarie to Prince Charles. great, thoſe of the Prince D. Charles muſt needs bee preiudiciall, yet hee diſcoue-red himſelfe freely vnto him, being Generall at Sea, ſaying, that hee would ſteale M away, and paſſe with the Gallies into Italie, perſuading D. Iohn to aſſiſt him, but hee deceiued him; for hee preſently aduertiſed the king, which made him to cauſe him to bee watcht, and his actions to bee obſerued.

But behold, the Queene was ingaged in theſe miſeries: The prince in all his afflictions had often recourſe vnto his mother in law, who being mild and courteous, did willingly

A lingly heare his complaints, did pittie him, comfort him, and ſought by all meanes to reuiue his hopes, perſuading him to vanquiſh his paſſions, and to yeeld vnto the rigour and choler of the king his father, and to let time moderate them with patience, the which paſt not from the Queene without ſome free inuectiues, after the French maner, againſt them that were enemies to her and to the Prince, threatning one day to be reuenged on them that were authors of of her croſſes, and namely againſt D. Ruy Gomes, and a Confeſſor of the kings, who poſſeſt him aboue all others, and were the chiefe practiſers of theſe Tragedies. The which was reported vnto them, for they had ſpies euen in the Queenes Cabinet, by whom they were aduertiſed, and the king by them, 1568

B of all the ſpeeches which paſt betwixt the prince and her. They fearing that by the force of coninguall loue, ſhee ſhould put ſome conſideration into the kings heart, by the which hee might bee moued to examine this buſineſſe with iudgement, and that diſcouering their bad offices, hee ſhould take reuenge, they reſolued to preſſe the princes ruine, and to draw the Queene into the ſame hatred, that the king had conceiued againſt the prince his Sonne. Practiſes of the court of Spaine.

Theſe men wrought ſo by their practiſed and coloured reports as they drew that heart alreadie vlcered into a deadlie iealouſie of his wife, ſlandering her with looſſneſſe, adding that crime to the impreſſion which they had giuen him, that ſhe fauoured the princes deſigns, tending to open rebellion againſt God & the king. Moreouer to omit no impoſture

C which might ſerue to tranſport this king beyond the bounds of humanitie and reaſon, they let him vnderſtand, that, by the reports of Phiſitions and women attendants, vnto his Confeſſor, who made relation, and to whoſe words he gaue great credit, there appeared on the bodie of this Princeſſe certaine markes and ſpots, which ſhewed an impuritie and corruption of the bloud, which might infect the kings perſon, if hee did accompany with her, and ſo diſperſe it ſelfe into all the royall familie, which was to be auoided.

All which paſſions together, were of ſuch force with the king, as he beleeued the Inquiſitors (without whoſe aduice there is nothing of importance done in Spaine) and others which were of that Councel, perſuading him that it was lawfull & expedient to make a- Inquiſitors chiefe of the Councell of Spaine.

D way the prince his ſon, and the Queene his wife, and the child ſhee went with, which they held to be a ſon, but it proued a daughter, whereof they cauſed her to be deliuered with drinks. This Hiſtorie was thus reported to queene Catherine, dowager of France, mother to D. Iſabella, by ſuch as ſhe had imploied to vnderſtād the truth therof, & by ſome which had ſerued the prince D. Charles when he was committed to priſon, who retyring themſelues into France, ſhe would heare.

The ſuſpition the king had of the loyaltie of queene Iſabell his wife, was not for the prince his Son, as many haue beleeued: for he was (as wee haue ſaid) inſufficient for women. And although he would be idle in ſpeech, and that there were found among his papers ſome notes of his owne hand touching that ſubiect yet carnall pleaſures were the

E leaſt of his deſires, and as for the Queene there was nothing more modeſt in Spain, by the report of Spaniards themſelues, who haue written bookes. But it hath beene verified by credible informations, that her ill-willers which ſought her ruin, made vſe of the notable malice of a French gentlewoman, one of thoſe which was ſuffered to ſtay with her, when as ſoone after her comming into the countrie, they did order her houſhold, and limit her traine. They ſay that this vnworthie woman (for that the Queene had giuen away a place which was void to one of her companions, hauing promiſed it vnto her) to be reuenged of her Miſtres, had giuen it out, that ſhe had been indiſcreetly and ſcandalouſly familiar with the Marqueſſe of Poza, who according to the cuſtome of Spain, termed himſelfe ſeruant in ſhew to her that had bene preferred before her. Treacherie, a diueliſh reuenge

This comming to the kings eares, was eaſily beleeued, for hee was alreadie in

F ſome doubt, hee beeing informed by ſome wayward ſpirits, that this Marqueſſe who was of the houſe of Rojas, being a gallant knight, did talke more familiarly vnto the queen than any other, & entertained her with pleaſant diſcourſes, whereat ſhee did laugh after the maner of France, more freely than it ſeemed fit for their Spaniſh grauitie: This wound being now again toucht, the king ſought an occaſion to haue this Marqueſſe apprehended, commanding him to keepe his houſe being in Madrid; where going one night

1568 night forth to viſit his mother, and an vncle of his that was a biſhop, retyring verie late G home in a night-gowne and ſlippers, being accompained by two pages which carried torches before him, he was ſet vpon by men vnknown, and ſlaine vpon the place. There were diuers opinions concerning this murther, but moſt thoght it was done by the kings ſecret commaundement, although hee ſeemed to bee much offended: For there being a great ſum of money promiſed by proclamation to them that ſhould diſcouer the authours and doers of this murther, there were many bils ſet vp in the Portugall tongue, declaring that it was the king himſelf which had cauſed the Marqueſſe of Poza to be ſlaine: challenging him, by way of mockerie, to pay the money which hee had promiſed, but they had not ſet to their names.

Death of the Marqueſſe of Poza.

H

Hereupon there was great ſearch made, and ſome Innocents taken, and ſo cruelly tortured as they died: being onely ſuſpected for that they were Portugals. The Queene ſoone after the death of the Prince D. Charles, began to find herſelfe ill, with accidents and apparent ſignes of poiſon, whereof notwithſtanding ſhee did in no ſort doubt, but tooke light remedies, as one that was with child, by the order of ſuch as had bin accuſtomed to giue her phiſick. The buſineſſe proceeding ſlowly contrarie to that which they expected, the king hauing one night diſcourſed long with her touching her infirmitie, hee told her plainly that ſhe muſt take ſome ſtrong purgation, and that his Phiſitions (who by his commandement did looke vnto her) had told him that they deſpaired of her life, if ſhe tooke no other phiſicke than that ſhe vſed. But as ſhe tooke no delight to change her I vſuall maner, nor to be phiſicked by any other than her owne, truſting aboue all others in an Apothecarie of hers borne at Blois, ſhe excuſed her ſelfe vpon her being with childe, ſaying that ſhee thought it was a Sonne, for that ſhee found herſelfe otherwiſe diſpoſed then ſhe had beene, and that they muſt conſider well thereon. But being much preſt by the king, ſhee ſaid vnto him that ſhee would doe what hee pleaſed, not thinking that what they intended was ſo readie.

But earely the next day in the morning they brought her a drinke, a bole and tablets, all of one compoſition as they ſaid, but ſo varied in form, to the end ſhe might take that which was leaſt diſtaſtfull vnto her. She tooke the poiſon, not diſtruſting any thing vntill ſhe felt her ſelfe oppreſt with great pangs, which made her be deliuered of a daughter, K that was ſome fiue moneths olde, after which ſhee had vomitings and ſtrange voidings which quencht all the force and vigour that remained in her. Being neere her end, the king came to viſit her in a mourning weed, ſeeming to be much afflicted; whome ſhe comforted, and among other words, ſhee ſaid vnto him, That ſhee reioyced that ſhe was going to a quiet kingdome, not ſubiect to alteration, as worldlie ſtates be, that ſhee did not craue pardon of him, knowing in her conſcience that ſhee had neuer willingly offended him. She recommended her waiting women and ſome French officers, whome ſhee had not meanes to recompence for the ſeruices they had done her, and in the end of October, on Saint Francis eue ſhe dyed, Chriſtian like, She was lamented of all Spaine, where they did beleeue that this Princeſſe was a Saint, ſhe L was aſſiſted in her ſickeneſſe for matters of conſcience by the Cardinall of Eſpinoſa, Inquiſitor generall, D. Bernard of Freſueda biſhop of Cuenca, the kings Confeſſor, Frier Dominicke de Chauas, another of the kings Confeſſors, who had alſo beene to the prince D. Charles, and others: She was interred in the Monaſterie of las Deſcalſas built at Madrid by the Infanta D. Ioane, Mother to D. Sebaſtian king of Portugall. The Gentlewoman which had ſlaundred her, and was the cauſe of her misfortune, was married in the Countrie, and died there: the lady of honour ſerued her daughter D. Iſabella Clara Eugenia: the reſt were ſent backe into France, from whome they vnderſtood theſe particularities.

Speech of the Queen D. Iſabell dying to the king.

A notable example of the practiſes of Princes Courts, of the vanitie and inſtabilitie M of worldlie greatneſſe, and of the miſeries wherein kings plunge themſelues by ſuſpitions and bad impreſſions lightly receiued, and eſpecially how they ſtray dangerouſly from the dutie which they owe to God and nature, when they enterlace religion with their human policies to countenance their actions. Whilſt the duke of Alua ſeeks to afflict the towns of the low countries by ſtrange & intollerable impoſitions, exacting the tenth

peny

1568

A penie of all marchandiſe that was ſold, and the twentieth penie of euery mans eſtate. He began to quarrell with the Queene of England, pretending that ſhee had ſtaied a great ſumme of money, which was ſent by ſea out of Spaine into the Lowe Countries, the which (ſaid the Duke) did belong vnto the King of Spaine his maſter, whom ſhe ſhould intreat with all brotherly loue. Whereunto the Queene anſwered, that ſhee was duely informed, the ſaid money did belong to certaine Merchants of Genoua, and hauing then occaſion to vſe it, ſhee would ſtaie it for a time, and pay them reaſonable intereſt. Deſpes Embaſſadour in England for the Catholike King, made great inſtance for this money, but he could get no other anſwer. Whereupon the Duke of Alba did preſently arreſt all the Engliſh merchants, with their ſhippes and goods that were at Antwerp, or

B within his gouernment. Whereupon all commerce was broken betwixt the king of Spaines ſubiects, and the Engliſh, who left the trade to Antwerp, and carried their goods to Hamborough. The Queene of England publiſhed a declaration of her proceeding in this buſineſſe, complaining that the Duke of Alba had dealt vniuſtly with her and her ſubiects; but all this could not procure any reſtitution for the Engliſh Merchants, who had letters of repriſall granted them againſt king Philips ſubiects, to recouer the loſſes which they had ſuſtained by theſe arreſts, both in Spaine and the Lowe Countries. The Engliſh Merchants became men of warre, and ſo many went to ſea, ſome with a deſire of gaine, and others with hope to recouer what they had loſt, as not a ſhippe could paſſe betwixt Spaine and the Lowe Countries, to the ruine of many poore men: wher-

C of great complaints came to the Court of Spaine. The Duke of Alba ſeeing what a breach he had made betwixt thoſe two States, to the preiudice of his maſters ſubiects; ſeeking to repaire the errour which he had committed, he ſent Chriſtopher d'Aſſonuille, a Counſeller of Eſtate, to the Queene of England to reconcile this quarrell; but ſhee refuſed to heare him, vnleſſe he came from the king his maſter, and had letters of credit, ſigned with his owne hand: but comming from the Duke of Alba, her Maieſtie ſent him to treat with her Councell; which hee hauing no warrant to doe, returned without audience. Yet ſhee let him vnderſtand, that although ſhee found her ſelfe much wronged, ſhee would not take Armes vnleſſe the Duke of Alba began. The like ſhee wrot to the king of Spaine, complaining of the Duke of Alba's preſumption. Soone after, the Duke

D ſent Chiapin Vitelli Marquis of Cetone, with ſome others, to demand the money, and to free all arreſts of either ſide, but they effected not any thing: whereupon the Duke ſold all the Engliſh mens goods that were vnder arreſt. Theſe were the ſeeds of warre betwixt the two Princes, which continued vnto their deaths, to the ruine of many of their ſubiects, eſpecially Spaniards and Portugals.

Quarrell betwixt the duke of Alba and the Engliſh.

Engliſhmen and their goods arreſted in the Lowe Countries and Spaine.

Queen of England refuſeth to heare the duke of Albas Embaſſador.

The Princes of Germanie hearing what cruelties and ſpoiles the duke of Alba and his Spaniards committed in the Lowe Countries, they preſt the Emperour Maximilian to deale in thoſe matters, betwixt the king and his ſubiects there; yea to take knowledge thereof as Emperour: ſaying, that without doubt the Prouinces which are beyond the riuer of Eſcaut, towards the Eaſt, were of the Imperiall Iuriſdiction; as thoſe that are on E this ſide were of the ſoueraignetie of France. But the Emperour did not thinke it fit to vſe his Imperiall authority, but prayers and interceſſions. Whereupon he ſent the Archduke Charles his brother into Spaine, vpon colour to aske the king of Spaines aduice for the mariage of his two daughters: and withall hee had giuen him ample inſtructions to treat with him touching the affaires of his Netherlands, and to intreat him by all faire meanes, to grant a generall pardon to his people there, and to call home the duke of Alba and his Spaniards; aſſuring him that in ſo doing, he ſhould be obeyed: but if he did perſiſt in that cruell perſecution, they would be releeued both with men and money from Germanie, the which he could not preuent.

Charles Archduke of Auſtria ſent into Spaine

F The Archduke came to Genoua, where he imbarkt in the duke of Sauoys gallies, and was receiued by the king of Spaine with great honour: his embaſſage was very pleaſing touching that which concerned the mariages of his two neeces, for he found the king diſpoſed to marrie the elder, the which had bin appointed for the vnfortunate Prince D. Charles his ſonne. And as for the ſecond, which the Emperour deſired to match with the king of Portugall, who was yet very yong, hee had a promiſe from king Philip to imploy

Treatiſe of mariage.

1568 himſelfe to haue the French king marrie her, although he had alreadie demanded the other; and they were entred into treatie, by the means of the Cardinalles of Guiſe and Eſpinoſa. But as for the affaires of the Netherlands, the Archduke could not obtaine anie thing in fauor of them that were baniſhed, nor of the poore prouinces afflicted. For making relation vnto him of the ſpeeches held by the Princes Electors to the Emperor, and that they pretended he had a right of protection ouer thoſe people, and that hee ſhould make himſelfe iudge of their quarrels, as depending of the Empire, it did much incenſe the king, who anſwered, that the Germanes were much deceiued in their conceptions in that regard, and that he had ſufficient right and power to ſhew that he was a ſoueraign Prince, and did not acknowledge any other ſuperior on earth. He knew well that the duke of Alba had vſed ſome exceſſe, but he was woont to ſay, that he had rather looſe all thoſe Prouinces, with others, than to haue rebellious ſubiects, eſpecially in matters which concerned religion. G H

Thus the Archduke was diſmiſt, hauing receiued a preſent of 100000 crownes, to helpe him to furniſh his frontier places againſt the Turke, with many iewels of price. And he had commiſſion when hee came into Germanie, to doe the ceremonies of their contracting, in his name, with his future Spouſe. Returning by Italie he did viſit his ſiſters and neeces, the ducheſſes of Ferrara, Florence, and Mantoua, and then he came vnto the Emperour, to giue him an account of his negotiation with king Philip, whom hee had left ingaged in a warre againſt the Moores of Granado, almoſt as difficult as that of the Netherlands. I

8

Moores.

Cauſes of the rebellion of the Moores of Granado.

Wee haue formerly made mention of the diſcontents of the Mooriſh nation, dwelling in the mountaines, plaines, and valleyes, and in ſome of the good townes in the countries of Granado and Murcia; which was by reaſon of the contempt they were in with the naturall Spaniards, whom they call old Chriſtians: among whom they liued in continual vexation, eſpecially by the Clergie, and officers of the Inquiſition, and alſo by them of the Iuſtice, which was not equally diſtributed vnto them. But that whereof they moſt complained, was the kings Edict, whereof we haue made mention, tending to alter their manners, their apparell, and their language: whereof the Preſident D. Pedro de Deſa was appointed to ſee the execution, with the aſſiſtance of the Gouernour Domingo Lope de Mendoſa marquеſſe of Mondejar, and the aduice of the Auditors & Counſellers of the Chancerie in the Parliament of Granado, and of the Archbiſhop if need were, wherein they found no ſmall difficultie. K

To begin therefore by gentleneſſe, the Preſident gaue charge to Alphonſo de Horoſco, Chanon of S. Sauior, which is a Collegiall Church in the quarter of Albayzin of the citie of Granado, beeing in a manner wholly inhabited by Moores, to perſuade them to receiue the Edict, yea to demaund it themſelues: but hauing imparted ſome copies vnto them, they reiected it, ſending vnto the Preſident and Gouernour, George de Baeſa Proctor general of that nation, and Francis Nugnes Muley a knight, one of the moſt auncient among them, to intreat them to deferre the publication of the Edict, vntill they had acquainted the king with their reaſons, and the inconueniences that might growe by the execution thereof. But notwithſtanding all their ſayings and allegations, the Edict was proclaimed the firſt of Ianuarie, 1567; and to ſhew the diligence of officers, all the baths and hot-houſes of the citie were inſtantly forbidden, and moſt of them beaten downe: yet they vſed ſome moderation, for that during the yeare 1567 there were not any penalties leuied of them that did infringe it. In the meane time they ſent their deputies to Court, where by the meanes of ſome noble men, they procured audience of the Councell; and there were ſome of opinion, that if they would haue the Edict ſtand in force, the execution ſhould be ſuſpended, as it beene in the time of the Emperour Charles, and of his mother. The Cardinall of Eſpinoſa was of another opinion, and brought all the reſt to concurre with him; which was, that the Edict ſhould bee ſpeedily executed in all points, and the penalties exacted vpon them that ſhould not obey. There was among the new Chriſtians, ſome that were deſcended of the blood of the auncient kings of the Moores, the which were honoured in Spaine, & well reſpected in Court; among which, D. Alphonſo of Granado Venegas laboured by good perſwaſions to hinder this raſh execution, L M

Counſell raſh of Cardinall Eſpinoſa.

A cution, but he was willed to deſiſt, for ſuch was the kings pleaſure. So as all the Moores of the citie, townes and mountaines of Alpuxarra, of the boroughs and villages towards the Sea, were brought to deſpaire, apprehending this ſtrange alteration, euen in their language & habites, which perſuaded thē that they were thereby reduced into ſeruitude, and confuſion of their houſes and families: for this nation is verie curious to keep remembrances and regiſters of their families as by a tradition of their anceſtors, after the maner of the Arabians and Iewes. And then beganne to appeare the diſtruſt they had of them, all the Moores hauing beene commaunded by proclamation to keepe themſelues within their dwellings and pariſhes, and for all them that were come out of the villages into the Albayzin to depart: the which was grieuous vnto them, for that the inhabitants of that B place being moſt Marchants and Artiſans, they had need of many labourers and workemen for their ordinarie works, which they did vſually draw out of the Countrey, and of their owne nation. They ſaw that the marqueſſe of Mondejar had leuied 300 ſouldiers for the ſafetie (ſaid he) of the towne, and to haue better aſſurance of the Moores reſiding there; if anie one of them did owe anie thing, he was preſently ſubiect to arreſt, and in like maner they that were cautions for auy other, and by this means the priſons were full: The officers of juſtice vnder colour of ſeeking for ſuch as hauing no meanes to pay, were retired into the villages and mountains, they entred into the houſes where they ſaid they were hidden, & cōmitted many inſolencies, yea they ſought out old actiōs, for the which the Moores had compounded with their parties, and drew them into new ſuites. Finally, C as ſoone as they heard that this Edict was reſolued in court, this nation was ſo baſely reſpected by all the old Chriſtians, both clergie and others, as euerie man preſumed to vex & oppreſſe them, eſteeming them no better than bruit beaſts; wherfore ſeeing themſelues reduced to that miſerable eſtate worſe than if they had bin common ſlaues, & yet fearing worſe, they concurred all in one mind to reuolt. Thoſe of the Albayzin who had more to looſe, incited the reſt to begin, & they expected meanes from them of the Albayzin, and councel how they ſhould behaue themſelues, for they were men of vnderſtanding, ciuill, and better experienced in the world, than the inhabitants of the mountaines, whereas the force lay, but they needed councel: yea there did ordinarily cōuerſe among them thieues, baniſhed men, and ſuch as were condemned by juſtice, who deſired nothing more than D to ſee ſome diſordred ſeditiō. There was a bold audacious Moore dwelling in the Albayzin, his name was Farrax Aben Farrax, a dier by his trade, yet he ſaid he was deſcended frō the Abencxaraces ſometimes famous knights among the Granadins. This man was as a trumpet to ſtirre vp the reſt, he went & came to the mountaines, townes & villages where the Moores dwelt, & carried them aduice and aduertiſements, how they ſhould gouerne themſelues in a generall reuolt, which was intended the 1. of Ianuarie 1568, the ſame day that the city of Granado had bin yeelded vp to the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Iſabella, but being impatient to attend, he called before the time a troup of thieues diſguiſed after the Turkiſh maner, & made them to enter into the Albaizin by certain places where the walls were low & ful of holes, on Chriſtmas eue at night, when making a great noiſe, he awaked E them, ſhewing an enſigne diſplaied inuiting thē to come with their armes into the ſtreet, for the time (ſaid he) is come that we muſt ſhew our ſelues men of courage, for that there were a good number of Turks arriued in Alpuxarra, which were come to fauor them out of Barbarie. This alarme did trouble all the other quarters of the town, for that they were in jealouſie touching the execution of the Edict: for otherwiſe they had not bin moued, being no ſtrange thing to heare a noiſe in the Albaizin, the Moores being accuſtomed to make all their ſports with tumults. Notwithſtanding all this, Farrax could not draw anie one out of his houſe, they thinking he had been drunke, but they cried to him out of their windowes, that he ſhould go ſleep, and that they had nothing to do with his follies. This F troupe of thieues had walked vp and downe all the night, and no man durſt goe & view them. In the end Farrax led them to the place from whence they came, and they were not followed: the next day it was ſaid they were thieues that were come to ſpoile. There were ſome informations taken, and there was an order made that there ſhould be gardes throughout the citie, whereunto the Moores ſhould contribute. The ſuſpition increaſing, and ſome inſolencies being done to them of this nation, they came vnto the Preſi-

1568

Farrax Aben Farrax firſt motiue of ſedition.

1568 dent, beſeeching him not to ſuffer them to be outraged, proteſting that they neuer had G will nor thought to rebell, that there was no reaſon to intangle them with other mens crimes, with whom they had no intelligence, and for caution of the innocencie of the Inhabitants of the Albayzin they offered, if it pleaſed him, that 200 of the chiefe amongſt them would yeeld themſelues priſoners: the which being at the firſt refuſed, was afterwards accepted, when they had ſomewhat diſcouered that they were all conſpired together, and that they had intelligence with the Turkes of Alger, by a packet which was ſur-priſed: where there was found a book and letters which diſcouered much of their practiſes.

Superſtitions amõg the Moors.

Among theſe people there were certaine fantaſtike and frantike ſpirites, which diſ-perſed certain prophecies amõg the people, which they ſaid were old, by the which they H had a deliuerer promiſed them, who ſhould deliuer them from the oppreſſions of the Chriſtians, the which indeed were great and intollerable, to men whom they made btleeue were free, and that they enioyed the Lawes equally with others. This nation thus tired, ſuperſtitious by nature, and nothing inſtructed in the Chriſtian religion, had a ſud-daine deſire in this perſecution to call backe Mahomet, and to abhorre the name of Ieſus Chriſt, whereupon they fell into open rebellion againſt the King and his magiſtrates, and the firſt murders which they committed vpon the Chriſtians, were certaine Clerks yong practizers, which came from Vxiear in the Alpuxarra, to Granado, to paſſe the holydaies there, as they had vſually done euerie yeere, and paſſing by the villages, they made good

Murders done by the Moores.

cheere, vnder colour that they did belong to the Iuſtice. Of the which they diſpatched I ſome, and then they did ſet vpon a troupe of 50 ſouldiers of the garriſon of Adra, who went alſo to Granado with the like inſolencies, whom they ſlue in a maner all. The marqueſſe of Mondejar, who was gone to Court to aduertiſe the King of the eſtate of the affaires, returned with commaundement to ſuppreſſe the rebellion by armes, and the gouernours, lords, knights, townes and comminalties thereabouts had charge to aſſiſt him.
Wherefore hauing taken aduice of the magiſtrates of the royall Audience and others of the citie, and eſpecially of the archbiſhop, hee prepared himſelfe to ſet vpon them that were alreadie riſen in confuſion, and without order; but there being among them the a-bouenamed Farrax, one Daut, and Ferdinand of Cordoua, and De Valor, a knight of the Moores, who ſaid that hee was of the royall race of Aben Humega, deſcending from the K prophet Mahomet, they aſſembled at Breſnar in the Alpuxarra, to make election of a head, where after much contention, they did chooſe this Ferdinand, to whom hauing gi-

Aben Humeia made king of the Moores rebelles.

uen the title of a King, he called himſelfe Muley Mahomet Aben Humeia. Farrax, who would gladly haue beene, and had in a maner promiſed it himſelfe, could not attaine vnto it, but was content to be Alguazil maior, which is the ſecond dignitie, like to that of Conſtable. This Aben Humeia was verie wel known in the city of Granado for his vanitie and other vices, which decreaſed not in this great aduancement. If we conſider wel (by the report of ſuch as had ſeene this war) the number of them that had rebelled, the expectation that infinite others would rebell, being of the ſame mind, if they had well managed the meanes which they had gathered together, as of Churches and Chriſtians hou- L ſes which they ſpoiled, the neereneſſe of the kings of Fez and Marroc, and of the Turkes of Alger, together with the bad agreement which was betwixt the gouernours and the royall Iuſtice of Granado, and the neighbour prouinces, who contended without all reaſon, touching their manner of proceeding againſt theſe mutines, euerie one ſeeking to make vſe of his office, and to fil his purſe with ſo many goodly confiſcations, & rich preies which fell daily. Without doubt there was matters in this warre ſufficient to haue ouer-throwne the Crowne of Spaine, if it had beene managed by men of more diſcretion and iudgement than Aben Humeia, and Farrax Aben Farrax.

It is not to be imagined what inſolences they cõmitted in the firſt furie of their raigne. M
They ſlew all Chriſtians males aboue ten yeres old that they could get, eſpecially clergie mẽ, with al Iudges & officers of iuſtice; the womẽ & children they made ſlaues, they ſpoiled churches & fired them with moſt of the houſes, yea their owne: ſo as they made the boroughs & good villages inhabitable, & in a ſhort time grew ſauage, liuing among woods and rocks, where they made their retreats, being almoſt inacceſſible, drawing their wiues

and

and children after them, and abandoning them vpon any difficultie or let, without any feeling of loue or charitie. He might tearme himſelfe happie among the Spaniards, who beeing ſurprized in his houſe by Aben Humeias men, did meet with ſome Moore of his acquaintance: and truely there were ſome, though very few, who mooued with compaſſion, did hazard their liues to ſaue Chriſtians, from whom they had receiued ſome pleaſure, the which is not ſtrange among reaſonable creatures, ſeeing it is often ſeene among bruit beaſts. Farrax Aben Farrax hauing had charge to gather together the gold, ſiluer, and mooueable goods which had beene abandoned to the ſpoyle, to make a ſtocke for the warre, and to buie armes in Barbarie (whereof they had great want) he committed ſo many inſolencies and thefts, as afterwards he was not imployed in any buſineſſe, neither durſt he ſhew himſelfe before king Aben Humeia, who hauing paſt like a violent ſtream, or rather a lightning by Locrin, Lanjaron, Orgiba, Pugneyra, Ferreyra, Iubiles, Vxicar, and other places of the valley of Sierra Neuada, hee was confirmed king at Andarax, whereas he made Aben Zigni Alcaide or Captaine, and Michel de Roxas his father in law his Treaſurer generall, and Hernando Caguer one of his Lieutenants or Marſhals: it is hee who ſaued moſt of the Chriſtians from ſlaughter, and ſpared their goods in this warre. This tumultuarie king ſeeing himſelfe followed, hee threatned the citie of Almerie, hee made Salobregna to wauer, with other maritime places, whither the mountaines and the valleys ſtretch, and in like manner all that coaſt which is vpon the declining of Sierra Vermeja, vnto Gibraltar and Maruela, ſo as in leſſe than fifteene daies this miſcheife ran aboue ſixtie leagues, and the law of Mahomet was openly profeſt among them. Then the Moores dwelling in the Albayzin at Granado were in extreme danger, there beeing a great garriſon, and ſouldiers comming thither daily from all parts: and (that which moued the Granadins to choler and compaſſion) many men and women came naked thither, hauing eſcaped the cruell hands of the Moores, for in all places both champane and mountaines, the old and new Chriſtians had their dwellings mingled, but the Moores were more in number, and ſtronger. The Moores about Salobregna contained themſelues long, for that their ſeat was not ſtrong, as within the mountaines, neither did they reuolt, but through the violence that was done them by the kings ſouldiers, and by his Lieutenants, who were moſt inſolent and diſobedient to their Commanders in all this warre. 1568

Farrax Aben Farrax diſappointed.

Salobregna and Motril are vpon the ſea, where there growes much good wine, the riches of the inhabitants. In the citie of Almerie neere vnto them were aboue ſixe hundred families of the Moores, who did not ſtirre, and were preſerued by the Gouernour: notwithſtanding that, one Marc Ramir a Moore, with ſome other indiſcreet men thereabouts ſought to murther him. The Lords of villages, who had no houſes of ſtrength, did wiſely to retire themſelues, for wherſoeuer they were the weaker, they were ſet vpon and ſlaine: as it happened to D. Iohn Zapate, who ſought to make it good in the Church of Guejares de Fondon, where he was forced and burnt with 150. men.

The Marqueſſe of Mondejar, and he of Velez, raiſed either of them an armie, by order from the Councell, and inuaded the Moores, one by Granado, and the other by Baſa, the Marqueſſe of Zenete bending towards the ſea to Almerie. Theſe two Commanders neuer ioyned during all this warre, although they came neere together vpon the declining of the mountaines that were betwixt them, which were in a manner plaine towards the Weſt, for they were of very different humors; D. Lewis Faiardo marqueſſe of Velez was proud, ambitious, impatient of all ſuperioritie, and bloodie: and hee of Mondejar was milde and courteous, ſeeking rather to perſuade, than to force the rebels: the marqueſſe of Velez was ſuddaine in his exploits, he of Mondejar was ſtaied, and did not aduance without great deliberation, and therefore he was taxed to be ſlowe, and to regard his owne priuate intereſt, for that he was Lord of many places in thoſe mountaines, and other parts of the countrie, which were vnpeopled by this warre, to the preiudice of his rights and reuenewes. The firſt lodging his campe made beeing gone to field, was at Alendin, and from thence to Padul, which is the firſt borough of the valley of Lecrin, hauing with him the nobility and the troupes of Granado and Andaluſia: he of Velez, that of Murcia, Baſa, and the neighbour places. In the abſence of the marqueſſe of Mondejar Diſpoſitions of the marqueſſe of Mondejar, & he of Velez, Generals againſt the Moores.

1568 the Earle of Teudille his ſonne commaunded in Granado for martiall matters, beeing G lodged in the Alhambra, the Caſtle and royall Palace there. At Dureal a league from Padul Laurence d'Auila was lodged with the bands of ſeuen Townes of the iuriſdiction of Granado, and Gonſal d'Alcantara with a company of horſe, making as it were the fore-ward. They were charged in the night by a multitude of Moores, whereof Michel de Granado de Xaba was the chief, thinking to diſorder them, but the ſouldiers made it good, and repulſed their enemies, of whom there were two hundred ſlaine, whereat Aben Humeia was in ſuch a rage for this bad ſucceſſe, as hee had a deſire to cut off Xabas head.
Theſe two marqueſſes were not ſole Commaunders of the warre in that Countrey, for euerie Gouernour or Captaine of a place would make enterpriſes of his owne head, imparting nothing vnto them, nor attending their commaundements, for euery man aimed H at ſpoile. D. Garcia de Villaroel gouernour of Almerie went to field to ſurprize a troupe of Moores, which were aſſembled at Benahaduz, and threatned to beſiege Almerie, whom Alphonſo Habis de Vanegas a faithfull Moore he diſperſed, and ſlue many of them, among other Brahen Cacis their captaine. There was with D. Garcia. D. Alphonſo Habis de Vanegas a Moore, of the bloud of the auncient kings of Granado, who had beene ſolicited by the rebells to be their King, the which hee reiected, and perſiſted faithfully in the ſeruice of king Philip.

The marqueſſe of Mondejar paſſing on into Alpuxarra, tooke the pace of Tablado by force, a place of importance for the paſſage, being betwixt two mountaines, where hee built a bridge ouer a very deepe valley, the which being broken, or kept, they cannot go from the one to the other, but muſt fetch a compaſſe of foure great leagues. The gard of I this bridge was committed to Pedro d'Arroio with certaine companies, and then the armie marched towards Orgiba, the which was abandoned by the Moores being amazed.
Many women and children were freed, and they that had defended the Tower of that place ſeuenteene dayes, where the Moores had giuen diuerſe aſſaults, and reduced them to great want of victualls. There was the like deliuery of priſoners with the gaine of ſome booty made at Poqueira, where Aben Humeia had lodged with a great number of Moors, but they durſt not ſtay. There they had newes that the garriſon which they had left at Ta-Defeate and death of Pedro d'Arroio of the Moores. blado had been ſurpriſed and cut in peeces with their Captaine, who was found yet panting amongſt the dead, two daies after, whenas the marqueſſe recouered this paſſage againe, without the which they cannot come nor goe from the campe to Granado. D. Al- K phonſo de Reynoſo was left there to keepe a more carefull gard, and had expreſſe commandement to ſtaie the ſouldiers which retired with their bootie without leaue: The greateſt diſorder which hindered this warre, was the diſobedience of the new leuied ſouldiers to their Commaunders, who longed ſtill to be at home when they had gotten any ſpoile:
and it was a hard matter to ſtay them, for they had no pay. The Moores in like manner were without diſcipline, being ignorant of warre, and nothing apt to armes, yea moſt of them were vnarmed, labourers, ſhepheards, and Artiſans, who could caſt ſtones, and handle ſlings well; their captaines were not much more skilfull in their charges and due-ties, but being once acquainted with the Turkes they recouered Croſſebowes, and har-quebuſes, and did learne to vſe them. Their greateſt feare in Spaine was, that they ſhould L haue intelligence, with the Turkes of Alger, and the Moores of Barbarie their neighbours, the which they could not preuent. The marqueſſe of Mondejar purſuing Aben Humeia, hee brought his armie to Pitres de Ferreira, whereas Ferdinand Caguer made offer of an accord, and continued it vpon all occaſions; for hee was the leaſt deſperate among all the Captaines of the Moores. At this place of Pitres, the Moores fought and ſlew many of the marqueſſes men, but they preſently left the place, and retired to Iubiles, whereas Aben Humeia committed great cruelties, euen vpon the Moores of that place, who did not ſodainely ſatisfie his deſire. There was an old caſtle which they had rampi-red, with an intent to make it a fort, and their ſtore-houſe for the warre, and had carried M moſt of their ſpoyles thither, the which notwithſtanding they could not defend: for although the greateſt part of their forces were there, yet they had not the hearts to fight, and being to diſlodge, they were readie, beeing purſued, to kill a great number of Chriſtians, priſoners, of all ages, women and children, whoſe husbands and fathers they had ſlaine before, but ſome that had more humanitie hindred it; their retreat was to Ver-cheul.

A cheul. This miſerable troupe of women and children came and preſented themſelues before the Marqueſſe, hideous, leane, bare, and halfe naked, praiſing God with teares for his comming and their deliuerance. The Moores which kept the caſtle fledde alſo, where they found three hundred men, and a thouſand and fiue hundred women, who were in like manner ſet at libertie: but it was vnhappie for many, yea for moſt of thoſe poore women; for the campe beeing lodged, hauing placed moſt of thoſe women in a Church, and ſuch as could not enter beeing laid before it for that night, it happened that a diſordered ſouldier comming about midnight among them, ſought to take away a maiden to abuſe her, who being ſtaied and defended by the other women, one of them drew the ſouldiers ſword and hurt him: this villaine leauing his hold, began to crie out to B armes, ſaying, that there were Moores diſguiſed and armed among thoſe women which had hurt him in that manner; whereupon they came running in diſorder, and without any further inquirie, diſcharged their peeces vpon theſe poore creatures, ſo as in a manner all they that were before the Church, were either ſlaine or ſore hurt, thoſe within it were preſerued by the ſhutting of the doores: in the meane time the captaines came, and cauſed the maſſacre to ceaſe. The truth of this fact beeing knowne, the marqueſſe was very much grieued, and cauſed many of theſe murthering ſouldiers to bee hanged; and then he ſent the reſt of the women and children with a conuoy to Granado, where they receiued them, and gaue them great almes. This pittifull ſpectacle increaſed their hatred againſt the Moores dwelling in the Albayzin, whom they diſtruſted much, for they C were held to be ten thouſand men able to beare armes; and therefore the Earle of Teudilla, to be better aſſured, lodged ſouldiers in their houſes: whereof thinking to complaine, they were ſharpely reprehended, ſo as they repented that they had not reuolted when as Farrax did ſolicite them.

1568

Exceſſe of a diſordered ſouldier.

Moores of the Albayzin in great numbers.

Whileſt that the Marqueſſe of Mondejar imployed himſelfe vertuouſly, to chaſe the Moores and their king, who were in the mountaines and ſtrong places of Alpuxarra, hee of Velez with ſuch men as he had, gathered together in the territories of Valencia, Murcia, Baſa, Lorca, and other neere places, entred into the realme of Granado, by Tauernas, hauing fiue thouſand foot and three hundred good horſe, and came and charged a troupe of Moores, who had fortified themſelues at Guecija, vnder D a diuelliſh captaine called Gorri: who, in viewe of the marqueſſe campe, cauſed many Chriſtian men to be beheaded, whom he had kept priſoners, to expoſe them as a ſpectacle to them that ſhould come firſt to aſſayle him, and then he diſlodged without fighting.

Exploits of the marqueſſe of Velez.

The Chriſtian armie marching towards Filix to beſiege it, they were preuented by D. Garcia de Villaroel gouernour of Almerie, who would haue the honour to free this place, preſuming that the Moores which held it, would abandon it as ſoone as they ſhould ſee him approach, thinking it to be the marqueſſe his fore ward: but he was deceiued, for hee found them ready to make head againſt him, beeing many; wherefore he retired with all ſpeed to the marqueſſe his campe, to whom hee made his excuſe, and E gaue him to vnderſtand, that among theſe Moores, there were Turkes come out of Barbarie to ſuccour them: and then he gaue him a conuoy to returne vnto Almerie, from whence he might not long bee abſent. The marqueſſe paſſing on, found the Moores which were come forth in battell, to incounter them which came to diſcouer them; beeing come to fight, they found they were not thoſe whom they ſought, and knowing that it was the marqueſſe of Velez, who was a reſolute man, and was called among them, Ybilis Arraezel Hadit, that is to ſay, a deuill with an iron head, their courage was ſomewhat quailed, yet they did fight, and did rallie themſelues thrice together, but in the end they were forced to quit the place, and retire to the mountaines, F hauing loſt about ſeauen hundred men, and among them ſome women, which had fought deſperately, three captaines, Fulcy, Tezi, and the ſonne of Porto Carrero de Xergal, where two of his ſiſters, maidens, died alſo. On the marqueſſe de Velez ſide, there were both ſlaine and hurt, but they did not publiſh the number.

Incounter at Filix.

The fort of Filix by this retreat was wonne, where they found much good ſtuffe, gold, ſiluer, ſilkes, pearle, victualles, and a great number of women and children

Moores,

1568 Moores, whom they had abandoned, wherewith the ſouldiers being enricht, they disbanded by troupes to carrie their booties to their houſes; wherefore the Marqueſſe was forced to retire to fortifie his armie. They of Guadix defeated a troupe of Moores at the ſame time at Deyre, moſt of which had come out of the Marquiſate of Zenete: they ſlue 400 men, and tooke aboue 1000 women & children, with great ſpoiles. The chief of this enterpriſe was Pedro Arias d'Auila, and they ſaid it was one of the beſt exploits of all this warre. G

King Aben Humeia being purſued by the marqueſſe of Mondejar, and was then at Vxixar, a place ſituated in the middeſt of Alpuxarra, the which he had fortified as an aſſured retreate, and had about him 6000 men; yet at the approach of the marqueſſe, this man who was neither valiant nor of any commaund, retired with his troupes to Palerne. Fernand el Caguer continued ſtill his practiſes of peace, ſo as he had conference with Ierome d'Apont and Iohn Sanches: And D. Alphonſo de Granado, Venega, wrought ſo vpon the marqueſſe word and promiſe, as he drew Aben Humeia to a parle with him, but at the noiſe of ſome ſhot inconſiderately diſcharged, hee was ſo amazed, and fell into ſuch diſtruſt, as he fled away, neither was it poſſible to bring him backe againe; and in this perturbation he ſlew his father in law Michel de Roxas, and cauſed ſome other chiefe Moores to be ſlaine, ſaying that they would haue betraied him: he put away his wife, and ſware that he would not leaue one of the familie of Roxas aliue, the which did purchaſe him many enemies, and he blemiſhed his reputation more, when he abandoned the fort of Palerne, and all that hee had, retiring into the moſt deſart places of the mountaines. The marqueſſe being come to Palerne, he took the mother and ſiſters of the baſe king, with many other women of qualitie Moores, and ſet free a great number of Chriſtians that were captiues, & from thence hee led his armie towards Andarax. That of the marqueſſe of Velez being ſomewhat repaired, was then at Ohanes, neere vnto the other, where there were many Moores gathered together, whom hee did fight withall, and diſperſt: and it was thought that the two armies ſhould haue ioyned, and that the marqueſſe of Velez ſhould haue beene ſole commaunder, whereunto hee did aſpire, and the ſouldiers deſired it, but either of them went his courſe. The marqueſſe of Mondejar returned to Vxixar. One of the goodlieſt booties of this warre, fell into the hands of D. Garcia de Villaroel, and of D. Franceſco de Cordoua, being ioyned with the forces of Almerie, and others whom they led againſt the Moores, who had fortified at Inox, in rockes that were almoſt inacceſſible: for hauing diſlodged them they found to the value of aboue 500000 crownes: but the diuiſion of this prey bred great diſſention among them. H I K

Aben Humeia killes his father in law and other Moores.

Bootie taken from the Moors

Profit was the matter they chiefly aymed at that went to this warre, except the Marqueſſe of Mondejar, who tended to peace, and to ſaue the Moores that were reuolted, ſoliciting them rather to acknowledge their faults, and to ſhew themſelues worthie of pardon, than to ruine them by armes, and therefore hee was not pleaſing to the ſouldiers. Hauing led his armie to Guajares of the iuriſdiction of Salobregna, whither many Moores had retired themſelues, and fortified among the rockes and precipices (which were they that firſt receiued the Turks and Moores that came to ſuccour them out of Barbary) hee ſent to diſcouer them, but to their loſſe that went, being in a manner all ſlaine; thoſe of name and qualitie were Lewis Ponce de Leon, Auguſtin Venegas, Gonſalo de Orugna, the viſitor Ronquillo and Iohn de Villaroel: being charged, the next day they made great reſiſtance, but at night they retired, leauing their old men in that lodging, with many women and children, whom the marqueſſe (being incenſed with the loſſe he had the day before) cauſed to be ſlaine in his preſence, contrary to his maner. The rocks, woods, & caues (beeing vnfurniſhed of all prouiſion for victualles) were no fit places to entertaine great numbers of Moores, who had ſuch great troups of women, children & ſlaues with them, as if they had bin preſt by arms, hunger & cold, with other neceſſities, would haue forced them often to haue changed their lodgings; & they that came out of Barbary might eaſily foreſee, that the end of their reuolt muſt needs be death or captiuitie: ſeeing they had no means to prouide better retreats to keepe their goods, wiues, & children, nor any good fort neere vnto the ſea, with victuals and artillery to maintaine a ſiege at all euents, and in the meane time to refreſh themſelues there, & to retire ſuch as were wounded, & to repaire themſelues L M

Defeat of Chriſtians.

Crueltie of the marqueſſe of Mondejar.

A thẽſelues after any loſſe: war is maintaind by this means,& when there is queſtion of any accord,it is concluded with better cõditions. Theſe defects being knowne,was the cauſe that theſuccors which they had frõ Afrik,being al volũtaries,were weak & came ſlowly: & they that came once to ſee it,were ſoon diſtaſted,& being once returnd came no more, & diſſuaded others. Finally,there appeared no other end in this natiõ,of their reuolt,but to powre forth their malice in reuenging themſelues moſt cruelly vpon the Chriſtians which they met,for the wrongs and iniuries which they had receiued, killing, burning, and murthering without iudgement or foreſight of that which might happen, and then they died content,without either loue, or naturall affection to their wiues and ſmall children,whom they made to trot after them like beaſts, and vpon the leaſt croſſe they did a- Moores vnnaturall.
B bandon them without griefe. This warre had continued three moneths, when as king Philip by ſome good inſpiration conſidering the deſolation of the countrie ,and the innocencie of many ſmall infants which could not diſtinguiſh the right hand from the left, he made a declaration,that his meaning was not that men children vnder tenne yeares old,and women vnder eleuen ſhould be reputed ſlaues, commanding them to receiue all Pardon for the Moores proclaimed.
Moores that would ſubmit themſelues to his mercie, and forbidding them to offer any violence to thoſe that had contained themſelues in peace. By theſe meanes many beeing forced by hunger and other diſcommodities,ſubmitted themſelues;who being inioyned to deliuer vp their armes,they brought old croſſe-bowes, halfe pikes, and ſuch like weapons,broken,and of no vſe: and when they demanded where there other armes were,
C which they vſed in incounters,they ſaid that the ſtrangers, and ſuch as would not ſubmit themſelues had taken them away. Notwithſtanding theſe good orders ſet downe by the king,the ſouldiers being inſolent and couetous, did them infinit miſcheifs, carrying many away,eſpecially women: not onely out of villages, but of thoſe which they found Inſolencie of the kings ſouldiers.
in the citie,euen in view of the magiſtrates,the which all men of honour blamed and deteſted;yea many ſtrangers which frequented in the citie of Granado, for the commerce, ſaid,that it would be a hard matter for Spaniards to make the Moores good Chriſtians, ſeeing they ſhewed in their actions, that they were not ſo themſelues, and that there was more inhumanitie in their behauiours, than in the moſt barbarous Pirats of Afrike.

D Aben Humeia hauing taken ſome breath, reſolued to continue the warre, ſending to intreat Vluccyaly to giue him ſome ſuccours. In the meane time, hee and Fernand Caguer came ſometimes in the night to ſolace themſelues with them that were reduced, and who had ſafegards to remaine in their houſes; whereof the marqueſſe beeing aduertiſed, he meant to haue them watcht and taken: but they had ſome notice thereof, and ſtood vpon their gards. They did foreſee that the Spring beeing come, the warre would bee more difficult,both for that the Moore ſhould find themſelues leſſe incommodated in their holes and ſauage retreats,as alſo for that the ſea would be more nauigable, and eaſie to paſſe the Moores and Turkes out of Barbarie, which prepared to come to their ſuccours; wherefore the marqueſſe of Mondejar ſent D. Alphonſo de Granado Venegas to E Court,to acquaint the king with the eſtate of thoſe affaires, and to tell him what proviſions he thought neceſſarie to end thoſe warres;and that if it pleaſed his Maieſtie to come vnto Granado, it may be it would be of more force than any other thing, and that howſoeuer, hee muſt cauſe the ſea to be kept, and the paſſage to bee ſtopt. The king thinking that his preſence was not ſo neceſſarie, was counſelled to ſend D. Iohn of Auſtria his brother thither, the reſpect of whom would make the Commaunders agree better. The which beeing concluded, commaundement was giuen to D. Lewis de Requeſens great Commaunder of Caſtille, who was them Embaſſador at Rome for king Philip, beeing alſo Lieutenant at ſea vnder D. Iohn, that hee ſhould come with F the galleys into Spaine, and bring with him the regiment of old ſouldiers which were at Naples;that beeing ioyned with D. Sancho de Leua, hee might ſtoppe the paſſage of the Turkes and Moores which came out of Barbarie.

As ſoone as it was knowne at Granado,and in the countrie where the warre was, that D. Iohn of Auſtria was appointed lieutenant for the king there,all the captains of towns & caſtles,& thoſe that were in the armies,with their ſouldiers, ſought to make worke for D.

Iohn

1568

Diſobedience and inſolencies of Chriſtian ſouldiers.

Iohn, committing all exceſſe, by ſpoyling, ranſacking, and murthering: for they thought G that D. Iohn would haue better diſcipline obſerued in the armies. D. Aluar Flores, and Anthonie d'Auila of Madrid, vnder colour of going to ſurpriſe Aben Humeia at Valor, whither they ſaid he ſhould come in the night to a certaine mariage, they ſpoyled all the places where they paſt, notwithſtanding that the Moores which inhabited them had ſafegards, and made them the beſt cheere they could. Being come to Valor, they found not Aben Humeia, but they did ranſome all the Moores of that place, notwithſtanding that they had ſubmitted themſelues to the kings obedience, carrying away their wiues

Defeat of Chriſtians.

and children as ſlaues, in contempt of the Kings Proclamation. In their returne they were charged and defeated, and the priſoners reſcued. There were loſt aboue a thouſand ſouldiers with their captaines, whereof the Moores ſent to make great excuſes to the H marqueſſe of Mondejar, offering to yeeld vp the armes which they had taken: the marqueſſe anſwered them, that they had done well, and that they ſhould doe ſo to all them that ſhould offer them violence, againſt his Maieſties protection and ſafegard. Diego Gaſca a cholericke captaine, being incenſed that they of Turon had ſlaine ſeuen of his ſouldiers which had gone forth to ſteale, led his companie thither to diſarme them, and to be reuenged: ſearching in a darke caue of a houſe, where there were certaine Moores hidden, he was ſlaine; whereupon his ſouldiers ſpoyled and ſet fire of the borough, ſlue a hundred and twentie Moores, and carried away the women. A Curat of Tortujos being grieued to ſee the Moores of the mountaine of Filabres liue in peace, for they had I not reuolted, he led certaine leud perſons with him, who ſurprizing them on a ſuddaine, ſpoyled them: others did the like at Bayarca, and at Picena, whereas they ſlue three of the marqueſſes gards, being ſent thither to preſerue them: but as they retired, carrying away many women and children, and much cattell, the Moores which had eſcaped, and had giuen the alarme to their neighbours, croſt them in their waies and ſlue them all.

At Granado hatred did ſo tranſport ſome of the Iuſtice, as they ſuffered the priſoners in the gaole to be armed, to kill the Moores of the Albayzin, who had put themſelues into priſon, as hoſtages in the beginning of the troubles, as wee haue ſaid, to whom they carried ſwords and other weapons ſecretly in the night, and bruted it abroad that Aben Humeia had intelligence, with the Moores of the Albayzin, to ſurprize the citie: and af- K terwards in the night they cried to armes, for that towards Sierra Neuada, they had ſeen a fire, to anſwer a ſigne which had beene giuen out of ſome houſe of the Albayzin:
whether it were true or not, the people ranne to the priſons, where finding the Chriſtian

Maſſacre of Moores which were in priſon.

priſoners armed, and in fight with the Moores, who had no armes, ioyning with them they ſlue a hundred and tenne, which were of the chiefe and richeſt Moores of the citie:
yet they durſt not ſet vpon the Albayzin, for that in euery houſe there were ſouldiers lodged, which were not of that partie. It was ſaid, that ſome of them that were murthe-red, were found circumciſed, which made the Atturney generall demand confiſcation of their goods, whereby their wiues and children were depriued. It was thought for certaine that this exceſſe had beene committed by the inſtigation of the ſuperiours. A good L part of the Alpuxarres was in a manner pacified, but the captaines of the garriſons which were there, and in other neigbbour places, as at Almerie, Salobregna, and ſuch like forts, gouerning themſelues, as hath beene ſaid, committed ſuch cruelties and theſts indifferently vpon the one and the other, attending the comming of D. Iohn of Auſtria, as they that had laied aſide armes, and ſubmitted themſelues, reuolted againe, and ioyned with Aben Humeia, who became ſo ſtrong and glorious, as hee bragd that he would not onely defend the mountaines, but alſo beſiege the citie of Granado.

1569

D. Iohn de Auſtria comes to Granado.

D. Iohn d'Auſtria made his entrie the ſixt of April, 1569, being accompanied by the marqueſſe of Mondejar, by D. Iohn de Caruaial, D. Tello Gonſall d'Aguilar, Gonſalo Chacon, the Earle of Miranda, with many other noble men and knights: the marqueſſe of Ve- M lez would not bee there. Before his lodging there preſented themſelues about foure hundred women, widowes, and many poore orphans, Chriſtians, which had beene in the Moores hands, crying and lamenting in moſt miſerable manner, and demanding iuſtice and reuenge for their fathers and husbands which had beene murthered, ſo as they could hardly make them retire; but it was done of purpoſe. The Moores dwelling in the

A in the Albayzin deputed ſome vnto him, to make their innocency knowne, and yet they were ill intreated; but eſpecially, they made great complaint of the maſſacre committed of their kinſmen in the priſons, as it were in the kings boſome, into the which they had willingly put themſelues. D. Iohn heard them, and made ſhew that this act diſpleaſed him, comforting and aſſuring them. He had a Councell appointed him, whereof were the Duke of Seſſa, the marqueſſe of Mondejar, D. Lewis de Quixada Preſident of the Councell of the Indies, D. Pedro de Deſa Preſident of the royall Audience of Granado, and the Archbiſhop of Granado, in caſes of conſcience: all theſe reſolued how they ſhould proceed in this warre. The marqueſſe of Mondejar perſiſting in his opinion, ſaid, that they muſt drawe the Moores to the Chriſtian religion by inſtruction and good exB amples, and to the Kings obedience in doing them iuſtice, and that they ſhould end the warre by ſome good accord: hee held it fit they ſhould drawe them out of the mountaines, and places of ſtrength, and giue them dwellings in the champane countrie; or if they left them in their auncients habitations, they ſhould place good garriſons there at their charge. The Preſident Deſa ſaid, that firſt of all they ſhould cleanſe the citie of Granado of the Mooriſh nation, and to ſend them with their families to dwell farther off, to the end they ſhould not aide the rebels, as they had done ſecretly, with armes, counſell, and other things, and that they ſhould take exemplarie puniſhment of ſome that had ſlaine Chriſtians, and ſpoyled Churches, and begin firſt with the inhabitants of Albunuela, a place from whence the Moores were releeued, with victuals and other commoC dities. Moſt were of opinion, that they ſhould continue the warres, and that occaſions would giue them neceſſarie and fit aduice. There were three regiments leuied vnder Antonio Moreno, Hernand de Orunna, and Francis de Mendoſa of Alcala de Henares. There was order taken alſo for the gouernment of the townes and forts, by new Election, or confirmation of thoſe that were in charge, all beeing commanded to containe their ſouldiers, and to obey the ordinances vpon great paines. The marqueſſe of Velez, who was not come to D. Iohn, ſent him a note what he had done in his diuiſion, and what hee thought remained to be done: hee had ſtaied with his armie at Terques, and had a deſigne to march toward Andarax, but D. Iohn ſent a Poſt to ſtay him. He had begunne a fort at Rauaha, the which was ouerthrowne by the Moores, who ſlue D. him, a hundred and threeſcore ſouldiers, and tooke an Enſigne; whereat D. Iohn was very much diſcontented. Aben Humeia was aduertiſed of all the conſultations and reſolutions which were taken at Granado, by them of the Albayzin, and accordingly made prouiſion for the warre, and for thoſe places which hee had an intent to defend. Hee alſo made three regiments vnder Hanon de Cucuijar, Futey de Lautera, and Zezca de Cuiar, Captaines Moores. Hee made his ſtore-houſe for the warre at Orgiba, hee appointed a market at Vxixar of Albereta, whither they did bring victuals and marchandiſe, and marchants came from Tetuan in the realme of Fez, to ſell armes and other commodities. He made Rio d'Almanſora Gouernour of that Quarter which ioyned vpon the Marquiſate of Zenete, and Ieromo Malech of the frontier of Guadix and Baſa. At PoE queira and Ferreira Diego Lopes Aben Aboo, vpon the frontier of Orgiba Michel de Granado Xaba, on the iuriſdiction of Luxar and Marchena Sierra de Fitabres Gidoi, and of the riuer of Almeric Aben Meguenun was gouernour, in the valley of Locrin, and the frontier of Almunexar, Salobregna and Motril, he placed Gironcillo and Rendal for gouernours: to all which hee giue Letters Patents ſigned by himſelfe, and with a royall ſeale. There were of his priuie Councell, Don Ferdinand el Caguer, Dalay Moxarraf, Calderon of Vxixar, and Hernand Habagui: Farrax Aben Farrax was in diſgrace, and came no more in the Kings Preſence, who had threatned to haue him hanged as a thiefe.

Counſellors about D. Iohn of Auſtria.

Aduice of the Marqueſſe of Mondejar.

Aduice of the Preſident Deſa.

Def. at of Chriſtians.

Captaines and Counſellers to the Mooriſh king.

F Beſides theſe prouiſions, Aben Humeia did hope to bee fortified by the Xeriffe Abdalla king of Maroc and Fez, and by Vluccyaly gouernour of Algier, whom he did ſolicite and intreat, making them great promiſes, and aſſuring him that hee ſhould bee ſuccoured by the great Turkes armie, which charge Vluccialy had taken vpon him. Hee beganne the warre againſt Don Iohn by the taking of Peca, whither hee ledde fiue thouſand men, but hee could not take the Caſtle; and there were 1569 were many light skirmiſhes made on either ſide. The great Commander who had charge to bring the gallies, and the regiment of Naples into Spaine, had drawne together 24 gallies, in the port of Genoua, with ſome other veſſels, & went to ſea in a doubtfull time, contrarie to the aduice of the Mariners; for that (ſaid he) they had need of him in Spaine: but he was no ſooner at ſea, but hee was ouertaken with ſo furious a tempeſt, as ſome of his veſſels periſhed with their burdens, and the reſt were ſo diſperſed, ſome into Sardynia, ſome into Sicilie, and ſome elſe-where, as all that preparation prooued vnprofitable. The great Commander was by chance caſt vpon the Iſland of Maiorca, and ſo he paſt from Palamos into Cattelogne, ſo as the paſſage was open for ſome daies out of Barbarie into Spaine. G

Shipwracke of the great Commanders fleet.

The mountaine of Bentonis is in the countrie of Veles Malaga, vpon the ſea towards the South, a countrie fertill in wines, which they tranſport into England, and Flanders; by which trafficke the inhabitants were rich: moſt of which had their beginning from Moores, and they did reckon 22. Burroughs well peopled and inhabited: the which had not riſen vntill that vpon certaine reports the officers of Iuſtice began to vexe them; ſaying, that they were aduertiſed they had commerce and intelligence with Aben Humeia: Canilles of Azeitunes is in this countrie, a ſtrong place and of importance, belonging vnto the Marqueſſe of Comare, and there is a certaine Rocke, called Fregiliana the old, whither a good number of Moores were retired, and had there fortified themſelues: whom Arcualo de Cuaco de Veles would go and aſſaile, but he was repulſt with the loſſe of moſt of his men. H

Defeat of Moores.

The Marqueſſe of Velez beeing at Verja in the country of Almerie with a good ſtrong armie, Aben Humeia who had ten thouſand men, and among them ſome Turkes, came and charged him couragiouſly, and forced the firſt gards and lodging of his campe, putting all into diſorder: the which was repaired by the diligence of ſouldiers well diſciplined, who recouered their places of armes, and repulſt this violence of the Moores valiantly, killing aboue a thouſand and fiue hundred as they retired in diſorder. There were among the Turkes of Aben Humeias armie, many which carried girlands of flowers vpon their heads, ſaying, that they were ſent thither to reuenge Mahomets Martyrs. I Armie of Aben Humeia defeated.

The Marqueſſe had aboue twelue thouſand fighting men, and beeing lodged at Adra, he had commandement to enter into Alpuxarra, where hee came to fight with the Moores at Vxicar, and then he charged Aben Humeia at Valot, who was not much weaker in number then he, yet he was put to rout; but the Marqueſſe was preſently forced to retire: for the miſchiefe was, that as ſoone as the ſouldiers had taken any ſpoyle, they ſtole away to carrie it to their houſes. Through this diſorder there remained not three thouſand men in his campe. D. Anthonie de Luna ſackt Albunuela, according to the aduice of the Preſident D. Pedro de Deſa, where he made a great ſpoyle of goods, and tooke aboue a thouſand and fiue hundred priſoners. According to the auncient cuſtome, the kings of Spaine ſhould haue the fift of all the ſpoyles, but they made him bad reckonings. The commander of Caſtille came in the end to the road of Velez Malaga, with ſuch Spaniſh foot as he could bring out of Italie, and did preſently inueſt Pegnon de Fregiliana: there were ſome good Captaines with him, D. Pedro and D. Martin de Padilla, D. Iohn de Cardenas brother to the Earle of Miranda, D. Pedro de Zuniga, with others. The Moores which were lodged there, in a manner without armes, defended themſelues notwithſtanding couragiouſly, and at the firſt aſſault ſlue Pedro de Sandoual, and foure hundred ſouldiers, and wounded double the number: but the Spaniards continuing their aſſaults with great obſtinacie, in the end they forced it, and of foure thouſand Moores that were within the place, there were neere two thouſand ſlaine, the reſt eſcaped, caſting themſelues deſperately downe the rockes, and many women with them, leaping downe the precipices like goates, hauing their infants tied at their backes. There were women ſlaine in theſe combats which made head againſt the aſſaylants as couragiouſly as if they had beene old ſouldiers. There was alſo found within the fort three thouſand ſoules, old men, women, and children, with much cattel, and great ſtore of bootie. K L M

Pegnon of Fregiliana taken by the great Commander.

The riuer of Almanſora is alſo a good and fertill countrie, but the Moores which dwelt there had not rebelled, vntil that they were forced by the inſolency of the ſouldiers, who who ſought nothing elſe but to make them diſobedient, by ſome oppoſition or de- 1569 fence againſt their inſolencies and villeines.

Inſolencie of the Spaniards makes the Moores reuolt.

This riuer takes its beginning from a fountaine called Fuen Caliente, and falles into the Sea a league from Vera: Veles Rubio and Veles Blanco are in this Countrie, which is great, and hath many habitations bordering vpon Baſa on the North ſide, it hath the Sea vpon the South, full of old Caſtles and ſtrong by ſituation. There entred into this Countrie in Iune foure thouſand Moores, of the rebels, to countenance them that would reuolt, and to root out the reſt. Firſt they came to Porcena, where they found not any Chriſtians of the inhabitants, for being aduertiſed by a certaine Prieſt, they were fled away.

Ieromo Maleche and Hanon of Cueillar aſſailed the Caſtle of Seron, which did belong to the Marqueſſe of Villena; this place, that of Oria, and las Cueuas had held good, all the reſt being reuolted. Seron being beſeeged, D. Anthonie Henriques, brother to the Lord of that place, attempted to reliene it with fiue hundred foot, and ſixtie horſe, but hee was chaſed away, loſt two hundred men vpon the place, and reyred in rout. In this charge the Moores got great ſtore of armes, whereof they had good need. Diego de Mirones who was Captaine of the place went forth to ſeeke ſuccours, but he was taken, the which being knowne to the beſeeged, they yeelded to the Moores, who ſlue one hundred and fiftie men that were within it, and made eightie women ſlaues. D. Iohn de Auſtria furniſhed Veles and Oria, and gaue the charge to D. Iohn de Haro. And for that they were out of doubt, that the Moores which inhabited in the Albayzin, and other parts of the citie, gaue intelligence to them that made warre in the Alpuxarres and other places, they put them out of the Towne the three and twentieth of Iune. All were gathered together in the royall Hoſpitall, which is a great building, made by Queene Iſabell of Caſtille without the citie, and there a Regiſter was taken of their houſes & goods, which they left to their great greef, for they were very well lodged, being men of means: and they were deſperſed into Andaluſia: the which bred a great confuſion in their affaires. Aben Humeia came neere vnto Almerie, threatning to beſeege it, he made many skirmiſhes about it, & towards Saſobregna; but he had not one peece of Ordnance. Hee wrote vnto D. Iohn of Auſtria, intreating him to ſend him his father & his brother who were priſoners in Granado, and in a manner threatning him, but he did not much regard it.

Seron taken by the Moores.

Moores put out of Granada.

To haſten the Turkes ſuccours, without the which no enterpriſe could ſucceed well, hee ſent Ferdinand Habaqui to Alger, whereas Vluccialy made a proclamation, that all men that would might goe freely to this warre, and many preſenting themſelues, hee ſtaied them to carrie them to Tunis. Yet hee pardoned all malefactors and baniſhed men: and of this ſort of people Habaqui ledde foure hundred Harquebuziers with him, vnder the commaund of a Turke called Hoſcein, and of a brother of his, who imbarked in eight foiſts laden with munition and armes. Hoſcein who was an aduenturing Souldier, cunning and politike, viſited the riuers of Almanſora, and of Almerie, Sierra Filabres, and all the Alpuxarres; hee found meanes alſo to enter into the Citie of Granado, hee was at Guadix and at Baſa without diſcouerie and then returned into Barbarie, laden with preſents: for hee promiſed to goe to Conſtantinople, to make report vnto his Lord what hee had ſeene of the oppreſſions and miſeries of the Moores in Spaine. Aben Humeia had a deſigne vpon the towne of Vera, being commodious for the Turkes deſcent, but it was releeued by them of Baſa; He ouerranne the Countrie, burnt Cueuas, and ſpoyled the gardins of the Marqueſſe de Velez Lord of that place, hauing aboue ten thouſand men in his traine. But whileſt he doth theſe exploits with more preſumption and vanitie to his own then hurt to the enemie, ſeeking his pleaſures without reſpect of perſon, letting them know that his will was a Lawe, certeine Captaines were offended therewith, whereof hee that was moſt incenſed was Diego Alguazil, whoſe couſin Aben Humeia held by force for his Concubine, both hee and the reſt calling to minde the manie cruelties which hee had committed, namely the murther of Michel Roxas, his father in law, of Raphael Arcos, and other Moores of name: whereupon they conſpired to kill him

Turkes comes to ſuccour the Moores in Spaine.

1569 and to doe it with more colour, they publiſhed certaine letters which hee had written to D. Alfonſo de Granado, and other negotiators of a peace, the which they had kept and opened, accuſing him that hee would abandon the Moores, and betray them. They did alſo counterfeit a letter in his name, directed to Aben Aboo, commaunding him to kill the Captaine of the Turkes, that were come out of Barbarie to his ſuccours, vpon certaine counterfeit reaſons: they ſhewed this letter vnto the Turkes, whereat Aben Aboo was amazed, who thought verily that hee had written them, whereat the whole company being incenſed, they went to Andarax (where hee was with his Concubine, who was acquainted with this plot:) there they tooke him, and ſtrangled him, publiſhing in an aſſemblie of the Captaines the cauſes of this execution, the which they diſguiſed in ſuch ſort, as it was allowed by them, chooſing in his place Diego Lopes Abeni Aboo to raigne ouer them, a cruell man, but hee had more iudgement and gouernment than the other, ſo as D. Iohn de Auſtria had more cauſe to thinke ſeriouſly of the affaires of the war.

Death of king Aben Humeia.

Aben Aboo choſen king of the Rebels.

Hee gaue the charge of the Riuers of Almerie, Bolodui, Almanſora, Sierra de Baſa, and Filabres, and of the Marquiſate of Zenete to Ierome Maleeh and to Xoabi; and Sierra Neuada, the land of Velez, the Alpuxarres, and the Valley of Montojo of Granado, to Haſcien de Gueiar. Hee ſent preſents to Vluccialy, and to the Moſti of Conſtantinople, to keepe him in grace with the great Turke, and to bee a meanes for ſome ſuccours: he made a regiment of foure thouſand men for his gard, whereof a thouſand ſhould be alwaies in gard. At his election he found tenne thouſand men in the armie, and among them ſix hundred Turkes.

The Marqueſſe of Mondejar at that time left the affairs of Granado, & went to Valentia, where he was appointed viceroy, in which charge he continued not long, but paſt to Naples to gouern there with like dignitie. The duke of Seſſe was chief of the army which the marqueſſe was wont to lead; who releeued the Garriſon of Orgiba, which Aben Aboo the new king beſeeged, and kept the pace of Lantjaron, where there was a great skirmiſh, the which continued long, through the Turkes valour, in the which there were many ſlaine of either part. Orgiba was abandoned by the commandement of D. Iohn, who ſent the Captaine of that place with his men to Motrill.

In the Dukes armie, there were many Noble men of marke, as Pagan Doria, brother to Iohn Andrew, D. Gabriel, and Lewis de Cordona, D. Lewis de Cardone, and others, which armie was appointed to cleanſe the Alpuxarra. In the other part whereas the marqueſſe of Veles made warre, D. Iohn would commaund in perſon; hauing Maleeh and Xoabi to make head againſt him. In theſe Chriſtian armies there were certaine couragious Monkes marching in the head of the troupes, who held a Crucifex in one hand and a naked ſword in the other.

Galere taken by the Moores.

Moores defeated.

The Moores attempted Galere, a ſtrong place of ſituation, belonging to Eurigue, a league from Gueſcar, and tooke it. They went to beſeege Oria, but they of Lorca their neighbours (who were alwaies good ſouldiers) came thither, ſlue foure hundred Moores, raiſed the ſeege, and carried away fiue Enſignes. Maleeh marcht with the bodie of his armie by the riuer of Almanſora, D. Iohn led his by that of Xenil: this Riuer runnes by Piuillos, and enters into an other called Aguasblancas, which together paſſing by the village of Cene, runne towards Granado, and betwixt theſe two riuers is the Mountaine of Guejar, one of the deſcents of Sierra Neuada, in the which there kept about foure thouſand Moores vnder the Captaines Xoabi, Choconcillo, Macox, and Moxixar, who ranne euen to the gates of Granado: D. Iohn made them diſlodge and retire farther into the mountaines of Sierra Neuada.

Farrax Aben Farrax, his miſerable eſtate.

Farrax Aben Farrax was among the Moores that were at Guejar, in poore and miſerable eſtate, of whoſe aduentures it is fit to make ſome little mention. Being in diſgrace with king Aben Humeia, and put from all affaires, his miſerie had brought him to that deſpaire, as hee was ready to yeeld himſelfe to the Marqueſſe of Mondejar, who without doubt had put him to an exemplarie death: being in ſuſpence, and hauing changed his minde, hee thought it better to yeeld himſelfe vnto the Inquiſition, thinking that making his accuſtomed ſubmiſſions, he ſhould haue his life ſaued at the leaſt. There was a Moore

A Moore with him which had beene his companion in the art of dying, to whom hauing imparted this his deſigne, exhorting him to doe the like (for hee was no leſſe culpable than he) he liked well of it, and was content to go before to treat with them of the Inquiſition for them both. Farrax hauing inſtructed him, being to depart that night, and therfore they were retired into a valley couered with wood to keepe their buſineſſe more ſecret, after that he had diſcourſed long, & reiterated his inſtructions to this Moor, he fel a ſleep in the wood, the other ſeeing him faſt, thoght that he ſhould make his peace better if hee ſlue him, and being reſolued, hee tooke a great ſtone wherewith he gaue him ſo many blowes vpon the head, face, and bodie, as hee left him for dead, and B then he went as it is to bee coniectured to Granado. 1569

Farrax being thus pittifully handled, remained two daies neither dead nor aliue in that Vallie, whereas two Moores paſſing by, found him, whileſt hee yet breathed, and not knowing what hee was, but onely finding that hee was a Moore, they laied him for pittie ſake vpon one of their horſes, and carried him to Guejar, where hee was lookt vnto and cured; but hee remained ſo disfigured as his viſage had ſcarce any ſhape of a mans, and in this eſtate hee followed the troupes, liuing of almes, being known of few men. This was the reward of the chiefe authour of the Moores rebellion.

Returning to Aben Aboo: he had a intent to gather the Oliues vpon the riuer of Boldui, hauing ſent a number of Mooriſh women thither, with a gard of eight hundred ſouldi- Defeat of Moores.
C ers; but they were no good gardians, for being charged by the Marqueſſe of Velez, they fled with the loſſe of two hundred of their men, ſlain vpon the place, and all their women were taken. Gueſcar was alſo relieued by the Marqueſſe, who ſlue about fiue hundred of the Moors. Winter broght many diſcommodities both to the one and the other, yet the Marqueſſe of Velez held Galeres alwaies inueſted; but ſeeing in the Spring that D. Iohn would come and beſeege it himſelfe, he retyred: for he was ſo ambitious as he would haue the honor of euerie thing that was done where he was. The body of D. Iohns armie which was intēded againſt the fort of Galere, was made at Gueſcar, D. Iohn being at Baſa, which is 7 leagues off, where he prouided for all things neceſſarie. Galere was but a borough without any wall, but ſeated among rockes which couered it, being enuironed with D deep precipices, the which the Moors by trauerſes and barracadoes had made in a maner impenetrable, and in theſe deep bottomes the riuer ran, wheras they of the Borogh were forced to fetch their water; and to the end they might goe thither without danger, the Moores had made a way like a wall, and by this meanes they did water ſafely. There were Galere beſieged and taken. three thouſand Moores and Turkes to defend this fort. The church without the borogh had a high Tower, which ſerued them both for a watch and a Citadell. D. Iohn brought his armie thither, and hauing made there batteries, he preſently took this church by one of them. But when he came to the Borough, there was great difficultie to batter it, by reaſon of the rocks which did couer it. It was ſo well defended, as the Spaniards were many times out of hope to take it: but obſtinacy ſtaied them, and made them to continue their E aſſaults furiouſly, ſo as in the end they took it by force, being fauoured by three mines, which plaid happely to the great loſſe of the beſeeged, who abādoned the place, & ſought to eſcape by the rockes and precipices; there were 2400 Moores and Turkes ſlaine, and a great booty taken of gold, ſiluer, and other moueables, with great ſtore of corne. There were many women Moores found there, but for that the Souldiers lingred after them, D. Women Moores maſacred. Iohn cauſed them all to be ſlaine in his preſence. There were 4500 Chriſtian women and Children ſet at libertie, as well thoſe of the Borough, as others which they had brought from Oria, Caſtileije & other places thereabouts: This victorie was dearly bought, for D. Iohn of Auſtria loſt many men, but the number is not ſpecified; but of captaines and men of mark, there were ſlaine at ſundry aſſaults, Martin de Lorite, Iohn de Magueda, Baltazar
F de Aranda, Alfonſo Beltram, Charles and Frederike of Antillon, D. Iohn d' Caſtille, Spaniards of accompt ſlaine at Galere by the Moores. D. Anthony d' Gourmas, Abarca and others. Of wounded were Pedro d' Padilla, Pagan Doria, the Marques of Fauara, D. Lewis Henriques, D. Lewis d' Auila, D. Pedro de Sotomaior, D. Diego Vaſques de Acugna, Bernardin of Quixada, with many Lieutenants and Enſignes. This place being wonne, D. Iohn ſent to view Seron, but hee loſt aboue fiue hundred men. D. Lope de Figueroa maſter of the Campe, was charged in another place by ſixe thouſand Moores, led by Habaqui and Malech, who got armes to arme aboue G a thouſand men. Lewis de Quixada was wounded there, whereof hee dyed ſoone after: D. Iohn had a ſhot on his Caske: but it was of good proofe.

1570 The duke of Seſſes armie entred the Alpuxarres, in March one thouſand fiue hundred and ſeuentie, by Padul, to goe vnto Orgiba. The Moores chiefe ſtrength was at Andarax with their king Aben Aboo, who had ſet good gards at Lanjaron, and in the Weſt quarter were Rendal and Macox, two Captaines, with foure thouſand Moors. The duke had diuers skirmiſhes about Lanjaron, which the Moores held, but in the end they abandoned it. After which hee led his army to Albacete of Orgiba. In theſe incounteres there was a Turkiſh Harquebuſe taken, the Canon wherof was ten ſpannes long, carrying a bullet which H weighed an ounce and an halfe.

The Moores which were in the Caſtle of Velez of Benandalla ſeeing themſelues inueſted by the Dukes armie, they corrupted ſome Souldiers of his campe, who ſuffered them to eſcape with their women and what elſe they could carrie away. But being in a place of ſafetie, they returned vnto the paſſages betwixt Velez and the campe, where they ſpoiled and ſlue many paſſengers, and ſo recompenſed themſelues largely of their loſſes. The fort of Lontegi was alſo taken from them, but ſome troupes going from Aben Aboos campe, charged a conuoy which came to the dukes campe, and carried away many beaſts with their burthens, and had made ſpoile of all, if they had not been relieued in time. I Conuoy defeated by the Moores.

The two armies coaſted one another for a time amidſt theſe mountaines, skirmiſhing vnto Campuxan, the Moores bending towards Iubiles, and the duke to Portillo and Vxixar. The duke had in his Campe about eight thouſand men, Aben Aboo had twelue thouſand. The duke to diſcharge his armie of many vnprofitable mouths, as ſouldiers that were hurt, whome hee ſent to Guadix to be cured, with ſome women and children, whome hee had reſcued from the Moores, and a good number of Moores priſoners, ſent away the Marqueſſe of Fauara, with a thouſand foot, and one hundred horſe to gard them, and to bring backe certaine horſes, and mules laden with victuals to the campe: but the Marqueſſe fell into an ambuſh which K
Piceni and Martel de Zenete Captaines among the Moores had laied for him, where hee loſt all his baggage, and eight hundred of his ſouldiers, the which fell out vnhappily, for the dukes armie was in ſome extremitie for want of victuals, and therefore ſought to paſſe to Adra, being alwaies coaſted by the Moores, who began to growe ſouldiers vnder this new king. D. Iohn of Auſtria had better ſucceſſe: for he fought with Habaqui, who was come with ſeuen thouſand Moores to raiſe him from Seron, and defeated him. At that time Ierome Malech one of their beſt captaines died of ſicknes. Throgh the fauor of this victorie D. John took Seron and Tyole; he chaſed the Moores from Porchena, and then marcht towards Andarax, to ſeeke out the Moors king with their armie: betwixt theſe two armies there were many skirmiſhes with diuers euents.

Chriſtians defeated by the Moores.

Moores defeated by D. Iohn.

In the meane time king Philip came vnto Cordoua, being very deſirous to haue this L warre ended in one ſort or other: for hee was aduertiſed that the Turke had great deſignes vpon Italie, and for this cauſe had broken the peace with the Venetians, the king being ſolicited by them and other Potentates in Italie, and by continuall letters from the Pope to ioyne in league with them. Wherefore being forced to ſend his gallies, hee muſt of neceſſitie ſend his Brother D. Iohn, whome hee was deſirous to aduance. The Moores who were alſo aduertiſed of theſe things, and therefore out of hope to be relieued by the Turke, who had other enterpriſes in his braine, deſired, no leſſe than the king, to enter into ſome treatie of peace. The Gallies and Foiſtes of M Barbarie came no more to ſuccour them: three galeots which had diſcharged, come armes, & Arabian books, Alcarons and other, in the road of Dalias, had bin diſcouered and taken by the inhabitants of the countrie: ſeuen other galeots or foiſts being come to the ſame coaſt with ſouldiers, which Haſſem a Turke brought out of Barbarie, they returned vpon a falſe brute of peace, which had beene ſpred abroad, both the Moores and the Chriſtians being deſirous of reſt. Beſides, enuy, diſloyalty, and other vices raigning among the Moors cauſed a diuiſion among thē, ſome of the captains hauing bin ſent into Afrike,

A Afrike, ſtaied there, and would no more return; many of the common people did the like king Aben Aboo, and others which held good, were ſolicited and tempted by promiſes, that they ſhould receiue all fauour and good vſage from King Philip, and they were well pleaſed alſo to keepe their pillage, ſo as they yeelded to enter into treatie, but there was no ceſſation of armes. Habaqui and ſome other knights of the Moores were at Fond of Andarax, where hauing conferred with king Philips deputies they made an accord vpon theſe articles. 1570

That Habaqui in the name of Diego Lopes Aben Aboo, and others of whome hee had power, ſhould kneele at D. Iohns feet, and demaund pardon of king Philip: That they Treaty of peace with the Moores.
B ſhould yeeld vp their armes and Engines: That they ſhould bee receiued into grace, and all that was paſt forgotten: That they ſhould not be wronged by word nor deede, nor moleſted by the Inquiſition: That they that were reduced ſhould bee ſent withall ſecuritie, with their goods, wiues and children, to ſuch places as ſhould be aſſigned them to liue in, for they muſt leaue the Alpuxarres. Aecording vnto this accord a ſubmiſſion was made by Habaqui to D. Iohn at Padules, and the Enſignes being deliuered D. Alfonſo de Granado Venega went to Aben Aboo, to giue him better aſſurance; paſſing by Alcolea where hee found Xoaibi they went together to Cadiar, where hee was well entertained by Aben Aboo and Habaqui, and hauing had much conference vpon the aſſurance which D. Alfonſo had charge to promiſe them, ſuch as they
C ſhould demaund, they proceeded ſo farre in their accord, as moſt of the Turkes that were in the army were diſmiſt, and ſent home well ſatisfied.

But after D. Alfonſos departure, many of theſe Moores conſidering better of the importance of this reduction, began to diſtruſt, paſſing into Barbarie and returned not; Moores after the accord retrait.
and for that they had left Aben Aboo in mind to retract, they did ſolicite the Turkes and Moores of Afrike, not to forbeare to ſuccour them of Spaine, whereunto they found many Lords among the Moores verie willing, So as in a ſhort time there came many veſſels to that Coaſt, bringing ſouldiers, armes and munition from Barbarie. The which confirmed Aben Aboo, and others in the reſolution they had neuer to put themſelues into the hands of the king of Spaine, nor of his Lieutenants, D beginning to hate and curſe them that had dealt in this treatiſe, and eſpecially Hernand Habaqui.

This confuſion among the heads did ſo amaze the common people of the Moores, as they came in great troupes to yeeld themſelues to the kings mercie, and to his Gouernours and Captaines, who had commandement to receiue them, and not to ſuffer any outrage to bee done vnto them. Others that could eſcape did more willingly paſſe the Sea, for they did not ſubmit themſelues but through hunger, and by an opinion they had conceiued that they could not proſper vnder their heads, nor bee freed from their miſeries by them, ſeeing they were continually in diſcord. The armies were ſtill on foot during theſe Ambiguities, yet ſomewhat neglected and weake, for E they ſtill expected when they ſhould bee diſmiſt.

The Duke of Seſſe broght his armie before the Caſtle of Fer, which was a ſtore-houſe of Turkes to ſuccour them, and tooke it: D. Sancho de Leua did alſo take certaine foiſts. The Captaines of places ranne whereſoeuer they heard there were any Moores in armes, which made many to haſten their reduction. Many ſouldiers being disbanded did not forbeare the Moores that had ſubmitted, but did ſpoile them and make their wiues and children captiues, to keep them, or ſell them, for ſlaues; to preuent the which, they vſed all diligence to draw them from their ancient habitations to liue farther off in places aſſigned them according to the accord, and certaine diuiſions which had beene made. The more to incite the Moores to ſubmit themſelues, the Preſident D. Pedro de Deſa wrote a F letter of exhortation to the nation of the Moores, in the Arabian tong, as if it had beene ſome Morabite or Hermite of the law of Mahomet, who perſuaded them to harken to a peace, and to free themſelues of ſo many miſeries, cauſing many copies therof to be made, the which being diſperſed among that nation, did haſten the reduction of many. Habaqui ſeeing that Aben Aboo wēt back, & that the party was much diminiſhed, being diuided among theſelues, went to D. Iohn, & told him with great aſſurance that if he wold giue him

1570 fiue hnndred ſhot, hee would bring Aben Aboo bound vnto him: D. Iohn would not giue him any men, but hee canſed eight hundred Crownes to bee deliuered him, to leuie them where hee ſhould thinke good, and to performe what hee had promiſed. G

Habaqui being reſolute to imploy himſelfe for the performance of the accord, came to Vercheul where his wife and children were, to haue them prepare themſelues, for hee meant to take them from thence, and to carrie them to Guadix: paſſing by Ieſſen, hee ſaw certaine Moores walking idlely vpon the place, of whome hee demaunded proudly why they ſtaied to goe vnto thoſe places which were aſſigned them, by the treatie of peace. To whome they anſwered, that they attended the commaundement of Aben Aboo. And I tell you (replyed hee) that if Aben Aboo be ſo tedious and vnwilling, I will lead him to D. Iohn of Auſtria bound at my horſe taile. Theſe words were told to Aben Aboo, by ſome one of theſe Moores, whereat being much incenſed, hee ſent one hundred and fiftie Turkes, which he had reſerued for his gard, and two companies of Moores, in whome hee truſted, to goe and take him at Vercheul. Habaqui hearing a noiſe in the night, got out of his lodging, and beganne to flie away, who without doubt had eſcaped, had not his white Turban diſcouered him a farre off, which was the cauſe that they purſued and tooke him. H

Boldnes of a Moore.

Being brought before Aben Aboo, hee reproacht him with his preſumption and proud threats againſt him that was his king; telling him that hee knew well hee was a Traitour, and that hee ſought to make his peace apart with the Chriſtians and bring all the reſt of Moores to the ſlaughter, or ſlauerie: whereupon hee cauſed him to bee preſently led into a ſecret place, and there to be ſtrangled by his houſhold Seruants, and then hee cauſed his bodie to bee bound vp in a fagot of reedes and to bee caſt into a precipice, where it remained many daies, and no man knew what became of him. I

Habaqui ſtrangled.

Being rid of this man, hee ſent into all places where the Moores were not reduced, to aduertiſe them that they ſhould not ſubmit, putting them in hope by counterfeit newes of ſuccours by the Turkiſh armie, and other ſuch meanes, yet hee did not leaue to write to D. Alfonſo of Granado, and to D. Fernand of Barrades, the Mediatours, that hee continued ſtill in the ſame minde; but the effects ſhewed the contrarie, for a brother of his called Galipe hauing beene defeated, as hee went towards Ronde and Bentomis with two hundred Souldiers to maintaine the Moores of that quarter in rebellion, they vnderſtood all his practiſes, how hee did ſollicite the Turkes and Moores of Affrike: That hee made an accompt to haue twelue thouſand men; that hee made prouiſion of corne; that hee had put eight hundred men into Pitres, and that hee fortified himſelfe and prepared for warre. Finally to free them from all doubt, being preſt by letters from Hernand de Barredes, and by mouth by Hernand Valles de Palacios, who was ſent expreſly vnto him, to make declaration if hee would ratifie the Capitulations; hee anſwered plainely, and after a proud and diſdainefull maner, that they were deceiued who thought hee would put himſelfe into the power of king Philip, or truſt to his promiſes: for the Moores of thoſe times had ſufficient proofes, beſides thoſe which their predeceſſors had left, in what maner the kings of Caſtille were accuſtomed to keepe their faith. This being reported, the king commaunded they ſhould continue the warre with all violence, and not pardon any Moore that was armed, but preſerue them that were quiet. The duke of Arcos had the charge to preſſe them of Ronde and of Sierra Vermeille. The great Commander was to enter againe into the Alpuxarres, whereas many defended themſelues. But in the end the Moores finding that their head was deſtitute of means and Counſel, moſt of them ſubmitted themſelues, and Aben Aboo found himſelfe ſo abandoned, as he had no care but how to ſaue himſelfe in Barbary, being reſolued neuer to trie king Philips clemency, flying from caue to caue, & from rock to rock betwixt Vercheul & Treuelles, which are the rougheſt parts of thoſe mountaines, hauing ſcarſe 400 men which followed him: being notwithſtāding like a troubleſom thorn, wherof the king deſired much to be free. Whē as it pleaſeth god to take away al difficulties, wherwith men are troubled K L M

Warre renued; with the Moores.

A troubled, he ſuddenly raiſeth occaſions, and can giue vnexpected ends to great affaires, many times by meane inſtruments. There was a Goldſmith at Granado, called Barrero, a pleaſant man, and well knowne to the Moores and Chriſtians dwelling in the Alpuxarres, where, before the warre, hee was woont to goe and ſell rings of gold and ſiluer, and other toyes of his trade, and tooke in exchange from them ſilke, pearles, and other things. Barrero returning to his woonted traffique, vpon the reduction of ſome burroughes in thoſe mountaines, hee came to Cadiar and to Vercheul, at ſuch time as the captaine of the garriſon, called Galas Rotulo de Villa-Real, hauing taken certaine Moores, theeues, of Aben Aboos traine, was readie to haue them ſhot: One of them B knowing Barrero, came and ſaluted him, and reported his misfortune vnto him, intreating him to bee a meanes for his deliuerie. The Goldſmith knew this Moore, and demaunded newes of Aben Aboo, who were about him, and his chiefe counſellors? The priſoner told him what he knew, and that his moſt familiar friends were a Secretarie of his, called Bernardin Aben Amer, and a captaine whom they called Seniz of Vercheul, but he gaue moſt credit to Aben Amer. Barrero, who in former time had beene verie familiar with Aben Amer, thought it fit to write vnto him touching the reduction of his maſter, asking the Moore if hee could find meanes to carrie a letter and not be diſcouered, and hee would cauſe him to bee ſet at libertie. The Moore did promiſe and ſweare it: Wherefore Barrero hauing acquainted captaine Rotulo with his enterpriſe, hee C intreated him to keepe this priſoner vntill his returne from Granado, whither he would goe and aske leaue to conferre with the Secretarie of Aben Aboo, whom he had knowne long, hoping to draw him to perſuade his maſter to yeeld. The great Commaunder gaue him leaue to write and conferre, and being returned to Vercheul, hee diſpatcht this Moore with a perſuaſiue letter to Aben Amer. This meſſenger could not ſo paſſe the rockes and caues of Vercheul, but hee fell into the hands of Seniz men, who led him to their maſter. Beinng examined whence he came, and whither he went, hee aunſwered, That he had eſcaped the hands of the captaine of the garriſon of Vercheul and Cadiar, who held him priſoner. Seniz not beleeuing him, threatened to racke him: wherewith being terrified, hee ſayed, That in truth hee was a priſoner, and that D to ſaue his life hee had taken vpon him to carrie a letter to Bernardin Aben Amer, but hee knew not what it contained; and ſo hee gaue it him. Seniz hauing read it, was verie well pleaſed, ſaying vnto the Moore, That it was happie for him hee had fallen into his hands; for if hee had gone to Aben Amer, he would haue hanged him aſſoone as he had giuen him this letter: That hee meant to ſend him backe to him that had written it, willing him to bee faithfull, for hee ſhould bee well rewarded. This poore Moore being glad, promiſed to doe any thing that hee ſhould commaund him.

1570 Practiſes of a Goldſmith to end the warre with the Moors

Seniz and Francis Barrero met at a certaine place appointed, and concluded betwixt them, That Barrero ſhould returne to Granado, and bring a generall pardon in good forme, to all thoſe that had beene in armes ſince the treatie made with Habaqui, in the E which Aben Aboo ſhould bee expreſly named. Theſe letters were diſpatcht with all fauour, wherein nothing was omitted. Barrero hauing brought them, and deliuered them to Seniz, it happened that Aben Aboo was aduertiſed of this conference, wherewith hee was much diſcontented, and came in the night with a ſmall traine to the caue where Seniz retired himſelfe, leauing his people a little way off, in a paſſage vnder the rocke, keeping two Moores onely with him, whom hee made to ſtay at the entrie of that naturall caue, which was in the top of the mountaine of Huzun, aboue Vercheul and Mecine of Bombaron. Hee demaunded verie diſdainfully of Seniz, Who had giuen him leaue to treat with the enemie? You, aunſwered Seniz, and it is in conſequence of former conferences, the which, I tell you, wee muſt contiF nue and end; and therefore let vs not looſe the opportunitie to recouer king Philips fauour, and let vs not through bad counſell ſeeke our owne ruines: putting inſtantly into his hand theſe letters of pardon, the which Aben Aboo reiected, crying out, That it was nothing but villanie and treaſon, offering to goe forth to call his men. One of them which hee had left at the entrie of the caue would haue come in, but he was put

1570 put backe, and throwne downe a Precipice, the other fled, and hee himſelfe was G ſtayed to reaſon with him; but he was in ſuch a rage, as hee would not heare any thing:
ſo as Seniz ſeeing his obſtinacie, reſolued to kill him, and lifting vp a long harquebuſe which hee had in his hand, hee gaue him ſuch a blow on the head, as he ouerthrew him, Aben Aboo king of the Moores ſlaine. and then he and his men ſtabd him with their daggers. They which attended him, being aduertiſed by the Moore which had fled, That they had ſlaine his companion, and that he thought they had done as much vnto the king, retired. This done, Seniz ſent to aduertiſe Francis Barrero thereof, and that hee ſhould ſend a moyle to carrie the kings bodie to Vercheul; the which was done, and Seniz inuited to come with all aſſurance to the garriſon, where hee was entertained, and much made of by Leonard Rotulo, H brother to captaine Galas, then abſent; and then hee and Barrero went vnto the citie, whither they cauſed the bodie to be carried, where they had a joyfull entrie made them.

The head of Aben Aboo was put in a cage of yron, and ſet ouer the citie gate which lookes towards the Alpuxarres: The bodie, being quartered, was hung vpon the high-Troubles of the Moors ſpecified wayes. After which there was not any Moore found to make head; all layed aſide armes, and ſubmitted themſelues to the kings mercie, according to the generall pardon which was graunted to Francis Barrero. But they were all drawne out of the moun-taines, and the townes of Granado, and thereabouts, and ſent into plaine countries, and more acceſſible, to inhabit; as the Emperour Traian did with the auncient Spaniards, I who were accuſtomed to rebell often, vpon the aſſurance of their townes and caſtles built vpon the edge of the mountaines, the which he cauſed to be raſed, and commanded by an Edict, that they ſhould not build any more but in the plaines.

Thus ended the warre of the Moores of Granado, in Nouember 1570, hauing continued neere two yeares, verie daungerous and difficult, being raſhly cauſed by the ill vſage of them that they call old Chriſtians in Spaine, by the importune purſuits of the Clergie and Inquiſition, and by the bad adminiſtration of juſtice, and inſolencie of the miniſters there of; and no leſſe inconſiderately entertained by the impati-encie of the Moores, and augmented by their obſtinacie and ignorance, which ſuggeſted wicked and monſtrous conceptions. The charge and loſſe was great, for there was aboue K fiue millions of crownes of the kings treaſure ſpent in this warre. The intereſt of priuat men, and the ſpoyle and vnpeopling of the countrey, was ineſtimable, in the which aboue thirtie thouſand Chriſtians loſt their liues. As for the Moores that were ſlaine of all ages and ſexes, the number cannot be ſaied; for a great realme might haue beene peopled therewith. If they had beene intreated with more mildneſſe and humanitie, without doubt they might eaſily haue kept them in obedience, and by little and little might haue made them leaue that which was vnpleaſing or ſcandalous in their manner of liuing: and as for religion, they ſhould bee inſtructed with more care and charitie, cauſing that injurious contempt which is ordinarie in Spaine and other places, of them that are newly come to the knowledge of Ieſus Chriſt, to ceaſe, being vnplea- L ſing vnto God.

9 King Philip being ſomewhat freed from cares by the end of this warre with the Moores Mariage of king Philip with his neece. of Granado, hee would haue his mariage conſummated with Anne of Auſtria, his neece, daughter to his ſiſter and to the Emperour Maximilian, for the which he obtained a diſpenſation from the Pope, according to the vſe of that holy Church. She paſt through the Low Countries, and was receiued by the duke of Alba at Nymeghen with great honour, who conducted her to Bruſſels, and ſo to Fleſſingue, where ſhee imbarked in October, and within eight dayes arriued happily in Biſcaie, being accompanied by the Archdukes Albert and Wenceſlaus, her brethren, being verie young. Shee was receiued there by the cardinall of Seuille, whom the king had ſent thither to doe M that office. The king entertained her at Segouia, with that ſtate that was befitting the greatneſſe; then paſſing on to Madrid, whereas the widow Queene of Portu-gall met them, they were maried with great ſolemnitie.

The king of Spaine (as wee haue ſaid) was ſolicited to enter into league with the

Pope

A Pope, and the Venetians, againſt whom Selym the great Turke, picking a quarell, had de- 1570 clared warre. And for that the danger of this warre required aid, the Pope ſent a Nuntio into Spaine, which was Lewis Torres, clerke of the chamber, with ſpeciall order from him to draw the king into this league, but aboue all, to craue the aſſiſtance of his gallies for that preſent yeare, that being ioyned with them of Venice, they might goe and make head againſt that mightie fleet which the Turke had ſent to ſea. The king knowing how much it did import himſelfe and the whole ſtate of Chriſtendome, being moued with many ſpeciall conſiderations, hee graunted his gallies, which were then readie in Italie. Wherefore he ſent a ſpeciall commiſsion to Iohn Andrew Doria, That according
B to the Popes pleaſure he ſhould go, as head of thoſe gallies, to Meſſina; but he gaue him no direction, that hee ſhould goe from thence to Corfu, to ioyne with the Venetian armie, and with the Popes gallies, which were commaunded by Marc Anthonie Colonna, and that hee ſhould leaue the commaund of all vnto Colonna, being lent by the king vnto his Holineſſe: the which being not well ſpecified, was a great prejudice to the armie that yeare. But the buſineſſe of the league being treated of in the kings Councell, with great deliberation, was not ſo eaſily concluded, notwithſtanding that Torres, and Leonardo Donata, a Senator of great worth, ſent from the State of Venice into Spaine, did ſolicite it verie earneſtly: but the importance of the buſineſſe, the ordinarie diſagreement which is found in all Councels conſiſting of men of diuers complexi-
C ons, and the naturall ſlowneſſe of that nation, made thoſe embaſſadours to ſpend many monethes in vaine, and did ſomewhat coole the ardent deſire the king had to ſatisfie the Pope and that Commonweale, as he did afterwards ſhew by the effects.

King of Spaine ſends his gallies to aſſiſt the Venetians.

But to come to the cauſe of this warre. The Turke had ſent a Chaous to the Venetians, that they ſhould, without delay, deliuer vnto him the iſland of Cypres, which did belong vnto him, as hauing ſucceeded to the rights of the Emperours of Conſtantinople, the kings of Ieruſalem, and of the auncient kings of Syria and Ægypt, the which (ſaid hee) they had gotten away. The which hauing refuſed, he denounced warre againſt them, wherein they had great difficulties, being ſurpriſed, for that it was before the ſuccours came which they had begged from the king of Spaine, the Pope, and other prin-
D ces, who performed not their promiſes but verie late, after the loſſe of Nicoſia, and all they had in that iſland; euerie one ſelling the ſuccours which hee had promiſed in balancing the intereſt they had to oppoſe againſt the Turke, and ſeeking to contribute with ſome aduantage for his owne particular. But the next yeare there was a league made, as you ſhall heare, by the which D. Iohn of Auſtria, the kings brother, was choſen to be Generall of the confederats armie againſt the Turke.

Warre denounced by the Turke againſt the Venetians.

The enterpriſe which the Turke made vpon Cypres, and the battell at ſea, which happened vpon this occaſion, is memorable, and merits a particular relation in this hiſtorie of Spaine, for that the power and meanes of king Philip did much auaile, and D. Iohn of Auſtria, his brother, had the honour to be Generall of the armie at ſea, and woon a E famous victorie.

The iſland of Cypres was in truth a remainder of the Empire of Conſtantinople, and of the realme of Ieruſalem, erected by the French in their holy warres, and came by the gift of Richard king of England, who had conquered it from the Emperours of Conſtantinople, or rather by purchaſe or exchange, to the famous houſe of Luſignan in France, who enioyed it ſome generations. Among the kings of this familie, there was one Peter the firſt of that name, who was valiant, and went into diuers parts of the world; but for ſome tyrannies, and by the conſpiracie of his vnchaſt wife, who was of the houſe of Arragon, he was ſlaine by his ſubiects: to whom Peter the ſecond ſucceeded; in whoſe time there grew great contention, with notable murthers, betwixt the Conſuls of the Vene-
F tian and Genouois, nations traffiking in Cypres; and the Conſul of the Genouois was by his commaundement caſt out of the windowes of his palace, in fauour of the Venetian: wherefore the Genouois being then ſtrong at ſea, ſent a great armie to Cypres, ſackt the iſland, and ſeiſed vpon Famagoſta: falling to an accord, the Genouois carried Iames the kings vncle with his wife, away in hoſtage. Peter being dead, Iames was deliuered, and raigned in Cypres, and vpon ſome rights, cauſed himſelfe to bee crowned, and called Cypres an iſland and a realme.

1570 called king of Ieruſalem and Armenia, although that he poſſeſſed not any thing. His ſon named Ianus, for that he was borne a Genoua, which they cal in Latin Ianua, ſucceeded him, who was taken by Melech Sala, Sultan of Ægypt, to whom he paid for his ranſom 125000 ducars of gold, and a yerely pention by way of tribute. After him Iohn his ſonne raigned, a man of no value, who, among other wiues, had maried one of the bloud royall of the Paleologui, named Helene, by whom he had a daughter called Charlotte, who was maried to a prince of Portugal: he tooke the gouernment from his mother in law Helene, and therefore ſhe cauſed him to be poiſoned. Charlotte tooke to her ſecond husband Lewis of Sauoy earle of Genoua, and ſeeking to raigne, a baſtard brother of hers, called Iames, oppoſed himſelfe, ſaying, the women did not raigne in Cypres.

Lewis of Sauoy king of Cypres.

This quarell being debated before the Sultan of Ægypt, who (as ſuperour of that realme which payed him tribute made himſelfe Iudge) gaue ſentence in fauour of Iames, and put him in poſſeſſion, chaſing Charlotte and her husband out of the iſland. This Iames maried with Katherine Cornari, a Venetian, who was adopted by the Seigniorie of Venice for the daughter of S. Marc, and had an hundred thouſand ducats for her dower. This Iames, being the ſecond of that name, dyed in the yeare 1473, leauing the queene his wife with child, hauing ordained by his Will, that his after birth, if it were a ſonne, ſhould bee heire to the realme. It was a ſonne, and hee was named Iames the third, being acknowledged and crowned by the nobles and people of Cypres, for their king, as ſoone as hee was borne; but hee died at the end of the yeare: and then there grew a diuiſion in the realme for the Regencie and gouernement thereof, the which was ended by a reſolution taken by the Eſtates, That the widow Queene ſhould raigne and gouerne with the counſell of eight men that ſhould bee choſen; the which continued fifteene or ſixteene yeares. Conſidering afterwards with what difficultie they ſhould maintaine themſelues againſt the enterpriſes of the Sultans raigning in Ægypt, and in all Syria, the Queene and the Councell hauing againe aſſembled the Eſtates and the feudataries of the countrey, they concluded to make donation of the iſland to the Seigniorie of Venice, which was rich and ſtrong, and had meanes to defend them, ſending the Queene to Venice, to ſignifie the decree, and to carrie this goodly preſent, in the yeare 1489, where ſhee remained: and then they ſent onely a Lieutenant, and certaine officers, for the Seigniorie.

10 Right of the Seigniorie of Venice to Cypres.

Thus this donation is found written in the Annales of the Cypriots: But others ſay, that when as king Iames the ſecond was dead, the Venetians being aduertiſed, that he had appointed the infant which ſhould be borne, and the mother together, to be heires vnto the realme, and the one if the other failed, the Venetians ſent ſome of their Senators thither, as tutors to the king, and at the intreatie of the Venetian queene, who had a deſire to quit her right vnto the Seigniorie: and that this young king being dead within the yeare, ſhe retired her ſelfe to Venice. Howſoeuer it were, they enioyed it aboue foureſcore yeares. Although that this commonweale be famous for their wiſedome in the gouernement of their Eſtates, yet they had in time ſuffered the nobilitie of the countrey to vſurpe a certaine authoritie ouer the common people, which exceeded, ſo as their condition did not differ much from ſlaues, for they were beaten, ſold, and ſlaine, at the pleaſure of great and couetous men, without mercie: the which had bred a deſire in the people to change their maſter. Whereunto they adde another quarell, which was often made vnto the Senat by the great Maſter of Malta, That ſome priuat men among them had appropriated vnto themſelues the Commaunderies of the Order of S. Iohn, in that iſland, and had made them hereditarie to their houſes, whereof they gaue them no ſatisfaction. Which had made the great Maſter, la Valette, to countenance an enterpriſe, which was made to take that iſland from them, and to make a Maltois borne king there, who had his beginning from Greece, named Baſilic, much fauoured by the great Turke, and who for his valour and merits had beene made by him Vaiuode, or Prince of Tranſiluania. But the matter being diſcouered, it was diſappointed, and quenched, by the puniſhment of ſome, and a better gard ſet; and yet they did not ſuppreſſe the tyrannies of the nobilitie ouer the poore people. Who for that cauſe did ſtill animate the Turke to ſend an armie into Cypres, with aſſurance of good ſucceſſe; for he ſhould find the inhabitants of the countrey

Tyrannies of the nobilitie ouer the people in Cypres.

Vſurpations vpon the religion of Malta.

A meyar his deuotion. This was then the cause which had moued Sultan Selym to 1570 make this conquest this yeare, the which hee coloured with his old rights of Ierusalem and Ægypt, and other such vanities, sending forth his armie (after the returne of his Chaous Gubal from Venice) to inuade this island, where they landed a great number of Turkes, horse and foot, in Aprill, at a port called Sulmes, finding no resistance, so Armie of Turks in Cypres.
as within few dayes they were aboue foure score thousand fighting men: for the trayned bands, the Tymariots of Syria, Ægypt, and of Natolia, which were neere vnto the sea, and in like manner the higher prouinces, euen vnto the riuer Euphrates, had beene commaunded to come vnto certaine ports, whereas thirtie gallies which Aly Bassa had left
B after his first landing, and some boats to carrie horses, went to receiue them, and to transport them into the island: The which continued many dayes, and the Venetians could not hinder it, notwithstanding that they had sent about an hundred and fiftie sayle to sea, vnder the commaund of Ieronie Zane, who lay about Corfu and Dalmatia, which was opposite, there being an infectious disease fallen among their gallie-slaues and souldiers that were newly leuied, and not accustomed to the sea, whereof a great number died. Afterwards Iohn Andrew Doria being come with fiftie gallies of Spaine and Sicile, and Marc Anthonie Colonna with the Popes and others, hauing commaundement to fight with the Turkes armie before they landed in Cypres, they joyned with that intent with those of Venice, which were in the island of Candie: but they vsed such delayes, as the Turkes
C had landed in Cypres, and besieged Nicosia, battered and taken it before they weighed anker, or had any newes of the taking thereof, and being aduertised, there was then no question to fight with them at sea, but rather to land, and to giue battell to the Turkes; but the partie was not equall. Wherefore Doria, Colonna, and the other Commanders of the succours, tooke counsell to returne into Italie, the Commaunders of the Venetian fleet contenting themselues to keepe their ports and other islands: yet they suffered much in this retreat by tempests, in the which the Venetians lost eleuen gallies, and Marc Anthonie Colonna two, whereof the one, being the Admirall, was burnt with lightning. They had fortified Nicosia reasonably well, but it was ill furnished with men of defence, although it were full of people; for they made an estimate, that there liued in that citie aboue foure-
D score thousand persons, but there were not fifteene hundred souldiers, and verie few horse Nicosia ill prouided.
of the nobilitie of the countrey: yet they maintained the siege fiue and fortie dayes as well as they might, but they neuer made sallie nor skirmish, as is vsuall when a towne is inuested by an enemie: so as being battered, and an assault giuen, it was not forced, but in a manner taken without resistance. There was a great slaughter made of all them that were found in armes, but there were more made slaues, and the towne was abandoned to the spoile, whereas the Turkes found an incredible wealth. Aboue all, the Turkes had a great bootie of faire women and maids, among the which there was a gentlewoman, who Resolution of a gentlewoman.
for despight to see her selfe reduced into seruitude, had the courage to set fire on the powder in a ship into which she and many others were put, so as they were all burnt, and two E other vessels that were joyning vnto it.

Mustafa, who was Generall of the Turkes armie, hauing taken Nicosia, he left Musafe Bassa with 4000 men for the gard thereof, and then he marcht with his armie towards Famagosta, the onely place that was fortified in the whole island, the which was held to bee much richer than Nicosia, and therfore it drew so many Turks thither from all parts, as by the common opinion there were at this siege aboue 200000 men. He made his first lodging three miles from the towne, on the 18 of September. There was no hope to win this Famagosta besieged.
place by threats or promises, wherein they vsed great art. They found greater difficulties in their approches than they had done at Nicosia, they of the towne sallying forth & skirmishing with them continually. But in the meane time they had receiued aduertisement, F that the Christian armie was joyned in Candie, which made the Turkes feare, that they would soone offer to succour Cypres, & that they would land an armie: so Mustafa going to counsel with Pialy and Aly the other cõmanders, it was resolued, That Mustafa should fortifie his lodgings at Famagosta, & then passe to Nicosia, to repaire the ruines, and augment the garrison; & that Pialy should go to sea with the fleet, maintaining the reputation

of

1570 of the victorie gotten at Nicoſia, and the honour of the great Turke with a new victorie at ſea: but they were ſoone after aduertiſed by two fregats, That the Chriſtian armie being come to Caſtelrazo, and hearing of the ſucceſſe of Nicoſia, were returned to Candie: Whereupon their fleet alſo returned, to giue better order for their affaires, both for the wintering of their men at land, and for the returne of the fleet to Conſtantinople, Pialy deſiring to enter triumphantly into that citie with the ſpoyles gotten in Cypres, where he arriued the ſixteenth day of December. G

King of Tunis expelled by Vluccialy.

In this time Vluccialy king of Alger had fallen into warre with the king of Tunis, who (as wee haue ſaied) was feudatarie to the king of Spaine; and being come to fight, Vluccialy was victor, and the other flying away, with great difficultie, recouered Goulette, with his wife and ſonnes: and the enemie, being fauoured by this occaſion, and by the inconſtancie of the Moores, made himſelfe lord, without any toyle, of the citie of Tunis, and of Biſerta; the which did afterwards draw the king of Spaine into a new warre, to reſtore him to his realme, flying to his Maieſtie for aid, as his father had done to the Emperour Charles the fift. H

1571 11

League concluded betwixt the Pope, the king of Spaine, and the Venetians.

The king of Spaine deſirous to ſatisfie the Popes deſire, and to auoyd tediouſneſſe in the concluſion of the league, had referred the treatie thereof to Rome, giuing the charge in his name to Anthonie Perrenot, cardinall Granuelle, and to Francis of Toledo, cardinall Paccheco, joyning with them Iohn de Zuniga his embaſſadour at Rome. In the end, after many difficulties, the league was concluded the twentieth day of May, with theſe articles: That the king of Spaine ſhould furniſh an hundred gallies, the Venetians ſhould arme as many, and the Pope (vnder whom marcht the other princes and potentates of Italie) ſhould enter for their part, That they ſhould entertaine fiftie thouſand foot, and foure thouſand and fiue hundred horſe; and with this power they ſhould goe and aſſaile the Turke in his owne countrey, but eſpecially in the iſland of Cypres. That towards the charge of this armie and the equipage, the king of Spaine ſhould contribute a moitie, the Venetians a third part, and the Pope a ſixt: and if the Pope ſhould not be able to furniſh it, whatſoeuer ſhould be wanting the king ſhould beare three fift parts, and the commonweale of Venice two: and that D. Iohn d'Auſtria ſhould be Generall of the whole armie. I K

Cardinall Alexandrino ſent Legat into Spaine.

After the concluſion hereof the Pope ſent cardinall Alexandrino, his Legat, into Spain, to treat with the king as well touching the execution of the league, and ſome other priuat buſineſſe, as to goe into Portugal, to procure aid from that king. The king of Spaine receiued him with great honour, and treated with him touching the execution of the league, ſeeming to bee reſolued to bend all his forces againſt the Turke: and therefore he commaunded D. Iohn to ſtay in Italie, after that yeares nauigation, to be more readie with the armie in the Spring, and that his miniſters at Rome ſhould reſolue in euerie occaſion concerning the league, as they ſhould thinke beſt, without expecting any new order from Spaine. From thence he paſt into Portugall, to treat in like manner with the king D. Sebaſtian concerning the league. This young prince was bred vp in generous thoughts to purchaſe much glorie by making warre againſt Infidels, and therein to exceed his predeceſſors, hauing in himſelfe a naturall diſpoſition to warre, an able bodie, and practiſed in thoſe painefull exerciſes which belong vnto warre, hauing beene alwaies laid before him, by the Ieſuites which inſtructed him, That all his enterpriſes ſhould bee for the ſole benefit of Chriſtendome, they had made his mind as religious as his owne nature and the exhortations of his noblemen had made him warlike, ſo as hee did not thinke or reaſon of any thing but of warre. And for that the example of his predeceſſors did repreſent vnto him in his ſleepe the honourable victories and glorious conqueſts they had made in Afrike and the Eaſt Indies, hee in like manner directed all his thoughts to that end.

Diſpoſition of Sebaſtian king of Portugall. L M

The Legat Alexandrino finding him in this diſpoſition, did eaſily draw him to enter into this league againſt the Turke: who not onely promiſed to ſend his gallies well appointed, to the Chriſtians armie, but he would alſo annoy Selym with another great nauie at Suez, and other places held by the Turkes in the red ſea, and in the gulph of Perſia: and more-

A moreouer, the Pope deſiring to breake the marriage betwixt Marguerite of Valois, and the king of Nauarre, he gaue commiſſion vnto the Cardinall to moue this marriage vnto the King of Portugall, the which would haue beene ſomewhat difficult, if the king had not beene much deuoted to the Pope, who at his intreatie layed aſide a ſtrange reſolution; which was, that he would not heare ſpeake of a wife, becauſe he would not be held effeminate, to the great griefe of his grandmother, his vncle, and the wiſeſt of his Nobilitie, who deſired to ſee ſome iſſue of him, and the ſucceſſion of the realme aſſured. In the end he was content to take this French ladie, neither deſired he any other dowrie, but a generous reſolution in king Charles to enter in the league. Matters beeing thus ſetled in Spaine, the Cardinall, according to his commiſſion, paſt thorough France, for the B league and marriage, but he found no meanes to effect either: whereupon he returned into Italy. 1571

King of Portugal content to take Marguerit of Valois to wife.

Don Iohn of Auſtria being much pleaſed with this honorable charge, came from Spaine to Genoua, where he ſtayed not long, but arriued on the ninth of Auguſt at Naples, bringing with him from the Court, the great Commander of Caſtile, with the title of his Lieutenant, and chiefe Councellor, Fernando Cariglia, Earle of Pliego, his chiefe Steward, D. Franciſco d'Ibarra, D. Pedro Velaſco, D. Michell Moncada, Gil d'Andrada, Carlo Spinelli, who had followed him as an aduenturer againſt the Moores, with many others. With theſe there ioyned the Dukes of Parma and Vrbin, Don Antonio Carraſa, duke of Mondragon, the Marquis of Carrara, D. Pompee of Lanoy, Vincentio Carraſa, Prior of C Hongary, the Earle of Sarno, the Marquis of Auila, Paul Iourdain Vrſin, the Earle of S. Fleur, Aſcanio de la Corne, and Paul Sforza. Beeing in Naples, Cardinall Granuell, the Viceroy, who in that action had the authoritie of Legat, deliuered vnto D. Iohn the Standard, as Generall of the Church, the which the Pope had bleſt, who ſolicited his departure towards Meſſina by many embaſſages, where the whole fleete ſhould ioyne, and whether Marc Antonio Colonna was gone long before with twelue gallies of Florence, armed by the Pope, and three of the Order of S. Iohn.

Noblemen with Don Iohn in the army.

But to returne to the ſeege of Famagoſta, Muſtapha ſought by all meanes poſſible to get the counterſcarpe, the which was valiantly defended by Marc Antonio Bragadino, and Aſtor Baglioni, the one hauing charge of the gouernement, the other of the garriſon, but D in the end the Turkes wonne it. About the midſt of May, they planted fiue batteries, and had made ten forts. They had in the beginning aduertiſed the Seigneury of Venice in what ſtate they ſtood, who ſent them a ſupply of ſeuenteene hundred men, with victuals and munition by Marc Antonio Quirini, who paſt valiantly through the Turkes gards, and returned: theſe ſuccors were commanded by Lewis Martinengo. The Turkes continued their batteries with great obſtinacie, and had giuen foure aſſaults, where the beſeeged repulſt them valiantly, but with great loſſe of either ſide: the beſeeged hauing held out till the 20 of Iuly, beeing now preſt with great hunger and want, the number of their ſouldiers beeing diminiſhed to eight hundred, and thoſe much tyred; moſt of the Grecians beeing dead, either with fighting, or with the continuall toyle. Beeing terrified with ſo great miſeries, and out of hope of any more ſuccors, ſome of the chiefe of the ci- E tie beſought Bragadino, that he would incline to ſome accord, ſeeing he had made ſo good proofe of their faith and conſtancie in that ſeege: No man would euer hold them vnworthie of commendation, if (after they had endured ſo many aſſaults, and ſuffered ſo much penurie, with want of munition, after the loſſe of ſo many ſouldiers and citizens, and finally, beeing without all hope of ſuccours, they had prouided at the leaſt, for the liues of their children which remayned, and for the honour of poore miſerable women: that he would not in recompence of their deuotion, which they had alwaies ſhewed to the common-weale of Venice, be the cauſe of the totall ruine of their citie, and ſuffer their wiues and children, who had ſpent ſo much bloud, and offered their bodies to death F for their ſeruice, to become a ſhamefull prey to their Turkiſh luſt, there remaining no hope of health, but by the meanes of ſome accord: That it was a thing worthie of a wiſe Nobleman (as he was) to chooſe the leaſt of euils: And laſt of all to remember, that it was held a brutiſh crueltie, and no valour, to runne headlong to a certaine death, where there is no hope of life.

Batteries of Famagoſta.

Speech to Bragadino at Famagoſta.

1571 Bragadino knew that their requeſt was juſt, and that their extremities were great: yet G forcing his owne nature, and deſiring to preſerue the realme, which depended wholly vp-on the loſſe of that place, he did not thinke it poſſible that the Senat would neglect ſo weightie a buſineſſe, and not ſend the ſuccours which had beene promiſed. Wherefore hee would not yeeld to their demaund, but fed them with good words, putting them in hope of preſent ſuccours, diſpatching a fregat preſently into Candie, to aduertiſe the Seigniorie of their extremities.

12 In the end of Iulie the Turks gaue an aſſault which continued fiue houres: but the be-Famagoſta yeelded to the Turkes. ſieged ſeeing there was no meanes to endure another, hauing but ſeuen barrels of powder left, they began to treat of an accord, and hauing made a truce the firſt of Auguſt, the H next day they gaue hoſtages of either ſide. The conditions were:

That the citie ſhould be yeelded to the Turkes, the perſons, armes, and goods of ſouldiers and citizens being ſafe, who might remaine there, and liue in the laws of Chriſt, and not be wronged in their honours nor ſubſtance.

That ſuch as would depart might haue free paſſage into Candie, and three yeares reſpite, and that the ſouldiers ſhould be garded by the Turkiſh gallies, that no outrage ſhould be done them, and that they might carrie with them fiue peeces of ordnance, and three of their beſt horſes.

That they ſhould not make any Moſques of their churches, nor charge the citizens with any carriages or tenthes. I

Muſtafa ſigned theſe conditions, and the ſouldiers began to imbarke in the gallies and other veſſels which the Turks had ſent into the port, and on the fift day at night Braga-dino hauing ſent the keyes to Muſtafa by cont Neſtor Martinengo, he went himſelfe in perſon with Aſtor Baglioni, Iohn Antonio Quirini, Andrew Brigadino, cont Lewis Martinengo, with other Commaunders of great worth. Muſtafa receiued them, in ſhew, with great honour, and cauſing them to ſit downe, hee diſcourſed with them of diuers things, at laſt he ſaid, That the Chriſtians which had imbarked to goe from Famagoſta, the night before they meant to paſſe into Candie, and to other places belonging to the Venetians, had cruelly and treacherouſly ſlaine all the Turkiſh ſlaues which they had, and that three had eſcaped with great difficultie out of the citie, to aduertiſe the Baſſa there- K of: And therefore he had giuen order, that the Turkes ſhould not goe out of the hauen with their veſſels, before they had good caution for their ſecuritie, that they ſhould not be ſlaine, or made ſlaues in Candie, or any other place. Whereunto Bragadino anſwered, That it was not in the accord to giue any hoſtages, and therefore he meant not to doe it, denying abſolutely that there were any Turkes ſlaine, as he had ſaid. Muſtafa was much altered with this anſwer, and made a ſigne with his hand, that he ſhould come neere him; then he cauſed his interpreter to ſpeake certaine words vnto him in his eare, which were not heard, nor yet Brigadinos anſwer: but he ſeemed more furious than a Tigre, and ſtriking Marc Antonio vpon the head, he and all the reſt were preſently taken, being all vnarmed: for it is a cuſtome among the Turkes, that no ſtranger comes vnto them L Men of worth treacherouſly put to death by Muſtafa. with his armes. Then cauſing them to be led out of the tent, he cauſed Aſtor Baglioni, Andrew Bragadino, Iohn Antonio Quirini, Lewis Martinengo, and the knight del Haſte, to bee cut in peeces in his preſence, one after another, Marc Antonio being reſerued for a more horrible death. Cont Hercoles Martinengo being there in hoſtage, was ſaued by one of the Baſſaes Eunuches, who tooke him for his ſlaue. The ſouldiers which were in the campe, to the number of three hundred, were all ſlaine, and thoſe that were imbarked were made ſlaues.

Death of Marc Antonio Bragadino. Two dayes after Muſtafa entred into Famagoſta, and hauing cauſed Bragadinos eares to bee cut off, when hee was taken priſoner, hee made him to bee ſet vpon the maine yard of the Admirals gallie of Rhodes, to bee a ſpectacle to the Chri- M ſtians that were there in captiuitie. In the end hee cauſed him to bee ſet vpon the pillorie in the market place, and there to bee flayed aliue by a Iew; this lord ſhew-ing ſtill a noble reſolution, and full of Chriſtian pietie, neither did hee, during all his torments and diſgraces which they did vnto him, ſhew any ſigne of feare or baſeneſſe, ſtill reproaching that treacher with the breach of his faith euen vnto his

his death. Then hee cauſed him to be quartered, and one of them to bee ſet vpon either batterie: his skinne was ſtuft with ſtraw, and hung at the yard of one of his galliots, being firſt a miſerable ſpectacle to all the coaſt of Soria, and then to Selim in Conſtantinople. Thus after threeſcore and fifteene dayes batterie, and many aſſaults, the Turkes hauing ſpent an hundred and fiftie thouſand ſhot of great ordnance, Famagoſta was taken. 1571

D. Iohn of Auſtria came the foure and twentieth of Auguſt to Meſſina, being receiued by the two other Generals, Colonna and Veniero, with great honour; where, all the forces of the league not being yet arriued, he called the two Generals, with ſome others of greateſt judgement in martiall affaires, to counſell, to reſolue what they had to doe: but for that their opinions were diuers, it was ordered, that they ſhould ſet them downe in writing, with their reaſons; but the reſolution was deferred vntill the arriuall of the reſt of the gallies. On the firſt of September Iohn Andrew Doria arriued with twelue gallies, hauing imbarkt Germanes and Lombards at Spetie, after whom came the marqueſſe of S. Crux with thirtie gallies from Naples, and the next day Quirini and Canale with threeſcore from Candie: ſoone after there came ſome ſhips from Naples laden with men and munition, and ſome gallies from Palermo, conducted by Cardona; but ſome other veſſels could not come ſo ſoone, being left to imbarke three thouſand Italian foot, and 1000 Spaniards that were at Otranto. There were at Meſſina the eight of September twelue gallies of the Popes, 81 of the king of Spaines, with twentie ſhips of burthen (ſome ſay twentie fiue) one hundred and eight gallies of the Seigniorie of Venice, ſix galleaſſes, and two ſhips; three gallies of Malta, and three of the Order of S. Lazaro: ſo as there were in the whole fleet two hundred and ſeuen gallies, ſix gallnaſſes, and two and twentie ſhips, beſides foiſts and other ſmaller veſſels, and in them at the leaſt twentie thouſand fighting men, with victuals and munition ſufficient. Thoſe that had chiefe charge in this armie, beſides the Generals, were theſe, Aſcanio de la Corna was Campemaſter generall for the king of Spaine, the earle of S. Fiora was Generall of the Italians, the Colonels were cont Paulo Sforza, the earle of Sarno, and Gaſper Toraldi; the Colonels of the Dutch were the earle of Lodron, and Vinciguerra of Arco: And of the fleet, Iohn Andrew Doria was Generall of his owne gallies, which the king paied, D. Aluaro de Baſſan, marqueſſe of S. Crux, gouerned them of Naples with the like title, D. Iohn of Cardona them of Sicile, and D. Ceſare d'Aualos the ſhips: Gabrio Serbelloni was Generall of the ordnance. The names of the reſt of the Commaunders I omit to auoid tediouſneſſe.

D. Iohn d'Auſtria comes to Meſſina.

Number of Chriſtians fleet at Meſſina.

The Pope ſent Iohn Paulo Odeſcalco to Meſsina, to haſten their departure, and to inrich them with many indulgences, being to fight againſt the enemies of the holy Church. Then after a ſolemne proceſſion they went againe to counſell. There were many things propounded, whereon they diſcourſed long with great judgement; but in the end the exhortations of Colonna, and of the Venetian commanders, made D. Iohn reſolue, who had a deſire to do ſomething worthie of himſelfe, and the expectation which was of that great fleet, to goe and fight with the enemie. Wherefore they parted from Meſsina the 16 of September: at night they came to S. Iohns ditch, where he gaue order how they ſhould ſaile, ſtaying there the next day for certaine veſſels which had ſtaied behind for ſome neceſſaries, & alſo for D. Giles d'Andrada, whom D. Iohn had ſent ſome daies before to learne ſome newes of the enemie; by whom he vnderſtood, that they were gone towards Valona: but to be duely informed of his courſe, the ſame knight was preſently ſent backe againe. The Venetians were verie deſirous to aduance, fearing that the dangerous time for ſailing drawing neere, there would ſome ſtorme ariſe, and make all their attempts fruitleſſe for that yeare. After ſome foule weather and contrarie winds, they came to Cape S. Maria, hauing firſt met with a fregat, who brought them newes of the great need they of Famagoſta had of preſent ſuccours, and withall he did certifie them of the ſtate of Candie, and that the Turks armie was gone towards the gulph of Lepanto. Being come to Corfu on the 25 of the moneth, they were troubled to ſee many of their gallies behind, beſides thoſe that the marqueſſe of S. Crux had caried to Otranto for 3000 Italian foot, & the regiment of Spaniards in Naples. They wanted alſo their ſhips, who were ſent before with

Reſolutiõ of the Chriſtian armie

1571 ſouldiers, and other neceſſaries, parting from Meſſina a day before the reſt of the armie, G but beeing hindered by foule weather, they could not come in time to the battell: within two dayes the galleaſſes and ſome gallyes arriued, the which had beene ſeparated from the armie by ſtorme, or by ſome other accident. And for that ſome were not of opinion to fight with the enemie, Veniero feared ſome accident, which might diſturbe all, and make Don Iohn to alter his reſolution, and therefore preſſing their departure, he had cauſed great ſtore of corne to be put into the galeaſſes, to be ſent to the ſuccour of Famagoſta, hauing not heard any thing of the loſſe thereof. It was bruted, that Caracoſſa was gone with 18 gallies to Valona, to fetch Biſcuit: wherupon Colonna and Veniero perſuaded Don Iohn, not to loſe ſo goodly an oportunitie; for going to incounter his ene- H mies diuided, whereſoeuer he hapned, he ſhould obtaine a certaine victorie. Don Iohn was not auerſe to that reſolution, but he deſired to be better certified than with rumors, and vncertaine reports; and therefore it was reſolued, that Canale ſhould go before with two good gallies, to learne ſome certaintie of the enemies Fleet. But he was ſtayed vpon the arriuall of foure gallies, which by contrarie winds had beene ſeparated from the reſt; they aſſured the Generals, that there was not any veſſell of the Turkes at Valona: for that hauing paſt thereby, they had not ſeene any. Whereupon ſome thought, it was but an artificiall inuention of ſuch, as deſired they ſhould fight with the enemie. D. Iohn beeing at Gomenizze, a great port of Epirus, they were aduertiſed by Giles d'Andrada, that he had heard for certaine at Zante, that the Turkiſh Fleet was entred into the gulph of Le- I panto, as a place of ſafetie, that they might ſupply their wants, and to reſolue what they had to do, ſending their ſicke and vnprofitable people to Corone, for that Caracoſſa hearing of the comming of the Chriſtians into thoſe ſeas, was gone to aduertiſe the Generall Aly. There Doria hauing commandement from the Confederates, tooke muſter of all the veſſels, obſeruing euery thing carefully, for that their opinions were diuers touching their fighting with the enemie.

Commander of Caſtille diſſuades them from fighting with the Turks.

The great Commander of Caſtile, who was of great authoritie with the Generall, gaue aduiſe, that they ſhould not hazard a battell without ſome great aduantage, whereof the hazard and danger was very great, not onely for the loſſe of ſo great an armie, but K » for the great ruines which would enſue: for that Sicile, the coaſts of Calabria and Apu-» lia, yea of all Italy and Spaine, would, in this caſe, be made deſtitute of all gard and de» fence: ſo as they did not ſee what aſſured hope of gaine might ballance the reaſonable » feare of ſo great a loſſe; proteſting, that what he ſayd, was no more for the priuat intereſt
» of his King, than of the other Confederates, and eſpecially of the Venetians, who as nea-» reſt to the enemie, might thinke to taſt the firſt fruites of this dangerous counſell. It is » ſometimes to be held a great victorie, to hinder a mightie enemie, from doing any thing
» of importance, as they ſhould do, in curbing the pride, that yeare of the Turkiſh armie, » growne bold by ſo many victories, hauing many gallies, and ſo well furniſhed, as it was to » be preſumed, both of ſouldiers and ſlaues, being in its owne country, where they had » great Garriſons continually in pay, and had of late reduced ſo many Chriſtians into ſer- L » uitude in the Venetians countries.

» He added, that by the example of all famous Captaines, both ancient and mo» derne, from whom they are accuſtomed to draw ſecure inſtructions in militarie actions, » there was no courſe held wiſer for them, that had the weaker power, and are in » danger of the greater loſſe, than in delaying an enemie, to attend ſome aduantage to op-» preſſe him, and tyring him, to make his attempts vaine.

» The condition of things were not equall, neither ſhould they hazard ſo much vpon M
» a moſt doubtfull fortune, onely with a deſigne to fight with the Turkes forces » at ſea, ſeeing the gaine would be ſmall which they could promiſe themſelues, by that » hoped-for victorie; beeing as eaſie for the enemie to returne the next Spring very » ſtrong to ſea, although he were vanquiſhed, as it would be hard for the Confederates » to repayre ſo great loſſes, if God, for the ſins of Chriſtendome, ſhould ſuffer them to be » ouercome. Wherefore, I beſeech you, my moſt noble Lord, ſet before your eyes
» the ineſtimable loſſe which may happen to Chriſtendome, by the ruine of this ar» mie; if in nothing elſe, but of ſo many noble Captaines, and valiant ſouldiers,

which

which we may boldly ſay without bluſhing, is the flower of all the martiall men of Chriſtendome, of whoſe counſell and valour, I may truely ſay, depends the health of the beſt part of Europe; and ſo by conſequence by the loſſe of them, the means to reſiſt the Turks power now would faile vs, and all hope to vanquiſh him hereafter. I will not forget to offer to your conſideration, how dangerous it is for the winds and ſea, the time of the yeare being ſo far ſpent, and that to go and ſpend any time in ſeeking of the enemie in this dangerous ſeaſon of Autumne, were to tempt fortune doubly. There may be infinit examples produced, but the remembrance of the laſt yeare is ſo freſh, as wee need not to ſeeke farther: and you muſt vnderſtand, that he which in time recouers a ſafe port with his ſhipping, makes it knowne what counſell is moſt profitable, if an vnfortunat chance happen. But who can judge, if going ſo farre into the enemies countrey, to fight with him, being much weakned either by our loſſes in fighting, or by foule weather, whether we can with ſafetie recouer our owne ports: without doubt, in this caſe few would be ſaued, being knowne by experience (a dangerous doctrine of raſh men) what bad counſell it is, to follow a mightie enemie, and to fight with him in the midſt of his owne ſtrength. 1571

Both the Venetian Generals oppoſed themſelues againſt the opinion of the great Commander, ſo did Aſcanio della Cornia, S. Fiora, and Serbelloni, but eſpecially the Generall Colonna, who ſought to infringe with apparent reaſons, and with the Popes authoritie, whoſe expreſſe commandement was, to find out the Turks armie, and to fight with it. He ſaid, That he could in no ſort yeeld to the opinion of Requeſens, being a new propoſition, and contrarie to the articles of the league, where it was chiefly propounded to make an offenſiue warre, and he taught them how they ſhould ſtill ſtand vpon their defence; which was nothing elſe, but to confirme the enemie in the opinion which he had conceiued of the ſmall valour of the Chriſtians, whereby he was growne more inſolent. The confederat princes, ſaid he, haue had a ſpeciall care in their conuentions, to doe any thing that might daunt the pride of this enemie of Chriſtendome, and that he ſhould ſenſibly feele the valour of Chriſtians. He will neuer feare any ſuch power, if we, meaſuring all forces by the compaſſe of humane diſcourſes, dare not promiſe vnto our ſelues any thing from the help of heauen: and yet let vs remember that we are the ſouldiers of Chriſt, that we fight for Chriſt, and that being vnited vnder his banner, we need not feare that he will euer abandon vs, if we ſhew not our ſelues diſtruſtfull. But I will not lay the foundation of all our hopes vpon the miraculous helps of heauen, whereby I ſhould ſeeme to confeſſe, that humane force were not able to incounter, yea to vanquiſh this enemie. I ſhould ſeeme to want judgement, to counſell a battell without conſtraint, and with apparent diſaduantage, and to tempt the pleaſure of God with the dangerous euent of a battell. Our armie then, in my opinion, is not ſo weake, nor the enemie ſo vigorous, that matters ſhould bee brought to that deſpaire, ſeeing that we haue here aboue 200 good gallies, better appointed (according to the opinion of men of judgement) than the Turkes, the which would equall their aduantage of number, if the fame be true, that the Turkes haue three hundred veſſels. For gathering theſe veſſels from diuers parts, they haue, to make a number, aſſembled euerie ſmall barke of pyrats, fitter to ſteale, & run away, than to fight. Wee muſt thinke that our ſouldiers do exceed the Turks in valour, who often with many thouſands could not reſiſt hundreds of our, and now, it may be, are not inferiour vnto them in number, if we ſhall wel examine the qualitie of their veſſels and ours: and therein alſo we wil vſe your authority, who maintain, that we haue the flower of all the ſouldiers of Chriſtendome. And to what end then ſerues this multitude of gallies, theſe numbers of noblemen and ſouldiers, and ſo much treaſure waſted, onely to goe neere the enemie? nay, not to approach neere him, but to terrifie him with the fame of our forces, and ſeeing that he doth not flie, we to retire our ſelues into ſafetie. But if that be not to be thought on, yet to keep him from proceeding any farther in Cypres, nor to annoy any more thoſe miſerable coaſts, theſe vnfortunat illands which be ſubiect to the fire & ſword of their barbarous crueltie. But we are to attempt more, to reuenge ſo many injuries receiued from them, ſo as the religious arms of Chriſtians being as it were awaked from a long ſleep, may be imploied in thoſe actions which ſhalbe held worthie of their auncient glorie. And contrariwiſe, what greater imputation can there bee vnto the name of Chriſtians, than after two

Marc Anthonie Colonna perſuades them to fight.

1571 „ ſuch preparations within few monethes, not to dare to looke the enemie in the face? G „ What hope will there then remaine to deliuer the realme of Cypres? What will the „ world ſay of vs? Oh let there neuer any thought of ſuch feare come into our hearts:
„ let vs not ſhew our ſelues ſo weake: let vs not ſo little eſteeme the forts which are held „ by the Catholike king, and the Commonweale of Venice: that in caſe any vnfortu„ nate ſucceſſe ſhould befall our fleet, they ſhould be a prey vnto the enemie. Princes „ were woont to repoſe all their ſafetie in armies by land, or in fleets by ſea; but ſince that „ they haue found meanes to ſecure their countries with ports and frontire places well for„ tified, they haue not much eſteemed the loſſe of a battell at land or at ſea, touching the „ conqueſt of anothers dominions, for that the defence within walls is ſo long, as that H „ prince which was a looſer may repaire his forces, and come againe to fight with his ad-„ uerſaries. We haue now in hand the example of the realme of Cypres, the which al„ though it be farre from their lords forces, yet two forts, and thoſe not very wel furniſhed, „ haue made reſiſtance aboue a yere, and there is yet hope to preſerue it, ſending ſome ſmal „ ſuccours. And ſhall we feare, that ſo many ſtrong places vpon this gulph, and vpon the „ coaſt of Naples and Sicile, ſhall be in an inſtant deuoured by the Turkiſh armie, if any „ ſiniſter fortune ſhould befall our fleet, which God forbid. But if we (my Lord Com„ maunder) ſhall runne into ſuch apparent daunger, being at ſea in theſe tempeſtuous „ times of Auguſt, why will wee ſecure our enemies from the like daunger, when as they „ after that imagined victorie, will ſaile ouer (being farre from their ports) the Mediterra- I „ nean and Tirrene ſeas, in that daungerous ſeaſon? And if you ſhall ſay vnto me, That „ in the Spring they will attempt ſome conqueſt of importance, I will aunſwer, That our „ forts, and the countrey which lyes moſt ſubiect to daunger, ſhall be the better fortifi„ ed. And for proofe hereof, this mightie Turkiſh fleet, although it hath not beene a „ ny way hindered this yeare by our gallies, what matter of importance hath it attempted?
„ yea in Candie, and in theſe ſeas, they haue receiued great loſſes, comming neere vnto „ fortified places. But let it ſuffice to haue hitherto diſcourſed, to ſhew that the daunger „ is not ſo great, nor ſo apparent, in caſe we ſhould looſe a battell. Let vs now come to „ the conſideration of the importance, and neceſſitie we haue to giue battell, and then of „ the certaine hope of the conqueſt, if we be victors. It is impoſſible to bridle and tame K
„ the inſolencie of the Turke whileſt that hee is lord at ſea, the which hee will alwayes „ hold himſelfe to bee, when as our nauie ſhall not dare to affront him with ſufficient „ forces, and that it is all one to flie the enemies ſight, and to feare to receiue ſome harme:
„ but that feare doth not onely leaue him the poſſeſſion of the ſea free, and doth increaſe „ his boldneſſe with his force, but doth quite diſcourage the ſubiects, and giues them occa-
„ ſion to attempt things verie prejudiciall to the commonweale. Let vs then goe and ſeeke
„ this armie, to daunt the pride of the Turks, and to giue courage to the Chriſtians: hauing „ found it, let vs fight with it, hauing a firme confidence both in the helpe of heauen, and in „ our owne forces, that we ſhall vanquiſh them. Let vs perſuade our ſelues, that the repu„ tation of the Chriſtian name, and the honour of our princes, cannot be otherwiſe maintai- L „ ned; for that being knowne that they haue two yeares together prepared ſo great a fleet, „ with their incredible charge, and giuen it out, That they would fight with the Turkes, if „ we ſhould retire with ſuch apparent ſignes of feare, I doe not ſee how we can auoid a ge„ nerall imputation, either of want of gouernment, or of extraordinarie cowardiſe. It is re„ quiſit then by all the reaſons of warre, that for the importance of this action, and to auoyd „ ſhame and diſhonour, we ſhould trie a battel, for that the loſſe thereof cannot be ſo preiu„ diciall as the Commaunder ſaith, and by a victorie we are to expect a great conqueſt, if „ we will preſently imbrace the occaſion, & reape the honorable fruits of ſo great an aduen„ ture. For it is apparent, that all the Turkes dominion is gouerned by moſt cruell tyrannie, „ & that his ſubiects (whether you wil make an attempt vpon Albania, Morea, or Soria, yea M
„ and in Thrace it ſelfe) as ſoone as they ſhal heare that his forces (who oppreſſeth them vn„ der the heauie yoke of barbarous ſeruitude) are ouerthrown at ſea, wil attempt ſome inno-„ uation, if they ſhal but ſee the Chriſtians enſignes: ſo as the Turks ſeeing the enemie not „ only round about them, but euen in their houſes, they will find themſelues in a verie hard „ condition, & what remedy ſhal they find to eſcape, but they muſt endure themſelues to be trium-

A triumphed ouer by many Noble victories? It is not any vaine hope grounded vpon deſire, that makes mee to ſpeake thus, ſeeing it is certaine that the Chriſtians in thoſe Countries which I haue mentioned are more in number than the Turkes, and although they bee vnarmed, yet are they not without courage, ſo as being armed by vs, they will doe great ſeruice in any thing that ſhall bee attempted. 1571

Beſides, thoſe coaſts hauing not of many yeares ſeene a Chriſtian Nauie, and not ſufficiently fortified for ſuch dangers, what reſiſtance can they make againſt our victorious armie? If theſe great hopes ſhould make vs reſolue otherwiſe than the Commaunder hath propounded, ſhould we not doe it the rather, for that it is the chiefe intent of B your king and my Lord to free Chriſtendome from the oppreſſion of the Barbarians, & then to aſſure the Spaniſh Seas from the continuall ſpoiles, of Pyrats, Turkes, and Africans? But his Maieſtie ſhall neuer attaine to either of them, if their forces at Sea bee not firſt ſubdued: neither can they bee ſubdued, if wee doe not hazard a battell: wee haue no hope to bee ſtronger at Sea the next yeare than this, but rather to decreaſe both in number and courage, hauing twiſe performed ſo little, if wee ſhall reſolue as you aduiſe vs: what then remaines to bee done, but that being forced wee proceed with an aſſured hope, not of one, but of many worthy victories, and finding out the enemy, fight with him, like the ſouldiers of Chriſt? So may it pleaſe his diuine bountie, to abate their arrogancie, and to confound this their mightie fleet, the which I
C aſſure my ſelfe cannot bee ſoone repaired, if there bee the flower of the Turkes forces, as well of Captaines, as of priuate men, as wee ſuppoſe. But if our Princes, as hee pretends, looſing the battell, ſhould with all loſe the beſt of their forces: why ſhall not wee with the ſame argument augment our hopes, our enmies being ſo much afflicted, for that our Princes exceed them much in men of commaund; and for Sea-cauſes, I dare affirme that the State of Venice hath more valiant Captaines than the Turke. Let vs not for Gods ſake ſo much diſtruſt our owne forces,
D as our hearts ſhould bee ſurpriſed with amazement, and that depriued of all generoſitie, yea, of pietie and Religion, wee ſhould hold the enemie in that degree, and ſo baſely eſteeme of our ſelues, and of the dignitie of the confederate princes, hauing in a maner no faith, that the ſupreme power which hath giuen them theſe forces, will alſo preſerue and increaſe them; with their ruine that are his cruell enemies, for the propagation of which faith we haue put on theſe armes, the which being guided by his victorious hand, muſt needs yeeld glorious trophees, both in life and death, if wee will not defaud our ſelues of this certaine hope.

D. Iohn was in the flower of his age, and retaining that generous and warlike minde of his father, hee inclined to his Councell, who with ſo many reaſons propounded, ſo honourable a party, and worthie of ſuch a prince, notwithſtanding that the command had beene giuen him by his brother as a Schoolemaſter or guide: and with this reſolution hee cauſed the Nauy to bee diligently viewed and furniſhed, and gaue
E order how they ſhould goe forth in battell. But, there fell out an accident which had almoſt ouerthrowne the whole action, and depriued them of immortall glorie. Some of the kings Souldiers being placed in a Venetian Galley, they fell to quarrell with others that were in the ſame gallie, ſo as there were ſome hurt & ſlain. Veniero the generall ſent ſome officers with his admirall to bring the offenders vnto him, but they being diſtempered receiued the admirall with iniuries, wherewith Veniero being much incenſed, hee cauſed the offēders to be appehended, & wold haue two of thē with their captain Anticatro hāged at the main yard. After which Paulo Sforza their Colonel, going to ſpeake with Veniero, he wold not hear him, threatning him that if he did not depart, he wold turn his ordināce vpon him & ſink his boat. D. Iohn was wonderfully diſcontēted with the generall Venieros
F actiō, holding himſelf much wrōged; for that he had not referred the iudgement to him, as it was fit, but had chaſed away Colonell Sforza, whome hee had ſent, with threates and diſgrace The whole armie was ſuddenly in a mutinie, the Spaniards ſeemed to prepare themſelues to reuenge, and the Venetians ſtood vpon their gard. But Colonna with great dexteritie (although hee held himſelfe wronged therein by Veniero) ſought to preuent this growing miſchiefe. Barbarigo laboured in like manner, who with great eloquence and Veniero incenſed againſt the Spaniſh Souldiers.

D. Iohn diſconted with the Generall Veniero.

1569 and iudgement, ſo pacified Colonna firſt, and then D. John as they were content to preferre the generall good of Chriſtendome, before their owne priuate reſpects; yet they would not that Veniero ſhould treat any more with them concerning any buſineſſe, neither as a publike perſon, nor as a priuate, but that Barbarigo ſhould ſupplie his place vntill they had further order from Venice. The third of October they went forth in the ſame order that they ſhould fight, and bent their courſe towards Cephalonia, where they had newes that did much trouble them, for that by a fregate diſpacht from Candie, they had letters brought them from Marino Caualli, wherein was related the loſſe of the Realme of Cypres, by letters intercepted in a Galeot the which were ſent after the taking of Famagoſta from the generall Muſtafa to Aly. whereof they preſently ſent aduice to Venice. Comming to Val d' Alexandria, which was the ancient Samos, they returned againe to Councell, where hearing for certaine that the Turkes were in the gulphe of Lepanto, they reſolued after much diſputation, to goe to the mouth of it, and not meeting firſt with the Turkes, to ſet vpon two forts called Dardanelli, to force the enemie to fight, or with the loſſe of their gallies to runne to land: with this reſolution they parted the ſixt of October, and came to the Ilands called Curzolares, where earely in the morning they had view of the Turkiſh armie, which came out of the mouth of the gulfe in good order. The generall Aly had beene informed by Caracoſſa, who had gone to diſcouer the Chriſtians, with what intent they ſailed that way, in what order, and how many veſſels they were: ſo as opening at that inſtant the great Turkes letter, which by his order ſhould be red as ſoone as the enemies fleet approacht, they ſaw it was his mind they ſhould fight, and ruin the Chriſtians forces. The Commanders of the Turkiſh Nauy being very reſolute to incounter the Chriſtians, and to ſhut them vp in the chanell of Cephalonia, being ſmall, whereas Caracoſſa had viewed them, had newly fortified their army with tenne thouſand Ianiſaries Spahies, & voluntaries, which Mehemet Bei had broght, with great ſtore of victuals & munition, and 100 Sangiacs & Alobei, which are men of title, a degree vnder a Sãgiac. But the Chriſtians parted from Cephalonia, and Val d' Alexandria, towards the Curzolares, where the ſea is verie ſtreit, & ful of ſhelfs, & rocks, which the Turks took for an aduãtage. Thus both armies were reſolued to fight, & were put in batel inform of a Croiſant. In the right wing of the Chriſtians armie where fiftie and three gallies, whereof Iohn Andrew Doria had charge, hauing before him two Venetian galleaſſes, and at his backe the admirall galley of Sauoy, in the which was the duke of Vrbin. On the left wing were the like nũber of gallies & galleaſſes, commanded by Auguſtin Barbarigo Proueditor general for the Venetians, being aſſiſted by the admirall galley of Genoua, in the which was the prince of Parma. Betwixt theſe two wings was the bodie of the battell, conſiſting of 70 gallies and two galleaſſes, and in the middeſt or center thereof, the three generalls with their royall gallies, D. Iohn in the middeſt, Sebaſtian Veniero generall for the Venetians on the left hãd, and Marc Antonio Colonna general of the Popes gallies on the right: behind thẽ, as it were in the reereward, where D. Aluaro Baſſan Marqueſſe of Saint Cruz with thirty gallies: and in the front of them was D. Iohn of Cardona with eight gallies as a forlorne hope. On the other ſide Aly oppoſed againſt Iohn Andrew Doria 96 gallies commanded by Vluccialy, againſt the Proueditor Barbarigo, he ſet 55 gallies vnder the charge of Mehemet Bei and Sirocco, and Aly himſelfe with Portau Baſſan (who was general of the land forces) were in the middeſt againſt D. Iohn with 96 gallies, and the reſt of the gallies were appointed in the reere to ſuccour them, with many foiſtes and brigandins, to paſſe from place to place with the Generals commandements. D. Iohn went in perſon to view the armie, being accompained by Lewis de Cardona and Iohn Soto: hee was in white armour, hauing in his hand a Crucifix, going from place to place in a moſt ſwift fregat animating the ſouldiers, and telling them, that they had not him for their Captaine and leader, but that great God alone, whoſe humane ſhape, being dead vpon the croſſe, to ſaue the whole world, they ſaw in his hands. Hee put them in minde that they did fight for the the great God of victories, to whome all humane powers yeeld obedience: that hee was their Generall and their guide, and the gouernour of euerie mans actions; promiſing to euerie man that day an honourable and glorious victorie, whereof nothing could depriue

Order of the Chriſtian armie.

Order of the Turkes army.

D. Iohns ſpeech to the armie.

A depriue them, vnleſſe they diſtruſted to obtaine it. His words were ſhort, but deliue- 1571 red with ſuch efficacie, as it made all them that heard him weepe for ioy, who with a preſage of their future ſucceſſe, beganne to crie victorie, wherewith hee was much contented; and ſo hauing ſaluted the Generall Veniero verie courteouſly, reioycing to ſee that reuerent old man of ſeuenty and fiue yeares old, in an action where hee muſt fight as well as command, hee retyred to his galley: and then hee ſet vp the ſtandard of The battell of Lepanto.
the legaue, which was a Crucifix in a red field, in ſigne of battell. Whereupon Aly did preſently diſcharge a canon, and D. Iohn anſwered him in like manner. Iohn Andrew Doria did an act of iudgement, ſtretching forth his right wing into the ſea, & gi-
B uing meanes to the reſt to doe the like, to the end they ſhould not be compaſſed in by the Turkes gallies, who were in all places more in number, the which did auaile them much. Barbarigo, Anthonie Canale, Marc Anthonie Quirin, and others which did aſſiſt him, kept as neere the land as they could, ſo as they could not bee charged in flanke but onely in front, the which Sirocco and Aly a renegado of Genoua ſought to doe; and when they were put to rout (which began among the enemies which Barbarigo had in front) hee kept them that they could not eſcape, and made a wonderfull ſpoile of them.

The fight grew hot, and the Canon of either ſide plaied furiouſly, wherein the Chriſtians were ſomewhat fauoured by the wind, the which in the beginning being in their faces, changed inſtantly as the battell begunne, and carried the ſmoake in- Aly Baſſa ſlaine
C to their enemies eies. In the beginning the two Generals Gallies, of D. Iohn and Aly Baſſa affronted one another, about the which the combat was very hot. In D. Iohns gallies there were foure hundred Harquebuziers and Musketiers, vnder D. Lope de Figueroa their Commander; in the prow were D. Michel de Moncado, D. Bernardin de Victory of the Chriſtians.
Cardines, and Salazar, Captaine of the Citadell of Palermo; in the middeſt were D Francis Zapate and Lewis Carrillo; and in the poupe D. Iohn, with the great Commaunder of Caſtille, the Earle of Plego, D. Lewis de Cordoua, Roderigo de Benauides, D. Iohn de Guzman, D. Philip de Heredia, Ruy Dias de Mendoſa, and others. In Aly Baſſas galley were foure hundred Ianiſaries, ſhot, and ſome Archers tryed men, who fought verie valiantly againſt D. Iohns Spaniards, who entred twice into the Turkes Admirall,
D and were valiantly repulſt by them, Aly being ſuccoured by diuers others gallies which were about him; but ſuch was the reſolution of the Chriſtians, as they became maſters thereof, Marc Antonio Colonna arriuing, in whoſe galley was the Commander Romeias, who wanted neither iudgement nor courage. Aly Baſſa was ſlaine, and in a maner all that were in his galley; his head was cut from his bodie, and preſented vnto D. Iohn, who cauſed it to bee ſet vpon the end of a pike for a ſpectacle to encourage the Chriſtians to purſue the victorie, and to daunt the Turkes, who began then to faint. Iohn Andrew Doria was alſo Victor on his part, but ſome ſaid that hee might haue done better if hee had liſt, for hee ſuffered Vluccialy to eſcape. In theſe actions there is no man troubled but ſuch as are in them, the reſt ſpeake at plea-
E ſure. The moſt furious combat was in the left wing of the armie, whereas the Proueditor Barbarigo commaunded, who left ſcarce any one of the enemies gallies, but was broken, ſunk, or taken. This wiſe and valiant Captaine was ſhot into the eye with an arrow, whereof hee dyed. Portau Baſſa fled away in a boat ſeeing Aly ſlaine and the battell loſt. Caracoſſa Gouernour of Valona a famous Pyrat, was ſlaine by Honorat Gaietan, Captaine of one of the Popes Gallies. The valour of Martin de Padille was great, who with his onely galley tooke three of the enemies. It was an horrible ſpectacle to ſee the Sea dyed with bloud, full of dead Carkaſſes and peeces of gallies. Many ſought to runne themſelues on gronnd, but they were preuented by the Venetian gallies: many Turkes caſt themſelues into the Sea, thinking to ſaue their liues by F ſwimming, but they fainted and periſhed before they got to land. It was the greateſt victorie that had beene at Sea in many ages. The battell continued eighteene Number of the dead.
houres, wherein they ſpent ſome part of the night: there died about fiue and twentie thouſand Turkes, and almoſt all the Commaunders: others write that there were fifteene thouſand Turkes ſlaine, and ſeuen thouſand Chriſtian; and ſome write thirteene thouſand. There were taken and carried away one hundred and ſeuenteene gallies, 1571 gallies, and thirteene Galleots, and many were ſunke, the number whereof was vnknowne; there were ſome thirtie and nine gallies, galleots, and foiſts which eſcaped and came to Lepanto, which relikes Vluccialy had charge to conduct to Conſtantinople, yet they were ſo ill handled, as hee was faine to leaue ſixe of them behind. They tooke one hundred and ſeuenteene Canons, and two hundred fiftie and eight ſmall peeces of Ordnance: ſome number three thouſand eight hundred fortie and ſixe priſoners, and ſome 5000, among which were the two Sons of Aly Baſſa. Sirocco gouernor of Negrepont was taken, but he was ſo wounded, as he died ſoone after: his wife, who was exceeding faire, was alſo taken priſoner. There were 15000 Chriſtian ſlaues ſet at libertie. The Chriſtians, beſides priuat men, loſt 14 Captaines of gallies, and ſixty knights of Malta, and aboue eight thouſand that were hurt: of men of name, there were ſlaine Auguſtin Barbarigo the Prouiditor, with fifteene other gentlemen of Venice: D. Bernardin de Cardine a Spaniard, Horatio and Virginio Vrſini, with diuers others: and of wounded D. Iohn himſelfe, the Generall Veniero, Paul Iourdain Vrſini, the earle of Sancta Fiora, Troilo Sauelli, and Thomas de Medicis. They found in Alys galley two and twentie thouſand peeces of gold, called Soldamini, and in that of Caracoſſa forty thouſand. The whole prey was diuided at Port Caligiero, ſome write at Corfu, to euerie one of the confederates according to the rate: the king of Spaine had of ſix parts three, the ſtate of Venice two, and the Pope one; and all the captaines and ſouldiers were commended and rewarded for their good ſeruice. After which D. Iohn, Marc Antonio Colonna, and D. Iohn Andrew Doria, retyred to Meſſina, whereas they found that the Marqueſſe of Peſcara the Viceroy was newly dead, hauing frequented women too much. Marc Antonio Colonna went to Rome, & the great Commaunder of Caſtille with him, to treat with the Pope touching the next yeres ſeruice for the league, and to goe to his gouernment of the duchie of Milan, which the king had giuen him after the death of the duke of Albuquerque. This victorie was wonne the ſeuenth of October 1571 without any further pourſuit, for the opinions of the commanders depending of ſundrie maſters were diuers, and alſo for that the ſeaſon of the yeare was too farre ſpent.

Duke of Alba ſends to treat with the queene of England.

The duke of Alba being incenſed againſt the Queene of England, for that ſhe had ſtayed his money, and as hee thought fauoured the Rebels of the Netherlands vnder hand, he ſtudied how to croſſe her, and to cauſe ſome troubles in her Countrie, and to giue the better forme to that which had been begun by his practiſes, hee ſent Chiapin Vitelli vnder colour to treat with her of the compoſition of repriſals, and reſtitution of that which had beene taken from king Philips ſubiects, but hee gaue him ſecret inſtructions againſt that ſtate, if hee might conueniently effect them. There was no meanes to come to any accompt for the ſpoiles which were taken by the Engliſh from any of the king of Spaines ſubiects or adherents, for that they were either waſted by priuat men, or elſe the truth could not be verified. Wherefore Vitelli was ſent backe with good words, and could doe nothing in that reſpect. And as for the enterpriſes whereof hee had charge to conferre with certaine Noble men diſcontented with the preſent gouernment, hee could not worke any thing; for during his aboad in England, hee was carefully obſerued, yet the Pope had his Spies and Negotiators in the countrie, and did ſolicite king Philip to help to depriue the queen both of her crowne and life, and that the Roman Catholikes, and ſuch as vnder that pretext deſired innouations, might be the Maſters. To effect this, they had need both of men and money, but eſpecially of a ſtranger to bee their leader, ſuch a one as the duke of Alba, whome they held to be fitter than any other. The king whither through importunitie or willingly, being full of other affaires yeelded, and it happened that Chiapin Vitelli after his returne from England, comming into Spaine to craue leaue of the king, for that he was called into Italie, by ſome princes, vnto whome hee was bound, was ſtayed, and ſent backe into Flanders with inſtructions to the duke of Alba, to entertaine the practiſes of the malecontents of England: but this froward and diſdainfull man, being incenſed for that they had refuſed him the gouernment of the Netherlands for D. Frederic his ſonne, and that the duke of Medina Celi was ſent to ſucceed him, he contemned and ouer-threw all that practiſe, where without doubt he might haue done much harme.

14 Duke of Medina Celi ſent to ſucceede the Duke of Alba in the lowe Contries.

Newes

A Newes being come to Fleſingue that the duke of Medina Celi, was arriued neere vnto Oſtend with forty veſſels, they ſent forth twelue Ships of warre, who tooke diuers of them, and the duke was forced with twelue more to fly to land in a cocke boat. Hee thought at his comming thither that all troubles had beene pacified: but ſeeing that there was more confuſion than euer, and greater ruines than hee could repaire, he excuſed himſelfe for not accepting the gouernment, and demanded leaue to returne; the which was ſome diſhonour to the duke of Alba. 1572

Duke of Medina refuſeth the gouernment of Flanders.

This yeare the king of Spaine being iealous of the French king, leaſt hee ſhould aid his ſubiects of the Netherlands was verie irreſolute in giuing aid vnto the league,
B his Miniſters in Italie propounding new enterpriſes in Afrike, as well for the hope which the king of Tunis gaue them, as to free the coaſt of Spaine from that neaſt of Pyrats. The which did much diſtaſt the Pope, hee beeing verie deſirous to ſee ſome better fruits of their victorie, and that the league might continue inuiolably, with the like conditions that it was made. Whereupon the kings Miniſters were forced to diſcouer vnto his Holineſſe the feare they had of the French, leaſt they ſhould countenance his ſubiects in the Low Countries: but the Pope being aſſured of the contrarie by the French king, hee grew diſcontented againſt the Spaniards, as if they had inuented it, to reape all the benefit they could of that warre, tranſporting it into Afrike, notwithſtanding the iealouſie increaſed; and although they made
C prouiſion of all ſides, to ſend forth a mighty armie, yet they proceeded coldly and found many delaies.

Difficulties in purſuing the victorie againſt the Turke.

Pope Pius being newly dead, although the Pope did ſhew himſelfe very deſirous to maintaine the league, and did ſolicit it earneſtly, yet it required much time; and the Spaniards being diſcontented that they could not draw the armie againſt ſome places in Afrike, from whence they receiued great annoyance, were ſlowe in execution this yere. Yet after many delaies, D. John general of the league could not auoid it, but granted two & twenty gallies to the confederats, and ſixe thouſand foot to be diſtributed among their gallies, himſelfe remaining at Meſſina, with the reſt of the armie, to ſuccour where his Majeſties occaſions ſhould require, if the French ſhould ſhew themſelues enemies.
D There parted then from Meſſina Marc Antonio Colonna, with the gallies of the Church, and the knight Gil d' Andrada, whome D. John had made Commaunder of the king of Spaines two and twenty gallies, and being ioyned at Corfu with Iames Foſcarin, who was newly made general for the State of Venice, Veniero being diſmiſt, in fauor of D. John they thoght to haue ſome certain intelligence of the enemies fleet, being come forth vnder the cõmand of Vluccialy, who was much made of & eſteemed by Selim for thoſe poore ſpoiles which he got of the knights of Malta, being a ſigne that hee had fought and vanquiſhed, although his companions in the battel had bin defeated, and forced to flie: who like a politik & couragious Captaine, did ſo ſolicit new prouiſions of an armie, ſhewing that the loſſe was not ſo great as the amazed multitude did eſteeme it, as hee put his Lord
E in better hope. Hauing drawne all his forces together, he had a fleet of two hundred gallies, galleots and foiſts, with fiue galleaſſes, with the which they ſailed towards Maluagia. The general Colonna, who in the abſence of D. John held the firſt place, & Foſcarin, hearing where the enemy was, after conſultation, they went to fight with him, hauing 140 gallies 23 ſhips, ſix galleaſſes, and thirty ſmaller barkes deſcouering them as they parted from Dragoniere; but for that the wind was contrarie, they could make no vſe of their galleaſſes, which kept them from fighting. But Vluccialys fleet being more in number than in force, he thought it ſufficient to keep the enemie that yeare from attempting any matter of importance, and not to hazard a battell: and therefore ſtill in his retreat he made a ſhew as if he wold fight, with which art he fled from them with reputation. At that time D. John F had a reſolute anſwere from the Catholike king, that he might ioine with the army of the league with all his forces, and attempt ſome thing againſt the Turke, what they ſhould thinke moſt fit: whereof hee had aduertiſed the Generals at Corfu, at ſuch time as they had reſolued to goe and affront the enemie, ſo as they thought it not fit to ſtay and attend him, as hee deſired. But Vluccialy beeing retyred, and the Generalls beeing come to Capſali vnder Cerigo, there they had letters from D. John, who Foſcarin Generall for the Venetians.

Number of the Turkes Armie.

1572 who called them backe to Zante, and then to Corfu, whether after many diffi- G culties they brought the armie: but D. Iohn would not willingly free the generals, eſpecially Colonna, for that they had not attended him, whereupon their re-ſolutions againſt the enemie fell out croſly; but Foſcarin and others laboured by all meanes to pacifie that diſdaine: and they made a new reſolution to goe againſt the enemies fleet, which they vnderſtood lay in the port of Nauarino, and ſome vnder Modone.

The Chriſtians had ſayled as farre as Striuali, when as D. Iohn de Cardone, being ſent to diſcouer the enemie, gaue them that aduice, which made them reſolue to haſten their voyage that night, ſo as they might bee vpon the enemie before day; H the which was better deuiſed than executed, for they arriued ſo late, as being firſt diſcouered by the Turkes, they might retire with all their fleet, vnder the fort of Modone, and defend themſelues long from the Chriſtians armie, who ſought by diuers meanes, but alwaies in vaine to draw them out of the fort to fight. They reſolued, for that they would not remaine there in vaine, to beſeege the Caſtle of Nauarino, a place of fame, hauing giuen the charge thereof to the prince of Parma, but with weake prouiſions, where hee preuailed nothing, they beeing ſoone relieued by land with many horſe and foot, by the garriſons thereabouts.

Hauing ſtaied in thoſe ſeas ſome daies, being in October, and fearing an Autumne ſtorme, and the kings Gallies beginning to want biſcuit, they were conſtrained to I depart: the which did much diſcontent the Miniſters of the State of Venice, for that Chriſtian army retires to Corfu. they had ſpent that time, wherein they had deſigned great enterpriſes, without any fruit, but with incredible charge. The Nauy then returned towards Corfu, leauing the paſſage free for Vluccialy to retire to Conſtantinople, at ſuch time as hee beganne to feare the euent. D. Iohn hauing retyred to Sicile, and from thence to Naples, Marc Antonio Colonna, and Doria went into Spaine to relate vnto the king what had beene done that yeare; and Colonna to free himſelfe of ſome imputations laied vpon him by ſuch as did malice his greatneſſe, wherein hee did preſerue his honour, and returned into Italie with great reputation.

Sir Francis Drakes firſt voyage to the Indies.

After the arreſt of the Engliſh Merchants, and their goods both in Spaine and the K
Low-Countries as you haue heard, the Engliſh ſought all meanes to bee reuen-ged of the Spaniards. Some vpon their owne coaſt, and others went vnto the Indies: Among which Maſter Francis Drake, who was then a man of no great note, with the helpe of other aduenturers manned forth two ſhips and a Pynnace, and went to Nombre de Dios in Noua Hispania, where hearing that the Towne was not very well peopled, hee landed in the night with one hundred and fiftie men, whereof he put ſeuenty into a fort, and the reſt ſeazed vpon the market place, the inhabitants in this amazement flying to the Mountaines, but ſoone after they within the fort apprehending that their companions in the Towne had been all ſlaine, for that they had heard ſome ſhot, and their trumpet did not anſwere them. They retyred incon- L ſiderately to their Pinnace, which they of the Towne finding, made all the haſt they could to get to their ſhips. Thus Maſter Drake without any loſſe but a Trumpeter, and hauing ſlaine but one man within the towne, retyred much diſcontented from Nombre de Dios. After which hee came to the ſound of Darien, where hauing conference with certaine Negros which had fled from their Maſter of Panama and Nombre de Dios, they did aduertiſe them of certaine Mules which were to paſſe from Panama to Nombre de Dios laden with gold and ſiluer, whereupon hee landed a hundred ſhot, and went to attend them with theſe Negros, where hee tooke two troupes of them, hauing none but their driuers, being without any feare: M hee vnladed the Mules and tooke the gold onely, being vnable (as ſome of them write) to carrie the ſiluer through the Mountaines. Within two daies after he came to a place called the houſe of Croſſes, where he ſlue fiue or ſix Merchants: he found not any gold nor ſiluer there, but much merchandize, & fired the houſe with the goods being valued at aboue two hundred thouſand ducats, & thence his went to his ſhips: pre-ſently after there came downe three hundred ſhot, Spaniards, but it was too late.

The

A The Venetians ſeeing that there was no likelihood to make their profite by the ſupport of this league, and that in this warre they had loſt the realme of Cypres, ſpent foure millions of ducats, and recouered not any one place of importance; finding alſo, that the Spaniards after all their delayes, would ſtill be maſters, commaund in all their councels, and haue the honour of all executions; they reſolued to make a peace with the Turke, by the mediation of the French King, and the diligence of Marc Anthonie Barbaro their Conſull, who had beene ſtaied at Conſtantinople, the which was concluded vpon reſtitution of certaine ſmall places in Dalmatia, and 300000 crownes which the Venetians ſhould pay vnto the Turke at three payments. The Senate being certified of the concluſion, they ſent their embaſſadours to the Pope and catholike King to iuſtifie their actions: Pope Gregorie the thirteenth was diſcontented, but there was no remedie, for hee B muſt allow of their reaſons, which ſeemed pertinent. 1573

Peace betweene the Turke and the Venetians.

The King of Spaine ſeemed no wayes diſtaſted with this peace of the Venetians, but would ſhew by the effects, that hee was able of himſelfe, without the help of anie other, to maintaine continuall warre againſt the Turke, for the defence of Chriſtendome, and not onely defend himſelfe from him, but make warre againſt him at his doore. He therefore commaunded that the fleet which was prepared at Naples and Sicile, ſhould go and attempt ſome thing in the Leuant Seas, or be imploied to annoy Vluccialy vpon the coaſt of Afrike, where he had expelled Amida out of the realme of Tunes, for that hee had performed all dueties to the King of Spaine, and paied the tribute which his father had C promiſed to the Emperour Charles: the which did much diſpleaſe the Turks holding Alger and other places in Afrike, who procured Selims approbation to haue him diſpoſſeſſed, and an other ſet in his place, who ſhould be more at his deuotion, the which was executed by Vluccialy: wherefore King Philippe thinking that he had an intereſt therein, and that it was neceſſarie to weaken the Turke forces in thoſe partes, being greatly ſuſpected to Sicile, and other parts of Italie, which Countries the Turkes deſired much to ioyne vnto his empire, hee ſent commaundement to D. Iohn by Soto his Secretarie, whom hee had ſent into Spaine to that end, that hee ſhould imploy the gallies hee had readie in this expedition which would be verie profitable for Chriſtendome, whileſt that the Turkes forces were but weake at ſea, to attempt a ſuccour ſo farre off.

Reſolution of the King of Spaine to make warre againſt the Turke.

D In the meane ſeaſon there was great means made for the deliuerie of Aly Baſſas ſons, which had beene taken at the battell, whom D. Iohn had obtained from the Confederates with great inſtance, but one of them was dead before, to his great griefe, that hee could not wholie gratifie the mother: wherefore he ſent him home that was liuing, called Moamed, accompanying him with a dwarfe of his owne, and foure Turkes that had beene taken with him, and many preſents which the mother had ſent vnto his Highneſſe, in ſigne of honour, but he refuſed to accept them, and wrote the reaſon thereof vnto her, wherein he ſhewed the greatneſſe of his mind. I haue forborne, ſaid hee, to accept the preſent which you ſent me, and Moamed hath it, not for that I doe not eſteeme it, as come from your hands, but for that the greatneſſe of my anceſtors is not accuſtomed to receiue gifts E from ſuch as are forced to flie vnto them for fauour.

Sonne of Aly Baſſa ſet at liberty by D. Iohn.

The armie beeing ready for the enterpriſe of Tunis D. Iohn parted with the Duke of Seſſa, Anthonio Doria, Iohn Andrew, and other noblemen, on the eight day of September 1573 from the port which in old time was called Lilybee, and had beene long neglected, (notwithſtanding that it be one of the beſt ports in the Iland, and had beene much vſed by the Romans in the Carthaginian warres) others write that they went from Palermo. There was in the fleet one hundred and ſixteene gallies, foure and thirtie ſhippes, and other veſſells of burthen. The Duke of Florence did ſend ſix gallies to this enterpriſe, vnder the commaund of Simon de Roſſermini. They landed at Goulette, whereas they found F not any difficulty, to keep them from entring into Tunis, for it had beene abandoned vpon the bruite of their comming, and all the Moores and Turkes were fled to the mountaines and deſarts, carrying away all their goods, yea their victualls: yet the King that was aduaunced by Vluccialy was taken priſoner: Biſerta a city ſome forty miles from Tunis was recouered with the like facility, yielding by the perſuaſion of Amida, who thought by this conqueſt to recouer his eſtate.

Enterpriſe of Tunis.

1573 The matter being called in queſtion, there were many of the Kings councel in Spaine, G and of D. Iohns, of opinion that Tunis ſhould be demandeled, & Goulette raſed, for that thoſe places brought nothing but charge vnto the King, but they were not beleeued:
yea it was concluded to fortifie the City better, and to make a new fort betwixt it and Fort built at Tunis. Goulette, and to ioyne the fort vnto the towne by two long curtines; to beate downe the old wall of the towne, and to lay it open towards the fort. For the effecting whereof Gabriel Serbelloni had the charge, and was made Colonell generall of the garriſon that ſhould bee left there, which ſhould conſiſt of ſixe thouſand men, three thouſand Spaniards vnder the commaund of Salezar, and three thouſand Italians vnder Pagan Do- ria: afterwards they ſaid that D. Iohn left eight thouſand men there, with labourers ſuf-ficient for the fortification, and a troupe of horſe. D. Iohn hauing thus ordered all things, H hee returned happily to Meſſina, and then to Naples, where he was receiued with much ioy in Nouember, being aſſured that the Turke could not ſend a fleete from Conſtantinople to Barbarie, vntill the next yeere, and that in the meane time Serbelloni ſhould haue leiſure to fortifie. D. Pedro Porto Carrero was gouernor in Goulette, a man more reſpected for his birth, than for his iudgement and knowledge in martiall affaires: he was preferred vnto it (no man knowes the reaſon) in the place of D. Alphonſo Pimentell, an induſtrious and a valiant captaine. In Tunis there was left more like a gouernour than King) Maho- met brother to Amida, who was alwayes oppoſite vnto him: ſome write hee was but his couſin,) and as for Amida, he was carried backe into Sicile, whereas in former time they had ſeene his father Muley Haſcen, diſpoſſeſſed and made blind by him, and with him I was the King whom Vluccialy had aduaunced in his place: for that Amida had giuen D.
Iohn ſome cauſe to ſuſpect him; yet ſome write it was for that the Moores did hate him
D. Iohn affects to be king of Tunis. deadly for his crueltie. This happie exploit of D. Iohns, made him to diſcouer his intentions more plainely vnto the Pope, which was, to remaine King of Tunis, with the good liking of King Philip his brother: continuing in this opinion, he intreated the Pope to be Interceſſour for him; taking councell both in this and all other affaires of his Secretarie Iohn de Soto, whom hee fauoured ſo much, as he cauſed him to marrie (about that time) with the baroneſſe of Saint Philadelphus at Palermo: the which did nothing pleaſe the D. Diego prince of Spaine borne King, as we will ſhew hereafter. But the Sultan Selim did ſoone make him looſe that de-ſire. D. Iohn being come to Naples from the taking of Tunis, their ioy and feaſts were K doubled: hauing receiued newes, that King Philip had another ſonne, the which being chriſtned was called D. Diego. He ſtaied there ſome moneths much honoured: then hee paſſed into Lombardie, being called into Spaine by his brother; but he went not by reaſon of the Turkes ſucceſſe at the enterpriſe of Goulette.

1574 The great Turke being much incenſed for the taking of Tunis, by a young man, who had ſo much preuailed ouer his forces, as after that he had in a maner diſarmed him at ſea, he had diſpoſſeſſed a King which had beene placed by him at Tunis, and ſet an other in his place, which was contrarie vnto him: hee ſent in the yeere one thouſand fiue hundred ... and Goulette recouered by the Turkes. ſeuenty and foure Sinan Baſſa into Barbarie, with a nauie of one hundred and three ſcore gallies, thirty ſhippes, with many galeots, foiſts and other ſmall veſſells, carrying twenty L thouſand harquebuziers, and almoſt as many archers, with great ſtore of ordnance, and at land they had fifteene thouſand Moores and Arabians on horſe backe. At the newes of this great fleete, the viceroys of Naples and Sicile made preparation to defend their gouernement, if the Turke ſhould make any attempt vpon them. D. Iohn had commaunde-ment to furniſh Goulette, (where as we haue ſaid Porto Carrero was gouernour) who required certaine mony of cardinall Granuelle then viceroy of Naples, for the leuying of certaine men to ſend thither, the which he refuſed, ſaying that he had no other charge, but to preſerue the countrey which he had in gouernement. So as Tunis and Goulette were left to their defence that were in them: where the Commaunders did not agree amongſt M Porto Carrero an indiſcreet gouernour of Goulette. themſelues; for Porto Carrero could not endure that any man ſhould thinke hee wanted councell, or that he was not verie ſufficient to defend Goulette, taking it in ill part, that Gabriel Serbelloni ſhould preſume to ſend him fiue enſignes of Italians, to fortifie his garriſon, ſaying that he would not impart the honour of the gard, and defence thereof to any but to his owne nation: but it was not long before he changed his opinion; for whenas
he

A he saw the fields couered with Moores and Alarabes, which they of Alger and Caruan had sent about Tunis, as fore runners to Sinan Bassas army, which arriued soone after, he then demanded men of Serbelloni importunately, protesting that if he sent him not some, he should be the cause of the losse of Goulette. King Mahomet thought to haue sallied forth with nine hundred horse, and foure thousand foote of his owne nation, against these troupes of Moores; but he was suddenly abandoned by his trecherous and disloyall subiects, so as with three score horse only, being supported by the regiment of Salazar, and some Spanish horse, he escaped. Serbelloni being troubled with these accidents, thought that it was no time now to regard the vanities of Porto Carrero, but went himselfe to view the estate of the garrison of Goulette, when hauing caused some faults in the fortificati-
B on to be amended, he returned to his fort, where hee made them to labour with all diligence to put it in defence, vnd the citie also, but they gaue him no great respite: for the Turkes army being landed, and meaning at the first to assaile Goulette, Sinan sent Aydar king of Caruan to besiege Tunis, the which he did, and battered it furiously with a great quantitie of ordnance, so as Serbelloni resolued to leaue it, and to defend his fort betwixt the citie & Goulette, the which was presently inuested by the Moors towards the town, but he scattered them often by his continuall sallies, and slew great numbers. Goulette being besieged, Porto Carrero did importune Serbelloni to send him men, the which he did by the lake: but the Turkes did soone take that passage from them, making a long bridge of barques bound together, and thereon as it were a causey of earth, whereon they pla-
C ced many musketiers. The batterie planted against the bastion which looked towards the sea, made a great breach, where the Turkes gaue a terrible assault, with bridges made of mane yards, according to their custome, the which notwithstanding was defended by the valour of the Christians: but Porto Carrero did either forget the dueties whereunto men besieged are bound, or hee did not know them: Hee neuer would suffer his men to make a sallie, it seemes hee feared to wast poulder and shot, so as the Turkes had good meanes to view the fort, to lodge, and to plant their ordnance at their pleasures: And to shew the great arrogancie of this gouernor, whereas Anthonie Carrafe a gentleman of Naples sought to giue him good aduice, he caused him to be strangled & to be cast in a sacke into the sea. Serbelloni, although he had need of all his strength within the fort, yet know-
D ing the importaunce of Goulette, he weakened himselfe to fortifie it, being continually called on by D. Pedro, and sent him men as he could; yet could he not preuent it, but that Goulette was taken by force, Sinan hauing caused a general assault to be giuen, the which was continued with such fresh supplies one after an other without intermission, as they within it were no longer able to make any more resistance, but were forced, and all (or the greatest part) put to the sword: some write that Porto Carrero with three hundred souldiers were made slaues, and that the sonne of King Amida was taken in that place. Goulette being taken, the Turkes went and besieged the fort both by sea and land, hauing filled certaine great barques with packes of woolle wet, to choake their cannon shot, and planted many harquebuziers in them, with long fowling peeces, which carried very great
E bullets, to keepe the besieged from their defences. Sinan made batteries, and cast vp trenches to approach vnto the fort, as he was accustomed, to batter, sappe, and mine at one instant in diuers places; where hauing made great breaches, hee caused three seuerall assaults to be giuen, but they were all resolutely defended; and hee caused fire to be set to a mine, the which did more harme vnto the Turkes than vnto the besieged. The assaults were continued vnto the fourth time, & still they were repulsed with great slaughter: but this valor decreasing by litle and litle through their ordinary assaults, they were so weake at the fift, which was generall and more obstinate than any of the rest, as the place was forced, and all within cut in peeces. excepted Serbelloni, who was taken being F wounded, and drawne by the beard before the Bassa, who caused him to bee kept. Pagan Doria flying the Turkes, and thinking to find more mercie with the Moores, was slaine by them, and his head set vpon a pike. Porto Carrero being a prisoner, died within few dayes after, (as some say) of poison. D. Iohn de Sinoghera after these two losses, was left alone with three hundred and fiftie men to defend the tower vpon the lake, standing betwixt Tunis and Goulette, the which (although it were very strong, yet considering his owne

1574

Skirmish among the Moores.

Ignorance of Porto Carrero.

Goulette taken by force.

Fort at Tunis taken by assault.

1574 ſtrength, and the enemies, he could not hope to make any long defence) he yielded vpon G certaine conditions, and paſſed afterwards into Sicile, to carrie newes of this great loſſe.
Thus Goulette (the honour of the Emperours conqueſts, the which kept Afrike in awe) was loſt through careleſneſſe: Sinan cauſed it to be raſed to the ground, and then returned triumphantly to Conſtantinople.

D. Sebaſtian King of Portugall goes into Afrike.

17 This yere the Chriſtians reaped both loſſe and diſhonour in Afrike, for D. Sebaſtian the yong King of Portugall, of too warrelike a diſpoſition, as we haue ſhewed, and deſirous of glorie, ſeeking to aduaunce himſelfe by ſome enterpriſes againſt the Moores, hauing not imparted any thing vnto the Queene his grandmother, nor vnto the Cardinall his vncle, by whoſe care his actions ſhould haue beene gouerned, by reaſon of his age, which was voyd of experience: He ſent D. Antonio Prior of Crato his coſin, but baſe, to H Tanger in Afrike, which did belong vnto the Crowne of Portugall, and made him his lieutenant generall there, deliuering him the Standard with great ſolemnitie. He would haue him accompanied with ſome numbers of ſoldiers, but ſpecially with many knights: and within few dayes after the King himſelfe, taking many of the chiefe noble men with him, imbarked at Caſcais, whenas no man ſuſpected it, and went in like maner into Afrike, leauing order in Portugall, that ſome knights ſhould follow him, and therefore hee did write many priuat letters vnto them. Being come to Tanger, and hauing tried the Moors forces in the neighbour garriſons, and ſeeing his men in all their skirmiſhes to be ouerlayed with multitudes, and the nimbleneſſe of the enemies horſe, he beganne to conſider better of the daunger whereinto he had runne, of whom depended the peace and quiet I of his whole Realme; and ſo being better aduiſed by ſome noble men of authoritie that were with him, but eſpecially being moued by a letter written by father Lewis Gonzales a Ieſuite, who had beene his Scholemaſter, and was then in great credit with him, he reſolued to returne preſently.

THE

THE 30 BOOKE OF THE Hiſtorie of Spaine.

The Contents.

1 D. Lewis de Requeſens, great Commaunder of Caſtille, ſent gouernour into the Low Countries for King Philip.
2 D. Iohn of Auſtria ſent Gouernour into the Low Countries.
3 Death of D. Iohn of Auſtria.
4 Xerifes Kings of Maroc and Fez, their beginning and proceeding.
5 D. Sebaſtian firſt of that name King of Portugall.
6 He led an armie into Afrike.
7 Battell in Afrike, and death of D. Sebaſtian.
8 D. Henry 17 King of Portugall, a Cardinall.
9 Pretendants to the Crowne of Portugall.
10 D. Anthonie Prior of Crato a baſtard, made legitimate, diſanulled by King Henrie.
11 Fiue gouernours in Portugall during the inter-reigne.
12 Death of the King D. Henrie.
13 Confuſions in Portugall during the inter-reigne.
14 The king D. Philip meanes to debate his right by armes.
15 Aduice and Councell of the Doctors in Spaine touching the Kings title.
16 D. Antonio is declared Defender of the Realme againſt King Philips forces, and then is ſaluted King.
17 Duke of Alba generall of the King of Spaines armie in Portugall, and his exploits.
18 Defeat and flight of D. Antonio, and the taking of Lisbone.
19 Death of D. Anna Queene of Spaine.
20 D. Antonio layes aſide armes and retires himſelfe.
21 Articles graunted by the King D. Philip to the Eſtates and realme of Portugall.
22 D. Philip receiued and acknowledged for King at Lisbone.
23 Terceres Ilands, their conqueſt, and the rout of the French armie.
24 D. Philips ſonne Prince of Spaine acknowledged and ſworne at Lisbone.
25 Abſolute conqueſt of the Terceres, by the defeat of Emanuel de Silua, and of Monſieur de Chattes.

1575

G

¶ All the Realmes of Spaine vnited to the Crowne of Caſtille vnder D. Philip the ſecond.

H

1 Great Commander of Caſtille ſent gouernour into the Low Countries.

Don Lewis de Requeſens great Commander of Caſtille was ſent to ſucceed the D. of Alba in the gouernment of the Low Countries after that the duke of Medina Celi had refuſed it. He was a man approching ſomewhat in diſpoſition to his predeceſſor. He had accompanied D. John of Auſtria in his ſea-army, whenas he fought with the Turke at Lepanto, as his chiefe Councellor, and after his returne into Sicile, the King D. Philip had made him gouernour of Milan, where hee remained not long, the King thinking him fit to calme that which the Duke of Alba had left in trouble in Holland and Zeland, into which prouinces it ſeemed that the whole warre was reduced. Among other diſorders, he found the Spaniſh ſouldiers diſcontented, and curſing the Duke, who owed them foure and thirtie moneths pay: whom he was forced (for the firſt triall of his wiſedome) to ſeeke meanes to pacifie, the which he did in ſome ſort: but when he beganne to enter into the managing of affaires, he fell groſſely into an inconuenience which did preiudice the reſt of his gouernement. What his actions were during his charge there, you may reade at large in that Country hiſtorie. He liued not long there, but died of a peſtilent feuer in the yere one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie and ſixe, leauing thoſe Countries in greater confuſion than the Duke of Alba his predeceſſor had done.

I

K

King of Spaine reuokes his aſſignations and breakes with the Genouois.

In the yeare 1574 it was found that king Philip was indebted to the merchants of Genoua and Spaine in 37 millions of ducats; for the which hee gaue them aſſignements out of his royall reuenues: whereupon for the relieuing of his neceſſities, and to free the king from the Genouois, the Deputies of the chiefe Cities and Townes were called to Madrid, to conſult how to relieue the king in theſe great wants. Among other, there was one in Court, whoſe name was Franciſco Brauo, who told the king, that the contractions which he had made with the merchants, were in reſpect of them, againſt all law and equitie; the which, if he did not remedie within a yeare, hee would not haue any meanes to free himſelfe: telling him moreouer, that he had beene fraudulently circumuented by them, in very great ſummes, contrarie to all diuine and humane lawe. Whereupon in the yeare 1575 the king of Spaine made a decree touching the loſſe and preiudice which his royall reuenues had receiued by the cõtrectations which he had made with the Genouois and others, making a ſtaie of all the ſaid contrectations and aſſignements, the which did much trouble the Genouois and others, to whom the king was indebted, for by reaſon of this ſuſpenſion they could not giue ſatisfaction vnto their creditours, which made them to preſent an anſwer to this decree vnto the King, ſhewing that it would bee a blemiſh to his honour, and verie preiudiciall to his ſeruice; yet could they not get it reuoked, but were forced to make a new compoſition.

L.

Genoua diuided into factiõs

The citie of Genoua was diuided into two factions, the old (which were the noble men and gentlemen) and the new (who were ſome gentlemen, ſupported by the commõn people.) D. John Idiaques as embaſſadour for the Catholike King, had labored much to quench this fire which beganne to kindle, and had perſuaded them to lay aſide armes: but this yeere the furious multitude little reſpecting the promiſe of the wiſer citizens to diſarme,

M

A diſarme, and to treate an accord with the liking and authoritie of the Catholike King, for whom Idiaques was imployed in that action, matters were brought to deſpaire, the faction of the new offering by force to reforme the publique gouernement after their owne manner, and to abate the power of the nobles, who were called the old; who not ſuffering ſo great an indignitie, went moſt of them out of Genoua, Iohn Andrew Doria beeing as it were their head. The Pope ſent Cardinall Morone thither, but the Genouois would not treat with him alone, vnleſſe the Catholike kings Embaſſadour were called, he being the chiefe protector of that common weale. The matter was found ſo difficult, as the faction of the old deſpayring, were come with good forces, ſome to Final, and ſome to Aqui, reſoluing to recouer their countrie and dignitie by armes, chooſing Iohn Andrew
B Doria for their Generall in that warre, who refuſed that charge, vntill he had leaue from the king of Spaine, whom he ſerued. In the meane time, they had newes that the king was ready to ſend another Embaſſadour, to adde authority and counſell to the other two, which was the Duke of Gandie: but D. Iohn d'Auſtria came firſt with a nauie vpon that coaſt, to ſee that no Prince, by means of this tumult, ſhould enter into Genoua, and make himſelfe maſter thereof: and therefore they made prouiſion of ſouldiers, drawing into the duchie of Milan two regiments of Germans, and leuying ſome Italians. The people of Genoua grewe iealous that D. Iohn meant to ſeize vpon their citie; but he, according to the order he had from his brother, hauing conferred with Prince Doria and the gouernour of Milan at Spetie, they concluded onely, that there ſhould be all meanes attempt-
C ted to quiet that citie, and if the people ſhould continue in their obſtinacie, the faction of the Old ſhould haue leaue to recouer their countrie, with their auncient rights and dignities: and the rather, for that they offered to make warre at their owne charge, requiring nothing of his Maieſtie, but Dorias perſon, and the gallies wherewith hee ſerued the king. The Emperour and the French king ſent their Embaſſadours to pacifie this tumult, but they could not effect any thing, eſpecially he of France, whom for that they would not breed a iealouſie in the king of Spaine, they diſmiſt with good words. They without the citie finding by the treatie that there was no hope of any pacification, were readie to goe to armes, when as Charles Borgia Duke of Gandie arriued; but hoping that his authority, and the priuat inſtructions of the catholike king, would preuaile much, they
D ſtaied: but yet the miſchiefe could not be thus cured. Soone after, the Secretarie Eſcouedo hauing beene ſent by D. Iohn, returned from Spaine, who brought order from the king, that all the reſolution of that buſineſſe, for that which concerned his Maieſtie, was referred to D. Iohn, who was then at Naples, whither Iohn Andrew Doria was gone to that end, the nobilitie hauing prouided money to make warre: when D. Iohn hearing that they to whom it was compromitted in the name of thoſe great princes, could not pacifie them, he ſent order to the Gouernour of Milan to diſmiſſe his Germans and Italians, that the faction of the Nobles might imploy them, to reduce them to their duties that had no will of an accord. With which troupes, the faction of the Old went to field, and tooke diuers places. In the end, after many letters written from the Pope, Emperour,
E and King of Spaine, it was wholly compromitted to their agents, who cauſed a ſuſpenſion of armes, and there were hoſtages giuen by both factions to ſtand to their arbitrement, but the accord was not fully concluded vntill the yeare following.

This yeare there grewe ſeeds of warre in Afrike, which paſt into Europe, to the great preiudice of Chriſtendome; for that Muley Mahomet king of Marocco, beeing loath to leaue the gouernment of that realme to Muley Moluc his vncle, according to the will of his grandfather dying, Moluc fledde vnto the Turkes for aid, and obtained it; with the which, and with the Móores which fauoured him, he made warre againſt his nephew, and defeated him thrice in battell, ſo as he remained abſolute Lord of the realmes of Fez and
F Marocco, his nephew beeing fled vnto the mountaines, where, with ſome that followed him, he ranne vp and downe, not as a king, but like a thiefe; beeing by nature both couetous and cruell, vntill that in the end he perſuaded the ill aduiſed king of Portugal, not onely to giue him ſuccours to recouer his realme, but to paſſe thither in perſon, with the ruine of that royall houſe, as you ſhall hereafter heare.

Muley Mahomet expelled out of his realme.

After

1576 2 After the death of Lewis de Requeſens, great Commaunder of Caſtille, D. Iohn d'Au- G
D. Iohn of Auſtria gouernour of the Netherlands. ſtria was appointed to ſucceed him in the gouernment of the Netherlands; to which end he came into Luxembourg, but he would not aduance, vntill that the Eſtates had accepted him for gouernour, and Lieutenant generall to the king his brother. This prince was once in an humour (as wee haue ſaid) to obtaine the crowne of Tunis, by the bountie of the king D. Philip, whom hee had cauſed to bee often importuned by the Pope, wherein the king tooke no delight, but the taking of that citie by the Turkes, and the razing of thoſe forts which the Spaniards had built to keepe it in awe, made him to forget that humour: but it did not quench his deſire to raigne in ſome other countrie, in the which a Secretarie of his called Iohn de Soto entertained him. Which the king vnderſtanding, hee tooke him from him, and commaunded him to vſe the ſeruice of Iohn d'Eſ- H
Iohn de Eſcouedo Secretarie to Don Iohn. couedo; by which change he got little, he animating him more to greatneſſe: wherefore he thought it expedient (to diuert him ſomewhat from theſe ambitious deſires) to drawe him out of Italie, and from thoſe honourable imployments which preſented themſelues, and to ſend him into Flanders, to contend againſt his rebellious ſubiects: the which D. Iohn hearing, hee bare it with great impatiencie, to ſee himſelfe ſo much deiected, as to become (as a man would ſay) an Algouzil, or Prouoſt Marſhall, to puniſh common people, whereas he had been Generall of armies to the greateſt Potentates in Chriſtendom, againſt the incomparable forces of the great Turke.

D. Iohn aſpires to the crowne of England. Hauing failed of Tunis, he conuerted his thoughts vpon England, and cauſed the king I to be ſolicited to make warre vpon that realme; for that (ſaid he) Queene Elizabeth had alwaies fauoured the Eſtates and townes of the Lowe countries, in their contumacie and rebellion, and to make him Generall, hoping to make himſelfe king, thinking that the affaires of the Lowe countries were too little to keepe him occupied. The king D. Philip, for that hee would not flatly refuſe him, ſeemed to yeeld to it, but hee ſaid, they muſt firſt ſubdue the Flemings, commaunding him to goe directly out of Italie thither, and not to paſſe by Spaine: but he obaied him not, for he went out of Italie into Spaine, and all by the counſell of Eſcouedo; which made the king to bee ill conceited of him: but in the end hee was forced to goe, and arriued as you haue heard. Beeing accepted for their gouernour, hee ratified the treatie of Gand, made by the K Deputies of the Prouinces, for the expelling of all ſtrange ſouldiers, and other things; the 1577 which was confirmed by the king of Spaine, in April, 1577, and his Letters of approbation ſent to D. Iohn.

Then the poore Netherlanders beganne to hope for better vſage, thinking that they were at an end of all their miſeries, but the effects which followed did ſoone ſhew that this hope had beene conceiued vpon apparances. For in all D. Iohns gouernement there
D. Iohns carriage in his gouernment. was nothing but diſſimulations, ſecret enterpriſes, accuſations, falſe imputations, ſurpriſes, and apparent deſignes to heap vpon this people all the miſeries of the precedent gouernements; although the effects did not follow according to the Spaniards deſires. The which they imputed to D. Iohn, who was not come into the Low Countries to liue L there in a quiet eſtate, or to walke in his night gowne, but with an intent that the enterpriſe of England ſhould proceed, and that the King would make him Generall: but ſeeing that (notwithſtanding all troubles in his gouernement were in a maner pacified) they made no preparation tending to inuade that Iland, and that there came no aduice out of Spaine conformable to his deſire, yet would hee commaund an armie, and breed occaſions to imploy it where he was. What his particular actions were you may read in that countrie hiſtorie.

Voyage of Sir Francis Drake into the South ſea, and about the world. Sir Francis Drake beeing incouraged by the good ſucceſſe of his firſt voyage to the Indies, reſolued to make a new attempt, and to paſſe into the South, thinking thereby to doe his Prince and Countrey great ſeruice, to winne himſelfe immortall fame, M and to annoy the King of Spaine and his ſubiects: wherefore in Nouember in the yere one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie and ſeuen, he went forth of Plimmouth with fiue Engliſh ſhippes and barques, bending his courſe towards the Indies (my meaning is nto to report the particularities of this voyage, but onelie to touch the action ſummarily,

for

A for that it concernes Spaine) in Auguſt after his departure he paſt the Strait of Magellan, and came into the South ſea, where as the Spaniards liued ſecure from all feare, hauing neuer ſeene any Engliſhman there before. Beeing in this ſea, hee tooke many ſhips and barkes, with great ſtore of treaſure: but there was one ſhippe which exceeded all the reſt in wealth; he tooke it at a place called Cape S. Franciſco, 150 leagues from Panama: the ſhippe was called by the Spaniards Cacafuego, which name (after the taking thereof by Sir Francis) was wittily changed by a Spaniſh ſhip-boy, and tearmed Cacaplata, for that it yeelded him ſo much ſiluer. They found in her (beſides great ſtore of iewels, and pretious ſtones) thirteene cheſts full of ryals of ſiluer, foure ſcore pound weight of gold, and 26 tunne of ſiluer. Hauing done diuers exploits, and ſackt ſome townes vpon 1577

B the coaſt of Peru, and Noua Hiſpania, being now full traught with treaſure, and ſufficiently reuenged (as he thought) of the Spaniard, hee reſolued to goe to the Ilands of the Molucos, and ſo returne to England by Cape Bona Eſperance; the which he performed happily in Nouember, beeing the third yeare of his voyage. By the report of Nugno de Silua a pylot (whom he had taken in the beginning of his voyage at the Ilands of Cape-Verd) & others, Sir F. Drake carried frō the coaſt of Peru, 866 kintals of ſiluer, euery kintal being worth 1200 ducats of Spain: all which amounteth to a million thirtie nine thouſand and two hundred ducats. He had beſides, tenne kintals of gold, euery kintall beeing valued at ten thouſand and fiue hundred Spaniſh ducats: which laſt ſome amounteth to a hundred and fiftie thouſand ducats; beſides other treaſure in that ſhippe which had not 1588

Treaſure Sir Fr. Drake brought out of the South ſea.

C beene cuſtomed (the value whereof was vnknowne) as pearles, pretious ſtones, ryals of plate, and other rich commodities.

Theſe exploits of his in the South ſea, (where they had neuer ſeene any enemie) did much trouble the Viceroy of Peru, who ſent forth Pedro Sarmiento, a good nauigator, with two ſhippes, to meet with Captaine Drake if hee could, or to fortifie in the Strait of Magellan, againſt ſuch as ſhould hereafter ſeeke to paſſe it. D. Pedro paſſed through the Straite with one of his ſhippes, and ſo went into Spaine, where he informed the king of the nature of the Strait, and of the meanes to build a fort there, the countrey beeing rich, and abounding with all neceſſaries. Whereupon the king (beeing aduertiſed that there were more ſhippes making ready in England) ſent Diego Flores de

D Baldes with twentie three ſhippes, and three thouſand and fiue hundred men, and a new gouernour to Chili, with fiue hundred old ſouldiers come out of Flaunders; but before they were free from the coaſt of Spaine, they were ſurprized with a ſtorme, and eight of the Fleet caſt away, with aboue eight hundred men, the reſt put into Cadiz.

Ships of Spaine caſt away.

D. Iohn d'Auſtria hauing drawne a world of miſeries vpon thoſe Prouinces which which were vnder his gouernment, died in the Campe, neere vnto Nemours this yeare 1578, of a peſtilent feuer; a prince who conceiued high and great enterpriſes in his mind, but aboue all, hee was much incenſed againſt the Lowe Countries, and their generall Eſtates: his death was happie for them, hauing thereby ſome eaſe of their miſe-

1578

Death of D. Iohn of Auſtria.

E ries and calamities. Men made diuers cenſures of his death, and of Eſcouedo his Secretaries, who in a manner at the ſame time was ſlaine in Spaine (as ſome ſaid by the kings commandement) for the which Antonio de Peres was afterwards called in queſtion, as you ſhall heare.

Alexander Farneze prince of Parma, who was D. Iohns lieutenant, had commaundement of the armie, and was afterwards gouernour in his place: hee was more temperate and modeſt in his gouernment than the Spaniards that went before him. This prince was allied to the king of Spain, he hauing maried in the yere 1565 D. Maria of Bragance, daughter to D. Edward of Portugal, who was brother to the Empreſſe D. Iſabella, ſo as

F they were couſin germans: which mariage might purchaſe to the houſe of Farnezes ſome right to the crowne of Portugal: where, ſoone after there happened a lamentable change; for that this realme which had maintained it ſelfe with honour and reputation, in all the parts of the habitable earth, for ſo many ages, was reduced vnto a Prouince, vnder him of Caſtille, as you ſhall heare.

Wee

1577 Moores.

4 We muſt now enter into the mournfull Tragedie of the death of D. Sebaſtian king of Portugal, who thruſt on by his ambitious deſire of glorie, gouerned by ill counſell, and among other affections, by zeale of religion, wherein the Ieſuits had inſtructed him, would (contrary to the graue aduice of the Catholike king) and without any reaſon, bee an actor in the quarrels of the Xeriffes, princes of Afrike, contending for the empire of Marocco and Fez, from whence the race of the kings, Merins, (of whom wee haue often made mention in this worke) had beene expelled by their fathers. It will be fit, to giue more light vnto our hiſtorie, and more taſt of the fruit which may be reapt, to relate briefly the beginning of theſe Xeriffes, and the policie of their ſuddaine and admirable aduancement to the large dominions, ſo neere vnto Spaine, there being but a ſmall cut of ſea betwixt them, or (as a man would ſay) a puffe of wind.

Xeriffes kings of Marocco their beginning

Mahomet Ben Hamet Xeriffe the father.

Mahomet Ben Hamet called Xeriffe, which ſignifies famous and ſacred, the which among the Mahometans they giue vnto them that are of the line of their Prophet Mahomet (from whom he ſaid hee was deſcended) liued in the times of our fathers, in the towne of Tigumeder, in the countrie of Dara in Numidia. He was a politicke man, and a great hypocrite, who had by a fained ſanctitie purchaſed the reputation of very religious and wiſe. He was learned in their law, in Aſtrologie, and in art Magike. He had three ſonnes, whom hee inſtructed in the ſame manners, arts, and diſciplines, and were eſteemed as the father; eſpecially after that they had beene at Mecque, and at Medina Tal Nabi in Arabia, which is a voyage held among them of great merit: for at Medina is the ſepulchre of their prophet Mahomet. Their names were Abdelquibir, Hamet, and Mahomet the youngeſt, who paſt the reſt in policie and valour.

Three brethren Xeriffes.

Hamet and Mahomet beeing come to Fez, a great and well peopled citie in Afrike, and the chiefe of the reale of Mauritania Tingitana, to make themſelues knowne there, they were much made of by men that were curious of Sciences, and in a ſhort time one of them obtained a publike Lecture in the Colledge of Modaraſa, and the other had the charge to inſtruct and bring vp the children of Muley Mahomet, and Oataz, who was the laſt king of Fez ſaue one, of the race of Benimerins. The Xeriffe their father hearing that his ſonnes proſpered, hee aduiſed them to ioyne the art of warre with knowledge and learning; for thoſe two faculties vnited, make a ready way to greatneſſe: the which they could practiſe in ſuch ſort, that as they had beene eſteemed for their learning, ſo they got a reputation to be valiant, among the Xeques and Alcaides of the realme; and vpon this opinion they had charge giuen them of ſome troupe or cornet of horſe, at their inſtance, vnder colour of religion, ſaying that it was to make warre againſt certaine Moores and Africans which went to ſerue the king of Portugal, and did annoy the other Mahometanes of their ſect: Muley Nacer brother to the king of Fez, was very vnwilling they ſhould haue this Commiſſion giuen them; ſaying, that by the like practiſes, and vnder a cloake of holineſſe, the families of Iſdris, Magaracs, Almoranides, and Almohades had raigned in Afrike, and ruined the auncient royall houſes. Yet they had commiſſion to leuie men, and proued famous captaines in a ſhort time; for hauing for a time ouerrunne the prouinces of Duquele and others, where the Portugals had ſome forts, and done many gallant exploits, they paſt into that of Sus, which depends vpon Marroc, whither their fame was ſpred; and beeing there viſited by many Moores and Africans of thoſe marches, liuing then in libertie, without any king, and who beleeued that their deſigne was to make warre againſt the Chriſtians which did hold the coaſts of Afrike vnder the kings D. Iohn the ſecond, and D. Emanuel of Portugal, and the townes of Ceuta, Tangir, Arzille, Alcaſar, Ceguer, Azamor, Mazagon, Saphi, and Cap d'Aguer, & farther off, the caſtle of Arquin, they had preſently a great troupe; eſpecially for that king Emanuel entertained many Moores and naturall Africans: ſo as that Chriſtian king might at ſometimes haue drawne into armes of thoſe nations aboue fiftie thouſand horſe, and twice as many foot. Vnder the name of this religious warre, the Xeriffes became ſtrong and fearefull in the field: and in fauour thereof, they did obtaine of the inhabitants of the prouince of Dara in Numidia, where they were borne, the tenthes of their reuenues: for vnto God, ſaid they, the tenths of the fruits of the earth are due by

Learning and Armes vnited makes a man compleat.

Emanuel king of Portugal fortified by Moores.

auncient

A auncient conſtitutions. The citie of Turedant, which is a ſeat royall, and in olde time was the third member of the Miralmumins eſtate, did not onely receiue this impoſt willingly; but they alſo perſuaded the other Weſterne Prouinces to doe the like, and to chooſe for their gouernour the old Mahomet, Ben Hamet, the father of theſe two Xeriffes, Hamet and Mahomet: by reaſon whereof, he made himſelfe maſter of Turedant, & made ſharpe warres againſt the Moores which held the partie of the Portugals, in the prouince of Dara and others. A certaine Xec of the towne of Tiguint, in the mountaines of Atlas the greater, towards the prouince of Sus, drew vnto the Xeriffes the people of Hea, lying neere vnto him, who did contribute the tenthes of their fruits, and of the feeding of their cattell, and in the end hee put them in poſſeſſion of the towne of Teneſt, which is
B the chiefe of that prouince of Hea, one of the beſt of Afrike: and then they called themſelues princes, by the practiſes of this Xec, who was a Genouois renegado. But they were expelled by Nugno Fernandes of Atayde a Portugal, who forced them to retire to Tazarot, a towne of the iuriſdiction of Marroc, and in the meane time old Mahomet Ben Hamet the Xeriffe died. His three ſonnes continuing their enterpriſes, beſieged the towne of Alquel, and tooke it from a Xec, ealled Ctdi Bugima Africain, vaſſall to the king of Portugal: and then they ſeized vpon the caſtle of the mountaine of Xanxaua, the which they fortified, and were continually aſſiſted by the Lords, townes, and comminalties of that Weſterne quarter of Afrike, in regard of this holy warre. After which, they got more reputation, hauing incountred and taken D. Lope de Barriga, gouernour of A-
C ſafi, who was the moſt redoubted captaine king Emanuel had in Afrike. Notwithſtanding Abdelquibir the eldeſt of the Xeriffes was ſlaine in this conflict. The two others continuing their deſignes made themſelues maſters of Marroc, a goodly great citie, and chiefe of the realme, by a notable treaſon practiſed againſt Nacer Buxentuf of the race of the Hententats, who was king, but hee held nothing, in a manner, but the very towne, for all the dependancies were at that time held by pettie tyrans, and the champane countrie by the Alarabes, who in that countrie doe commonly hold Lords, towns, yea and kings in ſubiection. This Nacer hauing often receiued the Xeriffes very kindly into Marroc, and vſed them with all honour and courteſie, hee was one a time poyſoned by their fraud, going forth to flie at the Heron with him. They had ſuborned a certaine
D Moore, who croſſed theſe noble men in their way as they returned from hawking, hauing a cake in his basket made of flower and ſugar that was poyſoned, who ſeeming to go on his way like a traueller, he was ſtaid by the Xeriffes, who demaunded of him what hee carried in his basket, and if he had not ſomething good to eate, or to mingle with water to diſalter the king, who was there preſent; whereupon this Moore drewe out his cake, and preſented it vnto the king, who did eate thereof, and dranke the water, into the which he had ſteept it; whereof he did not preſently complaine: but beeing come to Marroc, he fell ſicke and died within 6 daies. In the meane time Mahomet knowing what would happen, went to Xanxaua to fetch his forces, to ſecond his brother Hamet, as they had agreed, who by the meanes of ſome confederates, which vnder other pretexts were then
E at Marroc, ſeized vpon the caſtle, euen as his brother arriued with his troupes, and made himſelfe to be acknowledged for king of the Marroquins, and ſeeming with a counterfeit modeſtie to be very much grieued for the accident which had befallen king Nacer; as a thing (ſaid he) practiſed by ſome of his enemies vnknowne to him, he ſaid that his election was a bleſſing of heauen, the which muſt follow: ſeeking to pacifie the children of the deceaſed, promiſing them honours and eſtates at their deſires. Then he ſent to aduertiſe the King of Fez, that hee had beene created King of Marroc, and that hee would hold the citie of him; and ſending him certaine preſents, accompanied with ſubmiſſions and promiſes, he reſted ſatisfied. Thus he got the poſſeſſion of Marroc, and of F the rights of that realme, the iuriſdictions whereof extend farre towards the South; which (as wee haue ſaid) were diſtracted by the vſurpations of pettie Lords: and many townes alſo had infranchiſed themſelues, gouerning themſelues like common weales, but they reduced them to their old obedience. The warres againſt the Chriſtians and Moores which did adhere vnto them, beeing the chiefe ſupport of their authoritie and credit with the people, they continued it, and had diuers incounters with the

Portugals;

1577

Xeriffe makes himſelfe maſter of Turedant.

Xeriffes ſeize vpon Marroc by treaſon.

1577 Portugals;but that wherein they did labour more curiouſly,and wherein they were moſt G fortunate,for the ſetling of their greatneſſe, was to practiſe the Moores which followed the king of Portugals partie,to drawe them vnto themſelues, wherein finding ſome difficulties,they ſought to ſet a diuiſion among them,and they faining to be partakers in their quarrels, did ſo bandie them one againſt another, as the Moores and Alarabes of the countrie of Duquele and they of Xarquie of the one part, and they of Garbia of the other, by mutuall incounters and bloodie battels made themſelues ſo weake, as the Xe-riffes did eaſily ſubiect them one after another, and inrich themſelues with their ſpoyles:
which was ſo great,as afterwards they had not any need of armes, horſes, nor follow-Hamet and Mahomet diuide their eſtates. ers: and then the two brethren diuided their eſtates, ſo as Hamet was king of Marroc, and Mahomet king of Sus,or of Tarudant, which towne he did beautifie with buildings, H and fortifie very much: but,as the proſperities of this world are neuer abſolute,going to beſiege the towne of Cap d'Aguer in Sus, hee was roughly repulſt, with the loſſe of a great number of men; the which did but quicken his ſpirits and courage to find meanes to recouer this loſſe,and to maintaine his reputation: wherein both hee and his brother Hamet were much aſſiſted by the approbation they had of the king of Fez, who was content when they had any loſſe,that they ſhould repaire their forces by new leuies made in his countries,and by his ſubiects which did voluntarily follow them: and therefore for ſome yeares they entertained friendſhip with this king, who was the cauſe of their ad-uancement,by all duties and good offices, paying him the like tribute that Nacer king of I Marroc was accuſtomed to paie, and moreouer, the fift penie of their ſpoiles taken in warre. But finding themſelues once ſtrong,they began to neglect it,wherewith the king was diſcontented,commanding one of his captaines to let them vnderſtand, that if they ſent him not this tribute,he would make warre againſt them as enemies. The death of king Mahomet Oataz enſuing,pacified this quarrell, for that the children of the deceaſed who had beene ſcholers to one of the Xeriffes, would not moleſt them, but confirmed them eaſily in their conqueſts making a new promiſe of a light tribute;of the which they neuer paied any thing,beeing glad to haue ſuch an occaſion to breake with them of Fez, whom they knew to be men of little valour, liuing in delights and pleaſures: Ambition which hath no bounds, prouoking them to paſſe all the bonds,reſpects, and conſiderati- K ons of the fauours which they had receiued from the houſe of theſe Oataz Merines, whom in the end they did ruine: and the better to attaine to that which they pretended,they made an alliance with Aben Hadu, and Muley Ferez, brethren, and Muley Drys, with other Lords of the mountaines, enemies to the familie of the Oataz; ſo as when Muley Hamet,who had ſucceeded Mahomet his father in the realme of Fez, thought(after that the tribute had beene diſcontinued ſome yeares) to force the Xeriffes: they gaue him plainly to vnderſtand that they owed him not any thing, and that they had more right to raigne,and to demand tribute of the kings and people of Afrike, than any other;
for that they were deſcended from the Prophet Mahomet, and his lawfull ſucceſſours:
wherefore,if he thought it good to bee their friend, they would bee his: and if hee at- L tempted to croſſe them in the warres which they made againſt Chriſtians,that both God and Mahomet would puniſh him,neither ſhould they want power to defend themſelues.
And ſoone after,the Xeriffe of Marroc,who confined vpon the country of Fez,made tri-all if this king had the courage to enter into warre; for he began to force the inhabitants of ſome places of his iuriſdiction which lay neereſt vnto him, to paie him the tenthes of Tenths of fruits the reuenewes of Kings. their fruits,which was the chiefe article at that time of the receipt of their treaſure: yea, they did not exact any other thing,but certaine cuſtomes or tolles. Whereupon the king of Fez reſolued to proclaime war againſt them,& came in perſon to beſiege Marroc, being vnprouided of Ordnance: for hee had but two peeces, with the which hee made a batterie neere vnto the port of Ciet Belabez Cebti. The other hearing of this ſiege at M Sus,came ſpeedily and put himſelfe into Marroc, with three thouſand horſe, the which the king of Fez with his armie could not preuent: then inſtantly, with his and his brothers forces,they made a furious ſallie, and put the aſſaylants to rout,purſuing them vnto the Prouince of Eſcura,doing infinit harme euen in the taile of their army. King Hamet Oataz making haſt, with the firſt to come to Fez,where he had news the ſame night,that

Muley

A Muley Muſand her brother, had rayſed a tumult in the cittie, & that he wold make himſelf King: which rebellion he ſuppreſt by his comming. By this bad triall which the King of Fez had made, he was ſo incenſed, as he would returne againe to the ſeege of Marroc, whereas the two brethren, did not attend him, but came foorth to meete him, and charging him at the paſſage of the riuer of los Negros, at a place called Buacuba, they defeated his foreward: in which conflict Muley Mahomet his ſon was ſlaine, and with him King Aben Abdalla, he who had loſt Granado in Spaine, and the King of Fez was forced to returne in diſorder, with great loſſe of his men, baggage, and women, and to leaue the field to the Xeriffes, who by fauour of this victorie, made all them of the iuriſdiction of Fez, B which confined vpon Marroc, to contribute the tenths, without any reſiſtance: and when as afterwards the King of Fez ſought to be reuenged, they made head againſt him and his Captaines, and put them to many routes, ſo as that wrong remayned vnreuenged.

King of Fez defeated by the Xeriffes.

The Xeriffes hauing handled the King of Fez thus roughly, he of Sus led an armie beyond the mountaine Atlas, he tooke Tafilet, a towne of Numidia, and carried away the Lord thereof called Amar. He alſo took ſome other places, ſome by force, ſome by compoſition: ſo as theſe two brethren extended their dominions towards Numidia and Lybia, and ſubdued the Arabians and Affricans which liued in thoſe drie countries. But that which gaue more fame to Mahomet, was the taking of Cape d'Aguer, which he had alreadie attempted, and was then ill defended by D. Guttiere of Montroy a Portugois, who C was forced and taken there with a good ſpoile, eſpecially of armes and ordinance, whereof the Xeriffes could make great vſe. This conqueſt ſetled them in their Eſtates, and made all the people of the mountaines and valleys, friends, yea obedient vnto them, and ſome thought that they had made Emanuel King of Portugal giue ouer the warres of Affrick, and demantle the townes of Azamor, Safi, Arzille and Alcaçar Ceguer, the which happened ſoone after.

But as all equalitie is odious in great men, and their ſocietie nothing firme: theſe two brethren fell in the end to quarrell, and to open war. The cauſe was the hatred which Hamet bare to his younger brother Mahomet, for that hee was more eſteemed and reſpected then he, he was indeed more valiant, more iuſt, and more loyall in that which hee promiſed: he was diſcontented alſo, that of all the bootie which Mahomet his brother had taken D at Cap d'Aguer, of the which he ſhould giue him the fift part, hee had not ſent him any thing but D. Guttiere priſoner, and ſome few ſlaues: Wherefore he ſent him an imperious meſſage, that he would haue all the Ordinance, the harquebuzies, and the munition, which he had wonne and 400. ſlaues more, and then the fifth peny of all the reſt of the bootie: whereupon there were diuers anſwers and replies. Hamet ſeeing that hee did not performe what he deſired, ſent certaine troupes to leauie tribute of the land, which his brother enioyed; the which he did for that time endure. After which Hamet deſired that they might haue an enterview in Marroc, but Mahomet knowing his brother well, excuſed himſelfe, and ſeeing they were vpon complaints, Mahomet ſayd, that he had depriued E him of the lawfull ſucceſſion of their father, who had left him great treaſure in Tazarot, demanding a moity both of the mooueables and conqueſts, where he had alwaies bene in the greateſt dangers. He ſayd moreouer, that Mahomet Harran his ſon hauing bin borne before that Hamet had any children, he ought to be ſworne King and ſucceſſor to all the Realmes, according to a certaine ordonance of their father. From theſe words they fell to armes, and without the mediation of Cidi Arrahal (who was an Alfagui of great authoritie among the Moores and Alarabes) the warre had then growne furious and bloudy, but he pacified them, and procured an enterview vppon the bankes of the riuer Hued Iſſen, whether either of them came with 500. horſe, and lighted in the field, where there were two tents pitched, betwixt the which they parleyed, without any other companie, F but the aboue-named Alfagui, their troupes being far from them. At their coming together, Mahomet humbling himſelfe ſomething, Hamet preſently laied hold of him, ſhaking him after a rough maner, and ſeeking to ouerthrow him: but Mahomet, who was ſtrong and actiue, kept himſelfe vp, and in the end in wraſtling, got his brother vnder him, doing him no harme, but reproched him with his diſloyalty, the other powring forth many iniuries, vntil the Alfagui parted them, and then they both retired, ſo as this vnkind meeting did breed nothing elſe but an increaſe of hatred, which continued vnto their deaths. A

Xeriffes in quarrell betwixt themſelues.

Hamet was no ſooner at Marroc, but hee ſent Mueley Cidan his eldeſt ſonne to ouerrunne the land of Dara, which did belong to the King of Sus his brother, who ſent againſt him Mumen Belelche, a Geneuois renegado with ſome horſemen, who was defeated and forced to retire into a Caſtle, where he was beſeeged, taken, and carried to Marroc, and there remayned a Captiue in chaines for a time. On the other ſide, Muley Said another of Hamets ſonnes, defeated and ſlue Haſcen Gelbi whome Mahomet had ſent into the Prouince of Hea to leauie contributions: by which two routes Hamet thinking that his brothers forces were much weakened, he gathered the greateſt power hee could together, with an intent to chaſe him out of his Realme of Sus, but Mahomet was not B faint-hearted: for acquainting all his friends with the motiues of this warre, he could ſo perſwade them, as they were more affected than euer to ſupport and defend him, ſo as he was prepared to ſtoppe the paſſage of the mountaines called Maſcarotan, which are betwixt Marroc and Tarudant, where hauing ſeized vppon the ſtreights, when as the King of Marocs armie was ingaged in the mountaines, and his foreward led by Muley Nacer his third ſonne, readie to enter into the open fields, it was charged by Muley Harran, eldeſt ſonne to the King of Sus, with ſuch furie, as Nacer hauing loſt his beſt men, was forced to retire into the mountaines, which cauſed a great diſorder: for Nacer hauing incountred the battell, and the ſquadron which his father led, there was ſo ſtrange a confuſion betwixt them, that did deſcend, and the others which would haue aſcended flying C the enemie, who purſued them, as one hindering another, and intangled in their baggage, we may ſay, that they gaue themſelues a ſecond route, greater then the firſt, caſting one another downe the precepices vppon ſharpe rockes, both men and horſes: after a miſerable manner: whereuppon the enemie comming, and the barbarous people of the mountaines deſirous of ſpoyle, falling vppon this amazed multitude, they made a terrible ſlaughter, yet many quitting their horſes, eſcaped on foote, by thoſe difficult waies into the reereward, which was free from this defeat. But Hamet King of Marroc, and Muley Buaçon another of his ſonnes were taken, and led to Tarudant: Muley Cidan his eldeſt ſonne retired with the remaynder of this defeated armie to Marroc, in ſuch deſpaire, as he would haue ſent Ambaſſadours into Spaine to the Emperour Charles the fifth, to craue D an armie of him, and to offer him homage, but hee was diſſwaded by the Alfaguis, and Captaines that were with him, who thought it fit to ſend Mariana the wife of Muley Cidan, and daughter to the Xeriffe Mahomet, whom hee loued much, to Tarudant to procure the deliuerie of her father-in-law, and to mediate a peace: the which ſhee handled ſo diſcreetly, as the two kings were reconciled vpon theſe conditions.

Mahomet defeates his elder brother

Xeriffes brethren reconciled.

That there ſhould be a new diuiſion made, and that to Mahomet ſhould be left all the Prouince of Sus, from Mount Atlas towards the South, vnto the bounds of Lybia and Numidia, where it confines to Sus, the which they call Remoto, and to Hamet that which is towards the North, and to the fronters of the Realme of Fez: That the treaſures left by their father ſhould be equally diuided. That young Mahomet Harran ſhould bee ſworne E Prince ſucceſſor to both their Eſtates, and after him Muley Cidan: That the priſoners of either ſide ſhould be ſet free without ranſome: That Hamet King of Marroc, his children and the Captaines that were taken, ſhould ſweare neuer to carrie armes againſt Mahomet nor his children: That Hamet ſhould haue the fift part of all that ſhould bee gotten by their common armes, by way of acknowledgement, as being his elder, and his part of the ouerplus, and being in perſon in the armie, he ſhould haue the honour to bee the Soueraigne head, and Mahomet ſhould be as Vrſi, or Lieutenant general vnder him. This peace was concluded in the yeare 1543. but it held not; for Hamet being come to Marroc, ſayd, that whatſoeuer he had promiſed, was by force, beeing a priſoner, and that it was not fit he ſhould ſo wrong his ſon: wherefore hauing taken armes againe, the two brethren came F to battel, at a place called Quehera, 7. leagues from Marroc, the 29. of Auguſt 1544. whereas Hamet was vanquiſhed, and his army ſo diſperſt, as Mahomet being at the cittie gates, chaſing them that fled, he was receiued, partly by loue, and partly by feare, the Gouernor and cittizens thinking that all had beene loſt: where hauing deliuered him the caſtle, he was ſaluted and held for King of Marroc. Hee did not touch his brothers wiues Hamet breakes the peace made with his brother.

nor

A nor children, nor their Iewels, nor treaſure, but preſerued them, aſſuring them that they ſhould haue good vſage. A day or two after Hamet came to the gates of Marroc, but he found the place taken: wherefore beeing oppreſt with ſorrow, hee retired to the Hermitage of Cidi Abdalla ben Ceſi, a man greatly honoured among that nation, not farre from the cittie, and from thence he ſent his ſonnes Muley Cidan, and Muley Nacer vnto the King of Fez, to recommend them and their affaires vnto him. It was Muley Hamet Oataz, aboue-mentioned, a generous Prince, who notwithſtanding the wrongs hee had receyued from their father and vncle, entertained theſe two Xeriffes very courteouſly, and promiſed them all aſſiſtance. The Xeriffe Mahomet, new King of Marroc, knowing that his
B Nephewes were retired to Fez, ſent them word, that they ſhould not eſtrange themſelues, and that he had no will but to do them good, whereupon they obeyed him, and he alſo drew vnto him by rewards and good entertaynments, all the Captaines and ſouldiers which had ſerued his brother. The Alfaguis grieuing at Hamets diſgrace, did mediat an enterview of the two breethren neere vnto the riuer of Luyden, two leagues from Marroc in the yeare 1545, but it was to Mahomets aduantage: for this victorious King cauſed a great and rich pauilion to be ſet vp all open, in the middeſt of his troupes, where he was ſet low vppon a royall ſeate, hauing barres round about, ſo as no man could come neere him but before, he being armed. About him were his gards ſet, and other troupes of ſouldiers, who left an entrie to go vnto the King. There firſt preſented themſelues vnto him Hamets ſmaller children, then they that were bigger, and ſo according to their ages,
C who came and kiſſed his knee one after another, and then retired to one ſide of the pauilion, whereas the Kings children and his chiefe Officers were: laſt of all came Hamet the Xeriffe, before whom the King aroſe, and receyued him at the entrie of his pauillion, where as they embraced one another with teares in their eyes, and then ſitting downe vppon one ſeate, after they had viewed one another a long ſpace, ſighing but not ſpeaking. Mahomet began to tell him mildly of the breach of his faith, and of the peace of Tarudant, that God had puniſhed him by the victory which he had giuen him miraculouſly, being very apparent that his forces were not ſufficient to ſeize vpon the Realme of Marroc, and that he muſt confeſſe, that for his diſloyaltie he was fallen into the hatred of his
D ſubiects and vaſſals. That he ſhould remember how much he had loued him, ſerued and obeyed him, as being his elder, and that he might aſſure himſelfe he would beare him the like loue hereafter, notwithſtanding all that was paſt, ſo as he would acknowledge him to be his king, and be content to be his Vizir, and Captaine generall: but he muſt forbeare to enter into Marroc: for he had promiſed the Inhabitants, who feared to be ill intreated by him, not to ſuffer him to enter: Wherefore hee ſhould retire himſelfe with his wife and children to the towne of Tafilet, where he ſhould receiue all brotherly loue from him, and that he hoped the conqueſts they had hitherto made, were of ſmall eſteeme, in regard of thoſe that were to come, by the which hee ſhould haue meanes to giue vnto his children Realmes and Seigneuries to his and their content. Hamet made ſome excuſes for E that which he had done, and thanked him humbly in words for the promiſes and offers he made him, although the ſentence ſeemed hard, yet he muſt vndergo it: wherefore he retired to Tafila in Numidia with his wiues, children, & ſuch friends as wold follow him.

Mahomets ſpeech to his brother Hamet.

If the Xeriffe Mahomet had diſpoſſeſt his brother, whereof the chiefe motiue had beene ambition and then diſtruſt, the King of Fez might well attend as much, for they had beene already in armes, and the Xeriffe knew wel that he had wronged him of Fez, which in reaſon required reparation: but the Xeriffes greatnes would not permit it: one diſtruſting another, they fell eaſily to quarrell. The Xeriffe complained, that after the battell of Quehera, the king of Fez had giuen refuge to Muley Cidan, and Muley Nacer his nephewes, and then he pretended that the Prouince of Tedle, did belong to the Realme of Marroc, and F at the ſame time that he demanded it, he ſent Muley Abdel Cader, one of his ſons, to field, with an army, to exact the contributions, giuing him for an aſſiſtant Mumen Belelche aboue-named, by race a Geneuois, to whom he gaue charge to beſeege the ſtrong caſtle of Fixtelle, and to take it: which they could not do, for the place was well defended by Ben-Ouzar, captaine to the king of Fez, who alſo went to field to ſuccor him. The Xeriffe deſiring to incounter him, went alſo to field. In the armie of Fez were 30000. horſe, Kings of Fez and Marroc at warre.

as well of Fez, Velez, Dubuda, as Arabians Hololes,and of Beni Melic Sofian,and eight A hundred harquebuziers, Turkes,or Chriſtian renegado's, led by Marian a Perſian born.
The warres of Barbarie and Mauritania are for the moſt part on horſe-backe, and they do little eſteeme foot-men: beſides all this, he had a thouſand harguebuziers on horſe-back, and foure and twenty peeces of Ordinance. The *X*eriffe had eighteene peeces of Ordinance, eighteene thouſand horſe, three hundred Turkes harguebuziers, and a thouſand Chriſtians renegado's carrying Croſ-bowes. Theſe armies being neere together, ſpent many dayes to ſpie out ſome aduantage: when as the *X*eriffe perceyued that the horſ-men of Fez, and the Alarabes which were with them, beganne to disband according to their cuſtome, which is to grow wearie to be in field, and to returne to ſee their families, hee B King of Fez de- offered battell ſo fitly, (for hee was a great ſouldier) as they were forced to fight, where feated & taken the Xeriffe got the victorie, and the King of Fez was taken, beeing hurt in two places, and his ſonne Muley Bucar, with many other Commaunders and Captaines, and a great ſpoyle.

Muley Buaçon Lord of Velez de la Gomera of the race of Merins, alone, ſhewed him-ſelfe a valiant Captaine, and ſaued his Squadron, all the reſt beeing ſcattered and put to route. Fixtelle was then yeelded, and all other places of the Prouince of Tedle. The Xeriffe cauſing the King of Fez to come before him, vſed no rough ſpeech, but did rather comfort him in his misfortune, and as he ſeemed alwaies very religious, he told him on-Speech of the ly that he ſhould acknowledge, that this miſerie had fallen vppon him, for that hee did C
Xeriffe to the not raigne according vnto God, neither had any care of his people: For (ſayd he) thou King of Fez. which art a King, and ſhouldſt inſtruct thy ſubiects in vertue and good manners, why haſt thou ſuffered ſuch abhominable vices to be ordinarily practiſed in that great Citty of Fez, where as euery man is giuen to fraude, violence, diſſoluteneſſe, and drunkennes, where as wine is openly ſold in Tauernes, contrarie to the law of Mahomet the Propher?
Why haſt thou not cauſed iuſtice to be adminiſtred, and theſe exceſſes puniſhed? wherunto Hamet anſwered nothing, but that Princes which diſlike of vices, and would correct them, could not do it, when as they meete with ſubiects bred vp in vice, and accuſtomed to liue ill; but hee layed before him the good which the Xeriffs had receyued in Fez, and that if they were growne great, it was by the aſſiſtance and meanes of Oataz Beneme- D rines, intreating him to remember it. The Xeriffe put him in good hope, but hee made him promiſe to perſwade the Inhabitants of Fez to open him the gates, and receiue him into the towne: and with this intent he marched towards the great Cittie, which be rather three citties one ioyning vnto another, contayning (as ſome report) eightie thouſand families, full of rich men, liuing voluptuouſly, and beautified with rich and ſtately buildings, both publike and priuate, more then any other citie among the Mahumetiſts:
but whatſoeuer Hamets will was in this poynt, they would not ſuffer the Xeriffe to enter, for that Buaçon Lord of Velez, the Kings kinſ-man, beeing entred into it with the remainder of the defeated armie, had cauſed Cazen, ſonne to the king of Fez to be proclaymed king, vppon condition, that if his father, being ſet at libertie, ſhould returne, he ſhould E yeeld vp the Realme vnto him. The Xeriffe Mahomet ſeeing there was no meanes to force that great city, and wanting victuals, he returned in a rage, and cauſed the heads of aboue two hundred of the citizens, that were his priſoners, to be cut off, leading away king Ha- met, Muley Bacar, with other priſoners of name, in chains. This was an admirable exploit, for (they ſay) that the Xeriffe loſt but one man in his whole armie, but many were hurt, and the number of the dead were ſmall of the king of Fez his part: this was in the yeare 1547. The diſſention among the Princes which remayned in Fez, gaue the xeriffe occaſi-on to rayſe a new army, in the yeare following, vnder the conduct of Mahomet Haran, and Abdel el Cader, his ſons, but this warre was ſoone ended: for the Alfaguis, who are e-ſteemed wiſe men among the Moores, did mediate a peace; by the which king Hamet Oa- F King of Fez taz, and his followers were ſet at liberty, and there was giuen to the xeriffe Mahomet for ſet at libertie. the charge of the war, the towne of Mequineuz, which was great and well peopled, containing about 8000. families, being 12. leagues diſtant from Fez. And it was agreed, that whenſoeuer the xeriffe would enter into Fez, he ſhould haue the keies deliuered to him.
About 2. moneths after the kings deliuery, the xeriffe meaning to make trial of the effect

of

A of his promiſe, came neere vnto the Cittie with ſome ſmall forces, and ſent to demaund the keyes. The king of Fez knowing that he had no great troupe with him, entertayned him ſome dayes in hope, pretending that there was ſome diſſention in the towne, which hindred his entrie. In the meane time he gathered his forces together, and fell out vpon him, forcing him to retire with the loſſe of ſome of his Knights: whereat the Xeriffe beeing wonderfully mooued, hee ſent for his forces, and came and lodged at Arras Elma, two leagues from Fez, where there is a great ſpring which makes the riuer that runs into the towne, the which he blockt vp with forts well manned, to cut off their victuals, and to cauſe a mutinie. Yet they endured this diſcommoditie almoſt two yeares. In the end not
B able any longer to beare the want of many things which they needed, they let the Xeriffe by night into the old towne, by a breach which they ſuffered him to make, the which Hamet Oataz, (who was in the new towne, where the Kings pallace is) did not perceiue, vntill the next day morning, and then hee came with a great troupe, and charged them of Marroc furiouſly to expell them, but he could not: for the people did no way aſſiſt him, but kept themſelues cloſe in their houſes during the fight, which was very cruell in all parts of the townes, the one crying for the Xeriffe, and the other for the Merins, and the Cittizens with their wiues and children cryed out, God ſaue him that ſhall giue vs peace and bread, caſting ſtones, logges, tyles, and whatſoeuer they could get, out at the windowes, wherewith many were ſlaine, or ſore wounded, and more of the Kings men, then
C of others. So as Muley Hamet and his men were forced to retire into new Fez, and to abandon the old towne to the Xeriffe. The next night Buaçon perſwaded Muley Hamet to flie with him to Velez, and to paſſe from thence into Spaine, to craue ayde from the Emperour Charles, but he would not beleeue him: Wherefore Buaçon retired himſelfe, and the ſame night Muley Hamet ſent foorth his mother, (whoſe name was Lela Mahabilo) to the Xeriffe, to craue a peace of him vppon what tearmes ſoeuer: who caſting her ſelfe proſtrate before him, beſought him to receiue the Realme, and to giue him ſome corner of ground to entertaine him and his family: wherewith the Xeriffe was very well ſatisfied, commanding that Hamet ſhould depart the ſame day, and retire to Marroc, carying with him his wiues, children, Iewels, treaſure, mooueables, and whatſoeuer hee
D would, and that Cazeres and Aben Nacer his ſonnes ſhould go to Tarudant with their families and goods, promiſing to giue them good entertaynment. The Xeriffe hauing ſeene among the Kings daughters, one that pleaſed him, hee married her: thus the Xeriffe thought that he had conquered the Cittie and Realme of Fez; but he could not yet enioy it quietly. Hee was much incenſed to heare, that during the warre, Muley Zidan his Nephew, and his ſonne-in-law had come to Fez, and borne armes for his enemie. This made him diſlodge the Xeriffe Hamet from Tafilet, and to confine him to Xiguret in Zahara in Lybia, with Zidan and Nacer his ſonnes, retayning Buaçon and Mançor who were younger, with him, whom he afterwards married with two of his daughters. The Lord of Dabuda, called Muley Amar, a Prince of the bloud of the Merins, beeing ſum-
E moned by the Xeriffe to come and do him homage, hee durſt not, but leauing his houſe he retired with his family to Melille in Gared vpon the ſea.

Fez won by the Xeriff. Mahomet.

Buaçon Lord of Velez beeing fled from Fez, as we haue ſayd, had an intent to flie vnto the Chriſtians, and treated with Don Aluar de Baçan to yeeld himſelfe vaſſall to the Emperour Charles, and to put Pignon de Velez into his hands. But ſtaying long for an anſwer from D. Aluar, the xeriffe, (it may be aduertized of that which he pretended to do) ſent for him to come to Fez with aſſurance. The which hee promiſed to do, and put him ſelfe vppon the way, but he turned on the left hand, and retired to Melille, where he continued his practiſes with the Prince Maximillian, who gouerned Spaine for the Emperour. He was to deliuer Pignon de Velez to D. Bernardin of Mendoza, who was ſent ex-
F preſly to receiue it: but the Captaine that was in it, would not deliuer it, whereofore hee paſt with D. Bernardin to Malaga, and from thence to Maximilian, who hauing referred him vnto the Emperour, hee went to him into Germany, but to no purpoſe: for they did not truſt him. In the end he addreſſed himſelfe to D. Iohn king of Portugall, who gaue him mony and fiue Carauels, in which he embarked 1500. ſouldiers Portugals, meaning to land in Affricke, at a place called las Aluzemas: but hee was ſurprized by Salharais, Gouernour of Alger, who had ſome intelligence of theſe Carauels, who aſſayled them with foureſcore Galleots, tooke them, and carried them to Alger, with all the Chriſtian ſouldiers, notwithſtanding any thing that Buaçon could pleade, who ſayd, that hee had brought them for his ſeruice, that by their ayde hee might enter into the Eſtate of Fez, from whence the Xeriffe, their common enemie, had chaſed all their houſe and family by force: but hee could get nothing from Salharrais at that time but reproches, that hee ſhould bee aſhamed, beeing a Mahometane, to haue recourſe vnto Chriſtians in his affaires, rather then vnto Turkes: yet notwithſtanding afterwards, hee not onely deliuered theſe Portugall ſouldiers, but came himſelfe with the forces of his Gouernement to ayde Buaçon to recouer the Realme of Fez: for it happened, that the Xeriffe hauing greater deſſeignes, and aſpiring to the Empire of all Affricke, made an enterprize vppon the Towne of Tremeſſen, which was a ſtore-houſe for the Turkes, where they had a Gouernour and a Garriſon, ſending his three eldeſt ſonnes Harran, Cader, and Abdalla, to whome it was yeelded without reſiſtance. Abdalla remayned there with a good Garriſon, but hee ſtayed not long till hee was inueſted by Salharrais with a mightie armie, by whome hee was vanquiſhed going foorth to fight with them, notwithſtanding that the father had ſent him a ſupply of eight thouſand horſe, vnder the commaund of Cader and Abderramen his Brethren, who were the cauſe of this loſſe, by their accuſtomed iarres and diſſentions: for beeing breethren by diuers mothers, they had alwaies ſome quarrell a foote, and could not agree in this important action. Cader was ſlayne in this conflict, beeing not ſuccoured by Abderramen, and Abdalla (ſore wounded) was forced to retire in diſorder.

Bahami an old Captaine, and Couſin to theſe young Xeriffes, thinking to reprehend Abderramen for the fault which hee had committed, vſing ſome ſharp and manly words vnto him, hee wounded him in the arme with his ſword; whereof hauing afterwards complayned vnto the Xeriffe Mahomet, hee was ſo incenſed againſt his ſonne, as ſome thought hee was poyſoned within a moneth after, with the fathers conſent: ſo in a ſhort time three of the Xeriffes ſons dyed: for Mahomet Harran the eldeſt, who was appoynted Succeſſour to the Realmes of Marroc and Fez, and had aſſiſted him in the Conqueſt of Tremeſſen, returning afterwards to Fez, he dyed of ſickneſſe. In the meane time the Xeriffe had newes that the Inhabitants of the Mountaine Nefuça, called otherwiſe Derenderen, a people ſubiect to rebellion, were reuolted. They had mutined before, by the perſwaſion of a Preacher of the ſect of Mohaydin, called Cidi Abdalla: but now the Xeriffe imputed this tumult to the practiſes of Muley Hamet the diſpoſſeſſed king of Fez and his children: but more vppon a conceipt, then any wel-grounded reaſon: ſo as incenſed with a violent paſſion, hee ſent his ſonne Abdalla to Marroc, where this poore King was, with charge to cut off his head, and there was commaundement ſent to Habis, Gouernour of Sus, to do the like to his two ſonnes Cazeri and Nacer, who liued at Tarudant, the which was executed.

Cruelty of the Xeriffe Mahomet.

The Rebels of Derenderen had annoyed the Xeriffe, beeing animated by their Preacher Cidi Abdalla, and now they ſhewed themſelues no leſſe obſtinate. It is a mightie people, but barbarous, ſuperſtitious, and diſloyall, inhabiting this long mountaine, which was ſtrong and of hard acceſſe, hauing with in it ſpatious valleys well tilled, carrying grayne, oyle, and other fruites, which is a branch of the great Atlas, in the territory of Marroc: who made ſuch reſiſtance againſt the Xeriffe, who came againſt them in perſon, as after that he had loſt a great number of his men, he reſolued to leaue them vntill another time.

The towne of Tremeſſen beeing recouered by the Turkes, Buaçon Lord of Velez, who was at Melille, came againe to intreate Salharrais, that he would not ruine his good fortune, but deliuer the Chriſtian ſouldiers which hee detayned, paying him ſome reaſonable ranſome. Salharrais beeing incenſed againſt the Xeriffe, and thinking that if hee ſhould aſſayle him after the route of his ſonnes, hee would bee ſo amazed, as hee might diſpoſſeſſe him of Fez, requiting him with the like as he had attempted to do againſt him at Tremeſſen, he granted Buaçon his requeſt, and moreouer offered to furniſh him with a good number of Turkes, hauing agreed vppon ſome pay, and he himſelfe went with him him in perſon. Buaçon promiſed to pay him a thouſand doublons of gold daily, for forty daies together, and gaue him caution in the towne of Alger: Hee agreed alſo that Salharrais ſhould carry away all the mouables, iewels and treaſor which ſhould bee found in Fez, belonging to the Xeriffe.

This accord being made, the Turke went to field with foure thouſand men of his nation, and twelue peeces of ordinance, giuing order to other troupes to come and ioyne with him at Tremeſſen; the Lord of Dubude of the bloud of the Merins, came alſo with ſome ſouldiars. It may be the newes hereof made the Xeriffe retire from purſuing the Montaynards of Derenderen, ſooner then he would haue done, and to put himſelfe into Fez, whether all his forces being come, hee went to incounter the Turkes vpon the Marches of Tezar, whereas the Realme of Fez confines with that of Tremeſſen, and there attended his comming many daies: but ſeeing his long ſtay, and his victuals being cut off by Buaçons children, who held the paſſages, and had their retreats into the mountaines of Matagara, hee was forced to retire. Xeriffe was no ſooner parted from Tezar, but Salharrais arriued, to whom the Inhabitants opened their gate, and receiued a garriſon of Turkes: then cauſing his army to march againſt Fez, hee went along the foote of the mountaines, being coaſted by the Xeriffs army which held the plaines, and was much ſtronger then he in horſe. Salharrais was a captaine, and could imbrace all occaſions, ſo as one day hee ſurprized the Xeriffs reereward, led by Abdalla, his ſonne, and put it to route, and made him to abandon his munition and baggage, ſo as the Xeriffe was forced to goe haſtily to Fez, marching all that day and the night following without any ſtay, and then Salharrais lodged preſently vpon the bankes of the riuer Sebu.

Turkes goe to beſeege Fez.

Xeriffe Mahomet forced to flie.

The Inhabitants of Fez haue a preuiledge, that if their King ſuffers the enemy to approach within halfe a league of the city, as being to weake and wanting meanes to reſiſt him, they may open him the gates, and not bee taxed with treachery, and ſo they cauſe their Kings to ſweare at their comming to the crowne: For it is a great folly, ſay they, by a vaine, weake & vnſeaſonable loyaltie, to expoſe ſuch a city to the ſpoile, in ſupporting a Prince obſtinately, who is vnprouided of force and meanes to defend them. This priuiledge forced the Xeriffe to goe forth againe to fight with the Turkes army, and with his enemy Buaçon, and fearing that the captaine of the Turkes which hee had for his gard, would abandon him, and retire to Salharra, he cauſed his head to bee cut off.

Preuiledge of the inhabitants of Fez.

All the captaines and gouernors of Sus, Dara, Marroc, and the Prouinces of Fez, were in his army with their people, which ſhewed to bee foure ſcore thouſand horſe, of the which he ſent eight thouſand good horſe of Sus againſt the enemy, to fight with him at the paſſage of a riuer, and hee with the reſt of the army followed after, ſtretching it out vpon the riuer ſide, ſo as there was nothing but the riuer betwixt the two armies. Salharrais finding great difficulty in his paſſage, planted his ordinance, vpon the riuers ſide where there was a ford, and cauſed euery horſeman to take a Harguebuzier behind him, and the ordinance to play continually vpon the Xeriffs ſquadrons, ſo as hee paſt a great number of his ſhot in deſpight of them, who with admirable celerity caſt vp a kinde of rampar to defend them from the horſe, and ſhooting inceſſantly gaue meanes to the reſt of the Turkes horſe and foote to paſſe, neither could they bee forced to quit the place, which they had taken, notwithſtanding the many charges of the Xeriffs horſemen.

The Turkes army being paſt, they lodged that night as ſtrongly as they could. The next day they marched towards the city, whereas the Xeriffs army made great reſiſtance, the which was diuided into three battaillons, and hauing made a trench vpon the great high way, planted with ordinance, they could not paſſe; but Salharrais making a ſhew as if he would goe and beſeege the bourrough of Zefere with part of his army, whereas the Xeriffs victuals and munition lay, hee cauſed his ſonne Abdalla to leaue a little hill called Dardubag, which hee had in gard, of the which hee himſelfe, with the other part of the Turkiſh army, ſeized inſtantly, and then hee feared not the enemies horſe; the which could not then anoy him, the way being rough and full of ſtones. Notwithſtanding the Xeriffe charged the Turkes, but they of that nation and the renegados which were in his army, and of his gard betraied him; ſo as Salharrais Turkes got the aduantage,

and

Turkes make the Xeriffe retire.

and with' their ſhot diſperced their firſt ſquadrons: and put them to flight, wherefore A the Xeriffe ſeeing that they of Fez that were with him began to wauer, and that moſt of them retired towards the old city, hee reſolued alſo to retire himſelfe into new Fez, with his ſouldiars of Marroc and Sus, in whom he did moſt relie, and the Turkes marching on in good order, came and camped neere vnto the port called Bebelfetoh, whereas many of the Inhabitants came vnto them, and Arabians that were friends to Buaçon, with an intent to haue it opened vnto him. Muley Abdalla the Xeriffs ſonne, who had entred the city by an other port, cauſed two peeces of ordinance to bee planted vpon the por-tall of Bebelfetoh, which made many ſhot into the Turkes campe, and did them much harme, but Buaçan and his friends brake open the gate, and made way for the army to B enter.

Then there beganne a furious and bloudy conflict in the ſtreetes, where there died many good men of either ſide, in the end Abdalla, who had no confidence in them of Fez, abandoned it, and retired himſelfe into the caſtle of new Fez, paſſing by the ſuburbes of Merz, where he reported vnto his father how all things had paſt in the great towne,

Fez abandoned by the Xeriffe to the Turkes.

who holding himſelfe not ſafe in new Fez, went to field, in a manner flying towards Marroc, hauing aduiſed his wiues, his daughters and houſhold traine, to ſaue themſelues as they could: abandoning his treaſors, iewels, and mouables (whereof hee went alwaies well furniſhed) to them that could lay hold of it. Some eſcaped, others were ſtaied and taken, and amongſt them two of the Xeriffs daughters, who had that day C a notable loſſe. Aliben Bubcar, who was captaine of the fort of new Fez, held it, vntill he thought that the Xeriffe was in ſafety, and then hee yeelded it to Salharrais by compoſition, his men going forth with their armes and horſes, and what goods they could carry with them.

Fez taken by the Turkes.

The city of Fez being thus wonne, ſome captaines of the Turkes army, who hated Buaçon, gaue Salharrais to vnderſtand that the Inhabitants of Fez did deteſt him, for that hee was affected to the Chriſtians, and was proud, and of an ill diſpoſition. That they murmured already againſt him, and gaue it out that they would neuer receiue him willingly for their King; and therefore hee ſhould binde them much vnto him, if hee gaue them Muley Bubcar, one of the ſonnes of Muley Hamet Oataz, to whom by right the D Realme did belong, and that it was their deſire. Vpon theſe reports and perſwaſions Salharrais cauſed Muley Bubcar to bee proclaimed King of Fez, retayning Muley Buaçon in the fort of new Fez well garded, which made the people to mutine: for whereas the Turkes had ſaid that Buaçon was hated and reiected by the Inhabitants of Fez, it was a meere ſlander, and the contrary did ſoone appeare, for they tooke armes for his ſake a-gainſt the Turkes, ſo as Salharrais was forced (to pacefie this tumult) to ſend him vnto them with an Alcaide, he promiſing to returne againe to accompliſh their conuentions.
Buaçon being brought into the city, caſt himſelfe into the Meſquite of Caruin, and would not come forth, ſaying, that he had beene ill intreated by the Turkes, and in danger to be ſlaine by them, and therefore he would not fall againe into their hands. But E the Alcaide, which did accompany him, gaue him ſo many reaſons, as hee returned with him to Salharrais, who pacified him with good words and made him King of Fez: but he condemned the Citizens to pay an ounce of gold for euery houſe, becauſe they had ſeditiouſly taken armes againſt the Turkes: whatſoeuer paſt betwixt them afterwards, it is certaine, that Salharrais departed very ill ſatisfied of King Buaçon, and returned from this enterpriſe (where hee had gotten much honour and proffit) in ſuch a rage againſt him, as he aduertiſed the Xeriffe, that he might boldly make warre againſt Fez when hee pleaſed, aſſuring him that hee would neuer giue aide to Buaçon: It may bee hee was the more incenſed, for that hauing ſent Ya Haya a Turke to Veles, to receiue the fort of Pipnon, which it may be was an Article of their Conuentions, the captaine that was in it, F would not yeeld it, but deliuered it vnto Muley Mahomet ſonne of Buaçon, and when the Pirat demanded it of Mahomet, hee refuſed him, but it happened on a time that the Pi-rat tooke Mahomet out of his fort, and intreated him ſo roughly, as hee yeelded vp the place.

The Xeriffe Mahomet being chaſed from Fez, thinking that the towne of Meguineus, would

A would be of great expence hee commanded his ſonne Abdalla who was in it, to abandon it, for the which hee repented himſelfe, hearing how much Salharrais was diſcontented with Buaçon: for this place was very commodious to make an enterpriſe vpon Fez, which hee preſently reſolued. But hee had reaſon to thinke how to keepe it from the Xeriffe Hamet his brother, who vpon the newes of this loſſe was returned to Tafilet, and had made himſelfe Maſter thereof, with an intent to attempt ſome great matter. He therefore reſolued to puniſh him in ſuch ſort, as hee ſhould neuer haue more cauſe to feare him, going himſelfe in perſon to beſeege him in Tafilet; and in the meane time he ſent an army againſt Buaçon the new King of Fez; giuing the charge thereof to his B ſonne Abdalla; Buaçon for his part ſent his army to field, being led by Muley Nacer and Muley Mahomet his ſonnes: but theſe two brethren (the one beeing baſe) diſagreeing, they diuided their forces, and gaue Abdalla meanes to defeat Mahomet, and to make the other retire: which made Buaçon goe out of Fez with a great army, who charged Abdalla ſo furiouſly, as hee put his army to rout with great ſlaughter. In this battaile there was a race of Arabians cut in peeces, called Arrahamenes, whom the Xeriffe drew out of the country of Sus, and had placed them in the Prouince of Temecene, of the which there eſcaped not one.

Abdalla defeated by Buaſon.

The defeat of Abdalla was held ſecret by the Xeriffe, who did beſeege Hamet his brother in Tafilet, ſo as the beſeeged knew not any thing: but contrariwiſe they found meanes to haue it bruted in the towne, that Abdalla was a conqueror in Fez. Where-
C fore Hamet who had put himſelfe into that place, in hope to bee releeued by Buaçon, beleeuing that he had beene wholy defeated, and without hope of that which hee expected, he ſent Zidan and Nacer his ſonnes vnto their vncle, and yeelded himſelfe vnto his mercy: Who confined him at that time into an hermitage, but hee cauſed the heads of his Nephewes, to bee cut off, to free himſelfe of all feare; and hauing left a good garriſon in Tafilet, he tooke the way to Garciluin, and by that way entred into the Realme of Fez.

Mahomet the Xeriffe beſeegeth his brother Mahomet.

Buaçon ſeeing himſelfe thus obſtinatly purſued, went forth againſt the Xeriffe, where there was a bloudy battaile, in the which Buaçon was ſlaine vpon the place, and his army put to flight. Nacer his ſonne fled to Meſquineuz, to recouer the mountaines,
D his other ſonne Mahomet, entred into Fez, with fifty horſe onely, but the Citizens, who alwaies held with the ſtronger, let him know that he was not welcome: wherefore hee went alſo to Meſquineuz, where he found his brother Nacer, and ſo they paſt to Sala or Rabat vpon the Ocean ſea, where they imbarked to paſſe into Spaine, but they were taken at ſea by certaine Pirats Brittons. Muley Buſcar, ſonne to the deceaſed King Hamet Oataz, being in this battaile with Buaçon, fled to Tremeſſen, and from thence to Algier, where he died of the plague.

Buaſon King of Fez defeated and ſlaine.

Thus by this victory the Xeriffe was peaceable King of Fez, and all the Xecques of the people, and Gouernors of the Realm, came and yeelded themſelues vnto him. Being vn-
E able to force them of the mountaines, or beeing loath to blemiſh the glory of ſo great a conqueſt by ſome ſiniſter accident, in ſeeking to ſubdue thoſe baſe deſperate people, he made an accord with them, that they ſhould yeeld him a certaine homage. Being then come to Marroc, he cauſed his brother Hamet to bee brought thether, with the children that he had remayning, giuing them in gard, to Ali Ben Bucar, and then he went towards Tarudant to make a marriage (for hee was accuſtomed euery yeere to marry ſome faire gentlewoman) and therefore hee carried two of his daughters with him, with a great traine of women, ſome troupes of horſe, and twelue hundred Turkes of his gard; but he came not thether, being ſlaine by the way, by treaſon, vpon this occaſion. Hee had a priuate hatred with Haſſen Baſha, ſonne to Haradin Barbarouſſe (but the cauſe is not well knowne) ſo as Haſſen ſought all meanes to bee reuenged. Being at Algier there
F came a Turke vnto him, who had heard ſpeake of their quarrell, his name was alſo Haſſen, a wicked and a murtherous man, who made offer to kill the Xeriffe, and hauing receiued money, and great promiſes from the Baſha, he came to Fez, whereas Abdalla was viceroy for his father; whom hee gaue to vnderſtand that hee had fled from Algier, for that Haſſen Baſha would haue put him to death vpon certaine falſe reports, beſeeching him to receiue him into his ſeruice. Abdalla who did not much loue the Turkiſh nation,

Fez wholy ſubdued to the Xeriffe.

would

would not entertaine him, but willed him to goe to Marroc to his father the which hee A did, where he was receiued, and ſoone after made captaine of the Turkes of his gard, who were all diſcontented, and ready to mutine, for that they had beene aboue a yeere without their pay, the which they had often demanded of the treaſorers, and were diſdainefully reiected, with iniuries, as it it is the cuſtome of that kinde of people: ſo as when the Xeriffe beganne his voyage to Tarudant, they were much incenſed. The Turke Haſſen taking this fit occaſion to execute his deſeigne, increaſed their diſcontents all he could, ſo as he grew confident to treat with ſome of the moſt mutinous of his garde, to kill the Xeriffe, and to ſpoile his treaſure, ſhewing them how eaſily they might eſcape by Numidia, and get to Tremeſſen, before they ſhould haue meanes to purſue B them.

This practiſe ſucceeded for the execution of the murther, but they could not eſcape as they expected. The Xeriffe being at the paſſage of Mont Atlas, which is called Bi-bone, at a place named Algier, he would take a view of his gards, who for this cauſe were armed on horſebacke, and in battaile, Haſcen who was their captaine, lighting from his horſe, drew neere vnto the Xeriffe, who was at the entry of his tent, as if hee had ſome thing to ſay vnto him, being followed by foure other his confederats; being neere, and ſeeing him attentiue to ſome other thing, the Treaſorer who was not farre off, ſeeing Haſcen lay his hand vpon his Cymitere, he cried out to Xeriffe that he ſhould beware of himſelfe: the Xeriffe thinking to flie into his tent, was intangled among the cords and C Xeriffe Mahomet murthered. fel, then the traitor cut one of his hamſtrings, & the reſt made an end of murthering him, killing his chiefe Treaſorer (whom they hated) with him. This murther beeing done, it was publiſhed by the Turkes themſelues, with curſes againſt the dead. Many of the troupes which followed in this voyage, ioyned with them, ſo as Haſcen was preſently ſtrong and ſo feared, as marching towards the Prouince of Sus, whereſoeuer hee paſt, they did him honour and ſeruice, and being come to Tarudant they eaſily made themſelues Maſter of the towne, finding it abandoned by Muley Odman, one of the Xeriffes children, and there they gathered together the treaſure that was found in his, and his two daughters traines, with that which they found in the caſtle of Tarudant. Thus periſhed the Xeriffe Mahomet, who from little was aduanced to one of the greateſt D Diſpoſition of the Xeriffe Mahomet. principalities in the world, built vpon the rapine of three mighty and ancient realmes, wherevnto hee had annexed many other Prouinces, by notable murthers, and incredible effuſion of bloud, with an intent to make himſelfe Monarke of all Afrike, high-minded, proude, a diſſembler, a parricide to reigne alone, couetous, without loue, iniurious and contemning all other men: againſt whom God raiſed a petty enemy, when as hee thought to enioy all his conqueſts, and that he glorified himſelfe, who ſlue him in the midſt of his guards, yea and by them; ſo variable and inconſtant is worldly great-neſſe. The murtherers liued not long vnpuniſhed. They found amongſt the priſoners whom they deliuered at Tarudant, a Moore iſſued from the race of the Iewes, who was called Gaſi Muſa, and had beene ſuperintendant of the Engins of ſugar which the Xe- E riffe held in that Prouince, and was then reſtrained vpon his accounts.

He was knowne by the Turkes to be a man of great iudgement and vnderſtanding, and that might giue them good aduice, wherefore they honoured him with the Office of Iuſtice Major of the towne and country of Sus. Being doubtfull what to doe, hee aduiſed them to fortifie themſelues in that great and rich city, where they might well defend themſelues for a time, vntill that ſuccors came vnto them from Algier by Numidia, but Haſcen who was rich, could not ſee the happineſſe to returne vnto the Baſha, whom he had ſerued ſo wiſhfully, and therefore he reſolued to depart with his booty, and ſeeke to get through the deſarts to Tremeſſen, the which they might haue eaſily done, if they had taken this reſolution ſooner: for hauing ſpent about 3. weekes in F Tarudant, they might wel thinke they ſhould find incounters, hauing ſo long a iorney to goe, which they ſhould not be able to reſiſt: Gazi Muſa ſeeing that the Turke ſhould bee no longer his Lord, he ſecretly gaue intelligence to Muley Odman (who was in the Prouince of Dara, and leauied men, both Africains and Arrabians his friends) of the departure and voiage which Haſcen and his coufederats made, who carried away his ſiſters

and

and the treaſor of the Realme, thinking by this aduice to bee freed from the remainder of his accompts. Theſe theeues were not two iourney from Tarudant, but they found themſelues charged, and ſo preſt as they were forced to looſe both prey and life, for they were all ſlaine. So the virgins and the treaſor was recouered, and Tarudant alſo. This happened in the yeere 1557.

At Marroc the Alcaide Ali Aben Bubcar remained Gouernor, who had beene a good ſeruant to the Xeriffe that was dead, and was much affected to Abdallo his ſonne. Hee vſing wordly wiſdome, hearing how his Maſter had beene ſlaine, not attending any order or commandement from the new King Abdalla, ſlue the old Xeriffe Hamet, who had beene giuen in gard, leaſt the people ſhould force him to deliuer this Hamet, to ſeat him in the royall Throne, where they had ſeene him ſome yeeres before, the which might hinder Abdalla who was then at Fez, deſyring to ſettle him quietly in the realme as he did. Among the Princes which this Gouernor ſlue, there were two ſonnes of Muley Zidan and of Mariana daughter to the deceaſed Xeriffe Mahomet, who found an eaſie meanes to be reuenged, for after the death of Muley Zidan her husband, ſhe had retired to Abdalla her brother, whom ſhe gouerned whileſt he liued with great fauour, ſo as Ali Ben Bubcar had a moſt dangerous enemy of her about the King. Abdalla ſucceeded in the realmes of Marroc, Fez and Tarudant, with their appurtenances, without any contradiction: The father had ordained by a ſollemne will, made in a Parliament or Conuocation held expreſly, that the eldeſt of his ſonnes ſhould ſucceed in all his Eſtates, Lands, and Siegneuries, as King, and after him his other brethren vnto the laſt that ſhould be lyuing, according vnto the prerogatiue of their ages, and that not any one of their children ſhould come vnto the crowne, during the life of any one of the vncles, which Order Abdalla in the courſe of his reigne thought to breake, in fauour of his ſonne Mahomet, and thereupon Mariana tooke occaſion to be reuenged of Ali who had ſlaine her children, and procured his ruine by this meanes. This woman who was of a great ſpirit, gouerned the King abſolutly, yea ſhe preſumed to meddle in his greateſt and moſt ſecret affaires, and to giue him counſell, which he tooke not ill, but did conferre willingly with her. Hauing then a deſſeigne to breake this teſtamentary Ordonance made by his father, and to leaue the realme to his eldeſt ſonne called Mahomet. She tould him that ſhe found he ſhould haue ſome contradiction, if he ſhould die during the life of Ali Ben Bubcar, who was vizir of the realme, a cheefe dignity next vnto the King, yea of ſo great authority as in the election of Kings, the voice and approbation of the vizir was very neceſſary; for according to the cuſtome of the Moores, all their Kings were choſen after this manner, notwithſtanding any Ordonances and diſpoſitions which Kings in their life time may make to the contrary; and ſhe told him that this vizir would ſeeke to maintaine his fathers wil, for ſhe ſaw him much affected to one of his brethren, ſhe ſpeake it not by ſurmiſe: for diſſembling the hatred ſhe bare vnto Ali (as ſhee was very cunning) and diuiſing often with him of diuers affaires, and euen of this, as if it had beene a deſire of her owne onely, and no intent of the Kings, ſhe diſcouered his heart ſufficiently, by his diſcourſe and anſwers, being to open and free for a Moore. Moreouer he was rich and mighty of himſelfe, for he was Xecq or Lord of a great people called Zaragana, and for his wiſdome and valour, which were great, he was held ſo neceſſary for the realme, as the King ought to reſpect him, and gouerne his affections according to his counſels. The King in truth did much eſteeme him, and knowing that the election of his ſucceſſor depended of the vizirs voice and nomination, he did entertaine and gratifie Ali, thinking in time to bind him by his bounty to ſecond his intentions. Conferring after with his ſiſter of this deſire which he had to leaue his realmes to Mahomet his ſonne, ſhe ſtill obiected vnto him the ſincerity or rather ſeuerity of his vizir Ali Ben Bubcar, ſeeking to incenſe the King againſt him: So as on a time ſeeing the King diſcontented at ſome thing that Ali had done, according to the duty of his charge, but againſt the Kings will, this cunning woman fell in ſpeech of the ſucceſſion ſaying, that hee aſſured himſelfe more of Ali then he ought, and namely in this buſineſſe concerning his ſonne Mahomet, perſwading him to certifie himſelfe by ſome tryall, and therefore ſhe aduiſed him to counterfit himſelfe ſicke for ſome daies, and not to ſuffer any one to enter into his Chamber, if he were not called Seruice raſhly performed.

Abdalla King of Marroc, Fez and Tarudant.

Teſtament of the Xeriffe Mahomet.

Vizir a dignity at Marroc.

Kings of the Moores elective.

called the which is not ſtrang among thoſe nations, whereas their Kings being out of war remaine whole monthes ſhut with their women, and no man ſees them, but ſuch as are called. During this fiction, the Vizir Ali, who loued the King and the Eſtate, came daylie to the pallace, morning and euening, inquiring of his health, yet could not bee admitted into his Chamber. Mariane talked often with him, and made him beleeue that the Kings ſickneſſe was very dangerous: who obſeruing her words and countenance, perſwaded himſelfe that he was dead, and that ſhe ſought to conceale it, ſo as one morning he intreated her to tell him the truth, which ſhould not be hidden from him; for if he were dead it were needfull to prouide an other King ſpeedily for the Eſtate, and that ſuch affaires could not admit delaies. Then Mariane ſeeing how this buſineſſe wrought, brought him into the Chamber, where he ſaw the Kings bed couered, and he ſtretched out and couered with a cloath, as if hee had beene dead, and ſo hee held him: Then ſhe ſaid vnto him, conſider Ali I pray you, ſeeing the King my Lord is dead, to worke ſo as his ſonne may be choſen King, as you know he much deſired. It is very fit anſwered Ali, that you women ſhould meddle with ſuch matters, what reaſon were it to chooſe a young man for King? It muſt not be, the Xeriffe Mahomet hath wiſely ordained, that the brethren ſhould ſucceed one an other, knowing that Kingdomes muſt be gouerned by men that are ripe of yeeres and Iudgement, and being ready to goe out of the Chamber to aſſemble the counſell, hee was amazed when he ſaw the King vp, who called him, and ſaid vnto him, that he thanked him much, for the good office he intented to his ſonne. Ali was ſo daunted, as not able to anſwere, nor to excuſe himſelfe with any reaſon, hee fled home to his lodging, where hauing taken the habit of a woman, he commanded a ſeruant of his to bring him two horſes to a certaine place where he would attend them, and ſodainely departed, with an intent to goe out of the realme. Being in that place, ſet at the foote of an oliue tree, attending his ſeruant, there paſt by two young Knights, which came from hunting, who ſeeing that Ali hid his face, thinking it had beene ſome leud woman, they came neere to ſee, and made him to vncouer himſelfe; knowing him, they doubted ſome miſchiefe, ſo as they carried him backe vnto the King, who cauſed his head to be preſently cut off. And thus was Mariane reuenged for the death of her children.

This matter being knowne, the Kings brethren and all they of the bloud diſperced themſelues, yea after that hee had cauſed Muley Mahomet Aben Abdelcader his Nephew, ſonne to his elder brother deceaſed, to be ſlaine at Meſquinez, whom he had married with Lela Sophia his ſiſters daughter, onely for iealouſie, for that hee was a wiſe and a valiant Knight, and much beloued of his ſubiects. His brethren and other kinſmen being gone out of the country, he did not care much to perſecute them. This Abdalla Xeriffe was the mightieſt King of Affrike, the moſt peaceable, and the moſt happy, if he had abſtayned for the bloud of his owne houſe. His dominions extended from Benais in the Negros country, whether the Prouince of Sus doth bound, which they call Remoto towards the South, vnto the North ſea, and from the Weſterne ſea, vnto the limits of Tremeſſen towards the Eaſt, in the which are comprehended foureteene great Prouinces. Hee did commonly entertaine three ſcore thouſand horſe, well paied, the which were thus diuided 15000. in the realme of Sus 25000. at Marroc, and 20000. at Fez: and out of theſe hee drew fiue thouſand horſe, which were his battaillon or Cornet: And moreouer hee had two thouſand Harguebuziers on foote, Chriſtians renegados, and fiue hundred on horſe-backe; with a thouſand Harguebuziers of Sus for the gard of the towne of new Fez, which is the Kings pallace, and as bigge as a good towne. Hee gaue pay to all theſe ſouldiers as well in peace as warre, beeing paied euery foure monthes: when he had any enterpriſe, if need were, he aſſembled all his trained bands, and moreouer did entertaine what Arabians and Africans he pleaſed, lyuing in his countries, vnder a certaine vaſſellage, and paied them for the time they ſerued. He reigned ſeuenteene yeeres, and ordained Mahomet his ſonne to be heire to thoſe their realmes, and to all his treaſure, who beganne to perſecute his vncles, hauing three yet lyuing: that is, Abdelmumen, Abdelmelech, whom the Spaniards call Muley Moluc, and a baſtard called Hamet.

Dominions of Abdalla King of Fez and Marroc.

Abdelmumen

A Abdelmumen was ſlaine at Tremeſſen, by a murtherer who ſhot at him being at his praiers in a Moſquee; Hamet liued among the Alarabes, but Muley Moluc had firſt retired to Alger, from whence hee did for a time ſollicit the King of Spaine, by the meanes of D.
Rodrigo Alonſo Pimentel, viceroy of Valencia, to aſſiſt him to anoy Abdalla his brother, who ſought to depriue him of his right, but ſeeing it was in vaine, he paſt to Conſtantinople, where hauing complained of the iniuſtice was done him by his brother, hee continued in Selims ſeruice, ſeeking all occaſions to giue a teſtimony of his valour, and to make him willing to aide him to recouer the realmes of Fez, Marroc, and Tarudant, which did belong vnto him, and were vſurped by Mahomet the ſonne of Abdalla, B his Nephew. He had beene in the warres which the Turkes had againſt the Venetians and the confederats, and at the recouery of Tunes, and the fort Goulette, where hee had carried himſelfe ſo valiantly, as by the report of Sinan Baſha, the Sultan Selim held him worthy to be aſſiſted and fauoured, ſending him backe into Afrike, with letters of fauor and commandement to his Lieutenants, to giue him what ayde they could; ſo as hauing by this meanes gatheted together a good army of Turkes and Moores his friends, and ſome Arabians which his brother Hamet brought vnto him, he came vpon his Nephew Mahomet, and gaue him three defeats, the laſt whereof was admirable; for Mahomet had three ſcore thouſand horſe, and tenne thouſand foote, and 360. peeces of ordinance, yet he diſpoſſeſt him quite, and chaſed him out of the realmes of Fez and Marroc, and their dependances. It is this Mahomet, which did incite D. Sebaſtian King of Portugal to paſſe C into Affrike, whoſe misfortunes we muſt now relate.

Mahomet expelled by Moluc.

D. Sebaſtian the ſixteenth King of Portugal, alone of that name.

DOn Sebaſtian King of Portugal had beene bred vp ſince the death of King Iohn the third (being but three yeeres old) vnder the gouernment of Queene Catherine his D grandmother, and of his vncle D. Henry the Cardinal, who were his tutors, and Gouernors of the realme, who bred him vp in delights and ſuperfluous pompe, in ſteed of that commendable ſimplicity of his predeceſſors: wherefore being twenty yeeres old, putt vp with thoſe vanities, being ſtrong of body, of a couragious minde, full of ouerwening, (a natural vice in Portugals) and not content with his owne Dominions, he reſolued (as it were by force) to alter the quiet of his realme, and to make triall of his valour, to his owne ruine, and of the crowne of Portugal: for not meaſuring his owne forces, hee would needs (without any conſtraint, and contrary to the aduice of Princes, which were allied vnto him, and his moſt faithful friends) meddle in the warres and quarrels of the Xeriffes of Afrike: the chiefe blame whereof was imputed to the Ieſuits, to whom Queene Catherine had giuen him in charge to frame his affections and iudgement.
E Theſe fathers who were in great credit, and well prouided for in Portugal, beeing tired with their long peregrinations to the Eaſt Indies, where they are bound to procure the ſoules health of the Barbarians, with whom the Portugals doe trade; deſired much that there might bee ſome occaſion offred to ſet footing into Afrike, which was neere, by ſome enterpriſe of warre: entertayning this young King in this humor, who to bee ready when time ſhould require, made certaine legions or trained bands on foote, in Lisbone and other townes, cauſing them to bee inrowled, and armed with pikes, and harguebuzes, and ſome of them to bee drawne once a weeke out of Lisbone to bee trained.

Portugal. 5

D. Sebaſtian firſt of that name King of Portugal.

D. Sebaſtian bred vp by the Ieſuits.

F In the yeere 1574. he had an ytching deſire (as I haue ſaid) to ſee the skirmiſhes which were daily made betwixt the garriſons of Ceuta and Tanger, & the bordring Moores, he paſt the ſtraight with ſome companies of ſoldiers, ſaying that he went only to viſit thoſe places: Being arriued in thoſe countries hee diſcouered his owne weakeneſſe, hauing a deſire to do more then he ſpake, and being yong & without experience thought to effect more then hee did. Being returned to Lisbone, he did ſtill meditate vpon ſome warre,

Youth of D. Sebaſtian.

eſpecially in thoſe parts, and in this deſire hee did things nothing befitting a King; A practiſing amongſt the common people, to the end, ſaid he, to bee better accuſtomed to the toyles of warre. He thought that a happy occaſion was offred, hearing that Muley Moluc, or Abdelmelech was come with Turkes to aſſaile Muley Mahomet his Nephew, to whom he preſently ſent to make offer of his forces if he had need, but the Moore (who was no diſcreeter then hee) thanked him, ſaying that he was ſtrong enough to repulſe Muley Moluc, and to ruine him, whereof hee repented himſelfe afterwards; for hauing beene vanquiſhed and diſpoſſeſt, he was forced to come to intreaties. This Moore after his defeats, fled with ſuch as would follow him, hauing ſome iewels and other wealth, vnto certaine places called Montes Claros, which is, a ſauage country, but finding B Mahomet flies to King Philip for refuge. himſelfe neither ſafe there, nor in a place fit to negotiat, hee went to Pegnon de Veles, caſting himſelfe into King Philips armes, for hee was aſhamed to haue recourſe to him of Portugal, whoſe offers hee had refuſed. Yet hee was forced to come vnto him, for he found not King Philip diſpoſed to deale in that buſineſſe. King Sebaſtian who deſired nothing more then to goe to the warre in Afrike, granted him whatſoeuer hee could demaund, and did eaſily credit the promiſes and bragges of this Moore, who ſaied, that as ſoone as euer they ſhould ſhew themſelues in field on the other ſide of the ſtreight, the whole country would turne vnto him; for Abdelmelech, ſaied he, had no friends, and was in a manner vnknowne: the which was found falſe, for after the victory he had beene receiued and aknowledged with great ioy and contentment, by them of C Fez and Marroc, as their lawfull King, as well in fauour of the teſtamentary decree of the old Xeriffe Mahomet his father, as for that he was held amongſt the Xeriffes to bee moſt valiant, and much regarded for his mildneſſe and humanity, beeing alouer of Iuſtice, and temperate, and modeſt in his behauiour, vertues which grace a Prince, and which wanted in Mahomet, the effects whereof Moluc had made his ſubiects to taſt: for he pre-ſently ordred the affaires of the Realme to their content; and for that the Turkes which he had brought with him, committed many inſolencies (as men accuſtomed to all exceſſe, lying in the garriſons of Barbary, farre from their Sultan) hee freed himſelfe, and ſent them away well ſatisfied. So as being reſpected and beloued of euery man, they came and offred their ſeruices voluntarily vnto him; and ſent him rich preſents from all D parts of his dominions; yet ſome Chriſtian Princes were glad to haue his friendſhip, Muley Moluc a friend to Chriſtians. and among others King Philip, whom he did alſo honour, ſo as many Chriſtians began to frequent his Court and countries, to whom he ſhewed both fauor and bounty. One of his chiefeſt cares was to prouide for the ſucceſſion of the realme, wherefore he cauſed the Noblemen, townes and ſtates, to ſweare fealty and homage vnto Muley Hamet his baſe brother, according to their fathers teſtament, notwithſtanding that he had a ſonne:
the which was held by them to be a generous act, for the which there were great feaſts of ioy made at Fez, Marroc, Tarudant and other townes. Whileſt that Mahomet beg-Mahomet Xeriffe craues aide from Portugal. ged ſuccors of the King of Portugal by his Deputies; hee liued at Ceuta, a fort belonging vnto Portugal, beeing in Afrike; the Gouernor whereof beeing aduertiſed of his E Maſters diſpoſition, did him honour, attending an anſwere, the which he had ſoone, and according to his deſire.

But the King D. Sebaſtian beeing aduertiſed by ſome that were about him, that hee might finde himſelfe too weake for ſo great an enterpriſe, hee tooke counſell to ſol-licit King Philip his vncle to bee of the partie, and to the end they might negotiat ſuch an action with more efficacy, hee ſent Peter d' Alcaſſoua a fauorite of his, to craue an enterview at Guadalupe vpon the confines of the realmes of Caſtile and Portugal, who returned with a good anſwere; whereas theſe two Kings met to their great contents, namely of Don Philip; there was ſome treaty of a future marriage be-King Philip diſwads D. Sebaſtian from the voiage of Afrike. twixt Don Sebaſtian, and one of the daughters of Caſtile; but comming to confer of the F warre of Afrike, which was the chiefe ſubiect of their meeting, King Philip diſwaded him from it, as well for that he had a peceable treaty with Muley Moluc, as alſo for that he ſaw ſuch a war had need of a more experienced commander then D. Sebaſtian was, & better ſoldiers then the Portugals of thoſe times: for ſince the time of King Emanuel, that nation had not done any thing memorable in warre, at the leaſt in Europe, or the countries

confyning

confyning vpon Europe, yet hauing well defended their forts at the Eaſt Indies. The concluſion was that King Phillip aduiſed him not to meddle in the quarrels of thoſe Princes Moores, but whatſoeuer hee did not to goe in perſon to thoſe warres. Being importuned by D. Sebaſtian to contribute men and ſhipping to this enterpriſe, hee excuſed himſelfe vpon the great affaires he had in the Low countries, and the iealouſie he had continually of the French, but eſpecially of the Turke, who threatned Sicile and Italy, and had already taken Goulette and Tunes, being ignorant, what this new Sultan might practiſe againſt him; yet being intreated and coniured by D. Sebaſtian not to abandon him in his firſt enterpriſe, he would not leaue him diſcontented, but promiſed in caſe the Turke did not arme againſt him, to furniſh him with fifty Gallies and fiue thouſand ſouldiars, ſo as he for his part ſhould entertaine tenne thouſand, and aduiſing him, what warre ſoeuer he made in Afrike, not to abandon the ſea ſhore, and that he ſhould attempt the recouery of Alarache, and ſo proceed by degrees along the Ocean, and then they parted. King Philips aduiſe was very good, and the Portugals haue not yet any cauſe to complaine.

Aduice of king Philip to D. Sebaſtian.

After that he had heard his Nephew ſpeake, and diſcouered his heat and obſtinacy, he fell to diſcourſe of the inconueniences that might fall vpon him, and began to thinke of his affaires, as if the royall line of Portugall failed, and to ſeeke out what pretenſions he might haue, were they cleere or doubtfull, and from that time he reſolued, that if Don Sebaſtian ſhould chance to die in this warre, not to ſuffer any other to ſeize vpon the Realme. The young King of Portugal being returned to Lisbone, full of hope and ioy, he ſtill preſſed King Philip to grant him a free promiſe of his ſuccors, without that reſeruation, if the Turke ſhould ſend an army againſt him, the which he granted, and thereupon he thought it was but a leape to paſſe into Afrike with great troupes, which hee imagined to haue ready; but when they came to examine euery thing in particular, they neither found men, money, ſhipping, nor horſes of ſeruice, nor any thing that might ſerue to good vſe, ſo as to prouide all theſe things, which giue motion vnto armies, they were forced to ſpend all the yeere 1577. And without doubt if D. Sebaſtian had had his men and prouiſions ready, as it was concluded, King Philip would haue furniſhed the gallies and men which he had promiſed. D. Sebaſtian beganne then to taſt the difficulties which are found in making warre, eſpecially for Eſtates which haue enioyed a long peace, and whereas both Nobility and people, haue neglected armes (the which is an inexcuſable fault in them that gouerne common-weals, who ſhould know that it is one of the maine pillers of an Eſtate, eſpecially in this age full of iniuſtice.) Seeing then that Portugal at that time had neither captaines, ſouldiers, treaſure, victuals, armes, nor horſes, which are the eſſentiall parts to make a warre, into the which D. Sebaſtian would enter, he was forced to prouide all theſe things extraordinarily and in haſt, ſeeing that in time of peace they had not thought of it. Hee was therefore forced to write into Italy and Flanders, for ſome Regiments of old ſouldiars, the Prince of Orange (who was then in armes againſt the Prince of Parma Lieutenant to King Philip) ſent three thouſand Lanſquenets into Portugall, vnder the command of Martin of Burgongne, Lord of Tamberg. And it happened that the King of Spaine being perſwaded by Pope Gregory the thirteenth, to ſuccor the rebels of Ireland againſt the Queene of England, there was a leauy of Italians made in the territories of the Church, the action went in the Popes name, but the King bare the charge, ſixe hundred of theſe vnder the command of a Licentious Engliſh man called Thomas Stukeley (who not long before had gotten from the Pope the title of Marquis of Ireland) being ſhipped at Ciuita-uecha, came into the riuer of Lisbone when they were preparing for this warre of Afrike. The King being deſirous to ſee them, ſtaied them, and intreated them to goe with him to this war. He was forced to ſeeke money by meanes that were vnpleaſing to the whole realme. The king tooke the portions of Widowes & Orfans, he made forced borrowings of the Clergy, Nobility, townes and commonalties, he laied an impoſition vpon ſalt: he made the new Chriſtians (as they call them) to buy the exemption of the confiſcation of their goods in caſe they ſhould fall into the Inquiſition, and hee vſed other exactions, which made all men complaine.

D. Sebaſtian vnfurniſhed of all things for the warre.

He ſtaied marchants ſhips. He enioyned ſome of the Nobility, to mount themſelues like men at armes, and many gentlemen to march with the foote, beeing ſo aduiſed, to better his new leauied Portugal footmen; of the which hee made foure regiments; In theſe preparations he ſpent the time vntill Sommer, being in the yeere 1578. And when as he thought to take ſhipping, hoping that King Philip would haue ſent him the gallies and men which he had promiſed, he found himſelfe deceiued, for that the Caſtillan (hauing changed his minde) excuſed himſelfe vpon new accidents which had happened that yeere, which would not ſuffer him to doe then, as he might haue done the yeere before: wherefore he had no aide from thence, but ſome voluntary aduenturers, and one very expert captaine in matters of Affrike, called Francis of Aldana. There was no man of any iudgement and experience in worldly affaires, but ſaw that this preparation was weake, and vnfitting for ſuch an enterpriſe, but there was no counſell, no perſwaſion, no difficulties, nor any other conſideration, could ſtay or diuert him. Hauing intreated the Cardinall his vncle to gouerne the realme in his abſence, he excuſed himſelfe vpon his age; whereupon he made foure Gouernors, that is, George of Almeida Archbiſhop of Lisbon, Peter de Alcaſſoua ſuperintendant of the treaſure, Peter de Sada and Iohn Maſcaregnas. They that did accompany him into Afrike were Diego de Soſa, Generall of the fleet at ſea, Chriſtopher Tauora Maſter of his horſe and captaine of the volontaries of Portugal, Don George d' Alencaſtro Duke of Auero, Don Alphonſo of Portugal Earle of Vimioſo, Don Lewis Cotigno Earle of Rodondo, Don Alphonſo de Norogna Earle of Myra, Don Iames brother to the Duke of Bragança, and his Nephew the Duke of Barcellos, Vaſco de Gama, and many others of the Nobility, but moſt of them in ſteed of good armes, were appareled in ſatten, inricht with imbroyderies, as if they had gone to ſome feaſt or marriage; yea there were ſome which had lined their tents and pauilions with ſatten.

Gouernors made by D. Sebaſtian going into Affrike.

Superfluity of the Portogalls going to the warre.

6

In this equipage D. Sebaſtian parted from Lisbon, being about foure and twenty yeeres old, the day after Saint Iohn Baptiſt, being the fiue and twentith of Iune, hauing aboue two thouſand ſailes in his fleet, but there were ſcarce 60. ſhips of warre, nor of defence, the beſt were fiue gallies and foure galleaſſes; he came to Cadiz, where he ſtaied fifteene daies, attending the Caſtillan ſouldiars of Andaluſia, which ſhould follow him by the ſuffrance of King Philip, which ſome ſaid were two thouſand; others, fifteene hundred or leſſe. He had a Legat from the Pope in his army, with ample power to giue pardons to all ſuch as went this voyage; then ſayling towards the coaſt of Afrike, they caſt anchor right againſt a place called the Almadraues, betwixt Tanger and Arzille. This place of Arzille was held by a Moore called Albacarin, who by the perſwaſion of Muley Mahomet, had conſigned it ſome few daies before vnto the Gouernor of Tanger. The King landed at Tanger, and there Muley Xecq, the ſonne of Mahomet, came vnto him, and ſoone after the father preſented himſelfe, and made a goodly oration of his rights and pretenſions, and of his friends and confederats which he had in the country, promiſing to giue the King three ports of the ſea, and other places in Barbary; and for a pawne hee gaue him his ſonne in hoſtage. King Sebaſtian being fed with theſe fictions, paſt with his army towards Arzille, hauing drawne all the old ſouldiars out of Tanger and Ceuta, and put new in their places, hauing firſt cauſed Muley Xecq to runne towards Mazagon, to ſee if any Moores would ioyne with him, but there was not any one that offred himſelfe, but to skirmiſh.

D. Sebaſtians Armie going into Affrike.

King Abdelmelech or Muley Moluc had beene aduertiſed of this preparation from Cadiz and Caſtile, and alſo from Portugal, and was much greeued at the enterpriſe of this young Prince, not that he feared him, or his forces, but for that he ſaw him abuſed, and alſo in regard he bare ſome affection vnto Chriſtians. What mooued him (ſaid hee) to be mine enemy, and to trouble himſelfe to take from me a realme which doth belong vnto me, yea by hereditary right, confirmed and allowed, to giue it to an other, and thereby not to benifit himſelfe nor any Eſtate in Chriſtendome? Doth hee thinke we are ſo vnprouided of ſouldiers, ſo faint hearted, ſo poore and needie, as wee cannot reſiſt him. I foreſee to my great griefe that the country of Barbary ſhalbe a tombe for the King of Portugal and his army, for God who is iuſt will neuer ſuffer that ſo

Muley Moluc ſpeech of D Sebaſtian.

vniuſt

A vniuſt an enterpriſe ſhall ſucceed. This Mooriſh King did often vſe theſe or ſuch like ſpeeches, as it hath beene ſince reported. But becauſe he would not bee found vnprouided, hee gathered together a mighty army, and went timely to field, vpon the Marches of the realme of Marroc, and hearing that the Portugal army had landed at Arzille with an intent to goe to Alarache, hee aduanced into the country of Temiſan tending to the Portugals fronter, and then beeing aduertiſed that the enemy hauing left the ſea ſhore, approched neere vnto Alcaçaquibir, and had already waded through a little riuer called Macazen, which falles into that of Luco, whereat hee wondred, know-
B ing well that there was ignorance and confuſion in the conduct of the King of Portugals army, and that it was not ſtrong ynough to leaue the ſea ſhore, and to march into the country. Error of D. Sebaſtian.

In truth this was one of Don Sebaſtians chiefe errors, who (meaning to goe to Alarache which ſtands vpon the ſea, and hauing his veſſels already at Arzille to carry him in an inſtant) would rather trie to lead his army by land, and enter farre into a country, which was vnknowne both to him and his, to finde a bridge which is vpon the riuer of Luco, the which is not to bee waded through in thoſe parts, and beeing betwixt his army and Alarache, ſtopped his paſſage. He marched vp the riuer of Luco, and made fiue lodgings, before he had any newes of Muley Moluc army, but ſuch as vncertaine: yet hee was ſo neere it, as he was ready to fall into it before he ſaw it, doing all things after his owne fantaſie, not ſuffring any one to contradict him: Hee had commanded
C Diego de Soſa, Generall of the fleet, to goe and attend him neere to Alarache, marſhalling his army to lead it by land, as wee haue ſaid; againſt the opinion of all men, yea of Muley Mahomet, who beganne now to deſpaire of his reſtitution. Some ſaid that hee had a great deſire to ſee his army in battaile, and to play the Sargent, and to trie if hee could order his ſquadrons, who like a young man and without experience, did not conſider that the conduct of armies is no childrens play, growing into choller when any one tould him, that a good captaine muſt haue a good foote, a good eye, and good eares, and that hee ſhould alwaies take the ſureſt way, how ſtrong ſoeuer his army were, ſo as no man durſt ſpeake vnto him. Muley Moluc came to Alcaſaquibir, and D hauing there ioyned with his brother Hamet, hee made haſt to get the bridge, which the Portugalls ſought after, and there paſt his army, ſo as the two armies were ſo neere in a plaine champian field called Tamita, as if night had not approched, they might haue ſeene one an other that day. Then were they to reſolue what to doe; for they muſt of neceſſity fight or retire in diſorder to recouer the ſea, the one or the other was very dangerous, but a battaile moſt; for there was no compariſon betwixt their forces. King Mahomet made the greateſt inſtance to haue Don Sebaſtian retire with his army, although it were with ſome loſſe. Moſt of the captaines were of that aduice, eſpecially of ſtrangers, but howſoeuer, either in a picht field, or in a retreat, hauing ſo many horſes to purſue them, this army muſt of force be defeated, where-
E fore let vs leaue this teſtimony to poſterity of Don Sebaſtian, that hee made choiſe of the moſt honourable manner of dying. Hauing therefore put his army in battaile by the breake of day, hee beganne to march couragiouſly againſt his enemies. Hee had about 14000. foote, two thouſand horſe and three thouſand pioners; and there was double the number of boyes, whores, victuallers, carters and other vnproffitable people. But to deſcribe the King of Portugals army more particularly, it did conſiſt of three thouſand Lanſquenets vnder the Siegneur of Tamberg their Collonel, ſixe hundred Italians, vnder Stukeley an Engliſh man, two thouſand Spaniards vnder D. Alphonſo d' Aguilar, ſixe hundred ſouldiars drawne out of Tanger, 2050. aduenturers on foote, the reſt were peaſants of Portugall. Amongſt which footmen there were
F eight thouſand pikes. Moreouer fiue hundred horſe of Tanger, and 1500. as well of the gentlemen of Portugal, as of the Kings attendants. The ſouldiers were ill paied, the campe ill furniſhed, and all things managed with ſmall order. In Muley Moluc army there were 42000 horſe, Moores and Alarabes, carrying lances and targets after their manner, and aboue 15000. harguebuziers, whereof two thouſand were on horſebacke, ſixe and twenty peeces of ordinance well mounted, and expert gunners. Reſolution of D. Sebaſtian.

Moreouer there was great ſtore of victuals, his men well paied, and all orderly gouer- A ned: All the diſcommodity thereof (the which in deed was very great) was the indiſpoſition of King Moluc, who hauing drunke milke to greedily, it quailed in his ſtomake, Moluc falls very ſicke. wherevpon he fell extremely ſicke and died in the heat of the battaile, the which did not hinder their victory. The armies approching neere together, Moluc made haſt to ioyne, for he feared that ſome of his troupes would disband, and goe vnto the enemy, and in truth there were ſome which left him, but not many, nor they whom he moſt diſtruſted. Hamet his baſe brother was Generall of the horſe, Doali and Mahomet Faba Captaines in Moluccs army. captaines of the Andaluſes and Chriſtians renigados: Ozarin of Ragouſa led the harguebuziers on horſebacke, and Muſa was captaine of his gard, with other good captaines B 7 Turkes. Theſe two armies ioyned on a Monday the fourth of Auguſt, it being paſt Battaile in Affrike and death of D. Sebaſtian. noone, the canon hauing plaied a little, the Portugal army was preſently enuironed by great numbers of the enemies horſe, but Molucs left point was furiouſly charged by fiue hundred men at armes, led by the Duke of Auero, the which was put to route; there were aboue ten thouſand Alarabes which fled aboue twenty leagues, to carry newes that the Chriſtians were victors, which diſorder made Muley Moluc to get to horſe-backe, ſo full of griefe, as he would haue gone thether to fight notwithſtanding his ſick-neſſe: But the ſouldiers of his gard ſtaied him, and put him into his Litter, where with-Death of Muley Moluc. in halfe an houre after hee died, but they concealed his death. The Duke of Auero fea- C ring to ingage himſelfe to much, being not followed, ment to retire, after that he had broken that part of Molucs army: but the Moores being aſhamed that ſo few horſe had thus ſhaken them, they ſent a great number of harguebuziers, both of foote and horſe-backe thether, who charged the Dukes troupe in flanke and behinde, and an other troupe of Arabian horſe, came vpon them in front, ſo as they chaſed theſe men at armes vpon their battalion of foote, and diſordred them very much: But they were preſently repulſt by the King, Don Sebaſtian, who was mounted vpon a ſtrong horſe, and in greene armor, being followed by the Duke of Auero, and a ſquadron of freſh horſe, who being charged by a great battailon of the Moores Caualary and ſhot, were ſoone put to route, in which retreat their happened the like confuſion. And then the whole body of Molucs army, with Hamet, fell vpon the diſordred troupes of King Don Se- D baſtien, with ſuch fury, as they were no more able to reſiſt them.

In this charge the Duke of Auero was ſlaine, with many gallant gentlemen, the whole army put to route and the ordinance abandoned. Yet King Sebaſtian charging Hamets troupes made a breach in them, and forced them to turne their backes, but returning, he ſaw all his battailons ouerthrowne, euen to that of Mahomet, which was the laſt and neereſt to the riuer, with an incredible ſlaughter of his men; ſo as Mahomet being for-Death of King Mahomet. ced to flie, thinking to paſſe the riuer of Mucazen, miſſing the foard, he was mired and drowned with his horſe; but to increaſe all theſe miſeries, D. Sebaſtian was charged by ſo great a number of Moores, as both he and all they that did accompany him, were ſlaine; it is certaine that many left him, flying towards Arzille; but they fell into the E like miſery, for being purſued by the victorious Moores, they were in a manner all cut in peeces. There died aboue 12000. Chriſtians, amongſt the which the chiefe, with the Defeat of the Portugal army, and death of D. Sebaſtian. King Don Sebaſtien, were the Duke of Auero, the Marquis of Aranda, the Biſhops of Coimbra and Porto, the Popes Legat Chriſtopher de Tauora, and his brother Aluaro Pe- res, Alphonſo of Portugal Earle of Vimioſo, Lewis Cotigro Earle of Rodondo, Vaſco de Gama Earle of Vidiguera, Alphonſo de Norogna Earle of Mira, Iohn Lobo Baron of Aluito, Aluaro de Melo ſonne to the Marquis of Ferrera, Roderigo de Melo eldeſt ſonne to the Earle of Tentugal, Iames brother to the Duke of Bragança, Iohn de Silueira eldeſt ſonne to the Earle of Sorteilla, the captaines of the Regiments of ſtrangers, with others, ſo as by this defeat many Noble families of Portugall were extinct. There were ma- F ny more taken priſoners of all ſorts: The Duke of Barcellos, and the King of Spaines Ambaſſador were deliuered without ranſome. Don Anthony (who was baſe ſonne to the Infant Don Lewis) Prior of Crato, of the order of Saint Iohn, being taken priſoner, eſcaped miraculouſly: ſome of the reſt redeemed themſelues, but the greateſt part remained ſlaues in diuers places.

Hamet

A Hamet, a Conqueror, hauing gathered his people together, and cauſed a retreat to bee ſounded, did that night publiſh the death of his brother Abdelmelech or Moluc, whereupon he was receyued and acknowledged for King, but to the great griefe of moſt of them who knew him to be a man of little valour, and not like vnto the deceaſed.

The day following, the new King ſent ſome troupes to view the dead, where they found about 1500. of their men ſlaine, whome they buried in the ſame place: they alſo found the bodie of Mahomet, who had beene the cauſe of all theſe miſeries. The body of King Sebaſtian was found naked among a troupe of his men that were ſlaine, and knowne by two of his ſeruants, as they ſay, to whom they had promiſed libertie, if they could find
B him. D. Sebaſtians bodie was left (as it were in depoſito) at Alcaçar: but a while after the Xeriffe Hamet (renuing the allyance and peace which his brother had made with the king of Spaine) offered him this bodie, and to ſet his Ambaſſador, and the young Duke of Barcellos freely at liberty.

The King would not accept of D. Sebaſtians bodie, but intreated him to deliuer it vnto the Portugals, the which he did, and ſent it to the Gouernor of Ceuta, to whom Andrew Gaſpar of Corſica did conſigne it in Hamets name, and tooke an act thereof: Hamet cauſed the bodie of Muley Mahomet to be flead, and the skinne to be ſtuft with ſtraw, the which was carried in great ignominy throughout the Realme: and the bodie of Abdelmelech, was carried twenty leagues from Alcaçar, and buried with his anceſtors. Thus there dyed three Kings in that battell. The King of Spaine accepted of the deſiuerie of the duke
C of Barcelos, and of Iohn de Sylua his Ambaſſador, in requitall whereof he ſent a preſent to the Xeriffe in Iewelst o the value of an hundred thouſand crownes. Don Sebaſtian had raigned one and twenty yeares, one moneth, and ſixe and twenty dayes, and dyed beeing foure and twenty yeares old, ſixe moneths, and fifteene dayes.

D Sebaſtians body ſent to the Portugals.

The loſſe of this battell beeing knowne in Portugall, cauſed a generall ſorrow and mourning, but they were doubtfull for a time, who were ſlaine or priſoners, wherof they were certified by degrees, and this deſolation crept into priuate families, ſo as there were ſcarce any among the Nobilitie but felt of it. The Kings death was held doubtfull many yeares, ſome denying, that there was any certaine teſtimonie that his bodie had
D beene found among them that were ſlaine in the battell: ſaying, that the liberall offer which Hamet Xeriffe made to king Philip, who demanded it not, was a great preſumption, that he himſelfe doubted, that the bodie which he left at Alcaçar Quibir, was not Don Sebaſtians, yea, that he did not beleeue it: others haue preſumed to ſay, that they had ſeen him after the battell in Portugall in a diſguized habit, ſhrowding himſelfe for ſhame in religious houſes, and that beeing oppreſt with griefe for the death of ſo many of the Nobility, he had beene ſo ſorrowfull, as holding himſelfe vnworthie to raigne, he had returned into Affricke in a religious habit, and wandred among the Barbarians, who giue free paſſage to them that do penance for their ſinnes, of what religion ſoeuer they be: yet two and twenty yeares after this battell, there hath beene a man found ſo reſembling D.
E Sebaſtian, ſhewing markes vppon his bodie, naturall or accidentall, ſo like vnto thoſe wherewith this Prince had beene marked, and ſpeaking ſo confidently of things ſaid or done by this king from his infancie, to the time of this lamentable day, and of ſecret conferences and ſpeeches which he had had, as well with Ambaſſadours of forraine Princes, which had beene ſent vnto him, as other perſons yet liuing, which haue certified it; and diſcourſing ſo particularly and truly of the eſtate of Portugall at that time, as it hath made many doubtfull whether he were Sebaſtian or not, whom they held to haue beene ſlaine at the battell, in the plaine of Tamita in Affrick. You ſhall hereafter here it at large, and the man himſelfe ſpeake. But howſoeuer, Don Sebaſtians funerall was made at Liſbone with great ceremonie, at the end whereof they cryed Reall, Reall, for the King Don
F Henry. King Philip did alſo make a funerall pompe at Madrid, where it was obſerued, that the Duke of Alba ſayd, that the King ſhould go and do thoſe obſequies in our Ladies Church at Belem in Portugall, and not at Madrid, which made ſome thinke, that the king had diſouered his conceptions, and had reſolued touching the ſucceſſion of the Realme.

Death of Don Sebaſtian vnbeleeued of many.

Don

A

Don Henry the ſeuenteenth King of Portugall.

8 Don Henry 17. king of Portugall.

BY the deceaſe of Don Sebaſtian, the Crowne of Portugal ſeemed to belong to Don Henry his great Vncle, Cardinall of the title of foure Saints crowned: but King Philips Councell, (I know not by what law) found that the right which he pretended, was ſtronger then the Cardinals, yet he modeſtly gaue way to his preferment, and the rather for that ſeeing him old and broken, he thought he might with more content of the Portugals take his ranke afterwards without any difficulty or diſpute. Yet there were many other pretendants to this ſucceſſion, which might cauſe ſome troubles in the State, and therefore the firſt requeſt which the cittie of Lisbone made vnto Don Henry in the name of the whole country, was, that for the quiet and tranquilitie of the State, hee would bee pleaſed in his life time to name him, or her, who (in his opinion) ought to raigne after him: wherein they layed a burthen vppon him, which did exceed the force and capacitie of his iudgement. For this Prince in the whole courſe of his life had ſhewed a ſimplicitie of manners, and a weakneſſe in his diſcourſe, which had made him to be alwaies held fitter for the Church, then to gouerne a temporall State. Yet ſeeing himſelfe King, hee ſought to be feared, and gaue way to his ambition and choler, which procured him no more loue then before, but made him to be both hated and curſed. He diſappoynted and diſmiſt all thoſe, that had had any fauour or office in Court during his nephewes raigne, for that they had not reſpected and honoured him, as he thought, according to his ranke and neerenes of bloud, cauſing ſome to be arraigned by courſe of Iuſtice, for their charges, for words proudly ſpoken, and ſuch like things which had paſt in the life of the deceaſed King, who were degraded of honours, depriued of the rewards which they had deſerued, and ſent from Court: He intreated Pedro d'Alcaſſaua more roughly then any other, who had beene of the ſecret Councell and high Treaſurer. He appointed other Officers in their places that were diſmiſt, who were no honeſter then the former, but much more ignorant in affaires, who framing themſelues to their maſters humors, thought to ſhew themſelues ſufficient to bring in examinations and reuiſions of accompts, againſt ſuch as had made parties, and contracted with the King, cauſing moſt of thoſe contracts to be broken, and it may be ſuch as were leaſt vniuſt.

B C D

To know the diſpoſition of this new King, and to make his miniſters conformable to King Philips deſire, which was to vnite the Crowne of Portugues to that of Caſtile, in what ſort ſoeuer, he ſent Chriſtopher de Mora, a Portugall, bredde vp in Caſtile, to reſide there, with the title of an agent onely, who ſpared no paines, coſt, nor preſents to pourchaſe friends to his Maſter. But the better to aſſure his pourſute, he was aduiſed in Caſtile to ſend ſome man of qualitie vnto the king Don Henry, with the title of Ambaſſadour: the which the King of Spaine had till then forborne to do, for that he thought he ſhold thereby preiudice the right which he pretended from the death of Don Sebaſtian, if hee did by this act acknowledge him for King of Portugall, in ſending an Ambaſſador vnto him. There was choſen to this charge, Don Pedro Giron, Duke of Oſuna, after the reſolution taken by the King Don Henry in an aſſembly of the Eſtates of the Realme, touching the nomination of his ſucceſſor, which was, That the King would not name any one at that preſent, but might do it in time, by the aduice of the Iudges, aſſigned by the Eſtates, and in the meane time to preuent all inconueniences that might happen, if the King ſhould dye ſuddenly, beeing very old, there ſhould be a rowle made of fifteen of the chief and worthieſt men among the Nobilitie, of the which the King ſhould chooſe fiue, who ſhould be after him Gouernors of the State, vntill the Iudges had determined who ſhold be the true ſucceſſor to the Crown, in caſe the king had not named one: and that the fiue thus choſen by him, ſhould be kept ſecret during his life: and to examine the rights of euery one of the Pretendants, and to iudge with the King (being aliue, and ſitting in his Eſtates) or after his deceaſe, in caſe there were no ſentence giuen, there ſhould bee another rowle made of foure and twenty Doctors, and men of State, of the which the king ſhould

E

Proceeding for the ſucceſſion of Portugal.

F

A ſhould chooſe eleuen Iudges, which ſhould make a royall Chamber to that end; and it was decreed, that all the ſayd Pretendants ſhould bee cited and adiourned to appeare, or their Ambaſſadors, or Agents, before the ſayd Chamber, there to produce their rights and pretenſions, and to be heard in all that they would ſay and alledge, to the end they might make report, and proceed to the nomination. The Pretendants were Don Philip King of Spaine, Don Anthony Prior of Crato, Donna Catherina of Portugall, mother to D. Theodoſia of Bragança, Rainucio Farneſe, ſon to her ſiſter D. Maria of Portugal, both beeing daughters to the Infant Don Edward, and Emanuel Philebert, Duke of Sauoy, borne of Donna Beatrix of Portugall: all theſe deriuing their rights from Don Emanuel,

Pretendants to the Crowne of Portugall.

B King of Portugall: moreouer, there was Catherine de Medicis the French Queen, the Pope but eſpecially the realme and ſtates of Portugall.

Don Philip was borne of D. Izabella, eldeſt daughter to Don Emanuel; the Duke of Sauoy was ſonne to D. Beatrix ſecond daughter to the ſayd King, Don Anthonie was iſſued from the Infant Don Lewis, who was alſo ſonne to king Emanuel, but Don Anthony was baſe, yet he maintained that he had a ſentence for his legitimation. The Ducheſſe of Bragança was daughter to the Infant D. Edward, who was alſo ſonne to King Emanuel, but Rainucio Farneſe was iſſued from Mary, the eldeſt daughter of the ſayd Don Edward. As for the Queene mother of France, ſhe fetched her pretenſions farther off, ſaying, that the Kings which had raigned in Portugall ſince Don Alphonſo the third, brother to Don Queene mothers title to Portugal.

C Sancho Capello, had beene vſurpers of that Realme, the race beeing baſe and proceeding from an vnlawfull coniunction: for that they ſay, Don Alphonſo being married in France with the Counteſſe of Bullen, by whom he had one ſonne named Robert, from whome the Pretendant was deſcended, he had left the ſayd Counteſſe to marrie another wife in her life time, which was Donna Beatrix of Caſtile, and that from this vnlawfull marriage, all the Kings were iſſued which had held the Realme vnto that day. The Pope pretended it to be a fee, ſaying, that the Realme of Portugall was a fee of the Church, and was ſo acknowledged by Don Alphonſo Henriques the firſt, who obtayned the title of a king, who in acknowledgement had bound it to pay a certaine quantitie of markes of gold for a yearely rent, and for not paying thoſe rights the Realme was deuolued vnto

Popes title to Portugal.

D the Church, to diſpoſe thereof. This right was corroborated after the death of the Cardinall then raigning, for that (ſaid they) it was the ſpoyles of a Cardinal. But the realme and the generall Eſtates, pretended to haue an aduantage aboue all, for that (ſayd they) women could pretend no right in Portugall to the ſucceſſion of the Crowne, neither for themſelues, nor their deſcendants: for they had neuer ſeene any women raign, although it had beene often in queſtion, euen with the Caſtillans, who had beene reiected, and if they ſhould haue any acceſſe, or their deſcendants, it muſt be after the males, before whome, women haue no precedence, in regard of their age, the which is not conſiderable in fees, much leſſe in Soueraigne Eſtates.

Moſt of theſe Pretendants beeing cited, they ſent their rights, titles, and Pretenſions,

E the which were receyued by the ſayd chamber without any difficultie, but in regard of Queene Catherine de Medicis, whoſe cauſe was odious, and her allegations iniurious to the king then raigning, and to his Predeceſſours; the Abbot of Saint Gelais her Agent found great difficultie to haue it admitted. Onely king Philip appeared not in this Chamber, diſclayming the Iudges that were choſen, yea all the Portugals in his cauſe, the which (he ſayd) was ſo iuſt and cleare, as it needed not any examination nor doubt, hauing had conſultations vppon that point in the beſt Vniuerſities of the world, as well for that which concernes right, and the lawes of Realmes, as for conſcience, and to ſatisfie the king Don Henry, (whom he did importune by his Ambaſſadors to name him, without any other forme obſerued by the Eſtates) he ſent him a coppie of the councels which

F many Lawyers and Diuines in Spaine had made him, that other reaſons beeing examined and weighed, hee might not make any difficultie to name him. Aboue all they had wonne father Lyon Henrique a Ieſuite, his Confeſſor, who hauing firſt made him incline to the Dutcheſſe of Bragança, laboured afterwards to perſwade him to name king Philip for his ſucceſſor. The Duke of Oſſuna and Chriſtopher de Mora his Ambaſſador doubting that this iudiciall proceeding would not preuaile, & that the familiaritie of the Caſtillans

had

had beene alwaies odious vnto the Portugals, who deteſted their gouernement, they had letters from the King their maſter, to the chiefe of the Nobilitie, to the Cittie of Lisbon, and to the principall townes of the Realme, ful of perſwaſiue reaſons and promiſes, concluding in the end, that if they did not receyue him willingly (his title beeing ſo well grounded) he would vſe force, and therefore they ſhould aduiſe not to draw themſelues, their families, and the whole Realme into a warre, and the miſeries which follow it. Theſe letters were deliuered to many with good words and preſents: but the cittie of Lisbone would not receiue them: and as Chriſtopher de Mora had left them with the Officers of the Cittie: they ſent them ſealed vp vnto their King, who was much trobled with this weightie buſines, and could not reſolue any thing that was pleaſing to king Philip, who threatened him, and began to let the Portugals know, that he prepared to armes: for not meaning to be taken vnprouided at Henries death, which could not be long, and that this delay ſhould not any way preiudice him in that he pretended to be King of Portugal, in deſpight of all thoſe that would contradict, he had drawne into Spaine of Germans, Italians and Spaniards of his old regiments of Italy, to the number of 18000. foot, whom he entertayned many moneths with great charge and hinderance to his ſubiects, in Andaluſia, and other places nere to Portugall, which they could not coniecture to be to any other end, but to inuade that realme, where they ſayd openly, that armes and force were his beſt title: for he had no right vnto it. He among all the pretendants which did moſt trouble him, and the King Don Henry alſo, was Don Antonio, Prior of Crato, who was very well beloued of the people, and of many of the Nobilitie. The King was ſo incenſed againſt him, as he gaue commandement he ſhould not be heard, and taking vppon him to re-examine his cauſe of Legitimation, he ſought to diſſolue the ſentence which was giuen by Emanuell d'Almada, Biſhop of Angra, appoynted Iudge by the Pope: whereof Pope Gregorie the 13. beeing aduertiſed, he retayned the knowledge of the cauſe to himſelfe: yet Don Henry either mooued by his owne paſſion, or preſt by the Caſtillans, declared this ſentence to be voyd by his owne authoritie, without forme of law, or ſolemnitie of iuſtice: but Coneſtagio in the Hiſtorie of Portugall, writes, that King Henry had obtayned a Breefe ſecretly from the Pope, by the which he gaue him authoritie to iudge the cauſe of legitimation abſolutely, without any forme of Proceſſe, and that of foure witneſſes, two confeſſed that they had beene ſuborned by Don Antonio, and that the other two were ſuſpected, as his neere allies, and diſagreeing betwixt themſelues, and that Lewis his father tearmed him Baſtard in his laſt will, whereuppon hee declared Don Antonio illegitimate, impoſing him perpetual ſilence touching the pretended marriage and legitimation, ſending a Sergeant to Crato, to ſeaze vpon the Prior, but hee found him not. This he writes. But were it true or falſe, the King leauing the qualitie of a Iudge, commanded Don Antonio of his royall authoritie, not to come within thirtie leagues of the Court. Then his indignation increaſing, he baniſhed him the Realme, depriued him of all penſions, priuiledges and fauours which he had receyued of precedent kings, ſeeking by all meanes to haue him apprehended, and to put him into ſome ſtreight priſon: yet Don Antonio went not out of the Realme, but retired to ſome of his friends, or to ſome Monaſteries vppon the fronter, neither did he forbeare to come and ſollicite the Iudges, with the which the king was dayly incenſed. Being preſt by the importunities of king Philips Ambaſſadors, terrified by his preparation to armes, and perſwaded by his Confeſſor father Lyon Henrique, he did adhere wholy vnto him: and there was then no difficultie, but to find meanes to name him, and to get the conſent of the Eſtates, and therefore he propounded a kind of accord betwixt the Realme and king Philip, the which ſhold be treated by his means in an aſſembly of the Eſtates, the which he called to that end.

Lisbon refuſeth the King of Spains letters.

Sentence of D. Antonio's legitimation diſanulled.

But the king of Caſtile would not put his right to Compromiſe, and deteſted this Aſſembly of the Eſtates, aduertiſing king Henry, that he ſhould not treate of this buſineſſe with them, vnited in one bodie, but particularly with the chiefe of the Clergie, the Nobilitie and the townes. In the meane time the king D. Henry found himſelfe ill, ſo as being taken with great faintings, which held him long, the Councel, which was about him, and the Deputies aſſembled in the towne of Almerin, (whither they were retired by reaſon

K Henry falles ſicke.

A reaſon of the plague, which was very violent in Lisbon, and in a manner in all the other townes of the Realme) thinking that he would neuer recouer it, they preſumed to open the boxe, wherein was the lyſt of ſuch as he had choſen to be Gouernors of the Realme, and to proceede to the nomination of a Succeſſor, in caſe he had not done it, where they found, that of the fifteene that were contayned in the rowle, he had choſen George d'Almada Arch-biſhop of Lisbon, Francis de Sada, Lord Chamberlain, Iohn Telle, Iohn Maſcaregnas, and Diego Lope de Soſa, Preſident in the Councell of Iuſtice at Lisbon. The king was ſomewhat recouered, but knowing that he drew neere his end, employing the remainder of his daies in the care of his ſoule, and leauing this buſineſſe with others im-

11 Gouernors of Portugal.

B perfect, he dyed the laſt of Ianuary, 1580. hauing held the royall ſeate, (as the Caſtillans ſayd) ſeuenteene moneths and ſome dayes, beeing 68. years old, for he dyed in the ſame moneth, and on the ſame day that he was borne.

An. 1580. Death of King Henry.

This was the laſt king of Portugall, in whom ended the direct maſculine line. And as the firſt Lord of Portugall, (though with the title of an Earle) was called Henry, euen ſo was the laſt. He was of a thinne bodie, low of ſtature, and leane of his viſage, hee had an indifferent good wit, and was endowed (beſides the Latine toung) with ſome knowledge. He was alwaies held to be chaſt, and did neuer blemiſh that angelicall vertue, but with the deſire of marriage in his latter dayes. He was accompted ſparing, giuing rather then denying, for he refuſed ſeldome, but he gaue ſparingly: he was ambitious of all Iuriſdiction, as well eccleſiaſticall as ciuill, zealous in religion, but more ſeuere then was fit in Life of King Henry.

C the reformation of Clergi-men. He was Biſhop, Gouernor of the Realme, Inquiſitour Maior, Cardinall, Apoſtolicke Legate and King. But the greater he grew in dignitie, the more he diſcouered his incapacitie and weakneſſe, ſuffering himſelfe in greateſt affaires, to be ouer-ruled by his miniſters, not able to determine the cauſe of the ſucceſſion. Hee was very obſtinate in his opinions, neuer forgetting any wrongs, ſo as iuſtice was in him but an vniuſt execution of his paſſions, and therefore a religious man (whome hee had preſt to take vppon him a moſt ſtrict courſe of life) ſayd vnto him, that hee would obey, ſeeing there was no humane helpe againſt his Commandements, for he had the will of a man, the authoritie of a Pope, and the execution of a King: To conclude, hee had many

D vertues, and fewer vices, yet they were equall: for he had the vertue of a Church-man, and the defects of a Prince: during his life he was feared of many, and beloued of few, ſo as no man lamented his death, onely ſuch as were well affected, (deſiring the cauſe of ſucceſſion had beene firſt decided) had ſome feeling.

The fiue Gouernors being at Almerin, at the time of his death, they began to exerciſe their charge as Kings, and their firſt reſolution was to ſend Ambaſſadours to King Philip, (whome they ſaw in armes, and who had in a manner threatened the deceaſed king, and the Realme) to intreate him to proceede in this buſines, by the way of iuſtice, and to aſſure him, that it ſhould be done him, witneſſing moreouer the great good will and reſpect which the Gouernors, the chiefe of the Nobilitie, and the good townes of Portugall, bare vnto his highneſſe. The king before their audience, made ſome difficulty,

E whether he ſhould receiue them with the accuſtomed ceremonies to Princes Ambaſſadors, or as ſimple Deputies of his ſubiects: but he was counſelled to heare them as Ambaſſadors, to the end he might winne the loue of the Portugueſes, ſo as they were heard with their hats on, the king beeing vncouered at their comming in. The Ambaſſadours were the Biſhop of Coimbra, and Emanuel de Mela, and they came vnto the King being at Guadalupe, who made a long relation vnto them of his rights, and of the conſultations which he had made, as well to make them apparent to the world, as to ſatisfie his owne conſcience: that he knew well there were many among the Nobilitie and townes, ill affected vnto him, whom he had good meanes to draw vnto their duties: wherefore

F the Gouernours and the Eſtates ſhould be well aduiſed, and not be the cauſe of a warre in their countrey, giuing them a ſhort time to ſend him their laſt reſolution. The Deputies of the Eſtates of the Realme, who had beene called by the deceaſed king, were all at Saint Iren, a towne right againſt Almerin, the riuer of Tagus running betwixt them: who ſeeing the Gouernors manner of proceeding, they gaue them to vnderſtand, that their Councell and Aſſembly was ſuperiour vnto them: as repreſenting the Realme, and the general

generall Eſtates thereof, and therefore they ſent word vnto the Gouernours, that leauing Almerin, which was ſmall, and not able to lodge ſo great a multitude, they ſhould come to S. Iren, to the end they might all together determine of that was fitting for the preſeruation of the Realme, and put it in execution, and not make them, vpon euery occaſion, to paſſe the riuer, for their affaires required expedition, and no delayes, ſaying, that their moſt neceſſarie prouiſions, was to man the entries of the Realme with ſoldiers, the which they ſhould haue done before they ſent Ambaſſadors to King Philip. This did amaze the Gouernours, and cauſed bad intelligence betwixt them and the Eſtates, ſo as in diſdaine one of another, they did not any good for the publike. Among theſe Gouernours, there were there noted to fauour King Philip, the other two were for the Realme. Among the Deputies of the Eſtates, moſt of them were for Don Antonio, Prior of Crato, who hauing notice of the death of Don Henry, came preſently to Lisbone, ſpake vnto the Magiſtrates of the Cittie, ſhewed himſelfe vnto the people, ſaluted euery man, ſeeking to maintaine himſelfe in the loue of the multitude, with all the humilitie that might be: hee wrote vnto the Deputies of the Eſtates at S. Iren, and came himſelfe to preſent the Popes Bull vnto them, by the which the ſentence of the deceaſed King, giuen againſt him, was ſuſpended; he remembred his rights vnto the Crowne, and proteſted that he would ſubmit himſelf to iuſtice, according to the reſolution which was taken whileſt he liued in the open Eſtates, and conformable alſo to the ſayd Kings laſt will, made eight moneths before his death, by the which he declared him his ſucceſſor, that ſhould be found to haue moſt right by the Iudges: This courſe was deſired by all in generall, namely, by the other Pretendants, except King Philip, who preſſing the Ambaſſadours much to haue their laſt reſolution, whether they would receiue him for their King or not, and they deſiring him to giue them a longer time then he had prefixed, he told them plainely, that he would vſe his rights according to his meanes and dignitie. The which the Gouernours, the Duke of Bragança, and other Noblemen, that were at Almerin, ſeeing, they began to prouide for the frontiers, but ſo late, and ſo ſlowly, as all men wondred: the Deputies of the Eſtates inſiſting ſtil, that they ſhould all aſſemble in one place, to conſult ioyntly together how to repulſe the iniurious force, which the Caſtillans, their ancient enemies, would do vnto the Realme. And although it ſeemed reaſonable, that the Gouernors, who were but few in number, and had but a tranſitorie and limited authoritie for a time, ſhould paſſe vnto S. Iren, and make ſhew to allow of it, yet they did it not, they ſtill remayning in their ſeuerall lodgings, making very preiudiciall decrees apart, which in the end blemiſhed the honour of the Crowne of Portugall, one weakening anothers authoritie, whereas if they had beene well vnited, euery man would haue obeyed them, and they might haue oppoſed ſuch forces againſt King Philip, as happily he might haue yeelded to a iudiciall courſe.

13 Diſcord betwixt the Gouernors and the Eſtates.

D. Anthonies proceedings.

The Gouernours ſent Commiſſions into the Prouinces, to raiſe the Commons, and commanded the Lords which had lands and vaſſals to be mounted and armed readie to march, when they ſhould be called, but they did little regard it. The King of Spaine beeing aduertiſed of all their diſorders, was exceeding glad, for that they prepared a way for him to attaine vnto that which he pretended: and without any further delay hee cauſed thoſe troupes which he had ſo long entertayned, to march towards Badajos, where hee had appoynted the Rendez-vous for the armie: he commanded Don Fernando de Stlua, Earle of Cifuentes, Guidon Major of Caſtile, to draw foorth the Standard-royal, which is neuer diſplayed, but when as the King goes to the warre in perſon. Hee made choice of the Duke of Alba to be his Lieutenant to leade this armie, whom hee freed from priſon for a certaine precipitated marriage made by Don Frederick his ſonne, and by his counſell cauſing him to come to Merida, to conferre of the meanes to enter with an army into Portugall, yet ſome ſay, that he ſaw not the King, but marched directly to the armie. In the meane time he did write againe, and perſwaded the Gouernors, the Eſtates, the Nobilitie and Commons, to receiue him without reſiſtance, ſending them new conſultations, which he had drawne from the Diuines of the Vniuerſity of Alcala of Henares of Caſtile, to the which he ſayd, there was no reply, and that they were conformable in euery point to thoſe which he had before from other Vniuerſities. King Philip with his

14. Philips troupes marcheth towards Portugall.

Councell

A Councell and Lawyers did ſet downe (as a thing which they ought not to call in queſtion) that beeing the moſt ancient male liuing of the race of Don Emanuel of Portugall, he ſhould præcede all others in the ſucceſſion to the Crown: yea preſently after the death of King Sebaſtian: for the Cardinall (whome he had ſuffered to raigne) was not capable thereof, conſidering his qualitie, beeing a Clergi-man. This beeing preſuppoſed, he demanded of the Diuines: firſt, whether he were bound to ſubmit himſelfe to any Iudge or Arbitrator, to haue the Realme of Portugall adiudged vnto him. Secondly, if there were any other pretending that Crown, who might decide their controuerſies: and that there beeing no competent Iudge to do it, and the Portugals refuſing to receiue him before B the cauſe were decided, which might be a meanes to fruſtrate him, whether hee might not take poſſeſſion of his owne authoritie by armes, without any ſcruple. And laſt of all, if the Gouernors or Eſtates of Portugall alledge, that they are bound by oath, not to acknowledge any one for king, but he to whome the Realme ſhall be adiudged by iuſtice, if that may excuſe them.

Allegations made by King Philip touching his title to Portugall.

To the firſt point the Diuines of Caſtile anſwered, That Don Philip beeing a Soueraigne King, he was not bound to ſubmit himſelfe to any Iudge, but onely take counſell, and that he might thereuppon adiudge the Realme vnto himſelfe, and not charge his conſcience, grounding vppon the neerenes of bloud, which was apparent. And if there were no Iudge in this cauſe, they ſayd, that the Pope, who had the greateſt power, C might not take knowledge of it, for that it was meerely temporall, hauing not any circumſtance to bind it to the Spirituality. The Emperor in like manner was no competent Iudge: for the Kings of Caſtile are Soueraignes, Emperours in their countries and Eſtates. 15

Aduice of the Diuines of Alcala of Henares

The Eſtates of Portugall were inferiours and ſubiects, and therefore in no ſort Iudges: the deceaſed King Don Henry could not preiudice the right nor dignitie of king Philip, in appoynting eleuen Iudges to determine of the Succeſſion of that Crowne: beſides, hee beeing dead, the Commiſſion of thoſe Iudges was expired, and their authoritie extinct. As for the referring it to the compromiſe of Arbitrators, it was not vſed but in matters which were doubtfull: and whereas their titles and intereſts were obſcure. If D they would ſay, that in this cauſe King Philip ſhould not be regarded as a King, but as a priuate perſon, bound to plead againſt the reſt, pretending the ſame ſucceſſion by reaſon of bloud: it was a friuolous diſtinction, for that the dignitie of a King cannot bee ſeparated from the perſon that carryeth it, in any caſe whatſoeuer. If they did pretend, that the controuerſie muſt be ended, whereas the matter in queſtion lyeth: that this rule hath no place in matters of Kingdomes.

To the ſecond point they did apply ſome of the former anſwers, and to make it more plaine, they ſayd, that it was ſufficient for the King ro exhibite his titles and right to the Gouernours, or to the Eſtates, to iuſtifie his proceeding by armes, , the which he might lawfully vſe in caſe of refuſall, the which was a kind of contumacie and rebellion. And laſt E of all they ſayd, that an oath made by whomſoeuer, to preiudice another, doth not bind him that hath taken it, eſpecially where there is no Iudge, and he cannot pretend it for an excuſe againſt a Soueraigne, eſpecially when his title is apparent.

King Philip hauing reſolued to enter Portugall with an armie, more (ſayd he) to feare the Portuguezes, then to do them harme, beſides, the armie which he prepared at Badajos, he cauſed his vaſſals (after their example) in euery Prouince bordering vpon Portugal to be in a readines, commaunding the Lords which had their lands there, to ſhew themſelues in armes, but not to aduance, and that if any neare Townes, Noblemen or commons would acknowledge him for their King, they ſhould aſſure them of all good vſage: The Gouernours were much amazed, yet they made ſhew, as if they would defend F themſelues, ſending into France, to the Emperour, and to other Chriſtian Princes for ſuccours.

But they did aboue all imploy the Popes authority and prerogatiue, that he would be a meanes to make King Philip lay aſide armes, and ſubmit himſelfe to a quiet courſe of iuſtice: whereupon they obtayned, that there ſhould be a Legate ſent into Spaine to decide this controuerſie; which was Cardinall Alexander Riario, who was not pleaſing vnto the King, being held ſuſpect, neither would he that the Pope ſhould meddle in this buſines, much leſſe determine of it: Beſides, this Legate came late, the Caſtillan armie beeing alreadie entred farre into Portugall: and the Gouernors were in ſuch a confuſion, and did ſo diſagree among themſelues, as they ſuffered to haue a Croiſado preached againſt the Caſtillans, as if it had beene to go againſt Infidels: the Magiſtrates did the like in many townes, and they ſayd, that there were ſlaine Noblemen of Portugall, who by the meanes of priſoners which were yet in Affricke, ſince the ouerthrow of D. Sebaſtian, did ſollicite the Xeriffe Hamet to take vppon him the protection of the Realme of Portugall againſt the King of Caſtile: ſuch was the hatred of theſe two nations, and the proceedings of Don Philip ſo much deteſted, ſeeking to be Iudge in his owne cauſe, and to decide it by armes, to the preiudice of the other pretendants, and namely, of the generall Eſtates of the Realme.

Hatred of the Portuguizes to the Caſtillans.

The contrarieties which were obſerued in all that the Gouernors did, being fearefull, irreſolute, and yet very ambitious, ſeeking to retaine the royall authoritie longer then they might, and to ſell their fauours to their owne priuate benefits, did witneſſe the confuſion that was in their minds, and in their affaires, being ſollicited by the Ambaſſadors of Caſtile, they yeelded to declare D. Philip King, vppon certaine conditions, whereof they drew Articles, which were all ſigned by the Duke of Oſſuna, but the difficulty was to publiſh this decree with any collour.

Gouernors bring King Philip into Portugal.

On the other ſide they fortified themſelues daily both within and without the Realme. In the meane time they had not any money, and ſuffered the reuenues of the Crowne to be loſt by their bad intelligence, and withall the peoples loue, who might haue ſupplied their preſent neceſſities out of their ſtore, if they had ſeene any order or grauitie in them.

They reſolued to ſell the Iewels of the Crowne, but the Ambaſſadors of Caſtile oppoſed themſelues, ſaying, That they did belong vnto the King their maſter, who was the true and lawfull king of Portugall. They ſent Iohn Tello, one of the bodie of the cittie of Lisbone, vnder colour to aſſiſt Emanuel of Portugall his brother-in-law, who did fortifie Belen, and other places, at the mouth of the riuer of Tagus, beneath the cittie, but it was to be ridde of him: for he did not fauour the Caſtillan partie, no more then Emanuel his brother-in-law: and for that the Deputies of the Prouinces and townes which were at S. Iren, did croſſe them, they ſought to ſend them home as vnprofitable, ſaying, that after the Kings death, who had called them, their procurations were void, and that there was not any aſſembly of Eſtates: yet they were content that tenne of the ſaid Deputies ſhold remaine with them, to bee witneſſes of their actions, who ſhould come to Setuuall, a towne and port of the ſea, twenty miles from Lisbone, whether they meant to retire themſelues, by reaſon of the plague which was crept into Almerin. The Deputies on the other ſide maintayned, that their proclamations were ſtill in force, that the Eſtates were not ended, and that in the buſines, which was now in queſtion, their aſſembly was more requiſite then in any other occaſion, inuiting them againe to come vnto Saint Iren, where there was not any danger of the plague: the which they would not doe, but went to keepe their Councell at Setuual, farre from thoſe that did obſerue them, beeing accompanied by the Duke of Bragança, and the Ambaſſadours of Caſtile.

Gouernors ſeek to diſſolue the Eſtates.

Setuual was one of thoſe places whereof the King of Spaine deſired to ſeize, for that in holding this port, he might ſhut vp the riuer of Lisbon: and therefore hee had commanded Don Aluaro de Baſſan, Marquis of Santa Cruz his Admirall, to go thither with his Fleet, conſiſting of aboue ſixtie gallies, and to make ſome enterpriſe, whileſt that the Duke of Alba ſhould enter by land, from Badajos to Eluas, and other places of that country, as he did ſoone after, the king hauing firſt ſent Pedro Velaſco, Iudge of Badajos, to ſee, if with perſwaſiue words, promiſes, and preſents, he might draw the neighbour townes and places to yeeld themſelues voluntarily, and without force: where hee behaued himſelfe ſo diſcreetly, as he cauſed D. Philip to be acknowledged for King of Portugall at Eluas, Oliuença, Serpa, Mora, Campo Maior la noua, Aroughez, Portalegre, and others.

A others. The Duke of Alba coming to the army, found it much waſted with ſickneſs, being in all but 4500. Italians, 3500. Germans, and 3000. Spaniards of the old regiments of Italy, the which the King ſupplyed with 7000. Beſognes, or new ſoldiers, which he had leuied in Spaine, after which he took a view of his army, where he found about 18000. foot, and 6000. horſe, with 25. peeces of ordinance, and ſtore of victuals, and other warlike neceſſaries: for the carriage whereof he had aboue 6000. carts and wagons. The Duke of Alba was General both at ſea and land: in this expedition. Peter de Medicis was General of the Italians, being diuided into 3. regiments: of the one Proſper Colonna was Colonel, of the other Vincent Carraſa, and of the third Charles Spinelli. Icrome Earle of Lodron was Co-B lonel of the Germans, Sancho d'Auila was Marſhall generall at land, and Francis d'Alaua was Maſter of the ordinance. There was no Generals of the horſe, for all the companies were commanded by Noblemen that were of the Kings councell, but in executions Don Francis de Toledo the Dukes ſon ſhould lead them. With theſe forces the Duke of Alba paſt the riuer of Caya, and entred into Portugall the 27. of Iune, 1580. threatning ſuch as would not acknowledge K. Philip his Maſter for their king. The Deputies of the Eſtates, which remained at S. Iren, ſeing the king of Caſtile to enter the realme with an army, they accuſed the Gouernors to haue abandoned the publike cauſe, and declared D. Antonio defender of the Realme alone, but ſoone after the people proclaimed him king, & although he excuſed himſelf, being content (ſaid he) for that time with the title of defender, yet was
C he forced to accept it, ſeeing himſelfe enuironed with many ſwords in the midſt of a furious multitude, curſing the Gouernors, & crying, that he muſt lead them againſt the Caſtillans. If D. Antonio did then ſomwhat want a ſpurre to prick him forward to the royall dignity, he had afterwards more need of a bridle to curbe him, not to abandon himſelf as he did, in a time of ſo great confuſion, hauing an armed enemy in the hart of the country, who wan the Nobility daily, & wanted neither mony nor credit, which are the ſinewes of war. He might haue apprehended the want both of friends and mony, into the which he ſoon fell, hauing no ſupport, but the multitude, and ſome Monks, who ſhewed themſelues in his cauſe, not only paſſionat, but deſperate, or rather mad. A royaltie is held to bee ſo ſweet a morſell, and the deſire to be a king, is ſo vehement, as they do willingly breake the D bounds of law to deuoure it, when occaſion is offred, without any reſpect: yea there haue beene many who to raigne one day, haue not cared to be ſlaine the next: whereof there are ſome examples in the courſe of this Hiſtory: ſo as it is no wonder, if D. Antonio, who had ſuffred ſo many croſſes to come to it, hauing got it, ſought to keepe it. The firſt error he committed, was to haue cauſed Fernand de Pina, one of the Magiſtrates of Lisbone to be ſlaine, for that he ſpake againſt him, and then hee ſuffered Suares, who had committed the murther, to be hanged, whom he might haue ſaued by his authority. The opinion of the Portugals is and hath beene for many yeares, that the city of Lisbone is the force of a world, and that whoſoeuer holds it, may make head againſt the mightieſt Monarks of the earth. In truth it is one of the greateſt peopled cities in Europe, of great traffick and won-
E derfully rich: but a multitude of people is but a weake ſupport, and riches in the hands of priuate men in tumults, when as euery man ſees himſelfe in danger, and ſeekes to preſerue that which he hath, are not aſſured, nor to be accompted of, vnleſſe they will vſe violence and tyrannie, which make the moſt lawfull kings to be hated. Theſe conſiderations were not regarded by Don Antonio, hee muſt needes runne to Lisbone, thinking that if all the Realme were loſt, Lisbone alone would reſtore him.

Duke of Alba enters into Portugal.

16

D. Antonio declared defender of the realme of Portugal.

The bodie of the cittie, and the Magiſtrates, apprehending this haſtie comming, and the peoples proclamation at Saint Iren, who had cryed Real, Real for Don Antonio, intreated Iohn Tello, one of the Gouernors, with Don Emanuel of Portugal, as wee haue ſayd, to come and hinder Don Antonio's entrie, if he could, and to perſwade him not to
F take the name of King vppon him, but onely to tearme himſelfe defender of the State and Crowne of Portugall, againſt the vniuſt and tyrannous inuaſion of the King of Caſtile, that this title would be more fauourable for him, and make him to be followed and ſupported by the Nobilitie, and the great men of the realme: whereas that of King, ſeemed to bee vſurped out of ſeaſon, whileſt that hee with the reſt of the Pretendants demanded it by iuſtice.

Don Iohn Tello ſent Diego de Soſa, and Francis de Meneſes, who could not ſtay him, A but they returned together into the Cittie, where they durſt not ſtoppe his entrie, yet comming neere vnto Lisbone, there was a harguebuze ſhot of, which paſt neere his Don Antonio receiued into Lisbone. haire, but they could not learne whence it came. Beeing entred into the cittie, hee was receiued with acclamations, and all ſignes of ioy, as the time would permit: for the greateſt part of men of qualitie were retired to their houſes in the Countrey, by reaſon of the plague, which was very great, ſo as the common people onely made him this reception, crying, God ſaue the king. But hauing once ſeized vppon the pallace, the riuer, and the Arſenall, and the armes, he went to the towne-houſe, whither hee called all the Magiſtrates that were within the Cittie, and was there ſaluted for king, and the othe taken B and receiued with the accuſtomed formalities: which done, hee wrote vnto the Gouer-nours beeing at Setuuall, that they ſhould come vnto him. Don Iohn Tello (who had bin ſent by his companions to Lisbone, with procuration to ſee what was neceſſarie for the preſeruation of the Cittie, according to their deſſeigne, and had till then authoritie as a Gouernour) departed preſently, and carryed ſome others away with him, whome Don Antonio would haue employed: and by that meanes hee carried away fortie thouſand Crownes, which he had gathered together, vnder colour of reparations that were to be done at Belen, S. Iulian, Caſcais, Cabeça Secca, and other places lying vppon the riuer.

Beeing come to Setuual, the other Gouernours would no more admit him into their companie, ſaying, that he was confederate with Don Antonio, and that hee might haue C hindred his entrie into the Cittie if hee had would. The new King beeing diſcontented with them all, he wrote againe vnto them, to draw them to Lisbone, yet vſing very mild words, but they would not do any thing. Hee wrote alſo very kindly to the Duke of Bra-gança, who was with them, and in the end he ſent Don Francis of Portugal, Earle of Vimioſo, to perſwade them if hee might. In the meane time the Duke of Bragança taking leaue of the Gouernours, retired himſelfe to one of his houſes, ſeeing, that neither the one, nor the other, did any thing to purpoſe, and that they could not preuent it, but king Philip would raigne in Portugall, with whome ſoone after he made an accord. The Earle of Vimioſo ſeeing that he could not preuayle with the Gouernours, he incenſed the people againſt them, who chaſed them out of Setuuall ſo haſtily, as ſome were forced to D creepe out of windowes, and to ſlippe downe the walles in danger of their liues, yet the Arch-biſhop of Lisbone, and Don Iohn Tello ſtayed ſtill, beeing aſſured to be ſpared, the one for his Eccleſiaſticall dignitie, the other, for that he had not beene oppoſite to Don Antonio, but had done him good offices.

By this meanes the king ſeized vppon Setuuall, and went thither to haue the place fortified and furniſhed, and then he returned to Lisbone, to whom there yeelded the aboue-named places vppon the riuer, and other about the cittie. The Gouernours beeing thus Decree of the Gouernors againſt Don Antonio. ecclipſed, got, with the Ambaſſadours of Caſtil, to Caſtro Marin, where they made a ſtrange Decree againſt Don Antonio, Prior of Crato, condemning him as a Rebell, and declaring, that the will of the deceaſed King Don Henry was, that King Philip ſhold ſuc- E ceed him in the royall dignitie.

17 Duke of Alba's exploits in Portugal. Whilſt theſe things paſt, the Duke of Alba aduanced, and had taken Villa-vitioſa, the Duke of Bragança's chiefe houſe, a place of ſtrength, which might haue ſtayed him ſome daies, and then without any care to march in order with his army (for there was no enemy to feare) he came with ſmall iournyes to Setuuall, whither he had appointed the fleet ſhould come. This place was ſoone yeelded to the Dukes diſcretion, by men without iudgement and experience: yet he ſuffered all the ſoldiers to depart, retayning onely Die- Setuuall taken by the Caſtillans. go Botello the yonger, Captaine of the garriſon, who ſought to eſcape in a barke. There remained only one tower which garded the port, the which he battered, and then the captaine and ſouldiers yeelded it, to haue their liues and goods ſaued: after that they had bea- F ten one of the royall galleons in peeces, thinking it wold haue yeelded to the Caſtillans.
This place being taken, the Marquis of Santa Cruz came with his fleet (conſiſting of 60. gallies and many ſhips) and lodged moſt of them within the port, from whence they did ſo ſtop the mouth of the riuer of Lisbon, which is neere vnto it, as nothing could go in, nor come forth, but by the mercy of the gallies.

The

A The Duke of Alba continuing his courſe, meant to go to the Cittie of Lisbone, which is the head of the Realme, and therefore he deuiſed how he might paſſe the riuer with his armie, wherein there was ſome difficulty, by reaſon of the old forts which were at the mouth of the riuer, and thoſe which Don Emanuel of Portugall had newly built and erected.

Don Antonio beeing returned from Settuual, (whether hee had gone before the loſſe of it) was receyued by the Inhabitants with greater eſtate then before, cauſing him to enter vnder a Canopie, but hearing of the loſſe of this important place, their ioy was turned into ſeare and amazement, for they muſt now ſtudie how to make head againſt B the enemie, who they might aſſure themſelues, would be ſoone at their gates, if they did not ſpeedily prouide for it. The remedie conſiſted in a multitude of ſouldiers and mony to entertayne them, which they had not. There was a great multitude of common-people in Lisbone, but not trayned vp in armes, yet full of courage, when the enemy was farre off. He commanded them to be readie, and to furniſh themſelues with armes, giuing them Captaines of their owne ſort, for there were few men of qualitie that followed him, and the beſt families of the Cittie were abſent: but he made publike Proclamations to call them home in this neceſſitie, and ſome he inuited particularly: to ſuch as hee found willing, hee diſtributed in paper, honours, offices, commanderies, croſſes of the Orders of Knights which are in that countrey, without regard whether they, to whom he C gaue them, were men of merit, and capable according to the Orders: for many baſe men were ſeene to carrie the croſſes of Saint Iames, of Chriſt, of Alcantara, and others vpon their Cloakes: but he was indifferent, ſo as they gaue money. Such as did not obey his commaundements, and were ſlow in comming to the towne, hee vſed with all rigour, cauſing their houſes to bee opened, and their goods to bee ſold for the charges of the warre.

Eſtate of Lisbon vnder Antonio

If any rich man within the towne, fearing to be taxed, or forced to pay mony, did ſeeke to eſcape, he was ſtayed at the Port, ſtript, and put in priſon, ſo as the great fauor which Don Antonio had found at his firſt coming, grew now cold. His moſt conſtant friends were the begging Friars, many of which leauing their hoods, tooke armes, and garded D the ports, or followed him, and made a company in his armie, which he ſought to rayſe of this multitude, hauing no other: but they ſhewed themſelues mutinous and rebellious, when they came to lye in field, a practiſe which Shoo-makers, Taylors, Mercers, Vintners, and the other skumme of the people, had not beene inured vnto, by whome the eſtate and reputation of Don Antonio were ſupported, who could not bee ignorant of this abſurditie, but that glorious name of King couered all defects, and made all dangers light. Hee had ſent Diego de Meneſes to Caſcais, with ſome troupes to gard the paſſage, yet hee did not thinke the enemie would haue paſt there, but rather would haue gone aboue the towne towards Saint Iren, where the riuer growes narrow, for towards the ſea, it is very broade: but notwithſtanding any thing that Meneſes E could do, the Duke of Alba paſt vnder Caſcais, at a place called Marines Vechos, neither did he euer ſeeke to hinder his landing, nor offer him skirmiſh, ſo hauing forced Meneſes to retire, the Duke was maſter of the field, Don Antonio who expected ſome good ſeruice from Diego de Meneſes, had made him Generall of his forces by land, and his brother George de Meneſes of his armie at ſea: where he had good Gallions, and ſome other Veſſels, but growing iealous of George, he had taken his charge from him, and put him in priſon.

It may bee, hee would haue done as much to Diego, if hee preſented himſelfe before him after the Dukes paſſage, but hee put himſelfe into the Caſtle of Caſcais, which coſt him his life. Don Antonio, King of Portugall, muſt of neceſſitie iſſue foorth of Lisbone F againſt the Duke, and fight with him for his honour, but hee found himſelfe very vnfit for it: for neyther by faire meanes nor rigour could he gather together at that time aboue a thouſand foote, and ſome fiue hundred horſe, ill appoynted, and neuer trayned vp in the warres, neither could hee poſſibly ſtay them aboue that day, for night beeing come, moſt of them returned to the towne to ſupper, for that there was not any breade in his campe.

The Duke of Alba meaning to attempt Caſcais, found it abandoned by the inhabi- A tants, the caſtle which was ſomewhat ſtrong, refuſed to yeeld, whereupon it was battered and forced. The captaine who commanded there, called Antonio Pereira was hanged, and his ſouldiers ſtript. Diego de Meneſes was found in this place, whoſe head the Duke cauſed to be cut off, although there were ſome that did ſue for his life. The cittie of Lisbon beeing amazed at the taking of Caſcais, expecting to heare the like of the Caſtle of S. Iulian, which is, as it were, their key, they proteſted to D. Antonio, that they wold make their peace, if he did not put himſelfe in defence, who offred himſelfe to go, if they wold follow him. Then euery man was forced to take armes, and go to field, euen the Negro ſlaues, of the which there is a great multitude in that Citty, ſo as of one and other hee B found himſelfe to haue an armie of 8000. men, ill armed, ill apparelled, and ill led, (for there was ſcarce one that could execute the office of a Sergeant, or place a Sentinell) with which troupe he went and camped at Alcantara, within fiue miles of S. Iulian, which the Duke did beſeege and batter, which place was yeelded vnto him by Triſtan vaz, by the perſwaſion of a woman, who had obtayned a ſafe-conduct from the Duke to draw foorth a daughter of hers with her husband, which were within it. Cabeça Secca which was a fort built vppon the ſand in the midſt of the riuer right againſt S. Iulian, was alſo 18 abandoned to the Duke. So as there was not any thing that could hinder him from cam-
Army of Don Antonio put to rout. ping to the citty gates, but Belem, and Don Antonio's armie, which lay in ther ill-made trenches at Alcantara, and kept that bridge, the which was forced in it's lodging, and C put to route by the Duke, and chaſed euen into the towne with ſome ſlaughter. Don Antonio eſcaped by flight, being hurt, but he ſtayd not there: for paſſing through the town, and as it were, bidding them farewell, whom he could not defend, he tooke the way to
S. Iren, hauing cauſed his wound to be dreſt at Sacaben, where he might haue bene taken, if they had pourſued him: but he had the good hap to find meanes to retire to Coimbra, which of all the townes in the Realme had moſt reſiſted King Philip, and moſt diſputed their pretended rights.

It is the onely Vniuerſitie of Portugall, for all faculties, which had giuen aduice and counſell contrarie to the Doctors of Caſtile. The Duke of Alba tooke Belem, and ſoone after the Magiſtrates of Lisbone came to offer him the keys of the Cittie, demaunding D their liues and goods: the which was promiſed them, for King Philips meaning was to haue it preſerued, yet they could not preuent it, but the goodly ſuburbe which was vpon Lisbone yeelds to K. Philip. the way, was ſpoyled, and all the houſes and gardens which were about the cittie, whither the Inhabitants had retired themſelues by reaſon of the plague, and had carried moſt of their beſt moueables thither.

King Philips gallies which were entred into the riuer, tooke them of Portugall, and the eleuenth of September, that yeare 1580. the Duke of Alba tooke poſſeſſion in the king his maſters name, of the citty of Lisbone, and made him to be ſworne and acknowledged, the people crying Real, Real for King Philip. Whilſt that the Duke of Alba did theſe exploites in Portugall, King Philip was at Badajos, whereas he fell ſo dangerouſly ſick, E as the Phiſitions deſpayred of his life, and it was bruted in Portugall, that he was dead, ſo as many Noblemen did put on mourning weedes, and among others the King Don Antonio: He recouered, but his Queene Donna Anna, who fell ſicke at the ſame time of 19 a continuall feuer, dyed.
Death of Q. Anne of Caſtile

The newes of the taking of Libone beeing knowne at Court, and what had followed, many Courtiers ſought to diſgrace the Duke of Alba's actions, accuſing him of great negligence, to haue ſuffered Don Antonio to eſcape: they ſayd, that he was more fitte to deſtroy then to edifie, not knowing how to do his maſter ſeruice, not to get him the poſſeſſion of any thing, but defiled, ſpoyled, and made vnprofitable, and with ſuch exceſſiue charge, as it did exceed the value of the thing gotten: this was ſpoken, for that the ſub- F urbes and places about the cittie were ſpoyled. It is certaine, that this man for his ſower, diſdainfull, and haughtie grauitie, was hated of moſt of the Noblemen in Court. Then the King entred into Portugall, hauing firſt cauſed a generall Pardon to bee proclaymed for all thoſe that had oppoſed themſelues againſt his reception, except Don Antonio, thoſe that had fauoured him at Saint Iren, at Lisbone, at Setuual, and ſome others that were

A were named: the number of which hee did afterwards abate, cauſing his pardon to bee reiterated, yet ſtill reſeruing ſome, ſo as it was commonly ſayd, he knew not ſo well how to pardon, as to offend.

He did ſet a price of 80000. crownes for him that could either take or kill D. Antonio: yet notwithſtanding this temptation, there was not any one did attempt againſt his life, to reueale him, in eight monthes that he went wandring vp and downe the realme after all theſe miſeries, being purſued and ſought for in all places, with the greateſt care and dilligence that might bee. Hauing eſcaped at the route of Alcantara, hee retired to Coimbra, as we haue ſaied, where hee found ſo great loue and obedience, as hee gathe-
B red together about fiue thouſand foote, with the which hee approched neere vnto the city of Porto, a ſtrong place neere vnto the ſea, where although the Inhabitants had made ſhew to be Neuters, or rather inclyning to King Philips party, yet hee entred, and was well receiued. Being reſolued to trie againe the hazard of a battaile, hee made a kinde of campe vpon the riuer of Duero, neere vnto that city. There hee made ſome ſpoile of them that were of the contrary faction, and ſought to draw money from the Inhabitants. In caſe of any ſiniſter accident, hee was reſolued to flie into France, and therefore hee cauſed a barke to lie ready in the roade neere to Viana, a little place vpon the ſea, at the mouth of the riuer of Limas. Whileſt that heee buſied himſelfe about theſe things, the Duke of Alba ſent Sancho d' Auila againſt him, with about fiue thou-
C ſand foote, ſome horſe and foure canons. Vnto whom the city of Coimbra (which till then had beene faithfull to Don Antonio) carried their keies; they of Auero did the like, who had beene ſpoiled by Don Antonio after that they had yeelded vnto him. D. Sancho being come to the riuer of Duero which was not to be waded through, he paſt his men ouer in certaine boats, which he had brought with him in carts, and others that he ſurprized running along that riuer, notwithſtanding that D. Antonio had commanded that all the boats ſhould bee drawne to the other ſide. Don Sancho found not any reſiſtance, for as ſoone as the Portugals, which were camped on the other ſide of the riuer, ſaw him come towards them, they fled, euery man ſauing himſelfe as hee could, without any great ſlaughter: this was in effect a multitude without experience or courage. D.
D Antonio hauing no more meanes to ſubſiſt, left the towne of Porto, where after that he had let the Magiſtrate vnderſtand how hee had imployed himſelfe to the defence of the realme, and hauing excuſed himſelfe by the baſeneſſe of the Gouernors, and the ſmal aſſiſtance he had had from the Eſtates, he bad them farewell with teares, promiſing to ſee them before it were long, better accompanied, to free them from the tyranie of D. Philip: for hee did hope to finde meanes and ſuccors in France and England to reſtore him.

A price ſet vp. on D. Antonios head.

D Antonio rayſeth a new army.

Sancho de Auila ſent againſt D. Antonio.

From thence hee went directly to Viana, with an intent to take ſhipping, where one attended him, but the ſea went ſo high as it was impoſſible to put forth, ſtaying there vntill the ſtorme were paſt, behold there came a troupe of horſe which ſought for him,
E wherevpon he put himſelfe into a ſmall boat, deſyring rather to commit himſelfe to the mercy of the winde and waues, then vnto men. Being come vnto the ſhip with great paine and daunger, there was no meanes to force the winde, nor to put to ſea, ſo as hee was forced to come againe to Land in his boate, the ſea driuing him to ſhoare, whereas he was not ſeene by them that purſued him. They of the houſe of Portugal were with him, who had alwaies followed him, namely the Biſhop of Guarda, the Earle of Vimioſo, and ſome others; all which hauing diſguiſed themſelues like ſeruants and marriners, yet well furniſhed with rich iewels which were ſowed vp in their doublets (for D. Antonio had made good prouiſion during his ſhort reigne, as well at Lisbone, in the pallace royall, as in other places) they ſaued themſelues as well as they could. By this retreat
F the name of D. Antonio was ſuppreſt in Portugal; neither was there any place or man which made oppoſition againſt King Philip in all the maine land of Portugal.

20

D Antonio laies aſide armes.

Portugal wholy reduced vnder King Philip.

The townes and forts which are in Afrike beyond the Straight, yeelded obedience to King Philip, as Ceuta, Tanger and the reſt, where he was content to leaue the ſame Gouernor and garriſons that were before: And it was not long before he had newes that D. Lewis d' Alcaide Earle of Zoghia, viceroy at the Eaſt Indies, had acknowledged him for Places belonging to the Portugals in Afrike yeeld to King Philip.

for his King, notwithſtanding that he had beene much ſollicited by D. Antonio. Where- A fore there remained nothing for the King of Spaine, of all the dependances of the realm of Portugall, to ſubiect vnto him, but the Iſlands of the Tercera's, which are of great importance both for the Eaſterne and Weſterne nauigations, for the which he prouided after that he had made his entry into Lisbone.

Imputations laied vpon the Duke of Alua.

Before that the King parted from Badajos, the imputations and ſlanders laied vpon the Duke of Alba were ſuch, as euery one was perſwaded that he cauſed this goodly conqueſt to be trodden vnder foot by his ſouldiers, and that he gaue them ſuch liberty, as without feare of puniſhment, they did ſpoile, ſacke, kill and violate all diuine and humane lawes: wherefore the King ſent two counſellors to informe, the one was called B
Francis of Villafaguana, taken out of the royall audience of Caſtile, the other in that of Gallicia, whoſe name was Francis Tedaldi, who found much leſſe diſorder there then was ſpoken of: yet there were ſome inſolencies ſuppreſt. There was ſomething iuſtly imputed to the Duke of Alba, that by his ſower and proud manner of proceeding, hee had hindred D. Antonios reception into fauour with the King, yea after that hee had beene ſaluted for King at Lisbone, and when as the Duke went about to take the forts that were neere vnto the city, being certaine that King Philip ſhewed himſelfe willing, when as he vvas mooued by Diego de Carcamo. This Carcamo vvas a gentleman of Caſtile, who had ſerued D. Antonio when he was but Prior of Crato, in the life of King Henry: who ſeeing that King Philip had reſolued after his deceaſe to ſeize vpon the C Realme of Portugal by armes, and that the Gouernors made a ſhew that they would defend it, he had demaunded his leaue, and was retired into Caſtile, whereas the King ſuffred him to follow the Duke of Albas campe as a voluntary. Being in the army after the taking of Setuual, at the paſſage of the riuer of Tayo, he had leaue giuen him to goe to Lisbone, to ſee the new King D. Antonio, letting the Duke vnderſtand that it was the King their Maſters pleaſure. Being well entertained by D. Antonio, they beganne to diſcourſe of the preſent Eſtate of the affaires, and of what might happen, ſeriouſly and without vanity; they both concluding that D. Antonio had committed an error, in taking vpon him the title of a King, and that he ſhould haue beene ſatisfied with that of defender of the country, and that hauing in effect no ſupport, neither from the Go- D uernors, who were oppoſite vnto him, nor from the Eſtates, who were diſperſt, nor of the Nobility, nor of any other, but of the Inhabitants of Lisbone, and ſome other townes, whereas the multitude being ignorant, inconſtant, baſe and vilde, are alwaies mutinous and diſobedient in ſuch occaſions, he muſt needs thinke that he could not ſubſiſt, and that he muſt yeeld vnto the forces of Caſtile, being in danger to be ill intreated, and without any reſpect if he were taken: and eſcaping, hee muſt not hope that any Prince in Chriſtendome would vndertake a warre for his ſake. He might weil procure ſome weake ſuccors from France or England, vnder the name of voluntaries, without advow, for once, with the hazard of ſome incounter; but this were no great foundation, obtayning a victory either at ſea or land, to thinke your ſelfe thereby ſetled againſt a E mighty Prince, as King Philip is, who hath meanes, in an inſtant, to repaire all the loſſes that may happen vnto him. It is true (ſaid Carcamo) that this name and title of a King or Soueraigne Prince is a ſweet enchantment to bewitch men, and it ſeemes that honour doth binde your highneſſe, hauing once gotten it, to maintaine it with the hazard of your life, and rather to die fighting then to leaue it: This were good if we knew our aduentures, which are moſt incertaine; Man dies not when, nor how hee doth imagine, it depends of the wil of God. A King is as ſoone taken as ſlaine in a battaile. If your highneſſe ſhould be taken, conſider, what would be your condition, and ſeeke no farther into Gods ſecret Iudgements, who ſhewes plainly by the ſucceſſe of King Philips enterpriſes, that he hath ordained the realme of Portugal ſhould be vnited to that of Caſtile. F
That he ſhould haue recourſe whileſt he had time, to thoſe remedies which might warrant him from diſhonour and infamy, rather then to contend in vaine againſt heauen and nature: and caſt himſelfe into the Kings armes, whom hee holds for his enemy; aſſuring him that he ſhould find him milde, and forgetting all that was paſt, giuing him meanes to liue with honour, if not with the title of a King, yet in quality of a Prince, Diſcours betwixt D. Antonio and Carcamo.

Carcamos ſpeech to D. Antonio.

whom

A whom hee will loue and acknowledge as his kinſman. Diego de Carcamo did without any diſpute, make D. Antonio allow of theſe reaſons, who knowing them to be moſt true, reſolued to write an humble letter vnto King Philip, yet ſtill retayning ſome right vnto himſelfe.

He excuſed himſelfe for that hee had taken the name of King, and receiued royall honours at Saint Iren, Setuual, and at Lisbone, the queſtion of ſucceſſion beeing not decided, ſaying, that he had beene forced by the multitude, who would haue yeelded him no obedience, if he had onely carried the title of defender of the country, and that if he had prepared to make defence, it was by authority from the ſtates, which is the greateſt B power within the realme, the royall ſeat being voide: and that his Highneſſe ſhould impute that to the loue and charity which euery good Portugues ſhould carry vnto the crowne of Portugal: being then free, and full of honours purchaſed by the proper and peculiar vertues which God had infuſed into the Nation, both in Kings and ſubiects, the which he greeued to ſee confounded, and in danger to be darkened, beeing mingled with the trophees of Caſtile: And howſoeuer he held himſelfe bound to perſeuer in this defence, thinking the quarrel iuſt in his conſcience, and by the conſultations which hee had had both in the vniuerſities of the country, as ſtrangers, as well of Diuines as Lawiers, yet conſidering the condition of humaine things, and the vncertentie of their euents, and alſo to ſpare bloud, and to preuent the inſolencies and ſpoiles which follow warre, he was content to lay aſide armes, and the title of King, knowing how his high- C neſſe ment to intreat both the realmes and him. This was the ſubſtance of the letter which Diego de Carcamo, carried vnto King Philip, being yet at Badajos, the which hee receiued in good part, ſeeming deſirous the quarrel might be ended by ſuch ſubmiſſions, without any more force. But for that this negotiation fell out, either during the Kings ſickneſſe, or vpon his recouery, being it may bee aduiſed to haue this matter treated of farre from him, to the end hee might not haue his ſpirits continually importuned, nor haue occaſion to alter his humors by any difficulty, that ſhould put him in choller, hee gaue the whole charge thereof to the Duke of Alba, to whom Diego of Carcamo was ſent, who made ſome voiages more to Lisbone, and had ſo well aduanced the buſineſſe, D as there remained nothing, but to draw neere, and to conferre together by their Deputies, or in perſon if it might bee; when as Don Antonio receiuing letters from the Duke, conceiued by the termes thereof, an opinion that hee contemned him, and that hee would treat with him as a Maſter: for although that the Duke did witneſſe by the tenor of his letters, that hee would imploy his beſt endeauors to attaine vnto a peace, ſaying that he honoured the memory of the Infant D. Lewis his father, the which did binde him to ſeeke D. Antonios aduancement in this treaty, yet he gaue him no other title but your Lordſhip, where they had beene accuſtomed to ſay vnto him, your Highneſſe, ſince he was King, and before your Excelleny, when he was but Prior of Crato. This ceremonious kinde of ſpeaking being omitted by the Duke of Alba willingly, to humble Don Antonio, was the cauſe that the treaty went not forward, which was a great croſſe both E for the country and himſelfe.

D. Antonio writes to king Philip.

D. Philip being now King of all Spaine, entred into Portugall ſoone after his recouery, and came to Eluas, where he was acknowledged for King, and in all places where hee paſt, and then he did free them of a forraine impoſition which was leauied vpon all marchandize which paſt from one realme vnto an other, which was valued yeerely at a hundred and fifty thouſand crownes, for a token of the vnion, and to ſhew that the Caſtillans and Portugals were now but one people. He appointed an aſſembly of the Eſtates at Tomar in Aprill the yeere following 1582. hee viſited Catherine Dutcheſſe of Bragança at Villa Boim, who yeelded her right to the Realme vnto him, if ſhe had any. The F Pope who had till then beene ſomewhat oppoſite to the Kings purſutes, did allow of all that had beene done in Portugall, being aduertiſed how matters had paſt; hee exhorted him that to ſhew himſelfe thankefull vnto God for the proſperities which hee had giuen him, he ſhould vndertake to make warre againſt the Queene of England, either directly, or vnder hand, in fauoring the Iriſh: hee not onely offred him his ſpirituall treaſors, but alſo quit him the fruites of the Archbiſhoprike of Toledo, which had beene long long in the hands of his Stewards, whileſt that the Archbiſhop remained ſuſpended of A his dignity, and that his proceſſe was in queſtion at Rome, the which amounted to ſome millions of crownes, and did belong to the Church and Sea of Rome. The King knew well that he ſhould not reſtore thoſe fruits, and therefore he was not eager to enter into open warre againſt the Engliſh, yet he promiſed to ſuccor the Iriſh from Spaine, without any further declaration, but ſaying, that he would deale with the affaires of Ireland, as the Queene of England did with them of Flanders. Hee was alſo to prouide for the reduction of the Iſlands of the Tercera's, without the which his fleets could hardly continue their nauigations to the Indies.

King Philip enters into Portugal.

Pope Gregory allowes of the conqueſt of Portugal.

Deſcription of the Terceras.

Theſe Iſlands are in the Atlantike Ocean, and are otherwiſe called the Açores; they be B ſeuen in number, moſt of them ſmall, and not greatly inhabited. The beſt are the Tercera (which carries the name of them al) Saint Michel (which is the greateſt) and Fayal: the other, which be, Santa Maria, Pic, Flowers and Corues, are barren and vnpeopled. The city of Angra the Biſhops Sea, is in the Tercera, but the Biſhops aboad is in that of Saint Michel, at a place called Puncto del Gada, which Iſland is ſome hundred miles neerer vnto Spaine then the reſt. All the Inhabitants of theſe Iſlands are brutiſh, ſuperſtitious and vaine, yet inſtructed by Ieſuits and many ſorts of Monkes which haue their dwellings there. Vntil that the Marquis of Santa Cruz had conquered them, they were of opinion that the King D. Sebaſtian was not dead at the battaile of Afrike, they did hate the Caſtillans mortally, & were enterrained in this hatred by D. Antonio, who held them two yeers C
after the conqueſt of Portugal, by the means of ſome ſuccors which he drew frõ France, for this King being expelled, after that he had wandred throughout the realm, poore and in a diſguiſed habit, for the ſpace of eight months, and yet was neuer wronged nor diſcouered, notwithſtanding that he ſpake to diuers men, in the end he had means to fraight a ſhip of the Low countries at Setuual, who for 600. crowns brought him to Callis, from whence going to the court of France, he was kindly entertained by the Queene Mother, one of the Pretendants to the crowne of Portugal, by whoſe fauor and authority, hee found in many priuat men that offred to do him ſeruice, & went to ſea, & to the Iſlands, vnder his warrant, hoping to take ſome Spaniſh or Portugal ſhips cõming from the Indies, and to inrich themſelues with their ſpoiles, ſo as it was an ordinary trade from the D ports of France to the Tercera's: where for a time D. Antonio Cyprian de Figueredo commanded, but not well pleaſed with him, he diſplaſt him, and gaue his Gouernment to Emanuel de Sylua, who called himſelfe Earle of Torres Vedras. They of the Iſland of Saint Michel, being ſome diſtance from the reſt, did preſently acknowledge the king of Spaine, diuiding themſelues from the reſt, whether French ſhips came many times to ſpoile it, and ſome Spaniards to defend it, who meeting made furious war, but the Spaniards had alwaies the worſt. They of the Tercera's, were firme for Antonio, and tooke all that came vpon their coaſt, and vpon that of Fayal, or that they could ſee at ſea, to make a ſtock for D. Antonio, who reaped great commodity. There was one called Iohn de Betancour, deſcended from ſome French houſe, dwelling in the towne of Angra, who thought to draw E the people into a mutiny for the King of Spaine, who being almoſt ſlaine, was caſt into an obſcure priſon, where he remained long, and it is doubtful whether he died there. The Ieſuits thought to ſpeake, but they walled vp the gates of their conuents, and kept them long ſhut vp after that maner, giuing them meate twice a weeke, and yet they feared to bee worſe intreated: but the other Orders of Monkes ſpake of none but D. Antonio, whoſe vertues and praiſes were moſt commonly the ſubiect of their Sermons, medling much with affaires of ſtate and warre. King Philip to aſſure himſelfe of the Iſland of Saint Michel which held for him, and receiue the ſhips which came from the Indies, being not aduertiſed of that which had paſt in Portugal, leaſt they ſhould vnwillingly fall into the hands of the contrary party, he commanded that D. Pedro de Baldes ſhould bee F
ſent with foure ſhips and ſix hundred Spaniards, who aduenturing to land in the Iſland of Tercera's, with an opinion that there were many in the Iſland affected to the King his Maſter, and by their meanes to doe ſome good exploite vpon the city of Angra, which was vnwalled towards the land, he was charged by thẽ, who ſlue 400. of his men, ſo as he made all the haſt he could to get to ſea, and returne to Lisbone, where for his welcome

People of the Terceras bruſiſh.

Pedro de Baldes defeated by them of the Terceras.

he

A he was put in priſon,charging him that he had fought contrary to his Commiſſion, yet he was ſoone releaſed, finding that he was not expreſly forbidden to fight. Lope de Figueroa being ſent after to ſecond him,thought to find him about the Iſland of S. Michel, but hearing of this defeat, he returned alſo to Lisbone , ſo as it was then reſolued to ſend greater forces the next ſpring.

We haue formerly made mention of certaine companies ſent by Pope Gregory the 13. to ſuccor the Rebels of Ireland,vnder the command of Thomas Stukely, who comming to Portugal with ſixe hundred foote, when as D. Sebaſtian did arme againſt the Moores, they were intreated by him to ſerue him in that warre , where moſt of them were ſlaine B with their chiefe Commander. The reſt returning into Portugall , with Sebaſtian Saniſep one of their Commanders , they had order to paſſe into Ireland , and the Popes Nuntio there had order to leauy Spaniards to fill vp the number, and to increaſe it,who ſhould ſaile into Ireland vnder the Standard of the Church , yet at the King of Spaines charge,hauing money to raiſe foure thouſand men of the country , they being but nine hundred men in all vnder diuers captaines Italians and Spaniards. Theſe men landed in Ireland,and built a good fort , called Smerwike , the which was furniſhed with ordinance, victuals and munition to maintaine a long ſeege , into the which there entred but ſixe hundred men, the other three hundred returning in three ſhips , leauing three behind;but before they were fully fortified, the Lord Gray,Lord Deputy for the Queens C Maieſty in Ireland,came and beſeeged them, and preſt them in ſuch ſort , as ſome of the captaines,compounding for their owne liues,the reſt were put to ſword: And ſo that enterpriſe was ſoone made fruſtrate,hauing more deſire then meanes to anoy the Engliſh in thoſe parts.

Forces ſent into Ireland by the Pope and King of Spaine defeated.

The time appointed being come for the holding of the Eſtates at Tomar ; the Depu- An. 1581. ties of the Clergy , Nobility , Prouinces and good townes of Portugal came thither, where King Philip was acknowledged by them all for King of Portugal , without any contradiction,and receiued the oth of fidelity , the which hee cauſed to be taken to the Prince his ſonne. There they alſo treated how the Realme ſhould be gouerned, where the King ſhewed himſelfe very bountifull,for he granted vnto the realme,in a manner,all D the Articles which the Duke of Oſſuna his Ambaſſador had promiſed and ſigned to the fiue Gouernors,before the taking of Lisbone , the chiefe whereof were: That the King ſhould take an oth,as he did,to maintaine the realme in her lawes,cuſtomes,preuiledges and liberties . That the Eſtates of the realme ſhould bee held within the realme , and that they ſhould reſolue there,and no where elſe, of matters concerning the realme of Portugal . That the viceroy,or by what name ſoeuer they called the Gouernor,ſhould be a Portugueſe, vnleſſe he were a Prince of the bloud, ſonne,vncle , brother, couſin or nephew to the King. That the offices of Iuſtice , charges of the treaſure and reuenues of the crowne, ſhould be giuen vnto Portugueſes alone.That ſuch as had offices and dignities within the realme , as well at land as at ſea,preferred by former Kings,ſhould en- E ioy them ſtill,and in like manner the offices of the houſe and crowne of Portugal. That the Gouernors and Captaines of places and the ſouldiers in garriſons ſhould be all Portugueſes.That the commerce of the Eaſt Indies ſhould remaine for the Portugueſes, diſtinct from them of Caſtile , as they had beene before this vnion,and vnder the ſame lawes. That the money which ſhould be coined in Portugal ſhould haue the armes of Portugal alone , without any other mixture or addition. That all Clergy dignities, both great and ſmall, ſhould be giuen to Portugueſes,and in like maner all commanderies of the Orders of Knights . That no Croiſadoes,nor thirds of Eccleſiaſticall liuings, ſhould be obtained from the Pope , to be leauied in Portugal. That no fees nor iuriſdictions ſhould be granted in Portugal,to others thē to Portugueſes.That rights,exche- F ting to the crown,ſhould not be giuen to any but to Portugueſes. That the King ſhould take into his ſeruice two hundred Portugueſes , giuing them the penſion which is called Moradic. That the King comming into Portugal , the lodgings of his Court and traine ſhould be made after the manner of Portugal. That the King going through the realme he ſhould carry with him a priuat Counſel conſiſting of a Prelate, Chancellor, Treaſorer,ſuperintendant, and a certaine number of Secretaries , which ſhould bee called the

Eſtates of Portugal held at Tomar.

22

Articles granted by King Philip to the realme of Portugal.

counſell

counſell of Portugal, all Portugueſes. That the prouiſions of offices, as wel of Iuſtice as others ſhould be made within the realme, & that their ſupreme Iudgements ſhould haue execution. That the Kings Chappel and ſinging men ſhould be entertained, as had bin vſed in the time of other Kings, in the city of Lisbone commonly, or where the Kings perſon ſhould be within the realme. That al forraine impoſitions vpon the confines of either realme, ſhould ceaſe. That al Portugueſes ſhould indifferently bee admitted to ſerue the Kings and Queenes, and that the Queenes taking Portugal maidens to ſerue them, ſhould marry then according to their quallities, as had beene accuſtomed. A

At theſe Eſtates there was a generall pardon granted to them that had carried armes, or otherwiſe oppoſed themſelues againſt king Philip. Out of the which were excepted D. Antonio, the Biſhop of Garda, the Earle of Vimioſo, and others named to the number of 52. All the religious men which had adhered to D. Antonio, and thoſe that had receiued office from him, were alſo excluded out of this pardon, and were made incapable euer to receiue any grace or charge from the King. The vniuerſity of Coimbra, which had held D. Antonios part, and publiſhed his title, was (contrary to the opinion of many) confirmed in their preuiledges, and taking into the Kings ſpecial protection. As for gratuities and rewards to priuate Portugueſes, the King gaue much, yet he pleaſed not all ſutors. He confirmed the Duke of Bragança in the dignity of Conſtable of the realm. The Duke of Oſſuna, who had left Portugal after the Gouernors flight from Setuual, was made viceroy of Naples, which is the goodlieſt charge of Spaine, wherevnto the Noblemen aſpire and ſeeke to come vnto by degrees, as the chiefe of dignities which is giuen in that court. Chriſtopher de Mora was made gentleman of the Chamber, which is much in Spaine. All that had imployed themſelues to ſerue the King in his pretenſion and purſute of that realm of Portugal, as well of the nation, as others, yea and many which had oppoſed themſelues, and were afterwards by ſome meanes reconciled, were gratified and rewarded, ſome ſuperfluoſly, others more ſparingly, ſo as ſome thought his recompences and rewards amounted to ſix millions of crownes. B C

King Philips bounty in Portugal.

The Eſtates being ended, the King drew neere vnto Lisbone ſtaying ſome daies at Almada, not far off, attending the preparations which they made for his reception, and on Saint Peters day he made his royal entry, where after the triumphes, he wanted not importunat ſutors for guifts and recompences, and there was ſo great a number of petitions preſented, as the counſel was ouer-charged, and there could not be any expedition, ſo as to abridge al delaies, the King diſcharged the body of the counſell, and committed the examination and prouiſion vnto two only, which were, D. Antonio Pignero Biſhop of Leira, and Chriſtopher de Mora. D

22 Entry of King Philip into Liſbone, and acknowledged King.

The Great Turke being at truce both with the Perſian and the Catholike King, had ſome cauſe giuen him to doubt a warre in Afrike, for that in Tunis the people had taken armes, and expelled the Turkes that were there in gard, calling home their old King Amida, who had beene expelled and liued at Malta, wherevpon Amurath did preſently ſend Vluccialy with ſome gallies, who attempted to land ſome men, but the King of Fez oppoſed himſelfe, hauing no wil that the Turkes ſhould grow potent in Afrike. And the Catholike King, who had made a league with the Moore, would not haue the Turke aduance on that ſide, proteſting to Vluccialy, that by reaſon of the truce, formerly made betwixt him and the great Turke, he could not attempt war againſt him of Fez, vnleſſe he would breake the truce; and therefore if he attempted any thing, hee would ſend his gallies againſt him; which threats made Vluccialy reſolue (hauing paſt thether wel prouided) not to alter any thing this yeere. The diſorders at the Tercera's increaſed daily, many comming thether for refuge, after they had beene ſpoyling at ſea, whereof ſome were French: And King Phillip being aduertiſed that in France they prepared many ſhips of warre, and leauied ſouldiers publikly vnder the fauour of the Queene mother, to come vnto thoſe Iſlands, there to fortifie themſelues againſt the Spaniards, to cut off their nauigation to the Indies, and to aſſure them againſt the enterpriſes of the King of Spaine, and depriue him of the vſe of them, he had already commanded D. Aluar de Baçan, Marquis of Santa Cruz, to carry 5000. men thether, when as hearing that D. Antonio had ſet ſaile with aboue 70. ſhips and 7000. ſoldiers (as reports are alwaies greater E F

then

A then the effects) he preſt the Marquis to be gonne, and ſeemed to be ſomewhat diſcontented with him, for his ſlackneſſe in making ready the ſhips of Andaluzia, whereof there were a good number appointed for this voiage: ſo as hee was forced to goe from Lisbone on the tenth of Iuly with eight and twenty ſhips only, ſome Biſcains, the reſt Flemings and Eſterlings, appointing the reſt which were at Saint Lucar, Santa Maria, and other ports to follow him. This Caſtillan army beeing come to the Iſland of Saint Michel, they found that the French were already landed, and did ſpoile it. So as they came happely to preſerue the Iſland, and the chiefe fort of it called Puncte Delgada. Hee was glad that whileſt the French were buſie about the ſpoile of that poore Iſland, they had B ſuffred a great ſhip and very rich comming from the Indies to eſcape, the which had come vnwittingly vnto thoſe Iſlands, beeing ignorant how the affaires of Portugal had paſt.

Armies of French and Spaniards in the Iſland of Saint Michel.

Theſe two enemies fleets were at anchor ſome thirty miles one from an other, being couered with points of Land which runne into the ſea: The French being about Laguna towards the Weſt, and the Spaniards at Morro, which is to the Eaſt, with this diſaduantage, that the Marquis ſayling along the Iſland to finde a fit place to land, the army had beene fully diſcouered by the French, which hee could not doe of theirs, lying couered and hidden: beſides the French had taken a Caruell of aduice, the Marquis hauing ſent two vnto the Gouernor of the Iſland to aduertiſe him of his comming, and of the number of ſhips and ſouldiers which hee brought with him, and of thoſe C which ſhould follow him. Beeing therefore hard to diſcouer the French army by ſea, the Marquis was deſirous to land ſome men to learne ſome certentie, but they were forced to returne without any certaine knowledge. Wherefore to bee better aſſured, he waied anchor, and put to ſea with all his fleet, in order to fight, meaning to paſſe in that manner along the South part of the Iſland, where the enemy lay (for the other ſide of the Iſland was deſart and had no landing) and by that meanes ſee what their ſtrength might be, where at the breake of day there came a ſmal barke vnto him, in the which was the Maſter of a Biſcain ſhip, with letters from Iohn de Caſtillo, who commanded in the fort of the city, by the which he did aduertiſe him of all that had paſt ſince the comming D of D. Antonio and his army vnto the Iſland: That the French had in all 58. ſailes, whereof 28. were great ſhips, and 6000. ſouldiers; that they had ſackt the village of Laguna, and put to rout Pedro Pexot, and Laurence Noghera, who went to incounter them with 3000. men, part Iſlanders and part Spaniards, and then had entred into the city which they had found empty, and that they ſought to winne the fort, into the which they were fled that had eſcaped at the defeat. That Laurence Noghera was dead of a wound which hee had receiued in the fight, and that Pexot went away ſoone after in a Caruel towards Lisbone, leauing many of his veſſels in the Port, which had beene taken or brothen by the French, and that hee was ſtraightly beſeeged in the fort; and therefore hee ſhould take counſell, whether hee ſhould fight, or retire with all his ſhips vnder the fort to fauour it.

E The Marquis beeing glad of this aduice ſent the Maſter backe to Iohn de Caſtillo with this anſwere. That hee ſhould not trouble himſelfe but hold good, for hee was reſolued to fight, with hope to vanquiſh the enemy. This report came neere the truth for the number of their ſhips, for the French fleet at their comming from Belille in Britan conſiſted of fiue and fifty ſailes, whereof there were fiue and thirty ſhips of warre, and twenty pinaces, carrying ſeuen and thirty companies of foote, which might make ſome foure thouſand ſouldiers, whereof Saincte Solene was Collonel of fifteene Enſignes, nine were vnder the command of the Siegneur of Buz, eight vnder Beaumont, and fiue vnder Fumee, ouer which Philip Stroſſy was Generall, and the Earle of Briſſac was his F Lieutenant. The Marquis hauing ſpent that day in conſultations, and in ordring all things neceſſary for the army, the next day, which was the three and twentith day of Iuly, the two fleets were at ſea, their prowes turned as if they ment to fight, which it is verie likely they had done inſtantly if ſo bee that a calme had not kept them from ioyning. After dinner the vvinde grovving ſomevvhat freſh, the Marquis thinking that the French (vvho had the vvinde) vvould haue charged him, and hee preparing to receiue them; hee ſaw them bend their courſe towards the Iſland of A Santa Maria, fifty miles diſtant from that of Saint Michel, the which the Spaniſh fleet did in like manner, coaſting one an other, and turning their ſailes ſometimes on the one ſide, ſometimes on the other, vntill that night came, which was very calme, ſo as the French could not execute their deſeigne, which was to haue ſent ten ſhips of warre along the Iſland to get behind the Spaniſh fleet, with an intent to charge them the next day in front, and on either ſide.

Number of the French army at the Terceres.

In the morning euery man expected a battaile, but they did not any thing, but play with their great ordinance a farre off, yet anoying one an other, for the French had one of their ſhips ſunke. Night being come the Marquis, being tired with this loſſe of time, B ſought to get the winde, wherefore he gaue commandement to all his ſhips, that hearing a peece of ordinance ſhot off, they ſhould beare vp cloſe with the Admiral, and follow it, bearing no lanthorne, to the end the enemy ſhould not ſee them: This Order was obſerued by all the ſhips, except two Eaſterlings in the which were foure hundred Germaines; who being not aduertiſed, through his fault that had the charge, were ſo far off as they could not ioyne againe with the reſt of the fleet. But this preuailed not, for at the breake of day, which was the fiue and twentith of July, on Saint Iames day, the Patron of Spaine, to whom the Spaniards ſaid that D. Antonio and the French captaines bare reſpect, they ſaw them buſie to repaire their ſhips, which were ſhot through the day before, making no ſhew that they had any intent to fight. The Marquis men were C preſt with the like neceſſity, for that the maine maſt of a great ſhip, in the which Chriſtopher d' Eraſſo was, had beene bruzed and ſhaken, ſo as they were forced to attend her, fearing the enemy ſhould enuiron and take her, whileſt they mended her maſt, which was ſo ſhaken, as ſhee could not ſaile: So this day was ſpent, in the which the French, whoſe veſſels were lighter, had meanes to recouer the winde.

The next day being the ſixe and twentith, they muſt needs fight, their former delaies proceeding from the ſundry opinions that were amongſt the captaines of D. Antonios armies, whereof ſome would fight, and others were vnwilling, and if their Generall and Admirall had not aduanced to ſhew them the way, moſt of them would not haue come to it: making their excuſe that they had alwaies ſeene Philip Stroſſy, and the Earle D of Vimioſo (who were in one ſhip) keepe behinde, which they imputed to want of will to fight, where as in truth the reaſon was for that the ſhip was heauy, and not ſo good a ſailer as the reſt: for theſe two Noblemen wanted no courrage, but were moſt deſirous to fight with the enemy: Stroſſy and the Earle finding this bad impreſſion of their companions, changed their ſhips, and tooke one of the beſt ſaylers in the fleet, in the which the Lord of Beaumont was, who was Collonel of thoſe companies which had followed the Earle of Briſſac. The two armies beeing in order of battaile at ſea, within three miles one of an other, and fiue and twenty from Saint Michel, the ſea being calme, they attended ſome ſmall gale to giue them meanes to approch.

23 Battaile at ſea betwixt the French and Spaniards.

The which fell out about noone, fauorable for the French, wherevpon they ioyned E within tenne miles of the Iſland, fighting with great reſolution. In the front of all the French army was Stroſſy and the Earle of Vimioſo, their ſhip holding the place of Admirall, the Earle of Briſſac was with them for vice-admirall, with three Engliſh ſhips, then followed the other ſhips, ſome neere, ſome farther off. The Spaniſh fleet had for their foreward a great hulke, and Francis de Bouadilla in it; the galleon Saint Martin, in the which the Marquis of Santa Cruz went, who towed after him with a cable the ſhip of Chriſtopher d' Eraſſo, whoſe maſt was much ſhaken, and with them the galeon called Saint Mathew, which carried Lope de Figueroa: all the other ſhips of the Spaniſh fleet, were in a manner couered by theſe foure. Euery one had choſen where to fight, but the winde changing and varying, made them to change their deſeignes. F

The Saint Mathew, wherein Lope de Figueroa was, beeing caſt ſomewhat from the reſt by the agitation of the winde and waues, it was firſt charged by the Admirall and vice-admirall of the French, and the other three ſhippes, which did enuiron it with a ſtorme of great ſhot and fire, whom hee anſwered with the like, and made them to keepe aloofe, yet Figueroa was ſo preſt by the Admirall, Vice-admirall, and

an

A an other ſhip as he was often in danger to be loſt, for he maintained the fight valiantly aboue two houres, and was not ſuccored. In the end a Biſcay ſhip of Peter of Garagarza, in which were two companies of Spaniards, came and releeued him. The Marquis, who ſaw him in danger, was much troubled for that hee could not ſuccor him in time as hee thought; both for that he was forced to anſwer two French ſhips which had ſet vpon him (whom notwithſtanding he had made retire with his great Ordinance, and that of the Hulke, wherein Francis de Bauadillo was) as alſo for that he muſt goe againſt the winde, caſting about, ſo as the time would be long before he ſhould recouer him. Yet in the end he came vnto him, but the order of the army and all their priuate deſeignes
B were peruerted, as it happens commonly in ſea fights, being ſubiect to the winde and waues; but he was preuented by the ſhips of Michel d' Oquendo, of captaine Villa Vicioſa, and an other Biſcain, who came firſt to ſuccor the Galeon Saint Mathew, being followed by many others. Theſe three laſt-named did inueſt the Vice-admiral, in the which the Earle of Briſſac was, who being already ill intreated by the cruel reſiſtance the Spaniards had made, ſought to be vngrapled, and to retire her ſelfe. Among others the ſhip of Michael de Beneſa came boldly and grapled with the General Stroſſy; So as the Marquis of Santa Cruz could not approch nere either of the enemies ſhips, ſeeing them enuironed by his galleons; wherefore he obſerued what the iſſue would be, to ſuccor where need required. The French Vice-admiral defended it ſelfe valiantly againſt three C ſhips that did preſſe it. Captaine Villa Vicioſa who fought in the prow was ſlaine. In poupe they were forced by Michel d' Oquendo, who cauſed ſome of his Spaniards to enter, but finding his owne ſhip to be perced, and that it tooke in water, he left her, ſeeing alſo other French ſhips come to ſuccor her. So as this viceadmirall being much torne and broken, ſeeing her ſelfe free, would haue retired, but ſhe could not goe farre, before ſhe ſunke (as the Spaniards ſay:) the Earl of Briſſac with ſome others ſauing themſelues in a little boat, got to the next French ſhip. As for the Admirall where Stroſſy was, which had not yet abandoned the fight, ſhe was ſo faſtned to one of the ankors of the galleon Saint Mathew, as it was not poſſible to free her, but they muſt either vanquiſh or die. Before that ſuccors came ſhe was in a manner Maſter of this galleon, about the D which almoſt the whole fight was, for there were but 70. men of defence and ſeruice remayning in her; but beſides the ſhip of Michel de Veneſa, the Marquis, who was watchfull, comming with other ſhips, compaſſed her in round, and did ſo batter her with muſket ſhot, as ſhe was forced to yeeld, hauing endured this laſt charge aboue an houre, and being ſhot through in diuers places, ſhe beganne to ſinke viſibly. There were aboue three hundred men ſlaine in her, the reſt were taken. Philip Stroſſy was found ſore wounded with a musket ſhot aboue the knee, which made him fall, who being drawne out of the preſſe, to carry him into the galleon Saint Martin, as they paſt with him from one veſſell to an other, an inſolent ſouldier thruſt his ſword into his belly, and in this Eſtate he was laied before the Marquis of Santa Cruz, who made no account of him,
E and ſeeming not to vnderſtand them that ſaid it was Philip Stroſſy, hee turned his head on the other ſide, and made a ſigne that they ſhould caſt him into the ſea yet breathing. D. Francis of Portugal, Earle of Vimioſo, who alſo fought valiantly with him, died two daies after of his woũds. The Marquis ſeemed to lament his death, for he was his kinſman.

French defeated at ſea by the Spaniards.

Death of Philip Stroſſy.

This battaile continued, aboue fiue houres, betwixt two very vnequall parties, for there were ſcarce ten French ſhips that fought, by reaſon of the bad intelligence and diſobedience that was among them, as it happens often amongſt a multitude of men, which are either voluntaries, or not experienced; of the which this army did for the moſt part conſiſt, who were fauoured in their faults by their captaines, whereas they ſhould haue vſed ſeuerity, eſpecially at ſea. Before their comming out of France, they had
F falne into quarrels and mutynies, which were with ſome difficulty pacified: moſt of the other French ſhips were idle ſpectators of the battaile; Some at the firſt charge went to ſea, bending their courſe towards the Iſland of the Tecera's, where they refuſed them the port, as treacherous runne-awaies; and if any one came neere vnto the enemy, it was but to diſcharge their canon farre off, which is held by good ſea men to be idle and vnproffitable.

Number of the dead in the battaile.

Thus the French army retired, hauing loſt their Commanders with about 2000. men, and eight of their beſt ſhips in the conflict, in the which the Spaniards ſaid they had not aboue 200. ſlaine, and about 500. hurt, wherein they flattred themſelues ſtrangely, for in the Galleon Saint Mathew, alone, there were aboue 600. ſoldiers and marriners, who by their owne confeſſion were reduced to 70. when as Stroſſy was oppreſt by the Marquis and the reſt that came. The Spaniſh fleet remained maſter at ſea, neither cared to purſue them that fled, both for that night approched, as alſo thinking that he had done ynough. He was kept foure daies at ſea, by reaſon of the winde which did riſe, and could not get to the Iſland of Saint Michel, where he afterwards landed his men to refreſh them, and to cure them that were hurt. There D. Aluaro de Baçan Marquis of Santa Cruz did an act which was held barbarous, diſcouering the pride and inſolency of certaine Natures which cannot be pacified, and which neuer take delight in their victories, vnleſſe they be ſeaſoned with ſome new cruelties, committed after the fact in cold bloud: for the firſt day of Auguſt the army being landed, Francis of Bouadilla hauing cauſed a great ſcaffold to be ſet vp in the market place of Villa Franca, in the Iſland of Saint Michel, he cauſed all the French priſoners, to the number of 300. to be brought thether by foure companies of ſouldiers, where he cauſed a ſentence to be pronounced. That whereas (there being a peace betwixt the Catholike King and the moſt Chriſtian) they had preſumed to come out of France, in fauor of D. Antonio, ſometimes Prior of Crato, in form of an army, with an intent to ſpoile the King of Spaines ſhips, comming from the Indies, and ſeize vpon his Iſlands, where they had already taken great booties; he therefore declared them common enemies to the commerce and publike quiet, and fauorers of his Maieſties rebels; and that as pirats and theeues he condemned them to die, commanding the Iudge of the army to cauſe that ſentence to be put in execution, vpon all thoſe that exceeded the age of 17. yeeres, for ſo the ſeruice of God, and of the two Kings required. The age of theſe priſoners, which were exempted from death, to vſe them in the gallies, was iudged after that they were carried backe to priſon by their beards, ſo as many which had little or no beards ſaued their liues, hauing ſecretly pulled the haire off their chins. There were found among thoſe that were condemned foure ſcore gentlemen, who loſt their heads, or rather had their throats cut, for want of a good hangman, and the reſt, both ſoldiers and marriners, were hanged, within two foot of the ground. This inhumaine and bloudy ſlaughter, was deteſted by the Spaniſh ſouldiers, and by many of their captaines, ſaying, that it did blemiſh the honour of armes, and that they did wrong to thoſe priſoners to terme them theeues, beeing apparent that they were not come to that voiage for D. Antonio, but to doe ſeruice to the French Queene, by reaſon of the pretenſions ſhe had to the realme of Portugal, and that they ſhould make them faire war, hauing behaued themſelues like valiant ſouldiers, wherevpon they made many requeſts vnto the Generall, ſeeking to diuert him from that cruel reſolution, but he was immouable. After this vnworthy fact (howſoeuer they may colour it) the Marquis ſtaied ſome daies about thoſe Iſlãds, to receiue the Indiã ſhips, if any came, ſo as he ſaued two, which might haue ſomewhat repaired D. Antonios loſſe, if they had falne into his hands, whom he put in ſome feare, and all them that were with him at Angra in the Iſland of Tercere, that he would land there, for he paſt and repaſt twiſe or thrice in view of the city, but he had an other deſeigne; for ſeeing the ſeaſon approch, when as the ſeas grow high, he gaue order for the gard of the Iſland of Saint Michel, where he left Auguſtin Inygues with 2000. Spaniards, and then ſailed towards Lisbone.

Cruelty of the Marquis of Santa Cruz to the French.

Spaniſh ſouldiers deteſt the cruelty of the Marquis of Santa Cruz

The deſeat of D. Antonios army, and the death of Philip Stroſſy did much trouble the French King, and the Queene-mother, after which he could not procure any great means to anoy the King of Spaine: Some of the ſhips of that fleet making haſt to recouer the Ports of France, their captaines were reproched with baſe cowardiſe, and ſome of them were put in priſon, being charged to haue beene corrupted by the King of Spaine, or his Agents, before they parted from France, and to haue failed of their duties in the day of battaile. They had prepared for D. Antonio (hauing newes of the comming of this army) a ſtately entry in the city of Angra, whether he came two daies before the battaile, to attend the iſſue thereof out of danger, by the aduice of the French captaines,

A captaines, the vnfortunate ſucceſſe whereof made the triumphs to ceaſe: and when as afrer the defeat he ſaw the Marquis lie houering vp and downe, he grew a fraide, cauſing a light barke to lie ready for his flight, if he ſhould be aſſailed, but hearing afterwards of his departure, he grew aſſured. This poore Prince falne from all his hopes ſtaied their a while, and was perſwaded by Emanuel de Sylua, whom he had made Gouernor of thoſe Iſlands, to commit many inſolencies to get money, wherevnto he willingly gaue eare, for he fore-ſaw his future neceſſity. He cauſed mony of a baſe ſtandard to be coined, and ſet it at a high rate. Yet would he not imitate the Marquis of Santa Cruz in cruelty, being ſollicited to put to death fifty Caſtillans which were in priſon at Angra, to reueng
B the death of thoſe that had beene executed in the Iſland of Saint Michel, which ſhewed his generous minde. About the mideſt of October he reſolued to returne againe to France: for danger and want would not ſuffer him to liue any longer in the Iſland of Tercere. Hauing therefore recommended vnto Emanuel de Silua, that which concerned the gouernment of thoſe Iſlands, for the gard whereof he left him fiue hundred French ſoldiers, beſides thoſe he had before: he parted with about thirty ſaile. And for that he would not arriue in France, whileſt that the memory of the loſſe of ſo many gallant men was freſh, whereof they impured the cauſe to him, he directed his courſe towards the Canaries, and the Iſland of Madera, to ſpend the time, and to get ſome ſpoile to content his ſouldiers: ſome ſhips both French and Engliſh abandoned him in a ſtorme which diſperſt them about the Iſland of Saint Michel.

D. Antonios eſtate after the deſeat of the French at ſea.

His returne into France.

C The Marquis of Santa Cruz being arriued at Lisbone, he was welcome to the King, who told him, that ſeeing he had beene ſo fortunate in that voiage, he would ſend him the next ſommer to the Tercera's with a ſtronger army, and that he ſhould carry ſome gallies with him, to make an abſolute conqueſt of thoſe Iſlands, and to chaſe away the French and D. Antonios partiſans, and euen there he gaue order for that voiage.

We haue formerly made mention that the King of Spaine after the returne of captaine Drake from the South ſea, had ſent D. Diego Florens de Baldes with 25. ſhips, to for tifie and plant in the Straights of Magellan, & to ſtop the paſſage of any other Engliſhmen that ſhould attempt the like, and that fiue of his ſhips had beene caſt away in a D ſtorme, vpon the coaſt of Spaine, notwithſtanding the King ſent commandement that he ſhould proceed in his voiage, the which he did with ſixteene ſaile, but he could not get into the ſtraights that yere, ſo as leauing Diego de Ribera his Lieutenant, & Pedro Sarmiento (who ſhould be the Gouernor of thoſe forts) to attempt it the next yeere, he returned for Spaine. And they happily got into the Straights, where they landed 400. men, with their victuals and munition, which done, Diego de Ribera left Pedro Sarmiento with 400. men, thirty women, and a ſhip with victuals for eight months, and returned with three ſhips, hauing ſtaied but eight daies in the Straights. Pedro Sarmiento built a towne in the mouth of the Straight to the Northward, in the which he put a hundred and fifty men, calling it Nombre de Ieſus, from whence he went by land, and ſent the ſhip ſome fiue
E leagues within the Straights, where in the narroeſt part he found a very good port, and built an other towne, which he called Ciudad del Rey Philippo, or King Phillips towne, but the ſnow and extreme cold of the Winter would not ſuffer him to finiſh his fort. Wherevpon pretending to goe to his other towne, hee ſailed to the Straights mouth, to his firſt built towne, where hauing ſtaied a day or two, he brake his cable in a ſtorme (as hee ſaid) and went to the riuer of Ienero, and then to Fernambuck to ſeeke for ſome ſupplie of victuals, where he obtained what he deſired: But Sarmiento ſayling towards his Colony, his ſhip with all his prouiſion was caſt away, three of his men were drowned and himſelfe hardly eſcaped. At Baya the Gouernor of Breſil fitted him with a barke, & furniſhed him with clothes and victuals for his people, but vpon the way he was ſur-
F prized with ſo furious a ſtorme, as he was forced to caſt all his fraight ouer bord, & to return againe to the riuer of Ienero; where attending a whole yere, he neither receiued ſuccors nor letter from the King, who was offended with Pedro Sarmiento, for that he had giuen him wrong informations touching the ſtraights, and put him to a needleſſe charge, and loſſe of men, ſo as Sarmiento hauing no meanes to releeue his people, was forced to ſaile towards Spaine, where at ſea he was taken by certaine Engliſhmen, ſo as in

An. 1582. King of Spaines fortifies the ſtraights of Magellan.

Sarmiento fortifies in the ſtraights of Magellan.

foure yeeres thoſe poore Spaniards which hee had left in the Srtaights had no ſuccors. A Death of D. Diego Prince of Spaine.

This yeere D. Diego the Kings ſonne, Prince of Spaine, died, for the which he was very ſorrowfull; but he did not much regard the death of the Duke of Alba, which followed ſoone after, at the leaſt he made no ſhew of it, whereat the Portugueſes (who had ſeene their Kings retire themſelues for priuat men) wondred. They remembred that King Emanuel had ſhut himſelfe vp three daies for the death of a Pilot. The Duke of Alba was 74. yeeres old when he died in the Kings lodging at Lisbone: of whoſe deeds and diſpoſition we haue ſpoken ſufficiently. D. Sancho de Auila, accounted by the Spaniards for one of the beſt captaines of his time, died ſoone after the Duke, being hurt with a horſe he ſought to be cured by a ſouldier, with charmes, and neglected the Art of Surgery. B Among other Acts of his the ſacke of Antwerp is memorable, in the yeere 1576.

Death of the Duke of Alba.

Death of D. Sancho de Auila.

King Philip being preſt to returne into Caſtile, to conſider of a marriage which was treated of betwixt the Emperour and one of his daughters, being alſo to goe to the Eſtates of Arragon, he made haſt, before his departure out of Portugal, for that which was neceſſary for the gouernment of the realme, and for the firme vnion thereof with Caſtile. He therefore ſommoned the Eſtates for the 26. day of Ianuary the yeere following 1583. and there he cauſed his ſonne D. Philip to be ſworne lawfull ſucceſſor to the crown of Portugal; he cauſed the funeral of the deceaſed King D. Henry to be made at Belem, where he was buried with his Predeceſſors, and he cauſed the bones of King Sebaſtian, and of diuers other Princes his kinſmen, which had beene left, or buried in diuers Monaſteries, to be brought thether. As for the Gouernment of the realme, in his abſence, he gaue it to the Archduke Albert Cardinal, contrary to the opinion of moſt Courtiers, who thought he would haue left it to his ſiſter D. Maria, widow to the Emperor Maximilian, who had retired her ſelfe into Spaine, and was come to him into Portugal at the time of this conqueſt. He left for Counſellors to the Archduke, D. George d' Almaida Archbiſhop of Lisbone, Pedro d' Alcaſſoua, who had beene ſo ill intreated by King Henry, whom King Philip reſtored to al his goods and honor, and Michel de Mora, Secretary of the realme, who was honored by him with the office of Scribe of the purity, which is one of the greateſt dignities of that Court: but the King contrary to the Articles concluded at the Eſtates of the realme, and againſt their priuiledges, put into the Counſell D of the Hazienda, which is for the reuenues of the crowne, two Caſtillans, one a Lawier & the other a Merchant. The Empreſſe did alſo ſomewhat diſcontent the Portugals when as viſiting the conuent of Santos, which is a retreat for Ladies of great houſes liuing like religious women, but yet may marry, ſhe drew out D. Iuliana d' Alencaſtro, daughter and heire to the Duke of Auero, being thirteene yeeres old, and tooke her with her into Caſtile, whereas they thought ſhe would marry her. The Portugueſes were alſo diſconted at the Archdukes proceedings, who after the Kings departure, in the beginning of his gouernment, made difficulty to ſigne the prouiſions and ordinary letters, which ought to be diſpatched within the realme, as the King had agreed, ſending furors ordinarily to Court. In the end the King, to pacifie al diſcontents, and to leaue a good con- E ceit of him in his new conqueſt, gaue many guifts and rewards to them that preſented themſelues, and made their ſeruices knowne, or their deſire to doe him any: the Duke of Bragança and the Marquis of Villareal were they that taſted leaſt of his bounty, the which was noted, being the principal perſons of the realme, from whence he parted the eleuenth of February that yeere, preſently after the ending the Eſtates.

An. 1583. D. Philip the Kings ſonne ſworne at the Eſtates of Portugal.

Archduke Albert made Gouernor of Portugal.

King Philip goes out of Portugal.

The Marquis of Santa Cruz, after his returne to Lisbone, vſed all dilligence to make ready the army which he ſhould lead the Sommer following to the Tercera's: the which being knowne in France by D. Antonio, and thoſe that fauored him, they wrought ſo as he had meanes to ſend about 1200. men, vnder the command of Mounſier de Chattes a Knight of Malta, and Gouernor of Diepe, a man well practiſed in martiall affaires F both at land and ſea: there were already in the Iſlands of Tercere and Fyal, ſeuen hundred French and three hundred Engliſh, and about three or foure thouſand Portugueſes and Iſlanders. The Iſland of Tercere was the place which muſt bee chiefely kept, to defend the approches whereof, and the landing places, Emanuel de Sylua had cauſed ſome thirty forts to be built within compaſſe of it, which was a weake fortification, for Succors ſent to the Terceres.

Forts built at the Tercere.

A for beeing all ſmall, capable of few men, and farre one from another, they might be eaſily forced with few men, and one could not releeue another. This Emanuel de Silua (as the Spaniards deſcribe him) was a man full of will, and opinion of his own ſufficiencie, but in effect he was ignorant of the art of war, (as in a maner all Portuguezes at that time were) and of a very tyrannous diſpoſition: ſo as he omitted no kind of cruelty to get mony: and did willingly giue eare to them that found out any inuention to call the inhabitants of the Iland in queſtion, for the breach of his capitulations, Edicts, and Ordonances, to the end he might forfeit their goods. To effect the which, one Amador de Vieira gaue him good meanes, who beeing ſecretly entertayned in that Iland by King Philip, to
B diſcouer who was affected to him, and to entertayn them in that good will to ſerue him, when as he thought he had diſcouered all, he carried the roule to Emanuel de Silua, who made his profit thereof. Monſieur de Chattes being arriued at the Tercera's, he would ſee all the fortifications of the Iland, and vnderſtand the reaſons: for he did not comprehend much, conſidering the number of men, the defence of ſo many forts would require: wiſhing that Emanuel de Silua had rather made one ſtrong retreat, capable of all that was good in the Iland, both men, victuals, munition, and other things in the beſt place thereof, which might haue beene able to endure a ſeege vntill winter, with the ſouldiers and inhabitants that were there, the which making in all fiue or ſixe hundred men, good and bad, beeing well led and commanded, might make a gallant defence, and not truſt to thoſe ſmall forts, which were neither made with iudgement, nor able to hinder the ene-
C mies landing: for they did not defend the third part of the approches of that Iland, the which hee found not ſo inacceſſible as they had deſcribed it vnto him in France: This Knight did alſo find, that there was ſmall prouiſion of victuals and munition, although there were good ſtore of Ordinance. So as he made accompt, that if the Marquis came with ſuch forces, as were giuen out, theſe Ilands were loſt without recouerie. Yet like a man of courage, he repayred, as well as he could, the defects of theſe hen-rouſts, exhorting them all to be of good cheare, and to hope well, and that howſoeuer, he would dye honorably with them. The preſence of this Captaine did much comfort the inhabitants of the Iland, and did ſomewhat aſſure Emanuel de Sylua: who notwithſtanding had pre-
D pared for his eſcape, if he ſaw himſelfe preſt; for he kept two veſſels readie in the port, to fly into, whereof Monſieur de Chattes was in doubt, and therefore he obſerued him.

Monſieur de Chattes comes to Tercera.

The Marquis of Santa Cruz hauing put to ſea with 30. ſhips of warre, 12. gallies, two galeaſſes, 5. galleons, and other ſmaller veſſels armed, to the number of 60. beſides carauels, pinaces, and other ſhips of burthen, carrying 10000. men, Spaniards, Italians, Germanes, and Portuguezes, vnder Lope de Figueroa, Francis de Bouadilla, and Iohn de Sandoual, Colonels of the Spaniards, Lucio Pignatello of the Italians, Ierome Ledron of the Germaines, and Felix d'Arragon of the Portuguezes. He came to the Iland of S. Michel the 3. of Iuly, where hauing alſo imbarked the Regiment of Auguſtine Iniques, which he had left there the yeare before, he then ſayled towards the Tercere, where the citty of Angra is, in the port whereof hee ſaw the ſhips which had brought Monſieur de Chattes
E and his men, and ſome other veſſels, which the Gouernors did vſe to ſend to ſea: there he left certaine gallies to keepe them in, and inſtantly cauſed the city to be ſummoned, offering a pardon to the Inhabitants, and a good compoſition to the Captaines and ſouldiers: but they anſwered him with the Canon: the Marquis ſeeing that all landing places neere vnto the cittie were fortified, he began to coaſt along the ſhoare to find ſome fitte deſcent, but it ſeemed to him, that all were rampared and fortified: being in this care, he was aduertiſed by a Portugueze, that there was a good landing place at port des Moles, farre from Angra, where preſenting himſelfe, he found ſome acceſſe, but difficult, both for that the place was ſtonie, and there was a fort built: yet he did hazard ſome ſouldiers,
F who did aſſure the way for the reſt. Beeing at land, they that garded this fort made ſome reſiſtance, which gaue Monſieur de Chattes time, being aduertiſed by the fires and ſmoke, and by the bels which hung at either of theſe forts, to draw his men together French and Portuguezes, to go and ſuccor them: but vpon the way he found the ſouldiers which had abandoned this fort flying, whom he cauſed to returne with him, being reſolued to fight with the enemie, the which he indeauored to do, and might haue amazed him, if Emanuel

Army of Spaine going to the Tercere.

Conqueſt of the Ilands of the Terceres for King Philip.

de

de Silua the Gouernor, and his men had held good: but they did not continue as they had begun: for hauing skirmiſhed well all the day againſt the Spaniards, and others of the Marquiſes armie, and againſt hunger, through the bad order of Emanuel de Silua, night beeing come, they abandoned the French, and retired to the mountaine, whether the Commander de Chattes was forced alſo to make his retreat with his French troupe: for there was no reaſon, that ſo few men ſhold wilfully make head againſt an army of 12000. Emanuel de Silua thought then to go and imbarke himſelfe, and to flie away, but he could not, for euery man watched him, and therefore he retired alſo to the mountaine, to a place apart. It was ſtrange to heare thoſe Ilanders (who before had ſeemed ſo braue) to call then vpon Caſtile, and to confeſſe, that thoſe Ilands did belong vnto King Philip. The Marquis ſeeing himſelfe maſter of the field, marched towards the citty of Angra, which he found abandoned and emptie, ſo as the ſouldiers made ſmall profit of the ſacke therof. When as the Marquis entred the citty by land, the gallies ſeized vpon the ſhippes which were within the port without reſiſtance, for there were neither ſouldiers nor marriners in them. From thence Don P*edro de Toledo* was ſent to the Iland of Fayal to ſubdue them that would not acknowledge the King of Spaine. In the meane time the Marquis apprehending the difficultie to draw the French out of thoſe rockes by force, hee ſought to haue them by ſome honeſt compoſition. The Commander de Chattes at the beginning made great demands, conſidering the eſtate whereunto he was reduced, which made the Spaniards reſolue to vanquiſh them, or to loſe their liues, and ſo they did promiſe the Marquis, but he did auoyd that danger, hauing found more moderation in thoſe poore forelorne men: for ſo they might well be tearmed: for had he not fought with them, hunger would ſoone haue forced them to haue yeelded to his mercie. Their accord was treated by a Colonel called Pedro de Padilla, whom the Commaunder de Chattes had ſometimes knowne at Malta, where it was concluded, that they ſhould deliuer vp their armes and enſignes, keeping onely their ſwords, and that they ſhould lodge in a quarter of the cittie, and ſhippes prouided for their retreat. D. P*edro de Toledo* beeing come to Fayal, ſought to perſwade the ſouldiers and inhabitants to yeeld without force: wherefore hee ſent vnto the Gouernor, whoſe name was P*ero Antonio Guedes de Soſa*, a man of qualitie that was in his company, who had his wife and children in that Iland, to let him vnderſtand what had happened to the Iland of Tercere, and to perſwade him to apply himſelfe vnto the time, and to yeeld to the Conqueror. This Gouernour being proude and diſdainfull, making no other anſwer to this meſſenger, ſlue him: wherefore Don P*edro* ſtaying awhile, doubting that which had hapned, began to aduance with 2500. ſoldiers which he had brought, beeing to skirmiſh with 400. French which came to encounter them, whom he made to retire ſoone into their fort, & to yeeld vpon the ſame conditions, that the reſt had done. S*oſa* was taken, who (for the vild part he had played with him, that was ſent by D. P*edro*) was hung vp by one arme, both his hands hauing beene firſt cut off. The Portugals of the Iland were ſackt, and then left free, hauing ſubmitted themſelues to the Kings obedience. Anthony of Portugall was left Gouernor there with 200. ſouldiers, and the reſt returned with the gallies to the Tercere, where as the Ilanders came and made the ſubmiſſions that were required. So as there was not any one but did acknowledge King Philip for king of Portugal. Before the Marquis of Santa Cruz returned, he cauſed Emanuel de Silua's proces to be made, hauing had no meanes to eſcape, who, with ſome others were executed, Emanuel loſt his head, and ſo did Amador Vieira, hee who had diſcouered the Portugals in the Iland, that were affected to the k. Emanuel Surradas, who had ſpoiled the Ilands of Cap Verd, was alſo beheaded, others of meaner qualitie were hanged. The mony which had beene coyned with D. Antonio's ſtampe, was condemned as counterfeit, and a great quantitie was burnt in the market place of Angra. This done, the Marquis hauing diſpoſed of the eſtate of theſe Ilands, and left Iohn d'Vrbine for Gouernor of the Tercere, with 2000. foot, he bent his courſe towards Spain, and arriued ſafely with his fleet in the ports of Andaluſia, where there was great ioy, as alſo in Portugal, and thanks giuen to God for ſo happy a victory, which put King P*hilip* in a peaceable poſſeſſion of the Realme of Portugal, and all the dependances, ſo as he might then iuſtly intitle himſelfe King of all Spaine.

Angra at the Terceres taken by the Marquis of Santa Cruz.

Fayall and the other Ilands yeelded to king Philip.

The end of the 30. Booke.

A CONTINVATION OF THE GENERALL HISTORY OF Spaine, from the yeare, 1583. to this time.

THE warre of Portugall beeing ended, Philip, King of Spaine, ſubdued the Ilands which had made reſiſtance: he returned into Caſtile, whether the Eſtates of Arragon, and other weightie affaires did call him. Among other things, there was a mariage treated of betwixt Catherine his youngeſt daughter, and the Duke of Sauoy, which allyance, hee held, would be both profitable and honorable to himſelfe, and the whole houſe of Auſtria, and therefore he concluded the marriage, but it was conſumated the yeare following.

Mariage concluded betwixt Catherine Infanta of Spain, and the Duke of Sauoy.

This yeare the king would haue his ſonne ſworne Prince of Spaine, the which was done with great ſollemnitie, in S. Hieromes church in Madrid, the twelfth day of Nouember, there beeing preſent the King, his ſiſter Mary, wife to the Emperour Maximilian, the Prince, and the two Infanta's: where the Cardinall of Toledo began to ſing a ſollemne Maſſe, there aſſiſting the Cardinal Granuella, with the Biſhops of Placencia, Salamanca, Zamorra, Auila, Segouia, Coria, Siguença, and Oſma Granuello preſented the Euangell and the Paxe vnto the king, the like did the Biſhop of Placencia to the Infants. Maſſe beeing ended, the Prince was conducted by Cardinall Granuello neere vnto the altar, and there he receyued from Toledo the oth of confirmation, and then was returned backe vnto his place. Then did a King at armes riſe from his ſeate, and going to the left ſide of the altar, where as Princes Ambaſſadours, and the Noblemen of the Realme did ſit, crying out with a loud voyce, That the Prince Don Philip was to be ſworne: but after him there followed one of the Kings Councell, deliuering in particular the forme of that oth: and how the Empreſſe Mary ſhold ſweare with the two Infanta's the Princes ſiſters: but preſently the Emperours Ambaſſadour made it knowne, that that Empreſſe was to take the oath as Infanta of Spaine, and not as Queene of Romanes.

The firſt were the King and his ſiſter, who performed that ceremonie vppon the Maſſe booke, and the Croſſe, which were preſented vnto them: but when as the Empreſſe wold haue kiſt her Nephewes hand, according to the cuſtome, hee would not, for modeſtie ſake ſuffer her, and ſo ſhee was conſtrained to kiſſe his fore-head. After, the Empreſſe followed the Infanta's, and then the Biſhops, the Admirall of Caſtile, the Marquis of Villena, the Duke of Paſtrana, the Marquis of Denia, the Prince of Aſcoly, and ſo all the Grande's Grande's and chiefe Noblemen of the Court, the Marquis of Aguilar, and the Cardinal of Toledo ſwearing laſt of all. A Ambaſſadors come from Japon into Spaine.

The ioy of this ceremonie was augmented by the arriuall of three Ambaſſadors, which had beene ſent two yeares before from three Kings of Iapon, of Bugno, Fiunga, and Arima, to the Pope, by the perſwaſion of the Ieſuits, who deſired that thoſe Princes, ſeeing the noble and politicke gouernement of theſe countries, and the greatnes of the greatneſſe of the Pope of Rome, might be edified and freed of a certaine opinion which they had conceyued, that Chriſtians came into their countries to get meanes to liue. They came into Spaine beeing acccompanied by father Alexander Valignari, Viſitor in thoſe parts, at ſuch time as the Court was full of feaſts and ioy, for the proſperous ſucceſſe of Portugal, for the concluſion of the Infanta's mariage, and for the ſwearing of the prince: ſo as they were not onely receiued by the Catholike king, and the whole Court, with greate pompe and ſtate, but with extraordinarie content. The King at their receptrion, would not ſuffer them to kiſſe his hand, but embraced them as his equals, and to do them the more fauour, would haue both the Infanta's to do the like: hee made them ſee all his delights, and rareſt things: and at the Princes ceremonie he commanded they ſhould be ſet at his right hand, in the firſt place, whereas two men appointed for that ſeruice, inſtructed them in the order of the ceremonie, naming euery Nobleman, and what place hee held, as they went to ſweare obedience to the Prince. The king hauing royally intreated them, and honored them all that might be, being to go for Italy, gaue them a Caroch and a Coach, commanding, that throughout all his realmes, they ſhould be receiued with all magnificence, cauſing a ſhippe to be prepared for them in Alicante, where they imbarked, but they were driuen by foule weather into Maiorca, yet in the end they arriued in Tuſcany. B C

Antwerpe, one of the chiefe townes in the Low-countries, was this Somer ſo ſtreightly beſeeged by the Duke of Parma, with the forces of Spaine, as hauing no releeſe, neither by ſea nor land, they were driuen to extreame want, and almoſt to deſpaire, whereupon they preſt their Confederates to ſuccour them: but the Eſtates not able to rayſe ſo great an armie, ſent a ſollemne ambaſſage of twelue of their Deputies to the French king to intreat him to take the Netherlands into his protection, as his owne ſubiects and vaſſals: the which did much trouble the Councell of Spaine, ſeeing that the French king might with ſinall difficultie get the poſſeſſion of thoſe countries, hauing the ſubiects hearts inclined vnto him: whereupon they ſought by letters, and all other meanes to draw them of Antwerpe to a reconciliation with the King of Spaine. Don Bernardin de Mendoça, Ambaſſador at that time in France for the Catholike King (hauing been ſent with ſome diſgrace out of England, for that contrarie to the dutie of his charge, he had beene a buſie practiſer againſt that State) vppon the arriuall of theſe Deputies to Paris, came with a great clamor vnto the King, telling him that the Eſtates of the Low-countries, as Rebels to the King of Spaine, had bin condemned of high treaſon by the Councell of the Inquiſition of Spaine, and therefore were to be rooted out. That remembring the ſtrict league aud allyance betwixt him and his maſter, he ſhould not giue them audience, but rather driue ſuch rebels out of his countrie: the which would turn to the good of France, (lying ſo neere vnto Spaine) and of all Chriſtendome, which was diſquieted with theſe wicked people. D E

Bernardin de Mendoza his ſpeech to the French King.

" " " "

That he ſhould do wrong vnto all other Princes, to whome ſuch preſidents are very preiudicial, if they ſhould countenance and ſupport their Rebels. But the King anſwered, that he would not giue audience to the Deputies of the generall Eſtates, as to Rebels, reuolted, but as to afflicted people, who complained of oppreſſions. That Princes had neuer, neither ought they refuſe to ayde the afflicted, eſpecially when as their greateſt deſire is to be reconciled to their Prince (to obtaine the which they informed the King, that they had made many petitions vnto the King of Spaine, and could get no anſwer:) and therefore he thought, that any man might ſeeke ſupport where he could, if right and iuſtice were denyed him, ſo as he was not to be blamed, if he gaue them audience. F

Anſwer of the French King to Mendoza.

" " " " " " " " "

In the beginning of this yeare, there was preparation made in Spaine for the mariage of the Infanta Donna Catherina, with that pompe that was befitting ſuch Princes:

" for

A for the effecting whereof, the King with his children, and the chiefe of the Nobility of Spaine, came to Sarragoſſa, about the end of February, the Duke of Sauoy beeing arriued in Doria's gallies at Barcelona on the 18. of the ſaid moneth: from whence hee went by land to Sarragoſſa, where his Maieſty attended him without the citty, and receiued him with wonderfull ſignes of ioy, doing him exceeding great honour. The ſame day that he arriued, he put the ring vpon his ſpouſes finger, the King her father holding her hand, there aſſiſting at the ceremonie, the Cardinall of Seuille, (to whom ſome few daies before a hat had beene ſent) with the Cardinall Granuella, who made them ſure: Monſieur Tauerna the Popes Nuntio, the Arch-biſhop of Sarragoſſa, Vincentio Grudenigo Ambaſſador of Venice, with other principall Noblemen. The next day, according to the cuſtome of the Realme, the married couple came to the Arch-biſhops church, (who performed the ceremonie) couered with a white vaile. Maſſe beeing ſayd, and returning to the pallace, they dyned in publike at one table, his Maieſty, the Duke, his wife, and the Infanta Donna Izabella, beeing all ſet of one ſide: for many daies after there were great triumphs, tiltings, tourneys, and other knightly ſports made by the Nobility of Spaine, who ſhewed themſelues very gallant in all their ſports, eſpecially the Duke of Medina del Rio-ſecco, Admirall of Caſtile, the Duke of Albuquerque, the Duke of Medina Celi, the Duke of Maqueda, the Marquis of Denia, the Duke of Paſtrana, the Marquis of Aguilar, and the Prince of Aſcoli, beſides the great Commander of Caſtile, who was fauorite and Lord Steward to the Prince D. Philip.

Mariage of the Duke of Sauoy, and the Infanta D. Catherina in Spaine.

C To theſe there ioyned a great number of Knights, of no leſſe Nobility, but not of ſo great dignitie, as well Spaniards as ſtrangers, who were come thither to honour this feaſt of the Catholike King their Lord. The Duke of Sauoy had alſo brought with him a great troupe of gallant Nobility, of the which, on the foure and twentith day of May, he made Knights of the Order of Saint Stephen, Iohn Baptiſta of Sauoia, and the Marquis of Chambery, and beſides theſe the Marquis of Nemours his couſin, and Aſcanio Roba who were abſent; and withall, Carlo Pallauicino, newly made Maſter of the Dutcheſſe horſe, Count Sanuitali, and Michel Bonelli. But eight dayes after the King did honour three Princes with the Order of the golden Fleece: the Duke his ſonne-in-law, the Admiral of D Caſtile, and the Duke of Medina Celi. There were many rich preſents mutually giuen by the King and Duke, and by the Noblemen both Spaniards and Italians. Then in the beginning of Iune the married couple beeing accompanied by the King, Prince, and the Infanta Donna Izabella, went to Barcellona, where they tooke ſhippe in Dorias Admirall gally, and beeing accompanied with forty other gallies, hee brought them ſafely to Genoua, and entertayned them with great ſtate in his owne houſe, from whence they paſt to Nizza, then going with an honorable trayne towards Turin, they were receyued with great ſignes of ioy, and the feaſts were renewed. But the King of Spaine beeing returned to Sarragoſſa, whither he had already ſent the Court, he cauſed the Prince to be ſworne with the ordinarie ſolemnities, and then he paſt into Caſtile.

E About the ſame time there came to Court Pomponio Torello, Earle of Mont Chiarulo, with an Ambaſſage from his Princes, the Duke and Prince of Parma, the firſt requiring of his Maieſtie the reſtitution of the caſtle of Placentia, ſo neceſſarie for the preſeruation, not of his Eſtate, but alſo of his life, the mutinous people of Placentia being animated by the Spaniſh garriſon, to practiſe againſt the Duke, as ſome conſpiratours had lately done, who beeing not ſuppreſt and puniſhed, although they were diſcouered, gaue him continuall cauſe of feare.

Ambaſſage ſent into Spain from the Duke of Parma.

The Prince did ſollicite concerning the enterpriſe of Antwerp, and alſo about his fathers affaires: yet he refuſed to receiue it as a fauour done to him, for that hee would not confirme an opinion, that he was as diſtruſtfull as his father, of the Crowne of Spaine, to F whom, and not to him, hee would haue the caſtle yeelded. This buſines was referred to Cardinall Granuella, the great Commaunder of Caſtile, and to Iohn d'Idiagues, at that time Secretarie of State, with commiſſion not to treate with any other of the Councell, it ſeeming the king ſhould yeeld that which hee ought. Granuella ſhewed himſelfe very willing, not onely for the equitie of the cauſe, but alſo for a priuate bond he had vnto the Prince, from whome he did aknowledge, that his brother Monſieur de Champaigny held his his life, and for his Maieſties ſeruice, whoſe affaires in Flanders depended chiefly vppon A the Prince: In the end the King reſolued to make this reſtitution vnto the Duke: and ſo he diſpatched Count Pomponio with a commiſſion to the Duke of Terranoua, Gouernour Caſtle of Placentia yelded. of the State of Milan, to cauſe the ſayd caſtle to be reſtored, the Caſtellan beeing abſent, the which was accordingly performed, and free poſſeſſion deliuered to Prince Raynucio in his Grandfathers name.

This yeare there grew a popular tumult in Naples, partly through the couetouſneſſe of the King of Spaines Miniſters in that Realme, during the time that the Duke of Oſſu-na was Viceroy, the King hauing giuen order to the Viceroy to ſupply their wants in Mutinie at Naples. Spaine, with ſuch corne as they might well ſpare within the Realme, hauing had a plen- B tifull harueſt: but they not onely tranſported the ouerplus, but that which was needefull for their owne vſe, by a greedie deſire of gaine: ſo as when the Spring came, they found that they had not corne ſufficient, which ſeeking to helpe by bringing in from forraine parts, they were forced to raiſe the price of corne, and to make their bread leſſe: wherewith the people beeing vexed, (for it ſeemed ſtrange to them to ſee ſcarcitie, whereas they expected abondance) who endured more by this want, then the reſt. Whilſt that on the ninth of May, their elect Iohn Vincentio Starace was with the Deputies in the church of Santa Maria del nouo, to conſult touching the prouiſion of corne, they began to mu-tine, ſaying, that it had beene accuſtomed to be done in Saint Auguſtines church, and to adde deedes vnto their words, they tooke Starace, beeing weake and ſicke, and carried C him with iniuries and ill vſage. Beeing come thither, he retired himſelfe into a chappell which had a grate before it, and there ſovght to pacifie the furie of this multitude with good words, the which notwithſtanding increaſed as the number did, growing almoſt madde.

There Staraee growing fearefull, cauſed himſelfe to be let downe into a tombe, which theſe mad men vnderſtanding, he was ſuddenly drawne foorth, and murthered with an hundred wounds, after which they drew him through the ſtreets, and tearing him in peeces, they carried them vp and downe the cittie, in ſigne of a cruell reuenge. The Viceroy carried himſelfe indiſcreetly in this mutinie, and full of feare, where as in the beginning he ſhould haue ſuppreſt it by force, and not to haue pourchaſed afterwards the name of D cruell in his ſeuere puniſhments, ſeeking to recouer the reputation which he had loſt: but the King of Spaine ſtayed this rigour, ſending a generall pardon concerning this murther.

The Deputies of the generall Eſtates beeing returned from France with many good Deputies ſent from the Eſtats of the Low-countries into England. words, but no effects, by reaſon of the league, which hindred the Kings deſire to embrace their cauſe, they had recourſe vnto the Queene of England, vnto whom they alſo ſent their Deputies, ſeeking to perſwade her to vndertake their protection againſt the king of Spaine, in regard of her owne priuate intereſt, and the good of both the Eſtates. This matter was weightie, and required a graue and deliberate conſultation. Shee called her Councell, and demanded their opinions, whether ſhee ſhould voluntarily ingage her E ſelfe in a warre without conſtraint, which ſhe muſt needes do, in taking vppon her the protection of the Low-countries. Whereupon they concluded, that ſhe might not with her owne ſafetie abandon the vnited Prouinces of the Netherlands, vnleſſe ſhe would ne-Reaſons why the Queene of England ſhold take protection of the Low-countries. glect the preſeruation of her owne Eſtate. They layed before her the King of Spaines hatred againſt her, hauing changed the religion, which he had planted in England, which appeared by his denying paſſage to her Merchants throughout the Low-countries, with armes, powder, and munition which he had bought in Germany. That he had refuſed to renue the auncient contracts made betwixt the Emperour Charles his father, and her predeceſſours. And to ſhew his hatred to her Maieſtie, he had ſuffered the Inquiſitors of Spaine to perſecute her poore ſubiects with all crueltie, and had diſmiſſed her Ambaſſa- F dour out of Spaine, vppon colour of Religion. That the Duke of Alba his Gouernour in the Low-conntries, had in hoſtile manner arreſted the bodies and goods of her ſub-iects, contrarie to the ancient contracts. That he had ſent forces to invade her realme of Ireland, and to ayde her rebels.

Beſides theſe and many other iniuries, the Lords of her Councell layed before her, how

A how dangerous it would be for her Eſtate, if the Spaniard ſhould become abſolute Lord of thoſe countries: that he would alter their religion, diſanull their auncient Priuiledges and liberties, and make them ſubiect to his will and pleaſure: which done, he might eaſily inuade England, hauing ſo much ſhipping, and ſo many marriners at his command, and his Indian treaſure, to ſupply all other wants. He would ouerthrow all trade betwixt her ſubiects and the Netherlanders, and would breed factions within the heart of her countrie. Theſe reaſons (ſayd they) ſhould mooue her Maieſtie to embrace the preſent occaſion, and not ſuffer the Low-countries to be planted with Spaniards and Italians, conſidering that the warre was not vndertaken againſt thoſe Prouinces, but with an intent to B make a greater conqueſt.

Whilſt that the Queene of England reſolues to vndertake the protection of the generall Eſtates of the vnited Prouinces, it was concluded to arme out a Fleete to annoy the King of Spaine vpon his owne coaſt, or at the Indies: whence his treaſor came. Wherefore this yeare 1585. in September, Sir Francis Drake was ſent out of England with a fleet of 25. ſhips and pinaces, and about 2300. ſouldiers and mariners. Maſter Chriſtopher Carlile was his Lieutenant generall, with many other gallant Captaines and Gentlemen, whoſe names for breuitie ſake I omit, being written at large by others. After ſome daies, this Fleet came to the Ilands of Bayonne, vppon the coaſt of Spaine, where the Generall putting his men into boates, and pinaces, went into his Galley, with an intent to
C ſurprize the towne: but vpon the way there came an Engliſh Merchant vnto them from the Gouernour, to ſee what Fleet it was, who after ſome ſpeech with the Generall, was returned backe, and one Captaine Sampſon with him, to demaund of the Gouernour, if there were any warres betwixt Spaine and England: and why they did arreſt the Engliſh Merchants, and their goods. To whome the Gouernour made this anſwer, that he knew not of any warre, and that it was not in his owne power to make any: and as for the ſtay of the Merchants, it was the kings pleaſure, but not with any intent to preiudice them, and that hee had receiued a countermaund to diſcharge them, the which hee did preſently.

Sir Francis Drake with a fleet vpon the coaſt of Spaine.

The lying of this Fleete at thoſe Ilands, did much trouble them in Spaine, beeing ig-
D norant of their intent. Whereuppon Don Aluaro de Baçan, Marquis of Santa Cruz, Admirall of Spaine, beeing then at Lisbone, did ſet downe in writing what harme this Fleete might do, if it ſhould go to the Weſt Indies, and enter into the South ſea, as Drake had formerly done: and what courſe was to bee taken to preuent thoſe inconueniences and dangers.

This Engliſh Fleete ſtayed not long vppon the coaſt of Spaine, but directed their courſe towards the VVeſt Indies, paſſing by the Canaries, and the Ilands of cape Verde, where they tooke the towne of S. Iago, which they ſpoiled and burnt, they came to the Iſland of S. Dominica, from whence they paſt to the Iſland of Hiſpaniola, where they tooke that gallant Cittie of S. Domingo by force, which after they ſpoyled, and burnt E a third part, the Spaniards made a compoſition for the reſt, paying fiue and twenty thouſand Duckets, at fiue ſhillings ſixe pence the peece. In this Iſland they found great ſtore of good prouiſion, but little ſiluer or plate, yet in their furniture they were very rich and coſtly.

S. Iago taken.

S. Domingo taken.

From Saint Domingo they put ouer to the mayne land, and came within ſight of Carthagena, which ſtands vppon the ſea ſide, where they made a gallant attempt vppon the towne, and tooke it: they landed their troupes fiue miles from the towne, whither they marched in battell: comming within halfe a mile of the towne, they were to paſſe vpon a narrow cauſey not fiue paces ouer, lying betwixt the ſea and the harbour: This ſtreight was croſt ouer with a wall well flanked, and a good ditch, hauing onely a paſſage
F for horſemen and carriages, if need required: which breach had a good barricado: and here there were ſixe peeces of Ordinance planted, which ſcoured along the cauſey, and in the harbor, or inner water, they had layd two gallies, with their prowes to the ſhore, hauing eleuen peeces of Ordinance in them, which did beate croſſe this ſtreight, and three or foure hundred ſmall ſhot: notwithſtanding all this preparation to receiue them, the Lieutenant generall (it beeing very darke, and not yet day) marched by the ſea ſhoare, ſo as they receiued little harme by their ſhot, and comming cloſe vp to the wall, after A ſome reſiſtance they ouerthrew the Barricado, and forced the Spaniards to retire, they entred pel mel with them into the towne, and wan the market place, where the Spaniards made head awhile, after which they abandoned the towne, and retired to other places, whither they had carried their wiues at the comming of the Engliſh. They had drawne many Indians vnto them, all bow-men with poyſoned arrowes; them they had placed in corners of aduantage, ſo as if they did but breake the skinne of any one, he dyed. The armie ſtayd here ſixe weekes, and burnt the out-parts of it, but in the end there was a compoſition made, by the which they ſhould pay an hundred and ten thouſand duckets for the ranſome of the reſt. They had beene aduertiſed of this Fleet 20. daies before their ar- B riuall, which had made them fortifie in that manner for their defence, and to conueygh away their wealth. Hauing made this compoſition, they left the towne, and lodged in an Abbey, within a quarter of a mile of it, demanding a new compoſition for it, and a fort which ſtood at the mouth of the harbor: but not able (as they ſayd) to ranſome the fort, it was blowne vp. From thence the Fleet went to Cape Saint Anthony, and then to the Cape of Florida, where they found a fort held by the Spaniards, the which, vppon their approach they abandoned: They found in it thirteene peeces of braſſe Ordinance, and a cheſt of ſome 2000. pounds ſterling, to pay the Kings Garriſon, which conſiſted of a hundred and fiftie men. This fort was called Saint Iohns, from whence they went vp the maine riuer to a towne ca'led S. Auguſtines. And then the Fleet returned into England. C

They tooke in this action 200. peeces of braſſe Ordinance, and 40. of Iron. In Saint Iago two or three and fiftie peeces: In S. Domingo foure ſcore, whereof moſt was Cannon, Demi-cannon, Culuerin, and ſuch like. In Carthagena ſixtie three peeces: and in Saint Auguſtines fort fourteene, the reſt was Iron Ordinance.

There was ſuch exceſſe in their ſtyles, and in their ſpeaking and writing one vnto another, as vpon petition made vnto the King, he made an Edict and ſet downe a forme, what termes they ſhould vſe both in their ſpeaking and writing, as followeth:

D

Pragmatica, or an Edict:

In the which is ſet downe a forme which is to be kept and obſerued in their entertainments and courteſies of word and writing, and in carrying of Coronets vpon their Armes.

E

DOn Philip by the Grace of God, King of Caſtile, Leon, Arragon, the two Sicilies, Ieruſalem, Portugall, Nauarre, Granado, Toledo, Valencia, Gallicia, Maiorca, Seuile, Sardinia, Cordoua, Corſica, Murcia, Iaen, the Algarues, Algezire, and Gibraltar: of the Ilands of the Canaries, of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, and the Ilands and firme land of the Ocean ſea; Arch-duke of Auſtria, Duke of Bourgondie, Brabant and Milan, Earle of Ausbourg, Flanders, Tirol, and Barcelona, Lord of Biſcay, Molina, &c. To the Prince Don Philip our moſt deere and welbeloued Sonne, and to the Infanta's, Prelates, Dukes, Marquiſes, Earles, Barons, Priors of Orders, Commaunders, and ſub-Commaunders, Captaines of Caſtles and places of ſtrength, and to thoſe of our F
Councell, Preſidents, and Iuſtices of our Courts, Commiſſioners, and Prouoſts of our Houſe, Court, and Chancerie, and to all Corrigidors, Aſſiſtants, Gouernours, chiefe Inſtices, &c. and to all other our Officers, and naturall ſubiects, of what eſtate, preheminence or dignitie ſoeuer they be, or may be, in all the citties, townes, places, and Prouinces of our Realmes and Seigniories, both preſent and to come, and to euery one of you

A you whom the contents of this our Edict may concerne, health and peace.

You ſhall vnderſtand, that at the ſute of the Atturneys of Courts of the Citties and Townes of theſe our Realmes, we haue beene forced to prouide a neceſſarie and conuenient remedie, concerning the diſorder and abuſe, which is in the entertainements by word and writing, the exceſſe whereof was growne ſo great, and come to paſſe, as it had cauſed ſome inconueniences, and daily more might be expected, if it were not reformed, and reduced to ſome good auncient order, ſeeing that true honour doth not conſiſt in vanities, or titles giuen by word or writing, but in greater matters: whereunto theſe do neither adde nor diminiſh. And hauing often treated thereof with our Councell, Wee
B haue ordayned as followeth in this our preſent Edict.

Firſt, although it be not neceſſarie to treate herein of our ſelfe, nor of the perſons of Kings, yet to the end that it may be the better obſerued and kept, which doth concerne them, We will and command, that from hencefoorth, on the toppe of the letter or paper that ſhall be written vnto vs, there ſhall bee no other title put, but Seignior, or My Lord, nor in the end of the letter, any thing, but God preſerue the perſon of your Catholike Maieſtie, nor the ſubſcription below, any thing but his name that writes it: and vpon the ſuperſcription, there ſhall be onely ſet, To the King our Lord.

That to the Princes heires and ſucceſſors of theſe our Realmes, they ſhall write in the ſame forme, changing only Maieſtie into Highnes, and that of King into Prince, and in C the end of the letter, God preſerue your Highneſſe.

The ſame forme and ſtyle ſhall be obſerued, with the Queenes of theſe our realmes, as with their Kings, and likewiſe with the Princeſſes of the ſayd Queenes, as with their Princes.

That the Infants and Infanta's of theſe our Realmes, ſhall onely haue the title of Highneſſe: In the top of the letter they ſhall write, My Lord, and in the end, God keepe your Highneſſe, without any other ceremonie: and vppon the Superſcription, To my Lord the Infant D.N. or, To my Lady the Infanta Donna N. Wherefore when they do ſpeake or write Highneſſe, without any other addition, it is onely to bee vnderſtood of the D Prince, the heire and ſucceſſor of theſe our Realmes. Declaring, that it is not our will nor intent, that the contents of this Edict ſhall extend to Donna Maria the Empreſſe, my moſt deare and welbeloued ſiſter, although ſhe be an Infanta of Caſtile, beeing certaine, that ſhe is to be called and written Maieſtie; and vpon the ſuperſcription, To my Ladie the Empreſſe: and her ſonnes, (brothers to the Emperour, our moſt deare and welbeloued Nephew) ſhall haue the ſame titles that are giuen to the Infants of theſe Realmes, and in like manner to the Arch-dukes his Vncles.

That to the ſonnes-in-law, and brothers-in-law of the kings of theſe Realmes, ſhall be giuen the ſame titles that their wiues haue, and daughters in law to the ſayd Kings, ſhall be vſed like vnto their husbands.

E And as for the entertainment which the ſayd royall perſons are moreouer to haue, our meaning is not to innouate any thing of that which hath beene accuſtomed.

That the ſtyle vſed in the petitions which are preſented to our Councell, and in the other Councels, Chanceries and Tribunals, and the words which they vſe when they are in Councell, ſhall be obſerued as hath beene hitherto, vnleſſe it be contrarie to this our prouiſion, and on the toppe they may ſet, Moſt mightie Lord, and no more.

That in the ſigning of all our letters, ſcedules, and prouiſions, our Secretaries ſhall ſet, By the King our Lord, in the ſtead of Maieſtie, and in the ſigning of our Secretaries of the chamber, they ſhall do the like.

That in all iudiciall ſeates, as well belonging vnto vs, as to any other, and of what F qualitie ſoeuer, whether they ſpeake in priuate or in publike, the petitions, demaunds, and quarrels ſhall be begunne in a lyne, with that which they are to treate of, without ſetting any title, word, or ſigne of courteſie on the toppe: And in the concluſion, they may ſay: For the which I implore the office of your S. or your W. (according to the perſons and Iudges to whome they are to ſpeake.) And the Notaries ſhall onely ſay: By the commaundement and decree of N. the Iudge ſetting to his name and ſurname onely: they may alſo adde the name of ſuch a mans Office, and the dignitie and degree A which he hath taken, without any other title.

That no man of what eſtate, condition, dignitie, degree or office whatſoeuer; ſhall aſſume vnto himſelfe, either by word or writing, the title of Excellencie, nor of excellent Lord, neither may any be called Reuerent Lord, but onely Cardinals, and the Archbiſhop of Toledo, as Primate of Spaine, although he be no Cardinall.

That to Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Grande's, and ſuch as we command to be couered, all men within our Realmes, ſhall be bound to giue the title of Your Lordſhip, and alſo to the Preſident of our royall Councell.

That to Marquiſes, Earles, great Commanders of the Orders of S. Iames, Alcantara, B and Calatraua, and to the Preſidents of our other Councels and Chanceries, the title of Lordſhip may be giuen both by writing and word, and not to any other, vnleſſe it be to the chiefe citties of the Realme, and to Senates, and to Metropolitane Churches, to whom they may giue that addition, as they haue beene accuſtomed.

That to Ambaſſadors in like manner, which haue place in our Chappell, may bee written or ſpoken Seigneurie or Lordſhip.

That in what concernes writing from one man vnto another generally without exception, this forme ſhall be obſerued. They ſhall begin the letter with the buſines they are to treate of, without ſetting beneath the Croſſe, or on the toppe of it, or at the beginning of the line, any title, cypher, or letter: and they muſt end the letter, ſaying, God C keepe your Seigneurie, or Lordſhip, or Worſhip, and then the date of the time and place, and then his ſignature, without any courteſie before it: and hee tha thath taken a title, ſhall mention it when he ſignes, and whence that title is.

That in Superſcriptions, to a Prelate ſhall bee ſet dqwne the eccleſiaſticall dignitie which he hath, and to a Duke, a Marquis, or an Earle, that of his eſtate, and to Knights, and other men their names and ſurnames, ſaying, To the Cardinall, Archbiſhop or Biſhop of ſuch a place. And in like manner, To the Duke, the Marquis or Earle of ſuch a place: and to meaner men: To Don N. or to N. adding his ſurname, and to euerey one named in this Article, may be ſet the dignitie, office, charge, or degree which hee holds.

The vaſſall ſhall not be excepted out of this order, writing to his Lord, not the ſeruant D to his maſter: but the father to the ſonne, and the ſonne father, may adde their naturall name to their proper, and betwixt the husband and the wife, they may note the eſtate of their marriage, and betwixt brethren the like allyance.

That the complements to women, and among themſelues, by word or writing, ſhall be the ſame that is vſed to their husbands.

That to men of religious Orders, there ſhall be no other title giuen but father-hood, or reuerence, according to the charge which he holds. And in the ſuperſcription with his name, they may ſet the charge and degree which he hath in thoſe Orders.

That what ſoeuer is contayned in theſe our letters and prouiſion, ſhall be obſerued by all the ſubiects of our dominions, yea writing to them that are abſent. E

Moreouer, to preuent the great diſorder and exceſſe which hath beene, and is daily committed, in ſetting Coronets to their Scutcheons of armes, and to their ſeales and ſomter cloathes, We do ordaine and command, that no manner of perſon ſhall ſet any Coronet to his ſeale or ſompter cloath, nor in any other place where he hath armes, except Dukes, Marquiſes, and Earles, who we hold may carry them, beeing in their right forme, and not otherwiſe: And that the Coronets which haue beene carried, ſhalbe preſently left, and no more vſed.

And to the end it may be the better kept, obſerued, and executed, we ordaine and command, that whoſoeuer ſhall go againſt the contents of this our Edict, or any part therof, ſhal for euery breach incur a penalty of 10000. marauidis to be diuided after this maner: F a third part for the Informer, another third part for the Iudge that ſhal giue ſentence, and the reſt to godly vſes, the which ſhalbe executed without any remiſſion. Wherefore we command all and euery of you, that ſhall ſee theſe our letters and prouiſion, and the contents therof, (the which we deſire ſhould hold the force of a Law or an Edict, made and regiſtred in our courts) that you obſerue and keep it, and cauſe it to be obſeru'd & kept in euery

A euery point, according to the contents, againſt the forme and tenour whereof you ſhall not do, nor ſuffer to be done at any time, nor in any ſort, vppon the penalties which they do incurre, which breake the commandements of their Kings and naturall Lords, and vppon paine of our diſpleaſure, and the ſaid thouſand marauidis, for euery one that do to the contrarie. And to the end that no man ſhall pretend ignorance thereof, wee command that theſe our ſaid Letters and prouiſion ſhall be proclaimed publikely in our Court, and that the contents be preciſely and inviolably obſerued, from the firſt day of the yeare following 1587. and that no man do otherwiſe in any ſort, vpon the ſaid paines.

Dated at S. Laurence the 8. day of October, in the yeare 1586.

B

Signed. IO EL REY.

THis yeare Don P*edro de Toledo*, ſonne to D. Garcia, ſought to make an attempt vpon Affricke, but the little experience of ſome Neapolitans which landed in a ſmall Iland called Cherchine, was the cauſe of their ouerthrow and death, beeing defeated by a ſmall number of Moores which put them to flight. Toledo beeing landed with the reſt of his troupes, and gone vp the other ſide of the Iland, he vnderſtood by the mariners of his mens ſucceſſe, which holding for an ill preſage, without care of any reuenge, hee began to faint, retiring with all his men into his gallies, and bent his courſe towards Sicily, where ſeeking to find ſome Pyrates, in the end he came to Naples, whether ſoone after came D. Iohn de Zuniga, or Eſtuniga, Earle of Miranda, and Viceroy of Naples, the D. of Oſſuna beeing called home into Spaine, to the great content of the Neapolitans, who taxed him for his cruell and couetous gouernement.

Pedro de Toledo vnfortunate in Affrick.

Earle of Miranda Viceroy of Naples.

This yeare there was another enterpriſe by an Engliſh Gentleman, whoſe name was Thomas Cauendiſh, who paſſed into the South ſeas, as Sir Francis Drake had done: where after many accidents in Nouember 1587. the Generall hauing two ſhippes, mette with a great ſhippe of the King of Spaines called Saint Anna, the which was Admirall of the South-ſea, beeing about 700. tunnes burthen, the which, after ſix or ſeuen houres fight; and three ſeuerall charges, yeelded, to haue their liues ſaued. In which ſhippe, by the confeſſion of the Captaine and Pilot, they had an hundred and two and twenty thouſand Pezo's of gold, and the reſt of the lading was in ſilkes, ſatten, damaske, muske, with many other good commodities: in the end they ſet fire of the Kings ſhippe and burnt her, hauing to the quantitie of 500. tunnes of goods in her: then ſayling by the Philippina's, the Moluccos, and the Cape of Bona Speranza, they arriued ſafely in England, in September 1588.

Cauendiſh takes the S. Anna in the South ſeas.

King Philip (after much warre, the loſſe of his wiues and children, and the little hope he had of long life in the Prince his ſonne, beeing of a weake complexion, and ill diſpoſed) beganne this yeare to haue more cauſe of content, for now the young Prince began to bee vigorous, and of a ſpirit befitting an heire of ſo great dominions: and on the other ſide, the ſecond Infanta Donna Catherina hauing had a ſonne the laſt yeare, did this yere double his ioy with another, giuing him the more content, for that the firſt was chriſtened with ſo great ſolemnitie the twelfth day of May, foure daies after that the ſecond was borne.

Yet touching his publike affaires, the Low-countrie warres troubled him much, the which hee referred to the valour and wiſedome of the Duke of Parma, and liued himſelfe quietly in Spaine. But finding, that the Queene of England did fauour and protect his Rebels of the Low-countries, (as he tearmed them,) and that ſhee did feed the fire, of that long warre, to be reuenged of that iniurie, and to employ his forces to aduance the Romiſh religion, he made preparation to tranſport the miſeries of warre into England, giuing countenance and entertainment to all the fugitiue Papiſts of that country.

The Queene of England beeing aduertiſed of this great preparation in Spaine for the inuaſion of England, ſhee was aduiſed to preuent it: whereuppon ſhee armed foorth a Fleet of ſome 30 ſayle, in the which there were 4. ſhips, and 2 pinaces of her Maieſties, the reſt were Merchants of good ſeruice. Sir Francis Drake was appointed Generall of this A Fleete, which went towards the coaſt of Spaine this yeare, in Aprill. And beeing aduertized, that there was great ſtore of warlike prouiſion at Cadiz, the which was readie to go for Lisbon, he made all poſſible ſpeed thither, to intercept theſe prouiſions: ſo as on the 19 of Aprill, he entred with his Fleet into the harbour of Cadiz; where at the firſt they were affronted by ſixe gallies, but they ſoone retired vnder their fort.

There lay in the roade ſixtie ſhips, with diuers ſmaller veſſels vnder the fort; and ſuch as could paſſe the ſholds, fled vp to port Real: there came foure gallies more downe againſt them from Saint Mary port, and port Real: but they were well beaten: they burnt in this harbor a ſhippe of Ragouça, of a thouſand tunne, hauing fortie peeces of braſſe B
Ships burnt at Cadiz by the Engliſh. Ordinance in her, and richly laden, and another great new ſhip of twelue hundred tunne, belonging to the Marquis of Santa Cruz, high Admirall of Spaine, with many others laden with victuals, wine, iron workes, biſcuit, oyle, fruite, and other commodities, which were to be tranſported to the Indies, or to ſerue for the prouiſion of the Fleet which was preparing for England: ſo as they burnt, ſunke, and carried away to the number of thirty ſhippes and barkes, beeing as they eſteemed them ten thouſand tuns of ſhipping. Whileſt they lay in the roade, the gallies and forts ſhot continually at them: and ſuch ſhippes as they could defend no longer, they fired, to driue among the Engliſh ſhippes, who were ſomewhat troubled to auoid them. This reſolute attempt was performed in one day and two nights, to the great amazement of the King of Spaine, and the Marquis of Santa C Cruz his Admirall.

After their comming out of the roade of Cadiz, this Engliſh Fleete was followed by ten gallies, who notwithſtanding ſuffred them to ride quietly at an anchor by them. Then they bent their courſe towards cape Sacre, beeing well victualled at the enemies charge: vpon the way they tooke at ſeuerall times, almoſt an hundred ſhippes, barkes, and carauels, laden with hoopes, gally oares, pipe-ſtaues, with other prouiſions for the King of Spaines armie intended for England; all which they burnt, and landed the men. They alſo ſpoyled the fiſher-boates, and nets, for the fiſhing of Tunies. And comming to Cape Sacre, they landed, and tooke three forts, ſome by force, the reſt by compoſition. From thence they came neere vnto Lisbone, anchoring neere vnto Caſcais, where the Mar- D quis of Santa Cruz was with his gallies, and yet he came not foorth againſt them. Hauing a meſſage ſent him by the Generall, that he was readie there to exchange certaine bullets with him: the Marquis returned him an anſwer, that hee was not readie for him, neither had he any ſuch commiſſion from the king his maſter.

The Generall ſeeing no more good to be done vpon the coaſt of Spaine, hee bent his courſe towards the Ilands of the Açores, where (by good fortune) beeing within thirty leagues of Saint Michels, he met with a Caracke of Portugall, called S. Philip, the which Carack of Portugal taken by Sir Francis Drake. they tooke, hauing made little reſiſtance, ſending the people home into their country, in other veſſels well furniſhed with victuals. And this was the firſt Carake that euer was taken comming from the Eaſt Indies. The riches of this prize was held exceeding great, E whereupon they reſolued to returne into England, the which they did with their whole Fleete, and their admirable rich prize.

The religious deſire which the Catholike King had long had, to haue Friar Diego Seni-
S. Diego canonized. liano of the caſtle of Saint Nicholas, to be canonized a Saint, being dead in Spaine ſome hundred and fiue and twenty yeares before, with an opinion of holineſſe throughout all Spaine, did this yeare take effect: for that ſince the yeare 1563. inſtance beeing made by him, and the Spaniards, to Pope Pius the fourth, to Pius the fifth, and then to Gregory the 13. all which dyed before this buſines could be ended. But continuing in this zealous diſpoſition, he commanded the Earle of Oliuares, his Ambaſſadour reſident at Rome, to mooue it againe to Pope Sixtus the fifth, ſo as on the third of Iuly this yeare, hee was F canonized a Saint, at the charges of the King of Spaine, and his feaſt day appoynted the twelfth day of Nouember, to the great content of all Spaine. This yeare the Catholike King ſent the Duke of Sabioneta out of Italy into Poland, to pacifie the tumults and confuſions of that Realme, which were growne by the election of two kings, the Pope hauing alſo ſent Cardinall Aldobrandini thither to that end.

The

A The King of Spaine after the conqueſt of Portugal, hauing gathered together a great Nauy of ſhips, and leauied a mighty army, euery man thought, hee would make ſome great enterpriſe according to the oportunity that was offered; but mens opinions were diuided touching the action, for that their humors and diſpoſitions beeing diuers, they propounded things according to the quallitie of their owne paſſions. And ſo it fell out in the ordinarie diſcourſes which were made touching the Catholike Kings enterpriſe, which they all reſtrained to three, againſt Afrike, England, or the vnited Eſtates of the Netherlands: but to reſolue which was moſt expedient for his Maieſty, they all diſagreed, ſome ſeeking to perſwade him to attempt the Netherlands, o-B thers Afrike, but moſt England.

In the end a truce beeing concluded betwixt the King of Spaine and the Turke, and thereby the enterpriſe of Afrike cut off; the queſtion was now whether hee ſhould inuade England or the Netherlands. Wherevpon there was one which deliuered his reaſons, by way of diſcourſe to the Catholike King, ſhewing that it was more conuenient for him to make warre againſt England, then againſt the vnited Eſtates. It ſeemes hee was vaſſall to the King of Spaine, as you may iudge by the vanity of his diſcourſe. Many (ſaid he) conſidering at the firſt ſight, the Catholike Kings intereſt to the Netherlands and to England, affirme, that although hee haue great pretenſions to this Iſland, yet he is more bound to recouer the Netherlands, then to conquer England; for that
C in all policy of ſtate, wee ſhould rather ſeeke to preſerue that which wee hold, then to conquer new. Although this maxime of ſtate be of great force, yet (ſaid he) I doe not hold it to bee of ſuch import, as it ſhall ſway downe the ballance, without all contradiction.

Diſcourſe touching the preparation of Spaine 1588.

For in theſe graue conſultations, we muſt not onely conſider what is to bee done, but how it may be moſt profitable, moſt eaſily, and moſt conueniently done: For that many times Princes are incited to enterpriſes by honour and duty; and yet the conſideration of many circumſtances and diſcommodities reſtraine them: wherefore the conſideration (which binds vs more to preſerue that which wee hold, then to get new) is not ſufficient to conclude, that his Catholike Maieſty ſhould rather vndertake the enterpriſe
D of the Netherlands, then that of England, neither ſhould wee in effects of ſo great importance, giue credit to ſuch light reaſons. But to the end it may appeere plainely that the King of Spaine is bound in all reſpects to the enterpriſe of England, I will firſt of all (ſaid he) lay not onely a true, but a neceſſary foundation, which ſhall ſupport the whole building of my opinion; which is, that conquering England, he ſhal at the ſame inſtant conquer the Netherlands: but winning the Netherlands, England is not gotten, nay their hopes are no whit increaſed.

Moreouer, hee ſaid, that the conqueſt of England was not ſo difficult as that of the Netherlands. If then (ſaid he) the conqueſt of England drawes with it the Netherlands, and if bee more eaſie and more certaine; who doubts, that to peruert this order, were E to looſe a goodly occaſion, and to bee the workeman of his owne diſgrace? but I will prooue (ſaid he) with pertinent reaſons either member of my ground. That the conqueſt of England is more profitable then that of the Netherlands; and that it is more eaſie. For my proofe of the firſt ground, I will produce three heads. The firſt that the Low countries haue not ſo long maintained warre, but with the helpe of England, without the which they could not ſtand, no more then mans bodie can liue without nouriſhment: That fire is more eaſily quenched by taking away that which feeds it then by caſting on water, for that not hauing wherewith to feed it, it conſumes it ſelfe: but ſeeking to vanquiſh it by the contrary; it may bee it will grow more violent. So the Florentines could not quench the rebellion of the Piſans, before they had taken a-
F way the matter which nouriſhed that fire which came from ſtrangers, and therefore it was all one action to take away their ſuccors which came from confederats Princes, and to winne the city, which otherwiſe all their forces and of their confederats would not haue beene able to effect.

For my ſecond head (ſaid he) I ſet downe, that England doth not onely maintaine the rebellion of the Nertherlands by ſending ſuccors, but alſo by her countenance: for where as the Netherlanders ſee the forces of Spaine conuerted againſt them, they flie vnto England as to a Sanctuary, knowing that the Engliſh would alwaies take armes againſt any that ſhould inuade them. Wherein they imitate the Athenians, who thought themſelues ſafe as long as the Olynthians ſtood, who being ſubdued, they knew not how they ſhould keepe Philip out of their country. Euen ſo if England ſhould fall into the Spaniards hands, the Netherlanders ſhould looſe the ground of their raſhneſſe, being deſtitute of that ſupport which hath maintained them in their inſolencies. A

as

My third reaſon (ſaid he) is, that the burthen of ſo long a warre, hath ſo waſted the ſpirits and faculties of the Netherlanders, as they ſcarce haue any pulſe remayning; they hauing not onely beene cruell butchers of their owne liues, but Tyrants ouer their goods, taxing themſelues at aboue forty in the hundred; beſides hauing loſt ſo many yeeres profit, their land being vntilled, and their trade of Marchandiſe fayling which doe much import them; hauing alſo endured ſo many ſpoiles, inuaſions, burnings, routs of armies, and ruines of townes, with other great loſſes: So as they cannot poſſibly maintaine this rebellion wanting life and ſpirit, which England gaue it. Whereby it appeeres that the conqueſt of the Low countries followes that of England, as the ſhadow doth the body. But on the other ſide we muſt not thinke the Netherlands being won England would be ſo eaſily vanquiſhed: the which being a rich and a mighty Kingdome, ſeekes no ſupport from any other, but relies vpon her owne forces; the which they would oppoſe againſt their forraine enemies, if the Netherlands ſhould fall abſolutly into the Spaniards hands, ſtanding as they doe now, wherefore England in her defence depends onely of her owne power, and if it ſhould expect any forraine ſuccors, they would not flie vnto thoſe rebellious States, which are needy, and depend vpon others. B C

Hetherto (ſaid he) we haue ſhewed the difference of theſe enterpriſes, and how much more proffitable that of England would be. Now I muſt prooue the ſecond head of my ground; that the conqueſt of that Iſland is more eaſie then that of the Netherlands, and therefore ought to bee preferred, whether wee doe conſider the proffit, the oportunity, the poſſibility, the honour, and ſafety, or any other important conſideration whatſoeuer. But diſcourſing now of the eaſineſſe of this conqueſt, in regard of that of the Netherlands, I will proue (ſaid he) that the difficulties be the ſame to inuade England and the Netherlands. Firſt of all I preſuppoſe that a ſufficient army beeing leauied, a royal enterpriſe is ſooner brought to perfection, when as they are attempted both by ſea and land, the which King Philip may do with greater aduantage in the enterpriſe of England then in that of the Nertherlands: for as the voiage by ſea is ſhorter and more eaſie, ſo he may more commodiouſly inuade England by land, hauing meanes to land part of his army ſafely in Scotland, as we will hereafter ſhew: whereas if he ſhould ſend an army by land into the Low countries, the way would be long to paſſe from Spaine through Italy and Germany, and it would be exceeding chargeable and dangerous. The ſecond reaſon is, that it is more commodious, neerer and more ſafe to paſſe into England; for that from the ſtraight of Gibraltar thether, is all open ſea, without any let; but to go into the Low countries, hee muſt of neceſſity paſſe by England, the which by all reaſon of ſtate ſhould let the King of Spaine vnderſtand in his paſſage, that neither friends nor foes are welcome, when they come with a great power, wherefore there is no doubt that whoſoeuer wil inuade the Netherlands hee muſt breake this barre, or make plaine this mountaine of England, which croſſeth him in his paſſage. D E

My third reaſon (ſaid he) is grounded vpon a firme maxime of the Art of warre; that thou muſt neuer ſeeke to inuade any place, and leaue any thing behind to diſturbe thee, wherefore it were a raſh enterpriſe to attempt the Low countries, and leaue England behind, who beeing full of iealouſie, may ſodainely ſet vpon the Catholike Kings army in the hotteſt of their warre againſt the Netherlanders. F

See here his error and ignorance.

The forth, that going to conquer the Low countries, they muſt fight with braue old ſouldiers bred vp in the warre; but on the other ſide the Engliſh are without Art or practiſe of warre, they cannot vſe the harguebuſe, nor any other offenciue armes, but onely bowes and arrowes, the which are of no force againſt corſelets and head-peeces, as wee vſe:

A vſe: ſo as(ſaid he)there is the like compariſon to bee made betwixt the Engliſh and the Dutch ſouldiers as is betwixt idleneſſe and exerciſe; or an armed and diſarmed man. And what an aduantage it is to fight with vnskilful ſouldiers,it it apparent by the example of Miltiades in the fields of Marathon,who with leſſe then 10000. braue men,put to flight that mighty,but vnwarlike,army of Xerxes, being aboue 600000.men.

The fifth, that there is more difficulty in that of the Netherlands, for that they will keepe themſelues more cloſe, ſo as they muſt bee wonne by inches,and a whole army muſt be imployed in the ſeege of a towne and ſo of the reſt, the which happely wilbe of no great importance,but that they wil ſtay in courſe of his victory that ſeekes the winne
B them.But contrarywiſe England hath not any towne to ſtay the violence a victorious enemy,hauing once ſet footing into the Iſland, the which wilbe no difficult thing for the King of Spaine to effect.So as England being without any forts but vpon the frontiers, and the Low countries ful of forts both within and without,there is no doubt but the enterpriſe of that is more eaſie then this, as it is more eaſie to vanquiſh them that make no reſiſtance. Whereof the Low countries are a familiar example,where notwithſtanding that the King had great garriſons,yet they many times found ſo great croſſes, as they were often vanquiſhed by the oppoſition of thoſe forts,whereas there being no place in Portugal able to reſiſt the enemies forces, the Spaniards entred into the heart of the realme,they being not able to make reſiſtance.

The ſixth reaſon is that forts and townes of ſtrength are to an inuading army but in-
C combers after they be wonne, for that the greateſt part of the army,is drawne away into garriſons,whereby it is much weakened.

The ſeuenth reaſon (ſaid hee) ſeemeth ſufficient in this caſe to proue the truth of my opinion. If the King of Spaine ſends an army to purge the rebellious humors of the Netherlanders,it is to bee feared that this Phiſicke will rather ſtirre vp the good humors then euacuat the bad, breeding a diſeaſe full of corrupt matter: whereas now the good matter hauing the predominant power, wee may hope that in time it will vanquiſh the violence of the diſeaſe: whereas by this courſe the humors of Malcontents may bee corrupted,and they drawne to deſire innouations: we know that by the compoſition made
D betwixt the King and his ſubiects, the Malcontents, they haue taken vpon them the burthen of this warre,ſo as the Spaniards and other ſtrange ſouldiers might bee drawne out of the Low countries: If then an army ſhould bee ſent out of Spaine to ſubdue the Netherlanders, or they ſhould but heare it were ſo reſolued: they would eaſily vnderſtand that the victors would preſcribe a Law to the vanquiſhed: and the Malcontents would not only looſe that great deſire they had to beare that great burthen of the warre, and the reward which they expected from his Maieſty, but they would feare to looſe their preuiledges and liberties, in regard whereof they haue made cruell warre againſt themſelues. By this then and many other reaſons it appeeres, how dangerous it is to exaſperates the mindes of friend with ſo ſharpe a medicine. If the Malcontents ſhould ioyne
E themſelues with the aduerſe partie,and oppoſe againſt the Spaniards,that warre would proue more difficult then euer for the Catholike King,not only for that the Kings forces ſhould be diminiſhed,but alſo for that the enemy ſhould be fortified: So as we haue hetherto proued that it is more eaſie and more commodious to inuade England then the Netherlands.

Now we will ſhew (ſaid hee)not by way of compariſon,but in reſpect of it ſelfe,how much it doth import the Catholike King,and how eaſie it is for him to inuade England. It is not to bee doubted but the Phiſicke is beſt, which not onely cures the member that is greeued,but alſo takes away the cauſe of the diſeaſe. If then the Catholike King ſeeke to conquer the Low countries,hee may well cloſe vp the wound of their rebellion,but
F he ſhall neuer euacuat the corrupt humors, which haue fed the diſeaſe,ſeeing that England hath alwaies norriſhed the rebellions of the Low countries: And admit it were cured of this preſent indiſpoſition,what health can it bee called,when as the body is ſtill ſubiect to theſe peccant humors: wherefore England is firſt to be attempted, that afterwards wee may with ſafety digeſt or euacuat all concurrent humors. But to intreat more plainely of the facility of this enterpriſe: I denie not but that England is a mighty Kingdome,

Kingdome,and the greateſt Iſland that the ancients haue made mention of, conteyning A in circuit with Scotland two thouſand miles, yet late writers haue made it two hundred leſſe: That it is well fortified with a wall which the ſea makes about it, whereby it is ſo defended,as if Scotland were vnder that iuriſdiction,it were not to bee inuaded by land; Notwithſtanding the glory which that nation hath gotten by armes,is rather to be attributed to the ancient, and not to them that are now, for as it often happens that the minde being great with the imagination of great matters, doth ſtill retaine the ſame imaginations although that matters change; euen ſo it happens here,that we doe meaſure the forces of England; not by the preſent Eſtate, but as they haue beene when as they had in their poſſeſſion Normandy, Brittan, Gaſcony, and other floriſhing Pro- B uinces of France,yea they commanded in a manner abſolutly ouer all France,and Henry the ſixth, was crowned King in Paris. But hee that will looke into the preſent Eſtate of England,may eaſily iudge that it is great,rather by the reputation of her ancient fame, then by the quality of her preſent forces, and that it is no more that England,which was fearefull to the greateſt Princes of Europe.

Ignorance and malice of the writer.

And without doubt it hath beene obſerued that not long ſince there haue ſo many diſgraces fallne vpon that Iſland, as at one inſtant it not onely purchaſed the hatred of men,but of God,euer ſince it fell into Schiſme. So as ſince the change of their religion, England hath ſuffred great ſhipwrackes,whereof wee may ſee the effects,hauing loſt that ſupport whereon depended their reputation and ſafety, that is the Authority and com- C mand, which they had at ſea, for that in former times this Iſland did maintaine many ſhips, and did continually entertaine a good fleet at ſea; yea ſometimes their preparations were admirable, as amongſt others when as Henry the ſixth, went almoſt with eight hundred great ſhips againſt Charles the ſixth,the French King,making a bridge ouer the Ocean: but the ſtate and condition of that Iſland is changed, for ſince Henry the ſeuenth and Henry the eight, they could not maintaine thoſe hundred Ordinary ſhips, which they were wont to keepe in a redineſſe for the ſafety of that ſtate,but the Iſland is growne to that extremity,as they haue beene conſtrained not onely to diminiſh,but alſo to ſel the greateſt part of thoſe ſhips which did ſecure them from forraine inuaſions,ſo much doth want preſſe thoſe Princes,more their owne ſafeties. D

Weakeneſſe of England compared with the power of Spaine.

But the better to explaine that which I haue ſpoken of the eaſineſſe of the enterpriſe, I wil(ſaid hee) propound two things,the one of him that is inuaded,the other of him that doth inuade; whereby it ſhall appeere that the one is as vnable to defend,as the other is powerful to offend. If wee conſider England which is to bee inuaded,without doubt it is not able to reſiſt the King of Spaines forces, if hee will inuade it with ſuch prouiſions as he may,and the importance of the action doth require,the which will appeere by diuers reaſons.

The firſt, for that, as I haue ſaid, the Iſland of England is at this day in great want; and if in this weakeneſſe, ſhee ſhould ſeeke to make head againſt the power of a mighty Potentate, it were as much as if ſhe ſhould ſeeke to ſupport Heauen,beeing nei- E Alcides nor Atlas.

Want of ſhips in England.

Secondly,in reſpect of this neceſſity (he ſaid) that the crowne of England could not entertaine that number of ſhipping which was wont to be appointed for the gard of the realme; and if they ſhould ſeeke to make any prouiſion, it were to draw force from weakeneſſe, or to preſcribe a Law to time and nature; ſeeking in great want and in a ſhort time, to make thoſe prouiſions which require a great treaſure and many yeeres: Moreouer to beginne to make preparation of thoſe things which King Philip hath in a readineſſe, were to put themſelues in defence,when as the enemy held his ſword ouer their heads. It were vaine for any one to ſay that the Engliſh in daunger may vſe priuat mens ſhippes for the publike ſeruice: this remedie would come to late F when the daunger is at hand, neither could thoſe ſhips bee eaſily called together from remoate places, neither doe priuate men willingly imploy their commodities to publike vſe. Wherefore it it neceſſary that the deſeignes of Princes in great enterpriſes, flow from the fountaine of their owne power.

Thirdly, for that the Engliſh doe altogether want, or are very defectiue of horſmen which

A which is a chiefe ground of warre, for ſpeaking of men at armes they haue ſcarce any knowledge of them, and as for light-horſes, they doe not much import, vnleſſe the number ſupply the defect of the quallity. Beſides all the horſes of that Iſland being continually put to paſture, are full of diſeaſes and weake, which proceeds partly from the temper of that aire.

Fourthly, that the Kings of England haue either through negligence or diſability omitted to make prouiſions for the war, like vnto al other Princes, that they may be readie againſt any ſodaine tumult that may riſe either within or without their ſtates; for that in former times their whole care was for prouiſion by ſea, ſo as the land-ſeruice was neg-
B lected, as if in an Iſland there were not any need to goe to field againſt ſtrangers, or that warre could not bee mannaged at land with ſea prouiſions.

Fiftly, it is moſt certaine that the Engliſh are by nature deſirous of innouations and change, for who ſo ſhall read ouer their Hiſtory, hee ſhall finde that ſeditions, conſpiracies, treaſons and ſuch like, haue made their dwelling in their Iland. Behold the lying vanity of the Spaniards

Sixthly, for that the Engliſh, in reſpect of their ancient greatneſſe, are more deſirous to anoy others then to be anoyed themſelues when they ſhal ſee themſelues charged by braue enemies, they wil be daunted. To ſee Forturne turne her face is a fearefull ſpectacle for them that are not accuſtomed therevnto.

Seuenthly, for that England beginning to decline by the iuſt iudgement of God, e-C uery man knowes how eaſie it is to caſt it downe, a declyning being nothing elſe but a way to ruine. So that mighty Empire of the Romaines, when it began once to decline, it fell ſodainely, and drew with it a great ruine.

Eightly, for that the Engliſh nation haue not in a manner any Commanders to mannage their warre, which defect beeing ioyned with the inſufficiency of the ſouldiars of that realme, it will prooue that the army of Lyons, commanded by a Hart, wil be little eſteemed: one of the Harts led by a Cony wil be ridiculous, the which will happily fail out in England.

Laſtly, admit that England were furniſhed with armes, captaines, ſouldiers, victuals,
D ſhips and all other things neceſſary for the warre; yet (ſaid hee) all was of no moment,
D wanting money, which giues forme and eſſence to all enterprizes, for that the crowne of England, not onely by the ſmall reuenues, but alſo by the ſuperfluity of their ordinary expences, is growne into that want, as they are not able to vndergoe any royall enterpriſe, hauing ſcarce meanes to entertaine themſelues, for he that doth arrogate to much to his owne force, and ouer-chargeth himſelfe with warre, is the inſtrument of his owne ruine. Hauing hetherto ſhewed that it is eaſie for the Catholike King to inuade England, in regard of it; I will proue the facility thereof with greater reaſons in regard of the Catholike Kings forces.

The firſt is the great power of the King of Spaine, whoſe dominions doe imbrace the whole diameter of the globe, and is Lord of more land then any Monarke or ſtate in the E world did euer hold. A Prince, rich in armes, ſouldiars, captaines ſhipping, victuals, and all other neceſſaty prouiſions for warre. A Prince who as Iudge and moderator, ſeemes to gouerne the reines of the Empire of the ſea and land.

The ſecond is, for the great nauy which hee hath ready, which is not onely that which of late yeeres made the enterpriſe of Portugall, but 150. more which hee hath gotten in that Kingdome, which, ioyned with the reſt, will breed admiration in all men, and ſeeme to fill the ſea with their multitudes.

The third, that beſides theſe ſhips, and thoſe which hee may haue in Biſcay, as faithfull to the crowne, as expert in nauigation, beſides the ſhips of priuat men, which his Maieſty hath in a readineſſe; he ſhall receiue no ſmall ſeruice from his gallies, who in the ac-F tion of Portugall diſcouered our error in thinking that they were not of any vſe in the Ocean ſea at any time, as if that ſea were not calme in Sommer, and that it were neuer to be ſailed in; ſo as there is no doubt but our gallies may ſafely aduenture in thoſe ſeas the three monthes in Sommer. They that obiect Cæſars wrack in the Brittiſh ſeas, doe not remember that he himſelfe doth not impute it to the ſea, but to the Moone, which not only in the Ocean, but in all other ſeas doth ſhew her power, as the Meteoroligikes and experience doe teath. The fourth, that the Catholike King being Lord at ſea by A reaſon of his great fleet, he will at the ſame inſtant bee Lord at land: For hauing ſufficient forces to vanquiſh the defences of the Iſland, he ſhal with eaſe land his men, and ouer-run the Iſland with his victorious armes, for ſuch is the condition of that Iſland, that as ſoone as an enemy is entred, and his army orderly lodged, hee may cut off their victuals, and famiſh the Iſlanders.

and

Fifthly, for that by ſea King Philip ſhall haue the fauor of them of Ireland, who haue ſecurely ſhewed themſelues to adhere vnto him, and by land there is no man doubts (ſaid he) but that Scotland will aſſiſt him in his deſeignes with all her meanes.

The ſixth in order, but the firſt to be conſidered, is the Iuſtice and honeſty of the cauſe, B the which carries ſo honorable a title, as the defence of religion and the Catholike faith, as nothing ſhalbe able to hinder it; yea his Maieſties pretenſions (ſaid he) are ſuch to that realme, and ſuch is the duty which hee owes vnto the name which he carries, of Catho-like, as there is no enterpriſe more due to him then this; whereby he ſhal not only take poſſeſſion of a realme which is his due, but alſo hee ſhal purchaſe vnto himſelfe immor-tall glory, aboue all other Kings, adding ſo rich and famous a Kingdom to that of Spaine.

The ſeuenth is the commodity of the paſſage, knowing how ſhort a cut it is from the Streight of Gibraltar to the Iſland, and what great commodities grow by expedition, and the eaſe of tranſportation of victuals, ſoldiers, artillery, munition, and al other proui-ſion neceſſary for the enterpriſe. C

The eight, if King Philip makes warre againſt his enemy at his owne doores, he ſhal fill England with feare and amazement, and the approching danger will trouble all their counſels. There is nothing more terrible then to ſee the ſword that muſt be the murthe-rer of them and theirs.

The ninth, for that (ſaid he) his Catholike Maieſty had many partiſans in that Iſland; it importing much to haue ſome that fauor him among his enemies. And to proue that he hath ſome at his deuotion in that Iſland, I wil produce three reaſons. Firſt the remembrance of his clemency which remaines yet in the hearts of thoſe people, and of his cur-teſie, hauing ſometimes gouerned them as their lawful Prince, with ſo great ſatisfaction to them al in general, as any other gouernment, in reſpect of his, ſhould ſeeme tyranous. D
The ſecond reaſon is that of religion, knowing that there are many in this Iſland which adhere to the Church of Rome. The third is the riches of King Philip, who in his large dominions hath ſo many commanderies, penſions, offices and rents, to aduance men that ſhal deſerue wel, as it wilbe eaſie for him to draw the hearts of the Engliſh vnto him.

Hauing thus ſhewed the reaſons why the Catholike King ſhould rather inuade England then the Low countries, and with what facility it is to be performed, I will (ſaid he) to the end that nothing ſhal remaine vnſatisfied, make anſwere to an ordinary obiection which is made by many vpon this ſubiect, which is, that the king of Spaine making an attempt againſt England, he ſhal reuiue the emulation which hath beene betwixt him and the houſe of France, which fire lying now ſmothered vnder the aſhes of peace, may kin- E dle a great warre, for if the French ſhould remaine as ſpactators of this tragedy of England, it might in the end turne to the preiudice of France, whereby they conclude that the Chriſtian King ſhould be forced to ioyne with England, leaſt that hauing conquered that Iſland, he ſhould afterwards turne his forces vpon France, which obiection notwithſtanding he left vnſatisfied.

During this great preparation of three yeeres in Spaine, which held all Europe in ſuſpence, the King of Spaine cauſed an ouerture of a peace to be made vnto the Queene of England (onely as it ſeemed to abuſe her with the imagination of a treaty, and to make her neglect the defence of her realme) who imbraced this propoſition, and ſought to draw the vnited Prouinces into this treaty, which they abſolutly refuſed. Notwith- F ſtanding the Queene deſirous of a peace ſent her Commiſſioners in February 1588.
to Oſtend; and in March following there came others to Bruges from the Duke of Parma, to treat with them in the King of Spaines name; who theſe Commiſſionars were, and what the ſucceſſe of that treaty was, I leaue to the Netherland Hiſtory, bee-ing but a fained ſhew of the Spaniard, to winne time, and to find England vnprouided

when

A the Queene of England (ſeeing the Spaniſh fleete almoſt at her doore) called home her Commiſſioners, and prepared for her defence.

But now to come to this admirable fleete; the King of Spaine had deuiſed how hee might conquer England, hoping by that meanes to recouer his Inheritance in the Low Countries; for beeing Lord in England, hee might cut off their trafficke by ſea, the which many (well acquainted with the ſcituation of both countries) held eaſie to bee done. Wherefore the King of Spaine (hauing ſpent one and twenty yeares, and waſted an infinite treaſure, in thoſe Lowe Country warres,) reſolued to make an other attempt vpon the Netherlands by ſea, but with greater forces, for that England was now his ene-
B my, and might hinder all trade into thoſe parts. So as hee reſolued firſt to inuade England, whereunto he was perſwaded by diuerſe ſubtill ſpirits, both Spaniſh and Dutche, and by ſome Engliſh rebels, holding it more eaſie to bee conquered then Holland and Zeland, and that it would bee more profitable to inuade both England and the Lowe Countries by ſea at one inſtant, then to maintaine a continuall armie to cut off their traffick from both the Indies. For the effecting of this reſolution, hee had for ſome yeares together made preparation of a great Nauie at Lisbone, the like whereof had not beene ſeene in many ages in the Ocean ſea. It was ready in the beginning of this yeare 1588. the fame of this action was ſuch, as there was not an honorable houſe in Spaine,
C but had a ſonne, a brother, or ſome of the bloud in it, thinking all to winne euerlaſting honor with this inuincible Armie (as they called it) and to make themſelues rich with the ſpoiles of England and the Netherlands.

King Philip reſolues to inuade England and the Netherlands.

The King had reſolued to make Don Aluaro de Baſſan Marquis of Saint Cruz, (a Nobleman of great note, who had done the King great ſeruice in the conqueſt of Portugall, and the Tercera's) Generall of this armie. Hee ſent vnto him, and acquainted him with his deſſeigne; hee put him in minde of his promiſe, that hee would ſpend his life in his ſeruice, and hee commanded him to prepare himſelfe to conduct this fleete. The Marquis in his anſwer humbly thanked his Maieſtie, yet hee ſeemed by circumſtances to diſſwade the King from this enterpriſe, telling him that the Engliſh were gallant men at ſea (of whome they had made good tryall) that they had good ſhipping, and D that he ſhould finde ſtrong oppoſition. The King was much diſcontented with the Marquis for this anſwer, hauing euer relyed vpon him, and ſent him word, that ſeeing hee failed his expectation, and had no courage to vndertake this Action, he would finde an other to command his Army, wherevpon he made the Duke of Medina Sidonia his Generall. The Marquis finding himſelfe in diſgrace with the King, conceiued ſuch greefe as he died before the fleet went to ſea. But let vs returne vnto the Armie, whereof I will make a perticular relation, as the Spaniards themſelues haue ſet it downe.

Diſcription & perticular preparation of the Spaniſh Fleete. An. 1588.

Portugall did furniſh ten great Gallions, with two ſmaler ſhips, vnder the command of the Duke of Medina Sidonia the Generall, in the which were 1300. ſaylers 3300. ſoldiers and 350. peeces of Ordinance.

E Biſcay ſet forth ten Galleons and foure Pinaſſes, with ſaylers, ſoldiers, and ordinance proportionably, vnder D. Iohn Martines de Ricaldo, the Admirall.

Gnipuſcoa did arme ten Galeons and fourteene Pinaſſes, vnder Michel Oquendo.

Andalouzia ſet forth ten Galions, & one Pinaſſe, vnder comand of D. Pedro de Baldes.

Italie had furniſhed ten Gallions, the which were commanded by Martin de Bretendona.

Caſtille prouided fourteene Gallions, and two Pinaſſes, ouer which ſquadron Diego Floris de Baldes had charge.

There were alſo three and twenty Hulks conducted by D. Iohn Lopes de Medina.

From Naples there were foure Galeaſſes ſent, comanded by D. Hugo de Moncado, they had in them 1200. ſlaues to row, 480. ſaylers, 870. ſoldiers, and 200. peeces of Ordinance.

F Portugall ſent foure gallies, vnder the conduct of Diego de Medrana, with all thinges proportionably.

There were 22. Pinaſſes and other ſmal ſhips, vnder the gouernment of Antonio Buccado de Mendoça.

Beſides all theſe there were 20. Carauells, which carried owers and other neceſſaries for the ſhips, ſo as there were 150. ſayle of all ſorts, in the which they had aboue 8000.

ſailers,and 20.thouſand ſouldiers, beſides Commanders, Officers and voluntaries,with A 2650.peeces of ordinance.

The galleons being 66.in number, were very great and ſtrong, built high like caſtles, eaſie to fight withall,but not eaſie to board.

In this great fleet there were 1600.great braſſe peeces,and aboue a thouſand iron, to the which there were two hundred and twenty thouſand bullets, 4600. kintals of poulder,one thouſand kintals of lead, 1200. kintals of match, 7000. muskets and caliuers, 10000.pikes,partiſans and halberds with canons,field peeces,and all prouiſion for carriages,or whatſoeuer might be needful for an army,either at land or ſea.And for the ſeruice of the ordinance there were leauied 4200. men whereof 400. of them were Pioners.

There was bread and wine for ſix months,euery one hauing halfe a hundred of bread B euery month. The countries ſubiect to the King of Spaine did furniſh a great part of the prouiſions of this fleet,as ſome of them write. viz.

Andaluzia did contribute 12000. kintals of biſcuit. Malaga and that country 27000. and 500.Carthagena and Murcia, 5000. kintals. Sicile 50000.kintals, Burgos and Campos 56000.Naples and the Iſlands 15000.kintals.

Seuille and Extremadura did contribute 4000. kintals of ſalt meats,Gallicia 6000. Aſturia and other parts a thouſand kintals.

Seuille and Extremadura did contribut 5000.kintals of hogs fleſh and bacon,Ronda 2000.Gallicia 2000.and Biſcay 2000.kintals.

Algarbe did contribute 8000.barils of fiſh, Almendraua del Duca 11000.barils and C Cadiz 4000.

Maiorca did contribute 2000.kintals of cheeſe. Seuille and Extremadura a 1000.Portugal 25000. Genoua and Valencia 14000. kintals of Riſe. Andalouzia and Naples did contribut 23000.pezes of oyle and vineger, euery peze beeing 25. pounds, and euery pound 16.ounces.

Malaga,Marouella, Xeres and their iuriſdictions did furniſh 13000.buts of wine. Naples 6000.and Seuille with that iuriſdiction 7000. buts.

Cathagena did furniſh 15000. Aneghes,Naples and Sicile 11000. Aneghes of beans and peaze.

Andaluzia,Naples and Biſcay did furniſh other prouiſions of corne, iron, wollen and D linnen cloth, with other neceſſaries. They had in the fleet 12000.pipes of freſh water, with whatſoeuer elſe might be thought needfull.This army as D.Diego Pimentel did confeſſe,coſt the King 30000.ducats a day,reporting the army to be 32000.ſtrong.

Colonels of the regiments.

There were fiue regiments of the old ſouldiers of Naples,Sicile and the Terceres.The fiue Colonels were D.Diego Pimentel brother to the Marquis of Taueras,couſin to the Earles of Beneuent and Calui,a Knight of the Order of Saint Iohn, and very wel allied, 2. D. Franciſco de Toledo brother to the Earle of Orgas. 3. D. Alonſo de Luçon. 4 D. Nicholas d' Iſla or Patritio Anſelmo, the 5. and laſt D. Auguſtin Mexia, who afterwards was Caſtellan of Antwerp ;there being 32. companies in euery regiment, beſides cer- E taine Portugal and Italian bands. D. Lewis Peres de Guzman,Duke of Medina Sidonia, Marquis of Saint Lucars,and Knight of the Order of the Golden fleece, was General of this great army,as you haue heard,D.Iohn Martines de Ricaldo was Admiral of the fleet, and D.Franciſco de Bouadilla Marſhall.There were of the Councel of war, Diego Pimentel, Flores de Baldes, Pedro de Baldes, Michel Oquendo, Alonſo de Lieua,Diego Maldonado, D. George Manriques with many others. There were many Noblemen, and about 120. gentlemen of note,voluntaries,that went to win honor,amongſt which were the Prince of Aſcoly,the Marquis of Pegnafiel,the Marquis of Berlango,with many others of great accounr.

Officers of the army.

Preparation of the Duke of Parma to ioyne with the army.

The Duke of Parma during this preparation, had commandement from the King of F
Spaine to make ready ſhips and boats to land men,and to haue his forces in a readineſſe to ioyne with his army that came from Spaine, who ſpent much time with great care and induſtry to prouide all things ready for ſuch an enterpriſe. He had 32.ſhips of warre within Dunkerke,and an infinite number of boats for tranſportation, hee lodged all his forces neere vnto the ſea,being about 30000.foot and nine hundred horſe.

There

A There came many Princes and Noblemen from forraine countries running to this imaginary conqueſt. Out of Spaine, the Duke of Paſtrana Prince of Vuly, ſonne to Ruy Gomes de Sylua, but hee was held to bee the Kings baſe ſonne: the Marquis of Bourgawe one of the Archduke Fernands ſonnes, D. Veſpaſian Gonzaga, of the houſe of Mantoua, a great ſouldier, D. Iohn de Medicis, baſe ſonne to the Duke of Florence, D. Amadeus a baſtard of Sauoy with many others. Noblemen come into Flanders.

The Queene of England hearing of all this preparation in Spaine and the Low countries omitted nothing that might ſerue for her iuſt defence. Shee ſent forth her beſt ſhips of warre, with ſome Merchants, to lie at Plymouth in the Weſt parts, there to attend the enemy, commanded by the Lord Charles Howard, high Admirall of England, and now Earle of Nottingham, beeing accompanied by the Lord Thomas Howard, ſecond ſonne to the Duke of Norfolke, and now Earle of Suffolke; the Lord Sheffeld, and many other Noblemen and gentlemen of quality: And in the narrow ſeas, betwixt Douer and Calis the Lord Henry Seymor, ſonne to the Duke of Somerſet, lay with forty or fifty ſaile of ſmaler ſhips. The vnited Prouinces had prouided twenty ſmall ſhips to keepe all the coaſt of Flanders, where there be great flats, and when as the Spaniſh fleet was ready to come, they ſent in the end Iuſtine Naſſau their Admirall with fiue and thirty tall ſhips well appointed, to ioyne with the Lord Henry Seymer, which ſhips vnited, ſhould keepe the Duke of Parma from comming forth, whereon their preſeruation did depend. Preparation in England.

B

C

But let vs returne to this great fleet of Spaine, which beganne to way anchor at Lisbone on the nine and twentith day of May this yeere 1588. and ſailed to the Groine in Gallicia, where they tooke in more men and ſome munition. From thence they put to ſea, but they were diſperſt by a ſtorme, ſo as the Duke was forced to returne againe vnto the Groine with his fleet, eight of his ſhips hauing ſpent their maſts, of the foure gallies one recouered that port, & the other three were driuen into Bayonne in France, whereas all the ſlaues eſcaped. Spaniſh fleete diſperſt at ſea.

The army being refreſhed and the ſhips repaired, the King did daily importune them to put to ſea, which they did, on the twentith of Iuly, ſayling till they came to the entry

D of the Engliſh Channel, from thence they ſent to aduertiſe the Duke of Parma of their comming, to the end hee might bee ready to ioyne with them. The fleet was diſcouered by one captaine Fleming, who aduertiſed the Lord Admirall of England when hee little expected them, which made him with all poſſible ſpeed to drawe his ſhips out of the hauen of Plymouth, imbarking his men with great confuſion and difficulty, himſelfe putting to ſea that night but with ſixe ſhips, and the reſt following as they could. The two fleetes hauing diſcouered one an other on the thirtith day of Iuly, the Spaniards leauing the Engliſh, kept on their courſe towards Flanders, according to the ſtrickneſſe of their Commiſſion, which was to ioyne with the Duke of Parma, and then ioyntly to inuade England.

E In this manner the Spaniſh fleet went on with a ſmall ſaile cloſe together, fearing to looſe ſome of their company, for that the Engliſh had got the winde, and bare vp within musket ſhot. Paſſing on in this cloſe manner the Gallion wherein Pedro de Baldes was, brake her maſt againſt an other ſhip, ſo as it was not able to follow the fleete, neither would they ſtay to helpe her, but falling off from the reſt it yeelded the next day to Sir Francis Drake, beſides D. Pedro, there were diuers gentlemen and 450. men in her, and as it was ſaid ſome of the King of Spaines treaſor: at the ſame time Michel d' Oquendos the viceadmiralls ſhip was by caſualty ſet on fire, and burnt to the water, of the which there were ſome ſaued.

On the ſecond day of Auguſt there was a hot fight betwixt the two fleets right againſt

F Portland, but the Spaniards left it and went on their intended courſe. On the fourth day was the like before the Iſle of Wight, where the Engliſh Admirall accompanied by the Lord Thomas Howard in the Lyon, the Lord Sheffeld in the Beare; Sir Robert Southwell in the Elizabeth Ionas, with ſome few others, did charge the Spaniſh Admiral being in the mideſt of his beſt ſhips, but in the end the Spaniards went away before the winde, and on the ſixth of Auguſt they came to anchor before Calis, meaning there to attend the Duke of Parma, whether the next day the Engliſh fleet came and anchored cloſe by them, who that night ſending downe ſhips before the winde, being full of wood, poulder, wild-fire and other combuſtible things, and beginning to burne, they made the Spaniards in that amazement, cut their cables, and to put confuſedly to ſea. In this confuſion the great Galleaſſe of D. Hugo de Moncado, loſt her helme, and was driuen vpon Callis ſands, where D. Hugo was ſlaine, and the Galleaſſe ſpoiled by the Engliſh and loſt, where there were three hundred ſlaues ſet at liberty. A

The morning after their diſorder, the Spaniards had put themſelues againe into battaile: and the Engliſh charged them before Graueling, but they deſired to paſſe along with the winde, and to ſtand vpon their defence onely; this fight continued the whole day, in the which ſome of the Spaniſh ſhips were ſunke, and ſome being ſpoiled, and not able to follow the fleete, were taken by the States men and carried to Fleſſingue, I omit the repitition of euery particularity, becauſe you may reade them in the Duch Hiſtory. The Duke of Medina ſeeing that he had done what hee had in charge, thought it beſt now to retire, holding it better to hazard a dangerous paſſage by the North of Ireland, then to ſtay ſtil vpon the coaſt of Flanders, with apparent danger, hauing no means to ioyne with the Duke of Parma: wherevpon they packt on all their ſailes, hauing a greater will to flie then to fight, whom the Engliſh followed for a while, but ſeeing them bend their courſe Northward, they left them, and retired into England. It ſeemes that God did miraculouſly defend the Engliſh, for in all their ſeuerall fights, they loſt not one ſhip, nor a man of account, and not aboue a hundred common perſons. B C

Thus the Spaniſh fleet hauing loſt ten or twelue of their beſt ſhips, with foure or fiue thouſand men, beſides thoſe that were ſicke and wounded, whoſe number was great, diſtreſt with wants, and deſpayring of all helpe from the Duke of Parma (who prepared for their returne) they ſought to get into Spaine behind Scotland and Ireland, expecting ſmal releefe in Scotland, and that Norway could not ſupply their wants, they tooke all the fiſhermen they could meet withall to ſerue them for Pilots, and fearing the want of freſh water, they caſt their horſes ouer-board, and ſo they ſailed Northwards, till they came to 62. degrees. Then the Duke of Medina commanded the whole fleet to bend their courſe for Spaine or Portugal, and himſelfe with about 25. ſaile, that were beſt prouided of freſh water, kept out at ſea, and ſo got into Spaine. Don Martin de Ricalde the Admiral with ſome forty ſhips, ſailed neerer Ireland, hoping to refreſh themſelues there, but a great ſtorme aryſing about the ſecond of September, they were diſperſt, and many of them were driuen vpon that coaſt, and there caſt away; ſome ſunke, ſome broken, ſome runne on ſands, and ſome burnt by the Spaniards themſelues, to the number of ſeuenteene great ſhips: ſome write, they loſt vpon ſixe and thirty or eight and thirty ſhips, in which I take it they comprehend ſome that were loſt vpon the coaſt of Norway and that ſunke at ſea. Yet it was conſtantly reported, that of all that great fleet of a hundred thirty foure ſaile that went out of Lisbone, there returned but fifty three ſhips great and ſmal. Of them periſhed in Ireland there were ſpecially named a Galleaſſe two great Venetian ſhips, called La Ratta and Balanzara and the Gallcon called our Lady of Roſa, of a thouſand tunne, in the which D. Michel d' Oquendo, General of the ſquadron of Guipuſcoa, was, in which ſhip there periſhed (by the confeſſion of the Pilot) fiue hundred men, and not any one was ſaued but himſelf, among others (beſides the General Oquendo) there died as he ſaid the Prince of Aſcoly (held to bee the King of Spaines baſe ſon) Matut a Commander of the ſouldiers, Villafranca captaine of the ſaid ſhip, with many Knights and Aduenturers of account: Moreouer hee confeſt that there was in that ſhip 50. canons all braſſe for the field, 25. peeces of braſſe and iron belonging to the ſhip, 50. tuns of ſack, 15000. ducats in gold, with much plate and rich furniture. D E

Ships caſt away vpon the coaſt of Ireland.

Others write that heremained in Flanders after his lang at Calis.

After the Duke of Medin'as returne with the remainder of his fleet into Spaine, many died of ſickneſſe, or of the wounds which they had receiued. Many taxed the Duke for this vnfortunate ſucceſſe, but he (like a iudicious Prince, who had vnwillingly vndertaken that charge) laied the blame vpon his Pilots, and the Duke of Parma, who was not ready to ioyne with him, ſo as the King allowed of his reaſons, and gaue him leaue to goe home, and reſt himſelfe. There died many Commanders and men of account after their F

returne

returne, as D. Iohn Martinez de Ricalde, D. Diego Floris de Baldes, D. Alonſo de Lieua, D. Diego de Maldonado, D. Franciſco de Bouadillo, & D. George Manriquez, al of the counſell of warre. And many were taken priſoners, ſome in Ireland, as D. Alonſo de Luſon, a Collonel, two of the houſe of Cordoua, and D. Roderigo de Laſſo, and ſome in Zeland, as D. Diego de Pimentel a Collonel. Finally the loſſe was ſuch, as there was not any great houſe in Spaine, but had ſome particular cauſe to mourne for ſome one of their bloud. The Duke of Parma was much blamed by the Spaniards that were in the Low countries, but he excuſed himſelfe, for that (as he ſaid) the Spaniſh fleet came to ſoone, and to free himſelfe, he cauſed ſome to be hanged, which had not diſcharged their duties. After the ruine of this great Spaniſh fleet, there fel a great iarre betwixt the Lord of Champagni and Mounſieur Richardot, who was much fauored by the Duke of Parma, theſe two hauing run contrary courſes in their treaty of peace in Flanders, with the Queene of Englands Commiſſioners. So as after this bad ſucceſſe, Champaigny taxed the Duke of Parma of negligence, writing many letters of the like tenor into Spaine, whereof the Infanta Iſabella the Kings eldeſt daughter, affecting the Duke well, did ſtill aduertiſe him, who ſeeing his reputation and ſeruice thus called in queſtion, ſent Richardot, Preſident of Arthois, into Spaine to the King to make anſwere to all obiections and ſlanders, wherewith they had incenſed him, ſeeking to bring him in diſgrace, and to get his gouernment from him, accuſing him that hee had not done his duty concerning the Spaniſh fleete, and that hee had receiued a great affront before Berghen vp Zoome, for that hee would not beleeue the counſell of ſuch as would haue diſſwaded him from that enterpriſe; but Richardot gaue good ſatisfaction to the King and his Councell, and returned with a Commiſſion for the continuance of his gouernment, in deſpight of his enemies.

An. 1589.

Richardot ſent into Spaine by the Duke of Parma.

The King of Spaine beeing aduertiſed of the vnfortunate ſucceſſe of his fleet and army, which he had ſent to inuade England, after the returne of ſuch as were remayning of that miſerable wracke, hee beganne to examine euery mans merits; and who had deſerued reward, and who puniſhment in this action, to preſerue vnto himſelfe, with the feare of ſome, and the loue of others, the authority of a wiſe Prince: whereupon hee rewarded the heires of Don Alphonſo de Lieua, who (as they ſaid) was drowned with a thouſand perſons vpon the coaſt of Ireland.

He did puniſh ſeuerely Fernando Lopes, who was campe Maſter generall; and Antonio de Gueuara, Pouruoier generall, was depriued of his Office, for his miſdemeanors.

In the meane time they had newes in Spaine of a great army preparing in England to ſend into Portugall, for the reſtoring of Don Antonio, whereupon the King made prouiſion for the defence thereof, ſending the Earle of Fuentes for Generall into Portugall, with good troupes, hee augmented the number of their horſe, giuing the charge to D. Alphonſo Vargas, he made D. Francis de Padiglia Camp-maſter General, Andreas d' Alua Pouruoier, and Iohn Maldonado Auditor.

Prouiſion for defence of Portugal.

The prouiſions for this enterpriſe beeing made, they went from Plimouth in Aprill: Sir Iohn Norris and Sir Francis Drake being Generalls; they had with them ſixe of the Queenes, twenty ſhips of warre, and (as ſome write) a hundred and forty for tranſportation, hauing when they tooke ſhipping a eleuen thouſand ſouldiers, and two thouſand fiue hundred marriners: within ſixe daies after their departure from England being the twentith day of Aprill, the army landed in a bay within a mile off the Groine, without impeach, from whence they marched preſently towards the towne, approching within halfe a mile they were incountred by the enemy, who beeing charged retired to their gates, and then the Generall lodged the army in the villages and houſes thereabouts. Generall Norris hauing viewed the towne before daie, reſolued for to attempt it by ſcaladoe, and to land ſome Artillerie to beate the ſhippes and gallies which did play vpon their troupes, the which was effectually performed, ſo as the Gallies were forced preſently to abandon the roade, and goe to Farrol, and then they prepared with all ſpeed to ſurprize the baſe towne, the which was done the next day after, they entring it in three ſeuerall places, where after good Voiage of Portugal.

Groine the baſe towne ſurprized.

reſiſtance in one place, they were forced to abandon it, they all retyring into the high towne, the which they might eaſily doe for that the Engliſh knew not their paſſages. The reſt that were not put to the ſword, in the fury, fled to the rockes in the Iſland, where they did hide themſelues in caues, whereas many were daily found out. A

D. Iohn de Luna, a man of great command, hauing hidden himſelfe in a houſe came forth the next morning and yeelded himſelfe. Iohn de Vera a Commiſſary of the victuals was alſo taken that night, who confeſſed that at the entry of the Engliſh into the towne, there were fiue hundred Spaniards in ſeuen companies, (as it ſeemed) returned weake from the voyage of England, all vnder D. Iohn de Luna: the captaines names were D. Diego Baçan baſe ſonne to the Marquis of Santa Cruz. D. Antonio de Herera; B D. Pedro Manriques brother to the Earle of Paredes. D. Ieronimo Mouray, of the Order of Saint Iohn, hee was in the fort, D. Gomes de Caruajal; captaine Mouçon and Caucaſa de Socas. And that the day that the Engliſh landed there came from Retenzas the companies of D. Iohn de Moſale, and of D. Pedro Ponce de Leon. He confeſſed moreouer that there was order giuen for the baking of 300000. of biſcuit: that there was two thouſand pipes of wine in the towne, and a hundred and fifty in the ſhips. That there was lately come 300000. ducats from the Marquis of Seralba. That there was a thouſand Iarres of oyle, with great ſtore of beanes, peaſe, wheat and fiſh. That there were three thouſand kintals of beefe, and not twenty daies before, there entred three barkes laden with mach and harguebuſes. There were ſome others taken, and there C were ſlaine by the common ſouldiers about fiue hundred. At their firſt entry into the towne, the ſouldiers finding three ſellars full of wine diſtempred themſelues, ſo as many beeing drunke were hurt from the high towne, and this diſorder was the cauſe of a great mortality which fell in the Engliſh army. There was aboundance of victuals, and prouiſion for ſhipping and warre; which the Commiſſary confeſt to be for a new voyage into England.

After the taking of the baſe towne, there came ſome two thouſand men out of the country, downe to the very gates, as reſolutly as if they would haue entred, but the Engliſh that were in gard making head againſt them, they fled away diſordredly, hauing loſt ſome eighteene of their men. The Generall attempted the high towne both by D mine and battery, and going to the aſſault the looſe rubiſh vnder their feete failed them ſo as they could not ſtand. They had diuers men hurt in their retreat, and they loſt ſome twenty or thirty vnder the ruines of a tower which fell.

Succors come to releeue the Groyne.

The day after that the Engliſh had offred an aſſault, the General vnderſtood, by a priſoner, that the Earle of Andrada had gathered an army together of eight thouſand men, at Puente de Burgos, ſix miles from the towne, which was but the beginning of an army, there being a greater leauy ready to come vnder the conduct of the Earle of Altemira, either to releeue the Groyne, or to incampe neere vnto the place where the Engliſh ſhould imbarke, and to hinder there ſhipping for to that end the Marquis of Seralba had written vnto them both the firſt night of their landing, as the Commiſſary had confeſt, E or elſe to ſtop their paſſage into the country, whether they went daily by troupes, and burnt, ſpoiled, and tooke great booties. The Generall reſolued the next day to goe and viſit theſe forces, leading nine Regiments with him: In the foreward were the regiments of Sir Edward Norrys Maſter of the Ordinance, Sir Roger Williams and Collonel Sydneys: In the battaile that of the Generall, of Collonel Lane, and Collonel Medkerke: And in the reereward, Sir Henry Norrys, Collonel Huntleys and Collonel Brets Regiments, leauing the other fiue Regiments with Generall Drake for the garde of the Ordinance.

Vpon the ſixth day of May in the morning they diſcouered the enemy within halfe a mile off their campe; againſt whom the ſhot of the foreward skirmiſhed, and F forced them to retire vnto their bridge, which was of ſtone, built vpon Arches, ouer a creeke that came from the ſea. At the foote whereof on the other ſide the enemy lay verie ſtrongly intrenched, who beeing with his ſhot at the further end of the bridge, Sir Edward Norris (who ledde the foreward, and marched in the head of the pikes) paſt the bridge without any ſtay at all, beeing accompanied by

A by Colonell Sydney, Captaine Hinder, Captain Fulford and others. The way was euen, but they muſt paſſe thorough a ſtorme of ſmall ſhot; for the bridge was flanked on both ſides with their ſhot, at the farther end there was a barricado, but they that had it in gard, ſeeing the proud approch of the Engliſh, forſooke it, where Sir Edward Norris entred, and charging the firſt he encountred, with his pike, ouer-thruſting himſelfe hee fell, and was ſore hurt on the head, at the ſword, but was honorably reſcued by the Generall his brother, Colonell Sidney, and ſome other Gentlemen: Captaine Hinder hauing his cask ſhot off, had fiue wounds in the head and face at the ſword. This attempt full of difficulty, beeing ſeconded by the Generall, their braueſt men which defended that place, being B ouerthrown, their whole armie fell preſently to rout, and the Engliſh had the chaſe three miles foure ſundrie waies. The Generals Standard with the Kings armes was taken: what number of the enemy was ſlaine, was not certain, but only by coniecture how many, two thouſand men, (for of ſo many conſiſted the foreward) in ſuch a pourſute might kill. And to increaſe the number, hauing giuen ouer the execution, and returning to their ſtands, they found many hidden in the vineyards and hedges, whom they ſlue. And Colonell Medkerke beeing ſent with his Regiment three miles farther to a cloyſter, which he burnt and ſpoyled, he found two hundred men there, which he put to the ſword. The Engliſh loſt onely one Captaine Cooper, and a priuate ſouldier. The execution beeing paſt, the Generall ſent three parts of the armie three ſeuerall waies to ſpoyle and burnt, ſo as the countrie round about was on fire. They found good ſtore of victuals and munition in C the campe, with ſome plate, rich apparell, and other booties, which they had left behind them.

Sir Edward Norris hurt.

Spaniards defeated at Puente de Burgos.

Thus the Engliſh armie returned to the Groine, bringing ſmall comfort to the Spaniards that were within it: and the next day the ſhipt their Ordinance, and then they ſet fire vppon euery houſe in the baſe towne, and on the Cloiſter, ſo as they left not any one ſtanding. And on the eight of May, the Engliſh imbarked their armie without loſſe of one man, which (had they not beaten the Spaniards at Puente de Burgos) they could not poſſibly haue done, they hauing (as it ſeemed) an intent to charge the Engliſh when they ſhould imbarke: the Commiſſarie confeſſing, that the firſt night of their landing, D the Marquis of Seralba did write vnto the Earle of Altemira, the Earle of Andrada, and to Terneis de Sentiſſo, to bring all the forces they could rayſe, wherewith they might either beſeege the Engliſh in the baſe towne, if they tooke it, or lye betwixt them and their imbarking place, and ſo fight with them vppon an aduantage, they hauing aboue 25000. ſouldiers vnder their commands.

The Engliſh armie leauing the Groine, on the thirteenth of May, there came vnto the Fleete the Earle of Eſſex, his brother Maſter Walter Deuereux, Sir Roger Williams, Colonell generall of the foote, Sir Philip Butler, and Sir Edward Wingfield. The Earle hauing put himſelfe into that action, contrarie to the opinion of the world, and with the hazard of his fortune, yet much to his honour. After which, the armie went and landed at Penecha in Portugall, within ſhot of the caſtle. The enemie beeing fiue companies of E Spaniards (vnder the commaund of the Earle of Fuentes) ſallyed out of the towne, and came to the water ſide, as the Engliſh landed.

Engliſh leaue the Groine.

But the Earle of Eſſex, with his brother, and Sir Roger Williams hauing landed men enough to make two troupes, they left one to go by the waters ſide, leading the other ouer the ſand-hilles: which the enemie diſcouering, they retired further into the land, that they might haue the better meanes to paſſe away, yet they did it in ſuch ſort, as beeing charged, they came to the puſh of the pike, where they ſlue an Engliſh Captaine: Theſe Spaniards beeing fledde, the Engliſh entred the towne, which was neither fortified nor defended by any man.

F The Generall ſummoned the Caſtle that night, which was held by a Portugueſe, called Antonio d'Aurid, who promiſed to yeeld it, ſo as he might bee aſſured, that Don Antonio was landed, and ſo he did. Thither came ſome Friars and poore men to their new king, promiſing within two dayes good ſupplies of horſe and foote. Hauing ſtayd at Penecha one day, the Generals reſolued, that the armie ſhould march by land to Lisbone, vnder the conduct of Generall Norris, and that Generall Drake ſhould meete him him in the riuer with the Fleete, that there ſhould bee a companie left to guard the Caſtle, and fiue in the ſhippes. A

After which concluſion, hee marched with fourteene Regiments towards Lisbone, commandement beeing giuen from the Generall, that no man ſhould ſpoyle the countrie, nor take any thing from a Portugueſe, the which was very ſtreightly obſerued, ſo as the ſouldiers grew to ſome want of victualles in their march, but vppon complaint made vnto the King, it was better ſupplyed. In ſixe dayes march the armie came to Lisbone, without any incounter of the enemie, who was betwixt them and the cittie, but they diſlodged as they approched.

Engliſh armie comes to Lisbone.

Beeing come to the ſuburbes of Lisbone, Sir Roger Williams, and Captaine Anthony Wingfield with ſome thirtie ſhotte, ſcowred the ſtreetes neere vnto the Towne, where they found not any but old folkes and beggers, crying Viua el Rey Don Antonio, and their houſes ſhut vp, the inhabitants hauing carried much of their wealth into the town, and fired ſome houſes by the water ſide full of Corne, and other prouiſion, for that the Engliſh ſhould not make vſe of it. The whole armie beeing quartred in the ſuburbes, the ſouldiers beeing tyred with their ſixe dayes march, and deſirous of reſt that night, the enemie beeing aduertiſed thereof, ſallyed foorth about one of the clocke, and came vppon the Engliſh by three ſeuerall ſtreetes, but eſpecially vppon Collonell Brets quarter, who beeing (as moſt of the Companies) at his reſt, made all the haſt hee could to draw his men into armes, in which charge hee was ſlaine, with ſome other Captaines of his Regiment: but there was ſuch reſiſtance made in all quarters, as they were ſuddenly put to a foule retreate, and chaſed euen to the Cittie gates, where they loſt many of their beſt Commaunders: In this ſalley the Spaniards loſt treble the number of the Engliſh, and ſome of good qualitie. B C

During their march, Generall Drake came with the Fleete to Caſcais, where hee entred without any reſiſtance, the Inhabitants beeing fledde with their goods to the mountaines, but the Generall ſent a Portugueſe vnto them, to offer them all fauour, if they would acknowledge their king, and ſupply the wants of his armie: which offer they willingly embraced, ſending two chiefe men to ſignifie their loyaltie to Don Antonio, and their loue to the Engliſh. Whereuppon the Generall landed his Companies, but the caſtle was held ſtill by 65. Spaniards.

Caſcais entred by the Engliſh. D

The day after the Spaniards ſalley, Generall Norris called a Councell, to aduiſe whether it were fit to attend there for the horſe and foote, which the King of Portugall had promiſed, and to ſend ſome conuenient troupes to Caſcais to fetch their Ordinance and munition, which was with their ſhippes. The opinions of the Commaunders were diuers, ſome fedde with a vaine hope of Don Antonio, thought it beſt to ſtay there, and to ſend ſome three thouſand men for the Ordinance. Others (deſpayring of all ſuccours from Portugall) perſwaded to march away, and not to ſtay vppon any vaine hopes. The Generall beeing loth to haue an imputation layed vppon him for his too great haſt, or to looſe any more time vppon Don Antonio's promiſes, tould them, that although the expedition of Portugall was not the onely deſſeigne of their iourney, but an aduenture, the good ſucceſſe whereof might get them great wealth, and much honour, wherin they had done ſo much, as whatſoeuer happened, it could not blemiſh their credits and reputations. E

Yet in regard of the Kings laſt promiſe, that hee ſhould haue that night three thouſand men armed of his Countrie, hee would not diſlodge that night. And if they came, that he might ſend the like number for his munition, and reſolue to trie his fortune for the Towne. If they came not, he thought it not fit to diuide his forces, by ſending any to Caſcais, knowing how boldly they had ſallyed foorth the day before, and that there were more ſouldiers armed within the towne, then was in their campe. And that before their men could returne from Caſcais, they expected more ſupplies: for the duke of Bragança, and Don Francisco of Toledo were attended with great ſuccours: whereuppon he concluded to march away the next morning, if the promiſed ſupplies came not that night: yet all the Portugueſes which came vnto their king, would not make a cornet of horſe, and two hundred foote. F

The

A The Generall attended the effect of the Kings promiſe vnto the laſt houre, and hee ſought to perſwade him to ſtay eight daies longer, in which time he might haue ingaged himſelfe, and receiued an affront, attempting a towne that was well fortified, and great troupes of men in it. So as the next day, ſeeing no Portugueſes appeare to ioyne with them, as was promiſed, the Engliſh Generall gaue order to march away, the Earle of Eſſex, and Sir Roger Williams making a ſtand, vntill that the whole armie was drawne into field, and ſo they marched out of the ſuburbes: Captaine Anthony Wingfield, and Richard Wingfield, beeing in the reere of them with ſome ſhot: after which the Battalions marched in order that night to Caſcais. In their march, that day the Galleys of Lisbone
B did ſomewhat annoy them, (their way lying along the riuer) and followed them vntill they were paſt Saint Iulians, ſpending many ſhot, but doing little or no harme. The horſe-men followed them afarre off, and cut off many ſicke men, which were not able to hold march, hauing no carriages for them.

Engliſh armie retires from Lisbone.

Hauing beene two dayes at Caſcais, they were aduertiſed by a Friar, that the Spaniards came marching ſtrongly towards them, and were at Saint Iulians, wherewith the Earle of Eſſex, and the Generals were much pleaſed, deſiring nothing more then to fight with them: Whereuppon the Engliſh General ſent away a meſſenger with a trumpet that night, who carried a challenge to the Spaniſh Generall, wherein he gaue them the lye, for that they reported, that the Engliſh had retired diſorderly and with feare
C from Lisbone, challenging him to meete him the next morning with his whole armie, if he durſt attend his comming, and there to trie the iuſtneſſe of their quatrell by battell: by whom alſo the Earle of Eſſex (preferring the honour of his countrie, before all other reſpects, ſent a challenge to any one of his qualitie, that would meete in the head of their Battailes, ſingle, or with more companie, to trie their fortunes, offering aſſurance for their returne, and honorable vſage.

Challenge ſent by the Engliſh Generall to the Spaniſh.

The Engliſh Generall put his armie in a readineſſe by three of the clocke in the morning, and marched to the place where they incamped: but they had diſlodged in the night in great diſorder and feare, as the Generall was the next day informed: ſo as the troupes followed them to Lisbone, but could not get any anſwer to his letters, they threatening
D to hang him, for that he preſumed to bring ſuch a meſſage: but fearing the like meaſure to their priſoners, they ſent him away without anſwer.

The armie beeing come to Caſcais, the Caſtle was ſummoned, where the Captaine promiſed to yeeld it vppon ſight of the Cannon, and not otherwiſe. Whereuppon the Generall cauſed three or foure peeces of batterie to bee brought, where after the firſt volley, they compounded to depart with their Armes and baggage, he had in the Caſtle one Cannon, two Culuerins, one Baſiliske, and three or foure field-peeces, three-ſcore and fiue ſouldiers, with good ſtore of victuals and munition, which hee might haue kept longer then the Engliſh had any intent to ſtay: the armie beeing imbarked and readie to ſet ſayle, the fort was blowne vp.

Caſtle of Caſcais yeelded to the Engliſh.

E Whileſt they lay there in the roade, the Fleete, in ſixe dayes, fetched in to the number of three-ſcore Hulkes, laden with Spaniſh commodities, as it ſeemed, for the Kings prouiſion, and were going for Lisbone: their chiefe lading was corne, Maſts, Cables, Copper and Waxe: among which, ſome were of great burthen, very well built for ſayling, hauing no great lading in them, and therefore it was thought they were brought to ſupply the Kings decayed Nauie. Into the which the Engliſh that were in flie-boates were ſhipped, and the flie-boates ſent home, with an offer of Corne for their hire. And then they ſent ſhippes to fetch their men which they had left at Penecha, where as the enemy entred preſently.

There were nine Galleys ſent from Andaluſia, to ſtrengthen the riuer of Lisbone, who F in their returne, ſet vppon ſome ſhippes that were becalmed, and farre from the Fleete, but they did no great harme. The Fleet, by reaſon of the wind, went to the Iſlands of Bayonne, where they landed two thouſand men, beeing all that were able to fight, and marched to the Towne of Vigo, which beeing entred by Captaine Anthony Wingfield, hee found the ſtreetes full of Barricadoes, but not any one to defend them: for hee found but one man in the towne, they beeing fledde away to Bayonne: the Vigo taken by the Engliſh.

the Generall with ſome others, beeing entred into Vigo, they ſent ſome Captaines out A to ſpoyle, and burne the Countrie, which they did ſeuen or eight miles in length. In the towne they found not any thing, but wine, all their goods beeing carried away, and in the morning the Colonell generall hauing drawne the Companies out of the towne, he cauſed euery houſe to be ſet on fire, and then they imbarked againe, and returned home into England.

King of Spaine ſends forces to the Duke of Sauoy to beſeege Geneua.

The Duke of Sauoy had an intent to beſeege Geneua, which he pretended to bee his, in which attempt he craued ayde from the King of Spaine his father-in-law, who ſent vnto him out of the Dutchie of Milan, Pyrrho Maluezzi with fiue thouſand foot, who went vnto him with all ſpeed: from Naples hee had Alexander Sforza with a good number of B horſe, and Paul Sforza with foote: and from the countrey of Cremona, William of Lo-dron with fiue thouſand Germaines, and hee obtayned the Marquis of Saint Martin from the Duke of Ferrara, to bee Lieutenant generall to the Duke of Sauoy, to whome he was allyed, furniſhing him alſo with money, ſo as it ſeemed rather the King of Spains action, then the Duke of Sauoys.

An. 1590. Pretext of the King of Spaine to make warre in France.

The King of Spaine aſpiring (as it ſeemed) to the Crowne of France, whereof he had taken vppon him the name of Protectour, tooke now a new cloake to make warre, which was in the name of his eldeſt daughter, Donna Izabella Clara Eugenia, whome he had by Elizabeth of Valois his third wife, daughter to Henry the ſecond of France, pretending the Dutchie of Brittanie to bee fallen vnto her by lawfull right and ſucceſſion, C by the death of King Henry the third, her Vncle by the mothers ſide. Vppon this pretext hee ſent certaine troupes thither, ſeeking to diſmember it from the Crowne of France, to the which it was incorporate, by the death of the Ladie Anna of Brittanie, accompting the deſcendants from the ſayd Ladie Anne, who was promiſed to Maximilian Arch-duke of Auſtria, and afterwards Emperour, but married to Charles the eight, the French King, who dyed without heires, and then ſhee was married to Lewis the twelfth, by whome ſhee had one daughter married to Francis the firſt, father to Henry the ſecond his ſucceſſour, who had by Catherine de Medicis foure ſonnes, all which dyed without children, and three daughters, Elizabeth third wife to the King of Spaine, Claude married to Charles Duke of Lorraine, and Marguerite wife to Henry the fourth King of D France and Nauarre.

All the fore-ſayd children beeing deſcended in the direct feminine line from the Lady Anne of Brittanie, their Grand-mother, ſo as the ſonnes hauing no lawfull heires, the ſucceſſion of of the ſayd Dutchie of Brittanie did belong vnto the Lady Elizabeth of Valois, the eldeſt of King Henryes two daughters, and mother to the ſayd Infanta: the which, according to the Lawe, the King her father would maintaine, ſhould repreſent her de-ceaſed mother: for that the ſayd Dutchie beeing but a fee of Fraunce, may deſcend vnto the daughters as well as to the ſonnes, as appeareth in the ſayd Dutcheſſe Anne, daughter to Francis the laſt Duke of Brittanie, who brought it to Charles the eight, and Lewis the twelfth. The French anſwered, that Dutchies, which were but fees, and held by ho- E mage of the Crowne, beeing once incorporated, can bee no more diſmembred, with many more allegations, as you may reade in the French.

The King of Spaine could not forget the affront hee had receiued the laſt yeare by the Engliſh in Portugall, hee ſought how to bee reuenged, if not of the whole State in generall, yet of priuate Merchants, whoſe liuing conſiſted, and wholly depended vpon Trafficke into diuers parts, and hearing that the Engliſh Merchants had great trade within the Streights of Gibraltar, to Venice, Conſtantinople, Alexandria, and other places of commerce, hee reſolued to interrupt them, and intercept them if he could by any poſſible meanes: Whereuppon hee gaue charge vnto certaine Galleys to lye continually in the Streights to attend their paſſage. F

Fight betwixt the Spaniſh gallies & Engliſh ſhips.

It happened this yeare, that there were tenne good Engliſh ſhippes, and well fraught, comming from diuers parts, mette together at the Streights, and were bending home-ward. Theſe ſhippes comming neere to the mouth of the Streights, hard vppon the coaſt of Barbarie they deſcryed twelue tall Galleys, wonderfully well manned, and gallantly appoynted, beeing commaunded by Andrew Doria for the King

A King of Spaine: who on the foure and twentith day of Aprill, in the morning, bare vp with the ſhippes, and waued them amaine for the King of Spaine, and the Engliſh did the like for the Queene of England: after which, the fight beganne, one of the ſhippes at her firſt ſhot raked away all the men of one ſide of a Galley, and ſo pierced it, as it was readie to ſinke, but the fight continued very furious, for the ſpace of ſixe howers. In the meane time, whileſt they were in the hotteſt of this fight, there came in two Flemings to the Fleete, who ſeeing of what ſtrength the Galleys were, the one of them ſtrucke her ſayles, and was preſently taken by the Galleys: the other Flemming was alſo readie to yeeld, if the trumpetter of that ſhippe had not threatened to kill the Pilote at the
B Helme, if he did not ſpeedily put off to the Engliſh fleete, and take part with them, by which meanes they were preſerued from the Spaniards, whereas the other was taken baſely and cowardly. After this long and furious fight the Engliſh ſhippes eſcaped, for the Gallies were ſo torne, as they were forced to flie into harbour, for that ſome of them were readie to ſinke, neither durſt they come any more foorth, notwithſtanding that the ſhippes lay becalmed in the ſtreight.

The Catholike King finding himſelfe ouer-burthened, and weakened with the warres which he had at one inſtant maintayned againſt his enemies, his treaſure beeing exhauſted, and hee wanting money to make his neceſſarie prouiſions both for Flanders, and France vppon all occurrents, hee commaunded the Duke of Seſſa, who was newly come Ambaſſadour to Rome, to ſucceede the Earle of Oliuares, who was gone Viceroy
C into Sicily, to intreate his Holineſſe to grant him part of the reuenues of the ſpirituall liuings in Spaine, leauing vnto the Prieſts a competent liuing according vnto euery mans qualitie, but this demaund was not allowed of, nor held conuenient in the Court of Rome.

Fight betwixt the Reuenge & the Armado of Spaine.

This yeare there was a memorable fight at the Ilands of the Açores betwixt the king of Spaines Armado, and one of the Queene of Englands ſhippes called the Reuenge. The Lord Thomas Haward, ſecond ſonne to the Duke of Norfolke, and now Earle of Suffolke, going foorth with ſixe of the Queenes ſhippes, ſixe victuallers, and ſome pinaces to attend the Weſt Indian Fleete in their returne, lying at one of the Ilands of the D Açores, they were aduertiſed of the approach of the Spaniſh armado, (beeing three and fiftie ſayle of men of warre, commaunded by Don Alphonſo Baçan, brother to the Marquis of Santa Cruz) the which were preſently in ſight, many of the Engliſh beeing then on ſhoare, to furniſh themſelues with ballaſt, freſh water, and other neceſſaries, ſo as their ſhippes were light for want of ballaſt, and halfe their men ſicke and vnſeruiceable for fight.

The Spaniſh Fleete beeing couered by an Iland, were come ſo neere, as they had ſcarce any time to weigh their anchors, yet ſome were faine to ſlippe their Cables, and to ſet ſayle. Sir Richard Greenfield (who was Vice-admirall in the Reuenge) wayed laſt, ſtaying to recouer her men that were in the Iland, which otherwiſe had beene loſt, and not able to recouer the wind, as the Admirall, and the reſt had with ſome difficultie done, he
E was perſwaded by the Maſter and ſome others to caſt about, and to truſt to the ſayling of the ſhippe: but Sir Richard would by no meanes turne head to the enemie, proteſting that he would rather dye, then diſhonour himſelfe, his Countrie, and her Maieſties ſhip. But he could not force through them, as he thought, but was boarded of either ſide by their huge Galleons.

The fight beganne at three of the clocke in the after noone, and continued very furious all that euening. The Spaniſh ſhippes were full of ſouldiers, in the Engliſh there were not any but Marriners, and ſome few voluntarie Gentlemen, with their ſeruants. They made many aſſaults, thinking to force her with their multitudes, but they were ſtil
F repulſt. The fight continuing all the day, and ſome howers in the night, many of her men were ſlain and hurt, and one of the great Galleons, with the Admirall of the Hulks ſunke, and a great ſlaughter made in diuers other Spaniſh ſhippes. The Spaniſh ſhippes which attempted to board the Reuenge, as they were beaten off, others came in their places, there beeing neuer leſſe then two mightie Galleons by her ſide, ſo as ſhee had beene

aſſayled

aſſailed by fifteene ſeuerall Armados, yet at the breake of day they were more willing to hearken to a compoſition then to make any new attempt. A

At the breake of day the Reuenge ſaw none but enemies, nor any hope of reliefe: their poulder was ſpent to the laſt barrell, their Pikes were broken, forty of their beſt men ſlaine, and moſt of the reſt hurt. In the beginning of the fight they had but a hundred ſound men, and nintie ſixe lay ſicke vpon the ballaſt. And on the other ſide the Spaniſh ſhips were ſtill ſupplied with ſoldiers from the other ſquadrons, and with all kinde of armes and munition. The Reuenge hauing her maſts beaten ouer board, her tackle cut a ſunder, and in a manner made euen with the water, there being nothing left aboue head to make defence. Sir Richard Greenefield, finding himſelfe vnable to make any more reſiſtance, hauing endured the aſſaults of ſo many ſeuerall ſhips, and (as it was thought) eight hundred ſhot of great Ordinance, and that he and his ſhip muſt needs be taken by the enemies, being in a ring round about her: he commanded the maiſter Gunner (beeing a reſolute man) to ſincke her, to the end the Spaniards might reape no glory of that victory, ſeeing they could not take her in fifteene houres, with fifty three ſhips, and about ten thouſand men, perſwading the company to yeeld themſelues to the mercy of God, and to none elſe: And as they had like valiant men repulſed ſo many enemies, ſo they ſhould not now blemiſh their honours by prolonging their liues for a few houres. The Gunner was willing with diuerſe others, but the Captaine and Maiſter diſwaded him, pretending that the Spaniards would willingly entertaine a compoſition, and that there were diuerſe valiant men (whoſe wounds were not mortal) which might hereafter do their Prince and country good ſeruice, aſſuring him withall, that the Spaniards could neuer recouer the ſhippe, hauing ſixe foote water in hold, three ſhot vnder water, and ſo weakly ſtopt, as ſhee muſt needes ſinke with the firſt working of the ſea. But Sir Richard could not bee remooued from his reſolution. Wherefore the Maiſter of the Reuenge was conuayed aboard the Generall Don Alphonſo Baſſan, who (finding no man willing to enter her, fearing they ſhould be all blowne vp) yeelded their liues ſhould bee ſaued, the company ſent into England, and the better ſort to pay reaſonable ranſoms, and to be free from the Galleys and impriſonment. Wherevnto hee yeelded the more willingly, as well to auoyde a greater miſchiefe, as to recouer Sir Richard Greenfield, whom hee ſeemed to honor and admire for his great valour. B C D

The Reuenge yeelded to the Spaniards by compoſition.

This anſwer beeing returned, moſt of them left Sir Richard Greenfield and the Gunner, who beeing deſperate would haue killed himſelfe. Don Alphonſo Baçan ſent vnto Sir Richard to remooue out of his ſhippe, beeing vnſauory like a ſlaughter houſe, with bloud and dead bodies. Sir Richard anſwered, that hee might doe with his body what hee liſt, for he regarded it not. The Generall vſed him with all humanitie, and tryed all meanes for his recouery, much commending his valour, and lamenting the danger wherein hee was, beeing a rare thing to ſee one ſhippe make head againſt ſo many huge and great Armado's.

Loſſe of Spaniards at the fight.

There were ſlaine and drowned in this fight neere a thouſand Spaniards, and two ſpeciall Commanders. Don Lewis of Saint Iohn, and Don George de Prunaria of Malaga; The Admirall of the Hulkes and the Aſſention of Seuile were ſunke by the Reuenge, one recouered Saint Michaels, and did ſinke there, and a fourth ranne a ground to ſaue her men. It is ſaid, that Sir Richard dyed the ſecond or third day aboard the Generall, and was much lamented. The reſt of the Queenes ſhippes did not ingage themſelues ſo farre in the fight, the reaſons were. They were but ſixe ſhippes in all, whereof two were ſmall: the Reuenge was paſt recouery: the Iland of Flores was on the one ſide, and fifty three Spaniſh ſhippes on the other, full of Soldiars: halfe the Engliſh were ſick, and not ſeruiceable, the ſhippes fowle and wanting ballaſt, hauing beene ſixe moneths at ſea, ſo as if they had all entred the fight, they had all beene loſt. Notwithſtanding the Lord Thomas would haue entred among their Squadrons, but the reſt would not yeeld to it, and the Maiſter of his ſhippe offered to leape into the ſea, rather then to conduct her Maieſties ſhippes to bee a prey to the enemy, where there was no hope eyther of defence or victory. A ſhippe of the Queenes wherein Maiſter Thomas Vauaſor E F

(now

A now Knight Marſhall commanded)continued two houres in fight, as neere the Reuenge as ſhee could,but beeing in danger to bee compaſſed in by the Spaniſh ſquadrons, hee cleered himſelfe with great difficulty.

Some dayes after the fight, the Engliſh priſoners beeing diſperced in the Spaniſh ſhips,there aroſe a great ſtorme,ſo as the whole fleete (Indians and others) were diſperced,they beeing newly come vnto them; of the which there were foureteene ſaile, and the Reuenge, with two hundred Spaniards in her, caſt away vpon the Iland of Saint Michael. There were fifteene or ſixteene ſhips of warre more caſt away vpon the other Ilands; and of a hundredſaile and odde, expected that yeare in Spaine from the Indies, B there were aboue three ſcore and ten loſt in ſeuerall ſtormes; the Spaniards confeſt that there were ten thouſand men caſt away in that tempeſt.

The Reuenge caſt away with many Spaniſh ſhips.

This yeare happened that miſerable and lamentable condition of the Arragonois, eſpecially of them of Saragoça,the chiefe citty of the realme. From whom the King of Spaine (whether by lawfull or vnlawfull meanes I will not iudge) tooke, or rather pulled away violently their liberties and ancient priuiledges, after this manner. The King had giuen vnto Don Iohn of Auſtria,his baſe brother,one Iohn de Soto, to ſerue him as a Secretarie,a man by nature tending to great matters,to raiſe his Lord and Maiſter to a ſuperlatiue greatneſſe, and by the meanes of Pope Pius the fift, to aduance him to the realme of Tunes. The which beeing ſuſpect and diſpleaſing vnto the King (fearing the C diminution of his pretended Monarchie) after that hee had well obſerued his deſſiegnes and actions, it was thought fit to call home Soto from D. Iohns ſeruice and to ſubſtitute Eſcouedo in his place. In the beginning this Secretary Eſcouedo did ſerue his Lord Don Iohn well,to the Kings good liking: but in time they diſcouered plainly, that hee troad in the ſame pathe that Soto had done, entertaining ſecret correſpondencies in the Court of Rome, for his Maiſtets aduancement by the Popes pourſute, who poſſeſt him with an Imagination of the Crowne of England, the which did much diſpleaſe the King, although it were no preiudice to him. Don Iohn beeing returned ſoone after out of Italy into Spaine,to receiue his commiſſion and Inſtructions for the gouernment of the Netherlands,he parted well ſatiſfied and full of hope of this Conqueſt of England. Bee- D ing come into the Netherlands,and hauing ratified the pacification of Gant, made by the Generall Eſtates, the Prince and the particular Eſtates of Holland, Zeland, and their aſſociates,with the Eſtates of Brabant,Flanders,Arthois, Henault,&c. by which pacification all ſtrange Souldiers ſhould depart the countrie: ſo as Don Iohn thought, (and ſuch was his firſt and moſt aſſured deſſeigne) to make vſe of the ſayd Soldiers, in their retreate,to execute this exploite of England. But whether the Generall Eſtates of the Lowe Countries (who had then made an alliance with England) diſcouered his intent, or not: when as hee could not finde meanes to retire his ſouldiers by ſea, for want of ſhippes, which they refuſed him, that deſſeigne of England turned into ſmoake. Notwithſtanding that the Pope would haue aſſiſted him, as well with money, as with Bulls, E granting him the inueſtituure of that Realme,to hold it of the Popes Sea. The which the King of Spaine (without whoſe priuitie this buſineſſe was in the beginning managed) (hauing himſelfe a greedy deſire to that realme, as did afterwards appeare)could ſecretly croſſe.

Arragonois ſpoiled of their ancient priuiledges by the King.

Motiues of the bad vſage of the Arragonois for their liberties.

Don Iohn beeing much grieued in heart at this eſcape, yet ſeeming ſtill very obſequious and dutifull to the King,hauing in ſome ſort cauſed the Spaniards and Italians to retire,but not far off, and keeping the Germaine Collonels at his deuotion, and not cauſing them to rerire, hee afterwards ſeazed vpon the Caſtle of Namur, whereby all his practiſes were diſcouered,and many letters were intercepted, written by him and Eſcouedo his Secretarie: Wherevpon hee was declared an enemy to the Lowe Coun- F tries. Then hee beegan to treate ſecretly, and to make priuate alliances in France, with the Duke of Guiſe, all without the King of Spaines priuitie and knowledge, the which did mooue him much, obſeruing theſe courſes of Don Iohn and his Secretary Eſcouedo: whereof Antonio de Vargas, Ambaſſador for the King of Spaine in France, aduertiſed Antonio Perez, Secretary of State to the ſayd King, who preſently acquainted his maiſter therewith. Among other things,that Don Iohn ſaid, that hee had rather ſeeke his fortune in France with 6000. foote, and 2000. horſe, then to ſtay any longer in the A gouernment of the Netherlands. On the other ſide, Don Iohn by his letters which hee did write into Spaine, made ſtrange complaints, full of bitterneſſe and deſpaire, yea with threates; if they ſuffered him to languiſh any longer in that eſtate: and his letters were ſeconded by Eſcouedo, who wrote to Antonio Perez, whom he held to be a friend to Don Iohn and himſelfe; but hee diſcouered all their ſecrets vnto the King; as it appeared by letters written from Perez vnto the King, and noted in the margent with the Kings owne hand.

During all this buſineſſe, Eſcouedo beeing ſent for into Spaine, the King reſolues to haue him made away, either by murther or poyſon, as well for the great liberty and boldneſſe hee vſed in his writing, as for the ſtrange ſpeeches he ſometimes vttered, which were B very diſpleaſing vnto the King, taking for a coulour a certaine propoſition made by him to fortifie and man the rock of Magro, and of ſome 6000. Ducats imployed by him, contrary to the Kings intent. In the end, after that he had conferred with the Marquis of Velez, and duly conſidered of all Eſcouedos practiſes: holding it a dangerous matter to ſend him back to Don Iohn, the King found it expedient to haue him ſlaine. So Eſcouedo returning home to his lodging in the night, he was murthered in the ſtreete by Garcia of Arres, and his confederates, at the induction of Antonio Perez, who had receiued commandement from the King. Hauing beene formerly concluded betwixt the King and Perez, that if the murtherers ſhould chance to bee apprehended, that Perez, taking the C fact wholy vpon himſelfe ſhould flie into Arragon, whereas the King might more eaſily defend him then in Caſtile. Eſcouedo beeing murthered in this manner, the fact began to be diſcouered. The widow and her ſonnes made their complaints againſt Perez. The King receiued them into his Councell of State, but hee ſent them not before their Ordinary Iudge, himſelfe giuing the whole knowledge of the fact to the Preſident of Caſtile, and commanding him to talke with Eſcouedos ſonnes, and to the Secretary Mathew Vaſques, who preſented their complaint, to the end they might bee ſilent. But all the Preſidents admonitions were of no force, yea hee made them more violent in their complaints. Perez aduiſed the King to ſuffer this fact to come to a triall of lawe, with a moderate & ſlow pourſute, yet not to decree any thing, or elſe that he would giue him leaue D to retire from Court; the which the King tooke in ill part, promiſing him by the faith of a Knight, neuer to abandon him, and that hee would keepe him in his ſeruice. But Perez in the meane time ſaw the ſtorme approching, whereof hee was the more aſſured after the death of the Marquis of Velez, who had beene a liuely witneſſe vnto him. The King ſeeing him perplexed, and in diſtreſſe for this death, did confirme this promiſe againe vnto him more ſtrictly. In the meane time they doubled their complaints, the which (in like maner tending to the diſhonor, and to charge the Princeſſe of Eboly) the complainants framed at large by writing, and preſented it to the King, yet for all this hee gaue no ſentence: but being preſt by Vaſques, to whom he had begun to diſcouer himſelfe, as appeared by the anſwer which hee made him in writing, coppyed by Perez, with a poſtſcript E of the Kings.

In the end the King commanded his Confeſſor to reconcile the Princeſſe and Perez, with Vaſques: wherevnto the Princeſſe would not giue eare, finding her ſelfe wronged, for that ſhe held him vnworthy to conferre with her. The which did wonderfully diſcontent Perez, not daring to mooue her therewith, for that he held himſelfe bound vnto her ſeruice, for the fauours he had receiued from her. And ſeeing that by their reiterated complaints, notwithſtanding the Kings promiſe in the faith of a Knight, they purſued him with all violence: he beſought the King, at the leaſt, to do him this fauour, that hee might retire himſelfe. The king finding himſelfe wronged on both ſides; by the Princeſſe, for that ſhe would not reconcile her ſelfe with Vaſques, as hee had commanded; and with Perez F for that he would retire himſelfe. After that hee had conſulted with his Confeſſor, and with the Earle of Barayas, he cauſed the Princeſſe and Perez to be committed to priſon, vpon a coulour, that by this impriſonment hee ſhould force them to bee reconciled, the King himſelfe beeing a ſpectator of this apprehenſion, made by his commandement, the which was in the yeare 1579.

The

A The next day, the King ſent to viſit Perez wife, and to comfort her, wiſhing her not to be troubled for her husband. Hee in like manner ſent his Confeſſor to viſit Perez, ſeeming to haue a care that hee ſhould be well intreated. After that he had beene detained ſome moneth in priſon, hee ſent him with a certaine guarde home to his houſe, where he commanded Perez that he ſhould ſweare to Don Roderigo Manuel, by the faith of a Gentleman, that he would continue friend with Vaſques: Perez remitting his ſplene (yet hauing the knife neere his throte) yeelded therevnto: and ſo continued in his houſe, bearing the charge thereof, vntill the yeare 1585. and receiuing no allowance nor fee. At the end of which time (to the end the blind ſhould not ſee any thing) hee was with other Secre-
B taries put to the Viſita (which is a lawe to examine the actions of ſuch as they meane to intrap.) La viſita in Spaine is the law of ſifting.

The charges of this Viſita were more honourable to Perez then hurtfull. They did conſiſt of two points, the one concerning the Kings ſecrets, whereof hee aduertiſed the King, for that he would not diſcouer them, ſeeing that they meant to force him thervnto; hauing alwayes faithfully acquit himſelfe in keeping them in his boſome, as the King had truſted him. Hee in like manner informed the Confeſſor, ſhewing vnto him for his diſcharge, a writing of the Kings owne hand: wherevpon the Confeſſor did forbid him to purge himſelfe by his Kings writing: wherevnto he obayed, for that he would not diuulge his ſecrets: ſuffering himſelfe to bee condemned in a fine of thirty thouſand
C Ducats, ſuſpenſion of his office, two yeares impriſonment, and then to be baniſhed eight yeares. The which Perez endured by the perſwaſions and goodly promiſes of this Father Confeſſor.

This condemnation was made by the ſtrangeſt Act that hath beene ſeene, whereof the Councell had no knowledge, neither was it ſigned, nor any iudiciall ſentence pronounced. The Act beeing inſinuated to Perez, being lead from his houſe to the Caſtle, his goods before ſeazed on were freed, and it was told him that hee ſhould not per- Trick of a falſe Monke.
forme the ſaid Act, ſo as hee would deliuer the papers and Inſtructions which hee had written vnto the King, and from the King to him: that by this meanes hee might wholy diſcharge the King, and lay all vppon Perez owne head, wherein conſiſted the end of D their proceeding. For there were yet two ſecret points in the ſentence: the one was, they would make Perez guilty of Eſcouedos death: the other, that hee had no meanes to complaine of force and violence in his Country of Arragon: beſides an accuſation of ten thouſand Ducats wherewith they charged him, whereof by many liuely reaſons, and by a note of the Kings owne hands hee was diſcharged. Which note hauing beene deliuered into the Confeſſors hand, hee read and retained it, and afterwards denyed the hauing it.

When they came to execute the ſaid Acte, Perez thinking to preuent it, fled into a Church for liberty (fearing that his enemies would murther him in priſon) from whence notwithſtanding hee was drawne, but hauing obtained a ſentence to his aduan-
E tage, this execution was ſtopt. Notwithſtanding hee was afterwards taken againe, and carried to the Caſtle of Turnegano, where hee was cruelly intreated by one Torres of Auila a Licentiat, who kept him ninety dayes in Irons, from the ſight of his wife and children, who were in like manner committed to priſon; to the end they ſhould not demand Iuſtice, as the wife had done once at Lisbone, vppon the Kings promiſing by the faith of a Knight, the which was done to the end they might the better come to the Kings papers and her husbands, which this Friar Diego Chaues hunted ſo after, knowing how much they did import to free the King. To attaine vnto the which hee had already written two letters (by the meanes of the Earle of Barayas Preſident of Caſtile) to Perez wife, ſending her word, that there was no other meanes F to ſee her husband in liberty, then in yeelding vp the ſayd papers: and in ſo dooing, that both ſhee and her husband ſhould bee deliuered out of priſon, wherevnto ſhee reſiſted couragiouſly, refuſing flatly to giue them. So as in the end her husband did write a note vnto her with his owne bloud (ſo ſtraightly was he kept) that ſhe ſhould deliuer them, the which ſhe did, yet by a diuine inſtinct ſhee reſerued ſome, ſending them in two cofers to the ſaid Confeſſor, beeing at Monzon, with the Keyes, the which were deliuered into the Kings owne hands by him that had charge of the cofers; by the de- A liuerie of which papers, the Lady onely was ſet at liberty.

At the Kings retnrne from Monzon, the papers beeing read, Perez was ſomewhat inlarged in the towne of Madrid (but not without a further meaning) for the ſpace of foure moneths, hauing leaue to bee viſited, and the weeke before Eaſter to go to Maſſe, but this was a ſhort ioy, for Eſcouedos ſonne came to renew his old complaint, and Perez was againe ſent to the Caſtle to priſon, and ſoone after hee was called into the Court: where beeing examined vpon this complaint, hee continued faithfull and conſtant vnto the King; refuſing to declare any thing according to his commandements and promiſes; aduertiſing him notwithſtanding what the euent might be of ſuch kinde of proceedings: B but all was in vaine; for it was ordred that hee ſhould anſwer within ten dayes, vnto the cheiſe points of a proceſſe, which had laſted ten yeares. At this examination the Confeſſor aduiſed him, to confeſſe Eſcouedos murther, but not to declare the motiues and reaſons; which Perez did not approoue. But rather, to the end the King might bee diſcharged, to compound with Eſcouedos children, who were the parties interreſſed, the which was effected at Perez charge, for twenty thouſand Ducats, and it was preſently paid. All this did not ſerue the turne, for the Preſident Roderigo Vaſques, a Kinſman to Eſcouedo, ſeeing that Perez could auoyde all ſtormes, wrote vnto the King that hee ſhould conſider well of the compoſition which Perez had made, by the which the world did murmure and ſurmiſe, that his Maieſtie had cauſed him to do it. And therefore his regall C authority required, that hee ſhould declare, or cauſe Perez declare the reaſons of this accord; whereby his Maieſty ſhould ſtop all mens mouths, and Perez ſhould bee better diſcharged. Whereupon the king did write vnto Perez, to tell the reaſon why, by his commandement and for his ſeruice, hee had cauſed Eſcouedo to be ſlaine. This note and command from the king, made the greateſt to murmure; for (ſaid they) if the king hath commanded him to murther Eſcouedo, what reaſon, or what reparation do they pretend? Is it now time, after twelue yeares ſince it was done, to demand the cauſe? yea a Cardinall, & the Popes Legat ſpake vnto the Confeſſor in Perez behalfe: To whom he anſwered, that they ſhould reſt ſatiſfied, and that what had beene done, was to giue contentment to the Preſident Roderigo Vaſques, and that all ſhould be well. As in like manner Father Salinas a D preaching Friar, diſcourſed ſufficiently in a Sermon which he made in the kings Chappel, in Iuſtification of Perez, but all was without effect, the Confeſſor holding it a ſinne to demand Iuſtice: Notwithſtanding Perez remained firme and conſtant, and being examined vpon the Kings note, he would not declare any thing, for he did not eaſily giue credit thereunto: whereupon the Iudge tooke occaſion to put Perez to the rack (although his minde were ſufficiently tortured, with the confuſion of a precedent order) yet relying
An. 1591. vpon the Kings firſt inſtruction and commandement, he continued conſtant, & endured Arragon action. the torture, euen to the effuſion of his bloud, yet in the end hee was forced to declare the motiue cauſes of the murther of Eſcouedo, with the circumſtances, producing the Kings originall letters to that end, and an Autentike witneſſe, who was yet liuing: whoſe teſti- E mony they receiued, but all making for Perez, they ſuppreſt his depoſition, and the Kings billet, and did not produce it. Perez finding by all theſe violences and out-rages, that they Peres eſcapes out of priſon, and flies into Arragon. would draw his life into queſtion, he found no better means, then to ſeeke how he might eſcape out of priſon in Caſtile: as he did by the aſſiſtance of his wife, and of Giles de Meſa, a Gentleman of Arragon, his kinſman, in the night, the Thurſday before Eaſter: running thirty leagues poſt, without any reſt, vntill he came into Arragon: for the which his wife and children ſmarted, for they were caſt into priſon, with a friend of Perez; which cruelty was intollerable before God, as in ſuch euents, whereas wiſe men are dombe, God makes fooles to ſpeake, and to tell Kings and Princes the truth, to their confuſion. For Thio Martino the kings foole, & a natural, hearing that the chiefe in Court reioyced F that Perez had ſo eſcaped, asking the King what that Perez was, for whom euery man did ſo much reioyce? Surely ſaid he, he was not guilty, and therefore Sir, be thou alſo glad. Theſe words by a foole were obſerued by the wiſeſt. It ſeemed that impriſonment of Perez wife and children, proceeded from hatred, or to ſtop their iuſt complaints, or elſe that the Confeſſor ſought to be reuenged of them, for that the ſaid Lady had once charged him

A him that inſteed of a Confeſſor, hee was a Soueraigne Iudge, teaching him what was written of the poore widdow in the holy Scripture. And alſo for that which Donna Gregoria Perez their daughter, after a long purſute, ſpake with great courage and griefe of heart, vnto the Preſident Rodrigo Vaſques, that ſhe was come with her yong Brethren and Siſters, to the end that without making them to languiſh any longer in miſery, hee ſhould make haſt to ſuck vp their bloud, and that they were come to that end, deſiring rather to dye at once, then they ſhould thus ſuck their blouds by degrees. Wherewith the Preſident was no leſſe terrified, then the Confeſſor was at the Mothers words. Perez hauing recouered Arragon with great difficultie, beeing much broken with the Racke,
B and his long and miſerable impriſonment, hee ſtayed ſome time at Calatajub, where hee retired himſelfe into a Monaſterie. There were priuate letters ſent to a Knight of that towne, without any Act, or ſufficient warrant, to draw him from thence: the which not able to effect, beeing hindered by the religious men of that Conuent, hee gaue him a Monkes Sell for his priſon. Perez did write from this place vnto the King, but all was in vaine; for vpon new complaints and accuſations, hee was drawne out of this Conuent by the Kings expreſſe commandement (not without ſome mutinie of the townesmen) and lead to Saragoça, from whence hee did importune the King with new letters, ſending a religious man expreſly, with good inſtructions of all matters. This religious man ſpake vnto the King, who gaue him good words: but hee was not welcome to
C the reuered father the Kings Confeſſor. But nothing could helpe him, to ſtay theſe purſuites begunne: or elſe God would haue the truth knowne to all the world, the which ſome priuate mens mallice ſought to ſuppreſſe.

Perez ſeeing that hee preuailed nothing, hee had recourſe to his papers, letters, and inſtructions, as well from the King, as from ſome others, which had beene kept ſafe by his wiues induſtrie: whereof hee made a collection, deciſering the whole eſtate of his buſineſſe, and made a Booke, the which hee preſented vnto the Iuſtice: whereby his aduerſaries ſeeing themſelues confounded, and that hee ſhould be abſolutely diſcharged, they inuented an other meanes to intrappe him: which was that the King reſeruing all his rights, ſhould deſiſt from this action againſt Perez; and that they would charge him
D to haue ill acquitted his duty to his Prince. Although that this ſeperation of the cauſe was repugnant to the cuſtomes of Arragon, and that the King might not doe it: yet they gaue it forth that they had inſtructions, impugning them of Perez, the which was alledged wholy againſt the Kings authority, to the blemiſh of his reputation, and contempt of his writing, the which Perez, neither in priſon, nor out, for the onely reſpect he bare vnto the King, would euer ſhew, but onely at this laſt charge, where hee was forced to make vſe of them, leaſt he ſhould fall into the like inconuenience that Piſo had done, who would not iuſtifie himſelfe of Germanicus death, by the writings of Tiberius Cæſar, who had commanded him: Perez diſcharge beeing the more receiuable, for that hee did make euery man know by liuely reaſons, what had mooued the King to doe it. Perez
E enemies ſeeing there was no aduantage to bee gotten of him before the Soueraigne Iudge, they drew him to the ſeate of the Inqueſts of Arragon, where as the King is both Indge and party. There he was examined vpon the old Artlcles, the fift day after the ſeparation, and alſo vpon two new points: by the which in their Interrogatories they did obiect againſt him, that when as he heard the French King did proſper, hee reioyced, and contrarywiſe hee was ſad, when as he heard of the King of Spaines good ſucceſſe. Moreouer that he had a deſire to retire himſelfe into Berne, or into Holland and Zeland. To whom he anſwered, that they ought not to ſearch into the ſecret Cabinet of God, who alone knowes the hearts of men, proteſting of the force and violence they offred him, to the preiudice of the Kings ſeruice: Offring yet to produce more Inſtructions before any F third perſon, whom it ſhould pleaſe the King to name, and eſpecially before the Archbiſhop of Saragoça: But this offer was not allowed, nay not any one durſt deale in his buſineſſe, no not his owne Aduocate, hearing the threats of the Marquis of Almenare, who had corrupted ſome witneſſes vpon Perez retreate into Holland.

Yet this Inqueſt could not worke out any thing to preiudice Perez: then his aduerſaries tooke a new reſolution, to deliuer him ouer to the Inquiſition, vppon thoſe witneſſes which had beene ſuborned by the Marquis of Almenare, touching his A reeate into Holland, accuſing him alſo of Inchantment. This forged Act of the Marquis, was cenſured throughout the realme, and euery man would take knowledge thereof, who found it to be ſuch, as it was nothing preiudiciall to Peres: yea the Salmedine of Saragoſſa (which is the ſupreame Magiſtrate of the towne) was afterwards committed to priſon, for that he had receiued the depoſitions of theſe falſe witneſſes: whereby all the people and Eſtates of Arragon, did ſee with what paſſion and ſpleene they did Peres put into the Inquiſition. proceed againſt Peres: and would haue them iudge definitiuely, whether he were guilty or not, the which if they refuſed to doe, then ſaid they, Peres cauſe was good. Notwithſtanding the Officers of the Inquiſition, (contrary to the priuiledges of the manifeſta- B tion, and other rights of the realme) came vpon the fiue and twenty of May, that yeare 1591. and tooke him out of the priſon, leading him to the Inquiſition; but within foure houres after, the Inquiſitors were forced through a mutiny of the people, to deliuer him back to his firſt priſon of the manifeſtation: the tumult was very great, with the effuſion of ſome bloud, and the burning of houſes: yea, the Marquis of Almenare, for that he had done againſt their priuiledges, was committed to priſon, hauing a thouſand in-

An. 1591. iurious ſpeeches giuen him by the women and children, and beeing out-raged and beaten by the skumme of the people: whereof fifteene dayes after, (hauing in his extremitie freed Peres) he dyed in priſon. Peres enemies being not yet ſufficiently taught, by Arragon. this third bloudy and horrible error, they perſiſted in their obſtinacie to haue him in the C Inquiſition: wherevpon thirteene Lawyers of the realme, were appointed to Iudge, whether Peres cauſe deſerued to be ſent thether, or not. At the firſt they ordeined, that it was againſt all right to deliuer him to the Inquiſition: But afterwards by the ſollicieting of Iohn Lewis Murano, who had wonne moſt of them with preſents, they gaue an other ſentence, contrary to their firſt, directly impugning the priuiledges, examples, concordants and declarations of the realme, which diſanull the Edicts of Confiſcation, proceeding from the Inquiſition. Yet his aduerſaries would proceed, and the rather, for that the King had commanded the Gouernor of Arragon, to keepe Peres in perpetuall priſon: or at the leaſt that he might neuer goe out of the realme of Arragon: wherein the deputies, to obey the King, agreed moſt together. The people notwithſtanding were D reſolute, ſeeing the wrong and violence they not onely did to Peres, but alſo to his wife and ſmall children, yea to religious men that were his ſollicitors: the which all the world deteſted: and in like manner to his reuenewes, ſo as in priſon hee liued onely of almes, the which were grudged him, beſides the wrong which was done vnto his mooueables, baſely ſold at an out-cry, yea the ſhirts and ſmocks of his little Infants borne in the priſon, with the thimble and needle wherewith Donna Gregoria his eldeſt daughter did ſow; beſides many other great indignities, which were done to him, his wife and children, whereof the people had great pitty; concluding thereby, that whatſoeuer he endured, proceeded onely from reuenge, hatred and ſpleene, and that he was not culpable.

His purſuing enemies knowing well, and hauing found it by experience, how the peo- E
ple ſtood affected to their priuiledges, and to Peres, durſt not attempt to put him againe into the Inquiſition (which ſhould haue beene done on the twentith of Auguſt) without force: and therefore they gathered together a good number of the Kings ſoldiers, with many Noblemen and Knights of the Viceroyes houſe (which had neuer beene ſeene before) the which troubled both the Citty of Saragoſça, and the whole realme, for that it was directly againſt their priuiledges: but all turned for this time into ſmoake, they not daring to effect any thing. Not content herewith, they made better prouiſion of men on the 24. of September following, hauing raiſed 2000. men to take Peres, beeing aſſiſted by the Officers, Noblemen and Knights. On the day appointed, the Gouernour called his ſoldiers together before the breake of day, and put them into battaile: and to F ſtrike terror into the Burgeſſes, he cauſed them to giue a charge of ſhotte, where there was a yong child ſlaine, and ſome hurt by the Gouernours owne hand. At the houre of Councell, the Inquiſitors arriued, who demanded to haue the perſons of Peres and of Iohn Franciſco Maiorini deliuered into their hands. Vpon which demand (notwithſtanding, a petition preſented at the ſame time, by ſome good Countrymen) they obtai-

A obtained, Fiat. Whereupon many Noblemen and officers went to the priſon to receiue him. Whether being come, a Lieutenant called Micer Claueria, with the Officers of the Inquiſition, beeing accompanied by ſome ſoldiers, leading with them two Notaries, the better to qualifie their exploite, they entred into the priſon, and cauſed Peres to come downe, where hauing obſerued the ceremonies of his euocation, they demanded to haue him for ſome points concerning religion, and the faith. Peres ſeeing this, and ſtanding vpon his right and the priuiledges of the realme, nothing would preuaile, but they put Irons vpon both his legges, and prepared to lead them away. Whileſt that the Viceroy, or Gouernour, the Soueraigne Judge, the great Noblemen, Earles and Knights of this
B company, were in Armes in houſes neere vnto the priſon: at the ſame inſtant the people came running in great troupes, crying, Liberty, liberty, (the which in the like caſe vpon the breach of their priuiledges, is lawfull.) At the firſt they were but a multitude of labourers, and the skumme of the people (whereof few were armed) which fell vpon them that were vpon the place of Iuſtice. The reſt of the people ſeeing that they had no leader, and that it was not onely for Peres, but alſo for their liberties, that made them to ſtirre, they went and intreated Giles de Meza to bee their head, who hauing taken vpon him this charge, with thoſe men he had, and ſuch as came ſcattering vnto him, hee charged the horſemen, and the reſt of the Gouernours ſouldiers, whom he preſently put to flight, who were alſo ſet vpon by two hundred children, armed according to their ages
C and ſtrength, and a poore naturall foole, who played his part with ſtoanes. Finally, their fury was ſo great, as they ſlew the Coche Moyles, and burnt the Coches, which ſhould haue carried Peres and his companion into Caſtile, they alſo ſet fire of the houſe whereas the Viceroy and other Noblemen had ſaued themſelues, There were ſlaine in this tumult the ſaid Iohn Lewis Murano, and Pedro Ieronimo of Baradix, one of the chiefe Councellors of the towne.

Tumult in Saragoſſa for Peres.

This Combate, happened for their liberties, was done with ſuch zeale and heate, as a very old man would haue expoſed ſixe or ſeauen of his ſonnes to ſacrifice themſelues for this cauſe, commanding them to arme, and rather to dye: and a Gentlewoman of a good family, ſent her Nephew and onely heyre. The furie being paſt by the death of D fifty or ſixtie perſons, and aboue a hundred and fifty hurt; the people returned to the priſon, with an intent to haue Peres. The Officers of the Inquiſition, ſeeing in what danger they were, tooke off his fetters, and by their Maiſters commandement, intreated him to goe out of priſon, fearing to be ſlaine there. Peres demanded an Acte, but for that by reaſon of the confuſion hee could not haue it, hee went forth, to the great ioy and content of all the people: who conducted him to the houſe of Don Diego of Eredia. This done, they went to retire Iohn Franciſco Maiorini, ſetting all the other priſoners at liberty. The ſame night Peres went out of Saragoça, with Giles de Meza, remaining three dayes vpon a Mountaine, during the which hee vnderſtood that the Gouernour cauſed him to be purſued, whereupon hee returned back into the towne, where E he lay hid forty dayes, to vnderſtand what would become of this buſineſſe: which was that they prepared an Armie in Caſtile, to come towards Saragoça, and yet the Viceroy gaue out a brute of an Accord, which was but to vnderſtand where Peres remained: as appeared by the letters of an Inquiſitor, who had feed men to that end, hoping by ſuch a ſeruice to get an Archbiſhopricke: By reaſon whereof Peres retired the day before that Don Alonſo de Vergas entred with his Armie into Saragoça, hiding himſelfe among the rocks, vntill in the end hee came to Sala, where hee reſted himſelfe ſome dayes, vntill that hearing of the new and intollerable Accord, hee ſent Gilles de Meza vnto the Lady Catherine Princeſſe of Nauarre, the French Kings onely ſiſter, intreating her to receiue them vnder her protection and ſafegard. And hauing certaine in-F telligence that they purſued him, and ſought him in all places, hee went by night from Sala and came to Pao, where hee found Giles de Meza, with an anſwer from the Princeſſe, which was that hee might come boldly, where hee ſhould find all freedom, going, comming, or ſtaying, with liberty of his religion, yea ſhee ſent ſome horſes to fetch him vnto her. Where beeing arriued, and hauing ſaluted the Princeſſe, ſhe gaue him as good a reception as he could expect of ſuch a Lady.

Peres eſcapes out of Arragon and comes to Paris.

Action of Arragon.

Peres

Perez beeing thus vnder the protection of this Princeſſe, the greedineſſe of the Spaniard to ſhed his bloud, did hunt after his death, offering new Accords, to entertaine him neere vnto them, vntill they might finde ſome meanes to effect their deſſeignes, to which end they bargained with diuerſe perſons for his life. Beeing at Pao, there was a very good agreement offred him by Don Martin de la Nuca, in the behalfe of the Viceroy, of Don Alonſo de Vergas, and of the Inquiſitors, but he durſt not truſt them. Many letters haue diſcouered the treaſons and practiſes to murther Perez, and the names of the vnder-takers: among others, of one Baſtamantes his owne kinſman: of another Arragonois furniſhed with poyſon, and letters from the Viceroy, found about him, who being diſcouered, hee was condemned to dye, but at the requeſt of Perez, the Princeſſe pardoned him: then there was another of Nauarre hired to that end, who diſcouered himſelfe to Iohn Franciſco Maiorini: to whom in the King of Spaines name, hee promiſed pardon and great rewards: But going about to perſwade him by his reaſons, that in executing the Kings will to murther or poyſon Perez, was no treaſon. Iohn Franciſco hauing diſcouered the ground of his ſpeech, hee reuealed him, and the Nauarrois was baniſhed. They would alſo haue ſuborned a naturall Foole to murther him, but he was wiſer then they that ſought to corrupt him.

All theſe practiſes and attempts were the cauſe that Perez retired into England, conſidering that in France hee ſhould neuer bee ſafe from ſuch practiſers againſt his life: Notwithſtanding that hee was comprehended in the letters of Pardon granted to them that had offended the King of Spaine, which were afterwards diſperſed throughout the world. Wherevnto hee would not truſt, taking example by Don Bernardo de Cabrera, the Kings Secretarie, who ſeeing how hee was enuied, retired from Court, and became a Prieſt, yet the King called him back againe, beeing loth to looſe ſuch a ſeruant: beeing returned, their enuie increaſed, and he was ſo violently purſued, as Don Pedro of Arragon cauſed him to looſe his head like a traytor: and yet afterwards, this Don Pedro dying, hee declared him an Innocent, and to haue beene faithfull: ſaying, that hee had been abuſed by his houſhold ſeruants, who hated Cabrera, commanding that all his lands and goods ſhould bee reſtored to his Nephew, which had beene confiſcated: In the meane time the Innocent man was dead, and had ſuffered wrongfully.

The like was ſeene at Bruſſells, in the Councell of the troubles, who put to death during their greateſt executions, a poore innocent man that was a priſoner, who had neuer beene called, heard, nor examined, ſo as ſome three or foure moneths after his death, when they came to call him to bee examined, they found that hee had beene executed, without any arraignment, or ſentence giuen. Wherewith ſome of the Councellors that were borne in the countrey, beeing troubled in conſcience, the Councellor Vergas a Spaniard, ſayd vnto them: Trouble not your ſelues, it imports not, if he bee dead an Innocent, his ſoule is the more happy, and his body is freed from all miſeries.

But returning to that which followed in the towne of Saragoça, after the departure of Perez. The King of Spaine, to bee reuenged for this tumult, gathered an armie together vpon the frontiers of Caſtile, giuing it out that it was to bee ſent into France, to ſuccour the League, of the which Don Alonſo de Vergas was Generall, who hearing that Perez was eſcaped, fell with all his troopes vppon the realme of Arragon, to puniſh them of Saragoça. There was a petition preſented againſt him and his armie, by the whole body of the realme of Arragon, to the end that the Iuſtice Maior, according to their ancient priuiledges, ſhould take armes, to repulſe the attempts of Don Alonſo. According to the which, by a decree of ſeuenteene, the Iuſtice with the whole realme, fell to Armes, diſtributed the Offices of warre, leuied men, and brought Saint Georges Standerd to field (an vſuall thing in ſuch caſes) and ſo marcht in good order out of Saragoça, but with bad ſucceſſe: for that the Captaines (traitors to their Country) baſely fearing the forces of Don Alonſo, reriring themſelues, abandoned their companies, ſo as the armie of Arragon came to nothing, euery one ſlipping away, through the treachery of a Maiſter Inquiſitor, who aduertiſed the King how many men there were, who were their Commanders and Captaines, with their names and ſurnames, and the meanes how to defeate them.

To

A To vnderſtand the reaſons of the Arragonois, to the end it may not be held a rebellion, lightly vndertaken without cauſe, or an alteration without ground. It ſhall be good for the better knowledge of the matter, to relate briefly, the eſtate, condition, and beginning of the realme of Arragon.

Since the generall loſſe of Spaine, which hapned vnder King Roderigo, by the meanes of Cont Iulian, for that he had defloured his daughter Caba. The Moores or Sarazins held Spaine long, without either King or Lord. In the end the realme of Arragon freed it ſelfe from the power of the Moores, and the Arragonois made themſelues their owne Maiſters and Lords, not acknowledging any particular Prince, and without any Sou-
B raignty but their owne. So as beeing weary of their reſt and liberty, they required (as the children of Iſraell did ſometimes to Samuel) to haue a King, and therein they demanded the Popes aduice: who anſwered them as Samuel had done the Iſraelits. But ſeeing they deſired to haue a King, he did wiſh them to preſcribe him lawes and conditions, and ouer him a Soueraigne Iudge, with aſſiſtants, to bridle his ambition. The Arragonois gaue credit to this Councell, and before they would chooſe them a King, they erected the dignity and preheminence of El Iuſticia of Arragon, which is a Soueraigne Iudge aboue the King, with ſeuenteene Aſſiſtants. And they made a law which was called the Lawe of manifeſtation, for the preſeruation of the Vaſſals right, againſt the out-rages and oppreſſions of the mighty, be hee King, Prince, or other Iudge. Which law, with other
C Statutes and Ordonances, together with their Priuiledges, are to be ſeene Printed, vnder the Kings royall authority, and haue continued many hundred yeares, to the honor and reputation of their Kings, and eſpecially of Don Ferdinand of Arragon, ſurnamed the Catholicke, who would not giue eare (being come to the crown of Caſtile, by D. Iſabella his wife) to the bad councell which the Spaniards gaue him, tending to the aboliſhing of the ſaid priuiledges, ſaying: So long as the two ballances of the King and realme, ſhall be in a iuſt Counterpeſe, the king and realme ſhall continue and flouriſh together, but if one of the Scales ſeeke to weigh downe the other, the one or the other will fall to ruine, or it may bee both together. Moreouer the Arragonois made a law of vnion, conſiſting in two points worthy the knowledge, for the cleering of this preſent diſcourſe. The one is, that whenſo-
D euer the king ſhall breake their lawes, they may chooſe an other. For you muſt vnderſtand that they do not ſweare vnto their Kings, but conditionally in theſe termes. Nos que valemos tanto come vos, y vos tanto come nos, oz hazemo nueſtro Rey y Senor contal, que nos gardays nueſtros fueros, y libertades, ſy no, no. And hee muſt humble himſelfe vpon his knee, bare-headed, before the Soueraigne Iudge, which is El Iuſticia, and ſweare firſt, and then the Arragonois after him. The ſecond point of this vnion is, that the Princes and Noblemen of the realme, may make leagues and confederations againſt their King in caſe of oppreſſion, or of breach of their priuiledges. And vpon theſe conditions they did chooſe their firſt King, who was a Knight of Arragon, called Garci Ximenes, and after him three or toure: But this election continued not long: for the King D. Pedro, called E with the Poignard, deſiring to make the realme ſucceſſiue and hereditarie, inſiſted in an aſſembly of the Eſtates, to diſanull this law of election; the which in the end was granted, by the foure members of the realme, reſeruing all their other rights and priuiledges but that: the which he did willingly accept, and after this Accord made (holding the Charter of this Election in his hand) he drew out his Poynard and cut it in peeces, ſaying theſe words. Que tal ſuero y fuero dy poder eligir Rey los vaſſallos, ſangre de Rey auia de coſtar, and withall ſtab'd himſelfe through the hand: from which time the King was called Don Pedro with the Poynard: as his effigie is to bee ſeene at this day, in the royall hall of the deputation in the towne of Saragoça, whereas all the Kings his ſucceſſors are, vnto Philip the ſecond laſt deceaſed. By vertue of the law of vnion, and of their priuiledges, the F Arragonnois tooke Armes this yeare 1592. prooceeding thus iuſtly in their buſineſſe, the chiefe Iuſtice cauſing the ſentence to be inſinuated to Don Alonſo de Vargas, by two Notaries and two Vſhers: who hauing made their inſinuation vnto him, vpon the penalty of body and goods, they returned freely to Saragoça. Of which their proceeding may appeare by the Commiſſion giuen to Don Iohn de la Nuca choſen Generall of the armie, ſigned by El Iuſticia, by the Abbot of Piedra, Lewis Nauarra, Ihon Lewis of Marcuello, Saying of Don Ferdinand King of Arragon.

Manner of the King of Arragons othe.

Don

Don Iohn de Luna, Ieronimo de Oro, and others, and the Realme. Wherefore all things being thus ordred according vnto law, and paſt by the Iuſtice, and Soueraignty, the Preachers in their Pulpits, and the Prieſts in their Confeſſions exhorted the people to do it: yea a Secretary of the Inquiſition ſigned the reſolution of the realme, as well grounded. The Army of Arragon beeing thus diſperſed, and come to nothing, as wee haue ſayd, before that Don Alonſo entred into Saragoça, the King wrote goodly letters to diuerſe of the chiefe Noblemen of the Realme, as Don Alonſo did in like manner, to giue ſome coulour to his bloudy exploite, ſaying, that it was to goe into France, and ſwearing that it was the leaſt of his thoughts to doe them any harme: yea that hee was a better Arragonois then any one of them. A

Vpon theſe letters he was ſuffered to enter freely with his armie into Saragoça: hauing lodged his men, hee began to impriſon all men whom hee pleaſed, Noblemen, Knights, Gentlemen, Lawyers, Marchants, and Bourgeſſes of all qualities: the Deputies of the Realme and the Cleargie were leaſt ſpared: there were alſo many Ladies, Gentlewomen, and other women priſoners, and Lieutenants of Soueraigne Iuſtice, as Michel Claueria, and Miter Spinoſa, whom they forced to renownce their Offices, ſubſtituting others, whom the King before for their offences had declared incapable, to the blemiſh of his authoritie, their election beeing againſt all right and law. They did alſo confiſcate (contrary to the lawes of Arragon) not onely the goods of the husbands, but alſo of the wiues of ſuch as were abſent. And aboue all the Soueraigne Iudge of Arragon was taken, and within twenty houres loſt his head, without any other ſentence, but of a little ſcrowle written with the Kings hand, in theſe termes, Hauing read this, you ſhall preſently apprehend Don Ihon de la Nuca, chiefe Iuſtice of Arragon, and let mee haue newes of his death, as ſoone as of his Impriſonment. The which was done, notwithſtanding his appellations and Proteſtations, without the priuitie of any man, vntill hee came vnto the Scaffold to bee executed, whereas many had gone before him, and many followed after. Thus the Realme of Arragon thinking to preſerue their priuiledges and liberties, loſt them, with the chiefe of the Nobility, and a great number of men of good quality. B C

This yeare 1592. the King of Spaine hauing put many to death at Saragoça, for that they had taken armes for the defence of their liberties, and burnt Antonio Perez Image. The Eſtates of the Country hauing aſſembled at Tarracone, and giuen ſatisfaction vnto the King, hee was content to ſend a generall pardon into the Prouince. Wherevpon all Vargas Souldiers were drawne out of Saragoça, except ſome fewe that were left to garde the Inquiſition. The Turke beeing in Armes, and threatning eſpecially the houſe of Auſtria, the Catholicke King grew iealious, that by this diuerſion hee might bee much troubled in his warres of Flanders, where as the vnited Eſtates were very ſtrong, beeing aſſiſted from other Princes: hee therefore ſent Charles Cigala to Conſtantinople, vnder coulour to viſit his brother, but it was generally thought, that his going was to ſaue his country from inuaſion, but Cigala could not obtaine what hee deſired, for that the Turkes landing diuerſe times, carryed away many thouſands of Chriſtians, and committed great ſpoyles vpon the coaſts of Calabria, and Apulia, comming neere vnto Naples, as alſo in Sicile. D E

Cont Fuentes ſent into the Low countries.

Newes beeing come into Spaine, that the Duke of Parma was returned very ſicke from the Spawe, and that the Phyſitions deſpaired of his life: the Cont of Fuentes was preſently ſent into the Lowe Countries, with Commiſſion to command the armie after his death, (the which ſome imputed to the Spaniards) whither he went in poſt, but the Duke of Parma dyed before his arriuall in Arras, and was much lamented.

This yeare there beeing a Commiſſion granted by the Queene of England to Sir Walter Raleigh, for an expedition to the weſt Indies: he armed fourteene or fifteene good ſhips of warre, whereof two were the Queenes, and beeing accompanied by a troope of reſolute Gentlemen, hee began to bee ready to goe from the Weſt Countries, but hee was ſo long ſtayed there by contrary windes, as the fitteſt ſeaſon for Sayling was paſt, his peoples mindes began to alter, and his victuals conſumed. Wherevpon the Queene called home Sir Walter Raleigh in Maye, commanding him to giue ouer his intended F voyage,

A voyage,and to leaue his charge to Sir Iohn Bourrough,and Sir Martin Frobiſher: but hee finding his honor ingaged,would not leaue the fleete beeing now vnder ſaile,but beeing taken with a ſtrange tempeſt on the 11. of May,and in danger to be ſwallowed vp in the ſea,he reſolued to returne,and to leaue the charge to the aboue-named, giuing them directions to diuide their fleet in two,one to lye vpon the South Cape of Spaine,and the other to attend at the Ilands, which made the Admirall of Spaine to ſtay vpon that coaſt,and to neglect the wafting of the Caracks. Sir Iohn Bourrough ſayling towards the Açores,hee diſcouered a Carack called Santa Cruz, comming from the Eaſt Indies, which getting neere the land, the Portugalls carried what goods they could out of her, B and ſet fire of the ſhip. There they vnderſtood by certaine priſoners,of three other Carracks that were comming from the Indies, which Sir I*ohn*,with his conſorts,reſolued to attend. After ſixe weekes patience, they diſcouered a huge Caracke called Madre de Dios,one of the greateſt belonging to the Crowne of Portugall,which after a long and furious fight ,was in the end borded by the Engliſh; they found the hatches ſtrewed with dead carcaſes , and with wounded men languiſhing. Don Fernando de Mendoça was commander of this Caracke,whom Sir I*ohn Bourrough*,of an honorable diſpoſition and pittying his eſtate,ſent away freely with moſt of his followers to his Country. This Caracke was eſteemed to be of a thouſand ſixe hundred tuns,and did carry nine hundred tuns in bulke of Marchandize, there were in her ſixe or ſeauen hundred perſons: her C chiefe commodities,beſides Iewels,were Spices,Drugs,ſilks,China ſilkes,Callicoes,with Pearle,Muske, Cyuet and Amber gris, with diuerſe other commodities, the which at reſonable rates was valued at an hundreth and fifty thouſand pounds ſtarling. The loſſe of theſe two Caracks brought D.Alphonſo de Bacan, General with the Spaniſh fleet,in diſgrace with the King,who imputed it to his negligence.

Carrake called Santa Cruz ſet on fire.

Carack called Mombre de Dios, taken by the Engliſh.

In the yeare 1593. the King of Spaine ſent the Duke of Feria into France, to offer all his forces to fauour the League, and the election of a new King, beeing aſſembled together at Paris to that end,where it beeing propounded, who ſhould bee called to the Crowne, the Duke of Feria did inſiſt for the eldeſt daughter of Spaine, who he ſayd had moſt right,the realme falling to the Maſculine line of Capet, the which hee maintai- D ned for many defects might not pretend,ſo as the I*nfanta* comming of the ſiſter, who was elder then Henry the third, ſhee ſhould alſo bee preferred to the Crowne, and the rather for that ſhee ſhould bee marryed to ſome Prince in France, ſo as it ſhould not paſſe to a ſtranger,but this Prince ſhould be choſen by the King of Spaine.This propoſition was diſtaſtfull to moſt of the aſſembly,who ſayd that it was againſt their Salike law.

1593. Duke of Feria ſent to the league in France.

King Philip hauing conquered Portugall, which hee pretended to bee due vnto him in the right of his mother, and expelled Don Anthonio, who was held baſe, hee gaue the gouernment thereof to Cardinall Albertus of Auſtria, yonger ſonne to the Emperour Maximilian the ſecond, a Prince endowed with many great vertues,and therefore very acceptable to the Portugalls. In which gouernment hee did ſo carry himſelfe, as E hee gaue great ſatisfaction both to the King and his ſubiects . P*hilip* beeing now growne old , and vnfitte for the gouernment of his realmes, his ſonne Philip beeing yet too young, hee called the Arch-duke Albert out of Portugall into Spaine, who came vnto the King on the eleuenth day of September , hee beeing at the Monaſtery of Saint Lawrence(commonly called Eſcuriall) where hee gaue him an honourable reception. The King calling Albert vnto him, let him vnderſtand with what cares and toyle hee had for ſo many yeares gouerned his hereditary kingdomes, and ſtates, but beeing now broken with age, hee was no more fitte for command: hauing hetherto by all meanes ſought to procure the peace and quiet of his ſubiects,but he had bin interrupted by the practiſes of ſome turbulent men, ſo as hee could not maintaine F peace in all his Prouinces.Hee was therefore greeued that hee could not deliuer vnto his ſonne a quiet eſtate,and the rather for that his ſonne beeing yong of yeares, was not yet fit to gouerne kingdomes,that his couſins wiſedome and integritie had beene tryed vnto him, the which he had hetherto vſed among the Portugals,knowing it to be ſuch , as hee durſt ſafely commit the gouernment of all his other realmes to his faith.

Hauing now reſolued (after ſo many labours paſt,for the glory of God, and the quiet of of his ſubiects) to giue ouer the gouernment, and to ſpend the remainder of his dayes in contemplation, giuing God thankes for the proſperous courſe of his life, and the happines of his Eſtates, retyring himſelfe into ſome Religious place, and there pray continually for his ſoules health: And to reſigne vp the gouernment of his Realmes to Philippe his ſonne, and to Albert his couſin, that with their ioynt Councels and cares they might gouerne his ſubiects, vntill his ſonne grew to more yeares, and were capable of the ſole commaund. That hee would alſo adde vnto their Councels fiue of the cheiſe Noble-men of the Kingdome, Spaniards borne, whoſe councell, helpe, and authority, if need were, they ſhould vſe, but I doe not find that this reſolution tooke effect. A

Muley Zecq becomes a Chriſtian.

Muley Mahomet ſometimes King of Fez and Marrock, was expelled by his vncle Muley Moluc, who imploring ayde from Sebaſtian King of Portugall, they both dyed in battell, as you haue heard. Mahomet had a ſonne called Muley Xecq, who had beene giuen in hoſtage with ſome Noblemen to Sebaſtian, who ſent him to Mazagon. After the battell hee was conuayed with his company into Spaine, where hee was brought vppe vnder the protection of King Philippe, and this yeare beeing inſtructed in the Chriſtian Religion, hee became a Chriſtian, and was Chriſtned in that famous Monaſtery of Saint Laurence (called Eſcuriall) with his couzin and other Courtiars, all making profeſſion of the Goſpell. B

1594. The Turke this yeare made all Italy to tremble, for that Cigala beeing come forth with an hundred and threeſcore Galleys and other veſſells, it ſeemed at the firſt, that hee had a deſſeyne to enter into the gulphe, but finding the Venetians to make great preparation, they fell vppon the coaſt of Calabria, where they did much harme vntill the comming of Prince Doria into thoſe Seas, who ſeeyng the Turke gone retyred himſelfe, but the Turkes hauing fortified their Fleete with more Gallyes, returned againe and threatned Italy: Whereuppon Carlo Spinelli, by commandement from the Viceroy of Naples, cauſed the Citty of Rhegium to bee abandoned with ſome others vppon that coaſt. C

Turkes inuade Italy.

Cigala comming to Rhegium, and finding their goods carried to ſome ſafer place, hee burnt it in diſdaine, and threatned to paſſe farther into the countrey. The miſery which the poore people endured, and the cruelty which thoſe Barbarians vſed was exceeding great, the ſpoyles they made were valued at many hundred thouſand crownes: And for that the King of Spaine had need (if hee would defend his owne Eſtates, and the honour of the holy Church from the Armes of Infidells) of great ſummes of gold, he made requeſt vnto the Pope, that the Cardinall and Archbiſhop of Toledo being dead in Spaine, and hauing left a million of crownes to bee imployed in godly vſes, he would make declaration that the ſaid ſumme might bee imployed in thoſe godly and important warres, wherein the Pope tooke deliberation, and did ſoone after ſatisfye the King, confirming the Cardinall Albert of Auſtria in the ſucceſſion of the ſaid Archbiſhoprick, hauing beene named by his Maieſty. But to treate more ſtrictly with him of many affayres importing Chriſtendome, he ſent Iohn Franciſco Aldobrandini Ambaſſadour into Spaine, who was receaued there with royall magnificence and great ſhewes of honor and loue. D E

Albert of Auſtria Archbiſhop of Toledo.

1595. In the beginning of this yeare 1595. the warre began to grow hotte in the Franche Conty of Bourgundy, betwixt the French and the Spaniard, whether the King of Spaine reſolued to ſend the Conſtable of Caſtile, who was Gouernor of the Dutchie of Milan, with 4500. ſouldiers of the Realme of Naples, and he gaue commiſſion to Fernando de Toledo, Lodowicke Melzi, to Alexander Carraciola, and to Alexander Gonzaga, either of them to raiſe a troupe of horſe, and that they ſhould leauy a thouſand foot in that eſtate, and three thouſand in the Duchy of Vrbin.

Conſtable of Caſtile ſent vnto the Franch Court.

Proteſtation of the Spaniſh Ambaſſador at the abſolution of the French King.

The French King hauing left the religion wherein he had beene bred, and fallne to the Romiſh Church, was after great ſute and inſtance, abſolued by the Pope with the accuſtomed ceremonies. Before the doing whereof, the King of Spaines Ambaſſadour made a proteſtation in the King his Maſters name, that whatſoeuer the Pope intended for to doe in the ſaid buſineſſes, ſhould not any way preiudice his Maſters rights to the Realme of Nauarre, nor to the Duchy of Bourgondy, nor yet to the F

great

A great treaſure hee had diſburſed at the requeſt of the Catholikes of France, where- 1595 of hee meant to bee repaied, and that hee would not deſiſt from armes, vntill that Realme had ſatisfied him: which proteſtation being accepted by the Pope, the ſaid embaſſadours Secretarie cauſed a publike inſtrument to bee made with licence from his Holineſſe. And this yeare died D. Antonio of Portugall at Paris, which newes were verie ioyfull to the king of Spaine, being freed from the apprehenſions of dailie troubles in that realme, by meanes of his pretenſions. Death of D. Antonio king of Portugall.

The Archduke Erneſtus of Auſtria being Gouernour in Flanders for the king of Spaine, the earle of Fuentes commanded the armie by prouiſion vntill the comming
B of a new gouernour, the king reſoluing to ſend the Cardinall Albertus to ſucceed his brother: vpon whoſe diſpatch (whether it proceeded from the kings own diſpoſition, or a deſire in him to make himſelfe the more acceptable to the people of thoſe Prouinces, at his firſt comming) there were many Ships of the Eaſt Countries, and the Netherlands, (which had beene ſtaied in Spaine, to ſerue as men of warre, and to waſt home the Indian fleets) diſcharged in diuers Hauens and Ports: And at Seuille the Duke of Medina Sidonia, told the Merchants and Maſters of ſhips, that it was the kings pleaſure and command, being mooued there unto by the Cardinal of Auſtria, and that from thenceforth their ſhips ſhould haue free paſſage into Spaine, and haue paſports to goe and come if they would demaund it, hoping they would
C in time acknowledge the kings gratious fauours, and ſubmit themſelues vnto their naturall Prince: And the better to perſuade the vnited Prouinces of the kings loue and fauour towards them, hee ſet Philip of Naſſau, Prince of Orange, and Earle of Buren, at libertie, hauing beene long reſtrained in Spaine, which was thought to be done at the inſtance of the Prince of Spaine, and of the Archduke, to the end hee might haue him with him into the Low-Countries. Ships of the vnited Prouinces, diſcharged in Spaine.

Experience hath often taught that armes are more fortunate, and produce greater effects in an enemies Countrie, than at home, and that there is no ſuch triumph as that which is fetcht farre off. The French held that all their combuſtions had bin forged in Spaine, that the Ieſuits had beene the chiefe workemen: The attempts a-D gainſt the French kings perſon, by Iohn Chaſtell who had hurt him in the face, and other their diſciples, did verifie this opinion; Beſides the French king, had by his letters giuen the Eſtates of Arthois and Henaut to vnderſtand, that if they did not deſiſt from relieuing his rebellious Leaguers, vpon the frontiers of Picardie, hee was reſolued to make warre againſt them, prefixing them a certaine time, to giue him anſwere, which they neglected: whereupon the French king grounding the neceſſitie of his armes, vpon theſe conſiderations, hee made a declaration at Paris, in Ianuary this yere, by the which, for certaine reaſons therein contained, he denounced war againſt the king of Spaine and all the Low-countrie Prouinces vnder his obedience, as his enemies, cauſing it to bee proclaimed in all the frontier Townes of his Realme. French king proclaimes war againſt the king of Spaine.

E After the publication hereof, there was the like proclamation made at Bruſſels, in the name of the king of Spaine, againſt the French king (whome hee tearmed Prince of Bearne) and againſt all the French that held his partie: the Leaguers were excepted, whome hee called the good confederate French Catholikes, and he promiſed to aide and aſſiſt them with all the meanes which God had giuen him, promiſing the like to all the French, of what qualitie ſoeuer, that ſhould within two moneths after that proclamation forſake him, and giue good teſtimony that they are no enemies to the Romiſh, Catholike, and Apoſtolike Religion, nor to the king of Spaine. This Edict was made in March, and proclaimed in all the Low Country townes vnder the kings obedience. King of Spaine proclaimes war againſt the French.

F In the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred ninetie and ſixe, the king of Spaine made 1596 an edict, complaining that the reuenues of his crowne and the treaſure which came yearely from the Indies, were conſumed by reaſon of his great charges, for the defence of his Eſtates, and of all Chriſtendome, imputing the cauſe to the great intereſt which he paid for the exchange of money, and vpon other contracts made with the Merchants in his Majeſties name, ſo as in a manner all his receipts and reuenues were King of Spaine breakes with the Merchants,

1596 ingaged to others, being without any treaſure to ſupply his wants, for that the G
Bankers (who had been accuſtomed to furniſh him by exchange) made now ſome difficultie to deale any farther, hauing in a manner all the reuenues of his Crowne in their poſſeſſion: for the preuenting of which inconuenience, hee found no better meanes than to repaire the treaſure, and to free it from the wrongs it hath ſuffered by intereſts, which hee hath allowed in his contraction, to auoid greater daunger which might grow by the want of meanes, to ſupply the neceſſities of the warre, the which his meaning was to preuent by theſe meanes, being impoſſible to vſe any other vpon thoſe occaſions: wherefore (to cut off the ſaid intereſts) his meaning was to reſume vnto himſelfe all the aſſignements which hee had giuen vnto any Mer- H chants and Bankers, for what ſummes or contracts ſoeuer, which haue beene made by his commandement, ſince the decree made by him the firſt of September, one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie and fiue, and the fift of December one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie and ſeuen, vnto the twentieth of Nouember this yeare one thouſaud fiue hundred ninetie and ſixe, which aſſignations hee ſuſpended, ſo as the Merchants might not receiue them, but the reuenues ſhould be broght into his Cofers, and all contracts for intereſt ſhould ceaſe; Confirming whatſoeuer had beene concluded by his royall Councell in this behalfe, as done by his expreſſe commaundement.

Merchants breake by reaſon of the Edict

This Edict being publiſhed, it bred a ſtrange alteration among the Merchants in Spaine, Italie, and the Low-Countries. The Cardinall Albertus hauing taken vp mo- I ney at Andwerp for the paiment of the armie, and ſent his bils of exchange into Spaine, they were not accepted, but ſent backe againe and proteſted, which was a blemiſh to his credit, and made many merchants to breake, imputing the cauſe vnto the Edict.

Titles forbidde in Italie.

The corruption of titles being brought out of Spaine into Italie, men honouring one another in their ſpeaking and writing with affected courteſies in ſuch ſort, as they found not titles ſufficient to ſatisfie their arrogant ambition, ſo as to tearme meane men, moſt worthy or excellent (which was due to Soueraigne Princes) they held it no flatterie, the which was growne ſo familiar among all ſorts of people, as euen baſe and obſcure men did arrogate it: the king hauing made a prouiſion in K
Spaine ſome yeares before for this abuſe, this yeare Henry de Guzman Earle of Oliuares, being Viceroy of Naples, did ſet downe an order for that realme, the which was in ſome ſort obſerued in the Duchie of Milan; ordaining that in their letters there ſhould bee no title of courteſie giuen to any but onely the dignitie which hee held, as to the Duke, Prince, Marqueſſe, Earle or Doctor, ſuch a one, taking away all ſuperfluitie or ſuſpition of flatterie, as well within as without the ſaid letters: the which was rigorouſly obſerued in the Realm of Naples. But the Court of Rome and the Clergie men, diſliking to receiue a law from any other than from the Pope, would not ſuffer it to be obſerued.

The King of Spaine being deſirous to be reuenged of the ſpoiles which the Eng- L liſh made daily, as well in Spaine as in his other dominions, gathered all his ſea-forces together, in the beginning of this yeare one thouſand fiue hundred ninetie and ſixe, appointing the Rendes-vous to bee at Seuille, but this ſudden preparation was diſturbed by diuers accidents. The firſt was the ſtrange ſwelling and ouerflowing of the Riuer of Guadalquibir, to the great ſpoile of the neighbour Countrie, for paſſing ouer her bankes, there were many perſons drowned, with much cattel, and very many buildings ouerthrowne, but the greateſt loſſe was at Seuille, in which port there lying many Ships of the Fleet, they were ſtaied long from making of their preparations. And in the meane time, whileſt they proceeded ſlowly in this action, according to the cuſtome of that nation, who perſuade themſelues to doe great matters with M fame onely, and repoſe the chiefe of their moſt important enterpriſes, in tyring the enemie, and conſuming him at leyſure, the Engliſh armie appeared vpon their coaſt, as you ſhall heare.

Inundation of the riuer of Guadalquibir.

Armie of Engliſh for Spaine.

The charge of the Engliſh fleet and armie was giuen to the Lord Charles Howard, high Admirall of England (who at his returne from that ſeruice, was by the Queenes Maieſtie

A Maieſtie made Earle of Nottingham) and to the Earle of Eſſex, being ioyned together in Commiſſion. Being vpon their going from the coaſt of England, they did publiſh in print in ſeuerall languages, the true, iuſt, and vrgent reaſons which had mooued her Maieſtie to vndertake the ſending forth of ſo great an Nauie, with a full declaration of her Majeſties pleaſure, and ſo they ſet ſaile from Plymouth vpon the third of Iune, this yeare, the whole Engliſh fleet conſiſting of ſome hundred ſhips of all ſorts, the which was diuided into foure ſquadrons, of the which the Lord Admirall commaunded the firſt, the Earle of Eſſex the ſecond, the Lord Thomas Howard (now Earle of Suffolke) the third, and Sir Walter Rawleigh the fourth. 1596

B On the tenth of Iune this fleet got ſight of Caliz, or Cadiz, in Andaluſia, but they kept not the order appointed for their comming in, by reaſon of the miſtaking of their maſters and their falling in the night with the Weſt, ſooner than they expected, which made them ſtand vpon another boord, and had ſomewhat diſordered their fleet. The Lord Admiral (one of the Generals) was with the greateſt part of the fleet ahead to the Windward of the other Generall the Earle of Eſſex and his Squadron, the wind being then at South; Sir Walter Rawleigh was by reaſon of ſome chaſe in the night to Leeward, and aſterne.

Engliſh fleet enters into Cadiz roade.

The Spaniards which were to the number of fiftie and ſeuen ſaile, rod vnder the Towne of Caliz and the Gallies being ſeuenteene lay in the mouth of the Bay, to co-
C uer the ſhips and to attend the landing of the Engliſh: The Lord Admirall came to an anchor before the Southweſt point of the Iland, called Saint Sebaſtians, the Earle of Eſſex ſeeing the Gallies rowe towards the landing place which hee had choſen, bore with them vntill hee made them leaue their courſe, and then looſt vp, and came with his ſquadron to an other anchor by the Lord Admiral, which the reſt of the fleet ſeeing, came all vnto them, only the Lord Thomas Howard in the Sea-honor anchored between them and the ſhoare. The Generals called a Councell, where it was ioyntly agreed vpon by them that their men ſhould bee landed, and the Town preſently attempted on the Weſt ſide, which was next to the anchoring, for which purpoſe the Earle of Eſſex Lord Generall, Sir Francis Vere Lord Marſhall, and ſir Coniers Clifford Sergeant Maior, went to D draw together as many ſouldiers and Gentlemen as their boats could wel carrie at once: which being done, and all their boates about the Lord Admirals ſhip, ſir Walter Rawleigh (who was but then arriued in the Due Repulſe) came and proteſted againſt their landing, holding the attempt to be dangerous, and the performance (as the wind blew and billowe went) impoſſible, for indeed it was growne to a ſtorme; whereupon it was reſolued that the ſouldiers ſhould bee returned to their ſhips, and the Spaniſh fleet firſt aſſailed, according to ſir Walter Rawleighs aduice.

It was paſt noone before this later reſolution was taken, and more than two houres after before the Souldiers could bee carried backe vnto their Shippes, ſome of their boates miſcarrying before they could recouer their ſhippes: which E being done, my Lord Thomas Howard weighed anchor firſt, to giue the other ſhips ſcope to caſt about; then the reſt of their principall ſhips, as they could get leaue of the ſmaller Veſſels which rodde cloſe by them, who alſo put themſelues vnder ſaile; but the winde was ſo ſtrong, and in ſuch a place, as moſt of their ſhips had beene driuen too farre to leeward, if they had not come to anchour, which the chiefe leaders perceiuing, they came to a roade: Beſides, the Sunne being not verie high, they thought that the bringing in of ſo grear a fleet towards night, would ſo diſorder them, as the attempt ſhould bee made to their great diſaduantage. So as the firſt day there was nothing executed by reaſon of theſe accidents. Onely, in the euening from the Bulwarke called Saint Philip, from the Ships of warre which lay at An-
F chor, and from the Gallies which did aduance a little towards them, ſome few Canon ſhot were beſtowed vpon the Due Repulſe, who anſwered them with the like, eſpecially againſt the Gallies, when they approached, to make them know the Engliſh could entertaine them, if they came on.

That night the gallies coaſting by the ſhore, betwixt S. Mary Port & Rotta, came to obſerue what order was kept by the rereward of the Engliſh fleet, but they were ſoon turned 1596 backe. On Munday earely in the morning, there was a Councell held aboord, the G

Lord Admirals Shippe, where it was reſolued to weigh anchor preſently, and to aſſaile the Spaniſh fleet, the which was accordingly performed, after this maner.

The Lord Thomas Howard, and Sir Walter Rawleigh (for ſo the Generall had appointed it) bare right in the middeſt of the Chanell with the kings great ſhips which retyred before them, ſcorning to beſtowe a ſhot on the gallies, which diſcharged their Canon as they paſſed by them. The Lord Marſhall being in the Raine-bow, looſt vp the Gallies, which lay vp with their ſternes cloſe vnder the Towne, and kept their prowes towards the Ships that ſhould paſſe by them: The Rainebow was a good while in fight, before that any other ſhip came vnto her, and was plyed H with ſhot both from the gallies and from the Towne.

The Earle ſeeing her ſo ouer-matcht, made haſte vnto her, and ſo making the enemie a fairer marke than the Rainebow (which was a farre leſſer ſhip) eaſed her of many blowes. Some other ſhips ſhot, but farther off, and to leſſe purpoſe. This incounter with the Gallies, was a verie great aduantage vnto the enemy, they hauing ſo many to ſo fewe, for in effect theſe two ſhips aboue mentioned performed this whole ſeruice. Beſides, there were two Bulwarkes of the Towne on their ſide: all which notwithſtanding, the Gallies were forced to flie before them into the Baie, two onely except, which Sir Iohn Wingfield, comming then vp in the Vangard, did keep ſo in as they durſt not looke out. I

During the fight with the Gallies, the wind calmed, and the Engliſh fleet went ſlowly ahead, moſt of the Spaniſh ſhips neuer ſtaied vntill they came to Portreal which is the furtheſt part of the Bay, the ſhips mooued themſelues with their broad ſides towards the Engliſh, that they might fight to their greater aduantage. The Engliſh maſters of ſhips were generally of opinion, that they could not go neer without danger of running on ground; the which did much croſſe the forwardneſſe of the chiefe Commanders of the formoſt ſhips, led by the Lord Thomas Howard, and Sir Walter Rawleigh, whoſe deſire being to draw as neere the enemy as they might, were notwithſtanding inforced to come to anchour, without the reach of Muſket ſhot, and to attend the flood, where they fought with perpetuall volleys of the Canon, from ſixe in the K morning to eleuen of the clocke: the ſhips that followed them neereſt were commanded by Sir Francis Vere, Lord Marſhall, Sir George Carew, now Lord Carew, Viceadmirall of Sir Walter Rawleighs Squadron, and Generall of the artillerie, by Sir Robert Dudley, Viceadmirall of the Lord Admirals Squadron, by Sir Robert Southwell, Viceadmirall of the Lord Thomas Squadron, by Sir Robert Croſſe, the Earle of Suſſex being aboord him, and by Sir George Gifford. The Earle of Eſſex and the Lord Admirall came vp an houre before the flood, hauing beene all that morning ſoundly battered by the forts of Cadiz: And for that the Arke drew too much water for the narrowneſſe of the Chanel, where thoſe ſhips did ride, who alſo took vp the whole breadth of the riuer, the Lord Admirall put himſelfe into the Lord Thomas Howards ſhip. L

Spaniſh ſhips runne aground at Cadiz.

When the flood beganne to ſwell, the Lord Thomas and Sir Walter Rawleigh determined to lay the Armadoes aboord with the Queenes ſhips, (for the hulkes filled with Musketiers, which were promiſed, came not) but as ſoone as Soto the Spaniſh Admirall perceiued that the ſaid Leaders beganne to hoyſe their top-ſailes, they preſently cut their Cables by the halfe, and draue a ſhoare, ſauing as many of themſelues as they could carrie at once in their boates; of the reſt ſome were ſlaine in the furie, and the reſt taken to mercie.

The Admirall of the Spaniards called the Philip, a goodlie and a powerfull ſhip, tooke fire before ſhe could be entred, by an inch of a match fired, and laied in the mouth of a barrell of powder in her gunner roome: But the Lord Thomas Howard and ſir Walter Rawlegh ſaued the Mathew and Andrew, Viceadmirall and Rereadmirall of the Spaniſh fleet, the other ſhips were ſet on fire by certain Negros, who leapt into the riuer and ſaued themſelues by ſwimming. M

The Indiã fleet of merchants being about 40 ſaile, were gotten vp 4 Engliſh miles into the riuer; for the redemption of which the K. officers in Cadiz offered the Engliſh 600 thouſand

A thouſand pounds ſterling: The Earle of Eſſex was often preſt to haue them firſt taken and then ſolde, but hee beleeued that ſuch as offered the compoſition had meant bona fide to pay the money from which hee could not bee diſſuaded, vntill he ſaw the ſhips all in a flame, which the duke of Medina Sydonia commanded to bee done. Spaniſh ſhips fired by themſelues.

The number of the Spaniſh Fleet was fiftie ſeauen ſhips, foureteene of the kings men of warre, and three great Fly-boats which brought the Treaſure from Portricco; the reſt were Merchants, all faire ſhips, full of good ordnance, and richlyer laden than euer any Fleet was that went to the Weſt Indies. Here alſo I ſhould remember, that during the fight, the gallies and Fort of Pontall, plaied continually
B vpon the Engliſh ſhips.

The Engliſh hauing obtained this great victorie by Gods eſpeciall fauor, the earle reſolued to follow it with all poſſible expedition, and ſo immediately hee diſpatcht the Sergeant Maior to get as many Gentlemen and old ſouldiers into boates, as might well bee landed at once, which being performed, his Lordſhip and the Lord Marſhall went to diſcouer the landing, and finding it good, he put betwixt two and three thouſand men on land, returning the boates to fetch my Lord Admirall with his ſeconds. Engliſh land at Cadiz.

Theſe being put in battell, he commanded the Marſhall to march directly with his regiment to the other ſide of the Iland, which was halfe a mile from their lan-
C ding, his Lordſhip with the reſt that were on ſhoare following him ſpeedily. Beeing come to the Southſide, the Earle diuided his troupes equally, ſending the one halfe with Sir Coniers Clifford, ſir Charles Blunt, and ſir Thomas Gerrard, to breake downe a bridge called El Ponte del Suaſſo, at a ſtreit, that keepes the paſſage from the maine; marching himſelfe with the other halfe towards the Towne: the like directions hee gaue for the ſeconds, to bee equally diuided, and ſent theſe two waies. When hee came within halfe a mile of the Towne, a cornet of horſe, with ſome ſhot, made offer to skirmiſh, but they were ſoone put to flight: when they came within musket ſhot of the Towne, there ſallyed forth great troupes both horſe and foot, vnder fauor of their wals, with their Cornets and Enſignes, which the earle diſcouering from
D a little hill as they fell out of the towne, hee gaue direction to the formoſt of the troups being ſome thirty pikes, and as many ſhot, to runne away as ſoone as the enemie offered to charge them; the which they did, giuing the enemy courage to come farther on than they firſt intended, but the Engliſh charged them ſo faſt, as they had ſcarce time to recouer the Port and ſhut it.

The Horſemen which ſallied out of the Towne, were called the Knights of ſhires: they could not get into the Towne being ſo cloſely followed by the Engliſh foot; whereupon they forſook their horſes, & leapt ouer the wals at the weſt corner, by which the Engliſh alſo entred. The Engliſh in purſuing the Spaniards ſtaied not vntill they came to the foot of their formoſt rampar; and then the Earle diuided his troupes equally, conſiſ-
E ting of twelue hundred men, keeping the one halfe with himſelfe on the Southſide of the Port, and ſending the Marſhall with the reſt to the Northſide. The Earle of Eſſex, on this ſide, with much adoe found meanes for himſelfe and ſome few others, to get vp, where he ſaw on the one ſide a Parapet of ſtone almoſt inacceſſible, for that neither the bulwarke nor any part of the Courtine was finiſhed. There the Engliſh did firſt beate the enemie from the Parapet, yet they lay open to another ſquare bulwarke of ſtone, which flanked them within a pikes length, but they did ſo beſet the bulwarke with ſhot, as the enemie did them little harme: Notwithſtanding, conſidering that they muſt quit the place for that their men lay vncouered, the earle ſought for an entrance, which being found, the leape downe being a pikes length, hee commanded one Euans which ſtood next him, Cadiz entred by the Engliſh.
F being Lieutenant to the Earle of Suſſex to enter, which after he and foure or fiue other ſouldiers more had done, the like charge was giuen to Captaine Pooley, who carried the Generals red Enſigne, whereupon ſir Arthur Sauage, Captain of the Earles company, with diuers Gentlemen followers and ſeruants to his Lordſhip, took the ſame courſe. In the mean time, whileſt that thirtie or fortie were thus entred into the Towne, the Lord Marſhal who beſides his own ſoldiers, had with him the generals gard of Partizans,

1596 forced the Port, which his Lordſhip eſpying, being not ten paces from it, hee preſently G turned from the leape, and entred that way, carrying with him all the chiefe Aduenturers of the armie, and worthy Sir Iohn Wingfield (who before had ſlaine a Commaunder of the enemies with his pike, and was caſt behind) hauing a ſhot in the thigh, but hauing recouered one of the enemies horſes, hee came vp preſently to ſecond them, not ſtaying for any dreſſing.

From the entrance of the Engliſh into the Towne, vntill they came vnto the Market place, the enemie fought with them continually, and kept them play aboue halfe an houre before they could recouer it, yet at the laſt hauing wonne the place from them, they notwithſtanding ſo flanked it, and kept their houſes (which were built like ca- H ſtles) as they ſlue many of the Engliſh, and among others that valiant gentleman Sir Iohn Wingfield, who though vnarmed, offered himſelfe continually to all daungers, ſo as hee was ſhot in the head from the caſtle which did continually play vpon thoſe that made good this market place.

At length they got into the houſes which annoyed them, and ſlue thoſe they found in them: And as the Lord Generall before it was darke cleered all thereabouts, but the caſtle, or that which they call the vpper Towne, ſo the Lord Marſhall cleered all the other ſide towards the water, and brought thoſe that were in the Fort and Bulwarke of Saint Philip, to ſue for mercie: which done, the Generals entred the Towne-houſe, whither all the chiefe citizens came to kiſſe their feet. I

The next morning, both the Caſtle and forts yeelded to their mercie, without any other conditions. The poore and baſer ſort were diſmiſt, and all women of qualitie whatſoeuer. The Corrigidor deliuered his ſword vnto the Generall, offering to bee his priſoner, and to giue for himſelfe and ſome others of good place twelue thouſand ducats: no man was ſlaine vpon cold bloud: it was held there were about two thouſand Spaniards ſlaine in the furie of the fight.

Beſides the chiefe Commanders of the armie, who had giuen many proofs of their valor and experience in martial affairs, there were many gallant gentlemen which ſerued worthily in this action, whome in the end the Generall rewarded with the honour of knight-hood. I may not forget to make particular mention of Sir Samuel Bagnol who K receiued eight wounds with the pike, and ſword, whome the Lord Generall (meeting in the market place all bloudie) knighted, to the incouragement of all others, before that either the caſtle was taken in, or the whole Towne wonne.

The towne was verie rich, and did much inrich the armie, but the worthieſt men got leaſt, for they were fighting, whileſt the baſer ſort intended nothing but pillage and ſpoile. There was good ſtore of braſſe ordnance, and though no great, yet very hap-pie ſtore of poulder; for the Engliſh hauing not aboue twelue hnndred men, their poulder was ſpent, and they were ouerlaied on all ſides, with the number of the enemies ſhot, who hurt and ſlue their men from the houſes: when they had made them quit the ſtreets, they found by chance by the market place, ſuch poulder as they had brought L for their owne defence, and the ſupply of their men that ſhold fight there, with the which they ſerued their turnes, till their ſuccours were entred and the Towne aſſured.

King of Spaines loſſes at Cadiz. The Prouiſions of Sea for the kings fleet, as maſtes, pike-ſtaues, deale-boards, caske, and all kinde of ſhot, cables, anchors, wine, oyle, vinegar, rice, ſugars, and ſuch like things, were of great value, and will not be ſupplied by the king of Spain in many yeares. And as for his loſſe in ſhipping, the kings Officers of his nauie, who were then taken priſoners, did proteſt with ſighes and teares, that nineteene of the ſhips which they had ſpoiled, with the S. Mathew and Saint Andrew, which they had taken, were able to beat the greateſt part of ſhips that the king hath in all the world. So as laying together the ruining of the Kings Fleet, the enioying of ſome of his M great ſhips of warre, which before had neuer beene done; the burning of the Indian fleet of Merchants, whoſe lading the priſoners confeſt to haue beene worth eight Millions; the impeaching him to ſend that yeare to releeue his men at the Weſt-Indies, and ſo by conſequence to receiue no treaſure from thence the next yeare; the taking of the Citie, wherein were foure thouſand foot, and ſixe hundred horſe

A horſe of the chiefe caualiers of Andaluzia; the ſacking of this place, from whence he is to ſet out all his fleets for the Weſt Indies, and the ſpoyle of all his prouiſions there: All this, I ſay, layed together, will proue one of the greateſt blowes that euer Spaine receiued. Yet all this was done in one day, and without any great loſſe; for in the whole fleet there was not any man of note, but Sir Iohn Wingfield, ſlaine. At the aſſault and winning of the towne many gentlemen were hurt, and ſome ſlaine; and yet not many, conſidering the ſtrength of the place, and the nature of the attempt. 1596

As ſoone as the Engliſh fleet was entred into the road, and that the Spaniards had
B diſcouered the Dutch ſquadron in the fight, immediately, both at Seuille, Saint Lucar, and ſome other places, they did not onely arreſt all ſuch Dutch ſhips as dealt with them friendly by way of trade and marchandiſe, but did confiſcat their goods, and did impriſon the marchants and owners of the ſame, and, as it was reported, did intreat many of them verie cruelly.

The Engliſh being maſters of the towne of Cadiz, the two Generals had an eſpeciall care for the well-intreating of all religious perſons, both men and women, whom they cauſed to be freely tranſported ouer to port Sancta Maria, without any ranſome or other moleſtation; and, giuing the biſhop of Cuſco free paſſage without ranſome, they let him vnderſtand, That they came not to deale with Church-men, or vnarmed men, and
C men of peace, or with children; neither was it their intent to make this voyage for gold, ſiluer, or any other riches: but that their onely comming was to meet with their diſhonourable practiſes, and many injuries, and to deale with men of warre and valour, for the defence of the true honour of England; and to let them vnderſtand, that whenſoeuer they attempted any baſe and diſhonourable practiſe againſt their Soueraigne Queene and Miſtreſſe, that it ſhould be reuenged.

The day before the Engliſh departed from Cadiz, being the firſt of Iulie, the citie was burnt, the Ladies, Nunnes, and other women and children, being ſafely ſent to Saint Marie port, with their apparell and jewels, euerie man being forbidden to ſearch them vpon paine of death.

D I haue thought good to annexe vnto the end of this relation, for a remembrance to poſteritie, the names of ſuch as receiued the Order of Knighthood from the Generals, as a teſtimonie of their well deſeruing in this worthie action.

Names of ſuch as were knighted at Cadiz.

Sir Samuel Bagnol.	Sir Chriſtopher Heydon.
Sir Arthure Sauage.	Sir Francis Popham.
The Earle of Suſſex.	Sir Philip Woodhouſe.
The Lord Burke.	Sir Alexander Clifford.
Cont Lodowike.	Sir Maurice Barkley.
Sir William Howard.	Sir Charles Blunt.
E Sir George Denereux.	Sir George Gifford.
Sir Henrie Neuel.	Sir Robert Croſſe.
Sir Edwin Rich.	Sir Iames Eſcudamore.
Sir Richard Leuen.	Sir Vrias Leigh.
Sir Peter Egomort.	Sir Iohn Leigh alias Lee.
Sir Anthonie Aſhley.	Sir Richard Weſton.
Sir Henrie Leonard.	Sir Richard Wainman.
Sir Richard Leuiſon.	Sir Iames Wotton.
Sir Horatio Vere.	Sir Richard Ruddal.
Sir Arthure Throgmorton.	Sir Robert Manſel.
F Sir Miles Corbet.	Sir William Mounſon.
Sir Edward Conway.	Sir Iohn Bowes.
Sir Oliuer Lambert.	Sir Edward Bowes.
Sir Anthonie Cooke.	Sir Humfrey Druel.
Sir Iohn Townſend.	Sir Amias Preſton.

Si

1596

Sir Robert Remington.
Sir Iohn Bucke.
Sir Iohn Morgan.
Sir Iohn Aldridge.
Sir Iohn Aſhindon.
Sir Mathew Browne.
Sir Iohn Acton.
Sir Thomas Gates.
Sir Gillie Merricke.
Sir Thomas Smith.
Sir William Pooley.
Sir Thomas Palmer.
Sir Iohn Stafford.
Sir Robert Louel.
Sir Iohn Gilbert.
Sir William Harney.
Sir Iohn Gray.
D. Chriſtopher prince of Portugal.
Sir Iohn Vanderfoord, Admiral of the Hollanders.
Sir Robert Dudley.

8 Auguſt.

Thus this triumphant Engliſh armie left Cadiz, hauing receiued from the duke of Medina Sidonia nine and thirtie Engliſh priſoners, which had beene ſlaues in the Spaniards hands: Which done, they paſt along the coaſt of Portugall, they tooke, ſpoyled, and burnt Farol, they marcht into the countrey thereabouts, after which exploit they ſhaped their courſe for England.

Farol burnt by the Engliſh.

Hauing done this great affront to the king of Spaine, they left him full of rage, and deſire of reuenge: whereupon, preſently after the retreat of the Engliſh, he gaue commandement to the Adelantado of Caſtille, to prepare a mightie fleet; wherein he imployed great care and diligence, ſo as it was readie the ſame yeare. But this fleet had a farre different ſucceſſe to that of England. It conſiſted of foureſcore ſhips, which went out of Lisbone the eighth of October 1596. They coaſted along Gallicia, to goe and joyne with the Generall of Biſcaie, where they had leuied ſome troupes of ſouldiers: the Adelantado comming to double cap S. Vincent in the night, it ſeemes he miſtooke his reckoning, and fell ſhort of the cap, where they were taken with a cruell ſtorme, in the which fiue and fortie of their ſhips were caſt away, on Symon and Iudes day, and the reſt were ſo ſhaken with the ſtorme, as they had great difficultie to ſaue them: ſo as their enterpriſe proued vaine that yeare.

Fleet of Spaniards prepared againſt England

Spaniſh fleet caſt away.

This yere alſo they treated in Spaine of the canonizing of bleſſed S. Raymond, the which was afterwards effected at Rome. They renewed their ſuit vnto the Pope, which had bin made many yeares before to diuers of his predeceſſors. After that inſtance had bin made vnto his Holineſſe by the townes of the realme of Arragon, who had ſent Paul Coſtabile, Generall of the preaching Friers, of which Order S. Raymond had beene alſo Generall, the Pope hauing pronounced, that they ſhould paſſe on to perfect this buſineſſe, the Archbiſhop of Taracona came to Barcellona with two biſhops, and the Proctor generall of S. Dominicke, to reuiew Saint Raymonds bodie: the which was done with great ceremonie, and authenticall writings ſent to Rome to proſecute the reſt. About the ſame time Luca Calnacanti, Chamberlaine to the Pope, arriued, being ſent with two cardinals hats by him, to Francis d'Auila, Archdeacon of Toledo, and to Ferdinand Nugnes de Gueuara, Preſident of the royall Councell, who had beene newly created cardinals, being exhorted by his Holineſſe to paſſe with all ſpeed to Rome, as they did that Winter: ſo as in the beginning of the next yeare they came into Italie, hauing a good opportunitie to paſſe in thoſe gallies which were come from Genoua; whither the duke of Maqueda ſhould alſo haue gone, being appointed by the king to be Viceroy of Sicile: but he was ſtayed many monethes by ſome ſiniſter accidents. And there arriued alſo Alphonſo Gariglia, who required a great aid of money for the prince of Tranſyluania, to maintaine the warre againſt the Turke, who found the king verie well affected, notwithſtanding that hee was inforced to maintaine warre in diuers places, to his exceeding great toyle and charge. Yet he ſatisfied that princes deſire with a bountifull hand, and gaue free libertie to the Popes Agents, to buy a quantitie of corne in his realmes, to ſerue the ſtate of the Church. And then about the end of September, the Indian fleet arriued ſafely at Seuille, being verie rich, the which did much comfort the Spaniards after the great loſſes they had ſuſtai-

Canonization of S. Raymond deſired by the Spaniards.

1597

A ſuſtained by the Engliſh armie. There was nothing did more afflict the minds of the Spaniards, than their hatred and diſdaine of the Engliſh, being not able to endure, not onely to be troubled in their traffique to the Indies, and their rich fleets to be layed for, piercing euen into the heart of America, but alſo to inuade the continent of Spaine with a royall armie, and to land there by by force, incountring, ſpoyling, and burning their ſhips euen in their ports. Being therefore tormented with a deſire of reuenge, and grieued that the laſt yeares fleet, being ruined by tempeſt, could not effect what they had deſigned, there was a new order giuen, that many galleons ſhould bee armed, and new troupes of ſouldiers ſhould bee leuied, not onely in Spaine, but alſo in Italie.

Spaniards incenſed againſt the Engliſh.

Preparation in Spaine for a new armie.

B The king therefore, touching matters of warre, gaue an extraordinarie authoritie to the Cont Fuentes, who was newly returned from the gouernement of Flanders: They cauſed all ſhips of foreine countries to be ſtayed within their ports, with an intent to make vſe of them in this armie: but the king falling verie ſicke, this preparation was ſomewhat ſtayed, they being doubtfull of his life, both in reſpect of his great age, and the violence of his infirmitie. And ſo the ſouldiers which were leuied for this ſeruice, were ſent to lodge, ſome in Gallicia, and ſome in Biſcaie, to bee fitly imbarked when time ſhould ſerue.

The important cauſe concerning Marchants and Bankers, was now in queſtion in Spaine, they hauing for many yeares furniſhed the king with money for his warres C in Flanders, and other places, a buſineſſe which troubled all the Bankes of Europe, as one depends vpon another, with their ſubalternall credits and intereſts. Wherefore ſome princes were moued by an act of true bountie, to helpe their ſubjects that were marchants, leaſt they ſhould faile in their credit. Beſides the kings ſouldiers being, by reaſon thereof, in great want, they fell to mutinies. In this buſineſſe therefore of ſo great importance, and wherein the king pretended to bee defrauded in diuers manners, of many hundred thouſands of crownes, this controuerſie with the kings officers was long and tedious, the marchants at the laſt beeing well content to come to any reaſonable agreement; the which at the length was made about the end of this yere. And for that it had been diſcouered, that Girolamo Lomellino had ſent great ſummes D of money into Fraunce, the which had beene verie prejudiciall vnto Spaine, and forbidden, by reaſon of the ware which continued yet with France, he was ſubject to a rigorous puniſhment.

Controuerſie in Spaine touching the Bankers.

There fell out a great accident in the Venetian embaſſadours palace at Madrid, whoſe name was Auguſtine Nani, a man of great judgement, and of a generous ſpirit, in maintaining the dignitie of that charge which hee held neere the king: The Prouoſt Marſhall of the citie would haue apprehended one who had retired into his palace, flying from the Sergeant which followed him, hoping hee ſhould be ſafe there, as in a place of franchiſe, according to the vſe of Courts: the Prouoſt carrying himſelfe too imperiouſly (as ſuch people are accuſtomed to doe) a gentleman of the E embaſſadours, of the houſe of Badoero, and his Secretarie, comming at this noyſe, could not endure it; ſo as from great words they fell to deeds, and the Prouoſts wand was broken (the which they are accuſtomed to carrie, as a marke of their authoritie) with other accidents; ſo as moſt of the embaſſadours familie came running at the noyſe: whereupon the kings officers complained. But matters were afterwards tempered by the king, with the equitie and reſpect which ought to bee had to the accident and perſon. Yet the State of Venice, being willing to take away all cauſes of diſtaſt, that might grow, made a ſpeedie election of a new embaſſadour, which was Francis Soranzo; but hee paſt not into Spaine vntill the next yeare, all ſhadowes of diſlike being in the meane time vaniſhed away, taking all occaſions to ſhew mutuall kindneſſe betwixt F them and the embaſſadour Naui, who was extraordinarily fauoured by the king and prince; and at his departure hee was made a knight, and honoured with rich preſents.

Quarrels in the Venetian embaſſadors houſe.

They were verie carefull this yeare in Spaine, to preuent the Engliſh, leaſt they ſhould haue ſome new opportunitie to annoy them, as they had done at Cadiz; which citie and 1597 and caſtle they did fortifie better, with all other places vpon the coaſt, the earle of Fuentes lying continually towards the ſea with great forces, and hauing good garriſons in the coaſt townes, hee ſent his horſemen to runne along the coaſt, that they might bee free from feare. G

Mariage of the prince of Spain publiſhed.

And for that the king of Spaine, by the continuall indiſpoſition of his bodie, the great trouble of his mind, hauing ſuch a world of weightie affaires, could not hope for any long life, he ſought to prouide for the future gouernement of his ſubiects. Wherefore he did publiſh the future mariage of his ſonne D. Philip vnto the eldeſt daughter of Ferdinand Archduke of Auſtria, whom ſome call Gregoria Maſſimiliana, others Marie. But whileſt they made preparation for the ſolemnitie of this mariage, and ſent to the Pope for H diſpenſations, as well for this, as for the future mariage betwixt the Archduke Albert, and the Infanta D. Iſabella, they had newes that the ſayd princeſſe was ſuddenly dead, hauing left the greatneſſe of this world, to attaine vnto a better life in heauen.

Preparation for the iſland voiage.

The fortunat ſucceſſe of the Engliſh the laſt yeare at Cadiz, hauing affronted the king of Spaine at his owne doores, gaue them courage to make new attempts this yeare, and to ſend forth a goodlie fleet to ſea, vnder the commaund of the earle of Eſſex, who was both Admirall at ſea, and Generall of the land forces. This fleet conſiſted of an hundred and twentie ſaile, whereof there were threeſcore men of warre, the reſt were victuallers, and ſhips for tranſportation of ſouldiers, and to attend the Engliſh fleet. I The Eſtates of the vnited Prouinces ſent ten tall flie-boates vnder the commaund of Monſieur de Duniuord. This fleet was victualled for three monethes, with large allowance, with a ſupplie of apparell for the mariners and ſouldiers. It was diuided into three ſquadrons: the Admirals ſquadron, the Lord Thomas Howards ſquadron, who was Vice-admirall, and Sir Walter Rawleighs ſquadron, being Rere-admirall. The Netherland flie-boats were commaunded by their owne Admirall. There were ſix thouſand ſouldiers appointed for the land ſeruice, with ten peeces of ordnance for the field and batterie, with all neceſſarie prouiſions. And there were in this fleet about fiue hundred voluntaries, of knights and gentlemen. The chiefe Commaunders of theſe land forces, were, the Earle of Eſſex Generall, the Lord Montioy his Lieutenant generall, Sir Francis Vere Marſhall of the field, Sir George Carew Maſter of the ordnance, Sir Ferdinando Gorge, Sergeant Major of the armie, Sir Chriſtopher Blunt Colonell generall of the foot, with all other officers neceſſarie in ſuch an action. In all this great K fleet there were not aboue eighteene or twentie ſhips of her Majeſties royall Nauie, the names of which, and of the Captaines that commaunded in them, I leaue to a particular diſcourſe written of this voyage, by a worthie knight, who was an eye witneſſe, and an actor in it; the which I hope hee will ſuffer to come to the preſſe.

Deſignes of the Engliſh fleet.

This goodlie armie being readie, it ſeemed they had three ſeuerall deſignes, to defeat the king of Spaines fleet, commaunded by D. Martin de Padiglia, earle of S. Gadea, and Adelantado Major of Caſtille, if they met it at ſea, or to ruine it in the harbour of Farol, L if they found it there; and to take all fleets of treaſure, or any Eaſt or Weſt Indian fleets they ſhould find at ſea, in the way to Spaine: and laſtly, that they would take the iſland of the Terceres, which they held to bee an action of great importance. With this reſolution they put to ſea with this gallant fleet; but neither of theſe enterpriſes ſucceeded: for bending their courſe directly for Farol, they were incountred with verie ſtormie weather, and contrarie windes, ſo as the whole fleet was ſcattered, and many of the ſhippes in verie great daunger, a great part of the fleet beeing forced to put backe againe into Plymouth. The ſhippe wherein the Generall was, had a verie daungerous leake, and her maſtes crackt in diuers pla- M ces; yet hee held it out as long as poſſibly hee could, till in the end her vpper workes gaue way, and her maine beames did teare, ſo as they looked hourely when the Oretoppe would fall, and the ordnance ſinke downe into the Keele. Whereupon hee was forced to put backe to Plymouth, where hee found a great part of the

A the fleet. There they repaired their ſhippes, and the earle tooke another, his owne being made vnſeruiceable: But they were kept in by continuall ſtormes and contrarie windes, vntill their three monethes victuals was in a manner ſpent, and the ſickneſſe growne great in the flie boats which carried the land armie. Whereupon the Generall had order to diſcharge his land forces, all but a thouſand old ſouldiers which had beene drawne out of the Low Countries; ſo as they were made vnable to land any forces at Farol. After which there was a project made by the earle, to ſend in certaine ſhips of fire, and to burne the king of Spaines fleet as it ſhould lye in the harbour, without any daunger to the queenes ſhips. Which counſell being allowed of at Court, they put the B ſecond time to ſea. But ſome of good judgement in the fleet, held this exploit vnfeaſable, they hauing not ſufficient forces to performe it; neither could they attempt it without apparent daunger, as indeed it ſucceeded not; for that the Saint Mathew, one of the chiefe ſhips which ſhould haue beene imployed in that action, had loſt her foremaſt, and was put backe into England, as they pretended: So as hauing no meanes to doe any ſeruice vpon the fleet at Farol, they concluded for the intercepting of the Indian fleet, and defeating of the Adelantado, if he did put to ſea: for there was no meanes to take in the iſland of Tercera, their land forces being diſcharged. Whereupon they ſhaped their courſe for the iſlands, where they layed wait for the Indian fleet; but they eſcaped them, and got into Tercera road. What the reaſons of the miſſing of this Indi- C an fleet were, and what was elſe done at the iſlands by this armie, I leaue to an ample relation of him who was an eye witneſſe, and did well obſerue it. And ſo hauing failed in all their deſignes, this fleet returned home into England. 1597

Spaniards preparation at ſea.

The Spaniards did in like manner arme. There was the regiment of Alexander de Monti, conſiſting of 15 companies, imbarked at Naples, the which had like to haue beene caſt away in a ſtorme vpon the coaſt of Romania. In the end they came to Genoua, and there joyned with the troupes of Gambalaita, all which were tranſported into Spaine in Doria's gallies, paſſing from Barcelona to Cadiz, where a part of the fleet lay: there they imbarked their land forces in certaine galleons, being ſix thouſand Italians, going towards the Groine, with an intent (being joyned with the Adelantado, and the reſt of the D fleet) to make ſome attempt vpon England. But on the eight of September they had ſo cruell a ſtorme, as they were ſcattered from their Admirall, and in exceeding great daunger, whereof ſome were caſt away. A galleon, wherein Alexander de Monti was, and ſome of his companies, hauing loſt her maine maſt, was driuen to the Canaries, and after that to the coaſt of Africke, hauing loſt his pilot with moſt of his mariners: there he ran her on ground, and recouered Mazagon, where he furniſhed himſelfe of all that hee wanted; and then he paſt towards the ſtrait, meeting with an Engliſh ſhip, which fought long with him; but in the end he tooke her: Then joyning with D. Pedro de Toledo, with ſome other veſſels, they ſcoured the coaſt of Barbarie, ſecuring the coaſts of Spaine, and in the end they came to winter in Saint Marie port. The reſt of this Spaniſh fleet, after this E cruell ſtorme, for the moſt part, recouered Farol. Thus both fleets this yeare, without any fruits, put themſelues to the hazard of the ſea, and receiued great loſſes.

Mediation for a peace betwixt France and Spaine.

The warres hauing continued long betwixt France and Spaine, many princes deſired to ſee the miſeries of Chriſtendome at an end. Pope Clement the eight as much affecting this generall peace as any of his predeceſſors, conſidering the great miſeries which the diuiſions of the French and Spaniards did cauſe, and that the Turke made his profit thereof, and had incroached farre into Chriſtendome, hee reſolued to reconcile theſe two kings of Spaine and France. Father Bonauenture Calatagirone, a Sicilian borne, Generall of the Franciſcanes (and who afterwards was made Patriarke of Conſtantinople) was ſent by him into Spaine, vnder colour to viſit the Conuents of his Order; but in effect F it was to ſound king Philip, whether he had any inclination to a peace with France: where hee found all things well diſpoſed, and the Spaniards deſirous to change the doubtfull euents of a troubleſome warre, with the aſſured and more profitable effects of peace; his old age, his ſon young, whom he deſired to marie, and to leaue him his Eſtates quiet, his eldeſt daughter, to whom he would giue the Low Counties, marying her to cardinall Albert of Auſtria, who like new Lords ſhould haue need of the loue and good neigh-

1698 neighbourhood of a French king, the French being vnited, and their ciuile warres ended, they were likely to tranſport the warre into his countries, hauing taken Amiens by force, euen in view of his armie. All theſe conſiderations made the king of Spaine incline to a peace, not onely with the French, but with the Queene of England and the vnited Prouinces of the Netherlands. Calatagirone being returned to Rome, aſſured the Pope that hee had found a diſpoſition and deſire of peace in king Philip, and that he was wearie of the warres. So the Pope continuing in this good deſire, ſent this Franciſcan into France, to perſuade the king to peace and friendſhip with the king of Spaine. Alexander cardinall of Florence, his Holineſſe Legat in France, vnderſtanding the Popes pleaſure, together with Calatagirone, perſuaded the king to yeeld vnto a peace. And on the other ſide, by the exhortations of the Patriarke Caietan, his Holineſſe Nuntio at Madrid, the king of Spaine referred the whole treatie of the ſaid peace to his nephew cardinall Albert. G H

Whileſt that Calatagirone went to Bruſſels, to ſolicite the cardinall to ſend the deputies to Veruins, the French king aduertiſed all his allies, to the end they might be comprehended in this accord with the Spaniard, if they thought good. The queene of England (who had more annoyed the Spaniard than all the princes of Chriſtendome) refuſed to be comprehended in the accord, and ſo did the Eſtates of the vnited Prouinces, who ſent their embaſſadours to the French king, to diſſuade him from a peace with the Spaniard. The king of Spaine did greatly deſire a peace with them, and ſought it by the meanes of his kinſmen and allies, who, at his requeſt, ſent their embaſſadours to that end into England, and the vnited Prouinces, but without effect. The king of Spaine hearing of all their aunſwers, and being out of hope of a peace with the Engliſh and Hollanders, cauſed them to proceed in the treatie with the French: whereupon the deputies of either king came to Veruins: Who hauing long diſputed, and being often readie to breake off, almoſt in deſpaire, in the end a peace was concluded, in Iune this yeare 1598. The deputies for the French king were, Monſieur de Bellieure, Counſellor of State, and Monſieur de Syllery, Counſellour alſo of State, and Preſident of the Court of Parliament at Paris: And for the Catholike king, John Richardot, knight, Preſident of his priuie Councell, John Baptiſta Taxis, Commaunder de los Santos, of the Order of Saint Iames, and of his Councell of State and warre, and Lewis Verreichen knight, chiefe Secretarie and Treaſorer of the Charters of the ſaid Councell of State: who according to their Commiſſions concluded in the name of the ſaid kings. I K

Queene of England & Eſtates of the Low Countries refuſe a peace with the Spaniard.

Peace betwixt Spaine and France.

Contents of the articles of the peace.

That the treatie of peace made at Caſtle Cambreſis, in the yeare 1559, betwixt the kings of France and Spaine, ſhould be newly confirmed and obſerued.

That all hoſtilitie and quarels ſhould ceaſe, with promiſe not to annoy nor prejudice one another.

That their ſubjects ſhould haue free traffique.

That all places taken ſince the treatie of Caſtle Cambreſis, ſhould bee reſtored of either part within two monethes. L

That the ſaid kings and the Infanta of Spaine, reſerued vnto themſelues all the rights, actions, and pretenſions, by reaſon of the ſaid realms, countries, or ſeigniories, whereunto they or their predeceſſors haue not expreſly renounced, to make their purſuit by ſome friendlie courſe, or by juſtice, and not by armes.

Ceſſion of the Low Countries to the Infanta of Spaine.

The force and life of king Philip began to decline, which he foreſeeing, hee was deſirous to effect the promiſe which he had made to the Archduke Albert, his nephew, and if the mariage betwixt him and the Infanta Iſabella his daughter were not conſummated, yet they might be aſſured by the ceſſion of the prouinces, which he meant to make in fauour of it. Whereupon, the ſixt of May, he cauſed to be read at Madrid (in the preſence of prince Philip his only ſon, who was then about 20 yeres old, of D. Gomes d'Auila, marques of Vellada, Lord Steward of the princes houſe, D. Chriſtopher de Mora, earle of Caſtell, Roderigo, great Commaunder of the Alcantara, D. Iohn d'Idiaques, great Commaunder of Leon, all three Counſellours of State, and Nicholas Damant, knight, Preſident and Chauncellour of Brabant, with la Loo, Secretarie of the affaires of the Low Countries) the contract, by the which he did inſtitute the future ſpouſes, and their heires, of what M

ſexe

A of what ſexe ſoeuer, ſoueraigne Lords of all the Prouinces of the Low-coun- 1598 tries, of the franche countie of Bourgondie, and of the countie of Charolois; with condition that the donation and ceſſion ſhould be void, and of no force, in caſe the marriage were not accompliſhed. That the eldeſt of the lawfull children iſſuing of this marriage, ſhould be preferred before the younger, and the male the female, iointly in all the Prouinces, without any diuiſion: That for want of lawfull heires it ſhould returne to the Crowne of Spaine: And that they ſhould not alienate any part thereof without the conſent of the heires and ſucceſſors of the king of Spaine. That the Princeſſe, heire of the Netherlands, being a maiden or widow, ſhould marrie the king of Spaine, or B the prince his Sonne; and if ſhee haue neither will nor power to doe it with the Popes diſpenſation, ſhee ſhall not take any aliance but with the conſent of the kings of Spain: And ſo of the heirs and deſcendents of the future Spouſes. That al negotiation and traffik to the Eaſt and Weſt Indies ſhall bee forbidden them and their ſubiects. That the Arch-duke ſuruiuing the Infanta, hee ſhould hold thoſe Countries during his life. That hauing children, their portions ſhould bee aſſigned them, vntill that the elder after the deceaſe of the father ſhould take poſſeſſion of the whole. That onely the Catholike, Apoſtolike and Romiſh religion ſhould bee maintained in the ſaid Prouinces, and in caſe of contrauention by them or their deſcendents, they ſhould loſe their rights to the ſaid Countries.

Articles of the ceſſion.

C Prince Philip did conſequently ratifie this donation, more (as ſome thought) to pleaſe the king his father, than for any good liking hee had of it, for ſhe depriued him of many goodlie and rich Prouinces: And the Infanta his Siſter hauing accepted the tranſaction, ſent her fathers and bothers letters Patents to the Gouernours and Councels of the Prouinces, with their letters which promiſed all aſſiſtance for the warre, and her owne which contained a declaration of this accord. Thus the Archduke, as the Hiſtorie ſaith, married a great Princeſſe, a troubleſome quarrell, and a long ſute, all in one day. From which time ſhee did write vnto him, as a wife doth vnto her husband, taking vpon her the titles of all thoſe Countries and Prouinces, and ſending him a procuration to take poſſeſſion in her name. The empreſſe, mother to D Albertus, and ſiſter to the king of Spaine, receiued the promiſe of marriage for her Sonne, and did alſo make a promiſe in the name of the Archduke Albert.

Donation ratified by Prince Philip.

The king of Spaine would moreouer ſhew, that in giuing his daughter the Infanta to the Archduke, hee would not abandon them for want of money to continue the warre againſt the vnited Prouinces: hee made a new contract with Camillo, Soniolla, Maluenda and Grimaldi, to whome hee did reaſſigne and confirme the reuenues of Spaine, and reuoked the edict which had beene made at Pardo, vpon condition that for an ouerplus and new loane, they ſhould furniſh him with ſeuen millions and two hundred thouſand ducats, paying euerie month two hundred and fifty thouſand ducats to the Archduk Albert, to ſupply the charges of the low countrie warres, & that for the ſpace of E eighteen monthes, the firſt paiment whereof ſhould be due the laſt of Ianuarie, in the ſaid yeare 1598, the whole ſumme for the Low countries amounting to foure millions and a halfe. The reſt ſhould be paied in Spaine, or where hee ſhould command, after the rate of an hundred and fiftie thouſand ducats monthly, for eighteene monthes together: both which parties amount to 7200000 ducats.

King of Spaine makes a new contract for the paiment of his debts.

The king of Spaine ſent in the beginning of this yere 4 thouſand Spaniards, Beſognes, into the Low countries, to fortifie the Archduke Albert, whoe as it ſeemes did not greatly truſt the Wallons. D. Sancho de Leua was their cheiſe commaunder ouer foure Colonels: they came by ſea in 40 ſhips, the leſſer got ſafely into Callice for that the Eſtates ſhips had bin forced by fowle weather to weigh anchor, yet they took one of the greateſt;
F in the which was Alonſo Sanches of Villareal with 150 Spaniards, and made foure more to runne on ground to ſaue the ſoldiers.

Spaniards ſent into the Low-Countries.

The States of the vnited Prouinces, finding the number of their ſhipping to bee great, & that they wanted imployment for them, not daring to traffik into Spaine, where their ſhips and goods were daily arreſted, and their men impriſoned, whereby in time their Nauigation would decay, they reſolued to ſeeke their fortunes at the Eaſt

Vnited Prouinces ſaile vnto the Indies.

1598 and Weſt Indies, whether the Spaniards would neuer allow them to goe, whereupon they gaue leaue, and aſſiſted certaine priuat Merchants, to goe and ſeeke trade at the Eaſt Indies, and in thoſe Ilands whereas the Portugals had no commaund, ſo as this yeare there went to the number of eightie ſaile out of Holland and Zeeland, towards the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, Breſill, Caſtell de Mine, to the coaſt of Afrike, and Guinee, whoſe ſucceſſe was diuers. Many of theſe vnder the charge of Baltazar Moucheron, had commandement from Prince Maurice and the State, to meet at the Iland del Principe. Iulian of Cleerhagen as Generall in the abſence of Moucheron, and Gerard Stribos as Admirall, parted in March with fiue Ships, one hundred and fifty Souldiers, and two hundred Mariners, who arriued ſomewhat late in Auguſt at the ſaid Iland: where Cleerhagen found a ſhip, in the which a Nephew of Moucherons commanded, who being well knowne in the Iland by reaſon of his trading there, was a meanes that the Generall became Maſter of it without any oppoſition, for hee drew the Gouernour and chiefe Officers of the place to come aboard, where they made them good cheare. After which the Generall acquainted them with his Commiſſion, and to what end hee was come. The Ilanders ſeeing themſelues ſurpriſed, ſeemed content, and yeelded to their wils: then, hauing taken an oath to Cleerhagen, they all landed, whereas the Generall in Moucherons name was proclaimed Generall of the Iland.

Surpriſe of the Iland del principe.

Three daies after the taking of the oath, the Portugals and Ilanders conſpired againſt the Hollanders, and came ſuddenly with great fury to charge Moucherons men, but they were repulſt and ſcattered in the Iland; but vpon proclamation of a pardon they returned, and ſubmitted themſelues againe to the Hollanders; whereupon there was a new accord made betwixt them, but it continued not aboue ſixe weekes, by reaſon of Cleerhagens diſordered actions, who did not obſerue the courſe that was preſcribed him, neither was hee carefull to build the forts which had beene drawne, hauing good meanes. The Portugals and Ilanders ſeeing his careleſneſſe, made a new attempt againſt him, which being diſcouered vnto the Hollanders, they ſeazed vpon the Padre Vicario, meaning to execute him, but as Francis Fort with the Iudge Steuen Quareſmo, went to viſit this Vicarios houſe, they were ſlaine by his ſlaues, which cauſed a new tumult, whereupon the Vicario was condemned and hanged with one of his confederates. This death made them ſend to D. Antonio de Meneſes Geuernour of the Iland of Saint Thomas for ſuccours, who a month after ſent the Gouernour of Caſtell de Mine with fiue hundred ſouldiers, by whoſe perſuaſion they were reſolued to make warre againſt Moucherons men.

The Generall Cleerhagen fell into diſgrace with his Companie, and died of greeſe: Stribos the Admirall ſucceeded him, and dyed alſo with ouer-toiling himſelfe in the fortifications. Whereupon the Hollanders erected a Councell of foure to gouerne the eſtate of their affaires in the Iland: but after a months ſufferance, their Souldiers being ſomewhat waſted, they began to faint and to be out of hope of ſuccours, ſo as they ſhould not bee able to maintaine themſelues againſt ſo many enemies. Whereupon they abandoned the Iland, and ſetting their fort on fire, they imbarked, there comming ſupplies of men and victuals vnto them from Moucheron within fifteene daies after, but it was too late: and ſo the Iland was ſoone wonne and as ſoone loſt.

Coaſt of Spaine annoyed by the Engliſh.

This yeare in the Spring the Spaniards began to apprehend ſome new attempt of the Engliſh vpon their coaſt, for that thoſe Seas were ful of Engliſh men of warre: yea, there was a fleet ſet forth by the Earle of Cumberland, which after it had cõmitted ſome ſpoile about Caſcais, lay many daies in the mouth of the Riuer of Lisbone, keeping in the galleons of Portugal, which lay ready to go to the Eaſt-Indies, but it was without any fruits, the Weſt-Indian fleet being ſafely arriued at Seuille, after that it had beene ſcattered by a ſtorme neere vnto the Terceres.

The treaſure which came in this Indian fleet gaue the kings miniſters meanes to prouide more commodiouſly for the great affaires of ſo many kingdomes, and to continue the war, which hee mainteined in diuers places. Wherefore they leuied new men to ſend into the Low-Countries, and others to man certaine veſſels which were ſent forth to bridle

A dle the attempts of the Turkes vpon the coaſt of Spaine, and Afrike: They were fiue and twenty gallies vnder the charge of D. Pedro de Toledo, whereof ſome were of Spaine, and ſome of Naples: there were two regiments of Italians in them, the one was commanded by Alexander de Monti, the other by Ceſare d' Euoli; but hee dying before at the Groine, they were both then commanded by Monti. Theſe gallies hauing not met with any Pyrats at ſea, paſt into Barbarie, where they landed a good number of their men, with the which Monti did preſently march, & ſet vpon a towne, the which was taken by ſcalado, where breaking open the ports, & drawing in all his men, it was ſackt & then burnt, taking making ſlaues, with great ſtore of wealth: yet this could not be ſo ſoon executed, but
B many horſemen Moores, came poſting thither from the neighbour places, ſo as de Monti was forced to make an orderly retreat, putting his men into ſquadrons & the rereward skirmiſhing ſtill with the enemy, wherein they all in generall ſhewed ſuch valour, as this actiõ was more eſteemed, althogh they loſt ſome men, than the winning & ſpoiling of the town without any loſſe. The Colonel de Monti was ſtill in the rereward, who with great iudgement and valour gouerned the retreat vntil they were all imbarked, being ſo fauored by the gallies ordnãce, as the Mooriſh horſemen, being many in nũber, were forced to retyre with great loſſe. The gallies after they had run along that coaſt, & made the Barbarians feele the ſpoils which they cõmitted vpon the weaker parts of Spain, they were called home to lie in gard in the ſtreit of Gibraltar, to hinder the enemies attempts. But the C Engliſh fleet aboue mẽtioned hauing left the riuer of Lisbone, took many Eaſterlings, & other ſhips carrying victuals & other commodities into Spain, which being that yere verie ſcant of corn, which was then brought vnto them from other countries, & taken at ſea, it bred a great ſcarcitie. Whileſt that Lisbone was preſt with this extremity, by great hap there was a Galeon of Tuſcany got in, being laden with corne and other commodities fit to relieue their wants. Yet the dearth of corn increaſed, notwithſtanding that the Hollanders being greedy of gain did often attempt to bring ſome, and ſo they did in Sicile & other places. Some held that this dearth grew through the want of men to till the ground (whereunto that nation is nothing inclined) hauing been alſo conſtrained to ſend foorth great troups of men to the wars of France & Flãders; beſides others which went daily by D thouſands out of that realm vpon diuers occaſions. They did alſo aleage another reaſon of the ſcarcity, for that ſome yeres before Corne had bin ſet at an vnder rate, ſo as ſtrangers had no care to bring in any, neither did the countrie men much care for tillage.

1598

Alexander de Monti ſurpriſeth a towne in Barbarie.

Dearth in Spaine and the reaſon.

During the great dearth of corn, Spaine felt a general ioy for the peace which had been concluded with France, the which was proclaimed at Madrid in the end of Iune, and it was increaſed with a priuat content by the mariage of the duke of Alcala, with the daughter of Chriſtopher de Mora, being honored with the preſence of the Prince D. Philip, & many Grandes of the court. And ſoon after were celebrated the mariages of two of the Marqueſſe of Pozzas daughters, the one vnto the eldeſt ſon of the duke of Seſſa, who was then embaſſador at Rome, & the other vnto the heire of Cordoua: but the ioy was much greater when the future mariage of Prince Philip with Marguerit of Auſtria, and of the Infanta D. Iſabella, with the Archduke Albertus were publiſhed. Whileſt that k. Philip ends as hee had begun his raign with the wars of the Low countries, behold many touches of the miſeries and pouertie whereunto humanitie is ſubiect, made him remember that hee was a man. He could not feele that contentment in his ſoule, like vnto the firſt man of Greece in his time, who dying, held himſelf happy, for that neuer any Athenian had mourned by his occaſion: yet at the leaſt he hath this conſolation, that after the expence of ſo much mony, & the ſhedding of ſo much bloud, hauing with ſo great rigour and bitterneſſe purſued the ruin, & haſtned the deſtinies of the goodlieſt eſtate of Europe, he ſees the two firſt monarchs of Chriſtendome vnited by a firm bond, & cõmon peace, and his children ready to
F enter into allyances; which content him. He now feeles that his houre is come, & that he muſt leaue the ambitions of this world, and that the fleſh ſtriues in vaine againſt the ſpirit, when as the one muſt part company from the other. Wherefore carrying alwaies a great deuotion to the Monaſterie of Saint Laurence, and being much affected to his moſt ſumptuous and incomparable Palace of the Eſcuriall, 7 leagues from Madrid, his ſicknes increaſing daily, after the reſignation of the Low countries, to his daughter D.

Marriage of the duke of Alcala.

King Philip growes towards his end.

1598 Iſabella, he would needs be carried thither, to ſeek a ſafe rampar, againſt the aſſaults which G an inteſtine warre was readie to giue him vpon the troubleſome diſſolution of the ſoule and bodie. He, whom Hiſtories obſerue to haue beene greater than any one of his houſe, who without danger ſitting in his Cabinet, hath diſpoſed of more famous actions than any of his predeceſſors, finds now that the Soueraign Creator hath made the pooreſt cottager equal to the greateſt king in many reſpects. He hath giuen them the earth for their abode, for they nurſe and common mother, the ſame beginning of creation, one common heauen, one ſunne, one Moone, the aire and water common; the ſoules of one and other haue one nature; they come all into the world naked alike, and all haue one iſſue out of this life. He finds now that death feares no gards; that he knocks as familiarly at Princes H
Palaces, as at the cottages of poore Shepheards, hee laies hold of them, when as teares preuaile not, armes are of no force, praiers cannot moue him, nor preſents corrupt him, the Phiſitions art cannot ſtay him, nor drugs and receits preuent his power: Yea, that ſometimes he takes them away when they haue not leaſure to deliuer their laſt will. Finally after this end they muſt all run one courſe, when as their bodies ſhall putrifie alike.

He had ſurmounted the croſſes of fortune, and great accidents in his time, but hee could find no preſeruatiue, to make him inſenſible of greefe. The gout, a feuer, a filthy Phthiriaſis, an apoſtume on his right leg, foure other, wonderfull foule and ſtinking, on his breaſt, an infinit number of lice, breeding of that corrupt & ſtinking matter, & diſperſing themſelues ouer his whole bodie, gaue him to vnderſtand, that nature could make a I wretched Anatomie of his bodie, as well as of the meaneſt of his ſubjects. Being come to the Eſcuriall, and his paines increaſing, hee prepared himſelfe for death, and after hee had receiued the Sacrament, hee deſired to ſee D. Garcia of Loyola ſolemnly conſecrated Archbiſhop of Toledo, by the Popes Legat, it being reſigned vnto him by the Archduke Albert.

His feuer and infirmities increaſing in the beginning of September, hee called for D. Philip his ſonne, and the Infanta Iſabella his daughter; where in the preſence of the Archbiſhop of Toledo and ſome others, he ſhewed his body vnto the Prince, and ſaid vnto him, Behold prince the greatneſſe of this world, ſee this wretched carcaſſe, whereas all human help auailes nothing. He then cauſed a braſen coffin to be brought, and a deths head to bee K ſet vpon a cupbord with a Crowne of gold by it. He then commanded D. Lewis de Velaſco a gentleman of his Chamber to fetch a ſmall Casket, wherein there was a rich Iewell, the which he gaue vnto his daughter in the Princes preſence, ſaying, This Iewell was your mothers, keep it in remembrance of her; And forthwith he drew out a paper which he gaue vnto the Prince ſaying, That it was an Inſtruction how he ſhould gouerne his eſtate. After which, he drew forth a whip, at the end whereof appeared ſome markes of bloud, and holding it vp he ſaid, that it was bloud of his blond, although it were not his own bloud, but the emperor his fathers who had vſed it: which done hee diſpoſed of the order of his funerals. After which, in the preſence of the Popes Nuntio, he recommended the Sea of Rome, the Pope, and the Catholike Apoſtolike and Romiſh Religion to his children, deſiring the L Nuntio to giue him abſolution of his ſinnes, & to bleſſe his children. He did recommend the Infanta vnto the Prince his Son, and the good eſtate of her Countries. He did not remember the children of D. Catherina ducheſſe of Sauoy his other duughter, to whom before ſhe died he had bequeathed for a remẽbrance the picture of our Lady of Lorette. He was ſo reſolute and ready to die, as his Confeſſor did wiſh that hee might die of that diſeaſe, and in that eſtate, leaſt that his recouerie ſhould alter that good & happy diſpoſition. The continuall feuer, whereof he had languiſhed three yeres, and the violent torments of the gout, had prepared him for death, long before he was ready to take him. He gaue no eare to any diſcourſe but touching his departure. A gentleman of his chamber ſeeing him to haue ſome intermiſſion of his pains, aduiſed him to remoue into ſome other cham- M ber that was more chearefull, the Phyſitians warranting that hee might liue two yeares longer; Giue (ſaid hee) this picture of our Ladie, to the Infanta, it was the Empreſſe my Mothers, and I haue worne it fifty yeares: He ſpake of his departure, as of a royall entrie into goodlieſt Cities vnder his obedience; and of his funeral, as of a Coronation. I will (ſaid hee) haue this Crucifix hung at my neck, and reſting vpon my breaſt: I will

A will haue that in my hand with the which my father dyed. Hold a candle of Mont Sarrat readie, and giue it me when I am in the Agonie. Goe (ſaid hee) to two Religious men, and meaſure my fathers Herſe, obſerue how hee is laid, I will be ſo, and with no more ceremonie than the pooreſt Monke in this Monaſterie. They that were about him, ſpake of his conſtancie, as Saint Auguſtin did of the admirable reſolution of a holy Spaniard. The violence of his paine was great, but the force of his courage was greater, the one ſuffered, and the other ſung, the fleſh ſuffered and the ſpirit ſpake. Nothing liued more in him than a feeling of his ſinnes, the which toucht him ſo neere, as after that they had made an inciſion in his knee, and B the Prince his Sonne asking him if he felt not the paine of his greene wound, I feele (ſaid the king) the wounds of my ſinnes much more. 1598

Approaching towards his end, hee commaunded that the Marqueſſe of Mondejar ſhould bee ſet at libertie, but reſtrained from comming to court; and that the wife of Anthony Perez (ſometimes his Secretarie) ſhould bee ſet at libertie, vpon condition that hee ſhould retire himſelfe into ſome Monaſterie. Hee receiued the extreme vnctions from the Archbiſhop of Toledo, after that hee had demaunded the manner of the adminiſtration thereof, for that hee had neuer ſeene it giuen. Hee had reſolued to ſend the Prince and the Infanta to Madrid, for that they ſhould not bee preſent at the pitifull ſpectacle of the ruine of his bodie, but hee changed his opinion, and C would haue the Prince preſent when they gaue him the extreme vnction: after which hee commanded them to leaue him alone with his Sonne, to whome hee ſpake theſe words: I was deſirous my ſon you ſhold aſſiſt at this laſt actiõ, to the end you ſhold not liue in ignorance, as I haue done, how this holy Sacrament is adminiſtred, & that you might ſee the end of kings, and whereunto their Crownes and Scepters are reduced. Death is readie to ſnatch the Crowne from my head, and to ſet it vpon yours. Therein I recommend two things vnto you; the one is, that you remaine alwaies obedient vnto the Church; the other that you doe juſtice to your ſubiects. The time will come when this Crowne ſhall fall from your head as it doth now from mine: you are young, I haue beene ſo, my daies are numbred and are ended, God keepes the D accompt of yours, and they ſhall likewiſe end. They ſay that hee did enioyne him, with paſſion, to make warre againſt Heretikes, and to entertaine peace with France.

King Philips laſt ſpeech vnto his Sonne.

The Prince thinking that his end approached, demaunded the golden key of the Cabinet from D. Chriſtopher de Mora, meaning to grace the Marqueſſe of Denia his fauourite therewith: but hee deſired the Prince to pardon him, ſaying that hee might not leaue it whileſt the king was liuing, but by his expreſſe commandement: whereat the Prince was offended.

D. Chriſtopher complained hereof vnto the king, who neither commended the demaund being too ſudden, nor allowed of his refuſall, commanding D. Chriſtopher to carrie it vnto the Prince, and to craue his pardon: who returning to viſit his fa- E ther, D. Chriſtopher de Mora kneeling downe, kiſt the key and deliuered it vnto him; the which the Prince tooke and gaue to the Marqueſſe of Denia: And as the prince and the Infanta ſtood before his bed, hee ſaid vnto them, I recommend vnto you D. Chriſtopher de Mora, the beſt ſeruant I euer had, with all my other ſeruants: And ſo giuing them his laſt farewell, and imbracing them, his ſpeech fayled him; continuing two daies in that eſtate vntill hee died, being ſeuenty and one yeares old, and hauing raigned fifty.

He was borne at Vailledolit the fiue and twentieth of Aprill, in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred twenty and ſix, and dyed the thirteenth of September 1598. He was but little of ſtature, yet of a pleaſing aſpect, but no goodlie man by reaſon of his great nether F lip, which is hereditarie in the houſe of Auſtria, otherwiſe he was faire of complexion, rather reſembling a Fleming than a Spaniard: of ſo ſound a conſtitution of body, as he was ſildome or neuer ſicke. He was ſometimes troubled with faintings: and did neuer eat any fiſh: he was of a conſtant reſolution, and of a great ſpirit, apprehending preſently the ends of things, and foreſeeing them with an admirable wiſdome and iudgement.

Birth and ſtature of the king of Spaine.

Pope Clement the eight, hearing newes of his death, aſſembled the Conſiſtorie, 1598 where after audience giuen vnto the Cardinalls, hee told them in a graue ſpeech G

Popes iudgment vpon the death of king Philip. full of paſſion: That if euer the holy Sea had cauſe of greeſe and affliction, it was for the death of that Prince, the Church hauing loſt a great Protector, and her perſecutors a mightie enemie. That his whole life had beene nothing but a warfare againſt infidelities, hereſies, and errors. That two things did comfort them in this loſſe: the one, that being dead with an admirable conformitie in the will of God, an incredible patience in his paines, and an vnchangeable conſtancie in his Religion, he held him rewarded in heauen with immortall glorie: the other, that hee had left a Sonne which made them hope that it was rather a reſurrection of the father than a ſucceſſion of the Sonne. In the end hee recommended them both to their praiers, H paying thereby for what the one had done, and what the other offered to doe by his letters for the good of the Church.

Vertues of king Philip. To ſpeake of his vertues: it is ſaid that all good Princes may bee written in a ring. Philip had great vertues, it were a rare thing to haue all. The ſeedes of ſuch princes as haue no defects are in heauen. Hee was great in pietie, Religion, juſtice, liberalitie and His pietie. conſtancy. As for his pietie and religion, hee hath beene heard to ſay, that if the prince his Sonne became an Heretike, or a Schiſmaticke, hee would bring fagots himſelfe to burne him. He alwaies proteſted that his deſignes in warre, and his exerciſes in peace did onely tend to the aduancement of Religion. The laſt words he pronounced with his laſt gaſpe, were, That he died a Catholike. He reſpected the Pope as hee that carried the keies I of heauen in his hand, the prince of the Church, and Gods Lieutenant generall ouer mens ſoules. The Popes reſpected him as the chiefe ſupporter of the peace and vnion of the Church: Pius 5. did ſo terme him when they made the league againſt the Turke: and his ſucceſſour Gregorie 13 anſwered him that cauſed his health to be prayed » for at Rome, My life imports the Church little, the which after me may haue a better
» Pope: Recommend the king of Spaines health vnto God, for it is neceſſarie for all Chri» ſtendome. And he himſelfe held his aſſiſtance neceſſarie for the affaires of Chriſtians; for being ſicke, and the Phiſitian doubting to let him bloud by reaſon of his weakeneſſe, Feare Speech of the king of Spaine. not (ſaid he) to let me bloud, the eſtate of Gods Church permits not that I ſhould die of this diſeaſe, nor of this bloud letting. Euerie man knowes in what credit hee was in the Conſiſtorie, to K haue his intention approued, and likewiſe in the Conclaue for the election of Popes.
This is ſpoken for the penſions of Cardinals which are at the deuotion of Spaine. Hee held Rome by the haire and the throat, being in his power to famiſh it, refuſing the commodities which they may draw at need out of his eſtates which inuiron it.

As he honoured the Pope, ſo did hee much eſteeme the Prelates of the Church, and had a great care to preferre men of vertue and merit to eccleſiaſticall dignities. There was a great controuerſie betwixt the archbiſhop of Valencia, and the Viceroy, to know to whome they ſhould firſt preſent the Pax and the Cenſor: the which hee ended, commanding that hee that preſented vnto his Maieſtie, ſhould giue it firſt vnto the archbiſhop, thinking that the honor that he did vnto Gods Miniſters was an infinit glory vnto him, and that a prince ſhould affect no other commendation, than the care and zeale of L Religion, when it is without diſſembling or hypocriſie. Hee did witneſſe his zeale and paſſion in the ſeeking out of many relikes of Saints, eſpecially to haue the body of His curioſitie to find out Relikes Saint Eugenius Biſhop of Toledo, hauing to that end ſent embaſſadors expreſly to king Charles the ninth, and to the Queene Mother, who granted it, contrarie to the aduice of the Cardinall of Lorraine, Abbot of Saint Denis: hee went to receiue it at Toledo, and cauſed it to bee conducted to the Eſcuriall. How much did he ſpend for the canonizing of Frier Diego of Alcala of the order of Saint Francis, and of Frier Raymond of Pegnafort a Iacobin, famous among learned men, for that he gathered the decretales into one bodie, and throughout all Spaine, for that hee paſt like another Elizeus vpon his cloake from Majorca to Barcelona, and that which is very rare in our age, re- M fuſed the Archbiſhopricke of Tarragone. Wee find not any now that hide themſelues in caues from ſpirituall dignities, or that out off their noſe and eares to make themſelues incapable of church preferments, which requires ſound bodies and ſanctified ſoules. No affaires could interrupt him in the courſe of his deuotion, and we in the relations of Antonio Perez that hee did often referre the care of buſineſſe to another day,

A day, when he was preparing of his conſcience, or among his Monkes at the Eſcuriall. He went bare headed in the proceſſion of the Sacrament, and being on that day at Cordoua, ſome one did aduertiſe him, that the Sunne was offenſiue: to whom he aunſwered, That the Sunne that day would doe him no harme. Being a religious prince, he loued no new religions. He neuer receiued the Capuchins. They of his houſe haue built many colledges of Ieſuites in diuers places, at Vienna in Auſtria, at Turnant in Hungarie, at Prague in Bohemia, at Hal, at Grats, at Munch, at Inſpruke, and he alone of his houſe is dead without any memorie of his bountie towards them. Speaking againſt that great multitude of religions, and the increaſe of regular Orders, hee ſaid, That they ſhould reduce the B new to the auncient, and maintaine thoſe in the firſt integritie of their inſtitution, and that it was to be feared the world would abound more in religious Orders than in pietie. Hee vſed them of Saint Dominicke in his confeſſions, and in his other deuotions the Ieronimits, to whom he gaue that rich temple of the Eſcuriall. He did ſo reſpect Dominicke de Chaues, his Confeſſor, as he cauſed him to be viſited in his cell by the Preſident of Caſtille, when he was in doubt of any point of conſcience or of penance. 1598

En eſte dia no haze mal el Sol.

He had a Councell of conſcience for the direction of his enterpriſes. This Councell hath often drawne him out of many difficulties, and hath freed him from the bond of his promiſes. The hiſtorie of Portugall doth furniſh a memorable example. The duke of Oſſuna, and D. Chriſtopher de Mora, had promiſed mountaines of gold to them that C ſhould be oppoſit to D. Antonio, and ſhould fauour the kings right to the Crowne of Portugall. He being expelled, theſe men demaunded the effects of thoſe promiſes, and that their bills ſhould be diſcharged. The king commaunded that all ſhould bee ſent to the table of conſcience. The Iudges payed them with this ſentence: Seeing that king Philip is heire to the realme of Portugall, the petitioners could not compound for his right for money, gifts, or promiſes, and haue deſerued death, for that they did not willingly yeeld it vnto him: If the realme did belong to Antonio, they could not then deliuer it: And therefore king Philip is no way bound to performe thoſe promiſes which his embaſſadors and agents had made vnto the petitioners: But vſing his clemencie and mercie, he freed them from the paine of death, which they had vpon this occaſion de- D ſerued.

Councell of conſcience.

Aduice of the king of Spaines Councell of conſcience.

As for his juſtice, the example of his ſon is ſufficient to ſhew his rigor. It is true, that in many actiõs he hath proceeded more by his abſolute power than by the ordinarie courſe. Theſe great motions cannot alwayes be ruled by the ordinarie formes, nor ſubiect themſelues to the judgement of reaſon, nor to humane diſcourſe. Yet hee proteſted, being neere his end, That he had not done wrong nor injuſtice to any one, but through ignorance, or falſe impreſſion. It is an act of juſtice in a prince, to ſuffer them to tell him of the vnjuſt actions of his gouernement. It is true, that it cannot be tearmed an act of juſtice, to haue made his creditors ſo often to looſe that which they had lent him, nor to reduce the 18 millions of gold, which he did owe the Genouois, to 12.

King of Spaine a ſeuere iuſticer

E His liberalitie hath appeared in recompenſing the merits of many of his ſeruants. He made his Schoolemaſter Primat of the Church of Spaine, as his father had aduanced his vnto the Popedom. There are few ſuch princes now, that vſe ſuch requitals. There are no more Alexanders, who gaue eight hundred talents to his Schoolemaſter Ariſtotle. Kings haue long hands, but few haue them ſo large after this proportion. The king of Spaine did neuer leaue any goodlie action either of learning, juſtice, or warre, without reward. Hee did not onely doe good vnto the good, to make them better, but alſo to the bad, leaſt they ſhould grow worſe. But he did neuer aduance them hee loued to fauours diſproportionable to their condition: He did much for Ruy Gomes, for the loue of his wife the princeſſe of Eboly: Yet this liberalitie did neuer make a paſſage for him to F great affaires. He was verie circumſpect in the diſtinction of great charges, eſpecially of ſuch as concerned the adminiſtration of juſtice, whereon, as Plato ſaid, depends the ſafetie and ruine of an Eſtate. And although that the earle of Chinchon, being bred vp with him in his youth, ſhould haue expected more than any other, yet he obtained nothing but what he held fit for his qualitie. He was woont to ſay, That all ſtomackes were not fit to His liberalitie.

That is 480000 crownes.

Honours ruine them that deſerue them not.

1598 to diſgeſt great fortunes, and that ill meat did not corrupt ſooner, and turne to bad humors, than honour in a ſoule without merit. G

His conſtancie. As for his conſtancie againſt afflictions, fortune could neuer ſhake him. In two diuers accidents, happening at two diuers times, he ſhewed the conſtancie of his mind, and the equalitie of his affections; neither puffing him vp inſolently in proſperitie, nor deiecting himſelfe baſely in aduerſitie. When the poſt brought him newes of the victorie of Lepanto, he thought to ſee him much tranſported with joy, but hee made no ſhew of any alteration; and hauing vnderſtood the order and ſucceſſe of the battell, hee ſpake theſe words coldly, D. Iohn hath hazarded much. Now, when another poſt did bring him newes of the loſſe of that great nauie at ſea, thinking it would haue plunged him into a gulph of cares and perturbations, at the report of ſo fatall an accident, hee was not a whit mooued; ſaying onely, That hee had ſent it againſt men, and not againſt the windes and waues. Vulgar ſpirits are tranſported with choler at euerie croſſe accident, this vnmatchable loſſe doth not trouble this prince, who continued his deuotion in his Oratorie. Some other would haue torne his haire, and haue whipt the Ocean, as Xerxes did. The duke of Medina Sidonia, Generall of this armie, ſending to know his pleaſure, if hee would haue him come and giue an account of his charge, he anſwered, That hee ſhould firſt goe home to his houſe, to refreſh and reſt himſelfe before he came to Court.

His great moderation in proſperitie. H

His conſtancie in aduerſitie.

Vices of the K. of Spaine. It were fit we ſhould ſee the backſide of this Medaile, and ſpeake ſomething of the errours and vices of this prince, as well as of his vertues, ſeeing it is fit to ſpeake all for examples ſake; yet it is not good to trouble the reſt of the dead. Nicons image ouerthrew him that ſtrooke it with a ſtaffe: A dead ſtone did reuenge the injurie that was done vnto a dead man. It is ſufficient to ſay, That as this prince was commended for many great vertues, ſo hee was blamed, in his youth, of great diſſolution to voluptuouſneſſe, and a violent propenſion to crueltie. Theſe two vices doe ſeldome abandon one another: Euerie voluptuous prince is cruell, if neceſſitie conſtraine him. This plague doth infect and blemiſh the glorie of vertues, how bright ſoeuer they be in the life of a prince. Victorinus might haue beene compared to the beſt Emperours, yea hee ſhould ſurpaſſe Traian in bountie, Antonine in clemencie, Nerua in grauitie, Veſpaſian in ſparing of his treaſure, Pertinax and Seuerus in the integritie of his life, and in the ſeueritie of militarie diſcipline: but all theſe vertues were ſo quencht by voluptuouſneſſe, as no man durſt ſpeake vnto him. The king of Spaine hath put many to death in the exceſſe and firſt fits of his choler. He was as ſuſpitious, diſtruſtfull, and cruell, as euer any was. He did not allow the prince his ſonne to ſpeake with the Infanta his daughter, but by permiſſion, and in the preſence of their gouernors. The jealouſie of Soueraigne power makes no diſtinction of perſons, nor ſpareth not his owne bloud, as appeared by his owne ſonne: and Sultan Solyman cauſed his ſonne Muſtafa to bee ſtrangled, for that the Ianizaries made great acclamations of joy at his returne from the warres of Perſia. I K L

King of Spaine iealous and diſtruſtfull.

Some write of him, That, beſides the aboue named vices, he was fearefull, doubtfull, cloſe, and a diſſembler, ambitious, and proud beyond the condition of man, and nothing religious of his word in matters of Eſtate; the duke of Vilhermoſa, and the marqueſſe of Fuentes, are good witneſſes; he put them to death after that he had pardoned them the reuolt of Arragon. And thoſe words which he ſpake in his laſt inſtruction to his ſonne, ſpeaking of the Low Countries, doe verifie it; It is true (ſaid hee) I haue giuen them to your ſiſter, but it imports not; you haue an hundred euaſions, which you may vſe in time.

His ambition appeared, in that he affected the Empire by all poſſible meanes, which not able to obtaine, he ſought the title of Emperour of Spaine: yea ſome write, That he was reſolued to goe vnto the Indies, to take vpon him the title of Emperour of America. M After all his ambitious proiects againſt Africke, his attempts againſt England and Ireland, and his intelligences with the Turkes, Barbarians, and Perſians, whom hee hath ſought to diuide, and to make vſe of, euen againſt Chriſtian princes, yet in the end he was forced to confeſſe, That all the power and pompe of this world was meere vanitie.

He

A He had foure wiues, but he was vnfortunat in the firſt, the which was Marie princeſſe of Portugall, who bare him one ſonne, whoſe name was Charles; but his life was ſhort and vnfortunat, and his end violent, being charged by the Inquiſition to haue thought ill of the Faith, and to haue had intelligence with Chaſtillien Admirall of France, and with the prince of Orange touching the Low Countries. His ſecond wife was Marie queene of England, by whom hee had no iſſue. His third was Elizabeth of France (ſurnamed by the Spaniards, the Queene of Peace) who brought him two daughters, the Infanta D. Iſabella Clara Eugenia, now Archducheſſe of Auſtria, and Ladie of the Low Countries, and the Infanta D. Catherina Michelle, who was ducheſſe of Sauoy. His B fourth wife was Anne of Auſtria, daughter to the Emperour Maximilian, and his owne neece, by whom he had three ſonnes and one daughter, of the which, at his death, there remained onely the prince, who was then called Charles Laurence, but at his comming to the Crowne he was ſurnamed Philip the third. 1598 His wiues and children.

He ended his dayes with an act of wiſedome worthie of his long experience. Princes cannot enter into their realmes by a better port, than the loue of their ſubjects. If their fathers be dead, deſired, and lamented, they muſt doe ſome great matter to mollifie this ſorrow. Painters are no more bound to repreſent the true lineaments of the face, than princes are to repreſent their fathers vertues, whoſe liuelie images they are. Before his death hee made an Edict which could not be pleaſing vnto his ſubiects, who began to C murmure, and it ſeemed that they would not be ſo ſatisfied, if they proceeded to execution. It was not made for that the king of Spaine had any deſire to haue it executed and obſerued, but to the end he might giue the prince his ſonne a good occaſion to win the peoples hearts; for he ſayed preſently, that hee would neuer allow of the execution of that Edict, and that he would breake his head that ſhould firſt ſpeake it; the which hee ſpake ſo lowd, as euerie man thought himſelfe happie to liue vnder the command of ſuch a prince, who would proue better than his father. Wiſedome of the King of Spaine.

We haue formerly made mention of a paper which the king drew out of a casket, and deliuered to his ſonne, the which contained this inſtruction following.

My ſonne, I haue beene euer carefull to leaue you your Eſtate ſetled and in peace; but Inſtruction of the King of Spaine to his Sonne.
D neither the many yeares which I haue liued, nor the aſſiſtance of princes my allies, could euer purchaſe it. I confeſſe that I haue ſpent in leſſe than thirtie three yeares, fiue hundred ninetie and foure millions of ducats, all which haue bred me nothing but cares and troubles. It is true, I conquered Portugall, but as France did eaſily eſcape me, ſo may this be " wreſted from me. I would to God I had followed the aduice of the Emperour Charles, " my deceaſed father, of famous memorie, or at the leaſt that you would beleeue and fol- " low mine. I ſhould then beare my croſſes more willingly, and ſhould die with more con- " tent, leauing you in this vallie of miſeries. Behold then what I leaue you for an euerla- " ſting teſtament, beſides ſo many kingdoms and Eſtates, that you may ſee, as in a glaſſe, af- " ter what maner you ſhall gouerne your ſelfe after my death. "

E Be alwayes verie watchfull of the alteration and change of States, to make your profit " thereby according to occurrents. Haue a vigilant eye ouer them that are moſt familiar " with you in councell. You haue two meanes to entertaine your realmes of Spaine, the " one, the preſent gouernement, the other, the trade to the Eaſt and Weſt Indies. As for the " gouernement, you muſt either relie vpon the nobilitie, or vpon the Clergie. If you leane " vnto the Church-men, keepe the other in awe, as I haue done; but if you fortifie your " ſelfe with the nobilitie, ſhorten the reuenues of the Clergie as much as you may. If you " ſeeke to countenance them alike, they will conſume you, and trouble your realms, where- " of you ſhall neuer ſee a finall concluſion. If you will make good vſe of the nobilitie, my ad- Conſideration of Forraine Princes.
F uice is, that you keep good correſpondencie with the Low Countries, for they are friends " to the, French Engliſh, and ſome princes of Germanie: therein you can haue little aſſi- " ſtance from Italie, Poland, Sueden, Denmark, or Scotland. The king of Scotland is poore, " Denmarke drawes his reuenues from foreine nations, Sueden is euer in faction, and not " well ſituated, the Polonians are alwaies maſters of their kings, Italie, although it bee rich, " yet is it far off, and the princes are of diuers humors: On the other ſide, the Low Coun- " tries are populous, rich in ſhipping, conſtant in labour, diligent in ſearch, hardie to vnder- "

take,

1598 „ take, and willing to endure. It is true, I haue giuen theſe prouinces to your ſiſter, but it G „ imports not, there are an hundred euaſions whereof in time you may make your profit:
„ The chiefe are, that you keepe your ſelfe alwaies gardian to her children, and that there be „ no alteration concerning religion: for theſe two points taken away, you are quite depri-„ ued of thoſe countries: And then will ſome other princes preſent themſelues, and bind „ them vnto them by ſome meanes, which may proue your ruine. If you thinke to fortifie Aduice touching the Pope. „ your ſelfe againſt this by the Clergie, you ſhall purchaſe many enemies: I haue tried: yet „ keepe good correſpondencie with the Popes, be bountifull and kind vnto them; entertain „ ſuch cardinals as they fauour moſt, and labour to beare a ſway in the Conclaue. Keepe „ friendſhip with the biſhops of Germanie, but commit not the diſtribution of their penſi- H „ ons to the Emperor. Let them know you, they will ſerue you the more willingly, and will „ receiue your preſents more thankfully. Draw not any neere vnto you that are of baſe con„ dition, neither reſpect the nobilitie and commons alike: for, ſeeing I muſt now ſpeake the „ truth, their pride is great, they are verie rich, they muſt haue what they deſire, they will be „ burthenſome vnto you, and in the end will be your maſters.

„ Serue your ſelfe then with ſuch as are of the nobleſt families, and aduance them to pre-„ ferments of great reuenues: the common ſort are not ſo needfull, for they will procure „ you a thouſand diſcontents, which will conſume you. Beleeue not any of them, if „ they be not of qualitie. Free your ſelfe from Engliſh ſpies, and French penſions. Imploy „ ſome of the noblemen of the Low Countries confidently, whom you ſhall haue bound I Councel touching the Indies. „ vnto you by fealtie. As for the Nauigation of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, therein conſiſts
„ the ſtrength of the kingdome of Spaine, and the meanes to curbe Italie; from the which „ you ſhall with much difficultie reſtraine France and England: their power is great, they „ haue many mariners, the ſeas are ſpatious, their marchants too wealthie, their ſubiects too „ greedie of gaine, and their ſeruants too faithfull.

„ I haue excluded the Low Countries, but I feare, in time, mens humors may change; and „ therefore you muſt often change your miniſters at the Weſt Indies. Such as you call „ home make them of your Councel for the Indies, and ſo, in my opinion, you ſhal neuer be „ circumuented, but both the one and the other will acquaint you with the gaine, aſpiring „ to more honour. See how the Engliſh ſeeke to depriue you of that commoditie: they are K „ mightie at ſea both in men and ſhipping. As for the French, I doe not much feare them.
„ Fortifie your ſelfe with them of the Low Countries (although they be partly heretikes, „ and would continue ſo) with this prouiſo, That they ſhall freely ſell their marchandiſe in „ Spaine and Italie, paying the kings cuſtomes, and other dueties. And in taking paſports to „ ſaile to the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, let them put in caution, & take an oath to diſcharge their „ goods in Spaine at the returne of their ſhips, vpon paine of puniſhment if they infringe
„ this order: the which I think they will willingly offer to obſerue. By this means the riches
„ of the Indies and Spaine ſhall haue free commerce with the Low Countries, whereby „ both France and England ſhall be diſappointed.

„ My ſon, I could preſcribe you greater deſignes for the conquering of kingdoms, but you L
„ ſhal find in my ſtudie ſuch aduertiſements & diſcourſes as haue bin giuen me: commaund „ Chriſtopher de Mora to deliuer you the key preſently, leaſt thoſe ſecrets ſhold fal into ſome „ ſtrangers hands. I did cauſe ſome briefs of thoſe inſtructions to be burnt the 7 of Septem„ ber; I doubt all are not ſuppreſt, be carefull to ſeeke for them. I haue this day added, if you „ can, win Antonio Perez, that he may ſerue you in Italie, or in ſome other of your Eſtates, „ but ſuffer him not to returne into Spaine, nor to go into the Low Countries. Touching „ your mariage, the inſtructions are in the cuſtodie of the Secretarie la Loo. Read this often „ that is written with mine owne hand Haue a watchful eye ouer your moſt ſecret counſel-„ lors, acquaint your ſelfe with cyphers, diſcontent not your Secretaries, keep them alwaies
„ imployed, be it about matters of importance or otherwiſe; make triall of them rather by M
„ your enemies than by your friends. If you diſcouer your ſecrets to any familiar friend, „ keepe alwaies the moſt important within your owne boſome.

Archduke Albert goes into Spaine. The king of Spaine fearing that in his life time the mariage of his daughter with the Archduke Albert would not be conſummated, and that after his death the Infanta Iſabella would like better of the donation than the mariage, hee tied her vnto it with ſtrict con-

A conditions, deſiring aboue all things, that ſhe ſhould liue vnder the protection of the Crowne of Spaine, whereunto this new alliance did particularly bind her. Whereupon the Archduke gaue order for the gouernement of the Low Countries, and prepared himſelfe to goe into Spaine, to marie the Infanta. But the king of Spaine, before his death, had concluded a mariage betwixt prince Philip his ſon, and Marguerite daughter to the Archduke of Auſtria of Gratz, being younger ſiſter vnto Marie (who had bin promiſed vnto the prince, but dyed before the conſummation of the mariage:) Wherefore the Archduke Albert had commaundement to goe and receiue the ſaid ladie Marguerite at Gratz, and to conduct her into Spaine. Being readie to goe on his journey, 1598

B hee receiued newes of the death of the king of Spaine; yet hee went on his journey, and paſſing by the countrey of Treues, the Palatinat, and the duchie of Wirtemberg, into the limits of Bauaria, he came into the countie of Tyrol, being receiued in all places with great pompe and preſents, and his traine diſcharged. In this countie hee met with the ladie Marguerite of Auſtria, and Marie of Bauaria, her mother, neere vnto the place whereas the Emperour Charles the fift, and his brother Ferdinand king of Romans, met, in remembrance of which happie enteruiew there was a table of braſſe hung vp for a monument, and is yet to be ſeene; which table doth repreſent them as they imbraced one another. This ladie was attended on by 500 gentlemen of high Hungarie, whereas the Archduke her father makes his chiefe reſidence.

He meetes with the future Queene of Spaine.

C Hauing joyned their troupes, being about two thouſand horſe, and three thouſand fiue hundred foot, they paſt by Bolſene, and came to Trent the nine and twentieth of October, where they ſpent ſome dayes, to viſit the reliques of Saints. Then entring into the territories of Venice, which was neere, they were honourably receiued by two Senators, at a village called Delce, vpon the riuer of Adde, where there was a bridge made by commaundement of the State, for them to paſſe ouer. They went on by ſmall journeyes through the Venetians countrey, who defrayed the charges of them and their whole traine ten dayes together.

Venetians defray the charge of the future Queene of Spaine.

Hauing paſt Verona, they entred the duke of Mantouas country, who came in poſt with ten noblemen to Oſtia (a ſmall village vpon the riuer of Po) to ſalute the queene; where Duke of Mãtoua entertaines the Queene of Spaine.

D there were many boats made readie, among others there was a nuptiall barge, verie ſumptuouſly made, and couered with tapiſtrie of ſiluer, the which was diuided into chambers, halls, and cabinets. The future queene, her mother, the Archduke Albert, with ſome noblemen and ladies, entred this barge, where they found the tables readie furniſhed with all exquiſit meats. The reſt of the traine paſt the riuer in three great boats, vnto the other ſide, whereas Rouere ſtands, a towne belonging to the duke of Mantoua, from thence going downe the riuer they were carried to Ferrara, whereas the Pope was, with many Cardinals (whither he came after the compoſition of Faence, with D. Cæſar of Eſte.)

Pope ſendes a preſent to the Queene of Spaine.

The Pope being certified of the queenes comming neere the towne, hee preſently ſent forth two Cardinals Legats, which were, Aldobrandin and Saint Clement, with a

E great number of Prelats and gentlemen. Hauing gone three miles, they receiued the queene verie honourably, at a place called the iſlands, euen as ſhe landed, in the name of the Apoſtolike Sea, and of the Pope, preſenting vnto her, in his name, a rich caroch, whereof all the yron-worke was gilt, being drawne by ſix white horſes, in the which the queen, her mother, and the Archduke, entred into Ferrara.

Preſent ſent by the King of Spaine to his Queene.

Without the citie gates the duke of Seſſa, embaſſador for the king of Spaine, preſented vnto her, in his maſters name, a litter couered with cloth of gold, and richly appointed, both in the yron-worke, which was of ſiluer and gilt, as of all other royall furniture; hauing two white mules, and the muleters, in the like liuerie, and withall a carroch with ſix pied horſes, and two coach-men clad in cloth of gold, which made a gliſtering ſhew.

Arriuall of the Queene of Spaine into Ferrara.

F At the port called Angels gate, ſhee was receiued by two other Cardinals, Sforce and Montalto, and conducted into a houſe artificially made, where ſhee was ſeated in a royall throne, where ſhe ſtaied vntill the reſt of the Cardinals came to viſit and receiue her.

After this reception the queene was mounted vpon a white horſe, and the princeſſe her mother vpon the like (which the Pope had ſent them) & in that maner ſhe entred the city,

being

1598 being late, vnder a canopie of cloth of ſiluer, and betwixt the two Cardinals which G had receiued her at the port. There were a great number of coaches and wagons which went before with much baggage; then followed two companies of horſe, hauing mourning weeds vpon their armes, by reaſon of the late death of the king of Spaine: after whom followed a troupe of courteors on horſebacke, then two other companies of horſe ſent from the Pope to receiue the Queene, followed by ſuch as ſerued the Cardinals, and other noblemen: After whom came a great number of gentlemen and noblemen, verie gallantly appointed. Such as carried maces of ſiluer (which is the marke of a Cardinall) being mounted vpon mules, with ſolemne ornaments, marcht before the companie of Cardinals, who were attired in violet, which H is their accuſtomed habit to mourne in.

The Queene went betwixt the two Cardinals Sforce and Montalto, hauing her Dutch gards about her, and her mother, with the Archduke Albertus following her: After whom followed the great Conſtable, gouernour of Milan, the duke of Aumale, the prince of Orange, the earles of Egmont, Gand, Barlamont, and Ligny, with many other lords and ladies of great ſtate, and a great number of carroches and coaches full of ladies and gentwolemen. In this order they came to the Emperours embaſſadours lodging, paſsing vnder many triumphant Arches that were ſet vp in euerie ſtreet.

Entrie of the Queene of Spaine into the Popes Palace.

The king of Spaines ſpouſe being come vnto the palace, ſhee mounted vp betwixt I two images of the two Apoſtles Saint Peter and Saint Paul, princes of the Church, which were ſet at the ſtaires foot; and then ſhe retired her ſelfe into a chamber, joyning vnto the which was the ſacred Conſiſtorie, where the Pope was ſet in his Pontificall throne, with his whole colledge of Cardinals, where ſhe ſtayed vntill the Oration was ended, which was pronounced by Bernardin Leſcot of Milan, in prayſe of the houſe of Auſtria, and of the happie arriuall of the ſaid future Queene: After which, ſhe with her mother and the Archduke, were brought in, and ſuffered to kiſſe his Holineſſe feet: who receiued them graciouſly, and gaue them his bleſſing. After which the ſaid future Queene was conducted to her cabinet, which was prepared for her after a royall maner. The next day, hauing aſſiſted at a Maſſe which the Pope himſelfe did ſay, the Queene, her mother, and the Archduke, were feaſted at the Popes owne table. But the Sunday, being K the fifteenth of Nouember, was the day appointed for the celebration of the mariage, at which time they all left off their mourning weeds, which they had worne for the death of the king of Spaine, and put on their nuptiall robes, where both princes and princeſſes, and the whole Court, ſhewed themſelues ſo rich and ſumptuous, euerie one ſeeking to note his familie by the inuention of his liueries, as the like had neuer been ſeene in Ferrara.

Marriage of the King of Spaine.

On the day appointed for this great ceremonie, the Pope went before to the Cathedrall church, being ſet in his throne with his Pontificall robes and diadem, readie to ſay Maſſe. The Queene being attired all in white, after a royall manner, and gliſtering with L pearles and pretious ſtones of ineſtimable value, being followed by her mother, the Archduke, and all the princes, noblemen, and ladies, was ſo conducted as a bride vnto the ſame church, by the Cardinals of Santiquatro and Farneſe, the which gliſtered, being hung with cloth of ſiluer.

The Queene being ſet in a throne of cloth of gold, vnder a cloth of Eſtate of the ſame, and her mother with her, the Archduke being alſo ſet in one of the ſame, the Pope began the Maſſe. After the Canticle had beene ſong, the Queene was conducted neere vnto the Pope, by the ſaid Cardinals, with her mother, and a great troupe of ladies, and in like manner the Archduke approached, being followed by the princes and noblemen. The king of Spaines procuration directed to the Archduke, being read, the Pope did M conſummate the mariage, betwixt Philip the third, king of Spaine, in the perſon of Albert, his vncle, deputed by him to that end, and appearing in his name, on the one part, and Queene Marguerite, being preſent, on the other. She being conducted backe vnto the throne, there was an acclamation of all the princes, congratulating the mariage with wiſhes of all happineſſe.

The

A The Archduke ſtaied ſtill before the Pope, vntill that the duke of Seſſa came with the like procuration from the Infanta D. Iſabella Clara Eugenia: which commiſſion being read, the ſaid Infanta was maried by her Proctor to the Archduke Albert, by the Popes hands. Maſſe being ended, the Pope cauſed the maried queene to approach neere the altar, to whom he preſented a conſecrated roſe all of gold, the which his Holineſſe doth commonly giue to queenes and princeſſes, as a ſword and a hat hath beene vſually ſent by Popes to the chiefe princes of Chriſtendome. After which all the citie of Ferrara was full of feaſts and joy, for the ſolemnization of this mariage. All places, ſtreets, waies, and houſes, both publike and priuat, did ring with acclamations of joy, the citie was full of maskes
B and dauncings, and there was nothing omitted that might in any ſort giue delight and contentment. 1599 Mariage of Archduke [illegible] betweene [illegible] of [illegible] Pope [illegible] of Spaine.

Hauing paſſed thoſe few dayes which they remained at Ferrara in great joy and feaſting, they made preparation to goe to Mantoua. The duke attended them at Rouere, hauing ſent foure companies of men at armes before, who conducted the queene to Gouberne (which is a caſtle ſituated vpon the riuer of Mince:) there the queene going into the Bucentaure, which was a verie ſtately gallie, ſhe was carried downe the riuer within a mile of Mantoua; where landing, ſhe was entertained by the princes, and then entred the citie in a Carroſſe with her mother, being honoured with pleaſing ſights in all places as ſhe paſt. The palace wherein ſhe was to lodge, was royally appointed; but the Sunday
C after her arriuall there was a tragicall commedie repreſented vnto her beyond all admiration. The duke of Mantoua entertained the queene ſo royally, as beſides the rich preſents which he gaue, he defraied 5000 foot and 4000 horſe for the ſpace of nine daies together. The queene of Spaines entrie into Mantoua.

The queene, her mother, and the Archduke, going from Mantoua paſt by Cremona to Milan. It were tedious to make repetitions of all the honours that were there done vnto the queene. And for that Milan is now held by the king of Spaine, they reſolued to ſtay there, and to attend the kings good pleaſure, being vnfit to paſſe into Spaine during the Winter ſeaſon, where the duke of Sauoy came to viſit the queene with a gallant traine. Entrie into Milan.

The greateſt Monarches of the world are forced to giue time to time, and to refer vnto it the accompliſhment of their deſires: Their power (be it neuer ſo abſolute) cannot make
D the ſeaſons ſubiect to their wils, neither aduance nor keepe them backe according to the commoditie of their deſignes. If this could haue beene effected, the queene of Spaine had not ſtaied ſo long in Italie, the deſire ſhe had to ſee the king D. Philip 3, would haue giuen her wings to flie from Milan to Vailledolit: but the vnſeaſonable Winter made her to ſtay vntil the Spring, from whence they went to Genoua, where they imbarked in the beginning of March: they paſt to Sauone, where, for the diſcommoditie of the ſea, they were forced to ſtay ſome dayes, at the end whereof they went along the ſhore by Monaco and Villa-franca, and came to Nice in the countie of Terra-noua, which at this day the duke of Sauoy holds, but in former times was belonging to the countie of Prouence. After which they came and caſt anker in the port of Marſeilles, where they reſted to eaſe the queene. 1599 Queene of Spaine imbarks for Spaine.

E The duke of Sauoy had entertained and feaſted her verie royally: neither did the duke of Guiſe (who was the kings Lieutenant in Prouence) omit any thing, being ſo commanded by the king; where he refreſht the gallies with victuals and all other neceſſaries. The queene would not land but onely to heare maſſe in a tent which was pitcht vpon the key, in forme of a chappell. The Archduke landed there with two gallies, and went to viſit the reliques of S. Victor, and other venerable reliques: which done, hee returned preſently vnto the queene, and ſo they parted from Caſtle Ifz in a cleere and calme day, but there followed a preſent ſtorme, the which had caſt them vpon the ſands, whereas the riuer of Rhoſne diſchargeth it ſelfe into the ſea, if the wiſedome and foreſight of Doria had not preuented it. He knew the place and the danger, and doubting of the inconſtancie
F of the weather, he would not paſſe without the aduice of the mariners, who were all doubtfull in their opinions. Prouidence is alwayes better than repentance. In this ſuſpenſion of judgement a mariner paſſing by, wiſht them not to proceed, for in leſſe than three houres they ſhould haue a contrarie wind which would carrie them directly to the daunger, which they would willingly auoyd. Doria beleeued him, againſt the opinion of ſome, and the ſhewes of the weather, being loath to attend vntill he were forced to Lands at Marſeilles.

1599 take ſome daungerous reſolution. Wherefore he retired his gallies into a place of ſafe- G tie, and the ſtorme did ariſe ſooner than the mariner had told them. They thought at Marſeilles that all had beene loſt; and their beliefe had not beene vaine, if Doria had not giuen credit to that which the beſt aduiſed could not beleeue. The daunger being paſt, they continued their voyage along the coaſt of Cattelonia, they ſaluted Barcelona, and came to the port of Rode, they ſurmounted the Promontorie of the Moone, and came to Alfaques, which is at the ſtrait of Gibraltar, on Africke ſide, and in the end they put Queene of Spaine arriues at Binaros. in at the port of Binaros, in the realme of Valencia: from whence the queene ſent prince Dorias ſonne to the Catholike king, to aduertiſe him of her happie voyage, and ſafe arri-uall. The laſt of March they came to S. Mathew, wheras the marqueſſe of Denia came to H ſalute the queene, in the behalfe of the king her husband, and to acquaint her with his Majeſties ſpeciall intentions. Paſsing from thence to Gabanes, and Villa-reall, they went and ſtayed at Moluiedro, a village built of the ruines of Sagunt, an auncient towne allied to the Romans. The Archduke Albertus tooke poſt there, and went with all ſpeed to kiſſe the kings hands, and to viſit the Infanta, his ſpouſe: from whence hee paſt to Madrid, to ſee the Empreſſe, his mother, where hee ſtayed foure dayes, and then returned to Valencia.

The king in the meane time burning with an amorous deſire to ſee his new queen, came in a diſguiſed habit like one of his noblemen, making his pretence to be ſent from the king to kiſſe her hands; but he was diſcouered by the princeſſes and ladies which then attended I the queene, where he was receiued with an incredible joy and content to them all.

Magnificence at Valencia at the king of Spains mariage In the meane time they made wonderfull preparation at Valencia, for the celebration of theſe mariages, all which being readie, on the ſeuenteenth day of Aprill the queene made her entrie into Valencia, with ſo goodly a traine of princes and noblemen there aſſembled, as the gliſtering of their glorious and ſumptuous apparel, the varietie of colours, and the ſhining of the gold, did dazle the eyes of the beholders. Before this royall aſſemblie there marcht fiue companies of men at armes, after whom followed thirtie kettle drummes on horſebacke, with trumpets, clairons, and hautbois, which did ſound continually: then came the courteors in troupe, without any precedence or prerogatiue of rank:
among which there were foure hundred young noblemen like vnto pages of honour, gal- K lantly attired, attended on by their pages and footmen, ſome hauing ſix, others eight, ſome ten, yea twentie, twentie foure, twentie ſix, and more, attired in their liueries of di-uers colours, richly appointed. There were moreouer 700 knights of honor in the queens colours, which were white and crimzon gilt, the ground ſatten. Then there followed foure knights, carrying royall maces; after whom followed the Stewards of the queenes houſe, and then ſixteene of the Grandos of Spaine. Next marched the heraulds with their caſſockes richly imbrodered with the kings armes: after whom went the Lord Steward and the Maſter of the horſe: and laſt of all came the queene on horſebacke, vnder a canopie of cloth of gold, the which was carried by twentie of the chiefe nobles of Valencia, and the reines of her bridle, being of ſilke and gold, were held by the greateſt lords of L that kingdome. The queenes gowne was of cloth of gold, the ground ſiluer, very richly imbrodered with pearle and precious ſtones, ſo as there could be no more added. The queenes mother and the Archduke Albert followed with the queenes cabinet, and a great number of princes and noblemen, and to finiſh their nuptiall pompe, the princeſſes and ladies came laſt of all in their carroches and coaches. Some thought that there were ſpent in this nuptiall pompe three millions of ducats.

The queene hauing entred the port, where there was a ſtately triumphant Arch made, ſhee was led vnto the church, which was hung with cloth of tiſſue. The high altar was royally appointed, before the which there was an Oratorie erected, couered with cloth of gold, able to containe three perſons: there was alſo another which might hold fiue, M which was ſeene by them all, and was verie commodious to kneele in: thither the queene went, after that ſhee had kiſt the Croſſe, which was wonderfully inriched with reliques, being preſented vnto her by the Patriarke, who was Archbiſhop of Valencia.

The Catholike king came downe into the church with his ſiſter the Infanta, by a pri-uie

A uie way, which was made of purpoſe, where the Popes Nuncio (the ſolemnitie of the ceremonie being ended) demaunded of the king firſt, and then of the Archduke, if they did ratifie the mariages which had beene contracted before by their embaſſadours, and celebrated by the Pope: Which either of them confirming, they all went vp vnto the altar, where kneeling downe, they aſſiſted at the laſt bleſſing of their mariage. The prayers being ended, they went from the church vnto the palace, where the nuptiall feaſt was made with all the pompe and ſtate that could be deuiſed. Two dayes after the king made three knights of the Golden fleece, which were, the Archduke Albert, the Conſtable of Caſtille, and Prince Doria. For the ſpace of eight dayes there were all B ſports and ſights that mans wit could inuent. There was a Theatre built, able to containe threeſcore thouſand perſons, fit to behold all kind of ſports, as baiting of the bull, Ioco di Canna, after the African manner, tilts, turneyes, and all other exerciſes wherein the Spaniards delight. 1599

This nuptiall pompe being ended, the king and queene went to Vailledolit, wheras the king ſetled his Court, after the example of Charles the fift, his grandfather, and not at Madrid, which, after the death of king Philip the ſecond, was abandoned. The king, after his mariage, gaue himſelfe wholly to the exerciſes of peace, and left the managing of affaires to his Councell, retiring himſelfe in a manner from the ſight of all the Grandos of Spaine, being loath to ſee, or to be ſeene of any, but of the marqueſſe of Denia, C whom he made duke of Lerma. Since that this prince tooke the ſcepter in hand, he hath made them change the conceits they had of him, and hath ſhewed more vigour than they did attribute vnto him. That which he wants by reaſon of his youth, abounds in his Councell, to whom he commits the conduct of his Eſtates. A prince muſt be wiſe, or elſe gouerne himſelfe by them that are wiſe. They did not like that he ſhould wholly giue himſelfe to the duke of Lerma. The Grandos of Spaine could not endure this vnequall diſtribution of the kings fauours, vpon one onely obiect, and were grieued, that this common Sunne ſhould haue no light but for two eyes; that this fountaine ſhould haue no water, but to quench one mans thirſt: which made them to grow into great diſcontents, and the rather, for that his wife was made chiefe Ladie of honour D to the queene, wherewith the greateſt houſe in Spaine would haue thought it ſelfe much honoured, being impoſſible that ſo great and ſudden preferments ſhould not be enuied and maligned. Hence grew complaints and murmuring, wherein the beſt wits imploied their tongues and pennes to write freely. This diſcontentment was ſeene in all the ſorts that malecontents could diſcouer it. They made images to ſpeake at the kings comming to the Crowne, and at the entrie which hee made at Madrid, they ſet vp Iupiters ſtatue, carrying a globe of the world vpon his ſhoulders, and diſcharging the one halfe vpon king Philips, with an inſcription, That the Empire was diuided betwixt Iupiter and Cæſar: they found in ſtrange caracters, and an vnknowne hand, at the foot of Iupiters image, theſe words; This is the duke of Lerma. They alſo made Paſquin to ſpeake. The king E of Spaine made requeſt vnto the Pope, to grant him the tenthes of the Clergie-liuings, beſides that which his predeceſſors had beene accuſtomed to take: The feare they had the Pope would not grant it, made them to write this on the palace gates at Vailledolit: An vnkind Pope, an innocent King, and an inſolent Duke. They made counterfeit letters, both without name and ſubiect, hauing nothing but a ſuperſcription. The king comming one day from walking, he found vpon his table a letter ſealed vp, with this direction: To king Philip the third of that name, king of Spaine, being now at the ſeruice or deuotion of the duke of Lerma: The poſt which brought it had not returned without an anſwer, if hee had ſtayed: The king, who knew that there is nothing makes ſuch brutes vaniſh ſooner than contempt, nor that reuiues them more than a feeling and apprehenſion, laught at it, and F turning to the duke of Lerma, ſaid, See here what they ſay of vs.

King of Spaine ſettles his Court at Vailledolet.

Fauors of princes full of enuie

Diuiſum Imperium cum Ioue Cæſar habet.

Paſquins.

They ſpake vpon ſtages, and in publicke Scenes. They made a Tragedie at Vailledolit: the actors were the King, the Conſtable of Caſtille, the Duke of Lerma, and the people: The Argument was the complaints and inſolencie of the duke of Lerma: the Cataſtrophe, the duke of Lermas death, who was torne in peeces by the furious multitude.

1599 They made fooles to ſpeake, who are about kings onely to tell truth, and to make wiſe G men, which dare not ſpeake it, to bluſh. A jeaſter paſsing betwixt the king & the duke of Lerma, juſtled him in ſuch ſort as he made the duke to ſtagger, and ſaid vnto him, Stand faſt, for if thou falleſt thou wilt neuer riſe again. The king taking the word, anſwered preſently, We will then fall both together. The Grandes, who ſmiled at the jeaſters ſpeech, were much amazed at the kings anſwer. All Spaine admires his fortune. The moſt happie hold, that who ſo will be fortunat, muſt bee borne vnder the ſame Planet. But no man knowes how long this happineſſe will continue: And in the end the great fauors of princes are prejudiciall and ruinous to their fauourites. One ſayes, That we muſt approach neere vnto kings, as vnto fire, neither ſtanding too farre off, leaſt we take cold, nor appro- H ching too neere, for feare of burning. This fauour is a fire, as it ſhines, it burnes. Courteors flie vnto it, and burne themſelues like Butterflies. Hee is not wiſe that vſeth it as a fountaine, and drinkes as much as he can, for the thirſt that is paſt, for the preſent, and that which is to come: but he is wiſe that drinks of theſe fauors as dogs do of the riuer of Nol, paſsing and running, leaſt they be deuoured of Crocodiles by enuie and jealouſie.

Archdukes paſſe for Flanders.

The Archduke hauing brought the kings wife into Spaine, and receiued the Infanta his wife, to conduct her into Flanders, & to take poſſeſsion with her of thoſe countries, which the king had giuen her in dowrie, hauing taken leaue of the king, queene, and empreſſe, his mother, he took his way towards the ſea, which was ſo fauorable vnto them, as imbarking at Barcelona the ſeuenth of Iune, they arriued in 18 daies at Genoua, where they re- I mained the reſt of that moneth in prince Doria's palace. From thence they paſt to Pauia, where the duke of Parma came to ſee them. Then they came to Milan; thither the Pope ſent cardinall Dieteſtain to viſit them, who preſented a ſword vnto the Archduke, in his Holineſſe name, and a roſe of gold to the Infanta: and ſo they paſt on their journey through the Griſons countrey.

Treaty at Boullen betwixt the deputies of England and Spaine.

At the concluſion of the peace of Veruins, betwixt the French and the Spaniſh, the queene of England was not comprehended in that treatie. The king of Spaine deſired to enter into a particular treatie with her, the French king being willing to further this good motion, offered the towne of Boullen for their Commiſsioners to meet at: whither they came, but it was of no effect, by reaſon of the precedence, which neither would yeeld to K other: for the Engliſh refuſing to yeeld to the deputies of Spaine, they returned without any fruits of this meeting, neither was there any one of them but thought it vnreaſonable to purchaſe a peace with ſo great a diſaduantage to his maſters ſeruice.

King of Spaine complaines that the French ſerue his enemies.

The king of Spaine being at peace with France, he thought him much wronged, & the the treatie infringed, that the French went to ſerue the vnited Eſtates: wherfore he gaue command- ment to his embaſſador in France, to make complaint vnto the French king, That contrarie to the conditions of the treatie of Veruins, and contrarie to the publike faith, the French went to ſerue prince Maurice, and by the fauor of their arms did countenance the vnited prouinces of the Netherlands in their rebellion: that a friendſhip in words without effects, was more prejudiciall, a peace which doth not obſerue the condi- L tions, was more hurtfull vnto him, than the acts of open war. The French king deſiring to obſerue the articles of the treatie ſincerely, & without any juſt exception, diſauowed all his ſubiects which caried armes in that qualitie, cõmanding them to returne home within ſix weeks, vpon paine of confiſcation of body and goods, forbidding all others to goe thither to that intent: yet hee grew jealous, for that there was an armie newly imbarked in Portugal, which made him ſuſpect ſome deſigne either againſt France or England: wherupon he commanded his ſeruants to ſtand vpon their gard.

King of Spaine demaunds the Duke of Sauois children.

This yere the marquiſat of Saluces was in queſtion betwixt the French K. and the duke of Sauoy, who in his proceedings ſeemed ſo diſcontented with the Spaniards, for ſundrie reaſons, and made them ſo jealous of him, as the Councell of Spaine demaunded the M prince his eldeſt ſon, and his eldeſt daughter, vnder a colour of bringing them vp after a royall manner, in the Court of Spaine, whereas they might one day hope to raigne. The duke was much diſcontented herewith, ſeeing that it proceeded rather from ſuſpition than affection; yet by the aduice of his Councell, hee gaue the king of Spaine to vnderſtand, That hee could not lodge his children better, being the true cyment of perfect

A ſect friendſhip, yet he reſolued to ſend one to make his excuſe, pretending, That the eſtate of his affairs would not ſuffer him to ſend them at that inſtant, nor to prouide them a train and things neceſſary for their voyage. But the king of Spaine, to preuent all excuſes, gaue order that money ſhould be prouided at Milan, perſuading the duke to ſend the cont la Motte as gouernour to the prince. But hauing the money, he kept his children ſtill, ſaying, That the ayre of Spaine would not agree with his children, and that their indiſpoſition and young yeares, would not ſuffer him to expoſe them to ſo long and daungerous a voyage. At which refuſall the king of Spaine was much diſcontented. 1599

Succeſſe of the Eſtates army at the Canaries.

The Eſtates of the vnited Prouinces not content to make head againſt the forces of B Spaine within their countrey, they ſent forth a goodlie fleet, in the which were aboue 8000 ſouldiers and mariners, with all other neceſſarie prouiſions for ſuch a preparation. They ſet ſaile on the 25 day of May, hauing for Generall Peter vander Does, and went to affront the Spaniards at their owne doores. On the eleuenth of Iune comming neere the Groine, they met with two ſmall boats, which were ſent forth to diſcouer them: in one of them they found a Spaniard, by whom they vnderſtood, that they had beene aduertiſed of their comming vpon that coaſt, where they ſtood vpon their gard, and that in the Groine there were foure thouſand foot, and ſome horſe: which made the Generall (hauing called all the captaines to counſell) to thinke it not expedient to attempt any thing in thoſe parts. Which made them to hoiſe ſails, and to bend their courſe towards Cap S.
C Vincent: ſo paſsing the iſlands of Lancerote, Allegeance, and Forte-auenture, they diſcouered the great iſland of the Canaries, whereas the Generall vander Does came with his whole fleet before the towne of Alegoena, the 26 day of Iune, where he caſt anker vnder the great caſtle, which is on the Northweſt part of the towne; and cauſing thoſe ſhips to approach which had the greateſt ordnance, he began in like maner to batter the caſtle of Gratioſa. The Spaniards and iſlanders hauing three peeces of ordnance, reſolued to hinder their landing, after ſome great ſhot from the caſtle, which did much annoy the Hollanders. In the meane time the Generall put part of his armie into boats, to row to land, but not able to come vnto the ſhore, for want of water, he leapt firſt into the ſea vp to the girdle, being followed by all the reſt, who marched reſolutely to land, notwithſtanding all
D the attempts of the Spaniards and iſlanders, who kept their ground, and defended the landing verie valiantly: yet the Hollanders forced them, not without ſome loſſe of their men. At this charge the Spaniards loſt ſome fortie men, before they would quit the place: among others the gouernour (being on horſebacke) had a leg ſhot off with a great peece. The Generall of the Hollanders was hurt in the leg with a pike, and had three light hurts on the bodie, and if one of his ſouldiers had not ſlaine the Spaniard which incountred him, he had beene in daunger of his life. The iſlanders leauing their artillerie fled to the towne with their lame gouernour, and the Hollanders landed at their eaſe. They of the caſtle of Gratioſa ſeeing foure and twentie companies of Hollanders landed, and put in battell, and their colours flying, there came three mariners running from E towards the caſtle, who told the Generall, That they of the caſtle would yeeld, if they might haue their liues and goods ſaued: whither hee preſently went with ſome captaines, to whoſe mercie the place was yeelded, they leauing their armes, nine peeces of braſſe ordnance, and ſix of yron, with all the prouiſion and munition. There were eight and fiftie priſoners, all the reſt hauing beene ſlaine by the canon, all which he ſent home in a Spaniſh ſhip which the fleet had taken, reſeruing onely three of the chiefe for his better inſtruction.

Caſtle of Gratioſa yeelded to the Hollanders.

The Hollanders meaning the next day to beſiege Alegoena, they were much annoyed by the canon of another caſtle which was neere vnto the towne, ſo as being forced to fetch their canon to batter it, they ſpent foure houres, the great ordnance playing of either
F ſide: in the end they within the caſtle being beaten from their defences, their ordnance diſmounted, and their men ſlaine, the Generall hauing alſo ſet one of the towne gates on fire; which they of the towne, caſtle, and a mountaine which ſhot with ſome great ordnance, ſeeing, they abandoned both towne, caſtle, hill, and artillerie, and fled to rockes and caues in the mountaines, carrying their plate, jewels, and the richeſt of their mouables with them, with their wiues and children.

Towne and caſtle of Alegoena abandoned.

1599 After this the Generall cauſed ſome ladders to bee brought, with the which they entred the towne, finding no oppoſition. His men ran directly to the caſtle, where the Spaniards, at their retreat, had left a mine, with a match burning, the which tooke fire before the Hollanders were entred, ſo as it did them no harme. They found fiue peeces of ordnance in the place, the which, with all the reſt of the bootie which they found, was carried into the Admirals ſhip, as the Eſtates had commaunded. The towne and caſtle being taken, the Generall put his men in battell, as if hee would muſter them, in a plaine within the towne. The ſouldiers brought a Fleſſinguer vnto him, whom they had drawne out of priſon: whereupon the Generall went vnto the priſons, and freed ſome ſix and thirtie perſons, who told him, that the inhabitants flying away, they had carried two priſoners with them, the one an Engliſh man, the other a Dutch, who were condemned by the Inquiſition to bee burnt. Towards night the whole armie was quartered, and lodged within the towne, except ſuch as were appointed to bee in gard towards the mountaines, whereas the iſlanders did ſometimes ſhew themſelues in great troupes. The towne was ſpoyled of all that remained, the beſt beeing carried away; and then the Generall cauſed a proclamation to bee made, That no man ſhould appropriate any goods vnto himſelfe, for ſuch was the will of the Eſtates.

Eſtotes men ſlaine in the mountaines.

On the nine and twentieth of Iune ſome mariners went vp into the mountaines to get ſome bootie, but the iſlanders intercepted them, and ſlue ſome twentie. Towards euening the Generall ſent three hundred men to a ſmall caſtle, halfe a league from the towne, but the garriſon ſeeing them approach abandoned it preſently, and fled to the mountaines; whereas the Eſtates men found three peeces of ordnance, and leauing a ſquadron there, the reſt returned to the towne. The laſt of Iune the Generall commaunded that the wine, oyle, and all other goods, ſhould bee imbarked. The Spaniards that were in the mountaines did often make offer to treat, but the Generall hearing their firſt demaunds, which hee held impertinent, diſmiſt them, and would giue them no more audience. The Hollanders being maſter of the towne, the Generall cauſed the bells, artillerie, munition, and all other commodities which the iſlanders had left behind them, to be ſhipt, and then he ſent two thouſand to charge them that were fled into the mountaines, who at the firſt made head, and fought valiantly; where, although the Spaniards had great aduantage, yet they retired into the mountaines, where the Hollanders not knowing the paſſages, durſt not purſue them, but returned to the towne with the loſſe of ſeuentie men and one ſea captaine.

Alegoena burnt by the Hollanders.

The next day the Generall blew vp the caſtle of the towne, and burnt all the churches and religious houſes, both within and without it: then, being readie to make his retreat, he drew forth his men in battell, and cauſed the towne to be fired: Then they marcht to Gratioſa, ſome halfe mile from the towne (which caſtle they alſo blew vp) where their boats attended them to carrie them aboord. They were no ſooner imbarked, but the iſlanders came running from the mountaines to quench the fire. The Generall being at ſea, hee called all the captaines to councell, asking their aduice what was to bee done, and to informe himſelfe of the ſituation of other iſlands in thoſe parts. At this time there came certaine Spaniards to the ſhore, which deſired a parley. Whereupon the Generall ſent forth a boat to fetch them: Their comming was onely for thoſe priſoners which had beene taken in the caſtle of Gratioſa; whoſe ranſomes being payed, they were let goe.

Gomora taken by the Hollanders.

Leauing this iſland, within few daies after the fleet diſcouered the iſland of Gomora, one of the Canaries, whereas they landed without any reſiſtance, the Spaniards and iſlanders being fled to the mountaines and caues, as they had done from Alegoena. The Hollanders hauing taken Gomora, and ſeeing the iſlanders flie to the mountaines, there were foure companies, which landed firſt, purſued them, to cut off their paſſage: but being ignorant of the paſſages, they were charged by the Spaniards, who ſlue 80 of their men. The Generall hauing cauſed the ordnance, bells, wine, and ſuch other commodities as he found there, to be imbarked, he ſet fire of the towne, which the iſlanders came running downe to quench, as they had done at Alegoena.

Behold

A Behold how theſe two Ilands of the great Canarie and Gomora, which in a hundred yeares had not ſeene any enemies, were ſpoyled and burnt by the States armie, the which diuided it ſelfe into two partsfiue; and twenty ſhips were ſent homeward with the ſpoile they had taken, vnder the command of the Admirall Iohn Gheerbrantſen, who arriued ſcatteringly about the middeſt of September. The Generall Vander Does bent his courſe with thirty and ſixe ſhips towards the Iland of Saint Thome, which is vpon the coaſt of Guinee, directly vnder the Equinoctiall line. This Iland is inhabited with naturall Portugals, and abounds with Sugars, which is their greateſt trade: whereof they became Maſters vpon their firſt approach, without any reſiſtance or loſſe. But the Hollanders B being more accuſtomed to the cold blaſts of the Northerne Region, than to the violent heat of the burning Zone, they were not long Maſters thereof, but there fell a contagious ſickneſſe among them, wherof they died in very great torments. The Generall ſeeing this, cauſed them to imbarke the ſpoile with Franciſco de Meneſes, Gouernour of the ſaid Iland, his priſoner: but this infection did not leaue them being at Sea, for they dyed in ſo great numbers, as the Generall Vander Does, and all the Captains but two or three, with three parts of the Mariners & Souldiers had no other Sepulchres but the Sea, ſo as they had ſcarce men to gouerne their ſhips, yet in the end they got home ſafely by one and one. 1599

Saint Thome taken by the Hollanders.

In the beginning of this yeare began the Iubile at Rome, which although it doth not C directly concerne this Hiſtorie of Spaine, yet haue I preſumed to make a little digreſſion to relate the maner of this ceremony. This action of Iubile was in old time ſo rare, as few men might ſee it twiſe in their times. Boniface 8 ordained firſt of all that it ſhould be celebrated at Rome euerie hundred yeares, and made it to be paſt in forme of a law, which before was done but by deuotion. Clement 6 abridged it to fiftie, to reduce it to the prefixed time of the ceremoniall law, which yeare all debts and iniuries were aboliſhed, and the trumpets and cornets did ſound lowder than of cuſtome. Vrban 6 had another conſideration: Our Sauiour had liued thirty and three yeres in the world, and therefore he wold that men reuerencing the yeare which fell out at the end of that ſpace, ſhould ſanctifie it with the celebratiõ of the Iubile. Paul 2 finding the time yet too long, diuided the hũdred D into foure parts, that as the Buls are proclaimed at the foure corners of Rome, and bind thẽ that pretend to obtaine the pardons which are granted in this reuolution of yeres, to viſit the foure principall Churches, ſo the foure parts of the world ſhould bee inuited to frequent this Iubile, ſo called of the Hebrew word Iobel, which ſignifies a Rammes horne, for that it was publiſhed that yeare by the ſound of the Cornet with reioycing. It doth commonly begin on New yeares eue, with a ſolemne proceſſion, in the which the Pope, the Cardinals, the Embaſſadors of Chriſtian Princes, the Prelates, Clergie and Officers of the citie of Rome, march according to their ranks, with a world of people, vnto the doore called Holy, which finding walled vp, and neuer open but the yeare of Iubile, they put a candle into one of the Popes hands, and a little ſiluer hammer into the other, E with the which hauing ſtrooke thrice vpon the wall, it is preſently beaten downe by men appointed to that purpoſe, whereupon the people carrie away the peeces with great preaſe and deuotion. 1600

Iubile at Rome.

Clement had preſidents for the deferring of this day Iulio 3 began his Iubile in the yere 1550, on S. Mathias day, for that the Sea had been void vntill then. The importune paine of the gout ſhold haue made Clement delay this ceremony: but the concourſe of people was greater at Rome than had bin in the memory of man: the Pilgrimes were exceeding poore, and a longer ſtay wold haue bin very hurtfull vnto them. Which inuited the Pope not to fruſtrate their expectation: wherefore hee was carried in a chaire according to the cuſtome, and gaue his firſt bleſſing to this worke the firſt day of the yeare.

F The French king hauing long expected reſtitution of the Marquiſate of Saluſſes, which the duke of Sauoy detained from him, or ſome recompence, was forced to ſeek it by arms: whereupon he came in perſon with an army into Sauoy, and tooke the chiefe places of ſtrength. The earle of Fuentes Gouernor of Milan fortified the duke with foure thouſand Spaniards. The Miniſters of Spaine murmured much at the French kings approaching ſo neare Italie, ſaying, that the Marquiſate of Saluſſes was the pretext, but Milan

Spaniard apprehends the French kings taking of Sauoy

or

1601 or Naples was the true cauſe of this warre. Italie was in alarme, who thought that the G idleneſſe of the French at home would make them trouble their neighbours: The Pope feares that theſe firſt ſparkles will ſet all their neighbours on fire: The duke of Seſſa, king Philips embaſſador at Rome preſſes him; hee cries out of the miſeries & calamities which the continuance of this warre would cauſe; hee doth intreat, beſeech, and coniure the Pope to ſend Cardinall Aldobrandin his nephew to the moſt Chriſtian king to quench the fire of this great diuiſion, and to exhort them to come vnto the effects of the treatie of Paris: which the Pope did willingly yeeld vnto.

Spaniſh forces keep Chriſtendome in alarme

After an accord made betwixt the French king and the duke of Sauoy, all things ſeemed quiet, but ſuddenly both Italie and France were in alarme, hauing intelligence that H both the duke of Sauoy, and the Earle of Fuentes, kept their forces together, and increaſed them daily, and that they had ſome great deſigne which could not be yet deſcouered, they threatned many, to ſtrike but one, but no man knew where the chance would fall: that all the Princes of Chriſtendome had cauſe to doubt him, and that the king of Spaine would make himſelfe fearefull by armes in the beginning of his raign: but they knew not whether his deſigne was againſt Aſia, Afrike or Europe. Men ſpake diuerſly of this preparation; In France ſome ſaid that the king of Spaine would reuiue the pretenſions of his Grand-father, Charles the fift, againſt the Venetians: others ſaid, and with ſome reaſon, as the iſſue will verifie, that hee threatned to enter the eſtates of the great duke of Tuſcany, with this mightie army, if he deliuered not into his hands that man I which for ſome yeares had qualified himſelf, D. Sebaſtian the true and lawfull king of Portugall, who being baniſhed from Venice vpon this occaſion, had beene ſtaied at Florence as hee paſt, thinking to imbarke at Liuorne to get to Marſeilles, and ſo come vnto the king during the warre of Sauoy. The Venetians gaue order for their Gulphe, and did thinke to demaund Frances de Bonnes Lord of Des Digueres from the French king, to be their leader, if they were inuaded; to the end that as France had lately furniſhed the Emperour with a Lieutenant General, and Malta with a great Maſter againſt the Infidels, it might alſo ſupply them with a great Captaine againſt the Spaniards, if hee did attempt to trouble the quiet of their eſtate.

At Rome it was bruted that Geneua was in danger, and that the Marqueſſe of Aix K was ſent thither to intreate the Pope to bleſſe the enterpriſe, and to fortifie it with his meanes. In England they thought that ſome great men had ſome practiſes in Caſtille; and the yeares following will ſhew that their jealouſie was not vaine. The Flemings ſaid that it was to make king Philip to be declared king of Romans: but it were not conuenient to breed new factions among the Princes of Germany, when as the Turke was ſo powerfull in Hungarie.

All theſe erred in their iudgements, time had diſcouered that this great armie which ſo troubled mens affections, was entertained for an enterpriſe which they had vpon Marſeilles, but one of them which ſhould haue deliuered the Towne to the Earle of Fuentes, diſcouered it to the duke of Guiſe, and ſo they were diſappointed. L

Gentleman of Venice executed.

During the ſtay of this army in Italie, a Venetian Gentleman of the houſe of Donati, appointed to be gouernour of Creme, was conuicted to haue intelligence with the Spaniard, and publikely executed; hee teſtified that this army had many and diuers deſignes at one inſtant, of the which if any one had ſucceeded, it may be they had not loſt their time and paines at ſea, as they did at land. But ſeeing all their deſignes proue vain both in Italie and Prouence, the army imbarked at Vada, in the State of Genoua, in two troupes, the one vnder the commaund of D. Iohn Andrew Doria, and the other vnder Charles Doria his Son, and ſo they bent their courſe towards the Turkes, being in all ſeuenty gallies, to the which the Pope, the king of Spaine, the great duke of Tuſcanie, the duke of Sauoy, and the great Maſter of Malta had contributed. The Venetians would not infringe the peace M they had with the great Turke, and yet they prouided for all things neceſſarie for their defence, both by ſea and land, if any did quarrell with them.

Enterpriſe iuſt but not bleſt of heauen.

The enterpriſe was iuſt and worthy of the firſt ſtratagems of a Prince, who deſires to begin his raigne by ſome worthy act; the opportunity of doing well being ſo fauourable, as if Chriſtendome could haue made her profit by the diuiſion which was then

in

A in Mahomets eſtate, by the mutinies of the Ianiſaries, and the reuolts in Aſia, they might in ſhew haue aduanced the accompliſhment of that prophecy, whereof the Turkes doe not ſpeake but with ſighes, That by the common armes of the Chriſtians they ſhall be rooted from the face of the earth. 1601

This armie being imbarked they came, in the beginning of Iuly, to Naples to make prouiſion of great ſtore of armes, and a good number of Petards, which made the world thinke that hee would both arme ſome of the Turkes ſubiects, which were ready to reuolt, and that he had intelligence in ſome place to ſurpriſe it ſuddenly. And for that footmen are alwaies weake if they bee not ſeconded by ſome horſe, they made pro-
B uiſion alſo of fifteene hundred, or two thouſand armors for horſemen.

The Venetians ſeeing them bend their courſe towards Meſſina, entred into new apprehenſions, that if they attempted any thing in Albania they ſhould bee troubled in their gulphe, but being come to Trepany, which is the promontarie of Sicile next to Afrike, they were freed from this feare. Hauing paſt the Ilands of Baleares, they then thought it was for Alger. But Cigala of Sicile was come from Conſtantinople with fifty gallies to croſſe his deſignes, and to watch him vpon his retreat, being loth to fight at one inſtant againſt the Chriſtians and againſt the Moores, their ſlaues and rebels; for it was giuen out that the Chriſtian army ſhould be aſſiſted with eight or ten thouſand Moores, and ſome Chriſtians. Wherefore Cigala had drawne all them that dwelt along the Sea-
C coaſt, and might fauour this army into the Towne, and did ſhut vp aboue tenne thouſand ſlaues in caues, tyed with double chaines, and ſtraitly garded.

There was great hope of good ſucceſſe of this enterpriſe; and the Spaniards ſaid, that the King would giue good teſtimony of his affection to Chriſtendome. Prince Doria the better to fauour this deſigne, had intreated the great Maſter of Malta, in the king of Spaines name, to ſend ſome gallies to ſpoile in the Leuant ſeas, and to make a diuerſion of the Turkes forces, and to aduertiſe him of their courſe. They were verie fortunate in the deſigne, for paſſing into Morea with fiue gallies, Beauregard a French knight had commandement to ſet a Petard to the gate of Chaſteauneuf, which the Turkes call Paſſaua, and in the meane time ſome other knights ſhould
D attempt it by Scalado on the other ſide. As nothing is eaſie to cowards, ſo the valiant find nothing difficult: where they entred with ſuch furie, as they forced the ſecond Port, and yet it was valiantly defended by ſeuen or eight hundred Turkes, where they tooke many ſlaues, cloyed their ordnance, ſpoyled and burnt the Town and countrie about it, and returned with ſpeed.

Chaſteauneuf in Morea taken by the knights of Malta.

The Sea armie of Spaine recouered the coaſt of Afrike, but both men at land, and windes at Sea were banded againſt it. God would not bleſſe this enterpriſe although it were iuſt and holie, the reaſons remaine in the Regiſter of his juſtice and infinit wiſdome: againſt the which wee may not murmure, as the Romanes did againſt the conduct and gouernment of their gods, when as they ſaw that Pompey,
E doing nothing according vnto juſtice, was fauoured with their aſſiſtence; and when as he fought for their laws and countrie, yea for the gods themſelues, he was moſt vnfortunate. Prince Doria ſeeing that both heauen, earth, and ſea did croſſe his deſignes, reſolued to retire and not attempt any thing.

The Prince of Parma did ſerue as a voluntarie in this army: who grieuing to ſee this great armie returne without any imployment, deſiring rather to erre in judgement than in the greatneſſe of his courage, told Prince Doria, That hee ſhould not ſuffer ſo goodlie an armie to returne without ſome attempt, the which had done nothing but incenſe a mightie enemy, who to bee reuenged of a dead enterpriſe ready for execution, would ſeeke to annoy the king of Spaine in all his eſtates. To F whome the old man made this preſent anſwere; I know my charge, my head is growne white in learning this experience. Your excellencie is accomptable vnto the king my lord but for your pike onely, and I for a whole army, wherein although I haue beene vnfortunate, yet will I not that other parts belonging to my charge, as courage, authoritie and experience ſhall faile mee, or that any ſhall obiect vnto me that I haue erred therein. A gallant and worthy anſwere, to teach a yong Prince (how great Prince of Parmas ſpeech to Prince Doria.

" Prince Dorias anſwere

1601 great ſoeuer hee bee in an armie) that hee muſt onely ſtudie to obey, and not to G lead and commaund which was the Generalls charge.

So Prince Doria hauing diſcharged his armie went towards Genoua, choſing rather to giue them cauſe to ſpeake diſgracefully of his retreat, than to haue attempted an impoſſible enterpriſe in vaine. The Popes Gallies attended the Prince of Parma at Barcelona, who was gone into Spaine to kiſſe the king of Spaines hands. Thoſe of the great duke of Tuſcany went to Genoua, and from thence to Liuorne.

Moſt of the Souldiers came and lodged in the duchie of Milan, to the vtter ruine of Policie of the earle of Fuentes. the Countrie. But the Earle of Fuentes, who neuer forceth the people when hee H can perſuade them, found an inuention to make this burthen ſweet and ſupportable. Hee ſought to drawe their commerce by water from Milan to Pauia, and cauſed them to digge Trenches, to bring the Riuers together which are betwixt thoſe Townes.

The people ſeeing commodities that might well recompence their loſſes with aduantage, ſeaſoned the remembrance of their preſent harme, with the hope of ſo great a good. Many haue attempted the like, but in vaine, who in the end haue beene forced to giue ouer the worke, and to leaue the world as it was made.

The Emperour Charlemaigne, ſought to ioyne the Riuer of Rhin to the Danowe, and the Morelle to the Rhin, to the end the French might traffike by water through- I out all Europe, and to this end hee cauſed great and deepe Trenches to bee made, but finding lets, not fore-ſeene nor thought off, they remained vnprofitable and filled of themſelues.

And the Earle of Fuentes incounters great difficulties in this deſigne, which did fruſtrate their worke, and renewed the peoples complaints, when as they ſawe themſelues ſurcharged with the ruines of this laſt Ship-wracke, and that the Souldiers which came from the armie of Alger, liued in Lombardie at diſcretion and without diſcretion: wherefore to giue the Millanois ſome eaſe, hee entreated the duke of Sauoy to lodge the Regiment of Barbo, in the Marquiſate of Saluſſes, but knowing how difficult a thing it is to make the Spaniard leaue his lodging, he excuſed him- K ſelfe vpon the ruine and miſerie of his eſtates.

In the end the king of Spaines Commiſſaries caſt thoſe companies of Italians that were in Alexandria, they wrapt vp their colours, diſarmed them, and left
Ten ſhillings ſterling. them in a manner naked, giuing to euerie one but fiue liuers of that Countrie money; the King of Spaine hauing no meanes to doe better, his Treaſure beeing much waſted in the charges of this laſt ſea armie, being alſo to furniſh money for the Suiſſes and Germanes.

This yeare the Queene of Spaine was brought in bed of her firſt Childe, the Infanta of Spain borne. which although it were a Daughter, yet were the Spaniard as full of ioy as the French were for their new borne Daulphin, ſaying they had rather their Queene L ſhould beginne with a Daughter than with a Sonne, leaſt they ſhould fall into thoſe difficulties which jealouſie and ambition doe breede, when as the Sonne growes vp ſo ſoone and ſolicits his father to be gone, when as their ages are in a manner confounded, the one being in the flower, the other in the ſeaſon of fruites, the which is fitteſt for gouernement; and that the deſire to ſucceede may not trouble the order of Nature, which makes the one repent that they are fathers, and ſhewes the other vnworthy to be children.

This Daughter was borne on Saint Maurice day, the ſecond of September, and was afterwards Chriſtned Anna Maria Mauricetta.

Outrage done vnto Rochpot embaſſador in Spaine. There fell out an accident this Summer, which had like to haue drawne the M two great Monarchs of Chriſtendome into armes. The Maieſtie of kings is ſo intereſſed in the wrong which is done vnto their Embaſſdours, as there is nothing more ſenſible, nor a iuſter ſubiect to quarrell with them that doe the wrong: And this pretext is ſo nice, as the Prince which ſuffers the wrong vnpuniſhed, is no leſſe culpable than they that doe it.

This

A This accident did trouble the mindes of many, and tranſported their imaginations beyond the Pyrenees, if hee who quencht the laſt combuſtions of France, had not ſpeedily caſt water vpon this new fire which began to kindle. A nephew of the earle of Rochepots, embaſſadour in Spaine for the French king, bathing himſelfe at night with ſome other Gentlemen after the manner of the French: certaine Spaniards looking on them, vſed ſome ieſting ſpeeches, which were as ſuddenly anſwered, wherewith the Spaniards being mooued: caſt the French mens clothes into the water, the French attired themſelues with all ſpeed, and from words they fell to ſwords, in which conflict there were ſome Spaniſh Gentlemen ſlaine, and ſome hurt. The B kinſmen of the dead made complaint vnto the king of Spaine, who commanded his officers to doe juſtice as the cauſe required. And they, not remembring that the name of an embaſſador is inuiolable, euen among enemies, forced the doores of his lodging without any reſpect, and drew forth his Nephew, and ſome other Gentlemen to priſon. 1601

The French king, being aduertiſed of this affront, was much offended, and demanded ſatisfaction from the king of Spaine, elſe hee ſhould not take him for his friend, and withall hee called home his embaſſadour, forbidding all his ſubiects to traffike into Spaine and Portugall, vpon paine of corporall puniſhment, and the loſſe of goods, proteſting to bee reuenged if reaſon were not done him by ſome mild courſe: C whereupon hee went preſently towards the fronteers and came to Calais. The iniury done vnto Rochepot, the defence of traffike, and the kings approach, made all men thinke that this goodlie Sunne of peace, which began but to ſpred his beames ouer both realmes, would be ſoone ecclipſed, at the leaſt it would bee ouer-caſt with clouds, from whence would grow many great and ruinous ſtormes. Traffike forbidden into Spaine

The Archduke tooke an alarme at the kings approach, being then at the ſeege of Oſtend: wherefore hee ſent the Earle of Sora to beſeech his Majeſtie not to ſuffer his enemies to preuaile againſt him, and preſume to find a ſupport in him, which would be of dangerous conſequence for all other people that would ſhake off the yoake of obedience, and an odious example to princes from whome they ſhould D receiue a law. Archduke iealous of the French king.

And for that many thought the king would imbrace this occaſion of the ſeege of Oſtend, whereby it ſeemed he ſhould haue good meanes to enter into Artois, without any oppoſition, he ſent the duke of Eſguillon to aſſure the archduke that he had no other deſigne but to maintaine peace with all his neighbours; that his comming to Calais, was to view and to prouide for that which ſhould bee neceſſarie to aſſure the frontiers againſt all dangers. That he deſired peace, yet would not endure a wrong: And as he did hope, the king of Spain would do him reaſon for the affront done vnto his embaſſador, ſo he would not ſeeke any reuenge vntill it were denied him. But the Pope fearing that this violence offered to the French embaſſador, would not paſſe without ſome E reuenge, and that it might kindle a warre betwixt theſe two great kings, hee ſent into Spaine for the priſoners, the which were ſent vnto him, and hee preſently deliuered them into the hands of Mounſieur de Bethunes, embaſſador for the French king at Rome: and ſo the peace was continued. French king ſends to the Archduke.

I muſt now make ſome mention of a wonder or miracle in Spain, wherof the Spaniards brag much, but I leaue it to the iudicious Reader to beleeue what he pleaſe: it is a bell in Arragon, which they ſay, doth ſometimes ring without any mans help, and therefore they cal it, The miraculous bell. Bell in Arragon miraculous.

Neere vnto the riuer of Ebro, whereas in old time was a colony of Romans, called Curia Celſa, from whence they broght goodly veſſels of Alabaſter, as Titus Liu- F ius and others doe witneſſe, there is a place, the ruines whereof ſhew that there hath been a great town which is now demanteled, and did ſtretch from Villila vnto a place called Celſa, which keeps ſtil the old name though it bee corrupted.

Neere Villila there is a little hil, on the top wherof there is a little church dedicated to S. Nicholas, where among other things there is a ſquare ſtone of alabaſter, very ancient, on the

1601 the which there are many perſonages cut in ſtone, kneeling before a Bell, which hangs G in a Tower of that ſteeple. But now the Church hath a Tower vnderpropt with three pillers, in the which there hangs two bels, one a little one, which cals the neighbours daily to diuine ſeruice, and the greater is commonly called by them the miraculous Bel, the which is ten ſpannes about, and there is printed on it on two places. The picture of Chriſt crucified, with that of the Virgin Mary and Saint Iohn, the one towards the Eaſt and the other towards the Weſt; and in like manner two croſſes, one towards the South, and the other towards the North, and about it there are Letters grauen which containe this Sibilline propheſie: Chriſtus Rex venit in pace, Deus homo factus eſt. This bell by ancient tradition, as they affirme, hath often ſounded of it ſelfe, and hath foretold ſtrange H and vnexpected euents.

This yeare one thouſand ſixe hundred and one, on the thirteenth day of Iune, this bell did ſound without the helpe of man, and without any ſhaking, the knepple ſtriking ſometimes on one ſide alone, and ſometimes on both ſides of the bell; at the firſt it gaue ſixe ſtroakes, then nine, and afterwards twelue, fifteene, and in the end thirty ſtroakes, continuing ſtriking after this manner for the ſpace of two houres; and the greateſt blowes were for the moſt part giuen towards the Eaſt, and towards the South: and diuers daies following it ſtrooke ſundrie times in the preſence of the Curate of the place, and of an infinite number of people, vntill Saturday the ſixeteenth of that moneth: So as the bruit of this noueltie was ſpred ouer the whole Countrie, and in the end it came I vnto Sarragoſſa the chiefe Towne of the Realme of Arragon, whereas D. Garcia of Villiapando, Lord of Quinto and Villila, was at that time, who hearing theſe news went with his wife, and daughters, and many others of good accompt, preſently to Villila, being deſirous to ſee that with their eyes which had beene reported: and for that after their arriuall the bell ſtood ſtill ſome daies, they held themſelues very vnfortunate, that they came not in time, fearing it would ſound no more.

But the next day which was Thurſday, being Corpus Chriſti day, about ſixe of the clocke in the morning, when they were ready to goe in proceſſion, it beganne to ſound very lowd, and ſo continued diuers times, vntill the day after Saint Iohn Baptiſts day, that it ſtayed for a time, and afterwards as if the clapper had beene K guided by ones hand, it gaue twenty great ſtroakes towards the Eaſt verie melodiouſly, and ſo it ceaſed.

They ſay that they haue autentike teſtimonies in their Annales, that this bell did ſound of it ſelfe, when as Alfonſo the fift, king of Arragon, went into Italie, to take poſſeſſion of the Realme of Naples; and when as the Emperour Charles the fift, died: In like maner when as D. Sebaſtian king of Portugall went into Afrike; and when as king Philip the ſecond was extreamely ſicke at Badajos, at which time his wife Queene Anne dyed; from which time vntill now it had neuer ſounded. This Bell did ſound (as I haue ſaid) when as D. Sebaſtian went into Afrike, and the Portugals (who alwaies produce ſome Propheſies,) aſſure that this bell did ſound this L yeare for the returne of their king D. Sebaſtian.

D. Sebaſtian king of Portugall.

The accident of a man which termed himſelfe D. Sebaſtian, ſometime king of Portugall, is ſo common throughout all Chriſtendome, as there is not any Nation but talkes of him, yet diuerſly: The verification thereof would not onely giue pleaſure and profit, but would rauiſh many of them with admiration, who beleeue him to be ſo, as well as the others, who hold him to bee an Impoſtor, or a Magitian: And with all it might ſerue for an example, as well to thoſe that are now or ſhall come heereafter, in matter of wilfull and malitious incredulitie, as well as in too indiſcreet and light beleefe.

Opinion of the Spaniards of D. Sebaſtian.

The Spaniards in this beleefe are contrarie to the Portugalls, for they hold him M for an Impoſtor. Some among them ſay, that he is a Calabrois, borne at Tauerne: others maintaine that he is Monke, which had renounced his order: And others hold that it is one Mark Tulle Catizon, born in a town of Apulia, & that he hath a wife liuing at Meſſina, being induced by ſome Portugalls enemies to the Spaniards, who by this pretext

A text would seeke the deliuerie of the realme of Portugall, which they say, is held by the violence of the Kings of Castille: That it is most certaine the king D. Sebastian was slaine at the battell in Afrike: That he being dead, his bodie was knowne and redeemed by king Philip the second for a hundred thousand crownes. Others say, that the Moores deliuered it without any money, by reason of the accord made betwixt Muley Mahut, and king Philip: it is true that king Philip did solicite them for it by reason of his pretensions. That hee was honourably interred at Belem by Lisbone. That foure kings, accompting the election of D. Antonio, haue raigned since his death. That it is not likely that king Sebastian should haue continued two and twentie yeres a prisoner, and a wanderer about the world, and not haue a desire, nor find any means to make himselfe to be knowne for B him who this Impostor saies he is. Moreouer, the miserable estate wherein this affronter hath long liued among poore people, and in the end was seene in Italie before hee saied who hee was, hauing not written vnto any of the Princes of Christendome. That hee could not answer pertinently to all the demands made vnto him by the Seigniory of Venice, who had deliberately examined him both in prison and at liberty. And that he had not all the markes which the deceased king D. Sebastian had. That the king D. Sebastian was flaxen haired, and this Impostor is blacke. That he doth not speake good Portugall. That in all Ages there haue beene some seene to resemble one an other in countenaunce, to be of the like stature, and to haue like markes. That it is not now alone that there haue beene such Impostors which said they were the king D. Sebastian; yea a Mason borne in C the Iland of Tercere, was so impudent as to affirme himselfe to be the same, who was followed by some Portugalls armed, and if he had entred into Lisbone on Assention day, as he had resolued, and had written vnto the Gouernour, he had been receiued by all the Portugalls for their king D. Sebastian: but others say, that onely some pesants of the countrey followed him, and that he had written vnto the cardinall Albert to leaue Portugall; but being taken and knowne for an Impostor, he was hanged. That also in a Prouince of Portugall called Beira, a certain Portugall of base condition maintained himself to be the king D. Sebastian: the which was giuen out to be so true, as Albert Cardinall of Austria then Viceroy of Portugall, was resolued (as the Portugalls themselues say) to retire himselfe into Castille; yet by the aduice of the fiue Gouernors of Portugall, which go-D uerned the realme ioyntly with him, he sent to captaine Gill de Mesa (who at this day is one of the French Kings chamber) to go and apprehend him with his companie of two hundred men, and to bring him with honour and respect: for if haply hee were the same whom he vaunted himselfe to be, hee would deliuer vp into his hands the sceptet and crowne of the kings of Portugall, with his realmes. Gill de Mesa went into the prouince of Beira, and came to the towne of Pena macor, where he tooke him easily, and carried him to Lisbone, who being knowne for an impostor, he was publiquely whipt and sent to the gallies; which Impostor liued of late yeeres, and was called Sebastian in derision, who was not hanged notwithstanding, for that in his processe hee was not found charged with any other crimes than with that of his intention: But one who ter-
E med himselfe Bishop of La gard was hanged, for that hee had persuaded this man: And as for the cardinall Albert, he would not retire, but whenas the King D. Antonio came into Portugall with his sea armie. That there haue not onely beene such Impostors, who termed themselues to be the king D. Sebastian; but that lately in Castille, there was a pie baker at Madrigal, who gaue it out secretly, that he was D Charles prince of Spain, whom king Philip his father had put to death twenty yeeres before, who beeing knowne for an abuser was hanged: Others say, that this pie baker termed himselfe king Sebastian, being incited thereunto by Michel de los Sanctos an Augustine Frier, Preacher to Queene Katherine, who was hanged in his religious habite. That in like maner other ages had F furnished the like Impostors which had taken vpon them the name of Kings and Princes.

1602

The Portugalls on the other side maintaine, that this is their true king by many and sundry great markes, which he carries like vnto those of the true Sebastian, wherein they are the better confirmed, for that the Spaniards (say they) ground onely vpon simple, common, and light presumptions, the which doe in no sort ballance so many marks and reasons

Portugalls opinion touching D. Sebastian.

1601 reaſons which juſtifie this to be the true king: And moreouer, that the Spaniards, who G ſay that he is a Calabrois, a Monke, or Marc Tulle Catizon of Apulia, haue not yet produced any apparent proofes of his life and means whom they call an Impoſtor. The which they may ſo eaſily doe; by the authoritie and abſolute power which they haue in thoſe Prouinces, as the Portugalls doe not receiue their negatiue, but for a meere ſlander: but on the other ſide they repeat the life of D. Sebaſtian from his birth, vnto his comming to Saint Lucar of Barameda, with many prophecies, ſignes, and predictions: the which we haue added, that it may ſerue as an example to poſteritie.

Birth of D. Sebaſtian king of Portugall.

D. Sebaſtian (as you haue heard) was the onely ſonne and after-birth of the Prince D. Iohn ſonne to the king D. Iohn the third, who died yong, leauing D. Ioane of Auſtria, princeſſe of Caſtille, and daughter to the Emperour Charles the fift with child, who was deliuered of D. Sebaſtian on Saint Sebaſtians day, eighteene dayes after the fathers death, who H as it ſeemes was in a maner wreſted out of the hands of God, by the great prayers which were made generally throughout the realme of Portugall, to the end the crowne ſhould not be left without lawful heires males in the ſucceſſion of great Alphonſo the firſt king of Portugall. They were induced hereunto by the predictions and reuelations which had beene giuen to the ſaid Alphonſo the firſt founder of the ſaid realme: by the which it was promiſed them of God, To warrant his poſteritie in ſuch ſort as it ſhould not faile vpon the earth, yet, at the ſixteenth deſcent from him, it ſhould haue great tribulations and afflictions.

By this Oracle it appeareth it was ſpoken of his birth, for the which alſo the Portugals I made ſuch praiers, and ſhewed ſuch deuotion, for that they feared to fall vnder the Spaniards yoake, who are their naturall enemies: either for that the Portugalles had in olde time their beginning from the French, as the name doth ſhew, for that the French comming into thoſe parts did inhabite that countrey, and gaue it their name; or elſe for that the Spaniards beeing enuious of their proſperities, ſeeking alwayes to raigne ouer them, are become their enemies without cauſe.

The king D. Sebaſtian being ouerthrowne at the battell of Alcaſerquibir in Afrike, the Spaniards ſay that ſome noblemen of Portugall which followed him, ſeeing all loſt, aduiſed him to retire, but he anſwered that he had rather die, and ſo thruſt into the middeſt of his enemies, where ſome noblemen entred with him, where they beleeue he died, whoſe bodie they ſay was buried at Belem. K

But the Portugalls ſay, that they did neuer beleeue that it was D. Sebaſtians bodie, or that he was dead, but that he imbarqued (as you ſhall heare) and that he went into Algarue, and put himſelfe into a monaſterie of Ieronomits, or according vnto ſome, of S. Francis, whom they called los Deſcalgos, or the bare footed, and there hee cauſed his wounds to bee cured; the which they ſay had beene verified by a ſeruant to Cardinall Henrie the Kings vncle, who was a Church man and truſty to his maſter, and brought an Act ſigned by the Gardian and monks of the ſaid monaſtery of Ieronomits: this ſeruants name was Manuel Antonez: But cardinall Henrie, who was acknowledged king, did not then ſpeake, neither did the ſaid Manuell Antonez: the which (as they ſay) was afterwards L
the cauſe of great miſeries in Portugall: for the cardinall dying, notwithſtanding that the Portugalls did after him chooſe D. Antonio a prince of Portugall for their lawful king, yet the king of Caſtille ſeazed vpon the Realme, and held it by force. Afterwards the ſaid Manuel Antonez reuealed this Act, ſeeing that in the yeere 1598, it was ſaid that D. Sebaſtian was recouered; who beeing ſent for by king Philip, hee went vnto him, but no man knew what was become of him, ſome ſaid he was dead.

How the Portugalls beleeue that D. Sebaſtian ſaued himſelfe from the battell.

The Portugalls beleeue, that the king D. Sebaſtian ſeeing the battel loſt, that hee was in daunger to be taken, but that defending himſelfe valiantly, hee ſlew ſome which ſought to take him, and hid himſelfe amongſt the dead carkaſſes vntill night, at which time hee went towards the ſea, where the reſt of his armie lay in the roade. There hee met with the Duke of Auero Chriſtopher de Tanora his great fauourite, the Erle of Redonde, and other noblemen, with whom he imbarqued, and went into Algarue, as you haue heard, ſending his ſhippes away: where hee reſolued with the ſaid noblemen to wander ouer all Europe, Afrike, and Aſia, into Ethiopia to Prete Ian, and into Perſia, where he was in battells againſt the Turke, and receiued many wounds. M

Being

A Beeing wearie of running, and tired with the vanitie of the world, hee came vnto an Hermitage, where hee continued vntill hee had viſions and reuelations both to himſelfe, and to an Hermite with whom hee liued: ſo as after many delayes he left him: which was in the yeare 1597. And that being in Sicile he ſent letters into Portugall, by Marc Tullio Catizoni a Sicilian, who neuer returned, and was neuer ſeen ſince. That king Sebaſtian after hee had attended him long, parted from Sicile, with an intent to manifeſt himſelfe vnto the Pope. But there fell out an other accident, his ſeruants robbed him, and ranne away, ſo as he remained naked and without meanes, being forced to begge vp and downe Italie: and in the end hee came to Venice in Iune 1598, hauing but one gazette, which is not a peny of our Engliſh mony: being there, he got into a Cooks houſe, B and lodged in a poore cockeloft or garret, the Cookes name was Franciſco, borne in Cypres, who (being but a poore man and charged with wife and many children) entertained him aſwell as he could, for the vertues and good parts which he ſeemed to haue, being continually at his prayers. 1601

Within few dayes he was diſcouered by the Portugals to be D. Sebaſtian king of Portugall, whereupon ſome of them carried him to Padoua, whether it were vpon hope to be aduaunced by him, or otherwiſe, ſo as there was a great bruite of him. The Embaſſador of Spaine made his complaints, and the Seigniorie ſent to the gouernors of Padoua to chaſe away this man, who called himſelfe D. Sebaſtian king of Portugall, within 3 daies out of their towne. This ſentence being ſignified vnto him, touched him ſo neere as hee C fell ſicke. Being recouered, he reſolued to go in perſon to Venice to yeeld an accompt of himſelfe. He preſents himſelfe vnto the Senate, relates the hiſtorie of his life, his rout in Afrike, his retreit into Calabria, his reſolution neuer to haue ſhewed himſelfe in anie place of knowledge for the ſhame of his diſgrace, and the puniſhment of his raſhneſſe, if the Spirit of God had not inſpired him with another will, and giuen him a certaine aſſurance to make him known for him that he was borne. He added moreouer, that among all the ſoueraigne Eſtates of Europe, he would not haue recourſe to any, but to the common weale of Venice, to iudge the truth of his condition. And for a proofe, hee remembred vnto them with all circumſtances, the Embaſſadors which they had in former times ſent vnto him, the anſwers and diſpatches which they had brought backe from him, and D the difficulties that were of either ſide. The Senate cauſed their records to be ſearcht, and found them conformable to his words. They queſtioned with him, with great wiſedome and iudgement, of many other matters of importance; whereunto hee anſwered ſo pertinently, as many held him to be the true king D. Sebaſtian, and others tooke him to bee a magitian, for that no other but himſelfe could be informed of ſuch ſecret matters, without the ſpirit of Pithon.

Then grew there a great rumour in Venice, the people fauoured him with their wiſhes and praiers, euery man deſired to ſee him ſeated againe in his throne. But hee had a violent enemie, the Embaſſadour of Spaine, who maintained for his maſter, that hee was an impoſtor, charging him moreouer, with many horrible and deteſtable crimes (which E beeing prooued could not haue deſerued leſſe than fire) he made himſelfe partie againſt him, and got him to be committed. Being in priſon, the Senat deputed Iudges to make his proceſſe, who vſed all diligence to informe vpon the crimes imputed vnto him by his aduerſe partie, but they found him innocent. They examined him eight and twentie times, at all the which he ſhewed ſuch an vndaunted courage and countenance, as he ſeemed rather capable to iudge the Iudges, than to vndergoe their cenſures. In the end, imagining that their demands were more curious than iuſt, and that they fauoured the greedineſſe of the Spaniard more than the truth of his cauſe, hee would not anſwer any more, but did inſiſt vpon his firſt requeſt, That they would let him be ſeene vnto the Portugals, and to ſuch ſtrangers as had knowne him before he paſt into Afrike, and if he were F a counterfeit, hee was in their hands to doe that iuſtice on him which an impoſtor deſerued.

D. Sebaſtian imprisoned at Venice.

This Seductor (ſaid the Embaſſadour of Spaine) is borne in Apulia, and married at Meſſina, we haue the depoſitions of his wife, that his name Marco Tullio Catizoni; that he had beene procured & inſtructed by certain Portugals, enemies to the Eſtate of Spaine, Reaſons of the Embaſſadors accuſing D. Sebaſtian.

1601 who vnder this pretext would ſtirre vp a rebellion, which they call a deliuerie or reſtoring G of the realme of Portugall: what Prince of Chriſtendome would deale in the affaires of this affronter? The qualitie of thoſe perſons whom hee hath followed ſince the time that he hath wickedly taken vpon him the name of D. Sebaſtian, doth it not ſufficiently prooue that he is a man of a bad life? Hee hath ſome markes which D. Sebaſtian had on his bodie when he liued, but moſt of them are counterfeited by art. The King Sebaſtian was flaxen haired, and this impoſtor is blacke; neither doth he ſpeake good Portugal. By theſe and many other reaſons he concluded, that the priſoner ſhould vndergoe the ſame puniſhment which they had ſuffered which were culpable of the ſame crime, during the raignes of the laſt king and gouernours of Portugall.

Portugals defend him. The Portugals defended him with as great animoſitie as the Spaniards accuſed him H with paſſion: they maintained that their king D. Sebaſtian beeing grieued, that through the violence of his courage he had made Afrike the ſepulchre of ſo many thouſands of men, who might haue done more profitable ſeruice vnto Chriſtendome; and beeing aſhamed after ſo great a loſſe, had wandred vp and downe the world, vntill that the diui-ning prouidence had forced him to manifeſt himſelfe. His aduenture was no ſtranger, nor more incredible than that of William 5 duke of Aquitaine, who hauing maintained the Antipope Leon ſurnamed Anaclet, againſt Innocent 2, who was lawfull Pope; notwithſtanding that Saint Bernard had exhorted him not to countenance a Schiſme in the Church, againſt the ſeruice of God: the ſaid duke hauing diſplaced the Biſhops of Poictiers and Lymoges, and aduanced others, of his owne authoritie, beeing toucht with remorce, I and a deſire of penance, he left his Eſtates, to lead a ſolitarie life like ſome poore man:
with this deſigne he reconciled himſelfe vnto the Pope, and by his aduice went to Ieruſalem, with a Secretarie of his called Albert; there he liued nine yeares in great abſtinence.
At his returne to Rome, he thought to haue taken partie in the warres which were then in Italie, but knowing that this aduice was a temptation of the deuill, he returned to Ieruſalem, and afterwards came backe into Italie, where he built diuers monaſteries, and in the end died, in the yeare 1154.

If this prince had had a meaning to returne and take poſſeſſion of his Eſtates, ſhould he haue found the like inhumanitie among the princes and common weales of Chriſtendome? ſhould he haue had ſuch toyle to verifie the true qualitie of his per- K ſon? The Portugals did neuer beleeue that their king D. Sebaſtian was ſlaine at the Battell of Alcaſar. If they would haue the people beleeue it, they ſhould haue cauſed his body to be viewed by ſuch as were intereſſed, and that knew him, for that they had beene brought vp with him, and the markes which he carries on his perſon: and not to poore priſoners taken in the warres, to whom vnder promiſe of libertie, they might drawe what depoſitions they pleaſed. There is nothing more eaſie than to ſuppoſe a bodie, to put it into a beere, to interre it royally, and to proclaime, This is the body of the deceaſed D.
Sebaſtian king of Portugall.

As for impoſtors which haue qualified themſelues with his name, haue they found any beleefe, but with the ſimple, and people of no ſort? Haue we not abandoned them as L ſoone as euer their falſhood was diſcouered? The Maſon of Tercere, was he not hanged by a publike conſent? That other raskall of Pegnamacor, who did for a time trouble Cardinall Albert, and the fiue gouernours of Portugall, was hee not declared a ſeducer, publikely whipt, and ſent to the galleys.

But what credit may be giuen to the depoſitions of a ſilly woman, who for a peece of money will ſing any note you pleaſe? wee haue witneſſes to whom ſhee voluntarily declared, that ſhee came to Venice againſt her will: That ſhee is the wife of Marco Tullio Catizoni, but had not ſeene him ſince hee parted, with many letters to goe into Portugall. Wee knowe moreouer, that hee diſtributed the greateſt part of them, and that hee died at Lisbone, attending the returne of ſome that were abſent, to deliuer them M to their owne hands. The king D. Sebaſtian had during his raigne more intelligence with this Seigniorie, than with all the other Eſtates of Chriſtendome: and therefore had rather addreſſe himſelfe vnto them to bee relieued in the iuſtice of his cauſe. The afflictions and miſeries which haue oppreſt him ſince hee began to diſcouer himſelfe, haue

A haue forced him to accept of that which is allowed the moſt infortunate in a ſtrange coun- 1602 trey: to receiue courteſies, and to bind himſelfe indifferently to all men for their good deeds. They haue examined his life exactly, and theirs whom he hath frequented: could they conuict him of any crime? of any vice? if it bee not a crime or vice to ſpend many daies of the weeke in faſting with bread and water, in continuall prayers, and in giuing vnto the poore the remainder of the almes which had beene giuen him. The Spaniards which ſay that he is a Calabrois, a Monke which hath quit his Order, and which call him Marco Tullio Catizoni, ſhould they not rather deſire that he ſhould be brought forth vnto vs, to examine him, to ſee him, to heare him, and to know him? If hee bee a ſeducer,
B and if we be impoſtors, what meanes ſhall wee haue with him to auoyd the puniſhment which the Lawes inflict in ſuch caſes? Wee know the markes and characters which Nature, not without ſome great miſterie, hath ſet vpon the bodie of the king D. Sebaſtian; Let vs ſee this priſoner, if he carries them, it is a great preſumption for many other ſignes which we haue: if there be art, we wil be the firſt that ſhal crie out againſt the abuſer. And vntill this be done we cannot take the Spaniards negatiue, who are the vſurpers of Portugall, but for a meere ſlander.

If the king Don Sebaſtian hath changed the colour of his haire ſince his youth, what maruaile is it? Is it not ordinarie, that a flaxen haire turnes blacke with age? But moreouer, doe not wee know, that if any one that is as white as ſnowe, paſſe the C Equinoctiall line, if he make a voyage to Guimey, to Saint Thome, or to ſome other part of Ethiopia; if hee ſtay ſome yeares in Barbarie, hee will become blacke as pitch, and the whiter a man is, the ſooner he growes blacke. Wee haue a familiar example in the perſon of Don Chriſtopher Prince of Portugall: From his youth vntill the age of eighteene, that hee paſt out of England into Barbarie, wee haue ſeene him white as milke, faire, and of a cleere complexion; but hauing liued at Marroc little aboue three yeares, hee grewe ſo blacke, as at his returne we did not know him. Hee is yet liuing, and no whiter than when hee returned out of Barbarie. If little aboue three yeares had ſuch power to breed ſo ſtrange an alteration in Don Chriſtopher, what might aboue twentie yeares doe in the king Don Sebaſtian? Neither may we find it
D ſtrange, if conuerſing with ſo many Nations, differing in language, he hath forgotten ſomething of the true and naturall pronunciation of ours. Thus our enemies grounding onely vpon ſimple and light preſumptions, cannot ouerthrowe ſo many certaine markes and reaſons which iuſtifie this man to bee the true and lawfull Don Sebaſtian king of Portugall.

The Venetians would gladly their priſoner were gone to ſeeke juſtice elſewhere, for they found no lawfull ſubiect to condemne him, and they could not openly giue him meanes to eſcape, but they muſt incenſe the king of Spaine. The greateſt part of their Senat found great likelihoods that he ſhould be the ſame, others knew not what to ſay, neither durſt they intreat him as a king. They therefore gaue the Portugals to vn-
E derſtand by the Archbiſhop of Spalato, who knew him particularly, and had kept him ſometime in his houſe, That they ſhould bring vnto them the true and naturall markes of the king Don Sebaſtian well verified, without the which they might not ſee him; for that hauing ſo great a deſire to free themſelues from the Caſtillans commaund, if need were they would maintaine a Negro to be the king Don Sebaſtian.

Venetians demand an atteſtation of the Portugals.

Doctor Sampayo a Iacobin goes to Lisbone, from whence he returnes to Venice with a Chanon, and brings an inſtrument made by an Apoſtolike Notarie, containing all the markes teſtified by many others, and beſeecheth the Seigniorie to confront them, and to vnderſtand the truth. They anſwered, that the reaſon of Eſtate did not allow them to enquire whether he were a king, or not, vnleſſe they were required in his
F fauour by the kings and princes of Chriſtendom. After this the Portugals went to begge fauour in France, Germanie, England, with the Eſtates of the vnited Prouinces, and elſe-where. In the end Don Chriſtopher younger ſonne to the deceaſed Don Antonio king of Portugal by Election, who died at Paris, beeing come to Venice with letters from the Eſtates and prince Maurice, obtained audience, and deliuered that which hee pretended in writing. The Counſell aſſembled foure ſeuerall daies for the priſoners af-

1601 faires, and concluſions beeing taken the 16 of December, 1600, he was called vnto the G Senat at ten of the clocke at night, where there did aſſiſt aboue 200 of the chiefe men of that State; where the ſame iniunction which had beene made vnto him by the Podeſta of Padoua, in the yeare 1598, was againe intimated vnto him by foure Deputies of the Seigniorie, all ſtanding vp bare headed, with great reſpect: where they pronounced this ſentence vnto him, and he ſtill couered, if we ſhall beleeue the Portugals.

Going forth of the Senat many preſented themſelues to accompanie him to his lodging, but he would not ſuffer them. The Portugals which were at Venice, D. Chriſtopher, D. Iohn de Caſtro, Diego Manuel, Roderigo Marques, Sebaſtian Figueyra, Franciſco Antonio, Sampayo and Chryſoſtome Monkes, with many others, whereof ſome had ſeene him often H in Portugal, and ſince in Barbarie after the defeat, proteſt that at the firſt ſight of him they were much amazed, for that they ſaw him differ ſo much in age and haire; but hauing well obſerued his countenance, his forehead, his eies, his noſe, his lippe of Auſtria, that is to ſay, greater than the ordinarie, the which moſt of the Princes of that houſe haue (from whence he was deſcended by his grandmother Catherine, ſiſter to the Emperour Charles the fift, and by his mother Ioane daughter to the ſaid Emperour) his ſtature, his ſpeech, his writing, all the viſible markes of his bodie, whereby they did know him infallibly; the left parts, as his arme, hand, leg, and foot, ſhorter than the right; his wart vpon the little toe of the right foot, which was almoſt like vnto a ſixt toe, the moles of his face and hands, his hurt vpon his right brow & head, the place where he wanted a tooth in his right jawe I beneath, the which Sebaſtian Nero his Chirurgion had once pulled out: all which markes, with many other, did rauiſh them with wonderful admiration, & forced them to confeſſe that he was their true & naturall king, who was miraculouſly preſerued for the reſtoring of Portugal, and for the benefit of Chriſtendome, and they liue yet in this expectation.

Sampayo a Doctor and profeſſour of Diuinitie at Tolouſa, and a Iacobin by profeſſion, to giue an indubitable beleeſe to this new manifeſtation, and to make the world thinke that it were Atheiſme not to beleeue it, writing to Paris, preſumed to deliuer theſe words: I aſſure you that Ieſus Chriſt is no more the ſonne of the true and eternall God, Preſumption of Doctor Sampayo. whom I call to witneſſe, than this is D. Sebaſtian our true and naturall king and Lord. A bold ſpeech, although it were an vndoubted truth, confeſt by all the world; the compari- K ſon is vnlawfull, the which I doubt cannot be made without blaſphemie, ſeeing there is no proportion betwixt the Creator and the Creature.

Beeing at libertie, the Portugals which were at Venice beſought him to ſpeake vnto them, to the end they might ſee if his ſpeech would giue them as much knowledge of his qualitie as his countenance had done, not being able to iudge of the inward man by the outward parts: wherupon he ſpake vnto them after the Portugal manner, proudly & royally, telling thē what he was, & what his life had bin ſince his ouerthrow in Afrike, which forced teares from him in ſpeaking, and from them in hearing. Being thus reſolued, they were much troubled how they ſhould ſaue him from the ambuſhes of the Spaniards, for they were aduertiſed that the Embaſſadour of Caſtille laid wait for him at euery paſſage. L
The duke of Sauoy & the Earle of Fuentes had the like charge. The Archbiſhop of Spalato offred to conduct him ſafely in his Caroche vnto the frontiers of Germany, but they would not truſt him, & yet they knew not what to reſolue: ſome would carry him to Lions, where they treated of a peace with the duke of Sauoy: whereas when they ſaw any troup of horſe a far off, they ran to meet them, with acclamations, hoping to ſee D. Sebaſti- an king of Portugal, & thereupon built goodly caſtles in Spaine. Others deſired he ſhould rather paſſe by Florence, to imbarke at Liuorne, & ſo get to Marſeilles. But as euery one in particular ſought to haue the honour to preſerue the king, their obſtinate diſagreement ſpoiled all. They made choice of the worſt, & followed the aduice of Sampayo, who was a turbulent & cholericke man: they attire him like a monke of the Order of S. Domi- M nike, & imbarke him in a gondole in the night, from whence he goes to Padoua: there he D. Sebaſtian ſtaied priſoner at Florence. changed his habit for a cloake and a rapier, & ſo went to Florence, whereas the duke cau-ſed him to be ſtayed, by the aduice of the Archbiſhop of Piſa, where he kept him vntil the 23 of Aprill.

The king of Spaine beeing aduertiſed that hee was at Florence, preſt the great duke

A to deliuer him vnto the Viceroy of Naples, and to his entreaties he addes threats. But why ſhould he deliuer him, ſeeing that the Venetians ſeeme rather by their ſentence to giue their priſoner means to ſeeke juſtice elſewhere, than to take knowledge of his cauſe? Shall he violate the law of nations, in deliuering him that truſted vnto his protection? Being thus in ſuſpence betwixt the feare of threats, and the reaſon of deniall, they repreſent vnto him a great armie, at the king of Spaines deuotion, the which affrights all Italie, and threatens his eſtates. He deſires rather to auoid the ſtorme, than to incenſe a mightie Prince, and to draw a warre vpon him, the end whereof muſt needs be ruinous. Whereupon he ſent him to Orbitello, where ſome, appointed by the Viceroy, receiued him, and conducted him ſafely to Naples. 1601

King of Spaine demands D. Sebaſtian.

He is deliuered to the Viceroy of Naples.

B Seeing himſelfe in the Caſtillans power, and that he had nothing free but theayre and his tongue, he poured forth all that might be ſpoken againſt one that may be taxed of treaſon, inhoſpitalitie, and treacherie, as the violence of choler thruſt him on to ſtrange imprecations againſt them that do ſo deliuer vp the poore, vnjuſtly afflicted, which commit themſelues to the ſafegard of another. Notwithſtanding theſe violent humors, he preſented himſelfe before the earle of Lemos, Viceroy of Naples, with as ſetled a countenance as he had done to the Senat of Venice, and the great Duke; yea (the Portugals ſay) with as great majeſtie, as if he had beene ſitting in his royall throne at Lisbone: For at his comming in, to a great hall, ſeeing the Viceroy bare headed, whether it were to reſpect the title of a king, which he did attribute vnto himſelfe, or by reaſon of the heat, Co-
C uer you Earle of Lemos, ſaid he, with ſuch a hardie grauitie, as it amazed the whole companie. The Viceroy demanded of him, Whence comes this authoritie to commaund me? To whom he anſwered, It is borne with me. You ſeeme not to know me, I know who you are: doe you not remember that the deceaſed king Philip mine vncle ſent you twice vnto me when I raigned in Portugall? Declaring vnto him euery particular ſo preciſely, as it bred ſome ſcruple in the minds of the hearers, and did much diſtemper the Viceroyes thoughts: who dying ſome moneths after, charged his ſonne and ſucceſſor to carrie himſelfe diſcreetly and moderatly to this priſoner, as indeed he had intreated him (as the Portugals ſay) with little rigour and much courteſie. But this new keeper, whether that he had a contrarie commaundement from his Soueraigne, or to inſinuate more into his fauor, or elſe fearing the corrup-
D tion of ſome Portugals, who followed him a farre off, to ſee his ſucceſſe, he reſtrained his priſoner, and doubled his gards, giuing him no more libertie than to many others, to goe out on Sundayes and feſtiuall daies to heare Maſſe in a chappell within the caſtle. Yet the Viceroy, who would not publikely ſeeme to conſent to the affliction of this vnfortunate man, diſpenſed with himſelfe to call him Impoſtor: who finding himſelfe much toucht with this reproch, fell to thoſe armes which his condition did furniſh him, which were as bitter words as might be giuen to any one that would not reſpect his qualitie. Theſe violent words did not free him from a hard priſon in the caſtle d'Ouo, in the which he did not find any thing (according to the report of the Portugals) but a cord, and a long knife, fit inſtruments for ſome deſperat malefactor, who would free himſelfe from ſome exempla-
E rie puniſhment. There he continued three daies without bread, wine, water, or bed. On the fourth the Auditor generall being followed by two Regiſters, came to viſit him, and finding him ſafe and well (for there was no great likelyhood that with ſuch cruell vſage he ſhould ſeeke to prolong his life, eſpecially hauing ſuch fit inſtruments to end his miſeries, and to free himſelfe from a more ſenſible ignominie before men) he ſaid vnto him, That if he did not forbeare to ſay and maintaine himſelfe to be D. Sebaſtian king of Portugall, they had not any thing to ſuſtaine his hunger nor thirſt, nor to giue him reſt. Doe what you pleaſe, ſaid the priſoner, for I am D. Sebaſtian, the true king of Portugall, and no other. God forbid that I ſhould fall into ſo great a miſchiefe, and ſo contrarie to my ſoules
F health, that for feare of men I ſhould denie the truth, and confeſſe that which is not. I am that D. Sebaſtian king of Portugall, who in the yeare 1578 paſt into Africke againſt the Infidels: he who to augment the number and power of Chriſtians, put his life in hazard: that vnfortunat man who for his ſinnes loſt a battell, which was the cauſe of ſo great alterations in Chriſtendome. This is the very truth, and I can ſay no other.

D. Sebaſtian in the caſtle d'Ouo.

The

1601 The Auditor and the Regiſters departed with this anſwere: from which time they G gaue him bread and water for his diet; but ſome dayes after he had fiue crownes a moneth giuen him, and a man to ſerue him, without any further proceeding in his cauſe, vntill the ſeuenteenth of Aprill 1602. Vpon which day the Viceroy ſent to know if he perſiſted in his firſt depoſition, and that he ſhould be now well aduiſed to anſwere pertinently. This is not (ſaid he) the right courſe they ſhould take to examine and judge my proceſſe: preſent me vnto the Portugals, who haue bred me, knowne me, and ſerued me; vpon whoſe ſaying and teſtimonie the whole proſe and verification of my cauſe doth depend. If I ſhould liue a thouſand yeares, yea more, I would neuer anſwere otherwiſe. If you be reſolued to put me to death without any other proſe, I take God for my onely judge, who knowes the truth of my cauſe. I am H D. Sebaſtian the true king of Portugall: you may now deale with me as you haue heretofore pretended. After which he diſpoſed himſelfe to die, made a generall confeſſion, and receiued the Sacrament, ſtill maintaining, that he was as he had ſaid.

Whileſt that he attended the houre of his death, they ſent againe vnto him to make his laſt anſwere; that is to ſay, he ſhould ſing a new ſong, and recant the former: but he made the ſame anſwere: And vpon this laſt anſwere he was at the inſtance of the Caſtillans exorciſed by the Biſhop of Rhegium, as a Magitian, for that he had anſwe-red very pertinently to all they had demaunded of him. During which action hee ſhewed vnto the Biſhop with a cheerefull countenance a Crucifix, which he carried at I his breaſt: Behold (ſaid he) the Image of the Maſter in whom I truſt, and for whom I would die. Wherewith the Biſhop went away, confounded with his conjurations, as ſome report, who ſay they were then preſent. After which he was ſet vpon an Aſſe, the laſt D. Sebaſtian led ignominiouſly through the ſtreets. day of Aprill, and carried publikely through the ſtreets, hauing three trumpets going before him, and proclayming his ſentence, by the which he was condemned to be led ignominiouſly through the ſtreets of Naples, and then put into the galleyes, for that he had called himſelfe D. Sebaſtian king of Portugall, being but a Calabrois. At this crie when he pronounced this word King, he anſwered with a loud voice, So am I; and when he added, being but a Calabrois, he ſaid, That is falſe. Neither did any of the officers or people hinder him, or once moue: Euerie man heard him with admiration K crying at the corners of the ſtreets: I am in my enemies hands, let them doe with my bodie what they pleaſe, I recommend my ſoule vnto God, who hath created it, and knowes the truth, that I am as I ſay.

He is put into a Galley. Hauing thus led him through the citie, they put him into the royall Galley, where they attired him like a ſlaue, and cut off the haire both of his head and beard, which ſome gathered vp, either through reuerence or ſuperſtition, as a matter of great eſteeme, and then they faſtened him to the chaine, yet aduiſing them that they ſhould not force him to rowe.

The galleyes paſſing from Naples to Barcelona, arriued in Auguſt 1602, at the port of S. Lucar of Barameda, whereas the Duke of Medina Sydonia and his wife L
His diſcourſe with the Duke of Medina Sidonia and the Ducheſſe. were deſirous to ſee him: who hauing deuiſed long with him, he demaunded of the Duke if he had the ſword which he had ginen him, when he imbarked to goe into Barbarie. The Duke anſwered, It is true Don Sebaſtian king of Portugall preſented me with a ſword, which I keepe among others. Seeing you haue it yet, ſaid the Gallerien, I pray you let me ſee it: for although it be foure and twentie yeares ſince I gaue it you, yet will I know it. Whereupon the Duke cauſed a dozen to be brought, but it being not among them, he ſent for others. The Gallerian ſee-ing it in the bringers hand: behold (ſaid he vnto the Duke) the ſword which I gaue you when as I vndertooke my voyage into Afrike. Then, turning vnto the Du- M cheſſe, who was Anna de Silua, daughter to the prince of Eboli; Couſin, ſaid he (after that he had told her what ſecrets had paſſed betwixt them when he tooke his leaue of her at Cadis) I remember that I gaue you a jewell, haue you it alſo? The Ducheſſe made the like anſwere vnto the Duke her husband, That

the

A the king D. Sebaſtian had giuen her a jewell: he then replyed, Shew it me; I ſhall know it well, and ſhall tell you of a ſecret which it may be you know not: then hauing choſen it out from among many, he ſaid vnto her, That to proue his ſaying true, ſhe ſhould cauſe the ſtone to be taken out, vnder which ſhe ſhould find his name and cypher grauen. There was a Negro in the Ducheſſe companie, whom he knew, ſaying, that ſhe had ſerued him for the waſhing of his linnen, when he raigned in Portugall. The Duke and Ducheſſe ſeeing theſe apparent things, and ſo conformable to truth, went away with heauie countenances, and as it were weeping for compaſſion to ſee this miſerable prince in ſo wretched an eſtate. Many old Portugals ſaw him, knew him, and did aduow him to be the true D. Sebaſtian, king of Portugall. Finally, the Portugals (if 1601

B wee may beleeue them) report ſo many particularities touching this man, as it would require a whole volume to relate them all: adding, that they that haue ſeene him, and knowne him, haue giuen this teſtimonie, that he is the ſame, or a deuill incarnate.

Predictions alledged by the Portugals in ſtaun of D. Sebaſtian.

But beſides theſe probabilities, which they take for truth, they arme themſelues with certaine predictions or prophecies, which they ſay muſt needs haue relation to the aduentures of this poore Gallerien, whom they maintaine with an obſtinate conſtancie to be their lawfull king. S. Iſodore, ſonne to Seuerian, the ſonne of Thierry, king of the Eaſt Gothes, and of Italie, did leaue in writing aboue a thouſand yeares ſince, That a hidden king, twice giuen by prayers and deuotions, ſhall come into Spaine vpon a

C horſe of wood, whom many ſeeing, ſhall not beleeue that it is he, &c. And for the vnderſtanding of this prophecie, which they attribute particularly vnto king D. Sebaſtian, they ſay, that he was twice giuen; firſt, by the interceſſion of the people of Portugall for his birth, when they ſaw his father die, leauing no other iſſue but what might be hoped for from a woman with child: the ſecond by the acknowledgement they haue made of him at Venice, after that he had wandered twentie yeares vnknowne throughout the world: That the woodden horſe is the galley vpon the which he came from Naples into Spaine.

Sampayo ſweares, that he found this other prophecie at S. Victors Librarie at Paris: That the king D. Sebaſtian ſhall goe out of Naples vpon a horſe of wood: that out of the Me-

D diterranean ſea he ſhall enter into the Ocean, and that his horſe ſhall ſtay at S. Lucar of Barameda. The which is accompliſhed, when as the galley paſſing from Naples to Barcelona, entred into the Ocean ſea.

This other was found in a Caſtillan Author, in his language: The vnknowne ſhall come, yea without doubt he ſhall come: he ſhall enter into the garden by the gate which is moſt on this ſide the wall: and that which ſeemes obſcure, ſhall be ſeene clearely and plainely. By this garden they vnderſtand the countrey which is on this ſide Mont Calpe vnto the riuer of Guadalquibir, which they call the garden of Spaine, for that it is pleaſant and fruitfull: the wall is Cadiz, the gate S. Lucar of Barameda.

That the labourers of Portugall did hold for a moſt auncient tradition, That a

E time will come, when as a King, whoſe name ſhall be as Beſtia, ſhall vaniſh out of ſight, and that after he and his realme haue ſuffered many great afflictions and miſeries, the ſame king, whom all the world held for dead, ſhall riſe againe, and recouer his throne with incredible proſperitie. Which they ſay muſt needs be applyed to their king D. Sebaſtian, for that the peaſants in Portugall, in ſtead of Sebaſtian, ſay Beſtiam.

And as they hold theſe predictions to be accompliſhed in the perſon of this priſoner, ſo it is not poſſible to root out this beleefe, That he is the true and naturall D. Sebaſtian, king of Portugall. Sampayo after he had proclaimed this miraculous aduenture ouer all Chriſtendome, and runne into a thouſand dangers for his ſake, he went a-

F gaine into Portugall with Frier Bonauenture, a Franciſcan: where publiſhing this opinion as a moſt certaine truth, they bred ſuch a mutinie among the people, as they were ready to make a generall reuolt, if they had found any aſſiſtance with ſtrangers: but being in the end diſcouered at S. Lucar, they were degraded of their Orders, and hanged at Lisbone, with horrible torments; the which notwithſtanding could not ſtop their mouthes, Sampayo and Bonauenture hung for this Gallerien.

but

1601 but they tooke earth, heauen, and all heauenly creatures, yea and God himſelfe, to G whom the moſt hidden ſecrets are knowne, to witneſſe of their innocencies and words, the which they maintained vnto the laſt gaſpe to be as true as the Goſpel; ſo as through compaſſion of their cruell tortures, and the firme beleefe which they had ſetled in the hearts of their countrimen, they drew many thouſands into danger. Some retired themſelues vnto their friends, to eſcape the ſearch which was made for the adherents of this noueltie: ſome got them away diſguiſed, and eſcaped into diuers prouinces here and there. Some comming to Paris preſented a petition vnto the king in the name of the Portugals oppreſſed by the tyrannie of the Caſtillan, beſeeching his Maieſtie to ſuccour them onely with two thouſand men, commaunded by a Prince, or ſome great man of Fraunce, ſuch as he ſhould pleaſe to name, and ſome ſtore of armes to diſperſe among H the people at their arriuall, beeing aſſured (ſaid they) of money for their entertainment, and other munition of warre both by ſea and land, which the Queene of England and the Eſtates ſhould furniſh them, to reſtore their lawfull king, and free them from the command of ſtrangers. Moreouer, they gaue hope, in caſe they might recouer their king D.
Sebaſtian, vniuſtly detained priſoner, whenas they ſhould cauſe him to be duely acknowledged, and reſtore vnto him his inheritance, to marrie the duke of Vendoſme with the daughter of D. Catherina ducheſſe of Bragance, who had right to the ſucceſſion of the realme of Portugal, and to crowne him king of Portugal, if it ſhould ſo pleaſe the moſt Chriſtian king his naturall father. But God hath not bleſt the voyages made into Portugal, with a deſigne to drawe it from the Spaniard, who hath enioyed it quietly for many yeares; and a wiſe man will not prouoke the wrath of a mightie prince, by drawing I him into warre, the end whereof muſt needs be doubtfull and ruinous.

The Spaniard conſidering the attempts of the Portugals, who would willingly trouble heauen, earth, yea and hell it ſelfe, to free themſelues from his ſubiection, hee cauſed their pretended king to be taken out of the royall galley of Naples, and to be brought to Seuile in the galley of D. Pedro de Toledo the Generall, there to be more ſafely kept. But afterwards, to take all knowledge from the world, hee cauſed him to be ſhut vp in the ca-Gallerien put in the Caſtle of S. Lucar. ſtle of S. Lucar. The Portugals hope that hee ſhall come forth in deſpight of all his enemies, and fulfill all the prophecies that are made of him, and recouer poſſeſſion of his realmes. It is in the power of the king of Spaine, but it is not likely that hee will ſeeke K to verifie the qualitie of this perſon by any other meanes: for if hee cauſeth him to bee declared an impoſtor, and to be puniſhed, the Portugals who had procured him to main-Policie of the Counſel of Spaine. taine himſelfe to be their king, might hereafter ſuborne another to the ſame end; whereas ſo long as they ſhall beleeue this man is aliue, they will not attempt any thing in fa-uour of another, and this man beeing detained perpetually in priſon, or in the galleys, ſhall daily feele the paines of death, without dying. And if he were duely proued to be ſuch as he qualifies himſelfe, reaſon and equitie would require that he ſhould bee reſtored to the iuſt and lawfull poſſeſſion of his Eſtates, which is the faireſt roſe of the Spaniards girland, and the rareſt pearle of his cabinet.

Whatſoeuer hee bee, Donatus and Delphinus Procurators of Saint Marc at Ve- L nice, beeing ſent to congratulate the French kings victories, and his mariage, they were demanded by the Prince of Conde, what iudgement the ſeigniorie of Venice made of him who called himſelfe king of Portugall; to whom they made no other anſwer, but that the State had done what it might in his cauſe, and that he had beene ill counſelled and conducted.

Spaniards ſent into Ireland. This yeare the Queene of England was much troubled with her rebels in Ireland, by reaſon of the aide and ſupport they receiued from Spaine: the king ſending D. Iohn d'Aguilar vnto them, with aboue two thouſand old ſouldiers in ſixe ſhips: they came to Caſtel-hauen, Baltemoore, and Beer-hauen, all three important places, here M they landed their men, with an intent to fortifie them, beeing then about the end of September. Sir Richard Leuiſon, who was Admiral of ſome of the Queens ſhips, lying then in the hauen of Kinſale, & hearing of the Spaniards comming into the aboue named ports, he drew forth his ſhips both againſt wind and weather, & went & fought with the Spaniards within Caſtel-hauen, where he did ſo batter them, as he made 5 of their 6 ſhippes vn-ſeruiceable,

A ſeruiceable, moſt of their men were landed before he came, by reaſon of the weather, who played dangerouſly vpon him with their ordnance from the land, whereof they were wel furniſhed with great ſtore of munition. Preſently after, D. John d'Aguilar put himſelfe into Kinſale with moſt of his Spaniards, where he fortified himſelfe: whither in October after, the Lord Montioy, Lord Deputie of Ireland, and Generall of her Maieſties forces in that kingdome, came with an armie to beſiege him; the which continued long, in a very vnſeaſonable time, and was in ſhew very dangerous for the Engliſh: for they within the towne were for the moſt part old ſouldiers, well armed, and in no want, as was ſuppoſed, and without the rebels were all in armes, and had drawne their forces together, which were the greateſt that euer had bin ſeene together in Ireland, being ſixe thouſand
B foot (whereof there were ſixe companies of the new arriued Spaniards) and fiue hundred horſe, and began to march towards Kinſale, with an aſſured hope to releeue the towne, raiſe the ſiege, and defeat the Engliſh, if they of the towne did ſallie forth when as Tyrone and Odonell ſhould giue charge vnto the campe: they had great reaſon to hope for good ſucceſſe, for the Engliſh were ſcarce ſo many in number, all in a manner tyred with the miſeries of a long winters ſiege, their horſes weake and decaied, and likely to want victuals. Notwithſtanding, continuing their approaches ſtill towards the towne, as if they regarded not the rebels, on the twentieth of December at night, the Lord Deputie had intelligence that Tyrone and the rebels would campe the next night within a mile and a halfe of them, with all their forces; and ſo on the 21 day at night he ſhewed himſelfe, with
C moſt of his horſe and foot, vpon the toppe of a hill, within a mile of the Engliſh campe. I muſt craue pardon if I make a relation of this battell, and the ouerthrowe of the rebels armie in this hiſtorie of Spaine, both for that they were then releiued by the king of Spaine, with money, men, and munition, and ſupported in their rebellion; and alſo for that the yeelding vp of Kinſale by the Spaniards, depended wholly vpon this action.

Tyrone ſhewing himſelfe (as I ſaid before) and ſeeing two regiments of foot, with ſome horſe, drawne out of the campe, and marching towards him, he retired to the other ſide of the hill, where he camped that night, beeing fortified both with woods and water. One the three and twentieth day the Lord Deputie was aduertiſed, and had alſo inter-
D cepted letters, written from D. John d'Aguilar Generall of the Spaniards, and commaunder within the towne, by which he did preſſe and importune Tyrone to make an attempt vpon the Engliſh campe intimating his wants, and likelihood to be ſoone forced, putting the rebels in mind of their faithfull promiſes to ſuccour him, and of the eaſineſſe of the enterpriſe, and vndoubted ſucceſſe, aſſuring them that the Engliſh were much decayed in numbers, and that thoſe which remained were much weakened with that long winters ſiege; ſo as it was not poſſible they ſhould be able to maintaine ſo much ground as they had taken when their ſtrength was full: if they on the one ſide, and he on the other, charged them at one inſtant, which he for his part promiſed to doe whenſoeuer they ſhould giue the attempt. It ſeemeth that vpon this aduice they reſolued to put it in execution that night, or the next following. In the meane time they gaue the Engliſh continuall
E alarmes, and made ſallies from the towne, keeping them ſtill in action, that they might be the leſſe able to make reſiſtance when they were charged. But the Lord Deputie prouided for all inconueniences, making forts, barricadoes, and trenches, and fortifying all the approaches to the towne, keeping good gards, and his armie ready vpon all occaſions. On the 23 day at night hee was aſſured that the next day the rebels would charge his campe, whereupon he commanded the whole armie to be in readineſſe.

Tyrone had an intent early in the morning to put all his Spaniards into the towne, with eight hundred of his beſt Iriſh, vnder Tyrrell; but ſeeing at the breake of day ſome of the Engliſh troupes aduance, hee made a ſtand, and then retired to the body of F their armie. The Lord Deputy giuing the charge of the camp to Sir George Carew then L. Preſident of Munſter, to attend the Spaniards within the towne, hee drewe forth part of his forces, beeing about foure hundred horſe, and a thouſand and two hundred foot, and hearing that the enemie retired diſorderly, hee aduanced towards them, who ſtill retired with feare. In the end, (omitting euery particular circumſtance touching the marſhalling of the Engliſh armie, to them that write that hiſtorie) they

1601

Kinſale beſieged vvas in the Spaniards in it.

Reaſon why Ivas s incerted into the hiſtory.

Letters from D. Iohn de Aguilar to the L. Deputie.

Rebels and Spaniards defeated in Ireland.

1601 they ouertooke the rebells, charged them, and put them to rout. The Spaniards (being G abandoned by the Iriſh) were almoſt all ſlaine, D. Alonſo d'Ocampo their colonell, with three Captaines, ſixe Alferez, and fortie ſouldiers were taken priſoners. There were found (of Iriſh onely) twelue hundred bodies dead vpon the place, and about twelue hundred hurt, whereof many died that night. The rebels loſt two thouſand armes which were brought forth, all their munition, their drummes, nine enſignes, whereof ſixe were Spaniſh: the Engliſh had but one man ſlaine, and not aboue tenne hurt. Thus they got a miraculous victorie, to the great honor of the Lord Deputie, and of all that commanded vnder him.

After this glorious victorie, the Lord Deputie poſted that preſent day vnto the camp, leſt the Spaniard ſhould haue made ſome ſally in his abſence, but they had not attempted any thing; the next day he commaunded the approaches vnto the towne ſhould be aduaunced nearer: But after fiue or ſixe daies worke, D. John d'Aquilar, who commanded the forces within the towne, offered to parle, and ſent a drumme with a letter ſealed vp to the Lord Deputie, by the which he demaunded that ſome men of qualitie and ſufficiencie might be ſent into the towne from his Lordſhip, to conferre with him, whom hee would acquaint with ſuch conditions as hee then ſtood vpon: whereunto the Lord Deputie condeſcended, imploying ſir William Godolphin in that buſines; the which was managed after this maner, according to the originall. H

D. Iohn d'Aquilars ſpeech.

D. John told ſir William, that hauing found the Lord Deputie (whom hee termed « Viceroy) although a furious and powerfull, yet an honourable enemie, and the Iriſh not I « onely weake and barbarous, but (as he feared) treacherous friends, he was ſo farre in his « affections reconciled to the one, and diſtaſted with the other, as it did inuite him to make « an ouerture of ſuch a compoſition as might be ſafe and profitable for the ſtate of Eng« land with leaſt preiudice to the Crowne of Spaine, by deliuering into the Viceroyes po« wer the towne of Kinſale, with all other places in Ireland held by the Spaniſh, ſo as they « might depart vpon honourable termes, fit for ſuch men of warre, as are not inforced by « neceſſitie, to receiue conditions, but willingly induced vpon iuſt reſpects, to diſingage « themſelues, and to leaue a people, by whom their king and maſter had bin ſo notoriou-« ſly abuſed, if not betrayed. That if the Viceroy liked to entertaine further parley touch« ing this point, he would firſt be pleaſed to vnderſtand them rightly, and to make his Pro- K « poſitions ſuch as might be ſutable to men throughly reſolued, rather to bury themſelues « aliue, and to indure a thouſand deaths, than to giue way to one article, that ſhould taſt « of baſeneſſe or diſhonor, being ſo confident of their preſent ſtrength, and the royall ſuc« cors of Spaine, as they ſhould make no doubt of yielding a good accompt of themſelues, « and of their intereſt in this kingdome, but that a juſt diſdaine and ſplene conceiued a-« gainſt the nation, diſſuaded them from beeing farther ingaged for it, than of neceſſitie « they muſt.

Sir William Godolphin hauing charge from the Lord Deputie, only to receiue D. Johns propoſitions and demaunds, hauing made this relation to his Lordſhip, and the Councell, he was ſent backe by them with this anſwer following. L

Anſwer from the Lord Deputie to D. Iohn.

That although the Lord Deputie hauing lately defeated their ſuccours, did ſo well « vnderſtand his owne ſtrength and their weakeneſſe, as it made him nothing doubt of for« cing them within a ſhort time, whom hee knew to be preſt with vnreſiſtable difficulties, « how much ſoeuer they laboured to couer and conceale them: yet knowing that her ſa-« cred Maieſtie out of her gratious and mercifull diſpoſition, would think the glorie of her « victorie blemiſhed, by a voluntary effuſion and obſtinate expence of bloud, was content « to entertaine this offer of agreement, ſo as it might be concluded vnder ſuch honoura« ble Articles for her Highneſſe, as the aduantage ſhe had againſt them gaue reaſon to demaund. The which were the ſame that are ſet downe in the Articles of Agreement fol- M lowing, ſigned by the Lord Deputie, D. John and others: ſauing that there was an Article more in them, for the leauing of his treaſure, munition, ordnaunce, and the Queens naturall ſubiects to her diſpoſition; all which points he did peremptorily refuſe: Proteſt« ing that both he and all his would rather indure the laſt of miſeries, than be found guilty « of ſo foule a treaſon againſt the honor of his prince, and the reputation of his profeſsion,

although

A although hee ſhould find himſelfe vnable to ſubſiſt, much more now when as hee might not onely hope to ſuſtaine the burthen of the warre for a time, but with patience and conſtancy in the end ouercome it. That hee tooke it ſo ill to be miſunderſtood in hauing articles of that nature propounded vnto him, as were they but once againe remembred in the capitulation, the Viceroy ſhould from thenceforth vſe the aduantage of his ſword, and not the benefit of his former offer: adding, that the Viceroy might rather thinke to haue made a good and profitable purchaſe for the realme of England, if with the expence of two hundred thouſand ducats hee had procured D. Iohn to quit his intereſt and footing but in Baltemore alone, ſpeaking nothing of Kinſale, Caſtel-hauen, & 1601
B Beerhauen: for ſaid he, ſuppoſe that all wee with the reſt of our places here had periſhed, yet would that Peninſula, being ſtrong of its owne nature, bettered by our art and induſtrie, (furniſhed as it is with victuals, munition, and good ſtore of ordnance) preſerue vnto the king of Spaine, a ſafe and commodious Port for the arriuall of his fleet, and bee able to maintaine it ſelfe againſt a Land armie of tenne thouſand, vntill Spaine (being ſo deepely ingaged) did in honour releeue them: which would drawe on a more powerfull inuaſion than the firſt, being vndertaken vpon falſe groundes, at the inſtance of a baſe and barbarous people, who in diſcouering their weakeneſſe and want of power, haue armed the king my maſter to relie vpon his owne ſtrength, being bound in honour to relieue his people which are ingaged, and to cancel the memorie of our former misfor-
C tunes. But this is ſpoken, ſaid he, in caſe the Viceroy be able to force this town, as I aſſure my ſelfe hee cannot, hauing vpon mine honour, within theſe walles at this inſtant, aboue two thouſand fighting men, which are ſtrong and able, beſides which ſome hauing been ſicke and hurt recouer daily; the greateſt part of theſe conſiſting of old Soldiers, which fal not but by the ſword, and thoſe that were new, being now both trained to their arms, and acquainted with the clymate, are more able to endure than at the firſt: our means as good as they haue beene any time theſe two moneths, ſuch as Spaniards can wel indure, and able to ſuffice vs three moneths more: wee lodge in good warme houſes, haue ſtore of munition, and (which is beſt of all) ſtand well aſſured, that our ſuccour will be here ſhortly. To bee plaine, wee preſerue our men, and reſerue our ſtrength the beſt we D may, hoping to front you in a breach, which (if our hearts faile vs not) wee haue hands and breſts enow to ſtop, againſt treble your forces: but I wil giue the Viceroy this right, that his men are paſſing good, yet ſpent and tyred with the miſeries of a Winter ſeege, which hee hath obſtinately maintained beyond my expectation, but with ſuch caution, and vpon ſo good gard, as hauing nicely watched all aduantages, I could neuer faſten a falley yet vpon him, but with loſſe to my ſelfe: wherein I muſt confeſſe my hopes were deceiued, that grounding vpon ſome error in his approaches, I promiſed vnto my ſelfe the defeat of at leaſt a thouſand men at one blow. But when wee meet vpon a breach, I am confident vpon good reaſons, to lay fiue hundred of your beſt men on the ground, and reſt hopefull that the loſſe of thoſe will make a great hole in an army, which hath al-E ready ſuffered ſo much extremity.

But to conclude our buſineſſe: the king my maſter ſent me to aſſiſt the Condees, Oneale and Odonnel, preſuming on their promiſe, that I ſhould within few daies after the arriuall of our forces haue ioyned with them: I expected them long in vaine, ſuſtained the Viceroys armie, ſaw them drawne to the greateſt head they could poſſibly make, lodged within two miles of Kinſale, fortified with certaine companies of Spaniards, euerie houre promiſing to releeue vs, and being ioyned together to force your campe: At laſt wee ſaw them broken with a handful of men, and diſperſed into diuers parts of the world, Odonnel into Spain, Oneale into the fartheſt parts of the North: ſo as now I finde no ſuch Condees in rerum natura, as I came to ioine with: and therefore haue mooued this accord
F the rather to diſingage the king my maſter from aſſiſting a people ſo vnable in thēſelues, as the whole burthen of the warre muſt lie vpon him, and ſo prefidious, as perhaps they might be drawne in the end to betray him.

Vpon relation made, by Sir William Godolphin, to the Lord deputy & Councel, of theſe offers made by D. Iohn, it was thoght good, for many important reaſon to proceed roundly to an accord, there being nothing propounded by him that admitted any exception,

1601 but that he demanded to carrie away his ordnance, munition & treaſure, which did not ſo much import, as it ſhould breake off the treatie which concerned the common good and ſafety of the kingdom: wherupon a compoſition was made vpon theſe articles following. G

Articles of the accord at Kinſale.

1 That ſaid D. Iohn d' Aguilar ſhall quit the places which he holds in this kingdome, as well the towne of Kinſale, as thoſe which are held by the Spaniards, or other ſouldiers vnder his command in Caſtell-hauen, Baltemore, and in the Caſtell of Beerhauen, or other places, to the Lord deputie, or to whome he ſhall appoint, giuing him ſafe tranſportation & ſufficient ſhipping and victuals for his ſaid Souldiers, with the which the ſaid D. Iohn may paſſe with them into Spaine, if he may, at one time, if not at two ſhippings.

2 That the Souldiers which are at this preſent vnder the command of the ſaid D. Iohn in this kingdome, ſhall not beare armes againſt the Queenes Maieſty of England, whenſoeuer ſupplies ſhall come from Spaine, vntill the ſaid Souldiers be vnſhipped in ſome of the Ports of Spaine, being ſent away as ſoone as may be by the Lord Deputy, as hee promiſeth vpon his faith and honour. H

3 For the accompliſhment whereof, the Lord deputy offereth to giue free paſport to the ſaid D. Iohn and his army, as well Spaniards as other nations whatſoeuer, that are vnder his command, and that he may depart with his armes, munition, money, enſignes diſplaied, artillerie, and any other prouiſions for warre, or other things, both that which is in Caſtel-hauen, Kinſale, and other places.

4 That they ſhall haue ſhips and victuals ſufficient for their money, after ſuch rates as they vſe here to pay. That all the Souldiers and the ſaid things may be ſhipt if it bee poſſible at one time, if not at two, and that to bee within the time aboue mentioned. I

5 That if by contrarie winds, or any other accidents, there ſhall come into any of the ports of Ireland or England, any of thoſe ſhips wherein the ſaid Soldiers ſhall paſſe, they ſhall bee intreated as friends, and may ride ſafely in the harbour, & be victualled for their mony, & ſhal moreouer haue ſuch things as ſhalbe needful to furniſh thē for their voiage.

6 That during the time they ſhall ſtay for ſhipping, victuals ſhall be giuen to D. Iohns people, at reaſonable rates.

7 That there ſhall be ceſſation of armes of either ſide, & ſecurity giuen that no wrong be offered to any one. K

8 That the ſhips wherein the ſaid Souldiers ſhall be tranſported for Spaine, may paſſe ſafely by any of the queenes Maieſties ſhips, of England, and ſo ſhal the ſaid Queenes and her ſubiects by thoſe that ſhal go from hence: and the ſaid ſhips being ariued in Spaine, ſhall return as ſoone as they haue vnſhipt their men without any impediment giuen thē by his Maieſtie, or any other perſon in his name, but rather they ſhall ſhew them fauour, and help them if they need any thing: and for ſecuritie thereof they ſhall deliuer into the Lord deputies hands three Captaines, ſuch as he ſhall choſe.

9 For aſſurance of the performance of theſe articles D. Iohn promiſeth that hee will confirme and ſweare to accompliſh this agreement, whereunto ſome of the captaines vnder his charge ſhall in like maner ſweare. L

10 That the ſaid D. Iohn ſhall remain within the realme of Ireland, where the Lord deputy ſhal appoint, vntill the laſt ſhipping, vpon his Lordſhips word, & if it happen that his ſoldiers be ſhipt all at once, the ſaid D. Iohn may go in the ſame fleet without any let, but rather the Lord deputy ſhall giue him a good ſhip wherin he may paſſe, and if his men go in two ſhippings, then he ſhall go in the laſt.

11 And in like maner the ſaid Lord deputy ſhal confirm & ſweare the ſame, & giue his word in the Q. Maieſties behalf & his own to keep & accompliſh this accord, & that the chiefe officers of the camp, with the councel of ſtate, & ſome nobles ſhold ſweare the like.

Theſe were the articles of the accord made before Kinſale, for the ſending the Spaniards out of Irelād, & freeing this kingdō from an imminent danger. They were ſigned & ſworn accordingly on both parts the 2 of Ianuary, and the towne yeelded vp on the ninth. M

Anſwer made by the French king to the embaſſador of Spaine.

At ſuch time as the duke of Birons treaſons were diſcouered in France, the king of Spain had an army ready to paſſe at Pont de Greſin, vpon the frontiers of Bourgundy vnder color of paſſing into Flanders: but the paſſages being kept by the marſhal Lauerdin, Taxis embaſſador for Spain demāded paſſage of the king, beſeeching him to think that the king his

A his maſter had not ſought to draw the duke of Biron from his obedience. To whome the king anſwered, you wold haue me belieue that the king your maſter was not acquainted with the practiſes which the marſhal of Biron had with the Cont Fuentes, & I tel you that it is impoſſible his treaſure ſhold haue bin ſo freely diſtributed, without the conſent of his counſel: I haue no reaſon to leaue my frontiers diſarmed vntill that all the marſhals conſpiracy be diſcouered by his proceſſe. In the mean time I do not mean to hinder the commerce according to the treaty. 1602

The Cont of Fuentes not able to diſſemble his diſcontent, to ſee matters fal out ſo contrary to his deſignes, he diſchargeth his rage vpon the marqueſſe of Final, ſometimes pre- Earle of Fuentes takes the Marqueſate of Finall.

B tending a donation of the ſaid Marquiſate to the king of Spaine, when as the Marqueſſe was verie ſicke: and ſometimes that he ſhould haue a principality in the realm of Naples in exchange, but he firſt ſeaſed vpon the place, and then publiſhed his pretenſions: Hee ſent D. Diego Pimentel his nephue, & D. Sancho d' Luna with ſome troups of ſoldiers, who ſurpriſed Final, hauing corrupted the Lãdsknits which were there in garriſon with a promiſe of 16 moneths pay, aſſuring himſelfe both of the countrie and Port by a garriſon of 200 Spaniards vnder the commãd of D. Pedro de Toledo. Milesimo a place nere vnto it was by the ſame right purchaſed by the king of Spain. The Marques of Final, who is vaſſall to the emperor, made his cõplaints vnto the pope, & vnto his imperial maieſty, but they had no other effect, but that he had a penſion giuẽ him during his life, & ſo was forced to yeeld

C vnto the ſtranger. By this priſe the Genetiois did hereafter reap no profit by their Commerce with Spain, but what pleaſed the gonernor of Final. Doubtleſſe that ſeruant loues his maſters greatnes with paſſion, which doth rauiſh another mans inheritance without any lawfull cauſe, or precedent wrong, neither reſpecting reaſon nor equitie, nor conſidering that God is offended with ſuch violences. But king Philip did not limit and bound his hopes with ſo ſmall a purchaſe. That great leuie which was made at Naples, in Sicile, in the dutchie of Milan, and in many eſtates of Italy, witneſſed that his deſignes flue a higher pitch. It was thoght they wold either renew the enterpriſe of Alger, or make head againſt Cigala, who they ſaid was comming ont of Conſtantinople with a fleet of 100 ſaile. As the deſigne was ſecret, ſo was it not known who ſhould be generall. Andrew Doria Armie of Spaniards at Sea.

D had demanded leaue to retire himſelfe; he had been vnfortunat the yeare before, & therefore he thought the Spaniards wold not willingly imploy him againe. The duke of Sauoy ſeemed willing to accept of this charge, if it were offered; but it was giuen to D. Iohn de Cordoua, who ſhal be no more fortunate in his enterpriſes than Doria. The chief deſigns of this army were rather againſt the Chriſtians than the Turks & Moors, althogh it were giuen out that the king of Fez had intelligences vpon Alger, & that he had promiſed the K. of Spain to make him maſter therof: yet this army did not forſake the ſight of Europe, & ſome thoght it lay houering to ſee what wold become of the treaſons which were practiſed in France. But want of money & ſome other diſcommodities made them to giue ouer al attempts for this yere againſt the Turks. Theſe were the opinions of the king of Spains

E deſigns, & withall they added that d' Albigny was gone to Milan to the earle of Fuentes, that the marques of Aix had paſt into Spaine, and that the duke of Sauoy was ready to in- Duke of Sauoie reſolues to ſend his ſonnes into Spaine.

gage himſelf wholy to the wil of the coũcel of Spain, to whom he did conſign his 3 Sons; That he had made them knights of his order, to prepare thẽ for the voyage, & had ſent an extraordinary embaſſador to Rome to beſeech the Pope to ſend them his bleſſing.

There were 8 great gallies made ready this yere at Scuile, the which were appointed to be ſent into Flanders to the Archduke, vnder the command of Fredcric Spinola, to annoy Gallies ſent out of Spain into the Low countries.

the coaſt of England, Holland & Zeland. There were 400 men in either of theſe gallies, beſides the ſlaues, and 800 ſoldiers more which they tooke in paſſing by Lisbon. Two of theſe gallies called the Trinity & the Occaſion were ſunk by ſir Rich. Leuiſon vpõ the coaſt

F of Portugal, the reſt a while after went on their courſe towards the low-countries. Comming betwixt England & France, they were firſt diſcouered & purſued by ſir Robert Manſel, being then admiral of the queens maieſties ſhips in thoſe ſeas, who lay there of purpoſe to attend them, he hauing them in chaſe, the States ſhips which lay in the downs vpon his aduertiſement came in, & in the end the ſaid gallies were defeated, ſome were ſunk and the reſt made vnſeruiceable. This great ſeruice was diuerſly reported according to the humors & paſſions of men. The Hollanders did challenge all the honor of this action, & did pub-

1602 liſh it in print in diuers languages. Sir Rob. Manſel finding the ſtate intereſſed, & his repu- G tation ſomewhat blemiſhed by their pamphlets, made a true relation of the whole ſeruice, the which he preſented vnto the lord admirall, vnder whoſe cõmand he was, & publiſhed it to the view of the world, with an offer to maintaine it by any courſe fit for a gentleman that profeſſed arms. And for that the Statesmen haue left their aſſertiõs recorded in their hiſtory, & haue made the French to write it after the ſame maner, I haue thought good for the better ſatisfaction of poſterity, to inſert it in this hiſtory, in the ſame words and phraſe as hee himſelfe hath ſet it down, ſpeaking in his own perſon as followeth.

On the 23 day of September, being in the Hope, & hauing in my company, the Aduan- tage only of the Q. ſhips, which captain Ionas cõmanded, & two other Dutchmen of war I H rid more thẽ half chanell ouer, towards the coaſt of Frãce, vpon a northweſt & ſoutheaſt line, my ſelf being nereſt that coaſt, captain Ionas next vnto me, & the Dutch men of war a ſea-boord, & to the Weſtward of him. The ſmal force at that time preſent & with me re- maining, thus diſpoſed for the intercepting of the gallies, hauing diſmiſt the Dutch men of war that ſerued vnder me, vpõ their own intreaty to reuictual & trim: & hauing imploy- ed the reſt of the Q. ſhips vpon eſpecial ſeruices, I deſcried from my top maſt heads, 6 low ſailes, which ſome made for gallies, others affirmed thẽ to be ſmal barks that had ſtrooken their top-ſailes, being bound from Diep towards the Downs. To which opinion (though I inclined moſt) yet cauſed I the maſter to waie and to ſtand with them, that I might learne ſome news of the gallies, which by your Lordſhips aduertiſement ſent me, I knew had ei- I ther paſt me that night, or were nere at hand, vnleſſe the ſea had ſwallowed them vp in the ſtormes which had raged 3 daies before. Hauing ſet my ſelfe vnder ſaile, the weather waxt thick, which cauſed me to lask ſome two points frõ the wind, towards the Engliſh coaſt, leaſt the continuance of that dark weather might giue them power to runne out ahead of me. About 11 of the clock the weather cleared, when I diſcoured them plainely to be the Spaniſh gallies ſo long time expected; at which time with the reſt, I plied to receiue them by croſſing their forefoot as they ſtood alongſt the Chanell: which they en- deuoured, till they perceiued that by the continuance of that courſe, they could not eſcape the power of my Ordnance.

All this time theſe two Fly-boats were betwixt them and me, and as the ſlaues report K that ſwamme aſhoare at Douer, they determined with three gallies to haue boorded each of thoſe ſhips, and would haue executed that reſolution, but for the feare of her Maieſties great Gallion (as they tearmed the Hope) whoſe force that they ſhunned in that kind (conſidering the diſaduantage that twice ſixe of the beſt gallies that euer I ſaw, hath by fighting againſt one ſhip of her force) I doe as much commend, as otherwiſe I doe deteſt their ſhamefull working, in that, full of cowardlineſſe and weak- nes, they rowed backe to the Weſtward, and ſpent the day by running away, in hope that the darkeneſſe of the night would giue them liberty ſufficient to ſhun the onely ſhip they feared, or that was indeed in the ſea at that time, to giue them cauſe of feare, I meane betwixt them & Dunkerk or Newport. This error only of theirs bred their confuſion, as L you may perceiue by the ſequel. For they no ſooner began that courſe of rowing backe a- gain; but I inſtantly made ſignes for Captaine Ionas in the Aduantage of the Queenes, to come vnto me whom I preſently directed to repaire to Calais road, & thence to ſend the alarm vnto the States army prepared before Sluce: and to aduiſe ſuch men of warre as kept on the coaſt of Flanders, vpon any other occaſion, to ſtand off to the ſea, to meet with the gallies in the night, which ſhold be chaſed by me with my lights in my top-maſt heads & a continual diſcharging of my ordnance. Captain Ionas hauing ſhap't his courſe accor- ding to my directions, I gaue order for hoyſing & trimming of my ſailes by the wind, to keep ſight of the gallies: the two Fly-boats being ſtil aweather of me, did the like. Which chaſe we held til ſunne-ſetting, obſeruing this courſe following all the day. They being M a weather of me, kept their continuall boords, that the gallies were alwaies betwixt thẽ. And my ſelf being to leeward, made ſuch ſhort turns, as I kept al the afternoon in a maner, euen in the verie eye of their courſe, betwixt thẽ & the place of their deſign: euer diſchar- ging my beſt ordnãce to warn the Anſwers of her Maieſties, that rid by my directions at the Downes, vpon important ſeruice as your Lordſhip knoweth; and the Flemings that were there, hauing left the Sea vpon vnknowne groundes to mee (yet ſent from

Portſmouth

A Portſmouth, by the moſt prouident direction of her ſacred Maieſtie, to awaite the comming of the Gallies, vpon aduertiſements that her Highneſſe receiued of their being put to ſea, to ſet ſaile, who elſe had receiued no vnderſtanding of the Gallies, neither came they within ſhot of them, till after night, how ſoeuer the reputation of the ſeruice is wholy chalenged by them. 1601

Hauing giuen your Lordſhip an accompt how this day was thus ſpent by me, from eight of the clocke vntill the euening, and with theſe onely helpes: I beſeech your Lordſhip to be pleaſed to vnderſtand, that with the ſetting of the Sunne, I could both diſcerne the ſhips laſt mentioned vnder ſaile at the downes, and the Gallies to haue
B ſet their ſailes: directing their courſe cloſe aboord our ſhoare, each of them beeing out of ſight of the other, and my Dutch conſorts by this time to haue beene left by the Gallies to a ſterne chaſe. When I perceiued them to hold that courſe, which would bring them within ſhot of the Anſwere, and the reſt that were in the Downes: I held a cleane contrarie courſe from them towards the coaſt of France, to confirme the ſecure paſſage they thoght to find on our coaſt, which I continued, vntil the report of their battery gaue me aſſurance of the Gallies being engaged vnto them.

How the batterie began, who began it, how it was continued, how ended, and to whom the reputation of the ſeruice is due, I leaue to bee conſidered by your Lordſhip, by the peruſall of the true diſcourſe following. The Anſwere of the Queenes, which Captaine
C Bredgate commanded, as ſhe rid more Southerly at the Downes than the Flemings, ſo came ſhe firſt to the Gallies, and beſtowed 28 peeces of Ordnance on them before the Flemings came in, who at length ſeconded him with verie many ſhot.

During this batterie of ours vpon the gallies (which I ſo terme, becauſe they neuer exchanged one ſhot) at the very firſt report of the Anſwers ordnance, I directed the maſter of my ſhip to bear vp with the ſouth end of the Goodwin, with which directiõs I deliuerd my reaſons publikely, as I ſtood on the poope of my ſhip, viz. That if I ſtood directly into them, the gallies, before I could recouer the place, wold either be driuen a ſhoare or ſunk and ſo would there proue no need of my force; or elſe by their nimble ſailing they wold eſcape the ſhips, of whom (once getting ahead) they could receiue no impediment: for D there was no one ſhip but the Aduantage in the ſea that could hinder them to recouer any port in Flanders or the Eaſt countries (Sluce onely excepted) vnleſſe I ſtaied them at that ſand head. Hauing recouered as neere that place as I deſired, I ſtaied at leaſt a quarter of an houre, before I could either ſee galley, heare or ſee any of thoſe ſhips, their lights or report of their ordnance, which made me and all my company hold opinion that they had outſailed the Anſwere, and the reſt of the Flemings, and ſhunned ſight of mee by going aſeaboord of my ſhip, which I ſo verily beleeued, as I once directly determined to ſaile for Sluce, with hope onely that the preparation which I knew the States had there, would be able to preuent their entrance into that place. Whilſt I remained thus doubtfull, or rather hopeleſſe to hinder their recouerie of Dunkerk or Newport, in caſe they had
E bin aſea-boord of me, ſome of my company deſcried a ſingle galley plying from the ſhoar to get ahead of my ſhip. When ſhe approached within caliuer ſhot, I diſcharged about 30 peeces of ordnance of my lower and vpper tire at her alone, my ſelfe with many other in my ſhip ſaw when her maineyard was ſhot aſunder, heard the report of many ſhot that hit her hul, heard many their moſt pittiful outcries, which when I perceiued to continue, & inſtead of making way from me, to neer me what ſhe could; I forbare ſhooting, & commanded one that ſpake the Portugal language, to tel them that I was cõtented to receiue them to mercy: which I would accordingly haue performed, had not the other 5 gallies offered to ſtand out ahead of me at that very inſtant, & thereby wold haue left me as they had both the firſt two Dutch ſhips, and afterwards the Anſwer with the reſt of the Fle-
F mings, had I omitted any ſmall time of executing the aduantage I had of their being on my broad ſide, which as appeares was ſo effectually imployed (howſoeuer the night wherein this ſeruice was performed, might hinder the particular mention of their hurts) as none can deny but that God pleaſed thereby onely to worke their confuſion. For ſince that time none hath ſaid or can ſpeake of any one ſhot made towards them: yet foure of them are ſunke and wrecked, the fift paſt doing the enemy ſeruice, 1602 and the ſixt they are forced to new build at Dunkerke, where (if I be not much deceiued) G ſhe will proue more chargeable than profitable, if the default reſt not in our ſelues.

The diſagreement betweene the Dutch captaines themſelues touching the ſtemming and ſinking of the gallies (whereof one challenged before your Lordſhip, and in many other publike places, to haue ſtemmed and ſunke two himſelfe) and the printed Pamphlet containing the ſtemming and ſinking of three Gallies, giueth the reputation thereof to three ſeuerall Captaines, amongſt whome no mention is made of the firſt; and whereas there are but two in all ſunke; I leaue to bee reconciled amongſt themſelues, and to your Lordſhippe, whether that the ſame of right appertaineth not to her Maieſties ſhip the Hope, in reſpect of the allegations before men- H tioned, euerie particular whereof being to bee proued by the oathes of my whole company and mainatined with the hazard of my life with that which followeth.

1 As the ſhooting of the ſingle Gallies mainyard aſunder, my beſtowing aboue thirtie peeces of ordnance vpon that one Gallie, within leſſe then Caliuer ſhot.

2 That they in the Gallie made many lamentable out-cries for my receiuing them vnto mercie.

3 That I would accordingly haue receiued them, but for giuing them ouer to encounter with the other fiue Gallies, which elſe had left me to a ſterne chaſe.

To theſe reaſons I adde the aſſertions of the Viceadmiral himſelfe, who told me (whatſoeuer he ſpake in other places) that one of the Gallies, which he ſtemmed, had her I maineyard ſhot aſunder before his comming aboord her: by whom ſoeuer ſhe was then ſtemmed, your Lordſhip may iudge, who ruin'd her, conſidering ſhe made no reſiſtance, by his owne report, but by crying to him for mercy.

Touching the other galley ſtemmed and ſunke, I haue alreadie proued how ſhee (as all the reſt) had got ahead the Anſwer of the Queenes not named, and the reſt of the States men of warre with her, who challenge the whole credit of this ſeruice. They (as all other Sea-men) cannot deny but that the gallies will outſaile all ſhips, in ſuch a loome gale of wind and ſmooth ſea, as we had that night.

The Gallies being then quicker of ſale than they, how could they by any meanes poſſible fetch them vp, but by ſome impediment? impediment they receiued none, but by K my ordnance: which amounted to fiftie great ſhot at thoſe fiue which came laſt from the ſhoare, when all the ſhips were aboue a mile aſterne.

Some notwithſtanding out of their detracting diſpoſitions may perchance ſay, that the two which were wrecked at Newport would haue periſhed by ſtorme, though they had not beene battered. Whereto though I haue ſufficiently anſwered, firſt in ſhewing that they might haue recouered any of the places thereabouts before eight of the clocke that night but for mee; and then the ſecond time before the morning, had they not beene encountred by me alone, at the South-ſand head: Yet for further proofe that they miſcaried by our batterie onely, I ſay that if one of the gallies which receiued leaſt damage by our ordnance did out-liue Fridaies ſtorme, continuing till L
Satturday noone, being driuen among the Ilands of Zealand to recouer Calais; then ſurely thoſe two (vnleſſe they had beene exceedingly torne) would haue made ſhift to haue recouered the ports of Newport, Graueling or Dunkerke; eſpecially ſith from the place where I battered them, they might haue beene at the remoteſt of thoſe places about foure houres before any ſtorme beganne. But ſuch ſeemed their haſt to ſaue their liues, as their thought ran of a ſhoare, and not of a harbour.

Now that I haue deliuered vnto your Lordſhip the whole & true diſcourſe of this buſineſſe, I ſhall forbeare to trouble your patience with any further relation of that night & next daies ſpending my time (though the ſame in their chaſe had like to haue coſt her Maieſtie her ſhip, and the liues of as many as were in her) and conclude with admirati- M on of their not holding her Maieſties ſhip, nor I (her vnworthieſt ſeruant) and then and yet by her Highneſſe grace and your Lordſhips fauour, Admirall of the forces in that place, are not once mentioned: eſpecially ſith the ſixe Gallies might ſafely haue arriued before ſeuen of the clock that night at any of the Ports of Flanders to the Weſtward of Oſtend. And that the Dutch ſhips had not come frō an anchor in the Downes, but for

the

A the ſignes they receiued from me. Then that the force of her Majeſties ſhip, wherein I was, enforced them to keepe cloſe aboord the Engliſh ſhore, whereby thoſe ſhips in the Downes had power giuen them to come to fight, which fight was begun by the Anſwer of the queenes. 1602

And laſtly, ſith the gallies eſcaped their batterie, and had gotten ahead thoſe ſhips, aboue a mile at leaſt, and neuer receiued any impediment after, but onely by me, who lingered them (as you haue heard) vntill the comming vp of thoſe ſhips that challenge to ſtemme them: which being granted, I cannot ſee how any other credit can rightly be giuen them (for that ſtemme I meane) than to a lackey for pillaging of that dead bodie
B which his maſter had ſlaine.

Thus much I haue ſet downe out of his owne mouth, touching the ſeruice that was done vpon thoſe ſix gallies of Spaine.

This yeare there was a new fleet made readie in Spaine, the which bred a jealouſie in the French, and made them to ſtand vpon their gard in Languedoc and Prouence. This fleet was readie to ſet ſaile, the which vnder colour of renewing the enterpriſe of Alger in Afrike, might frame ſome deſigne vpon that coaſt. Prince Doria, and D. Iohn de Cordoua, had beene both vnfortunat in their charges. The honour of Chriſtendome made all men wiſh, that this execution might proue more ſucceſſull than the reſt. But as bad deſignes do manie times proſper better than good, the ſucceſſe depending commonly on
C the blindneſſe of fortune, this enterpriſe of Alger was no more ſucceſſull than the two former. It was managed by a Franciſcan Frier, called Father Mathew, who promiſed as great glorie vnto himſelfe, in chaſing away thoſe petie kings of Afrike, as Aratus had of freeing Sicyonia of tyrans. He had negotiated with the king of Cycco, who promiſed (that for a certaine ſumme of money, whereof he ſhould receiue fortie thouſand crowns in hand) not onely to fauour any deſigne, but to declare himſelfe openly againſt the king of Alger, and to reduce the towne to what condition they would: but there is a great difference betwixt ſaying and doing: And it is a great ſimplicitie to giue credit to an Infidell, ſeeing that treacherie is inſeparable from his ſoule. The Viceroy of Majorca, who was Generall in this action, and with whom the king of Cycco had promiſed to D joyne, approached with foure gallies vpon this aſſurance, and landed about an hundred men, to deliuer fortie thouſand crownes vnto the Moores; who receiued the money, and deliuered the men into the hands of the Viceroy of Alger, where the Frier was ſlain, and the Viceroy retiring, freed their neighbours from jealouſie. They of Barcelona (who are ſubiect to the king of Spaine) did no leſſe apprehend this armie than the Moores: they feared that the Catholike king would take their priuiledges from them, as hee had done from them of Arragon; yet the paſſage of the three princes of Sauoy into Spaine, renewed their jealouſie in France. The duke came with them to Nice, where they attended the commoditie of their imbarking, the princeſſe Marguerite, his eldeſt daughter, commaunding in Piedmont, and from thence they paſt to Barcelona, where they at-E tended the kings pleaſure, and were entertained with all the honours that might be done vnto princes of that alliance. The king of Spaine rejoyced at the dukes reſolution, and ſeemed to haue a great deſire to ſee them. He ſent D. Henriques de Guzman to congratulate their arriuall, and to commaund them to take ſmall journeyes, by reaſon of the heat of the ſeaſon. Being come to Court, he made prince Victor, the dukes ſecond ſonne, Viceroy of Portugall: the which did much content the Portugals, to ſee the fruits of D. Beatrix, his great grandmother, who was daughter to D. Emanuel king of Portugall and maried to Charles duke of Sauoy. The third ſonne was afterwards made Archbiſhop of Toledo, and then cardinall.

1603 Armie of Spain at ſea.

Moors treacherous.

Paſſage of the prince of Piedmont into Spain

The queene of England being dead this yeare, and the king of Scotland come to the F ſucceſſion of that Crowne, the king of Spaine ſent D. Iohn Baptiſta Taxis, earle of Villa Mediana, his embaſſadour into England, to witneſſe vnto the king the great contentment hee receiued by his happie comming to the Crowne, who after his firſt audience of congratulations and ordinarie complements, made a ſpeech vnto the king to this effect.

King of Spaine ſends an embaſſador into England.

The king of Spaine, my maſter, aſſuring himſelfe to find the ſame effects and affecti- « ons

1603 „ ons of friendſhip in you, being king of England, which you haue alwayes made ſhew of G
Speech of the embaſſador of Spain to the king of England. „ vnto him being king of Scotland, hath ſent me vnto your Maieſtie, to confirme the ſince„ ritie, to deſire the continuance, and to preſerue it by all the proofes of friendſhip and aſſi„ ſtance which he offers you, which is the ſame that many great princes haue deſired, and „ could not obtaine, and for that it is offered is no leſſe neceſſarie, and to be wiſhed for of „ your Maieſtie. If the king D. Philip the ſecond, of glorious memorie, hath attempted „ any thing againſt England, and queene Elizabeth againſt the Eſtates of Spaine, it was „ more vpon ſome priuat ſpleene, than for any reaſon of State. But one tombe ſhould „ interre both their bodies and their paſsions. The ſucceſſours doe inherit the great-„ neſſe and power of their predeceſſors, but they are not tied to their deſignes, which haue H „ no end but the ruine one of another.

„ The Catholike king hath ſuch rich and goodlie Crownes in Europe, Aſia, and A-„ fricke, and at the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, as they are ſufficient to ſettle the deſire of his am„ bition within the bounds of his owne greatneſſe. If hee hath dealt in the affaires of a„ ny other princes, it was to ſupport them and keepe them from ruine, time hauing diſco„ uered how many things were readie to fall, if they had not beene vnderpropt by the „ hand of D. Philip. The enemies of the houſe of Spaine haue publiſhed, That the am„ bition of this prince was to make himſelfe Monarch of all Chriſtendome, and that hee
„ had left theſe deſignes hereditarie to his poſteritie. But the wiſer ſort may eaſily judge, „ that if hee had beene ſo affected, he would haue carried himſelfe otherwiſe, and begun I
„ the execution of the enterpriſe by Italie, in the which hee is the ſtronger, the conqueſt „ whereof would be eaſie, hauing ſuch aduantages.

„ But as hee is contented to preſerue his owne, and deſires no leſſe to raigne juſtly, „ than long and happily; ſo is hee grieued to ſee his friends croſſe him in a thing that is „ ſo juſt and reaſonable. Complaints are free for all men, but they are more affectio„ nate among neighbours. My maſter, who holds you in this qualitie of a friend, and „ will doe what poſſibly hee may that you bee neuer other, complaines to you of your „ ſelfe. Hee cannot diſſemble how much hee thinkes himſelfe wronged, for that your „ Majeſtie doth affect the defence and protection of the rebels of the Low Countries, „ againſt their lawfull Lord, and that you haue lately graunted them a great leuie of Scot- K „ tiſh men. Hee aſſures himſelfe of all friendſhip and juſtice from you, and hee in-„ treats you, that in calling home theſe Scottiſh men you will puniſh them as they „ haue deſerued. Hee deſires to treat ſincerely with you, and beleeues that your Maieſtie „ (conſidering how much the friendſhip of ſo mightie a prince ſhould bee deere vnto you,
„ and will be profitable) will ſeeke and imbrace it, and will neuer be ſo careleſſe of his good,
„ as to wiſh him ill.

King of Englands anſwer to the Spaniſh embaſſador. The king returned him many good words, to witneſſe the allianee which hee deſired to entertaine with the king of Spaine, vpon the like tearmes hee had with him as king of Scotland. But aduowing the Scottiſh troups which were ſent to the generall Eſtates of the vnited Prouinces, to be leuied by his commaundement, he ſaid they had not deſerued any puniſhment; giuing leaue to king Philip to make vſe of Scottiſhmen, if he pleaſed: and letting him know, that he had not tranſgreſt the lawes of neutralitie. And as for their protection, he deſired he ſhould vnderſtand, That the great intereſts which England hath with the vnited Prouinces, as well in regard of their townes which they haue ingaged, as for the ſuccours which they haue receiued from thence, did bind him to aſſiſt them, and to haue a care of their preſeruation, and to ſecond the intentions of the deceaſed queene, and to build vpon the foundations which ſhe had laied; yet he deſired to ſee them all well reconciled with the king of Spaine. L

Spaniards think none ſo powerfull as their own king. The embaſſador (as my Author ſayes) anſwered, That whoſoeuer knew the power of the king of Spaine, were not ignorant that he can eaſily bring the rebelled Prouinces vn- M der the yoke of his obedience, when hee ſhall pleaſe to make an enterpriſe equall to his power: That no man ſhould doubt, that hee that had paſſed the Helleſpont, will eaſily paſſe the riuer of Granique; and that a prince which triumphes ouer ſo many nations, ſo many iſlands, ſo many ſeas, and ſo much firme land at the new-found world, will not adde the iſlands of Holland and Zeland to his triumphant chariot: the wiſe will

alwayes

A alwaies giue the counſell which Phocion gaue vnto the Athenians, either to make themſelues the ſtrongeſt, or to be obedient vnto them that were ſo. He then deſired leaue to enter into conference with ſome of his Maieſties Councell, and to conſult of the meanes of ſome treatie; which would be no leſſe profitable and honourable to England, than to Spaine: the which was granted him. After ſome meetings, the lords finding that he had no power to treat, they attended other deputies, who came the next yeare with an ample Commiſsion, as you ſhall heare. 1603

There fell out two accidents, which had like to haue troubled the quiet of thoſe two great Monarchs of France and Spaine. The yeare before king Philip and the Archdukes B had impoſed thirtie in the hundred vpon all marchandiſe which came in or went out of the countries that were vnder their obedience: the which did ſeeme directly to infringe the treatie of Veruins. The French king commanded his embaſſadors to deale with thoſe princes touching this impoſition, and to aduertiſe him of their reſolutions. But their aunſwers, and the force they vſed afterwards to the kings ſubiects, to make them pay the impoſition, did witneſſe ſufficiently, that they had no will to exempt them. Whereupon the French king made a defence, That no marchandiſe ſhould bee carried out of France into Spaine, or the Low Countries, that were vnder the Archdukes obedience, nor any bee brought from thence into France, vpon corporall puniſhment, and loſſe of goods. But this did not alter the peace, onely there were complaints made by the two kings one of C another. King Philip began: He tooke it ill that the French going volnntarily to ſerue the Eſtates, did prolong their rebellion, and did hinder the reduction of Oſtend: that the king did ſuccour them with men and money; and that hee had forbidden his ſubiects to traffique into Spaine and Flanders. But the king diſauowed them that went to ſerue the Eſtates: If hee ſent them money, it was (ſayed he) but to pay that which hee had borrowed: And the defence of traffique tended to no other end, but to force the king of Spaine and the Archduke to take away that intollerable impoſition, and to let him know, that France can liue better without the commodities of Spaine, than Spain without thoſe of France. 1604 Impoſition exacted by the Spaniard.

The ſecond accident, or cauſe of jarre betwixt theſe two princes grew alſo from D Spaine; the French king complaining, and juſtly, That the ſecrets of his cabinet were diſcouered to his enemies. Will the king of Spaine neuer ceaſe (ſaid he) to withdraw my ſubiects from their duetie and loyalties? Will hee ſtill entertaine ſome traytor within my realme? My embaſſadour complaines vnto me by his letters, that hee is ſo ſlowly aduertiſed of our affaires, as the king of Spaines miniſters know them before him. Treaſon of Loſt.

The king being much troubled to find out the ſpring from whence this peſtilent liquor of Infidelitie did flow, behold God diſcouered the treacherie of Iudas, by ſuch meanes as the wiſedome of man could not find out. Villeroy, the chiefe Secretarie of State, who managed the greateſt ſecrets of the kingdome, had an vnder clerke, E called Nicholas Loſt, in whom hee repoſed much truſt, and the rather, for that his father had ſerued him long. This young man hauing attended on Monſieur de la Rochepot, being embaſſadour in Spaine, there laied the plot of this treaſon, whereof you may read the whole diſcourſe at large in the hiſtorie of France.

There was ſome likelihood of a new enterpriſe this yeare vpon Africke. The king of Cuſco, who had promiſed the laſt yeare to joyne with the Spaniards againſt Alger, had receiued fortie thouſand crownes vpon the bargaine, and treacherouſly betrayed them that brought the money vnto their enemies, this yeare hee ſent an embaſſadour vnto the king, who gaue him audience at Valencia: Which made many thinke, that hee would make another attempt vpon Alger, for that he cauſed him to F be conducted home by a Maſter of the campe, and an Enginer, giuing him great ſtore of munition, and fire-workes, laden in three fregats. Embaſſadours from the king of Cuſco at Valencia.

The king of Spaine beeing aduertiſe out of England, from his embaſſadour Taxis, of the ſucceſſe of his embaſſage, and of the expectation of a treatie, hee appointed the Conſtable of Caſtille to vndertake this charge, giuing him an ample Commiſſion, to treat and conclude a Peace betwixt England and Spaine: hee paſt Conſtable of Caſtille ſent into England.

1604 paſt through France, where he was verie honourably receiued, and ſo came into Flan- G ders to the Archdukes, from whence he went into England, for the concluſion of the peace.

Commiſſioners for the treatie of the peace for England.

There were Commiſſioners appointed on either ſide: For the king of great Britaine were named, the earle of Dorſet, high Treaſurer of England, the earle of Nottingham, high Admirall of England, the earle of Deuonſhire, Lieutenant of the kingdome of Ireland, the earle of Northampton, and the lord Vicont Cranborne, principall Secretarie, and now earle of Salisburie, and high Treaſurer of England; being all of his Majeſties priuie Councell.

Commiſſioners for Spaine.

For the king of Spaine there were deputed D. Iohn de Velaſco, Conſtable of Caſtille H and Leon, Duke of Frias, Earle of Haro, &c. D. Iohn Baptiſta Taxis, Earle of Villa Mediana &c. and Alexander Rouidius, a Lawyer, and Senator of Milan. The Archdukes ſent for their Commiſsioners, Charles Earle of Aremberg, Counſellor of State, and Admirall to the ſaid Archdukes, Iohn Richardot Knight, Preſident of the priuy Councel, and Counſellor of State, and Lodowike Verreiken, Knight, their principal Secretarie. All theſe Commiſsioners, after many conſultations and conferences, in the end concluded a peace, on the 18 of Auguſt, betwixt the two kings, their Eſtates and ſubiects, vpon certaine articles, whereof I haue ſet downe the contents.

Aritcles of the peace betwixt England and Spaine.

1 Firſt it was concluded, That from thenceforth there ſhould be a ſincere and firme league and peace inuiolably obſerued for euer, and in all places, betwixt the moſt renow- I med king of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, &c. and the moſt renowmed king of Spaine &c. and the moſt renowmed Archdukes of Auſtria, Dukes of Bourgondie, their heires and ſucceſſors, their countries, dominions, and ſubiects, of what condition or degree ſoeuer they be, or may be.

2 That all acts of hoſtilitie ſhould ceaſe, and all wrongs and injuries done, during the troubles, be forgotten, ſo as there ſhould be no action pretended for any depredations or ſpoiles committed, but all ſhould be freely aboliſhed, except ſuch depredations as had beene committed ſince the 24 of Aprill 1603: and that from thenceforth they and their ſubiects ſhould forbeare from all depredations and ſpoiles, and cauſe reſtitution to be made of any that ſhould be after that time committed. K

3 That neither of the aboue named princes, their heirs or ſucceſſors, by himſelfe or any other, ſhould do, treat, or attempt any thing againſt the other, or againſt their kingdomes or dominions, vpon any pretence, nor aſsiſt or conſent vnto any warre, attempt, or treatie, to the prejudice one of another.

4 That they ſhould neither themſelues giue, nor conſent to be giuen by any of their vaſſals, ſubiects, or inhabitants, any aid, fauour, or ſupplie, vnto the enemies or rebels of either part, (whether they ſhall inuade their countries, or withdraw themſelues from their obedience and ſubiection) of ſouldiers, victuals, money, ordnance, and munition, or any other aid to maintaine warre.

5 That the ſaid princes ſhould, and did, renounce all leagues, confederations, and intel- L ligence, made to the prejudice one of another, which did or might impugne this peace, & the contents thereof: all which they ſhal diſannull, and declare to be of no force.

6 That the ſaid kings and Archdukes ſhould reſtraine their ſubiects from doing any wrong, and ſhould reuoke all Commiſsions and letters of Repriſall and Mart, of what nature ſoeuer, being to the prejudice of the ſaid princes, or of their ſubiects, to whomſoeuer they haue beene granted: the which they ſhall declare to be void and of no force. And that whoſoeuer ſhould do to the contrary, ſhould be puniſhed criminally, and compelled to make reſtitution to the parties damnified.

7 That as concerning the townes of Fleſſingue, Brill, Ramekins, and other forts thereunto belonging, in the which the ſouldiers of the king of England did remaine in M garriſon, foraſmuch as the ſaid king affirmed, that by contracts formerly made betweene queene Elizabeth, of famous memorie (vnto whom his Maieſtie did ſucceed) and the Eſtates of the vnited Prouinces, hee ſtood bound not to redeliuer the ſaid townes and forts to any, but to ſuch as had deliuered the ſame for caution; ſo as by the ſaid contracts his Maieſties faith & honor (which he reſolued to keep religiouſly towards all men) being inga-

A ingaged, he might not then reſtore thoſe places vnto the Archdukes; yet hee promiſed 1604 to enter into treatie with the ſaid Eſtates, wherein his Maieſtie would aſſigne them a conuenient time to accept of conditions conformable to juſtice and equitie, for a pacification with the renowmed princes, his deere brethren: which if the Eſtates ſhould refuſe to accept, then his Maieſtie, as beeing freed from the former conuentions, would determine of thoſe townes as hee ſhould thinke moſt juſt and honourable, wherein hee would doe all good offices for the ſaid Princes, his louing brethren.

8 That the renowmed king of England &c. would commaund the garriſon ſouldi-
B ers not to ſerue the Hollanders, nor to ſuccour them with victuals, armes, or any munition for warre, or other the king of Spaines or the Archdukes enemies, vpon any colour or pretext ſoeuer, nor doe any act of hoſtilitie againſt the king of Spaine, the Archdukes, or their ſubiects: And in like manner the king of Spaine and the Archdukes did promiſe, that no act of hoſtilitie ſhould be done againſt the ſaid garriſon ſouldiers, nor againſt the king of England &c. or his ſubiects.

9 That betweene the ſaid kings, their kingdomes, vaſſals, inhabitants, and ſubiects, there ſhould bee free commerce in all places where it hath beene formerly vſed before the warres, according to the auncient leagues and treaties; ſo as the ſubiects of either partie might goe and enter freely into the others countries and dominions both
C by ſea and land, without any Safeconduct, or other licence, and depart from thence with their goods and marchandiſes, paying the ordinarie cuſtomes and impoſts.

10 That it ſhould be lawfull to haue aceſſe vnto the ports of the ſaid princes, there to make ſtay, and with the like libertie to depart, not onely with ſhips for marchandiſe, but alſo for warre, whether they come thither being forced by foule weather, or for the repairing of their ſhips, or for prouiſion of victuals, ſo as they exceed not the number of ſix or eight ſhips, when they come in voluntarily, nor ſtay longer in the hauens than they ſhall haue cauſe, for the repairing of their ſhips, or to make prouiſion of neceſſaries, leaſt it ſhould cauſe an interruption of free traffique with other nati-
D ons in amitie. And if any greater number of ſhips of warre than is aboue mentioned, ſhall happen to haue acceſſe into thoſe ports, then it ſhall not bee lawfull for them to enter without the priuitie and conſent of the prince. Prouided, that they ſhould not commit any act of hoſtilitie within the ſaid ports, to the prejudice of the princes: and that there ſhould be an eſpeciall care had, that vnder the pretext of traffique there ſhould be no victuals, armes, or munition for warre, carried by the ſubiects of thoſe kingdomes, to the enemies of the one or other king. And whoſoeuer ſhould attempt the contrarie, ſhould bee puniſhed as ſeditious perſons, and breakers of the peace. It was alſo prouided, That the ſubiects of the one ſhould not bee worſe intreated in anothers dominions in his ſales and contracts of marchandiſe, than his owne naturall
E ſubiects.

11 That the king of England &c. after the concluſion of theſe articles, ſhould forbid by proclamation, That none of his ſubiects, or any inhabiting within his realme, ſhould carrie ouer in his owne name, directly or indirectly, or colour any ſhips, marchandiſe, or any other thing going out of Holland and Zeland into Spaine, nor any Holland or Zeland marchant, vnto the ſayd ports, vpon paine of puniſhment. And to auoyd fraud, all marchandiſe to be ſent out of England, Scotland, and Ireland, to the dominions of the king of Spaine and Archdukes, was to bee ſealed with the Towne or Citie Seale from whence they ſhould be laden: and that which was not ſo ſealed, ſhould bee taken for good prize, and confiſcated, and all Hollanders and Zelanders found in the ſayd ſhips,
F ſhould be alſo taken.

12 That all Engliſh, Scottiſh, and Iriſh marchandiſe, might bee tranſported out of thoſe countries into the dominions of the king of Spaine, without paying the impoſition of thirtie in the hundred, lately impoſed, but onely the cuſtomes and tolls vſually demaunded before the ſaid impoſition of thirtie in the hundred.

13 That

1604 13 That for ſuch marchandiſe as the Engliſh, Scottiſh, or Iriſh marchants ſhould G buy in Spaine, or other the king of Spaines dominions, and ſhould carrie in their owne ſhips, or in ſhips hired or lent them (except they be of Holland Zeland) they ſhould only pay ſuch cuſtomes as were accuſtomed to be paied before the impoſition of thirtie in the hundred: prouided, that they ſhould carrie the ſaid marchandiſe to the realmes of the king of England &c. or to the ports of thoſe prouinces which obey the Archdukes. And to preuent the tranſportation of the ſaid marchandiſe to any other places, and eſpecially to Holland and Zeland, it was agreed, That the marchants ſhould enter bond at ſuch time as they did lade their ſhips in Spaine, or in any of the king of Spaines dominions, before the magiſtrat of the place where they ſhould lade, to pay the ſaid impoſition of 30 in the hundred, in caſe they carrie the ſaid marchandiſe to any other countries: H and that they ſhould bring a certificat, within one yeare, from the magiſtrat of the place where they ſhould vnlade the ſaid goods, teſtifying that they haue diſcharged in the king of Englands dominions, or in thoſe prouinces which are vnder the Archdukes obedience; exhibiting of which certificats their bonds ſhould be deliuered vp.

14 That the king of England &c. ſoone after the confirmation of this accord, ſhould forbid his ſubiects to export any marchandiſe out of the K. of Spaines dominions, to any other places but to his Majeſties kingdoms, and the ſaid ports of Flanders, vpon paine of confiſcation of all their marchandiſe, to the vſe of the king of England &c. whereof the Informer is to haue the one halfe, the impoſition of thirtie in the hundred being firſt I deducted, the which ſhall be payed to the king of Spaines officers; the prooſes being lawfully receiued in Spaine, and ſent into England in authenticall forme, ſhould be credited.

15 That the magiſtrats of any townes or cities within his Maieſties kingdoms, which ſhould make certificats of the vnlading of ſhips, and giue teſtimonie of the regiſtring of marchandiſe, ſhould not commit any fraud therein, vpon paine of the loſſe of their offices, and the kings diſpleaſure: With this prouiſo, That when as the king of Spaine and the Archdukes ſhall agree with the French king, or any other, touching the laſt Edict of thirtie in the hundred, and the commerce betwixt them be reſtored, then it ſhould bee lawfull for the ſubiects of the ſaid king of England &c. to tranſport their marchandiſe into K his or their dominions vnto whom the commerce ſhall be reſtored, without the payment of thirtie in the hundred, paying onely the former vſuall cuſtomes.

16 That there ſhould be free commerce betwixt the ſubiects of the king of England &c. and the Archdukes, in all places where they had beene formerly accuſtomed to trade, both by water and land, hauing free libertie to enter into the dominions, townes, and ports one of another, and to buy, ſell, carrie and recarrie their marchandiſe, repaire their ſhips, prouide victuals, and all things neceſſarie, at reaſonable prices, and ſhould depart with the like libertie with their goods and marchandiſe, paying the vſuall cuſtomes. Prouided, that the ſubiects of the king of England &c. ſhould not vſe the ſhipping of the Hollanders, or the vnited Prouinces, nor bring any of their manufactures into the Arch- L dukes countries, nor any other thing for the which any tribute was payed in Holland, neither ſhould they tranſport any thing from the Archdukes Prouinces, vnto the vnited Prouinces, vntill a pacification were made, neither ſhould they receiue any goods belonging to the vnited Prouinces, into their ſhips, nor put any of them into the vnited Eſtates ſhips, nor fraudulently colour the goods of any one of the vnited Prouinces: the which being found, it ſhould be held to be good and lawfull prize.

17 That the former Prouiſos ſhould not onely be vnderſtood of ſhips laden for marchandiſe, but alſo of ſhips of warre, which the ſaid princes ſhould ſend forth to preuent the attempts of their enemies: which ſhips of warre, not exceeding the number aboue mentioned, might freely enter into one anothers ports, being driuen by tempeſt, or to M repaire their ſhips, or buy neceſſaries, and there ſtay, ſo as they committed no act of hoſtilitie, with the like cautions and exceptions as is contained in the tenth article.

18 As the ſaid kings and Archdukes did religiouſly promiſe, not to giue any warlike ſuccours to any of the others enemies, ſo it was prouided, that the ſubiects or the inhabitants

A tants of their realmes, of what nation or qualitie ſoeuer, ſhould not vnder colour of com- 1604 merce, nor vpon any other pretext, giue any aid to the enemies of the ſaid princes, or ſupplie them with money, victuals, armour, munition, ordnance, or other warlike prouiſion:
and thoſe which ſhould do the contrarie ſhould be ſeuerely puniſhed, as breakers of the league, and ſeditious perſons.

19 And for the greater benefit and good of their ſubiects, it was agreed, that the king of England &c. and the Archdukes, ſhould do their endeuors, that their ſubiects ſhould haue the paſſages open vnto their ports and dominions, ſo as they might freely come and go with their ſhips, marchandiſe, and carriages (paying the ordinarie cuſtomes) to all the B ſaid ports, kingdoms, and dominions, & depart when they pleaſe with the like libertie.

20 As touching the ancient treaties of commerce and traffique betwixt the realms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the dominions of the dukes of Bourgondie, and princes of the Low Countries, the which during the late troubles had beene intermitted, and it may be in ſome parts impaired: It was concluded by way of prouiſion, That they ſhould remaine in their auncient force, and be vſed on either ſide, as they had beene before the warre. And if it happen, that by both parts, or by any one, any breach thereof be pretended: or that the ſubiects ſhall complaine, that the conuentions were not ob-ſerued, or that more grieuous burthens than were accuſtomed were impoſed on them, then there ſhould be deputies appointed on either part, which ſhould meet, and treat
C friendly, and reſtore ſuch things as ſhould be found out of courſe, or to haue beene altered by the injurie of time, or by corrupt cuſtome.

21 And to make this peace fruitfull to the ſubiects of the king of England &c. it was concluded, That ſuch as had recourſe to and from the realmes and dominions of the king of Spaine and Archdukes, and ſhould remaine there for trade, ſhould not be moleſted in the cauſe of conſcience: wherefore to the intent their traffique might be ſafe and without danger both by land and ſea, the ſaid king of Spaine and Archdukes ſhould prouide, that vſing their trade and commerce, they ſhould not be called in queſtion nor moleſted for their conſciences, ſo as they gaue no ſcandall.

22 If any goods or marchandiſe prohibited to be carried, ſhould be conueyed out of D the realmes and dominions of the ſaid kings and Archdukes, by the ſubiects of the one or the other, that in ſuch caſe the perſon offending ſhall onely incurre puniſhment, and only the goods prohibited ſhall be confiſcated.

23 That the goods of ſubiects dying within the realmes and dominions of either, ſhould be preſerued for the right heires and ſucceſſors of the deceaſed, alwaies reſeruing the right of any third perſon.

24 That graunts and priuiledges giuen by the princes to marchants of either of the kingdomes, comming to their realmes, which priuiledges, by reaſon of the warres, haue ceaſed, ſhould from thenceforth be reuiued, and ſtand in their full force and vertue.

25 And if hereafter any vnkindneſſe ſhould grow betwixt the king of England &c.
E and the king of Spaine, or the Archdukes, wherby there might grow any interruption of entercourſe and traffique, the ſubiects of either prince ſhould be ſo aduertiſed thereof, as they might haue ſix monethes from the time of the admonition, to tranſport their marchandiſe, without any arreſt, diſturbance, or moleſtation in the meane ſeaſon, to be offered or done them either in their perſons or goods.

26 That neither of the ſaid princes ſhould imbarre or ſtay for their prouiſion in war, or for any other ſeruice, to the prejudice of the owners, the ſhips of the others ſubiects, lying in their ports or roads, vnleſſe one of thoſe parties to whom the ſhips do belong, bee firſt aduertiſed thereof, and yeeld his conſent thereunto.

27 It was alſo accorded, That if during this peace and league of friendſhip, any thing
F ſhould happen to be attempted, or done, againſt the force and effect thereof, either by water or by land, by any of the ſaid princes, their heirs and ſucceſſors, their vaſſals and ſub-iects, or by their allies comprehended in this league, or by the heirs & ſucceſſors of any of thoſe allies, their ſubiects or vaſſals, yet notwithſtanding this peace and amitie, ſhould re-maine in his full ſtrength and vertue, and the attempters and ſuch as doe offend onely ſhal be puniſhed for their attempts.

1604 28 That all priſoners taken in the warres, or condemned to the gallies, ſhould be releaſed and ſet free, the charges of diet, of ſuch as were not in the gallies, being firſt paied, and the ranſomes of ſuch as had before compounded for the ſame, being diſcharged. G

29 It was concluded, That all ciuile actions which were in force at ſuch time as the laſt warre begun, ſhould be continued and purſued, notwithſtanding any lapſe of time during the ſame warre, ſo as they ſhould not be any way prejudiced by the continuance of the warre: thoſe onely were excepted which were alreadie come to the princes treaſurie or Exchequer.

30 If any action ſhould be commenced in the realmes and dominions of any of theſe princes, by any perſon not being ſubiect to the ſame prince, touching any depredations or ſpoyles, the cauſe ſhould be remitted to the Iudge of the juriſdiction vnder that prince, againſt whoſe ſubject or ſubjects the ſuit is commenced. H

31 If the Hollanders and the other confederat Eſtates, would accept of conditions of pacification with the Archdukes, or their ſucceſſours, by the meanes of the king of England &c. the ſaid Archdukes and their ſucceſſours would alwayes willingly hearken vnto that which ſhould be propounded therein, and would deſire, that by the helpe of the king of England &c. they might be brought to imbrace equall conditions; wherein they ſhould well vnderſtand how much the ſaid Archdukes did attribute vnto the king of England.

The laſt three articles were for the comprehending of the allies, friends, and confederats of the ſaid princes in this preſent treatie, the which they did ſeuerally and particularly name: and for the ratification, confirmation, and due obſeruation of the ſaid treatie. I

There was alſo an order ſet down touching marchandiſe of high Germanie to be tranſported into Spaine, and free from the impoſition of thirtie in the hundred, whereby the Conſtable of Caſtille, hauing ſpeciall procuration from the Catholike king, did promiſe that it ſhould be lawfull for the ſubjects of the king of England &c. to conuey marchandiſe out of high Germanie, being ſubject to the impoſition of thirtie in the hundred, and could not without paiment thereof, be carried into Spaine, the ſame marchandiſe being firſt conueyed into England, and there diſcharged and cuſtomed, and from thence to bee afterwards tranſported into Spaine, or any other of the king of Spaines dominions, without paiment of thirtie in the hundred; ſo as the ſaid merchandiſe had not paid any thing to the Hollanders and Zelanders, or other enemies of the king of Spain and the Archdukes: which marchandiſe they ſhould conuey in their owne ſhips, and not in any belonging to any other prince or nation. And, to auoid fraud, the marchandiſe of high Germany, which ſhould be tranſported out of England, Scotland, and Ireland, into the dominions of the king of Spaine and the Archdukes, ſhould be regiſtred and marked with the ſeale of the towne from whence it came, and a certificat ſent from the magiſtrat of the ſaid towne, teſtifying, that the ſaid marchandiſe were diſcharged in England, Scotland, or Ireland, and that they had paid cuſtome there; vpon paine of the kings diſpleaſure, & the loſſe of their offices, and other puniſhments, to bee inflicted at the kings pleaſure vpon the magiſtrats of townes vnder the obedience of the king of England &c. which are to certifie the vnlading of ſhips, and the regiſtring thereof, if they ſhall herein commit any fraud. And what marchandiſe ſoeuer of high Germanie, ſhall not be diſcharged in England, Scotland, or Ireland, and yet to be tranſported into Spaine, and other the dominions of the king of Spaine, all ſuch marchandiſe ſhall be confiſcated, and reputed good prize. K L

There were alſo three articles concluded, concerning a moderation to be had in the proceedings in the Inquiſition in Spaine, againſt the king of Englands ſubiects.

Firſt, If they exceeded in any thing before their entrance into Spaine, they ſhould not be called into the Inquiſition for the ſame, neither ſhould they bee moleſted for any of thoſe things ſo committed out of Spaine, neither ſhould any account be demaunded of them for the ſame. M

2 That no man ſhould compell them to enter into churches, vnleſſe they would, but if they did enter, they ſhould performe thoſe dueties and reuerence which are vſed towards the holy Sacrament of the Altar, being there; and if they ſhould ſee the Sacrament comming towards them in any ſtreet, they ſhall doe reuerence by bowing their knees

A knees, or elſe they ſhall paſſe aſide by ſome other ſtreet, or turne into ſome houſe. 1604

3 If any of the ſaid perſons being maſters or maſters mates, or any other officers of ſhips which be not their owne, doe exceed in any of theſe things, the Inquiſition proceeding againſt them by office, is onely to ſequeſter their own proper goods, and are to leaue the ſhips and all other goods, not belonging to the offenders, free: and the ſame was to be vnderſtood for all traders and factors.

During this treatie betwixt England and Spaine, the defence of traffique betwixt France and the dominions of the king of Spaine and the Archdukes, was verie troubleſome. The French ſuffered great diſcommodities, and the Spaniards found this reſtraint Diſcomodities for the ceſſation of traffique.

B heauie and inſupportable, for that all things grew exceeding deere, and the tradeſmen murmured, and grew almoſt deſperat. The Pope commaunded his Nuntio to deale in this buſineſſe, and to reconcile theſe princes; but the French king would not yeeld to any thing, vntill that the Spaniards, who had firſt troubled the water, had cleered it againe, in reuoking the impoſition of thirtie in the hundred, which made the libertie of traffique a meere ſeruitude, and the profit an aſſured loſſe. This was verie ſeuere and rigorous. It is in euerie kind bitter vnto the marchant, couetouſneſſe hauing changed the firſt cauſe, as well as the quantitie of cuſtomes and impoſts. At the firſt they were paied onely to haue free libertie and aſſurance of paſſage from one place vnto another; and for that princes haue vnder their protection the highwayes (for the which they are called Royall)

C they did acknowledge this right of protection with ſome duetie. Such impoſitions for ſo neceſſarie cauſes are juſt, others are not, and yet they muſt be borne, being not lawfull for the ſubiect to murmure againſt the cuſtomes and impoſts wherewith the prince doth charge him. They ſaid, That the Spaniards, which are long in their conſultations, and conſtant in their reſolutions, would neuer reuoke this impoſition, for that they would not looſe the reputation of conſtancie in their lawes, and bee noted of inconſtancie and lightneſſe, by applying themſelues to the time and affaires. But there was no remedie, the deputies of the two kings and Archdukes meeting, tooke off the impoſition, and ſet the commerce free. Commerce ſet at liberty in France.

The peace being fully concluded betwixt England and Spaine, and ſworne by the D king of England in the preſence of the king of Spaines Commiſſioners, the Conſtable of Caſtille hauing receiued great honour in England, both in his entertainment and preſents giuen him from the king, returned into Flanders, much ſatisfied in himſelfe, to carrie home with him ſuch joyfull tidings. From thence hee paſt into France, where the French king vſed him ſo royally, as hee afterwards ſaid, That hee had entertained him as a king, and intreated him as a kinſman. Conſtable of Caſtille returns into Spaine.

In the yeare a thouſand ſix hundred and foure the king of Great Britaine ſent the earle of Nottingham, high Admirall of England, into Spaine, to take the Catholike kings oath, for the confirmation of the peace, as hee did the earle of Hartford vnto the Archdukes, to the ſame end. The ſayd earle of Nottingham, being atten- 1605 Earle of Notingham ſent into Spaine.

E ded on by a gallant traine of noblemen, knights, and gentlemen, arriued at the Groine, where hee was no ſooner diſcouered from the land, but D. Lewis de Carilla de Toledo, marqueſſe of Caraſcena, Gouernour both of the towne and of the countrey of Gallicia, gaue order for his entertainment, the which was verie royally performed.

At his comming into the harbour, a fort vpon the North ſide of the towne, did firſt ſalute him with twentie peeces of ordnance: then a fort lately built vpon a rocke, with ſix and thirtie peeces; and laſtly from the towne and caſtle with aboue thirtie peeces of ordnance: And the earles ſhip, with the whole fleet, beeing at an anchor, requited them with all their ordnance. Preſently after the Gouernour

F ſent foure chiefe officers of the towne, with D. Iohn de Pacheco, his brother, and D. Lewis de Carilla de Toledo his onely ſonne, to welcome the earle. After ſome time ſpent in complements, the Gouernour himſelfe came aboord the earles ſhip in a barge, the mariners and rowers being in blew ſilke caſſockes and cappes, and the barge couered with blew veluet. After hee had ſaluted the earle, he told him, That the king his maſter had giuen vnto him an eſpeciall charge to haue a reſpect

1605 who he was that came embaſſadour, from whom hee came, and to whom hee was ſent: G and that he ſhould doe euerie thing for the honour of theſe three perſons, not ſparing any thing that might be fit for his Lordſhips entertainment. Wherefore hee did intreat the earle to goe to land, the which he did forbeare vntill the next day; ſo as that night hee ſent vnto his Lordſhip a preſent of fiſh, fruits, bread, and ſuch commodities as the countrey yeelded.

He lands at the Groine.

On Tueſday, the ſixteenth of Aprill, the earle of Nottingham prepared to goe to ſhore, to his lodging, which was appointed in the gouernours houſe. The gouernour hauing taken care to receiue his Lordſhip in moſt honourable manner, had (vpon notice of his comming to the Groine) cauſed a bridge of timber, being aboue fortie yards H long, to be built and painted, the which was garniſhed with many penciles of ſilke of diuers colours. The way into the towne was ſet on either ſide with boughes of bayes and Orange trees, and ſtrewed with ruſhes and flowers. The whole garriſon of the towne, and other companies that were drawne out of the countrey, were there readie to make a gard for him.

His Lordſhip being readie to land, the gouernour ſent diuers of the Commaunders to let him vnderſtand, that he and the magiſtrats of the towne would attend him on the bridge. Whereupon the earle tooke his barge, and (being followed by his whole traine) went vnto the bridge, where the Spaniards entertained the Engliſh as they landed, the haultboyes and ſhagbots playing all the while. Being all landed, they entred into the I towne an Engliſh man and a Spaniard marching together in verie good order. At their entrance into the towne they were ſaluted with a great volley of ſhot, both great and ſmall; and ſo they went on foot to the gouernours houſe, where, when the earle entred, there were many chambers ſhot off.

During the earle of Nottinghams ſtay at the Groine, hee ſolemnized Saint Georges feaſt, the which was performed with the greater ſtate, for that the people came thither in troupes to ſee that ceremonie; and it was thought the gouernor (being inuited) would haue dined with his Lordſhip, but hee fearing to heare ſomething that might touch the king, his maſter, in honour, excuſed himſelfe, and ſo retired, hauing ſeene his Lordſhip ſet downe: But hearing, after dinner, by his owne brother, that there was not any K thing that might giue cauſe of offence, or exception, hee was ſorie, and did accompanie his Lordſhip at ſupper, whither many ladies and gentlewomen came to ſee the order of that State.

On the foure and twentieth of Aprill D. Blaſco d' Arragon, nephew to the duke of Terranoua, who had beene in England the yeare before with the Conſtable of Caſtille, came from Court, being ſent from the king his maſter, to ſalute his Lordſhip, and to acquaint him with ſuch preparations as were made for him and his traine for that journey. There was alſo D. Gaſpar de Bullion, the kings chiefe Harbinger, who came with commiſſion from the king, to prouide all things neceſſarie for his Lordſhips journey. After ſome conference (notwithſtanding they had promiſed there ſhould be no want of any thing) they L found, that the whole countrey would not furniſh mules ynow, there being ſix hundred and fiftie perſons, beſides the carriages, which were verie many. Wherupon his Lordſhip reſolued to leaue ſome of his owne companie aboord his ſhips vntill his returne. There were foure coaches and foure litters attended them at Villafranca, beſides their riding mules, whereof there was a coach and a litter for his Lordſhips owne vſe, another coach and a litter for ſir Charles Cornwallis, who was then ſent to be embaſſador leager in Spaine, and the reſt for the knights and gentlemen which ſhould be ſicke.

During his Lordſhips ſtay at the Groine, hee was entertained with ſundrie ſports, the which were performed in a ſquare made of purpoſe on the market place; as aſſaulting of a caſtle by armed knights, and freeing a ladie from foure monſters which defended it, fighM ting at barriers, and in the end verie rare fire-works, the which were generally commended for their ſtrangeneſſe. After which his Lordſhip, hauing all his traine furniſhed with mules, began his journey towards the Court the 3 of May, the gouernor and magiſtrats bringing him out of the town with muſick & ſhot. He was accompanied by D. Blaſco d' Arragon, & D. Gaſpar de Bullion, chief harbinger to the K. who had the charge of the conduct.

Earle of Nottingham goes from the Groine

His

A His Lordſhip paſt from the Groyne to Bytance, to Villa Alua Lugo, Terra Caſtella; 1605
Cebrera, Villa Franca, Bubibre, Aſtorga (where his Lordſhip ſaw a fayre caſtle belonging to the marqueſſe of Aſtorga) Baneſa, Benauent, Villa Garcia: and from thence hee had order to goe to Simancas, which was as farre as Vailledolit: To which towne his Lordſhip came in twelue dayes, hauing beene honourably receiued in all places where he paſt. His Lordſhip comming to Simancas on Tueſday the 14 of May, he had order from the king, not to come to Court till Thurſday. On the Wedneſday after dinner there came D. Pedro de Suniga, or Eſtuniga, newly appointed embaſſadour for England, and D. Iohn de Taxis, ſonne to the earle of Villa Mediana, then embaſſador in England;
B who hauing ſaluted his Lordſhip, departed againe.

On Thurſday, his Lordſhip being appointed to goe to Court, there came to attend He goes to Court.
him the marqueſſe of Cameraſa, D. Pedro de Suniga, D. Iohn de Taxis D. Blaſco d' Arragon, with diuers other knights and gentlemen of the kings houſe and chamber, bringing diuers coaches with them. Simancas was not aboue ſix Engliſh miles from Court. Vpon the way the earle of Nottingham was perſuaded to goe into a banqueting houſe which ſtood vpon the highway, and to ſee the delicacie of their orchards and gardens, and to taſt of the fruits: but it was rather to ſtay for the noblemen which were appointed by the king to meet him. During his ſtay in this garden, there was a horſe preſented vnto him from the king, which he did vſually ride on. After an houres ſtay, there came diuers
C Grandoes, and other noblemen, the chiefe whereof were, the duke of Frias Conſtable Noblemen that met the Earle of Nottingham.
of Caſtille (lately embaſſadour in England) the duke of Infantaſgo, the duke of Albuquerque, the duke of Cea, the duke of Seſſa, the duke of Paſtrana, the marqueſſe of S. German, the earle of Chinchon, the earle of Punno en Roſtro, the marqueſſe of Baneza, the earle of Aguilar, the earle of Beroſa, the earle of Nieua, the earle of Corunna, the earle of Paredes, the marqueſſe of Carpio, the marqueſſe of Tauera, the marqueſſe of Villanoua, the earle of Salinas, the marqueſſe of Seralua, the marqueſſe de Fuentes, the marqueſſe of Alcanices, the earle of Galues, the Admirall of Arragon, with many other lords and knights. The earle with all theſe nobles, and his whole traine, being vpon the way, the weather being exceeding hot, there fell a verie great ſhowre, which
D continued vntill they came into the towne, where his lodging was appointed in the houſe of the earle of Salinas, not farre from Court. There was a multitude of people, and eight hundred coaches (as it was thought) full of ladies and gentlewomen, gotten out of the towne to ſee the earle and his companie. I omit the manner of their marſhalling with the Spaniſh knights and lords. They entred by a gate called Puerta del Campo, and paſſed through the chiefe parts of the towne, by the Court gate, the king, queene, and ladies, ſtanding (as they ſaid) at certaine windowes, to take view of the companie. That night there came diuers noblemen, and the queene ſent her Major Domo to viſit his Lordſhip: which cauſed ſome admiration in the Spaniards, who ſaied, they neuer knew the like fauour done to any embaſſador.

E The day after, his Lordſhip comming to Vailledolit, D. Franciſco Gomes de Sandoual, duke of Lerma, the kings great fauourite, being accompanied by many dukes and earles, came to viſit him, and ſo conſequently all embaſſadours, and moſt of the Grandoes and noblemen of the Court, came to viſit him, and congratulate his comming. He had his firſt audience on Saturday the eighteenth of May. In the morning the king ſent the earle of Galues, and diuers of his priuie chamber, to viſit his Lordſhip. In the afternoone the Conſtable came accompanied with aboue twentie noblemen, wherof three or foure were The Earle goes to Court.
of the Grandoes, bringing many coaches with them, to conduct his Lordſhip and his companie to Court. The kings gard made a way for them them to the preſence chamber doore, they being three hundred in number, Suiſſes, Spaniards, and Wallons, at-
F tired in red and yellow veluet, but of ſeuerall faſhions. At the palace gate ſtood the duke of Infantaſgo, and the marqueſſe of Vellada, with diuers noblemen, knights, and gentlemen, to receiue his Lordſhip, & to conduct the companie into the preſence, where the king ſat vnder a rich cloth of Eſtate, and by him eight Grandoes of Spaine couered. His Audience.
His Lordſhip hauing deliuered his meſſage by his interpretor, & his letters into the kings own hands, cõming from his chaire, he gaue his Lordſhip a very kind & honorable enter-

1605 tainment, cauſing him to ſit neere vnto him: which fauour was much obſerued, as a thing (ſayd the Spaniards) neuer vſed to any embaſſadour before that time. After ſome conference, the noblemen and gentlemen hauing kiſt the kings hand, his Lordſhip was conducted by the Conſtable and others, to the queenes preſence, where ſhee ſate vnder a rich cloth of Eſtate, and the Infanta by her: hee was receiued by the Major Domo to the queene, and conducted to her preſence: where hauing ended his complements, being ſomewhat late, he tooke his leaue, and returned with thoſe dukes and lords vnto his lodging. G

King of Spaine goes in proceſſion.

On the nineteenth of May, being Sunday, the king went in proceſſion, going firſt to S. Paules church neere the Court, and then through the town to S. Maries, after this maner. H Firſt went the Monkes and religious Orders ſinging, and bearing croſſes, banners, and other church reliques, the Sacrament being alſo carried by foure officers of the Church. Then followed diuers noblemen in their rankes, according to their degrees. And next before the kings owne perſon went the younger of the princes of Sauoy. After king followed the cardinall, being Archbiſhop of Toledo, and with him the prince of Sauoy his elder brother. Then followed the prince of Maroc, with the Emperours embaſſador, the embaſſador of France, and he of Venice: after whom followed diuers gentlemen of the kings chamber, and the reſt of the traine.

Chriſtening of the prince of Spaine.

After dinner the ſame day there was preparation made for the Chriſtening of the prince. There was a large ſcaffold made for their paſſage at the end of a long gallerie, I and joyned to the church; the timber of which ſcaffold was couered with rich cloth of gold. They came vnto the church after this manner. The trumpets were ſet in ſeuerall companies neere vnto the church, ſtill ſounding, and anſwering one another. About foure of the clocke there paſt by this ſcaffold, to go into Saint Paules church, the Knights, Lords, and Grandoes going before, and ſome Dukes of eſpeciall name bearing ſundrie ceremonies, as the ſalt carried by one, a wax taper by another: then came the Conſtable, who carried the Crowne, before whom went the king at Armes. The duke of Lerma bare the prince in his armes, being tied vnto him with a rich ſcarfe; he was aſſiſted by the prince of Sauoy, and the earle of Miranda. Then followed the Infanta in a chaire, the which diuers gentlemen of the kings bed-chamber, and priuie chamber, carried on their K ſhoulders, the younger prince of Sauoy going by. At the church doore the cardinall attended them in his pontificall robes, hauing three biſhops, and other officers of the Church with him; and ſo they conducted them with ſinging vnto the Font, the which was richly couered with a canopie of cloth of gold. The cardinall performed the ceremonie; the which ended with church muſicke, ſounding of trumpets, and other wind inſtruments: and ſo they returned as they came, being accompanied by moſt of the great Ladies of the Court and kingdome. The prince was Chriſtened by the name of Philip Domingo Victor. The elder prince of Sauoy was his godfather, of whom he tooke the name of Victor, and the Infanta, his ſiſter, was his godmother. The Lord embaſſador of England was placed in the earle of Ribadauias houſe, both to ſee the proceſſion in the mor- L ning, and the prince going to the Chriſtening: after which he was conducted by a priuat way into the church, to ſee the ceremonie.

Churching of the queene of Spaine.

The next day, being Monday, the embaſſador leger was preſented to the king, and gratiouſly allowed of by him. On Tueſday the Lord embaſſador was conducted to S. Maries church by D. Blaſco d'Arragon, to ſee the ceremonie of the queenes Churching, whither the king and queene came together, the king being on horſebacke, and the queene in a verie rich carroch of cloth of gold, drawne with foure horſes, hauing their furnitures of cloth of gold, with whom the Infanta ſat. After which, in another carroch, came the yong prince, in the armes of an auncient ladie: and then followed two other carroches of blacke veluet, with diuers ducheſſes, counteſſes, and other great perſonages, widowes. M Then came foure other carroches, all of one faſhion, with diuers ladies, the queenes maides. This was the firſt day of the queenes going abroad, and as it was held, her Churching day.

Earle of Nottingham feaſted by the Conſtable

That day the Lord embaſſador was inuited to dine with the Conſtable, where he was accompanied by the dukes of Albuquerque, & of Seſſa, & others: where there wanted not any

A any thing that the countrie could yeeld for his entertainment. On Friday being the 20 of May there were certaine preſents, ſent by the king of England, deliuered, the king and Queene comming themſelues into a priuat garden to receiue them. They were ſixe horſes, three for the king, and three for the Queene, with ſaddles and clothes verie richly imbrodered, two Croſſe-bowes with ſheafes of arrowes, foure fowling peeces, with their furnitures, all verie richly garniſhed and inlaied with plates of gold, and a couple of lime-hounds: which preſents were kindlie receiued, the king and Queene admiring the faſhion and richneſſe thereof. 1605

Preſents ſent to the king and Queen of Spain

On Tueſday the eight & twentieth of May, the Lord embaſſador, with all the Engliſh
B were inuited to dine with the duke of Lerma, where they were verie honorably entertained to their great contentment: he was accompained at the table by the duke of Lerma, the duke of infantaſgo, and the duke of Albuquerque. They were attended on at the table by Marqueſſes, Earles, Knights, and gentlemen of the kings priuy-chamber, and few others.

Embaſſador feaſted by the duke of Lerma.

Hauing receiued what pleaſure could be deuiſed at the table, they were afterwards caried down into a faire Court, paued with ſquare ſtone, in the middeſt wherof was a fountaine of cleere water; the whole Court was couered with canuas to keep them from the heat of the Sunne: There was a ſtage ſet vp in this Court with al things fitting for a play, which the embaſſadour and the reſt were inuited to ſee. The king and Queene were alſo
C in priuat to ſee this Comedie.

The day appointed for the taking of the kings Othe, was vpon Thurſday the thirtieth of May, being Corpus Chriſti day; on the which the king went in proceſſion; and for that hee would bee ſeene by the Engliſh, hee appointed to paſſe by the gate where the embaſſador was lodged, after this manner.

King of Spaine goes in proceſſion.

Firſt there came eight great Giants, three men, three women, and two Moores, with a Taber and pipe playing, and they dauncing: Then followed certaine Pilgrimes clad in blew: After whome fiue and twenty or ſixe and twenty croſſes, belonging to ſeuerall Churches, with many pictures and holy relikes, Monkes, Morris dancers like Gipſies, Beaſtes with fire workes, wild men, and ſuch like vanities, as it ſhould ſeeme, to draw the D people more readily to admiration: After theſe followed diuers other Church-relikes, with certaine Auguſtine and Franciſcane Friers, with their relikes. Many Church-men had Tapers in their hands: the kings Pages bare Torches: Then followed the Sacrament carried by foure Church-men in rich Copes; after whome came the Noble men, and Grandoes of Spaine; and then followed the king with a Taper light in his hand, of white Virgin waxe: after whome came the Cardinals, the embaſſadors to the emperor, French, and Venetians, the Prince of Sauoy, the Prince of Maroc, with others, euerie one carrying a Taper light.

The ſame day D. Blaſco de Arragon brought word vnto the Lord embaſſador that the king expected his comming preſently vnto the Court for the taking of the othe: where-
E fore there was order taken that the Noblemen and Gentlemen which ſhould attend him thither, ſhould be furniſhed with Genets out of the kings ſtable. Being all mounted, the Conſtable D. Pedro de Suniga, with many other Lords and Knights, were ſent to accompany him: And at the court gate the duke of Lerma and ſome other of the Grandoes ſtaied to receiue him; by whome hee was conueied through a long gallerie into a preſence, and ſo into an inner chamber, where the king ſtaied his comming, and receiued him with a kind ſalutation, and ſo took him along with him. The kings Sergeants at armes going firſt, then followed the Noblemen and Grandoes of Spain, then the foure kings at arms, in their coats of armes; after whome came the duke of Lerma, bearing the ſword naked, not vpright, as the cuſtome is in England, but lying vpon his left ſhoulder; and in this or-
F der the king marcht to a verie faire banqueting houſe, newly built, the embaſſadour leeger, the Lords, and diuers others following.

King of Spaine takes the othe.

The king being ſet in his eſtate, the Lord embaſſadour & the Leeger were placed vpon his left hand, the Grandoes and other Noblemen of Spaine, beeing on the right, but two degrees lower. There was a little table ſet before the king, wheron lay the Bible and a Crucifix vpon it. The Archbiſhop of Toledo red the othe: at one part of the othe the embaſſador

1605 baſſadour held the kings hands betweene his, to which othe the king ſwore kneeling and G laying his hand vpon the booke, and afterwards ſubſcribed the articles concluded by both kings.

Iuego de Toro and Iuego de Cana.

On the laſt of May there was preparation made for certaine ſports, as Iuego de Tora, & Iuego de Cana, where there was a careful order taken that al the Engliſh ſhold be placed to ſee thoſe ſights. About noone the king and Queene came on Horſebacke after the Spaniſh maner, being attended on by many Lords and Ladies. The Lord embaſſador was in one roome with the king and Queene, and the other Lords not farre off. Theſe ſports were performed in the market place, being built round about with ſcaffolds, & the ground couered with ſand. There were fourteen buls ſlaine that day, not without danger to ma- H ny that were actors, and the loſſe of ſome of their liues. Which being ended began their ſports of Iuego de Cana, wherein the king himſelfe was an actor: Firſt there came in twelue Atabales or kettle drums; then followed thirty Trumpets, al clad in Caſſaks of red and white tafata; then followed twelue great mules, called Aſemulaes with couerings of crimſon veluet, bearing bundles of canes, chained together with great hooks of ſiluer; then followed the kings Gentlemen and Pages richly ſuited, being 32 in number.

For the two Princes of Sauoy, there came two Pages riding, bearing white targuets on their armes: after whome were led three horſes, with capariſons of blacke veluet, richly imbrodered with pearle: then followed twelue other horſes, their capariſons of blacke veluet, but imbrodered with ſiluer. For the duke of Lerma were led ſix horſes with capa- I riſons of white and red; his Groomes and Pages attending were ſuteable. For the Conſtable were led foure and twenty horſes of ſeruice in white and greene, his Pages and groomes all ſuted alike. There were eighty horſemen which were actors that day in thoſe ſports, being diuided into eight bands or companies: beſides the king and the reſt aboue named, there were many of the Grandoes, and they were all men of ſpeciall note in the Court of Spaine: whoſe names for breuities ſake I omit: At the firſt they came riding in ſwiftly by couples, with their targuets on their ſhoulders, and ſhaking their ſtaues after the maner of the Moores and Arabians. Being all come in, they diuided themſelues into two parts, either ſide hauing foure ſquadrons, and euerie ſquadron ten in number: Being al ready, the kings ſide firſt gaue the charge, and the others anſwered them, & ſo they cō- K tinued chaſing one another, ſquadron after ſquadron, and caſting their canes one after another, for the ſpace of an houre, and ſo the ſport ended.

Shew of the kings Horſemen

On the firſt of Iune, the Lord embaſſador was inuited to ſee the kings horſemen in arms in a ſpacious place called El Campo, conſiſting of launces, light horſemen and Carbines, to the number of two thouſand, of the which the duke of Lerma was generall: theſe troups after ſome ſallies one vpon another, and certaine skirmiſhes, drew themſelues into a ring, and ſo marching vnder the window whereas the king, Queene and embaſſadour ſtood, went their way.

Mask at Court.

On the ſixt of Iune he was requeſted to ſee a maske, & about ſix of the clock in the eue- ning D. Blaſco d' Arragon came to conduct his Lordſhip, and the reſt through a priuate L gallery of the kings, to the appointed place which was the new built banqueting houſe, where his Lordſhip and his followers were conueniently appointed. The roome was furniſhed with 320 wax lights, all ſet in ſtanderds of ſiluer of diuers faſhions. Where after ſome ſongs and muſicke, the maske appeared after this manner.

There came firſt of al 30 muſitions, in long roabs of crimſon tafata, wel ſet out to ſhew, playing on ſeueral inſtruments. After whome followed ſix Virgins dancing, one bearing in her hand a ſun, another a branch of an Oliue tree, another an anchor, another a ſword with two points, on either point a bunch of flowers.

Then followed a Chariot of an antick faſhion, drawn by two liued horſes, being exceeding little: In the vpper part whereof ſat the Infanta, with a Scepter of gold in her hand, M hauing the picture of a Doue at the vpper end of it: at her feet ſat two other Virgins, who attended her, and on either ſide went diuers pages bearing torches of white waxe.

At the vpper end of the hal there was a rich State built all of Maſons work aſcending vp by degrees, richly guilt, and garniſhed with ſundrie ſtatues guilt alſo; in which ſtate there were three chaires ſet, two great, & one leſſer, which was betwixt the other two. In which

1605

A which middle chaire the Infanta being taken out of her Chariot was placed; the two virgins neere her, and the other ſixe vpon the degrees at the foot of the eſtate. At the nether end of the Hall ſtood the maskers in a gallerie, made of purpoſe, who vpon drawing of a curtaine, appeared as it were in clouds: They were eight and twentie Knights & Ladies beſides torch-bearers, whereof the king and Queen made two, the reſt were al Grandoes, and men of great honour; the Ladies were the Queens Maides. The gallerie being built in maner of an arch, and ſet full with looking glaſſes, did with the light of torches ſhine as if it had beene ful of Starres. The muſick playing, the maskers deſcended by foure and foure at a time, vpon a ſtage made in faſhion of a cloud vntill the whole number was
B come forth dancing together in good forme and meaſure. Hauing danced a while, they all vnmasked themſelues, the king and Queene ſitting in the chaires aboue mentioned, where after ſome other dances the ſport ended.

On the ſeuenth of Iune the Lord embaſſadour was appointed to take his leaue of the king, and returne for England. Before his comming to Audience, the king ſent by D. Pedro de Suniga, and ſome others, to the number of foureteene chaines of gold, or thereabouts, for ſome of the kings Seruants, and his lordſhips chiefe officers: hauing likewiſe ſent before by the ſaid D. Pedro, vnto the Lords, and to many knights, and other eſpecial men of his Lordſhips companie, ſeuerall Iewels and chaines which were verie rich. In the afternoone the king ſent vnto the embaſſadour a verie rich preſent of Iewels, both for
C himſelf and his Lady, the which were preſented vnto him by D. Blaſco, and brought by the maſters and officers of the jewel houſe, whome he rewarded honorably.

Not long after the Conſtable came with ſome others to conduct him to his Audience, where, after ſome priuate conference with the king, hee tooke his leaue, hauing receiued many gracious words from his Maieſtie, as alſo a ring with a Diamond, which ſome valued at three thouſand pounds, the which the king put vpon his finger, in token (as hee ſaid) of wedding him perpetually in true loue. After which the king commanded the duke of Infantaſgo, to conduct him vnto the Queen, where hauing performed all due complements he tooke his leaue alſo of her Highneſſe. And the ſame day (being accompanied, a mile out of the Towne, by the Conſtable and ſome other Noblemen) he began his iour-
D ny towards England, and on the fifteenth day came to Saint Andreas where his ſhips attended him. Where being arriued, and all things ready for his imbarking, hee ſhewed his bountie in rewarding D. Blaſco, the Apoſentador or chiefe Harbinger, and al the kings officers & ſeruants that attended him, with great chains of gold, faire Iewels of good value, and large ſums of money, to their generall content. After which hauing feaſted them on ſhipboard, hee put to ſea on the 25 day of Iune.

Thus haue I ſummarily ſet downe the ſubſtance of the Earle of Nottinghams honorable entertainment at the Court of Spaine, when as he was ſent thither embaſſador for the ſwearing of the othe: with the which I will end this Hiſtorie, and conclude my labour with his Lordſhips ſafe returne into England.

FINIS.

G

Obſeruations touching the ſtate and gouernment of Spaine.

H

FOr as much as my Authour in the beginning of this Hiſtorie hath made an exact deſcription of Spaine, ſetting downe the number of leagues the whole continent doth containe in circuit, deſcribing the principall riuers within the Countrie, with their Springs and courſes, ſetting downe the mountaines and hils, and diſtinguiſhing the Prouinces, within the countrie, as they lye at this day, and by whome they were in ancient time inhabited, with a declaration of the fertilitie, riches, and commodities of the Countrie: I haue thought good to adde ſomething touching the gouernment of that ſtate, with ſome other obſeruations concerning that ſubiect, the which I haue collected out of ſuch as haue beene curious to ſee, obſerue, and write thereof. I

The king of Spaine, as hee is a potent Prince and Lord of many countries, ſo hath hee many Councels for the managing of their affaires, diſtinctly & apart, without any confuſion, euerie Councell treating only of thoſe matters which concerne their Iuriſdiction & charge, and meddle not one with anothers buſineſſe: with which Councels and with the Preſidents, being men of chiefe note, the king doth conferre touching matters belonging to the good gouernment, preſeruation, & increaſe of his Eſtates, and hauing heard euerie mans opinion, he commands that to be executed that ſhall be held moſt fit and conuenient. The firſt is, K

Councel of ſtate. The Councel of ſtate; wheron the reſt depend. They name Viceroyes for all the king of Spaines countries, and prouide for many things for the preſeruation of his realms. The king himſelfe is Preſident of this Councell: the Counſellours, who are the chiefe men in the court, haue no fees.

Councell of warre. The Councell of warre. It prouides for Generals, Colonels, Captaines, the Generall of the gallies, and for whatſoeuer concernes the war, with the aduice of his Majeſtie, who is preſident of this Councell. They puniſh all commanders and officers at warre that doe not their duties. And in like maner they diſpoſe of the companies of men at arms appointed for the gard of the kingdom, and they giue order for the artillerie, munition, and fortifications, or any thing that is neceſſary for the warre. The counſellors haue no wages. L

Councell of iuſtice. The royall Councel of juſtice. Here they treat of the good gouernment of all Spaine, they determine controuerſies betwixt Noblemen, and eaſe the greeuances of other Courts. This councell is of great preheminence: the preſident names al Iuſtices of Spain, the Prouoſts of the kings houſe, with many other Counſellors and Iuſtices. They take information how euerie one hath behaued himſelfe in his charge, puniſhing and changing as they ſhall think good, but with the kings priuity. There is a Preſident, and ſixteen counſellors, who haue all wages.

Councel of Italy. The Councell of Italie: which treats of matters concerning the realms of Naples and Sicile, and the Duchie of Milan. The Conſtable of Caſtille is Preſident: there are ſixe Counſellours, three Italians, and three Spaniards. In this Councell they diſpoſe of the gouernment of Italie, and giue aduancement to the Souldiers that ſerue in thoſe Countries; they appoint Gouernours, and Iudges in cities, and giue titles to Noblemen: but they firſt acquaint the king with their conſultations. M

The

A The Councel of the Indies. The Preſident is of greateſt eſteeme next vnto the councel royall: there are eight Counſellors, and haue all wages. They appoint Viceroys, for Peru, & Noua Hispagna, and a general of the army that goes into theſe parts, with all other Offices and Spirituall liuings. In this Councell they alſo treat of all greeuances and complaints, that come from the Indies, by way of appellation. All which things they impart vnto the king. They alſo appoint Viſitors to goe into thoſe Prouinces, to examine how all Officers carrie themſelues, and to heare the peoples greeuances; and they puniſh or diſmiſſe as they ſhall ſee cauſe. The Councell of the Indies.

The Councell of Orders. It hath a Preſident, and foure Counſellours, with wages, The Councell of Orders.
B hich muſt be Knights, of the Order of Saint Iames, Calatraua, or Alcantara. In this Councell they treat of ſuits, which happen in Prouinces belonging vnto theſe orders, and to ſee that the Knights weare their habits nearly. This Councell appoints two and twentie Iuſtices in their Prouinces, wherewith the royal Councell hath not to deale. They puniſh the Commanders and knights which obſerue not their orders. They diſpoſe of many Benefices, Vicarages, Chappels, and other Offices, in the Prouinces of their Orders; but all with the kings priuitie, and allowance.

The Councell which they call de Camera. It hath a Preſident and three Counſellors, Councell de Camera.
of the moſt ancient of the Councell Royall, which haue no wages. In this Councell they prouide ſuperiour officers for the Realme, and they diſpoſe of Biſhopricks, Chanonries, C and other Eccleſiaſtical liuings, the king hauing the nomination from the Pope of Rome.

The Councell of Hazienda: where there is a Preſident and three Counſellors, without Councell of Hazienda.
fees, wherein they treat of the kings reuenues, and of all dueties, entries & accompts, like vnto our Exchequer in England.

There is a Counſell of accompts: which conſiſts of foure Counſellours, in the which Councell of Accompts.
two of the kings chiefe Auditours haue place, and the moſt ancient Counſellor preſides. In this councell they determine of ſutes touching the ſubſidies and taxes, and giue order to Collectors, for recouerie thereof.

The Councel of Cruzada. It hath a Preſident, two Counſellours and three Anditours: Councell of the Cruzada.
Their charge is onely to diuide the Cruzado by the biſhopricks, and to ſend forth Com-D miſſaries to gather it.

The Councell of Arragon, Valentia and Cattalognia. It hath a Preſident, who is Councell of Arragon.
called Vicechancellour, with ſixe Counſellours, which haue wages. They treat of the gouernment of thoſe Realmes, and of the Ilands of Maiorca, Minorca, & Sardinia: they appoint gouernors and Iudges, and determine ſuits from thoſe places by way of appeale, and heare their greeuances, and to giue rewards in the kings chamber of thoſe realmes; all with his Maieſties approbation.

The Councell of the Inquiſition. The Preſident is called Inquiſitor Maior, an Office of Councell of the Inquiſition.
great dignitie, which moſt commonly the Archbiſhop of Toledo holdes: hee hath ſix counſellors, or Inquiſitors, they appoint all the Inquiſitors, Prouoſts, and Secretaries E in all the Inquiſitions within the Realme, which are aboue twentie, in either of which are three or foure Inquiſitors: who deale in matters of Hereſie, & with ſuch men as do or ſay any thing againſt the church of Rome. And before they condemne any offendor they ſend him to this Councell to determine of him.

The Councell of Deſcargos, treates of the paying of the old kings debts, and the exe- Councell of Deſcargos.
cution of their laſt wils.

There are two Chanceries in Spaine, one at Vailledolit, and another at Granado, Chanceries of Spaine.
either of which hath a Preſident and twelue Counſellors. They take knowledge of all ciuill cauſes which come vnto them by way of appeale from other inferiour courts. They alſo take knowledge of ſutes, for the eſtates and inheritances of No-
F blemen, from the which they may appeale to the Councel royall, if the matter in queſtion exceed the value of foure thouſand ducats. There are foure Alcaldes or Prouoſts of the Chancerie, who determine of all ciuill and criminall cauſes, within fiue leagues; from whome they appeale to the counſellours of the Chauncerie.

There is a Councell for the realme of Nauarre, where there is a Regent, ſixe Councel- Councell of Nauarre.
lors, and foure Alcaldes, or Prouoſts, they take knowledge of ſuites, both ciuill and criminall

minall within that Realme, and end them there, of what qualitie ſoeuer they be without G appeale, whereof they conſult euerie weeke with the Viceroy, who determines what they ſhall doe.

Counſel of Gallicia. There is alſo a Regent, 4 Conncellors, and 4 Prouoſts in the realm of Gallicia, who end all ſuits within that realme, but they deale not in queſtions of Nobilitie and Gentrie, which goe to the Chancerie of Vailledolit.

Councell of Souille. The Citie of Seuille with the dependances, hath a Regent, 6 Councellors, and 4 Prouoſts, who take knowledge of all ciuill and criminall matters, whereof the iudges of the ſaid citie or realm haue giuen ſentence. There is an appeale from them to the royal councel: all queſtions of Nobilitie goe to the Chancerie of Granado. H

Power of the Preſident of the Councell royall. The Preſident of the Councell royall of Iuſtice appoints all the Councellors, Prouoſts, Preſidents, & Regents of the Chanceries, & changeth them from one to another, & draws them to be Councellors of that Court: Moreouer he names ſixty and ſixe Gouernors of Cities and Prouinces, changing them as occaſion ſhall require. Theſe Gouernors or Iudges, haue commonly two or three Lieutenants in the townes of their gouernment. They or their Lieutenants, gouerne the cities or prouinces which are vnder their charge, with twelue or more Aldermen which hee hath in euerie citie and towne: which Aldermen doe onely deale with the maintenance of the citie, and with the publike works wherein they haue a voice, but the gouernours or their Lieutenants determine of al murthers, theſts, or other miſdemeanors: and puniſh according to the qualitie of the fact, I euerie Gouernour hath as much power in theſe matters, as the king himſelfe, the matter being iuſtifiable, and they may deale in al matters for that their Cõmiſſions are verie ample, repreſenting the kings perſon, from whome they doe appeale to the Chanceries of Vailledolit or Granado.

Reuenues of the king of Spaine. I am afraid to enter into any diſcourſe of the reuenues of this king, men write ſo diuerſly therof: ſome write that he hath but 14 millions of ducats, comming in yeerly, others ſay eighteen Millions, and ſome bring it to 23 millions, which differences may haply with ſome limitations bee reconciled: But whatſoeuer it bee, it is moſt certaine, that during the warres of the Low-countries, it was too little to mainteine his charge, for although K that Naples, Sicile, Milan, Sardinia, Maiorca and Minorca, Flaunders and Burgondie, yeeld him aboue fiue Millions yearely, yet there comes little of all this to his cofers, being imployed in the entertainment of Viceroys, Gouernors, Captaines, Garriſons, Officers, and other charges in thoſe countries. The kings reuenues in Spaine, riſe not from his demeanes, as in ſome other Countries, but from the great impoſitions which hee rayſeth vpon the ports of the Sea, and from his drie Ports, which bee the paſſages from one kingdome to another: and of all Merchandize which is ſold, hee takes ten in the hundred, and how often ſoeuer it be ſold. A great part of which Gabelles & Impoſitions in Spaine ſtands ingaged vnto the Genouois & other merchants for the paiment of the kings debts. Some hold that he hath not aboue fiue millions of ducats comming in cleerely to mainetaine the charges of his court, and all other extraordinary expences of war, gifts, penſions, L voyages and ſuch like.

The Impoſitions which are raiſed in Spaine, are not laid equally vpon all his Countries, but they lie moſt heauie vpon the two Caſtilles, Leon and Andaluzia, for in the realmes of Valencia, Arragon, and Cattelonia, hee impoſeth little, but mainteineth their priuiledges which be great, and they themſelues receiue the Gabbelles and cuſtomes, & not the king: the profit which growes there by confiſcations and pecuniarie fines, doth ſcarce entertaine his Viceroys and other officers. So as it ſeemes hee hath but merum imperium in thoſe three countries, they being alſo bound to ſerue him in his warres.

The king reapes great commoditie, by the popes fauor, from the Clergie; he giues him Buls of Croyſadoe; he enioyes the maſterſhips of S. Iames, Calatraua, Alcantara, & diſ- M poſeth of the Cõmanderies; he hath the firſt fruits of Eccleſiaſticall liuings, and a part of the tythes, which comes yearely to three millions of ducats at the leaſt; & he hath the nomination of all Archbiſhops, Abbots and Priors, yet he may not giue any benefices, but to naturall borne Spaniards, or to ſuch as haue beene formerly naturalized.

The

The Realmes which they number in Spaine, are theſe:

The Realme of Seuille.	The Realme of Gibraltar.
Cordoua.	Granado.
Iaen.	Murcia.
Toledo.	Caſtille.
Leon.	Gallicia.
Nauarre.	Arragon.
Valencia.	Cattelognia.

In theſe Realmes (beſides Arragon, Valencia, and Cattelognia) there are ſome Cities, which are called to the generall Eſtates, and haue voices for the Prouinces in which they are; the which be theſe:

Seuille.	Guadalajara.
Granado.	Segouia.
Cuenca.	Salamanca.
Madrid.	Zamorra.
Soria.	Vailledolit.
Auila.	Burgo.
Cordoua.	Toro.
Iaen.	Leon.
Toledo.	Murcia.

The names of all the chiefe Cities in Spaine and Portugall, and in what Prouinces they are:

In Gallicia.
Compoſtella.
Tuye.

In Aſturia of Ouiedo.
Mondenedo.
Leon.
Pomperado.

In Aſturia S. Ellene.
S. Ellene.

In Biſcaie.
Victoria.

In Nauarre.
Pampelone.

In Cattelognia.
Barcelona.
Tarragone.
Mouſon.
Seguença.

In Arragon.
Saragoſſa.
Tarrel.
Durago.
Valencia.

In Valencia.
Cuenca.
Segoruia.
Oraguella.

In Mancha.
Alacantye.
Segure.

In Granado.
Granado.
Almerie.
Carthagena.
Murcia.
Guadix.

In Andaluzia.
Seuille.
Cadiz.
Medina Sidonia.
Eſica.
Iaen.
Mallega.
Xeres.
Cordoua.
Vbeda.
Baeça.
Andujar.

In the Countie.
Aymonte.
Auyla.

In Caſtille.
Burgos.
Tarragone.
Guadalajara.
Segouia.
Calohorra.
Zamora.
Toro.
Medina del Campo.
In Spaine there are 57 Cities.
Salamanca.
Valentia.
Aſtorgo.

In Toledo.
Cuidad Royall.
Alcala de Henares.
Toledo.

In Eſtremadura.
Placentia.
Auyla.
Badajos.
Merida.

In Portugall.
Lisbone.
Euora.
Coimbra.
Porto.
Braga.
Bragance.
Cuidad Roderigo.
Beiria.
Cono.
Oliuenſa.
Eluas.
Guarda.
Settuual.
Selues.
Leria.
In Portugall there are 15 Cities.

Some haue obſerued in their late trauels, that the King of Spaine hath alwaies within that continent 56000 foot, which are muſtered and enrolled, and are bound to be readie in armes at the ringing of a bell, or the ſound of the drumme. The Grandos, Nobilitie, and Prelats of the Kingdome are charged with horſe, and they amount to the number of 16000. Beſides, the inhabitants of the ſea coaſts, and of diuers other Ports of his dominions within land, are bound to find horſe, which come to 12000 at the leaſt, all which muſt be readie at a moneths warning. This I had from the relation of a yong nobleman, wherein he hath ſhewed great induſtrie and judgement, but it may be there was ſome miſtaking in the writing of theſe great numbers of horſe.

A note of all the Hauens, Ports, and Fiſher Townes vpon the coaſt of Spaine, from Fontarabie in Biſcaie, to Barcelona in the Mediterranean ſea.

In Biſcaie.
Fontarabie, a bard hauen.
Paſſage and Renderie, an open hauen.
S. Sebaſtians, a bay hauen.
Sumaye and Guittario, bard.
Montrica and Deua, fiſher townes.
Mondac and Alequito, Fiſhers.
Vermeo and Placentia, Fiſhers.
Bilbao and Portugalete, bard hauen.

Aſturies.
Aluredo, a key hauen.
S. Ander, an open hauen.
S. Vincent de la Barkera, fiſher towne.
Aryba de Sella, Fiſhers.
Villaviciosa, Fiſhers.
Chynchon, a kay.
Torre, Fiſhers.
Peua, Fiſhers.
Loarca, bard hauen.
Auiles, bard hauen.

Gallicia.
Ribadeo, bard hauen.
Vuiero and Sidera, Fiſhers.
Farrol, open hauen.
The Groyne, an open hauen.
Mongea, bard hauen.
Corcauiana, bard hauen.
Muros, bard.
Porta viedra, bard hauen.
Vigo and Bayone, open hauen.

In

In the Countie.

Aymont, a bard hauen.
Selua and Palos, Fiſhers.

In Andaluzia.

S. Lucar de Barameda, it ſtands in the mouth of the riuer of Guadalquiuir, which goes vp to Seuille, Fiſher boats.
Seuille, bard hauen.
Rota, a kay.
Cadiz, an open hauen.
S. Marie Port, barred hauen.

Streits toward Barcelona.

Gibraltar, an open roade and kay.
Grand Malega, a kay roade.
Maruela, an open roade.
Velez Malega, a kay roade.
Almerie, Fiſhers.
Carthagena, a hauen.

In Valencia.

Alicante, which is the Port of Valencia, a hauen.
Valencia, a Creeke.

In Cattelonia.

Empullas, Taragona, Palamos, Empurias, Roſas } All Fiſher Townes.
Barcelona, an open hauen.

In Portugall.

Camina, a barred hauen.
Viana, barred.
Villa de Conde, barred.
Auero, barred.
Porto de Portugall, barred.
Caſcais, Fiſher Towne.
Lisbone, an open hauen.
Seſembrie, barred hauen.
Setun, an open hauen.
Largos, a kay.
Villanouas, a barred hauen.
Farouillas, barred.
Figera, Tauilla, Caſtromarin } Fiſher Townes.

I will not trouble my ſelfe nor the Reader in ſetting downe what ſhippes and barkes belong vnto theſe Ports and Hauens, as ſome haue done, being very variable and vncertaine: but I will onely make ſome mention of the king of Spaines forces at ſea, as I haue learned from thoſe that haue curiouſly inquired thereof, at their being in the countrey. The king maintaines vpon the coaſt of Spaine and Portugall ſome 40 good ſhippes and galleons, with 32 galleyes, beſides ſmaller veſſels. And beſides all theſe, he hath at Naples 25 galleyes, in Sicilie 16, and they of Genoua, which he entertaines continually, but the galleyes are none of his.

A Catalogue of the Princes which haue raigned in Spaine ſince the euerſion of the Romane Empire, with their Alliances and Succeſſions.

The Kings of the Gothes.

1 VAllia, firſt King of the Gothes, which ſetled himſelfe in Spaine about the yeare of our Lord 420
2 Theodoric the firſt. 440
3 Toriſmond. 453
4 Theodoric the ſecond. 458
5 Henry or Euric. 471
6 Alaric. 483
7 Genſalaric or Geſſelaric. 508
8 Amalaric. 511
9 Theude. 526
10 Theodiſcle. 544
11 Agila. 546
12 Aranagilde. 551
13 Luiba the firſt. 565
14 Leonigilde. 567
15 Ricarede. 585
16 Luiba the ſecond. 601
17 Victeric vſurper. 603
18 Gundamir. 610
19 Sizebuth. 612
20 Suintilla. 621
21 Sizenand. 631
22 Cinthilla. 637
23 Tulca. 641
24 Cindaſiunthe, and his ſonne. 642
25 Recceſiunthe. 652
26 Bamba. 672
27 Eruinge. 681
28 Egica. 688
29 Vitiza. 701
30 Roderic. 711

During the raigne of RODERIC, laſt King of the Gothes, the Arabians, Saracens, or Moores inuaded or conquered Spaine; againſt whom did riſe many Chriſtian Potentates, whoſe lines and deſcendant follow: that is,

The Line of Ouiedo and Leon. Fol. 1345
The Line of Caſtille. 1349
The Line of Nauarre. 1355
The Line of Arragon. 1362
The Line of Cattelogne. 1367
The Line of Portugall. 1369

The names of the Archbiſhops of Toledo. Fol. 1374

Moreouer, the names of the Kings and Princes Moores which haue raigned in Spaine, Fol. 1375.

The

The Line of Ouiedo and Leon.

I.

Pelagius first king of Ouiedo, ſonne to Fafila, Gouernour of Biſcaie.
Gaudioſa his wife.

Lawfull children { Fafila. / Ormiſinda.

II.

Fafila ſonne to Pelagius, in the yere 735, raigned two yeres, and died without children.
Froleua his wife.

III.

Alphonſo firſt of that name, ſonne to Peter, Gouernour of Biſcaie, in the yeare 737: he raigned 19 yeres.
Ormiſinda, daughter to king Pelagius, his wife.

Lawfull children { Froila. / Vimaran. / Aurelius. / Odeſinde, a daughter. / Mauregat, a baſtard.

IIII.

D. Froila the firſt of that name, ſonne to king Alphonſo 1. in the yeare 756: he raigned 11 yeres, 6 moneths.
Menine or Momerane, daughter to the Duke of Aquitaine, his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Alphonſo. / D. Bermund, or Veremund. / D. Ximena, mother to Bernard del Carpio.

V.

D. Aurelius brother to Froila, in the yeare 768: he raigned 6 yeares, and died without children.

VI.

D Silo husband to Odeſinde, daughter to king Alphonſo the firſt, in the yeare 774: he raigned 9 yeares, and died without children.

VII.

D. Mauregat, baſtard to king Alphonſo the firſt, an Vſurper, in the yere 783: he raigned fiue yeares and ſix moneths, and died without children.

VIII.

D. Bermond, or Veremund, ſonne to king Froila, and firſt of that name, in the yere 789: he raigned two yeares alone, and foure with Alphonſo his brother.
D. Imelona his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Ramir. / D. Garcia.

IX.

D. Alphonſo ſecond of that name, ſonne to king Froila, called the chaſt, in the yere 795: he raigned 29 yeres after the death of D. Bermund.
D. Berſia his wife, with whom he had no companie; and therefore he had no children.

X.

D. Ramir and D. Garcia, ſonnes to king Bermund, raigne together in the yeare 824: D. Ramir who ſuruiued, held the realme ſix yeares.

D. Vrraca of Caſtille wife to D. Ramir.

Lawfull children { D. Ordogno or Fortun. D. Garcia.

XI.

D. Ordogno or Fortun, firſt of that name, and ſonne to the king D. Ramir, in the yere 831: he raigned 10 yeres.

D. Nugna his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Alphonſo. D. Bermund. D. Nugno. D. Odoaire. D. Froila. D. N. a daughter.

XII.

D. Alphonſo third of that name, ſonne to king D. Ordogno, in the yere 841: he raigned 46 yeres.

D. Amelina, or as ſome ſay, Ximenia his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Garcia. D. Ordogno or Fortun. D. Froila. D. Gonſal the Archdeacon.

XIII.

D. Garria firſt of that name, ſonne to D. Alphonſo the third, in the yere 886: he raigned three yeres, and had to wife the daughter of D. Nugno Fernandes de Caſtille, and died without children.

XIIII.

D. Ordogno or Fortun, ſecond of that name, brother to D. Garcia, in the yeare 889: he raigned eight yeres.

D. Nugna or Eluira, as ſome ſay, his firſt wife.

Lawfull children { D. Sancho. D. Alphonſo. D. Ramir. D. Garcia. D. Ximena.

D Arragonde, or it may be Radagonde of Gallicia, his ſecond wife, repudiated.

D. Sancha, Infanta of Nauarre, third wife to this king D. Ordogno.

XV.

D. Froila ſecond of that name, and third ſonne to king Alphonſo the third, an vſurper, in the yeare 897: he raigned one yeare ſix moneths, ſurnamed the cruell.

D. Nugna or Munina his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Alphonſo. D. Ordogno, or Fortun. D. Ramir.

D. Froila, a baſtard, father to D. Pelagius the Deacon.

XVI.

D. Alphonſo fourth of that name, ſonne to the king D. Ordogno the ſecond, in the yere 898: he raigned 6 yeres.

D. Vrraca Ximenes Infanta of Nauarre his wife.

D. Ordogno or Fortun, called the bad.

D. Ramir,

XVII.

D.Ramir, ſecond of that name, brother to D. Alphonſo the fourth, in the yeare 904: he raigned 20 yeares.

D.Thereſia Infanta of Nauarre, his wife.

Lawfull children
- D.Bermond.
- D.Ordogno.
- D.Sancho.
- D.Eluira, a Nun.

XVIII.

D.Ordogno 3 of that name, ſonne to D.Ramir, in the yeare 924: hee raigned 5 yeares.

D.Vrraca, daughter to D.Fernand Gonſales Earle of Caſtille, his wife repudiated.

D.Eluira his ſecond wife, by whom he had

D.Bermond.

XIX.

D.Sancho, brother to D.Ordogno, in the yeare 929: hee raigned 12 yeares, the firſt of that name, and was ſurnamed the Groſſe.

D.Thereſia his wife, of whom was borne

D.Ramir.

XX.

D.Ramir third of that name, ſonne to D.Sancho, in the yeare 941, he raigned 24 yeares.

D.Vrraca his wife, by whom he had no children.

XXI.

D.Bermond ſecond of that name, ſonne to king D.Ordogno the third, in the yeare 965: he raigned 17 yeares.

D.Velaſquita his wife, of whom came

D.Chriſtina married to D.Ordogno the blind, & had iſſue:
- D.Alphonſo.
- D.Ordogno.
- D.Pelagius.

D.Eluira 2 wife, mother to
- D.Alphonſo.
- D.Thereſia, a Nun.

D.Adoncia, who was wife to D.Pelagius the Deacon aboue named, and had by him
- D.Pedro Ordogno.
- D.Pelagius.
- D.Nugno.
- D.Thereſia.

Of two ſiſters Concubines, he had

D.Ordogno by the one:

D.Eluira by the other.

XXII.

D.Alphonſo fifth of that name, ſonne to king Bermond, in the yeare 982: he raigned 46 yeares.

D.Eluira daughter to D.Melendo Gonſales his wife.

Lawfull children
- D.Bermond.
- D.Sancha married to D. Ferdinand firſt king of Caſtille.

XXIII.

D.Bermond third of that name, ſonne to D.Alphonſo the fift, in the yeare 1028: he raigned 9 yeares.

D.Thereſia his wife, daughter to Sancho Earle of Caſtille, who brought him

D.Alphonſo, who died an infant.

XXIIII.

D.Sancha heire to the realme, ſiſter to D.Bermond, was maried to king Ferdinand the firſt of Caſtille, and 24 of Leon, in the yeare 1037: he raigned 30 yeres.

Children

Children after ſhe came to the ſucceſſion of Leon
- D. Vrraca.
- D. Sancho king of Caſtille.
- D. Eluira.

Children after ſhee came to the Crowne
- D. Alphonſo king of Leon.
- D. Garcia.

XXV.

D. Alphonſo ſixt of that name, ſon to D. Sancha, in the yeare 1067: he raigned 41 yeares in Leon, and came to the crowne of Caſtille: he had many children by many wiues, ſpecified in the line of Caſtille, and among others,

D. Conſtance his fourth wife, a Spaniard, brought him

D. Vrraca, who was Queene of Leon and Caſtille, married firſt to D. Raymond of Burgondie, of whom came D. Alphonſo Raymond, king.

XXVI.

D. Vrraca had to her ſecond husband, D. Alphonſo king of Nauarre and Arragon, numbred for the ſeuenth of that name among the kings of Leon, in the yeare 1108: they had not any children.

XXVII.

D. Alphonſo Raymond eighth of that name, ſonne to D. Raymond of Burgondie, Earle of Galicia: he raigned in the place of D. Vrraca his mother 35 yeares, in the yeare 1122.

D. Berenguela daughter to D. Raymond Arnold Earle of Barcelone, by whom among other children named in the line of Caſtille, he had

D Ferdinand his ſecond ſonne, king of Leon.

XXVIII.

D. Ferdinand, ſecond of that name, and ſecond ſonne to king D. Alphonſo the eighth, in the yeare 1157: he raigned 31 yeares.

D. Vrraca of Portugal, his firſt wife.

D. Alphonſo.

D. Thereſia his ſecond wife, of the houſe of Lara.

D. Vrraca Lopes his third wife, mother to

D. Sancho Fernandes.

D. Garcia.

XXIX.

D. Alphonſo ninth of that name, ſonne to D. Ferdinand the ſecond, in the yeare 1188: he raigned 42 yeares.

D. Thereſia of Portugall his firſt wife.

Lawfull children
- D. Ferdinand.
- D. Sancha.
- D. Dolce.

D. Berenguela Infanta of Caſtille, his ſecond wife, mother to

Lawfull children
- D. Ferdinand, king.
- D. Alphonſo, Lord of Molina.
- D. Conſtance, a Nunne.
- D. Berenguela, Counteſſe of Brenne, and Queene of Ieruſalem.

Of a Concubine whoſe name is vnknowne,

D. Roderigo Alphonſo of Leon.

XXX.

D. Ferdinand the third, he raigned at Leon after his father D. Alphonſo the ninth, but he firſt ſeized vpon the crowne of Caſtille, by the diligence of D. Berenguela his mother: in him the two realmes were vnited, and neuermore diuided, in the yeare, 1230.

D. Beatrix daughter to the Emperour Philip: their poſteritie is in the line of Caſtille.

Line

Line of Caſtille.

D.Nugno Fernandes Earle of Caſtille, vnder the Soueraigntie of Leon, father or grandfather to D.Ximena maried to D.Gonſall Iuſte.

D.Diego Porcello Earle alſo, or gouernour of Caſtille vnder the ſame Soueraigntie.

D.Sulla maried to D.Nugno Bellides.

Theſe two gouernours were ſlaine by king Ordogno the ſecond of Leon, in the priſon of Leon.

D.Nugno Bellides Earle of Caſtille.

D.Sulla daughter to Diego Porcello his wife.

Lawfull children. { D.Nugno Raſure. / D.Iuſte Gonſales.

D.Nugno Raſure father to D.Gonſal Nugnes.

D.Eluira or Thereſa Nugnes, ſurnamed the Faire.

D.Flauin Caluo husband to Eluira, whence comes the race of Cid Ruy Dias.

Theſe gouerned the countrie of Caſtille, in qualitie of Iudges: after that it was drawn from the obedience of the kings of Leon, during the raigne of D.Froila the ſecond, about the yeare 896.

D.Gonſall Nugnes ſonne to D.Nugno Raſure, ſole gouernour of Caſtille.

D.Ximena daughter or grandchild to D.Nugno Fernandes, whom wee ſet in the firſt place in this Line, mother to D.Fernand Gonſales their ſonne.

Firſt Soueraigne Earle.

D.Fernand Gonſales firſt Earle proprietarie of Caſtille, in the yeare 910: he gouerned 32 yeares.

D.Vrraca, his firſt firſt wife, mother to

D.Vrraca.

D.Sancha Infanta of Nauarre, ſecond wife to D.Fernand, daughter to D.Sancho Abarca.

Children { D.Gonſal Fernandes. / D.Sancho Fernandes. / D.Garci Fernandes. / D.Pedro father to two ſonnes, { D.Gonſal Nugnes. / D.Fernandes Gonſales. } / D.Baldwin. }

It is doubtfull by which of his wiues he had theſe fiue ſonnes.

II.

D.Garci Fernandes the third ſonne to D.Fernand Gonſales, in the yeare 942: hee held the Earldome 48 yeares.

D.Argentina his firſt wife, a French woman.

D.Sancha, Ogna, or Abba, his ſecond wife, mother to Children { D.Garci Roland. / D.Sancho Garcia. / D.Vrraca a Nun. }

III.

D.Sancho Garcia the ſecond ſonne to D.Garci Fernandes, in the yeare 990: he gouerned Caſtille 38 yeares.

D.Vrraca his wife, mother to Children { D.Garcia. / D.Nugna Queene of Nauarre. / D.Thereſia Queene of Leon. / D.Tigrida a Nunne. }

D.Garcia

IIII.

D.Garcia ſecond of that name, ſlaine at Leon before he was maried, ſo as the Earldome fell to his ſiſter.

D.Nugna Queene of Nauarre by the right of proximitie.

V.

D.Nugna ſiſter to D. Garcia, maried to the king.

D.Sancho, fourth of that name of Nauarre, in the yeare 1028, they held the Earldome ſixe yeares, then they gaue it to D.Fernand their ſecond ſonne, with the title of a King.

D.Fernand, ſecond ſonne.

The other children of this mariage are named in the line of Nauarre.

Firſt King of Caſtille.

D.Fernand, ſecond ſonne of D.Sancho, fourth of that name of Nauarre, had Caſtille for his portion, with the title of a king, being the inheritance of his mother D.Nugna: in the yeare 1034 he vnited Leon vnto it, by his wife D.Sancha, and raigned 32 yeares.

D. Sancha ſiſter to D.Bermund, third king of Leon, mother, among other children, to

D.Sancho Fernandes.

D.Alphonſo.

Their other children are named in the line of Leon.

II.

D.Sancho Fernandes, whom we will call the ſecond of that name, in regard of the Earle D.Sancho Garcia, in the yeare 1067: he raigned 6 yeares, died without children, and left his realme to his brother D.Alphonſo king of Leon.

III.

D.Alphonſo brother to D.Sancho, firſt of that name in Caſtille, and ſixt in Leon, in the yeare 1073: he raigned 34 yeares 8 moneths.

D.Ines, or Agnes firſt wife to D.Alphonſo a Spaniard.

D.Conſtance, ſecond wife, a Spaniard, and mother to D.Vrraca Queene of Caſtille maried to D. Raimond of Burgondie firſt, by whom ſhee had { D.Sancha. D.Alphonſo Raymond.

D.Maria otherwiſe called Caida, a Moore, third wife to D.Alphonſo, mother to

D.Sancho.

D.Berthe fourth wife, an Italian.

D.Iſabell, fift, a Spaniard, mother to

D.Sancha.

D.Eluira Queene of Naples.

D.Beatrix a French woman, ſixt wife to D.Alphonſo.

By D.Ximena Nugnes de Guzman a Concubine, he had

D.Eluira, Counteſſe of Tolouſa.

Of another Concubine whoſe name is not knowne,

D.Thereſa, firſt Counteſſe of Portugall.

IIII.

D.Vrraca beeing the eldeſt, widow to D. Raymond Earle of Burgondie, was hereditarie Queene of Caſtille and Leon, ſhee tooke to her ſecond husband, D.Alphonſo king of Nauarre and Arragon, firſt of that name, from whom beeing diuorced, and liuing looſely in her countrie, the Eſtates did chooſe D.Alphonſo Raymond her ſonne for their king, during her life: yet we will ſet her in the fourth place.

D.Alphonſo husband to D.Vrraca, fourth king of Caſtille, in the yeare 1108, where hee raigned eight yeares.

V.

D.Alphonſo Raymond, ſonne to Raymond of Burgondie, and to D.Vrraca, in the yere 1122, he raigned 35 yeares, and is numbred for the third of that name.

D. Berenguela

D.Berenguela, daughter to the Earle of Barcelone called D.Raymond Arnold, his wife, mother to

D.Sancho king of Caſtille.
D.Fernand king of Leon.
D.Iſabel or Conſtance Queene of France.
D.Sancha or Beacia Queene of Nauarre.
D.Garcia.

D.Rica 2 wife to D.Alphonſo Raymond, aunt to the Emperour Frederic 1, mother to D.Sancha Queene of Arragon.

D.Marie a concubine, mother to D.Eſtiennette, wife to D.Fernand Roderigo el Caſtellan, whoſe ſonne D.Pedro Fernandes de Caſtro was.

D.Goutrude ſiſter to Diego Apricio, a concubine alſo, mother to D.Vrraca Queene of Nauarre.

VI.

D.Sancho, ſonne to D.Alphonſo Raymond, in the yeare 1157: he raigned two yeares, the fourth of that name.

D.Blanche of Nauarre his wife.
D.Alphonſo their ſonne.

VII.

D.Alphonſo ſonne to D.Sancho 4 of that name, in the yeare 1159: he raigned 55 yeres.
D.Leonora daughter to Henrie the ſecond king of England.

Children:
D.Blanche Queene of France.
D.Berenguela Queene of Leon.
D.Sancho died an infant.
D.Vrraca Queene of Portugall.
D.Fernand died young.
D.Malfade died a virgin.
D.Conſtance a Nunne.
D.Leonora Queene of Arragon.
D.Henrie King of Caſtille.
Two daughters which died in their infancies.

VIII.

D.Henrie firſt of that name, ſonne to D.Alphonſo 4, in the yeare 1214: he raigned about three yeares.

D.Malfada of Portugall his wife.

The king D. Henrie beeing dead without children, his ſiſter D. Berenguela ſecond daughter to king D.Alphonſo ſeized vpon the realme of Caſtille, to the preiudice of D. Blanche mother to Saint Lewis king of France, who was the elder, and there ſetled D.Fernand ſonne to her, and to D.Alphonſo ninth king of Leon.

IX.

D.Ferdinand third of that name, ſonne to D.Alphonſo ninth king of Leon, and to D.Berenguela of Caſtille, obtained the realme of Caſtille, to the preiudice of Queene Blanche, mother to Saint Lewis, in the yeare 1217, and raigned 35 yeares.

D.Beatrix daughter to the Emperour Philip, of whom was borne Lawfull chidren:

D.Alphonſo.
D.Frederic.
D.Ferdinand.
D.Henrie.
D.Philip.
D.Sancho.
D.Emanuel.
D.Leonora not maried.
D.Berenguela a Nun.

By

By Ioane or Adella as some write, of the house of Poictiers, his second wife, he had Lawfull children { D. Ferdinand. D. Lewis. D. Leonora.

In this King the two Realmes of Leon and Castille were vnited, and were no more diuided.

X. King of Castille. 31. of Leon.

D. ALFONSO sonne to D. Ferdinand 3, numbred for the 5 of that name, and 10 in Leon: but they that joyne these two Lines, accompt him the 11, adding his great grandfather Alfonso 4 of Castille, who had no interest in Leon.

D. Violant of Arragon his wife, by whom he had

Children {
- D. Ferdinand called de la Cerde, who married D. Blanche daughter to S. Lewis of France, and had
  - D. Alfonso who married the Ladie of Lunet, named Maffalda, daughter to the Vicont of Narbone.
    - D. Lewis Earle of Clermont husband to D. Leonora de Guzman.——
      - D. Lewis earl of Clermõt
      - D. Iohn de la Cerde.
      - D. Isabell wife to Bernard de Foix, base, the stemme of the house of Medina Celi.
    - D. John Constable of France, named by some Charles.
  - D. Fernand, who had to wife D. Ioane de Lara, and had one daughter D. Ioane Queene of Castille, wife to D. Henry the Bastard.
    - D. Blanche married to D. Iohn Manuell father to D.
    - D. Iohn called de Lara, heire to his mother.
      - D. Alfonso the wise, who married D. Maria Lopes Dias, heire of Biscaie, and had D. Iohn the blind, father to one Daughter married to D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara.
- D. Sancho 2. sonne
- D. Pedro 3. sonne
- D. Iohn 4. sonne
- D. Iames 5. sonne.
- D. Berenguela.
- D. Beatrix.
- D. Isabell.
- D. Leonora.

D. Maior de Guzman a Concubine, mother to D. Beatrix Queene of Portugall.

XI. King of Castille. 32. of Leon.

D. SANCHO second sonne to the King D. Alphonso, seized vpon the realme in his fathers life time, to frustrat the children of his elder brother D. Ferdinand deceased in the yeare 1284, and raigned about 11 yeares: wee number him for the 4 of that name in Castille.

D. MARIA of Castille, daughter to D. Alphonso Lord of Molina, his wife.

Lawfull children {
- D. Isabella Duchesse of Britaine.
- D. Ferdinand,
- D. Alphonso or Philip.
- D. Henry.
- D. Pedro.
- D. Beatrix.

XII. King of Castille. 33. of Leon.

D. FERDINAND sonne to D. Sancho the 4 of that name, in the yeare 1295: hee raigned 17 yeares.

D. Constance of Portugall his wife.

Children { D. Alphonso. D. Leonora.

D. Alfonso

XIII. King of Caſtille. 34. of Leon.

D. Alfonſo 11 of that name, ſonne to D. Ferdinand in the yeare 1312: he raigned 38 yeares.

D. Maria of Portugall his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Ferdinand, died in his infancie. / D. Pedro King.

By Leonora de Guzman a Concubine he had Baſtards { D. Pedro. / D. Sancho. / D. Henry } Twins. / D. Frederic } Twins. / D. Ferdinand. / D. Tello. / D. Iohn. / D. Ioane, who was wife to Ferdinand de Caſtro.

XIIII. King of Caſtille. 35. of Leon.

D. Pedro the cruell, in the yeare 1350: he was lawfull ſonne to D. Alfonſo, or as ſome hold, ſuppoſed by the Queene D. Maria, who was ielous of the fruitfulneſſe of D. Leonora de Guzman: he raigned tirannouſly 18 yeares.

D. Blanche of Bourbon his wife.

D. Maria de Padille his Concubine.

Baſtards { D. Beatrix. / D. Conſtance Ducheſſe of Lancaſter. / D. Alfonſo. / D. Iſabell Counteſſe of Cambridge.

D. Ioane de Caſtro, whom he married in the life of Queene Blanche, mother to D. Iohn.

D. Iſabella an other Concubine, mother to Baſtards { D. Sancho. / D. Diego.

D. Thereſa of Ayala, vpon promiſe of marriage, brought him D. Maria.

XV. King of Caſtille. 36. of Leon.

D. Henry 2 of that name, baſe ſonne to Alfonſo 11: beeing perſecuted by the king D. Pedro, he had recourſe vnto the French, by whoſe ayde he conquered the Realme of Caſtille, and ſlew the king D. Pedro in the yeare 1368, and raigned 11 yeares.

D. Ioane Manuell his wife, mother to Lawfull children { D. Iohn king of Caſtille. / D. Leonora Queene of Nauarre.

D. Leonora Ponce, ſome call her Beatrix, a Concubine: by her he had

D. Frederic duke of Benauent.

D. Eluira Inigues an other Concubine, mother to

D. Ioane marryed to D. Alfonſo ſonne to the Marqueſſe of Villena.

Of vncertaine mothers were borne

D. Alfonſo Earle of Gijon.

An other daughter married to D. Pedro ſonne to the marqueſſe of Villena.

XVI. King of Caſtille. 37. of Leon.

D. Iohn 1 of that name, ſonne to D. Henry the ſecond, in the yeare 1379: hee raigned 11 yeares.

D. Leonora of Arragon his wife, mother to Lawfull children { D. Henry. / D. Ferdinand. / A daughter which died yong.

D. Beatrix of Portugall, his ſecond wife.

XVII. King of Caſtille. 38 of Leon.

D. HENRY third of that name, ſonne to D. Iohn the firſt, in the yere 1390: he raigned 16 yeares.

D. KATHERINE of Lancaſter his wife.

Lawfull children
- D. Marie, Queene of Arragon.
- D. Iohn, King of Caſtille.
- D. Katherine.

XVIII. King of Caſtille. 39 of Leon.

D. IOHN ſonne to D. Henry the third, in the yeare 1406: he raigned 48 yeares.

D. MARIA of Arragon, daughter to D. Ferdinand his vncle, his wife.

Lawfull children
- D. Katherina, died yong.
- D. Leonora.
- D. Henry king of Caſtille.

D. ISABELL of Portugall his ſecond wife, daughter to the infant D. Iohn, Maſter of S. Iames.

- D. Iſabell, Queene of Caſtille.
- D. Alphonſo.

XIX. King of Caſtille. 40 of Leon.

D. HENRY fourth of that name, called the vnable, in the yeare 1454: he raigned 21 yeares.

D. BLANCHE of Nauarre, daughter to the king D. Iohn, his firſt wife, put away.

D. IOANE of Portugall his ſecond wife, mother to

D. Ioane, a ſuppoſed child.

XX. King of Caſtille. 41 of Leon.

D. ISABELL of Caſtille, ſiſter to king Henry the fourth, was Queene of Caſtille, as next of the bloud, and lawfull, ſhe married with

D. FERDINAND, Prince of Arragon, King of Sicile: they began to raigne in the yere 1474, and had

Lawfull children
- D. Iſabell, Queene of Portugall, mother to D. Michel, who had beene heire to all the realmes of Spaine, if he had liued.
- D. Iohn, who died yong.
- D. Ioane Queene heire.
- D. Maria Queene of Portugall.
- D. Katherine.

XXI. King of Caſtille. 42 of Leon.

D. IOANE, daughter to the Queene D. Iſabell, and D. Ferdinand her husband: ſhe was married to the Archduke

D. PHILIP of Auſtria: they ſucceeded to the Realmes of Caſtille and Leon, in the yeare 1504, and raigned together two yeares, they had

Lawfull children
- D. Leonora Queene of Portugall and of France.
- D. Charles King and Emperour.
- D. Iſabell Queene of Denmarke.
- D. Ferdinand Emperor.
- D. Marie.
- D. Katherine.

XXII. King of Caſtille. 43 of Leon.

D. CHARLES by the deceaſe of his father D. Philip, ſucceeded to the right of the Crowne of Caſtille, vnder the gouernment of the King D. Ferdinand his grandfather, after after whoſe death hee tooke vpon him the gouernment of the realme, by reaſon of the incapacitie of the Queene D. Ioane his mother, in the yere 1516 : hee raigned 42 yeres in Caſtille, Arragon and Nauarre.

D. Isabell daughter to King Emanuell of Portugall his wife.

Lawfull children { D. Philip king. / D. Marie Empreſſe. / D. Ioane married to the Prince of Portugall. / D. Ferdinand who died yong.

By Concubines he had

Baſtards { D. Marguerite ducheſſe of Florence, and Parma. / D. Iohn d'Auſtria.

XXIII. King of Caſtille. 44 of Leon.

D. Philip, 2 ſonne to the Emperour Charles 5, in the yeare 1558 : he raigned fortie yeares.

D. Marie of Portugall his firſt wife, mother to

D. Charles.

D. Marie Queene of England, died without children.

D. Isabell of France his 3 wife, mother to { D. Iſabella Clara Eugenia. / D. Catherina.

D. Anna of Auſtria his 4 wife, by whom he had Lawfull children { D. Charles. / D. Laurens, ſome ſay Fernand. / D. Diego, or Iames. / D. Philip. / D. N. a daughter.

XXIIII. King of Caſtille. 45 of Leon.

D. Philip 3 now raigning, ſonne to Philip 2, in the yeare 1598.

D. Margverite of Auſtria daughter to the Archduke Ferdinand of Gratz, his wife.

Line of Nauarre.

Firſt King in Sobrabre and Nauarre.

D. Garcia Ximenes in the yeare 716 : he raigned 42 yeares.

Inigа his wife, mother to Garcia Inigo.

II.

D. Garcia Inigo, ſecond of that name, in the yeare 758 : he raigned 44 yeres : the name of his wife is vnkowne.

D. Fortun Garces his ſonne.

III.

D. Fortvn Garces, ſonne to D. Garcia Inigo, in the yeare 802 : he raigned 13 yeares.

D. Thevda of Arragon daughter to D. Galinde.

D. Sancho Garces.

IIII.

D. Sancho Garces, firſt of that name, ſonne to D. Fortun, in the yeare 815 : hee raigned 17 yeares.

The name of his wife is not found.

D. Ximen Inigo, it may be their ſonne.

V.

D. XIMEN INIGO, in the yeare 832: he raigned 8 yeres.
D. NVGNA his wife.

D. Inigo Arista.

VI.

D. INIGO ARISTA, in the yeare 840: he raigned 27 yeres some hold that hee was not sonne to D. Ximen, but issued from the Lords of Bigorre, and elected.
D. THEVDA, daughter to Zeno Earle of Biscaie.

D. Garcia Inigo.

VII.

D. GARCIA INIGO, third of that name, sonne to D. Inigo Arista, in the yeare 867: he raigned 18 yeares.
D. VRRACA, heire of Arragon, his wife.

Children { D. Fortun. / D. Sancho Abarca. / D. Sancha Queene of Leon.

VIII.

D. FORTVN, in the yere 885: hee raigned 6 yeres in Nauarre and Arragon, which was a small thing then, and vnder the soueraigntie of Nauarre. This king made him selfe a Monke, and left the realme to his brother.

IX.

D. SANCHO ABARCA, 2 of that name, in the yeare 901: raigned 19 yeres.
D. TODA, or THEVDA his wife.

Children { D. Garcia Sanches. / D. Vrraca Xemenes, Queene of Leon. / D. Marie Counteſſe of Barcelona / D. Thereſia Queene of Leon. / D. Sancha Counteſſe of Caſtille. / D. Blanche married to the Lord of Biſcaie.

Some hold this King had 3 ſonnes more,

D. Ramir. / D. Gonſal. / D. Ferdinand.

X.

D. GARCIA SANCHES, 4. of that name, ſonne to D. Sancho Abarca, in the yeare 920: he raigned 49 yeres.
THERESIA his wife.

Children { D. Sancho Garces. / D. Ramir. / D. Vrraca. / D. Ermeſilde. / D. Ximena.

XI.

D. SANCHO GARCES, third of that name, ſonne to D. Garcia Sanches, in the yeare 969: he raigned 24 yeares.
D. VRRACA his wife.

Children { D. Garcia. / D. Ramir father to { D. Sancho. / D. Garcia. } / D. Gonſal. }

XII.

D. GARCIA the ſhaking, ſonne to D. Sancho Garces 5. of that name, in the yere 993: he raigned 7 yeres or thereabouts.

D. XIMENA

D. XIMENA his wife.

D. Sancho their ſonne.

XIII.

D. SANCHO, 4 of that name, ſonne to D. Garcia the trembling, in the yeare 1000: hee raigned 34 yeres.

D. NVGNA daughter to D. Sancho Earle of Caſtille, which by ſome is called D. Maior heire of Caſtille.

Children { D. Garcia King of Nauarre. / D. Ferdinand king of Caſtille. / D. Gonſal king of Sobrarbre and Ribagorſa.

Of D. Caya the Ladie of Ayuar, a Concubine

D. Ramir King of Arragon.

XIIII.

D. GARCIA, 6 of that name, ſonne to D. Sancho 4, in the yere 1034: he raigned 20 yeres.

D. ETTIENETTE a French woman, of the houſe of Carraſſone, and of Beziers, his wife.

Children { D. Sancho Garcia King. / D. Ramir. / D. Ferdinand. / D. Raymond. / D. Ermeſilde. / D. Zimena. / D. Maior. / D. Yrraa, or Ogneda.

XV.

D. SANCHO GARCIA, 5 of that name, ſonne to D. Garcia, in the yere 1054: hee raigned 22 yeres.

D. PLAISANCE his wife.

D. Ramir Sanches of D. Eluira daugter to Cid Ruy Dias had { D. Garcia Ramires, who raigned. / D. Sancho Ramires. / D. Eluira.

D. Garcia the elder.

D. Garcia the ſecond.

Theſe children did not ſucceed.

XVI.

D. SANCHO RAMIRES, who was 2 king of Arragon ſeazed vpon the realme of Nauarre, and is nombred for the 6 of that name, in the yere 1076: he raigned 18 yeres.

D. FELICE, daughter to the Earle of Vrgel, his wife, mother, among other children named in the Line of Arragon, to Children { D. Pedro. / D. Alfonſo. } who were kings of Nauarre and Arragon. / D. Ramir a Monke.

XVII.

D. PEDRO, 1 of that name, ſonne to D. Sancho Ramires, in the yere 1094: he raigned 10 yeres 5 moneths.

D. BERTHA or INES of Tuſcaine his wife.

D. Pedro, died an infant.

D. Iſabell, died alſo before the father.

XVIII.

D. ALFONSO, brother to D. Pedro 1 of that name, vnited all the Chriſtian realms of Spaine together by his marriage with D Yrraca heire of Caſtille and Leon, he came to the Crowne of Nauarre, in the yere 1104, and raigned 30 yeres.

D. VRRACA, daughter to Alfonſo 6 of Leon and Caſtille, his wife, by whom he had not any children.

XIX.

D. GARCIA RAMIRES, 7 of that name, ſonne to D. Ramir Sanches, & grand-child to D. Sancho Garcia, 5 of that name, he was choſen by the Eſtates, in the yere 1134, and raigned 16 yeres.

D. MERGELINA or MARGVERITE, as ſome ſay, daughter to Rotrou Earle of Perche, his wife.

Children
- D. Blanche.
- D. Sancho king.
- D. Alfonſo Ramires.
- D. Marguerite Queene of Naples.

D. VRRACA, baſe daughter to D. Alfonſo, 8 king of Leon and Caſtille, his ſecond wife, mother to

D. Sancha Viconteſſe of Bearn, and then wife to D. Pedro de Molina, of which ſecond marriage came Americ Vicont of Naborna, for D. Pedro his father was ſonne to Ermiſenda Vicounteſſe of Naborna.

XX.

D. SANCHO, 7 of that name, called the wiſe, ſonne to D. Garcia Ramires, in the yere 1150: he raigned 46 yeres.

D. BEACIA or BEATRIX, or as ſome ſay D Sancha, daughter to D. Alfonſo Raymond, king of Caſtille and Leon, his wife, by whom he had

Children
- D. Sancho King of Nauarre.
- D. Ferdinand.
- D. Ramir Biſhop of Pampelone.
- D. Berenguela Queene of England.
- D. Thereſa, or Conſtance.
- D. Blanche Counteſſe of Champaigne and Brie.

XXI.

D. SANCHO, 8 of that name, called the ſtrong, ſonne to Sancho 7, in the yere 1194: he raigned 40 yeres.

D. CLEMENCE, daughter to Raymond, 4 Earle of Tolouſa, his wife

D. Ferdinand, who died before the father.

Of a Concubine whoſe name is vnknowne, this king had

William a baſtard.

By the death of the king, the Crowne of Nauarre paſt into the houſe of Champaigne, D. Blanche his ſiſter, wife to Cont Thibaud, remayning ſole of the race, hauing iſſue.

XXII.

D. THIBAVD, 1 of that name, ſonne to D. Blanche of Nauarre, ſucceeded his vncle D. Sancho 8, in the yere 1234, and raigned 19 yeres.

His firſt wife was of Metz.

The 2, was daughter to Guichard Earle of Beauſieu, and had

D. Blanche Ducheſſe of Britaine.

The third wife, was daughter to Archembaud, Earle of Foix, named Marguerite mother to

Children
- D. Thibaud.
- D. Henry.
- D. Leonora.
- D. Pedro.

D. THIBAVD,

XXIII.

D. THIBAVD, ſecond of that name, ſonne to the firſt, in the yere 1253: he raigned 18 yeres.

D. ISABELL of France, daughter to S. Lewis, by whom he had not any children.

D. Marquiſe Lope de Ruda a Concubine, brought him

D. Marquiſe a baſtard, who was wife to Pedro Fernandes of Ixar, baſe ſonne to D. Iames the firſt, King of Arragon.

XXIIII.

D. HENRY, brother to Thibaud the ſecond, in the yeare 1271: he raigned three yeres, the firſt of that name.

D. IOANE, daughter to Robert Earle of Artois.

Children { D. Thibaud, died an infant. D. Ioane Queene.

By a Concubine of the houſe of Lacarra, he had

D. Henry, baſtard, Marſhall of Nauarre.

XXV.

D. IOANE, ſole daughter to D. Henry the firſt, married to Philip the faire, king of France, and raigned in Nauarre, in the yere 1274, the ſpace of 31 yeres: of which mariage iſſued Children { D. Lewis Hutin. D. Philip the long. D. Charles the faire. D. Ioane. D. Iſabell Queene of England.

XXVI.

D. LEVVIS HVTIN, King of France and Nauarre, firſt of that name, in the yere 1305: he raigned 10 yeres in Nauarre.

D. MARGVERITE daughter to Robert of Burgundie.

D. Ioane of Nauarre.

His ſecond wife was Clemence, daughter to the King of Hungarie.

D. Iohn an after-birth, who liued but eight dayes.

XXVII.

D. PHILIP the long, king of France and Nauarre, ſecond of that name, in the yere 1315: he raigned fiue yeres.

D. IOANE daughter to Othelin Earle of Burgundie.

Children { D. Ioane Ducheſſe of Burgundie. D. Marguerite Counteſſe of Nemours. D. Marie, wife to the Daulphin Himbert. D. Blanche, a religious woman.

XXVIII.

D. CHARLES the faire, firſt of that name, king of Nauarre and France, in the yere 1320: he raigned about eight yeres.

D. BLANCHE, daughter to Othelin Earle of Burgundie, his firſt wife.

D. MARIE of Luxembourg his ſecond wife, mother to

D. Blanche Ducheſſe of Orleans.

A ſonne, which died in his infancie.

D. IOANE, daughter to Lewis Earle of Eureux, by whom (ſome ſay) D. Blanche was borne.

XXIX.

D. IOANE, daughter to King Lewis Hutin, heire of Nauarre, in the yere 1328: ſhe raigned with her husband 21 yeres.

D. PHILIP

D. Philip Earle of Eureux, husband to D. Ioane, the third of that name, among the kings of Nauarre: of which marriage descended

Children
- D. Charles king.
- D. Philip Earle of Longueuille.
- D. Lewis Earle of Beaumont. — This D. Lewis married the heire of the house of Beaumont le Roger in Normandie, and were the stemme of the Earles of Lerin.
- D. Ioane Countesse of Rohan.
- D. Marie Queene of Arragon.
- D. Blanche Queene of France.
- D. Agnes Countesse of Foix.

XXX.

D. Charles second of that name, sonne to D. Philip the third, in the yeare 1349: he raigned in Nauarre 37 yeares, and was surnamed the bad.

D. Ioane of France, daughter to king Iohn, his wife: of which marriage descended these following.

Lawfull children
- D. Charles King.
- D. Philip died yong.
- D. Pedro Earle of Mortaing, from whom descended D. Pedro of Peralta, Constable of Nauarre, the stemme of the Marquesse of Falses.
- D. Blanche.
- D. Ioane, Duchesse of Britaine, and Queene of England.
- D. Marie Countesse of Denia: it is doubtfull whether she were daughter to this Queene.

D. Leon or Lionell a bastard, the beginning of the Marquesse of Cortes, Marshals of Nauarre.

XXXI.

D. Charles third of that name, sonne to Charles the second, in the yeare 1386: he raigned 39 yeares.

D. Leonora of Castille his wife.

Children
- D. Ioane Countesse of Foix.
- D. Marie.
- D. Blanche Queene of Sicile and Nauarre.
- D. Beatrix Countesse of Marche.
- D. Isabell.
- D. Charles.
- D. Lewis.

By a Concubine whose name is vnknowne.

Bastards
- D. Godefroy Earle of Cortes.
- D. Ioane maried to D. Inigo d'Ortis of Estuniga.

XXXII.

D. Blanche, daughter to D. Charles the third, had to her second husband D. Iohn of Arragon, and began to raigne in the yere 1425, and lasted 17 yeres: then after her decease D. Iohn, who was king of Arragon and Sicile, continued his raigne vnto the yere 1479, who had by D. Blanche

Children
- D. Charles.
- D. Blanche Queene of Castille.
- D. Leonora, Countesse of Foix, and afterwards Queene of Nauarre.

This King Iohn had a second wife, and other issue which is set downe in the Line of Arragon.

XXXIII.

D. Leonora, Countesse of Foix, wife to Gaston the fourth, came to the Crowne of Nauarre, suruiuing her brother and sister, in the yere 1479, and died the same yere.

D. Gaston,

D. Gaston Earle of Foix, called Prince of Viana, husband to D. Leonora, by whom he had

Children:
- D. Gaſton, of whom and of Marguerite of France deſcended: Francis and Katherine.
- D. Iohn, Vicount of Narbona.
- D. Pedro, Cardinall.
- D. Iames.
- D. Marie, Marqueſſe of Montferrat.
- D. Ioane, Counteſſe of Armaignac.
- D. Marguerite, Ducheſſe of Britanie.
- D. Katherine, Counteſſe of Candalle.
- D. Leonora died a maid.

XXXIIII.

D. Francis, ſonne to Gaſton, ſurnamed Phebus, and grandchild to D. Leonora, his father being dead before her deceaſe, he ſucceeded her in the realme of Nauarre, in the yere 1479, and raigned foure yeares: he died without any children.

XXXV.

D. Katherine, ſiſter to Francis Phebus, raigned after her brother in the yeare 1483: ſhe married with

D. Iohn of Albret: of which marriage iſſued

Children:
- D. Iohn.
- D. Andrew.
- D. Henry king of Nauarre.
- D. Charles, or rather Francis, who died at Naples in Monſieur de Lautrecs voyage.
- D. Katherine.
- D. Anne.
- D. Quiterie.
- D. Magdelaine.
- D. Iſabell.
- And fiue other children which died young.

During the time and raigne of theſe Kings, D. Iohn of Albret and D. Katherine, D. Ferdinand and D. Iſabella his wife, kings of Caſtille and Arragon, ſeized on the realme of Nauarre beyond the Pyrenees, and joyned it to Caſtille.

XXXVI.

Henry, the ſecond, of Albret, ſucceſſor to the rights of Nauarre, ſecond of that name, in the yere 1517.

Margverite of France, ſiſter to king Francis the firſt, his wife.

Ioane, whom Bertrand Helie calls Charlotte.

XXXVII.

Ioane, daughter to Henry the ſecond, ſucceeded in her fathers rights, married to Anthonie, Duke of Vendoſme, of the noble houſe of Bourbon.

- Henry.
- Katherine.

XXXVIII.

Henry the third of that name in Nauarre, and the fourth in France, in the yere 1572, and raigned 38 yeares.

Margverite of Valois, from whom he was diuorced, hauing no children.

Marie de Medicis, daughter to the duke of Florence, his ſecond wife, by whom he had Lewis, with diuers other children.

XXXIX.

Levvis now raigning, the ſecond of that name in Nauarre, and the thirteenth in France: he ſucceeded to his fathers rights in the yere 1610.

Line

Line of Arragon.

I.

There is mention made about the yeare 775, of Aznar the ſonne of Aznar, and grand-child to Eude, Duke of Aquitaine, who had two ſonnes.

Galinde and Ximenes Garces.

II.

D. Galinde obtained ſome lands of the Soueraigntie of Nauarre, and had his dwelling and ſeat at Iaca: This was the beginning of Arragon.

D. Theuda, who was Queene of Nauarre.
D. Ximen Aznares.
D. Endregot.

III.

D. Ximen Aznares, ſonne to D. Galinde, the third Earle of Arragon.

IIII.

D. Ximen Garces, brother to D. Galinde, fourth Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 803.
D. Garcia Aznares his ſonne.

V.

D. Garcia Aznares, ſonne to D. Ximen Garces, fift Earle of Arragon.
D. Fortun Ximenes his ſonne.

VI.

D. Fortun Ximenes, ſixt Earle of Arragon.

D. Vrraca, as ſome ſay daughter to this D. Fortun, and others to Endregot aboue named, vnited the Earledome of Arragon to the Crowne of Nauarre, bringing it in dowrie to the King D. Garcia Inigo, ſecond of that name.

VII.

D. Garcia Inigo king of Nauarre, and ſeuenth Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 867.
D. Vrraca aboue named, his wife.

D. Fortun their eldeſt ſonne: the reſt are named in the Line of Nauarre.

VIII.

D. Fortun king of Nauarre, ſecond of that name, and eight Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 885.

IX.

D. Sancho Abarca king of Nauarre, and ninth Earle of Arragon, brother to D. Fortun, in the yeare 901.

X.

D. Garci Sanches, ſonne to D. Sancho Abarca, king of Nauarre, and tenth Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 920.

XI.

D. Sancho Garces, ſonne to D. Garci Sanches, eleuenth Earle of Arragon raigning in Nauarre, in the yeare 969.

XII.

D. Garcia the ſhaking, ſonne to D. Sancho Garces, king of Nauarre, and twelfth Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 993.

XIII.

D. Sancho the Great, ſonne to D. Garcia the ſhaking, thirteenth Earle of Arragon, in the yeare 1000. This king of Nauarre erected the Countie of Arragon to a Realme, and gaue it to his baſe ſonne D. Ramir, as appeares by the diſcourſe by the Hiſtorie.

Firſt

First King of Arragon.

D. Ramir, first of that name, ſonne to D. Sancho the great, king of Nauarre, was the firſt king of Arragon, in the yeare 1034: and raigned 42 yeares.

D. Ermisende, daughter to the Earle of Bigorre, by ſome named Gisberge, his wife.

Children
- D. Sancho Ramires.
- D. Garcia Biſhop of Iaca.
- D. Sancha Counteſſe of Tolouſa.
- D. Thereſa Counteſſe of Prouence.

He had by a concubine

D. Sancho, Lord of Ayuar, Atares, and Xauierre.

II.

D. Sancho Ramires, king of Arragon, in the yeare 1076: he raigned 18 yeares, and vſurped the realme of Nauarre.

D. Felice daughter to the earle of Vrgel, his wife.

Children
- D. Pedro king.
- D. Alphonſo king.
- D. Ramir a Monke, and then a king.

By a concubine, whoſe name is not extant,

D. Garcia, Biſhop of Iacca.

III.

D. Pedro, firſt of that name, ſonne to D. Sancho Ramires, in the yere 1094: he raigned 14 yeres.

D. Berthe, or Ignes, his wife, an Italian.

D. Pedro } They died both before the father.
D. Iſabell }

IIII.

D. Alphonso firſt of that name, brother to D. Pedro, in the yeare 1108, and raigned 26 yeares: he married D. Vrraca the heire of Caſtille, and died without children: after him Nauarre was ſeperated from Arragon.

V.

D. Ramir a Monke, ſonne to D. Sancho Ramires, and brother to the laſt kings, was king of Arragon, in the yeare 1134, by election of the Eſtates: his raigne was vncertaine: for hauing for the moſt part led a Monkiſh life, he gaue ouer the gouernment of the realme vnto his ſonne in law, D. Raymond Berenger Earle of Barcelona.

D. Agnes ſiſter, or daughter, as ſome hold, to William Earle of Poictiers, his wife, mother to

D. Petronilla, heire of Arragon.

D. Petronilla, daughter to D. Ramir, did not raigne, as ſome hold, but her ſonne D. Raymond, whom ſhe had by the Earle of Barcelona.

D. Raymond Berenger, who gouerned the realme in qualitie of a Regent, and was called Prince of Arragon, who had by his wife Petronilla, among other children which are named in the line of Cattelogne, this ſonne

D. Raymond, who changed his name, and was called Alphonſo.

VI.

D. Alphonso, ſecond of that name, called before Raymond, ſonne to the Earle D. Raymond Berenger, and of the Princeſſe D. Petronilla, in the yeare 1162: he raigned 34 yeares.

D. Sancha, daughter to D. Alphonſo Raymond, king of Caſtille and Leon, and of D. Rica, ſhe was mother to

D. Pedro,

- D. Pedro king of Arragon.
- D. Alfonſo Earle of Prouence, who had to wife D. Maria de Folcaquier, whence deſcended D. Raymond Berenger who was married to Beatrix daughter to Thomas Earle of Morienne, who had
  - Marguerite queene of France.
  - Leonora Queene of England.
  - Sancha Queene of England & Empreſſe.
  - Beatrix Queene of Naples.
  - Ioane, who had the countie of Prouẽce, as the Arragonois ſay.
- Children
  - D. Ferdinand a Monke.
  - D. Conſtance Queene of Hungarie and then Empreſſe.
  - D. Leonora Counteſſe of Tolouſa.
  - D. Sancha Counteſſe alſo of Tolouſa.
  - D. Doulce a Nunne.

VII.

D. Pedro 2 of that name, ſonne to D. Alfonſo the 2, in the yeare 1196: he raigned about 18 yeares.

His firſt wife was of the houſe of Folcaquier, by whom he had

D. Raymond Berenger.

D. Marie daughter to the Earle of Mompellier, who had beene marryed to the Earle of Cominges: by this ſecond wife he had

D. Iames king.

By a Concubine not named

D. Conſtance marryed to William Raymond of Moncado, Seneſchall of Cattelogne.

VIII.

D. Iames firſt of that name, ſonne to the king D. Pedro the firſt, in the yeare 1213: hee raigned 43 yeares.

D. Leonora of Caſtille, daughter to king D. Alfonſo the 9, by whom he had

D. Alfonſa, who dyed before the father.

D. Violant daughter to the king of Hungarie his ſecond wife, mother to

- D. Pedro king of Arragon.
- D. Iames king of Maiorca, who married Eſclermond of Foix, who brought him
  - D. Iames a Monke.
  - D. Sancho king of Maiorca.
  - D. Ferdinand.
  - D. Philip.
  - D. Sancha.
- Children
  - D. Sancho Archbiſhop of Toledo.
  - D. Iſabell Queene of France.
  - D. Ferdinand.
  - D. Violant Queene of Caſtille.
  - D. Conſtance wife to D. Manuell.
  - D. Sancha.
  - D. Maria.

Of D. Ferdinand 3. ſonne to D. Iames of Maiorca, and of Iſabell heire of Morea, iſſued

- D. Iames king of Maiorca.
- D. Frederic.

And of his 2. wife of Cypres

D. Ferdinand.

D. Iames ſonne to D. Ferdinand had by Conſtance of Arragon

- Iſabell Marqueſſe of Montferrat.
- Iames heire of Maiorca.

King Iames had alſo by D. Thereſa Gil de Bridaure, whom hee had married ſecretly,

D.

D. Pedro, Lord of Ayerbes.
D. Iames, Lord of Xerica.

D. Berenguela, a concubine.

D. Pedro Fernandes, Lord of Ixar.

Of the daughter of D. Sancho d'Antillas, a concubine,

D. Ferdinand Sanches.

IX.

D. PEDRO, third of that name, ſon to D. Iames 1, in the yere 1276: he raigned 9 yeres.

D. CONSTANCE, daughter to Manfroy, baſtard to the Emperour Frederic 2 his wife, mother to

Children:
D. Alphonſo, King of Arragon.
D. Iames, King of Sicile, and then of Arragon.
D. Frederic, King of Sicile.
D. Pedro.
D. Iſabel, Queene of Portugall.
D. Conſtance or Violant, queen of Naples.

D. Maria Nicoloſa, a concubine, brought him

D. Iames Perez.

D. Anne Zapate, a concubine, mother to

D. Ferdinand.

By another concubine not named,

D. Sancho.

X.

D. ALPHONSO, third of that name, ſonne to D. Pedro, in the yeare 1285: he raigned ſix yeares, and died without children.

XI.

D. IAMES, ſecond of that name, brother to D. Alphonſo, in the yeare 1291: he raigned 36 yeares.

BLANCHE, daughter to Charles King of Naples, called the Lame, his wife, mother to

Children:
D. Iames, who became a Monke.
D. Alphonſo.
D. Pedro, Earle of Ampurias.
D. Raymond Berenger, Earle of Prages.
D. Iohn, Archbiſhop of Toledo.
D. Conſtance, wife to D. Iohn Manuel.
D. Maria, wife to D. Pedro of Caſtille.
D. Blanche, a Nunne.
D. Violant, Princeſſe of Tarentum.
D. Iſabel, wife to the Emperour Frederic the third.

This King had firſt of all maried D. ISABEL, daughter to D. Sancho King of Caſtille, but the Pope diſſolued this mariage.

D. MARIA of Cypres was his third wife

D. ECLISENDE, ſiſter to Othon of Moncado, his fourth wife.

By a concubine, not named,

D. Iames of Arragon, Earle of Luna.

XII.

D. ALPHONSO fourth, ſonne to D. Iames 2, in the yere 1328, and raigned 8 yeres.

D. THERESA ENTENZA, Counteſſe, heire of Vrgel, his wife.

Children:
D. Pedro, King.
D. Iames, Earle of Vrgel.
D. Conſtance, Queene of Majorca.
Some write hee had fiue other children which died.

D. LEONORA of Caſtille, his ſecond wife, mother to

D. Ferdinand, Marqueſſe of Tortoſa.
D. Iohn.

XIII.

D. Pedro, 4 of that name, ſon to D. Alphonſo 4, in the yere 1336: he raigned 51 yeres.
D. Maria, ſecond daughter to Philip 3, King of Nauarre, his wife.

Children:
- D. Conſtance, Queene of Sicile.
- D. Ioane, Counteſſe of Ampurias.
- D. Maria.
- A ſonne which dyed young.

D. Leonora, or Elvira of Portugall, his ſecond wife.
D. Constance, or Leonora of Sicile, ſiſter to King Lewis, his 3 wife, mother to

Children:
- D. Iohn, King.
- D. Alphonſo.
- D. Martin, who was King.
- D. Leonora, Queene of Caſtille.

D. Sibille Fortia, widow to Artol de Foſſes, his 4 wife, by whom he had
D. Iſabel, Counteſſe of Vrgel.

XIIII.

D. Iohn, 1 of that name, ſon to D. Pedro 4, in the yere 1387, and raigned 8 yeares.
D. Matthea, daughter to the Earle of Armaignac.

- D. Iames, who dyed.
- D. Ioane, wife to Mathew of Caſtelbon, Earle of Foix.

D. Violant, ſecond wife to D. Iohn, mother to

Children:
- D. Violant, wife to Lewis of Anjou, mother to
  - Lewis.
  - Rene
    - Iohn, Duke of Calabria.
    - Nicholas, Marqueſſe of Pont.
    - Marguerite, Queene of England.
  - Charles, Earle of Mayne.
    - Violant, Ducheſſe of Lorraine.
- One ſonne, who dyed young.

XV.

D. Martin, brother to D. Iohn deceaſed, for want of heires male by him, ſucceeded, by election of the Eſtates, and by will, to the realme of Arragon, to the prejudice of D. Ioane, Counteſſe of Foix, and againſt her matrimoniall conuentions, and the promiſes made by her father and grandfather, to Mathew of Caſtelbon, her husband.
D. Maria de Luna was his firſt wife, before he came to the Crowne, by whom he had
D. Martin, who was King of Sicile, and dyed before his father, without any children.
D. Margverite de Prades, his 2 wife, by whom he left no iſſue.

XVI.

D. Ferdinand, firſt of that name, brother to Henrie 3, king of Caſtille: hee obtained the realme of Arragon by election of the Eſtates, all other pretendants being rejected, in the yeare 1412, and raigned about foure yeares.
D. Leonora d' Albuquerque, a Princeſſe of the bloud of Caſtille, his wife, mother to

Children:
- D. Alphonſo, King of Arragon.
- D. Iohn, King of Nauarre and Arragon.
- D. Henrie, Maſter of S. Iames in Caſtille.
- D. Sancho, Maſter of Alcantara.
- D. Pedro.
- D. Marie, Queene of Caſtille.
- D. Leonora, Queene of Portugall.

XVII.

D. Alphonso, 5 of that name, ſonne to D. Ferdinand, in the yere 1416: he raigned 42 yeares.
D. Marie of Caſtille, his wife, but without children.

By

By concubines not named, he had
D. Ferdinand king of Naples.
D. Maria Marqueſſe of Ferrara.
D. Leonora Princeſſe of Roſſano.

XVIII.

D. IOHN ſecond of that name, brother to king Alphonſo fift, for want of lawfull heires, ſucceeded to the Realme of Arragon, in the yeare 1458: and raigned one and twentie yeares and ſixe moneths.

D. BLANCHE of Nauarre his firſt wife, in whoſe right he was king of Nauarre, and had by her three children

- D. Charles, who died before his father, and had theſe baſe children,
  - D. Philip Maſter of Monteſa.
  - D. John Biſhop of Hueſca.
  - D. Anne ducheſſe of Medina Celi.
- D. Blanche Queene of Caſtille.
- D. Leonora Queene of Nauarre.

D. Ioane daughter to D. Frederic Henriques Admirall of Caſtille, his ſecond wife, mother to

- D. Ferdinand king of Arragon, Caſtille, Nauarre, &c.
- D. Ioane Queene of Naples.

By concubines whoſe names are vnknowne,

Baſtards
- D. Alphonſo Earle of Vilhermoſa.
- D. John Archbiſhop of Saragoſſe.
- D. Leonora Counteſſe of Lerin.
- D. Ferdinand.
- D. Maria.

XIX.

D. FERDINAND ſecond of that name, ſonne to king John, in the yeare 1479: he raigned 37 yeares in Arragon.

D. ISABEL Queene of Caſtille his wife, by whom the realmes of Arragon and Caſtille were vnited.

D. Ioane mother to the Emperour Charles the fift.

The other children of D. Ferdinand and D. Iſabel, are mentioned in the Line of Caſtille.

D. GERMAINE ſecond wife to king Ferdinand.

D. John, who died an infant.

The Vicounteſſe of Eboli a concubine, mother to D. Alfonſo of Arragon Arch-biſhop of Saragoſſe.

Of another concubine
D. Ioane of Arragon wife to D. Bernardin de Velaſco, Conſtable.

Of D. Tota of Bilbao, a concubine
D. Marie of Arragon a Nun.

By a Portugall of the family of Pereira.
D. Marie of Arragon a Nun.

Line of Cattelogne.

BERNARD, Earle, Duke and Marques of Spaine vnder Charles the great, confirmed by Lewis the gentle, gouerned Cattelogne about the yere 795.

D. GEOFFREY d'Arria Earle of Barcelona, vnder the French, in the yeere 839.

D. ALMIRA his wife, a French woman, mother to
D. Geoffrey the hairie.

D. SALOMON Earle of Cerdagne, an vſurper, in the yere 858.

First proprietarie Earle.

D. GEOFFREY the hairie obtained Cattelogne in proprietie, vnder the Soueraignte of France, in the yeare 884, of Charles the Groffe.

D. N. a Fleming, his wife.

Children
- D. Rodolphus, Abbot of Ripol, and Bifhop of Vrgel.
- D. Geoffrey.
- D. Myr.
- D. Seniofrid, Earle of Vrgel, who was father to
  - D. Borel, Earle &c.
  - D. Armingol, Bifhop of Vrgel.
- One daughter.

II.

D. MYR, fonne to D. Geoffrey, in the yere 914: he held the Countie 15 yeres: his fonnes were

Children
- D. Seniofrid, earle.
- D. Oliban, called Cheurette, earle of Cerdagne & Befalu, father to
  - Bernard, called Breake-yron, father to
    - William the fat, earle of Befalu, father to
      - Bernard Guillen, alfo Earle of Befalu.
  - D. Geoffrey, earl of Cerdagne, who had fiue fonnes.
    - Raymond Geffroy, earle of Cerdagne, father to
      - William Raymond, earl of Cerdagne, father to
        - D. William Iourdaine, Earle of Cerdagne.
        - D. Bernard.
        - D. William.
      - D. Henry.
    - D. Geffrey Guinard, Archbifhop of Narbone.
    - D. Berenger Geoffrey, Bifhop of Girone.
    - D. William Geoffrey, Bifhop of Vrgel.
    - D. Geoffrey, Earle of Bergade.
- D. Myr, Earle and Bifhop of Girone.
- D. Oliban, Bifhop of Vic, of Offone.

III.

D. SENIOFRID, fonne to D. Myr in the yere 919: he ruled vnder the gouernment of his vncle the Earle of Vrgel, and alone, about 38 yeres.

D. MARIA, Infanta of Nauarre, daughter to the King D. Sancho Abarca, his wife, by whom he had not any children.

IIII.

D. BORELL, fonne to D. Seniofrid, Earle of Vrgel, fucceeded his couſin D. Seniofrid in the Countie of Barcelona, by right of intruſion: yet fome pretend an inſufficiencie in D. Oliban, brother to the deceaſed, in the yere 967.

D. LEODEGARDE his firſt wife, mother to
- D. Raymond Borel.

D. ARMERVDE, or as fome write, Engelrade his fecond wife.

Children
- D. Ermengauld, Earle of Vrgel.
- D. Borella, a Nunne.

V.

D. RAYMOND BOREL, fonne to the Earle D. Borel, in the yere 993, and held the Earledome 24 yeres.

D. SANCHA his wife, mother to
- D. Berenger Borel.

VI.

D. BERENGER BOREL, fonne to D. Raymond, in the yere 1017: he ruled 18 yeres.

The name of his wife is vncertaine.

Children
- D. Raymond Berenger.
- D. William Berenger.
- D. Sancho Berenger, a Prior.

D. RAY-

VII.

D. Raymond Berenger, ſonne to D. Berenger Borel, in the yere 1035: he ruled 41 yeares.

D. Radalmvrs his firſt wife.

D. Pedro Raymond.

D. Berenger Raymond.

D. Almodia, a French Ladie, deſcended from thoſe Lords which ruled then in Languedoc, by whom the houſe of Barcelona got the rights it hath had to Carcaſſone, and other lands in that countrey: by her D. Raymond had

D. Raymond Berenger, Earle.
D. Lucia, Counteſſe of Paliars by her mariage with the Earle of Artal.

VIII.

D. Raymond Berenger the Young, and third of that name, ſonne to D. Raymond Berenger 2, in the yere 1076: he held the Earledome of Barcelone ſix yeres.

D. Almodia, daughter to Robert Guichard, Duke of Ponglia, his wife, mother to

D. Raymond Arnould.

IX.

D. Raymond Arnovld, ſonne to D. Raymond Berenger, and 4 of that name, in the yeare 1082: he ruled 48 yeares.

D. Dovlce, Counteſſe of Prouence, daughter to Cont Gilebert, or Gibert, his wife, mother to

D. Berenguela, Queene of Caſtille.
D. Raymond Berenger, Prince of Arragon.
D. Berenger Raymond, Earle of Prouence.
One daughter, maried to Amery, Vicont of Narbona.
Another daughter, maried to Cont Roger, ſome call him Bernard de Foix.

X.

D. Raymond Berenger, fift of that name, ſonne to D. Raymond Arnould, in the yeare 1131: he ruled 31 yeares.

D. Petronella, daughter to the king D. Ramir the Monke: by which mariage the realme of Arragon and the Earledome of Cattelogne, or Barcelone, were vnited, they had Children: D. Raymond, who was afterwards called Alphonſo, king of Arragon.

D. Pedro.
D. Sancho.
D. Adoncia, Queene of Portugall.
One daughter, maried to the Earle of Vrgel.

D. Raymond, afterwards Alphonſo, ſonne to D. Raymond Berenger the fift, king of Arragon, and Earle of Barcelone, in the yeare 1162: his poſteritie is in the line of Arragon..

Line of Portugall.

Henrie of Beſanſon, or of Lorrain, was firſt Earl of Portugal, about the yere 1090, by his mariage with D. Theresa, daughter to D. Alphonſo the ſixt, king of Leon and Caſtille, to whom that countrey was giuen in dowrie: Their children were

D. Alphonſo Henriques, King.
D. Thereſa Henriques.
Another daughter, maried to D. Ferdinand Mendes.

Firſt King of Portugall.

D. Alphonso Henriqves ſucceeding his father in the Earldome of Portugal in the yere 1112, tooke vpon him the title of King about the yere 1139, and held that country 72 yeres.

D. Malfada Manriqve de Lara, his wife.

Children { D. Sancho, King of Portugall.
D. Vrraca, Queene of Leon.
D. Thereſa, Counteſſe of Flanders.
D. Malfada.

Baſtard D. Pedro Alphonſo.

II.

D. Sancho, firſt of that name, ſonne to D. Alphonſo, in the yeare 1184: he raigned 28 yeares.

D. Aldoncia, or Dovlce, daughter to D. Raymond Berenger, Earle of Barcelone, mother to Children { D. Alphonſo, King.

D. Ferdinand, Earle of Flanders.
D. Pedro, Earle of Vrgel in Arragon.
D. Henrique.
D. Thereſa, wife to D. Alphonſo of Leon.
D. Malfada, Queene of Caſtille.
D. Sancha, a Nunne.
D. Blanche.
D. Berenguela.

By D. Maria Aires, a concubine, he had Baſtards { D. Vrraca.

D. Martin of Portugall.

By D. Maria Peres of Ribera, another concubine, Baſtards { D. Thereſa Sanches.

D. Gil Sanches of Portugall.
D. Conſtance Sanches.
D. Ray Sanches of Portugall.

III.

D. Alphonso, ſecond of that name, ſon to the King of D. Sancho, in the yere 1212: he raigned 11 yeares.

{ D. Sancho.
D. Alphonſo.
D. Ferdinand.
D. Leonora, Queene of Denmarke.

By a concubine, a Moore,

D. Alphonſo Martines.

IIII.

D. Sancho, called Capello, ſecond of that name, ſonne to D. Alphonſo the ſecond, in the yeare 1223: he raigned in troubles vnto the yeare 1257; for then by reaſon of his incapacitie, D. Alphonſo, his brother, was called to the gouernement of Portugall.

D. Mencia Lopes, his wife, by whom he had no children.

V.

D. Alphonso, third of that name, brother to D. Sancho, of a Regent and Gouernor he made himſelfe king of Portugall, about the yeare 1257, and raigned two and twentie yeares.

Mahavlt, or Matilde, Counteſſe of Boullen, his lawfull wife, mother to

D. Ferdinand, or Peter.
D. Robert.

This king D. Alphonſo, to be ſupported in his deſignes to raigne by the fauour of Caſtille, left his lawfull wife Mahault Counteſſe of Boullen, and maried, in her life time, with the daughter of D. Alphonſo, called the Wiſe, king of Caſtille.

D. Beatrix

D. Beatrix, a baſtard, his wife, by whom he had
- D. Denis, king.
- D. Alphonſo.
- D. Blanche, a nun.
- D. Conſtance.

By a concubine, or by diuers, he had
- D. Leonora.
- D. Ferdinand Alphonſo of Portugall.

VI.

D. Denis, ſonne to D. Alphonſo the third, in the yeare 1279: hee raigned 46 yeares.
D. Isabel of Arragon, daughter to the king D. Pedro, his wife, mother to

Children
- D. Conſtance, Queene of Caſtille.
- D. Alphonſo, king of Portugall.
- D. Pedro, Earle of Portalegre.
- D. Alphonſo Sanches, a baſtard.

Some write, that the lawfull children of D. Denis and D. Iſabel, were,
- Iſabel.
- Conſtance.
- Alphonſo.

By concubines,

Baſtards
- D. Alphonſo, author of the familie of Albuquerque.
- D. Peter, who gaue himſelfe vnto learning, and made a booke of the great houſes of Spaine.
- D. Iohn.
- D. Ferdinand.
- A daughter maried to D. Iohn de la Cerde.
- Another daughter, a Nunne.

VII.

D. Alphonso the fourth, ſonne to D. Denis, in the yeare 1325: hee raigned thirtie two yeares.
D. Beatrix of Caſtille, his wife, mother to
- D. Pedro, King.
- D. Maria.
- D. Alphonſo.
- D. Denis.
- D. Iohn.
- D. Leonora, or Eluira, Queene of Arragon.

VIII.

D. Pedro, 1 of that name, ſon to D. Alphonſo 4, in the yere 1357: he raigned 10 yeres.
D. Blanche, daughter to D. Pedro king of Caſtille, whom he put away, and then maried D. Constance, daughter to D. Iohn Manuel, mother to
- D. Lewis, who died an infant.
- D. Ferdinand, King.
- D. Marie, wife to D. Ferdinand of Arragon.
- D. Beatrix died young.

By Agnes de Caſtro, a clandeſtine mariage,
- D. Alphonſo.
- D. Iohn.
- D. Denis.
- D. Beatrix, Counteſſe of Albuquerque.

D. Thereſa Gallega, a concubine.
- D. Iohn, who was King.

IX.

D. FERDINAND, ſonne to D. Pedro, in the yere 1367: he raigned ſeuenteene yeres.
D. LEONORA TELLES de Meueſes, his wife.
D. Beatrix, queene of Caſtille.
By a concubine he had Iſabella Counteſſe of Gijon.

X.

D. IOHN firſt of that name, baſe ſonne to the king D. Pedro: he got the realme by his ſword, and alſo by election, in the yere 1385, from D. Iohn king of Caſtille and D. Beatrix his wife. He was before maſter of Auiz. He raigned 49 yeres.
D. PHILIP of Lancaſter, an Engliſh woman, his wife, mother to
D. Blanche.
D. Alphonſo.
D. Edward king.
D. Pedro duke of Coimbra, who maried D. Iſabel of Arragon, and had
D. Henrie duke of Viſeo.
D. Iſabel ducheſſe of Bourgondie.
D. Pedro Conſtable, who thought to be king of Arragon.
D. Iohn king of Cypres.
D. Iſabel queene of Portugall.
D. Philip a Nunne.
D. Iames a Cardinall.
D. Beatrix, wife to the Lord of Raueſtaine.
D. Iohn Maſter of Saint Iames, father to D. Iſabel, who was queene of Caſtille.
D. Ferdinand Maſter of Auiz.
Beſides theſe lawfull children, the king D. Iohn had by D. Agnes a concubine, D. Beatrix Counteſſe of Arundel.
D. Alphonſo Earle of Oren and Barcellos, and duke of Bragance.

XI.

D. EDVVARD ſonne to D. Iohn the firſt, in the yere 1433: he raigned fiue yeres.
D. LEONORA of Arragon, daughter to D. Ferdinand the firſt, his wife, mother to Children:
D. Alphonſo king.
D. Ferdinand Duke of Viſeo, who maried D. Beatrix, daughter to his vncle D. Iohn Maſter of S. Iames, and had
D. Leonora queene.
D. Dominike.
D. Emanuel king.
D. Iſabel, Ducheſſe of Bragance.
D. Philip a daughter.
D. Leonora, wife to the Emperour Frederic the third.
D. Katherine.
D. Ioane queene of Caſtille.

XII.

D. ALPHONSO fift of that name, ſonne to D. Edward in the yeare 1438, and raigned 43 yeres.
D. ISABEL, daughter to his vncle D. Pedro Duke of Coimbra, his wife, mother to
D. Iohn, who died young.
D. Ioane.
D. Iohn king, whom ſome call Ferdinand, and make him father to Iohn which raigned, and adde a third ſonne,
D. Henrie.

XIII.

D. IOHN, ſecond of that name, ſon to D. Alphonſo the fift, in the yere 1481: he raigned foureteene yeres.
D. LEONORA, daughter to D. Ferdinand Duke of Viſeo, mother to
D. Alphonſo, who died before his father.
By D. Anna de Mendoſa, a concubine,
D. George, Maſter of S. Iames and Auiz.

D. EMANVEL

XIIII.

D. EMANVEL Sonne to D. Ferdinand duke of Viſeo, by right, and alſo by the nomination of king Iohn, was king of Portugal, in the yeare 1495, and raigned 26 yeares: he maried firſt:

D. ISABELL, eldeſt Daughter to D. Ferdinand and D. Iſabell Kings of Caſtille and Arragon, mother to

D. Michel who liued little.

D. MARIA, Siſter to the ſaid D. Iſabell his ſecond wife, by whome hee had

D. Iohn king.
D. Iſabell Queene of Caſtille, and Empreſſe.
D. Beatrix Ducheſſe of Sauoy.
D. Lewis, father to D. Anthony the Baſtard choſen king after Cardinall Henry his Vncle.
D. Henry Cardinall.
D. Alfonſo Cardinall.
D. Catherine.
D. Ferdinand.
D. Edward husband to Iſabell, daughter to Iohn or Iaime, duke of Bragance, & had
- Marie ducheſſe of Parma.
- Catherine ducheſſe of Bragance, wife to Iohn ſecond ſonne to Theodoſius.
- Edward an after birth died in the yere 1576.

D. Anthony, he died ſoone after he was borne.

D. LEONORA, ſiſter to the Emperour Charles the fift, mother to

D. Charles, he died an Infant.
D. Marie, who being 56 yeres old, died at Lisbone in the yeare 1578.

XV.

D. IOHN, 3 of that name, Sonne to D. Emanuell king of Portugall in the yeare 1521; he raigned thirty and ſixe yeares.

D. CATHERINE, ſiſter to the Emperour Charles, his wife, mother to

D. Alfonſo.
D. Marie Princeſſe of Caſtille.
D. Catherine.
D. Beatrix.
D. Emanuell.
D. Philip.
D. Iohn Prince, father to D. Sebaſtian, & husband to D. Ioane, daughter to the Emperour Charles.
D. Anthonie.

XXI.

D. SEBASTIAN Sonne to the Prince D. Iohn, in the yeare 1557, hee raigned one and twentie yeares, and died in Afrike, leauing no heires.

XVII.

D. HENRY, Cardinall, Archbiſhop of Ebora, ſonne to the King D. Emanuel, in the yeare 1578, he raigned about a yeare and a halfe.

XVIII.

D. PHILIP 2. king of Caſtille vnited the Realme of Portugall to Caſtille by force, after the Cardinals death, in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred and eighty, and held it eighteene yeares.

XIX.

D. PHILIP the third doth now hold this Realme.

Archbiſhops

Archbishops of Toledo.

Eugenius, first Archbishop.
Pelagius.
Patruuius.
Turibio.
Quince.
Vincent.
Paulacius or Pauiat.
Natalis.
Audens.
Astur.
Isicius.
Maioran.
Castin.
Melancius.
Campeius.
Cintuacinus.
Patron.
Paramacius.
Peter 1.
Celsus.
Montanus.
Iulian 1.
Bacchand.
Peter 2.
Eufemius.
Excipius.
Adelphius.
Aurasius.
Heladius Iustus.
Eugenius 2.
Eugenius 3.
Illefonsus.
Quiricius.
Iulian 2.
Sesebert or Sicarius.
S. Felix.
Gunderic or Guttiere.
Sinderic.
Opas.
Vrbain.
Peter, Cixilas, } In the time of the Moores.

After the Conquest of the Citie of Toledo from the Moores.

Bernard Abbot of Sahagun.
Raymond.
Iohn 1.
Celebrun.
Gonsal 1.
Martin.
Roderigo Ximenes.
Iohn 2.
Guttiere 2.
Pascal.
Sancho 1.
Sancho 2, Infant of Arragon.
Gonsal 2, Cardinall.
Guttiere 3.
Gonsal 3.
Iohn 3, Infant of Arragon.
Ximene de Luna.
Gil Carillo d' Albornos, Cardinall.
Blaise.
Blasco.
Gomez Manrique.
Pedro Tenorio 4.
Pedro de Luna 5
Sancho de Roias.
Iohn de Contreras 4.
Iohn de Cerezuela 5.
Guttiere Gomes, de Toledo.
Alfonso Carillo de Acugna.
Pedro Gonsal de Mendosa, a Cardinal
Francis Ximenes a Cardinall.
William of Croy.
Alfonso Fonseca of Azeneda.
Iohn Tauera, Cardinall.
Iohn Martines Siliceo, Cardinall.
Frier Barthelmew Carranza de Miranda.

76. Archbishops.

Moores.

Gouernors vnder the Miralmumins or kings of Affrike.

Musa in the yeare 714
Tarif.
Abdulazis tooke the royal diademe at Seuille.
Aiub, who restored the ancient Bilbilis, and called it Calataiub.
Alahor.
Adam.
Abderrahamen.
Iahea.
Adaifa Alcazazin.
Hieman.
Autuman.
Alhatan.
Manes.
Mahumet.
Abderrahamen.
Abdimelic.
Abubacar.
Redoan.
Toaba.
Ioseph.

Soue-

Soueraigne kings at Cordoua ouer the other Princes Moores, in Spaine, and did no more acknowledge the Miralmumins of Afrike.

Abderrahamen 1.	yeare 757	Zuleima.	989
Hizen his ſonne.	787	Mahumet 3.	993
Haliathan, ſonne to Hizen.	794	Hali.	1001
Abderrahamen 2.	819	Cacin.	1003
Mahumet.	839	Hiaia.	1007
Almundir.	874	Abderrahamen.	1007
Abdalla.	876	Mahumet 4.	1007
Abderrahamen Almanſor 3.	889	Hizen 3.	1009
Hali Hatan 2.	939	Ioar.	1011
Aizen 2.	956	Mahumet 5.	1014

After theſe there were great alterations and changes among the Moores in Spaine, ſometimes free, ſometimes vnder the kings of Maroc and Fez: in the end the realme of Granado was erected, the which continued aboue two hundred and fiftie yeares vnder the kings which follow.

GRANADO.

Mahumet Aben Alhamar.	1236	Ioſeph his Sonne.	1392
Mahumet Mir Almus his ſonne.	1272	Mahumet Aben Balua.	1396
Mahumet Aben Alhamar Aben Azar.	1302	Ioſeph.	1407
Mahumet Azar Aben Leuin.	1309	Mahumet Aben Azar.	1423
Iſmael.	2319	Mahumet the little.	1427
Mahumet Sonne to Iſmaell.	1322	Ioſeph Aben Almao.	1432
Ioſeph Aben Amet.	1334	Mahumet Aben Ozmen.	1445
Mahumet Lagus.	1354	Iſmael.	1453
Mahumet the Vermeil raigned two yeres, but		Muley Alboacen.	1462
Mahumet whom he had expelled returned		Mahumet Boabdelin the little.	1482
Mahumet Guadix.	1379	Muley Boabdelin.	1485

This king being expelled from Granado by Mahumet aboue named retained Malaga, Baſa, Almerie, Guadix, and ſome other places, which were taken from them by the kings D. Ferdinand and D. Iſabell, ſome by force, ſome by compoſition, Boabdelin, remaining ſole king of Granado, whereof he was diſpoſſeſt by the ſame kings.

The Titles and families of all the Dukes, Marqueſſes, and Earles of Spaine.

THE duke of Lerma and of Cea, Marqueſſe of Denia and Villamiſar, Earle of Ampudia, of the Councel of ſtate, cup-bearer to king Philip 3. and maſter of his horſe, commander Maior of Caſtille, captain general of the horſe of Spain and of the holy church of Toledo, Adelantado, or Lord Preſident of Caſorla, the head of the houſe of Roias and Sandoual: he holds his eſtate in Caſtille the old, and his houſe in Vailledolit, and in Denia.

They are called Grandes to whome the king giues leaue to ſtand couered before him. All dukes be Grandes.

2 The duke of Frias, Marques of Berlanga, earle of Haro, Lord of the houſe of the ſeuen Infants of Lara, Conſtable of Caſtille, Iuſtice Maior and high Chamberlain, he is the chiefe of the Velaſcos: his houſe is in Burgos, & his eſtate in Caſtille the old, in the mountains of Biſcaie, and the hils of Soria; hee is of the Councel of State and Preſident of the Councell of Italie, he had a daughter which was married to the duke of Bragance.

3 The duke of Medina of Rioſecco, Marques of Modica, earle of Melgar, Vicont of Eſterlin, Admiral of Caſtille, head of the Enriques: he holds his houſe in Vailledolit, and his eſtate in the Prouince of Campos, Catalonia and Sicilia.

4 The

4 The duke of Alua and Gueſca, marques of Coria, Earle of Saluatierra, Vicõt of Saldices, & lord of Valde Corneia, the chiefe of the familie of the Toledos: he holds his houſe in Salamanca, and his eſtate in Caſtille the old, towards Portugal, and the realm of Granado, he is Conſtable of Nauarre, and a knight of the order of the Golden fleece.

5 The duke of Infantado, Marques of Cenete, and Santillana, earle of Saldanes, Lord of the royaltie of Manſanares, and head of the Mendoſas: he hath his houſe in the citie of Guadalajara, and his eſtate in the kingdome of Toledo, and in the monntaines of Caſtille the old, and in the Prouince of Alaua, he is of the Councell of State.

6 The duke of Medina Celi, Marques of Cogolludo, Earle of Port Sãcta Maria, chief of the familie of Los Cerdas: his houſe is in Medina Celi, and his eſtate in the Realm of Toledo, & Seuille, he is of the bloud Royall of Caſtille.

7 The duke of Medina Sidonia, Marques of S. Lucar of Barameda, Earle of Niebla, head of the family of Guzmans: he holds his houſe in Seuille, and S. Lucar, and his eſtate in the country of Seuille.

8 The duke of Eſcalona, Marques of Moya, earle of Eſteuan, hee hath his houſe in the citie of Toledo, and his eſtate in the realmes of Murcia, and in la Mancha, he is chiefe of the Pachecos, he was married vnto the ſiſter of the duke of Bragance.

9 The duke of Oſuna, Marques of Pegnafiel, earle of Vrena, head of the familie of Gironnes: he hath his houſe in Pegnafiel, and his eſtate in the realm of Seuille and in Caſtille.

10 The duke of Bejar, Marques of Gibraleon, earle of Benalcacar, head of the Zunigas, and of the familie of Soto Maior: he holds his houſe in Seuille, and his eſtate in the realme of Seuille and in Caſtille the old he is of the bloud royall.

11 The duke of Albuquerque, Marques of Biedma & Cuellar, earle of Ledeſina, head of the familie of the Cueuas: he hath his houſe in Cuellar, his eſtate in Eſtremadura, and in Caſtille the old.

12 The duke of Alcala de los Gaſules, Marques of Tariſa, earle of Hornos and Villamartin, chiefe Preſident of Andaluſia, he is of the familie of the Enriques and Riberas: hee hath his houſe in the citie of Seuille, and his eſtate in Andaluſia, hee hath married with a daughter of the Marques of Caſtell Rodrigo, Verrey of Portugall.

13 The duke of Seſa and Terranoua, Earle of Cabra and Baena, head of the Cordouas & of Aguilar: he holds his houſe in Cordoua and Granado, and his eſtate in the kingdome of Naples, & in the realme of Cordoua: he is of the Councel of ſtate, and chiefe ſteward to the Queene.

14 The duke of Najara, earle of Treuigno & Valencia, of D. Iohn, hee is head of the familie of the Manriques de Lara: he hath his houſe at Najara, and his eſtate in the Prouince of Rioje, and in the realme of Leon.

15 The Duke of Maqueda, Marques of Elche, head of the Cardenas: hee hath his houſe in Toledo, and his eſtate in the realm of Seuille.

16 The duke of Feria, Marques of Safra, head of the familie of the Figeroas: he hath his eſtate in Eſtremadura, and his houſe in Safra.

17 The duke of Arcos, Marques of Lara, earle of Marchena, head of the houſe of Pances: hee hath his eſtate in Andaluſia, and houſe in Seuille.

18 The duke of Gandia, marques of Laiba, head of the family of the Borias: hee hath his eſtate and houſe in the Realme of Valencia.

19 The duke of Sogorue and Cordoua, marques of Comares, lord of Lucena, of the bloud royall of Arragon, and of la Cerde: hee hath his houſe in the citie of Valencia, and the Duchie of Sogorue in the realme of Valencia, and that of Cordoua, in Cattelonia, and his greateſt eſtate in the realme of Cordoua.

20 The duke of Soma, earle of Panamos, admiral of Naples, his of the family of the Cardonas: he hath he is houſe at Belpuche and his eſtate in the Realme of Naples.

21 The duke of Villahermoſa, earle of Ribagorſa, head of the houſe of Arragon: he hath his houſe at Saragoſſe, and his eſtate in the realme of Arragon.

22 The duke of Veraguas Admirall of the Indies, of the houſe of Toledo: hee keepes his houſe in the city of Saragoſſe, and his eſtate in the realme of Arragon.

23 The duke of Paſtrana, prince of Eboli, of the familie of Siluas in Portugall: he hath his houſe and his eſtate in Paſtrana.

24 The

24 The duke of Franca villa, Prince of Melito, of the houſe of the Mendoſas: hee hath his houſe in Franca villa, and his eſtate in the realme of Naples.

Marqueſſes that be Grandes.

1 The Marques of Aſtorga, Earle of Traſtamara, Lord of the houſe of Villa Lobos, head of the familie of the Oſſortos: he hath his houſe in the citie of Aſtorga, and his eſtate in the realm of Leon, and in the prouince of Campos.

2 The Marques of Aguilar, Earle of Caſtagneda, of the houſe of the Manriques of Lara: he holds his houſe in Carrion and in Aguilar del Campo, and his eſtate in the mountains of Leon, and in the prouince of Campos.

3 The Marques of Mondejar, Earle of Tendilla, one of the houſe of the Mendoſas: he holds his houſe in Mondejar, and his eſtate in Alcaria.

4 The Marques of Tauarres, maſter of Monteſa, of the houſe of Borias: he may giue the habit of Monteſa in Arragon and Valencia, and hath his eſtate and houſe in the ſaid realmes.

5 The Marques of Pliego, Lord of the houſe of Aguilar, of the familie of Figeroas: he hath his houſe in Cordoua, and his eſtate in the ſaid realme, and in baſe Andaluſia.

6 The Marques of Los Velez, Adelantado or Preſident of Murcia, of the familie of the Faiardos: he hath his eſtate and houſe in the realme of Murcia.

7 The Marques of Villa Franca, of the houſe of the Toledos: he keeps his houſe in Villa, franca, and his eſtate in the realme of Leon and Naples.

8 The Marques of Sancta Cruz, of the familie of the Baſanes: he hath his houſe in Viſo, and his eſtate in the realme of Toledo.

9 The Marques of Frichilla, and of Malagon, he is brother to the duke of Bragance: he hath his eſtate in Caſtille, and is of the bloud royall of Portugall, and liues in the city of Ebora, in the ſame realme.

Marqueſſes which be not Grandes.

1 The Marques of Ayamonte, of the familie of Sunigas: he hath his eſtate & houſe in Seuille.

2 The Marques of Beneſa, of the houſe of Anellenada.

3 The Marques of Viana, of the familie of the Pimentelles: he hath his houſe in Vailledolit, and his eſtate in Galicia.

4 The Marques of Cameraca, of Sauiote, and Earle of Riſcla, he was Adelantado of Caſorla: he is of the houſe of Cobos and Mendoſa.

5 The Marques of Cortes, he is of the Toledos: he hath his houſe in Cortes, and his eſtate in the realme of Nauarre.

6 The Marques of Monte-maior, of the houſe of Siluas.

7 The Marques of Guardia, Earle of Sancta Euphemia; he is the chiefe of the familie of the Mexias: he hath his houſe in Salamanca, and his eſtate in Andaluſia, and in the realm of Iaen.

8 The Marques of Montes Claros, of the houſe of the Mendoſas: he hath his houſe in Guadalajara, and his eſtate in Alcaria.

9 The Marques of Las Nauas, he is chiefe of the houſe of Auilas: he hath his houſe in the city of Auila, and his eſtate in the mountaines of Auila.

10 The Marques of Poſa, he is of the familie of Roxas: he hath his houſe in Poſa, and his eſtate in Caſtille the old.

11 The Marques of Stepa, of the houſe of the Centuriones at Genoua: he hath his eſtate and houſe in the realme of Seuille.

12 The Marques of Tabara, he hath his eſtate in Caſtille the old, & his houſe in Vailledolit.

13 The Marques of Villa noua del rio, of the familie of the Enriques: he holds his eſtate in Extremadura, and his houſe in Seuille.

14 The Marques of Villa noua of Barca rota, he is chiefe of the familie of Puerto carreros: he holds his houſe in Seuille, and his eſtate in Extremadura.

15 The Marques of Ladrada, of the familie of Los Cuenas: he holds his eſtate in the realme of Toledo.

16 The Marques of Canete, of the familie of Mendoſa: he hath his houſe in the city of Cuenca, and his eſtate in the ſaid prouince.

17 The Marques of Falces, head of the Peraltes: he hath his houſe in Nauarre, and his eſtate in the ſaid kingdome.

18 The Marques of Fiomeſta, of the familie of the Benauidas and Enriques : he hath his houſe in Fiomeſta, and his eſtate in the prouince of Campos.

19 The Marques of Valle, ſonne to Fernando Cortes, who conquered Noua Hiſpania : hee hath his houſe in Seuille and in Mexico, and his eſtate in Noua Hiſpania.

20 The Marques of Aunon, he is of the Herceras: he hath his houſe in Madrid, and his eſtate in Alcaria.

21 The Marques of Ardale, Earle of Teba, of the houſe of Guzman: he keepes his houſe in Malaga, and his eſtate in the realme of Seuille.

22 The Marques of Beretta, of the familie of the Cardenas: he hath his houſe in Herena, and his eſtate in Eſtremadura.

23 The Marques of Villa Manrique, of the houſe of Suniga: he hath his eſtate & houſe in the realme of Seuille.

24 The Marques of Motta, of the houſe of Vlloa : hee holds his eſtate and houſe in Caſtille.

25 The Marques of Alcanices, of the familie of the Henriques: he hath his eſtate and houſe in Caſtille.

26 The Marques of Auila Fuente, of the houſe of the Sunigas: he holds his eſtate and houſe in Caſtille.

27 The Marques of Molina.

28 The Marques of Fuentes.

29 The Marques of Villada, Maior domo, maior or chiefe Steward, to the king : he is one of the Grandes.

30 The Marques of Laguna, chiefe ſteward to the Queene : he is a Grande.

31 The Marques of Sarraluo.

32 The Marques of Caracena, of the familie of the Carrillos and Toledos.

33 The Marques of Cuellar.

34 The Marques of Saint Germain, of the houſe of Mendoſas, his Marquiſate is in Sauoy, and his houſe and eſtate in Caſtille: He is a gentleman of the kings chamber, and Lieutenant generall of his gards and of all the horſe in Spaine.

Earles which be Grandes.

1 The Earle of Miranda, Marques of Baneza : he is head of the Auellanedas, and is of the familie of Sunigas and Baſanes: he holds his houſe in Peneranda villa ſuya, & his eſtate in Caſtille the old, and the mountaines thereof : he is of the Councell of State, and Prefident of the chiefe of Caſtille.

2 The Earle of Benauent, the head of the Pimentels: he holds his houſe in Vailledolit, and his eſtate in the prouince of Campos : he is the greateſt Earle in Spaine.

3 The Earle of Alua de Liſta, of the familie of the Henriques : he hath his houſe in Zamora, and his eſtate in Caſtille the old, and Eſtremadura : he is of the Councell of State, and chiefe huntſman to the king, and of his chamber.

4 The Earle of Lemos and Andrada, of Caſtro and Villalua, Marques of Sarria, and Lord of Vlloa, he is head of the houſe of Caſtros, and gentleman of the kings chamber, he is preſident of the councell of the Indies: he hath his houſe in Lemos and Sarria, and his eſtate in the realm of Galicia.

5 The Earle of Oropeza, he is of the houſe of Toledo and Pachecos: he hath his houſe at Talauera, and his eſtate in the realm of Toledo, he had one daughter and heire, who was married to a brother of the Duke of Bragances.

6 The Earle of Sancta Gadea, he is head of the familie of the Padillas, he is a gentleman of the kings chamber, and Adelantado maior of Caſtille : he hath his houſe and ſtate in Caſtille.

Earles which be not Grandes.

The Earle of Salinas and Ribadeo, of the houſe of Auellaneda & Mendoſa : he hath his houſe in the city of Burgos and his eſtate in Biſcaie, & the mountaines, who (for that his predeceſſors did helpe much in the winning of Toledo) haue this priuiledge, to dine on twelfe day with the King, and the apparell, which the King weares that day, is his, with his beſt horſe, and a Cup of gold. This houſe fell by mariage to Ruy Gomez de Silua, Duke of Paſtrana, who was ſecond brother ther to him that died in Flanders, and Vncle to him that holds the ſtate at this day, he is preſident of the Councell of Portugall.

2 The Earle of Aguilar, head of the Arrelanos, and Lord of Los Camerose he hath his houſe in the towne of Nilda, which is his, and his eſtate is in Rioja, and the Mountaines of Soria.

3 The Earle of Aranda, Lord of Almuerin.

4 The Earle of Alcaudette, of the houſe of the Cordouas: he keepes his houſe in Alcaudette, and his eſtate in the realme of Cordoua, he is alſo of Aluaida, of the houſe of Milan.

5 The Earle of Altamira, of the houſe of Roxas, and Moſcoſo: he hath his houſe in Altamira and his eſtate in Galicia.

6 The Earle of Citona, of the houſe of Moncada and Heredia.

7 The Earle of Buendia, Lord of Duenas, of the houſe of Acugna: he hath his houſe in Acugna, and his eſtate in the Territorie of Campos.

8 The Earle of Ayllon, of the houſe of Leon and Cordoua.

9 The Earle of Belchite, of the houſe of Ytar: he holds his eſtate in Valencia and Arragon.

10 The Earle of Caſtellar, he is the chiefe of the Sayauedras: he hath his houſe in Seuille, and his eſtate in the ſame realme.

11 The Earle of Caſtro Xeris, of the houſe of Mendoſa, and Manriques: he hath his houſe in Caſtro Xeris, and his eſtate in the realme of Leon.

12 The Earle of Chinchon, head of the houſe of the Bobadillas: he hath his houſe in Madrid, and his eſtate in the realme of Toledo.

13 The Earle of Ciſuente, he is the head of the Siluas: hee hath his houſe in Toledo, and his eſtate in Alcaria.

14 The Earle of Corunna, of the houſe of Mendoſa: his houſe is in Guadalajara, & his eſtate in Alcaria.

15 The Earle of Fuenſalida, he is the head of the Ayalas, his houſe is in Toledo, and his eſtate in the ſame realme.

16 The Earle of Gelues, he is chief of the houſe of the Portugals, he hath his houſe in Seuille, and his eſtate in the ſame realme.

17 The Earle of Gomera, which is in the Iland of the great Canarie, hee is of the houſe of the Ayalas.

18 The Earle of Gajan.

19 The Earle of Oliuares, he is of the houſe of Guzman: his houſe is at Seuille, and his eſtate in Andaluſia.

20 The Earle of Ierra, of the familie of the Carios.

21 The Earle of Coſtania in Valencia.

22 The Earle of Cortuino.

23 The Earle of Fuentes of the houſe of Heredia: hee hath his eſtate in Arragon, and his houſe at Fuentes.

24 The Earle of Luna, he is head of the Quignones and Villafanes, he hath his houſe and eſtate in the realme of Leon.

25 Earle of Medellin, of the houſe of Puerto Carreiro: hee hath his houſe in Medellin, and his eſtate in Eſtremadura.

26 Earle of Monteagudo, he is of the houſe of Mendoſa: he holds his eſtate in Raca of Arragon, and his houſe in Almaſa.

27 Earle of Monterey, of the houſe of Azuedo: he hath his houſe in Salamanca, and his eſtate in Galicia.

28 Earle of Oſorno, he is of the Manriques, his houſe is in Vailledolit, and his eſtate in Caſtille the old.

29 Earle of Onante, head of the Gueuares: he hath his houſe in Onante, and his eſtate in the prouince of Guipuſcoa.

30 Earle of Oliua, of the houſe of Gentillas.

31 Earle of Morata, of the houſe of Luna.

32 Earle of Orga, he is of the houſe of Ayala and Mendoſa: and ſome ſay hee is the head of the Mendoſas.

33 Earle of Puebla, of the houſe of the Cardenas: he hath his houſe in Llerena, and his eſtate in Eſtremadura.

34 Earle

34 Earle of Paluia, of the houſe of Puerto Carriero, he holds his houſe in Eccia, and his eſtate in the Realme of Cordoua.

35 Earle of Pliego, of the houſe of Carillo and Mendoſa: hee hath his houſe in Guadalajara, and his eſtate in the mountaines of Cuenca.

36 Earle of Puno in Roſtro, he is head of the Sarrias: he hath his houſe in Madrid, and his eſtate in the Realme of Toledo.

37 Earle of Paredes, of the houſe of Manriques: his houſe is in Paredes, and his eſtate in the prouince of Campos.

38 Earle of Ribadauia, of the houſe of Auellaneda: he hath his houſe in Vailledolit, and his eſtate in Gallicia.

39 Earle of Ciruela, of the houſe of Velaſco.

40 Earle of Saſtago and Pina, of the houſe of Arragon: hee hath his houſe in Saragoſſe, and his eſtate in the realme of Arragon.

41 Earle of Saint Eſteuan, the head of the Benauides: his houſe is in the citie of Vuida, and his eſtate in the realme of Arragon.

42 Earls of Nauarre, of the family of the Toledos, & by his wife, by whom he had the eſtates, of the bloud of Nauarre, & of the Beaumonts: he hath his houſe and eſtate in the realm of Nauarre.

43 Earle of Bargas, he is head of the houſe of Capatas, his houſe is in Madrid.

44 Earle of Puebla of Montaluan, of the familie of the Telles, Girones and Pachecos: hee holds his eſtate in Eſtremadura.

45 Earle of Baileu, hee is of the Ponſos of Leon: his houſe is in Baileu, and his eſtate in the realme of Iaen.

46 Earle of Nieua, of the houſe of Valaſco: he hath his houſe in Nieua, and his eſtate in Rioja.

47 Earle of Saluatierra, of the houſe of Ayala: he holds his eſtate in Caſtille the old.

48 Earl of Coſentaina, of the houſe of Corella: his eſtate & houſe is in the realm of Valencia.

49 Earle of Galuas, of the houſe of Los Cerdas.

50 Earle of Delda, of the familie of the Colomas: his eſtate & houſe are in the realm of Valẽcia.

51 Earle of Ficallo, of the houſe of Gandia and Borias: his countie is in Portugall, but his eſtate and houſe in the Realme of Valencia.

52 Earle of Cuba, he is of the Henriques of Almanca: he hath his countie in Portugall, and his eſtate and houſe in the realme of Caſtille.

53 Earle of Villamediana, he is of the familie of Taxis.

54 Earle of Barraja.
55 Earle of Mayalde
56 Earle of Mirabel.
57 Earle of Galue.
58 Earle of Villaflor.
59 Earle of Caſſarubios.
60 Earle of Los Arcos.
61 Earle of Salaſar.
62 Earle of Villalonſo.
63 Earle of Riſco.
64 Earle of Malpica.
65 Earle of Torrejon.

Viconts, Admirals and Adelantados.

Vicont of Peralta.
Vicont del Buli.
Vicont of Altamira.
Vicont of Chelba.
Admirall of Caſtille.
Admirall of Arragon.
Admirall of Valencia.
Adelantado Maior of Caſtille.
Adelantado Maior of Andaluſia Adelantado of Galicia.
Adelantado of Canaria.
Adelantado of Carſorla.
Adelantado of the houſe of Mendoſa.

Maſterſhips of Orders of Knights.

The great Maſterſhip of Saint Iames.
The Maſterſhip of Alcantara.
The maſterſhip of the Calatraua.

Theſe three are annexed to the Crowne, and the king is perpetuall Gouernor and Adminiſtrator of them.

Theſe be the Dukes, Marqueſſes, Earles, Admirals, and Adelantados, which are in the realms of Caſtille, Leon, Arragon, Nauarre, Galicia, Valencia, and Cattelonia, and the other eſtates of Spaine, except Portugal. Some haue preciſely ſet downe the reuenues of euerie one of theſe Noblemen in their relations, as if they were immutable; but, being ſubiect daily to increaſe and decreaſe according to the diſpoſition and frugality, of the perſons that enioy them, I haue wittingly omitted it: But thus much I dare boldly ſay, that the nobility of Spain are exceeding rich in their yerely reuenues, and, if I be not much deceiued, they are the richeſt ſubiects in reuenues of any country of Chriſtendome.

FINIS.

A Table of the moſt memorable things contained in this Hiſtorie of Spayne: wherein the Reader is to be aduertiſed of an error eſcaped in the bodie of the Booke, in numbring of the pages, from 971, from whence to 972. he ſhall find them doubled: Which obſerued, will ſet him right on that he ſeekes for by this Table.

Abderramen ſtemme of the Kings of Maroc, 165
Abderramen vſurpes the Soueraignty of Spaine, 175
Aben Mahomet, a Mooriſh king vnder the protection of the King of Caſtile, 369 Accord betwixt the Romanes and the Carthaginians, 36
Accord betwixt the k. of Caſtile & his mother, 277
Accord betwixt the kings of Caſtile and Arragon, for the diuorce of Queene Elenor, 339
Accord betwixt the Kings of Nauar & Arrag. 366
A concord betwixt the King of Caſtile and Granado, 394
Accord betwixt Alphonſo king of Caſtile, and his rebellious ſubiects, 400
Accord betwixt the Eſtates of Nauarre, and Pearo of Arragon, 403
Accord betwixt the kings of Maroc & Caſtil, 427 Accord betwixt Caſtile and Portugal by mariage, 443.
Accord betwixt Granado and Caſtile, 454
Accord betwixt Caſtile and Nauar, 582
Accord betwixt the kings of Caſtile & Arrag. 588
Act of the Maſter of Auiz to make the Caſtillans odious, 603
Accord betwixt the king of Caſtile and the Duke of Lancaſter, 614
Accord betwixt the Noblemen of Caſtile, 636
Accord made with the Earle of Giion, 648
Accord made by the king of Caſtile with D. Henry of Arragon, 690
Accident happened to the Prince of Portugall, and his death, 941
Aecord betwixt the k. of Caſtile and Nauar. 740 Accord betwixt D. Iohn king of Arragon, and his ſonne D. Charles, 761
Accuſations propounded by the Confederats, 781 Accord betwixt king Iohn of Arragon and Leonora his daughter, 812
Accord for the gouernment of Spaine, 924
Act of conſtancie of D. Alphonſo Perez de Guzman, 438
Act of Alphonſo of Aguilar againſt the children of the Earle of Cabra, 819 Act of choler done by the D. of Infantaſgo, 1001
Adrian doth a generous act 121
Adelatamiento of Caſorla giuen to the Church of Toledo, 365
Aduiſe of D. Nugno de Lara, 397
Adultery puniſhed, 550
Admonition of the ſon to the father, 1134
Aduertiſements of a Philoſopher a Moore, to the king of Caſtile, 572
Admonition of the Admirall of Caſtile to Cardinall Ximenes, 949 Approbation of the Order of Saint Ierome by the Pope, 586
Admonition of the king of Caſtile to his ſiſter the Queene of Nauarre, 623
Admirall of Caſtile ſurpriſeth Simancas, 819
Admiraltie in Caſtile, and the iuriſdiction, 993
Æra of Ceſar aboliſhed in Arragon, 542
Affection of a mother, 227
Agility of the Numidian horſemen, 143
Affricke a towne in the Realme of Tunes taken by the king. 706
Ayre in Sardynia corrupted by nature, 22
Admirall of Boniuet enters Guipuſcoa with an armie, 966
Alario chiefe of the Gothes, 130
Alanes and Vandales defeated by the Goths, 151
Alcaron of the Barbarians, 163
Alphonſo king of Ouiedo and Leon leaues the Crowne to become a Monke, 199. he repented that he became a Monke, 200. hee is beſeeged and taken by his owne brother, ibid.
Alphonſo king of Leon, a louer of Iuſtice, 226
Alphonſo k. of Leon diſpoſſeſt by his brother, 241
D. Almodia poyſoned by her ſonne-in-law, 244
D. Alphonſo king of Nauarre ſeeks to aſſure himſelfe of Caſtile, 270
Almudebar taken from the Moores, 272
D. Alphonſo king of Nauarre defeated by the Moores and ſlaine, 282
Alphonſo Raymond king of Caſtile crowned Emperor of Spaine, 285
Alphonſo king of Caſtile beeing young, giuen in gard to the Inhabitants of Auila, 310. hee marries Elenor of England, 314
Alphonſo King of Portugall, taken priſoner by the king of Leon, 322
Alphonſo king of Caſtile inuades Leon and Nauarre, 331
D. Aluar de Lara ſpoiles the Queene Regent of her authoritie and eſtate, 351
D. Aluaro of Sandy taken priſoner by the Turkes, 1092.
Aluar de Lara taken priſoner, 354
Alphonſo of Portugall leaues his lawfull wife, 389
D. Alphonſo king of Caſtile diſinherirs the children of D. Fernand his eldeſt ſonne, 413
Alain Leontine a damnable traytor, his end, 428
D. Alphonſo de la Cerde ſaluted k. of Caſtile, 440
Alphonſo de la Cerde and D. Iohn of Caſtile contend for the Realme of Caſtile, 440
Allyance renued betwixt Caſtile & Arragon, 458
Alcaudete taken by the king of Caſtile, 458
Alphonſo de la Cerde quits his intereſt to Caſt. 434
Alaua vnited to the crowne of Caſtile, 488
Alboacen king of Maroc diſpoſſeſt by his ſon, 519
Alcauala, a kind of Impoſt. 527

Don Alphonso Fernand Cornet vnworthily put to death, 534
D Alphonso the king of Castiles vncle deliuered out of prison, 633
Aluaro de Luna and his beginning, 670
Alphonso king of Arragon leads an army into Corsica, 686
Alphonso de Luna made Constable of Castile, 687
Alphonso k. of Arragon fauors a new Schism, 688
Aluaro de Luna Constable of Castile, insolent, couetous, and trecherous, 714 Aluaro de Luna Constable of Castil executed, 744
Alphonso king of Arragon inuested in the Realme of Nauar, 724
Alphonso of Faiardo punisht for his rebellion, 759
Alphonso the king of Castils brother acknowledged heire to the Crown, 782. he is in captiuity with the Confederates, 794
Aluar Gomez disloyall to the K. of Castile, 783
Alphonso of Hoieda first discouerer of the mayne land at the Indies, 889
Alphonso of Arragon and his posteritie 831
Allyance betwixt France and Castile, 855
Alhama taken by the Castillans, 884
Alhambra of Granado yeelded to the King of Castile, 940
Alliances betwixt the house of Austria and Castil, 954.
Amilcar slaine by the Spaniards, 35
Ambition makes Mandonius and Indibilis disloyal, 68.
Ambassador ill aduised and importunate, 101
Ambition the mother of heresies, 160
Ambition of Almodia furious and vnrestrayned, 225.
Ambassadors sent from Nauar to Castile, 478
Ambassadors speech to the king of Arragon, 591
Ambassadors from France to the k. of Castile, 631
Ambassadors from the King of Granado to the K. of Castile, 645
Ambassadors discouer the councels and actions of Princes, 658
Amadeus of Sauoy called Pope Felix, 733 Ancients vsed Religion to keepe the people in aw, 51.
Antiquity of Toledo, 251
Ambition a vice in great men, 1132
Answer of D. Henry of Nauar to the Conspirators of Castile, 397
Andrew of Clairmont beheaded at Palermo, 660 Ambassadors from the king of Castile to the Souldans of Egypt, 968
Ambassador of king Fernand stayd in Bearne, 905
Answer made by Pope Paul to the Duke of Albas complaint, 1075
Apparitions beleeued by the Spaniards, 149
Apparition of S. Isidore, 251
Armes of the ancient Spaniards, 16
Arts in Spaine damnable in old time, 30
Army of Spaniards against the Romaines, 78
Argimond a traitor punished, 144
Arabians first attempt vpon Spaine, 150
Arabian western Mores descended frō Ismael, 161
Arabians tributaries to the Romanes, 164
Arabian tong common in Affricke, 166
Arabians & Mores all one in this History, 168
Arabians 5. years about the cōquest of Spain, ibid.
Armes of Barcelona and Arragon, 191
Arabian Phisitions in great request, 205
Arts flourish among the Arabians in Spaine, 236
Arragon and Nauarre vnited, 243
Arragon and Cattelonia vnited by marriage, 288
Arragon exempt frō the Soueraignty of Castil, 317
Aduice giuen by the Emperour Charles vnto his sonne, 1126 Aduice to D. Iohn touching the war of Granado, 1147.
Army of Turkes in Cypres, 1159
Aduice of k. Philip to King Sebastian, 1199
Army against the Mores in Spaine, 339
Armes of Nauarre, 342
Arabians in Spaine reiect the Miralmumins of Affricke, 353
Archb. in quarrell for the Primacie, 376
Articles sworne by the King of Nauarre, 477
Arragonois defeated by the Nauarrois, 457
Articles of the Order of the band, 489
Armies are vnprofitable that haue too great multitudes, 510
Archb. of Toledo forced to leaue Spaine, 535
Armie of Don Pedro king of Castile, 574
Act of D. Leonora Telles de Meneses, 597
Archbishop of Toledo turbulent, 630
Articles concluded at the assembly at Tholousa in Guipuscoa, 634
Archbishop of Toledo regards not the publike good, 633. he is detayned prisoner, 640
Arragonois reiect D. Ioane and chose Don Martin to be king. 650
Articles of marriage broken by the Estates of Arragon, 660
Arbitrators to chuse the king of Nauarre, 675
Artillerie when first vsed in Spaine, 669
Articles concluded for the pacification of the troubles in Castile, 782
Archb. of Toledo betrayes the king his Master, 784
Arragonois defeated by the French, 808
Articles of mariage betwixt Fernand of Arragon, and Izabella of Castile, 818
Arzilla and Tanger in Affricke taken by the king of Portugall, 829
Archb. of Toledo disloyall and seditious. 871
Armes of French in Spaine, 873
Arzilla beseeged by the Mores, and the towne taken, 887
Army of Spaine annoy the Venetians, 895
Articles of yeelding of Pampelona to the Duke of Alba, 904
Army of French enters into Nauarre, 909
Armes giuen to the Prouince of Guipuscoa, 910
Arrogant answer of D. Pedro Giron, 926
Articles betwixt the Emperor and k. of Tunes, 991
Army of Charles the 5. going into Prouence, 996
Army of Turks prepar'd against the Portugals, 997
Armie of Christians against Gerbe, 1086
Armie of Turkes in Minorca, 1082

Army ſent againſt Pegnon de Veles, 1113
Arrians perſecute the faithfull 125
Archbiſhop of Toledo drawne in queſtion by the Inquiſition. 1125
Army ſent with the D. of Alua into Flanders, 1129
Abdalla King of Marroc, Fez and Taradant, 1195
Allegations made by King Philip touching his title to Portugall, 1209
Aduice of the diuines of Alcala of Henares ibid
Army of D. Anthony put to rout 1214
Articles granted by King Philip to the realme of Portugall, 1219
Army of French and Spaniſh at the Iland of Saint Michel. 1221
Aſdrubal takes aduantage of his enemies negligence 42. he prepares to goe into Italy. 43. his paſſage broken, 44. he circumuents Nero, 50. he makes nee conſcience to deceaue his enimy, 51 he thinkes to repaire his loſſes by a battell, 98. he is deſeated by Scipio, 59. he paſſeth into Italy. 60. he is defeated there, 61.
Aſtapians barbarouſly murther their wiues and children, 68
Aſſembly of the Eſtates euery yeare in Spaine, 726
Aſſembly in Portugall for the election of a King 607
Aſores the bound betwixt Granado and Caſtile 644
Aſſembly at Madrid 796
Aſſembly of the Eſtates diſliked by Cardinall Ximenes at the arriuall of King Charles, 957
Aſſault giuen againſt Diu. 1021
Arch-duke Albert made gouernor of Portugall. 1226
Army of Spaine going to the Terceres, 1227
Angra at the Terceres taken by the Marques of Santa Cruz, 1226
Atanſphe the Goth ſlaine by his owne men, 131
Attempt of D. Iames King of Maiorca vaine, 525
Attempt raſhly made by the Conſtable of Caſtiles followers, 722
Atabalipa defeated and taken. 980
Aurang taken by the Romains, 62
Authors of a Sedition puniſhed for the whole multitude, 70
Authors of rebllion alwaies ſmart for the reſt, 78
Authority of the Iuſtice Maior of Arragon, 618
D. Anthonies proceeding after King Henries death 1208. he is declared defender of the realme of Portugal, 1211, he is receiued into Lisbon, 1215 he rayſeth a new army, ibid. hee writes to King Philip. 1217. his eſtate after the defeat of the French at Sea. 1225
Ambaſſadors from Iapon into Spaine, 1230
Ambaſſadors ſent into Spaine from the Duke of Sauoy, 1271

B

BAdaios taken from the Moores by the King of Leon, 322
Baeſa and Almery taken from the Moores. 295
Baeſa Caſtle beſeeged by the Moores. 361
Badurio K. of Cambaia ſlaine by the Portugalls, 997
Balegres Iland, called Gimnaſies, 9
Barbarians diuide the conqueſt of Spaine, 130
Barbarians eaſie to corrupt, 101
Barbarians impatient of ſeruitude kill them-ſelues, 103
Bamba made King of the Gothes againſt his will, 149, he is poyſoned by Erwing. 150
Bargaine made in ſport entertayned by force. 205
Barcelona taken and ruined by the Moores. 219
Baiona taken by the King of Nauarre, 281
Barcelona yeelded to King Ihon of Arragon. 831
Barbaroſſa beſeegeth the Caſtell of Nice, 1006
Barcelona ſets vp the banners of Caſtile, 777
Battenes at Famagoſta. 1161
Battell betwxt the Romains and naturall Spaniards, 78. an other battell betwixt them, 88. betwixt Pompey and Sertorius, 111. betwixt Cæſar and Pompey, 116, of Voglad and death of Alaric. 137. of Ionguera loſt by the Chriſtians. 194. of Simancas, and great victory of the Chriſtians. 201. of Calacauaſor, 215, Battell betwixt the Moores, 222, of Obrigue wonne by Alphonſo Henriques firſt King of Portugall, 292, of Valpeirre. 303. of Muradall. 341, Battell at ſea before Caillery, 480, of Salado. 512 betwixt the Geneuois and Venetians, 543, at Aliubarota, 608, betwixt the Chriſtians and Moores, 665. of Figueroa. 702, of Olmedo, 730, of Olmedo, 738 of Albuhera, 874, of Rauenna, 993, betwixt the Caſtillans and Portugalls, 858, of Villa Lara. 962, betwixt the Chriſtians and Barbaroſſa in Affrike, 990, of Lepanto. 1169, of Alcazer in Affricke, 1202. at the Tercera's betwixt the French and Spaniſh. 1222
Baſa Guadix and Almery yeeld to Caſtile. 935
Baſenes of King Ramir occaſion of new tumults. 211
Baſenes of Henry called the vnable King of Caſtile 760
Bazain at the Indies taken by the Portugals. 997
Batteryes made by the Turke at Malta. 1116
Beginning of nations fabulous for the moſt part. 1
Beginning of the Saguntines. 7
Beteca called Valdaluſia of the Vandales. 133
Begger counterfetting puniſhed from heauen. 142
Bernard firſt Earle of Barcelona ſubiect to the French, 179
Bernard of Carpio neglects, his rebellion. 188
D. Bermond a religious King and a louer of Iuſtice 229, hee breaks the peace with Caſtile, and is ſlaine in Battell. 231
D. Bela of Nagera troubles the ſtate of Caſtile, 265
Beginning of the towne of Saint Deminike, 265
Berenguela of Leon Gouerneſſe of Caſtile 347
Behauior of D. Sancho the groſſe, King of Nauarre in his age. 367
Beginning of Granado. 372
Beginning of the houſe of Guzman and Dukes of Medina Sydonia. 437
Bertrand of Gueſclin betraies King Henry, 575
Beginning of the houſe of Medina Cely, 606
Beginning of a ſect called the White coats. 663
Beginning of the King of Caſtiles hatred againſt the Conſtable, 731

Bertrand de la Cuena the Queene of Castiles Minion, created Earle of Ledesma, 767. he is made Duke of Albuquerque 782
Beginning of the house of Foix, 811
Beginning of the Iesuites, 962
Beouya a castle of importance, abandoned by the French, 967
Beginning of Francis Pizarro and Iames of Almagro, 984
Bernardin de Mendoza drowned with some Gallies, 1094
Beginning and progresse of the Inquisition in Spaine, 1119
Biscaine toung first vsed in Spaine, 3
Birth of Mahomet, 142
Bishops in Spaine learned and religious, 199
Bishops at Toledo in the Moores time, 173
Bishops at Compostella profane, 213
Bishops sea restored to Saragossa, 272
Bishop of S. Iames exempt from all subiection but to the Pope, 265
Bishop of Pampelona a fauourer of seditions, 405
Biscay sold to the king of Castile, 483
Bishop of Burgos chosen by himselfe, 568
Biscay belongs to the house of Alanson, 585
Bishop of Lisbone slaine by the mutines, 603
Birth of the Infant Don Henry of Castile, 689
Bishop of Pampelona slaine by the Constable of Nauarre, 838
Bishop excluded in the Country of Biscay, 863
Bishop being a murtherer, is himselfe murthered, 872.
Birth of the Infanta Catherina of Castile, 314
Bishops banished from Biscay, 919
Birth of Charles of Austria, who was king of Spain and Emperour. 962
Birth of Iohn Prince of Portugall, 971
Birth of Charles Prince of Spaine, 1013
Birth of D. Sebastian of Portugall, 1039
Bishops newly erected in the Netherlands, 1093
Birth of the Infanta D. Izabella, who was Queene of Castile and Arragon, 740
Biscaines defeated for want of discipline, 695
Birth of Fernand of Arragon husband to Izabella, 744.
Birth of D. Alphonso of Castile, 745
Boldnes of Martius prooues successefull by the enemies negligence, 49
Boniface deliuers Affrick to Genseric, and the Vandales, 133
Booke found in Spaine, 378
Beautie of Henry the new king of Castile, 567
Booke of the holy Scriptures translated into the Portugal language, 681
Bountie of the Duke of Milan, 710
Body of Queene Izabella layed in a Friars weede, 874.
Bountie of Gonsalo Fernandes the great Captaine, 883.
Bootie taken at the Indies, 916
Bona in Affricke taken by Andrew Doria, 993 Bounty of the Emperour Charles to Prince Doria, 1105
Bootie taken from the Moores, 1144
Bridge of Alcantara built by Traian, 120
Brothers kings in one kingdome and agree well, 183.
Brothers of Nauarre at discord, 243
Breethren executed vniustly, 458
Braganza a terror to the Moores, 922
Breach betwixt Pope Paul the fourth, and the king of Spaine. 1074
Burthens layd vpon the Spaniards by Lucullus, 96
Burgos made a Bishopricke, 265
Buildings of Fernand king of Portugall, 600
Buildings of Charles the third king of Nauar, 668
Burgos in the Confederates power, 780. it yeelds to king Henry. 805
Buason king of Fez defeated and slaine, 1193

C

CArthaginians called into Spaine by the Gaditains. 12
Cadiz, and the ancient names, 20
Carthaginians desire rather to be great then iust, 32. they continue the conquest of Spaine, 35. they are defeated at sea by Scipio, 40. they are twise defeated, 45. beeing growne proud of a victorie they are defeated by the Romanes, 48. they dissemble their losse, 57. they resolue to vnpeople Spaine of souldiers to preuent reuolts, 60. they are quite defeated by the Romaines, and chased out of Spaine. 65
Carthage the new taken by the Romanes, 54
Care and diligence of a good Generall, 57
Castulo yeelded to the Romaines, 44
Castulo and Illiturgis, rebellious townes, 65. taken both by the Romaines, 66
Cato defeates the Spaniards. 82. his seueritie in the Spaniards relapse, 83. he demantles the townes, ibid. he seekes to corrupt the Celtiberians, 84. he disposeth of the reuenues of Spaine, 85
Caire built by Muhamas, 163
Cape S. Vincent why so called, 175
Cattelonia why so called, 178. vnder the Soueraigntie of France, 189. giuen in propriety to Geoffrey the heire, 191
Care of a Prince most commendable, 200
Castile exempt from all subiection vppon a foolish bargaine, 208. vnited to Nauarre, 229
Casilde, a Princesse of the Moores baptized, 226
Calatraua taken from the Moores, 280
Castile and Leon diuided, 286
Calatraua giuen to the Monkes of Cisteaux, 304
Cathedrall church at Toledo built by Don Rodrigo the Arch-bishop 362
Castile and Leon vnited, 364
Catelonia freed frō the soueraignty of France, 369
Castillans in armes against Navar & Arragon, 386
Cattelans & Arragonois in Greece & Thrace, 455
Castillans defeated by the Arragonois, 552
Castellans burne the coast of Genoua, 502
Carmona yeelded to D. Henry of Castile, 580
Castile acknowledgeth the Pope, 595
Castillans defeated by them of Ebora. 604. defeated againe at Troncosa, 607. defeated by the Moores. 702

Caſtile preferred before Arragon, 751
Cattelans ſpeake freely to their King, 763. they lue in vaine for their Prince, ibid. they complaine of the king of Caſtile, 774
Calaorra taken by Gaſton of Foix from the Spaniards, 787
Caſtle of Burgos yeelded to Q. Izabella, 855
Caſtle of Zamora yeelded to K. Fernand, 860
Caſtro Nugno yeelds to king Fernand, 870
Canaries made ſubiect to the K. of Caſtile, 899
Caſtillans ſpoile the realme of Nauarre, 929
Caia a ſmall ſtreame diuiding Caſtile from Portugal, 938
Cadiz vnited to the crown of Caſtile, 947
Capitulation betwixt king Fernand and Mahomet the Little. 940
Cauſes of the D. of Alua's diſcontent, 950
Cauſes of hatred betwixt the Spaniards and Flemmings, 1126
Cauſes of the rebellion of the Mores of Granado, 1138.
Carc. mos ſpeech to D. Antonio, 1216
Celts paſſe into Spaine, 10
Celtiberians take armes for the Romanes, 40
Ceremonies of the Barbarians when they are ſutors, 95
Celtiberians defeated by Fuluius Flaccus, 109
Ceſar diſarmes Afranius and Petreus, 114
Ceſſion of the rights of Rouſſillon to the houſe of Aniou, 509
Ceremonie at the K. of Nauars coronation, 625
Ceremony in taking poſſeſſion of Nauarre, 693
Ceremony of the Order of the golden fleece, 696 Ceremonies vſed at the taking of any towns from the Moores, 904
Ceſar Borgia Cardinall, Biſhop of Pampelona, 953 he is made Duke of Valentinois, 963 Ceremonies at the ſwearing of the Archduke Philip and D. Ioane Kings of Caſtile. 967
Chriſtian religion among the Gothes, 129
Chriſtians perſecuted in Affricke, 166
Chriſtians follow the Moores in their armes for ſpoile, 168
Charlemagne made heire of Ouiedo, and afterward reiected, 181
Change of the Eſtate of Caſtile, 195
Chriſtians defeated by the Moores, and the heire of Caſtile ſlaine. 266 Change of Religion among the Arabians in Spain 301.
Chriſtians perſecuted by the Mores in Spaine, ibi.
Chiefe conuents of the Knights of S. Iames, 318
Chriſtians in pay with the Mores againſt the king of Caſtile, 361
Children of King Thibaud the ſecond, 391
Charles of Aniou made k. of Naples & Sicily, 412
Charles Prince of Salerne defeated, and taken by the Arragonois, 421
Charles of Valois refuſeth to quit his right to Cattelonia, 432
Chriſtians defeated by the Moores, 556
Charles king of Nauar a leper, 606
Chriſtians defeated by the Moores, neere to Montexicar, 674
Change of Biſhops in Spaine, 723
Choler of the king of Caſtile, 732
Chriſtians being victors are vanquiſhed, 736
Charles Prince of Viana cals himſelfe King of Nauarre, 754. he is impriſoned by his father, 793 hee is deliuered out of priſon, and poyſoned by his ſtep-mother, 764
Charitie of K. Fernand and Queene Izabella, 881
Chriſtians defeated by the Moores, 914
Chancerie tranſported from cite Real to Granado, 877.
Charge of Biſhops in Caſtile, 883
Chancelor of Arragon accuſed to haue ſought to diſhonor Queene Germaine, 920
Cheures Gouernor to Charles Prince of Spain, 925
Charles king of Spaine choſen Emperour of Germany, called the fift. 960, his departure out of Caſtile forced, ib. his entry into Pampelona, 973 his coronation at Bolonia, 979. his going with an army to Tunis, 987. his comming into Sicily, 993. he goes with an army into Prouence, 994. his voyage to Alger, 1002. his conſtancie and pietie, 1005. he ſollicits K. Fernand his ſon, 1034 he reſigns the gouernment to his ſon Phil. 1041 he reſignes the Empire to his brother, 1076 hee paſſeth into Spaine to a ſolitarie life, 1077. his death. 1081
Chriſtian ſlaues ſeaze vpon the caſtle of Tunes, 990
Chriſtians land with an army at Gerbe, 1086
D. Charles Prince of Spaine grieuouſly ſicke 1094 he is vnpleaſing to his father, 1126. he was vnable for women, 1133
Charles Archduke of Auſtria ſent into Spain, 1137
Circuit of all Spaine. 14
Ciuill warre in Arabia, 165
Cid Ruis Dias returnes into Caſtile, 250
Ciuill warre in Caſtile, 351
Ciuill warres corrupt the beſt men, 736
Clauſe in D. Alphonſo's will prodigious, 281
Clement of Launoy Viceroy in Naples, 429
Clergy of Toledo deliuer the city to K Henry, 803
Clergie of Spaine freed from paying the tenth peny for their benefices, 946
Clergie of Spaine helpe the king with mony, 1111
Coniectures that the Celtes were mingled with the Iberians, 4
Courſe of the riuer of Ebro, 15
Courſe of the riuers of Tagus and Guadiana, 16
Contempt of militarie diſcipline followes a victorie, 42
Councell of Carthage neglect Spaine, thinking to get Italy, ibid.
Courage of Lucius Martius keepes the Romaines from deſpaire, 48
Confidence of P. Cornelius Scipio ſonne to Publius Scipio ſlaine in Spaine, 51
Contbates vpon furious ambition, 67
Concord the ground of liberty, 75
Contrebia taken by the Romaines, 90
Colonie of Libertines, 94
Conſpiracie of Spaniards at Numantia, 95
Corduba built by Marcellus, 96

Combate betwixt Æmilianus & a Spaniard, 96
Couetousnes drew Lucullus into Spaine, 97
L. Comodus Verus a persecuter of the church, 121
Councel of Illiberis, 121
Councels of Sardica and Syrmium, 125
Constantine a tyrant, 131
Councell at Toledo, 136
Councell at Taracona, Saragossa, and other places, 137.
Conspiracie of the son and mother-in-law against the father, 141
Councell of Toledo, 143
Councell of Seuile, 144
Continuance of the Goths kingdom in Spaine, 154
Councell of the Mahometists at Damas, 164
Conquests of Alphonso the first, and 3. King of Ouiedo, 173
Confusion and ciuill warre among the Mores, 223
Councels called in Nauarre. 228
Combat of one Knight against another, 246
Conquests of the King of Arragon vppon the Moores, 249
Controuersies for ecclesiasticall matters decided by armes, 255
Cowardize of the sonnes in law of Cid Ruis Diaz, 263.
Couetousnes of the Geneuois infamous, 266
Conuersion of Moise a Iew, 268
Confirmation of a peace betwixt Nauarre and Castile, 293
Cordoua yeelded to the king of Castile, ibid.
Confirmation of the Order of Calatraua, 311
Conuent for the Knights of S. Iames built, 318
Colledges, commanderies, and Hospitals belonging to the Knights of S. Iames, 319
Councell of S. Iohn de Latran vnder Innocent the third, 348 Conuents of the Order of S. Dominicke, built by the King of Castile, 355
Contentions in Arragon, 356
Confines of Murcia and Valencia, 380
Cordoua surprized by the Christians, 370
Contumacie of D. Alphonso king of Portugal, 390
Councell at Lyons vnder Pope Gregory the tenth, 399, Complaints and requests of King Alphonso to the Pope, but in vaine, 409
Conrade poysoned by Manfroy, 412
Conference of Deputies for the Kings of France & Castile, 429
Conditions of peace betwixt the King of Arragon and Charles of Naples a prisoner, 432
Compromise betwixt the Christian Princes of Spaine, 447 Coronation of Philip of Eureux king of Nauarre, 478.
Conditions betwixt the king of Castile, and the Prince of Wales, 569 Conditions of peace propounded by the King of Portugall to Castile, 638 Conditions propounded by the duke of Beneuent, 646.
Councell of a Iew against Iewes, 658
Councell of Constance, 677
Combats not to be allowed among Christians. 979
Conquest of the Canaries, 680
Controuersie betwixt England and Castile for precedence, 707
Conditions of peace betwixt Castile, Nauarre and Arragon, 712
Constable of Castile sent from the court for sixe yeares, 721
Councell to arme a multitude dangerous, 325
Confederates beseeged in Olmedo, 729
Condemnation of the confederates, 731
Constable restored to fauour, and made Master of S. Iames, 731 hee is charged, and in danger to be slaine. 741, his possessions, 745.
Complaints of the Arragonois oppressed, 581
Complot betwixt king Iohn and Gaston of Foix, to ruine the right of Nauarre, 770
Conspiracie against the Queene of Castile and Bertrand de la Cuena, 779
Continuance of the warre in Cattalonia, 786
Confederates in Castile contemne the Popes authoritie, 779. they appeale from him to a generall councell, 800
Contention for the Bishopricke of Siguenza, 801
Courtesie well rewarded, 804
Confession of Ioane Queene of Arragon at her death, 810
Contempt of Iustice in Castile, 821
Constable of Castile murthered bp the people, 832
Contention betwixt king Fernand and Queene Izabella, 847
Consultation touching the re-union of the royall reuenue, 880
Confederates to the Duke of Viseo executed, 910.
Contention betwixt the Arch bishop of Toledo, and the Queene of Castile, 915
Columbus his first comming to the Kings of Castile 918. his first voyage to the Indies, 945. hee is made Admirall of the Indies. 948. his third voyage to the Indies, 956. he with his brother are sent prisoners into Spaine, 960. his fourth voyage to the Indies, 970. his death, 880
Councels are dangerous for the Church of Rome, 883.
Couetousnesse of a Spaniard controulled by an Indian, 906
Conspiracie against king Fernand, 912
Contention for the Master-ship of S. Iames, 924
Contention for the towne of Areualo, 924
Court of Parliament violated, 948
Complaints against Cardinall Ximenes, 949
Controuersie for the Earledome of Ribadeo, 952.
Coronation of the king of Castile, the first of that name, 960 Conference of Deputies touching the Realme of Nauarre, ibid.
Combat betwixt two Arragonois, 968
Councell giuen to the Emperour by the Bishop of Osma, 974
Colledge of Iesuites built at Ebora, 977

Conse-

Conference for the limits of Nauigation betwixt Castile and Portugal. 978
Conditions imposed vpon the Elector of Saxony. 1016
Constancy of the Elector of Saxony. 1018
Contreras a rebel at Peru. 1034
Commendation of the Emperor Charles. 1081
Councel of Trent. 1094
Controuersie betwixt the French and Spaniards for precedence. 1095
Commissioners appointed to order the Moores. 1127
Considerations of the Councel of Spaine. 1133
Councellors about D. Iohn of Austria. 1147
Conuoy defeated by the Moores of Granado. 1152 Christians defeated by the Moores. ibid.
Commander of Castile dissuaded D. Iohn from fighting with the Turke, 1164. hee is sent to succeed the Duke of Alba in the gouernment of the Low countries. 1178
Cruelty of a Grandfather. 10
Cruelty and treachery of Lucullus. 96
Cruelty, auarice and infidelity of Valens against the Gothes. 129
Cruelty of Fab. Maximus against the Spaniards. 101
Cruelty of Agila against the Christians. 140
Cruelty of Victeric to young Luiba. 144
Cruelty of King D. Alphonso. 414
Cruelty of Sancho King of Castile. 435
Cruelty of D. Iohn of Castile. 438
Cruelty breeds feare, but not loue in subiects. 504
Cruelties committed vpon the Iewes. 632
Cruelty and couetousnesse to the Indians made religion odious to the vnbeleeuing. 945
Cruelty of the sonne to his father and brethren. 1020 Cruelty of the Marquis of Mendeiar. 1144
Cruelty of the Xereffe Mahumet. 1190
Cruelty of the Marquis of Santa Cruz to the French. 1224
Custome to anoynt kings taken from the Hebrew. 188
Custome to make women drinke first in Spaine. 218
Custome antient and religious to purge themselues by oth. 246
Cuenca taken from the Moores. 320
Curse of the father vpon the sonne. 417
Custome of Alaua. 487
Cusco reuolts from Gonsaluo Pizarro. 1030
Conquest of the Island of the Tercera's, 1227

D

DAmas the seat of the Caliphes. 164
Desire of reuenge brutish. 3
Description of Spaine. 13
Description of Sardinia. 22
Description of the Celtiberians. 28
Defeat of the Carthagineans. 44
Defeat of Spaniards. 79
Defeat of Celtiberians. 91
Despaire of the Numantins. 108
Death of many learned Spaniards. 119
Defeat of the Emperor Valens army, and his miserable end. 130 Defeat of Alaric. 131
Defeat of Attila. 133
Desire of reuenge in a woman damnable. 134
Defeat of Sueues and death of Richiaire. 135
Death of Ricarede and his vertues. 144
Decree of the ninth Concile of Toledo. 148 Decree made against the Iewes. 152
Death of Mahumet. 162
Defeat of Moores, 174
Deeds of charity done by D. Ramir King of Leon. 203
Death of the seuen brethren of Lara very lamentable, 214
Defeat of the Castillans and death of their Earle. 218
Declyning of the Moores Monarchy in Spaine, by their diuisions. 220
Death of D. Sancho King of Nauarre. 230 Detention of D. Garcia of Nauarre in Castile. 237
Death of D. Garcia Sanches King of Nauarre. 237
Deeds of almes done by the King of Castile. 239 Debate for the Primacy of Spaine. 252
Death of Cid Ruis Dias. 263
Death of D. Alphonso the sixth. 268
Death prodigious of D. Vrraca of Castile. 280
Dexterity of D. Alphonso king of Castile. 288
Debate among Bishops to inlarge their Dioceses. 290
Death of the Emperor D. Alphonso. 301
Death of D. Sancho the desired. 304
Death of D. Raymond Berenger Earle of Barcelona. 310 Defeat of Christians neere to Alarcos. 329
Deeds of D Sancho the Strong. 330
Deceit of Mary Queene of Arragon commendable. 333
Descendants of the house of Champagne. 334
Death of D Fernand of Nauarre. 337
Death of D. Fernand sonne to the king of Castile. 339
Death of D. Sancho King of Portugal. 344
Death of D. Alphonso the noble, king of Castile. 347
Death of D. Henry king of Castile. 352
Death of D. Aluar and D. Fernand de Lara. 355
Death of D. Fernand king of Castile. 381
Death of D. Alphonso Infant of Arragon. 393
Death of the Infant D. Fernand de la Cerde. 410
Death of D. Iaime king of Arragon. 411
Death of D. Sancho king of Castile. 438
Death of Fernand king of Castile. 458
Death of D. Pedro of Castile and D. Iohn his vncle very strange. 463 Defeat of Pisains and Sardynians before Caillery. 467
Death of Mary Queene of Castile. 466
Death of D. Denis king of Portugal. 469 Defeat of Nauarrois by Guispucoa, 477

Death

Death of D. Fernand heire of Castile. 495
Defeat of Arragonois and Nauarrois by the Castillans. 499
Defeat of the garrison of Logrogne by the Earle of Foix. 500
Death of Ximenes de Luna Archbi. of Toledo. 506
Defeat of the Castillan army and death of the Admiral. 509
Death of Philip king of Nauarre. 517
Decree against the king of Maiorca. 521 Defeat of the king of Arragons troupes by his rebels. 523
Debate betwixt Toledo and Burgos for precedence. 527
Death of D. Alphonso king of Castile. 528 Detention of the Prince of Nauarre in France. 591
Death of D. Fernand king of Portugal. 602
Deliuery of the Prince of Nauarre in fauor of the king of Castile. 605
Death of young Gaston of Foix. 606
Death of D. Pedro king of Arragon. 619
Demands of Portugal to Castile. 639
Demands of the Biscains to the King of Castile. 640
Death of Pope Clement at Auignon. 649
Death of Iohn king of Arragon. 650
Death of the Archbishop of Toledo. 663
Demands made by D. Henry of Castile to the Estates. 666
Death of the two sonnes of Nauarre. 667
Death of Pero Lopes of Ayala a valiant Knight. 670
Death of D. Martin king of Sicile. 673
Death of D. Fernand king of Arragon. 678
Death of Charles king of Nauarre. 689
Death of D. Iohn king of Portugal, 704
Defeat of the Master of Alcantara by the Moores. 709 Death of Ioane Queene of Naples and her testament. ibid.
Death of Edward king of Portugal. 717
Death of D. Blanch Queene of Nauarre. 722
Death of two Queenes sisters beeing poysoned. 722 Demands made by the confederats to the king of Castile. ibid.
Death of D. Henry Infant of Arragon. 730
Deuise of the Prince of Nauarre. 741 Defeat and death of the Infant D. Pedro duke of Coimbra. 746
Discouery of the Canaries. 641
Discouery of the coast of Afrike by Portugals. 747 Desire of rule affections of a noble minde. 753
Desseignes to trouble Castile. 761
Desire of command an vntamed fury. 734
Death of D. Pedro Giron Master of Calatraua. 795 Desire of riches takes away all Ciuill respects. 802
Descent of Portugal. 773
Death of the Infant D. Alphonso of Castile. 805
Deeds of charity done by the Earle of Haro. 821
Death of D. Iohn de Pacheco Master of Saint Iames. 840
Decrees of the Estates in Castile executed. 884
Discouery of Manicongo. 906
Dispaire sometimes bringeth helpe. 933
Death of Iohn king of Portugal. 951
Death of Pope Alexander the sixth. 873
Death of Isabel Queene of Castile. 874
Discription of Oran. 877
Death of many noblemen in Spaine. ibid.
Death of Philip king of Castile. 881
Demands vnciuily made by king Fernand to him of Nauarre. 902
Darien a neck of land at the Indies. 906
Death of Gonsalo Fernandes of Cordoua. 920
Defeat of Turkes at sea by the Spanish gallies. 930
Death of king Iohn and Queene Catherine of Nauarre. 933 Demands of the townes of Spaine. 945
Demolitions in Nauarre. 996
Death of Fernand Magellanes. 977
Death of D. Mannel king of Portugal. ibid.
Death of the Empresse Isabella. 1000
Death of Mary of Portugall wife to king Philip. 1003
Desseigne of the Emperor against Germany. 1014 Defeat and taking of the Elector of Saxony. 1016
Death of Vasco Nugnes Gouernor at Peru. 1028 Dexterity of Pedro Gnasca Gouernor at Peru. ibid.
Death of Queene Ioane the Emperours mother. 1040
Death of D. Iohn the third king of Portugal. 1052
Description of Malta. 1114
Degrading of a Priest by the Inquisition. 1123
Desseignes of the Prince of Spaines descouered. 1130
Death of the Prince of Spaine. 1131
Death of Elizabeth Queene of Spaine. 1132
Death of the Marquis of Poza. 1136
Defeat of Christians. 1146
Death of Marc Antonio Bragadin. 1162
Death of D. Sebastien not beleeued of many. 1203 Decree of the Gouernors against D. Antonio. 1212
Death of Queene Anne of Castile. 1214
Death of Philip Strossy. 1223
Distinction of Spaine within the Country. 15
Diuision of Spaine according to the antients. 23
Diuision of Spaine according to the warre. ibid.
Discretion of Colonels to pacifie a muteny. 69
Dissembling of Pompey before Numantia. 103
Diuision of the Gouernment of Spaine. 120 Distinction of the East and West Gothes. 129
Dissention betwixt the Emperors Lieutenants was the losse of Spaine and Affrike. 133
Diuersity of religion kils all charity. 138
Diuision among the Gothes. 140
Discourse of Mahumet not very credible. 145
Disloyaltie of Paul a captaine to Bambas. 149
D. Diego Porcello stem of the Princes of Castile. 195

Diuiſion among Chriſtians giues an entry to infidels. 213
Diſpoſition of a woman inclined to reuenge. 214
Dishonoſt deſire of a Counteſſe of Caſtile. 218
Dignity of chiefe Iuſtice of Arragon. 272
Diſpoſition of D. Alphonſo king of Caſtile. 147
Diuiſion among the Nobility of Nauarre and Arragon. 284
Diſpoſition of D. Raymond Berengers will. 310
Diſpoſition of the ſpoile after the battaile of Muradel. 342
Diſpoſition of king Thibaud. 373
Diuiſion in Arragon. 445
Diſtruſt of D. Iohn of Caſtile and treachry of king Fernand cauſe of great troubles. 457
Diſloyalty of the king of Caſtile. 497
Diſpoſition of the will of D. Frederic king of Sicile. 503 Diſpoſition of D. Pedro king of Portugal. 549
Diuiſion of Caſtile before it was conquered, 561
Diſpoſition of Charles king of Nauarre. 592
Diſpoſition of D. Iohn king of Caſtile. 597
Diſpoſition of the noblemen of Portugal. 602
Diſpoſition and qualities of Aluare de Luna Conſtable of Caſtile. 745 Diuines delude the Conſtable of Caſtile. ibid.
Diego Hurtado de Mendoza reſtored to his right of Guadalaiara. 765
Diſorders in the gouernment of Caſtile. 826
Diuiſion betwixt the father and the ſonne. 897
Difference betwixt Ferdinand king of Arragon and Philip and Ioane kings of Caſtile. 880
Diſpoſition of Iohn king of Nauarre. 884
Diſtribution of the ſpoile at Oran. 894
Difference betwixt a vaſſal and a ſubiect. 905
Drinke giuen to king Fernand by the Queene his wife. 913
Diuiſion among Councellors in a ſtate dangerous. 929
Diſcipline of them of Peru at the warre. 982
Diu attempted in vaine by the Portugals. 996
Diſpoſition of the Alarabes of Affrike. 1003
Diu beſeeged by the king of Cambaca. 1018
Diſpoſition of D. Charles Prince of Spaine. 1132
Diſobedience and inſolencies in Chriſtian ſouldiers. 1146
Diſpoſition of king Sebaſtian. 1160
Difficulties in purſuing the victory of Lepanto. 1171
Domitian the ſecond perſecutor of the Church. 120
Donation falſely fathered vpon Conſtantin. 142
Docility of the Gothike nation. 129
Donations, titles and preuiledges of Monaſteries vncertaine. 210
Donations to Churches. 230
Dominike of Oſma Author of the Iacopins Order 345
Donation made by Alphonſo de la Cerde to the king of Nauarre. 478
Diſcord betwixt the Gouernors and Eſtates of Portugal. 1208
Drought prodigious. 13
Dragut beſeeged by Doria at Gerbe and eſcapes 1038. hee comes to Malta and is ſlaine there. 1115
Duke of Brittan ſlaine at the Popes coronation. 452
Dukes, Marquiſes and Earles not hereditary in Spaine. 484
Duke of Beneuent ſeekes to purge himſelfe to the king of Caſtile. 646
Duke of Bragances practiſes diſcouered by his ſecretary, 906. he is beheaded at Ebora. 907 Duke of Viſeo ſlaine by the king of Portugals owne hand. ibid.
Duke of Valentinois ſent priſoner into Spaine, 873 he eſcapes out of priſon, 883. hee is ſlaine at the ſeege of Viana. 886
Dutie of a well aduiſed captaine. 891
Duke of Alba enters into Pampelona, 905 he ſubmits himſelfe to the Cardinal Ximenes. 952
Duke of Gandia becomes a Ieſuite. 964
Duke of Alba ſent viceroy into Italy, 1041. hee complaines of the Popes actions, 107, he goes to aſſaile Rome, 1079. he is ſent into Flanders, 1129. he ſends to treat with the Queen of England, 1170. he enters into Portugal. 1211
Duke of Guiſe ſent with an army into Italy. 1076
Duke of Medina Celi ſent to gouerne the Low countries, 1170. he refuſeth the gouernment. 1171
Duke of Albas exploits in Portugal, 1212. his death. 1226
D. Diego Prince of Spaine borne. 1174
Diſcourſe betwixt D. Anthony and Carcamo. 1216
Deſcription of the Tercera's. 1218
Death of Diego Prince of Spaine. 1226
Deputies ſent from the Eſtates of the vnited Prouinces into England. 1232

E

EArles and Lieutenants gouerning Spaine. 117
Earle of Cattelonia murthered. 189
Earles and Gouernors of Caſtile murthered. 195
Earle of Caſtile detained priſoner in Leon. 207
Earle of Barcelona ſlaine by the Moores. 219
Earle of Artois ſent into Nauarre to puniſh the rebels of Pampelona. 405
Earle of Oren the Queene of Portugals mignon ſlaine. 603
Earle of Gijon ſeizeth vpon Ouiedo. 648
Earldome of Rouſſillon cauſe of warre betwixt France and Arragon. 839
Earle Cifuentes defeated by the Portugals. 853
Earledome of Rouſſillon reſtored to Fernand. 949
Earldomes erected in Portugal by king Manuel. 958 Earthquake in Spaine. 874
Earle of Egmont ſent into Spaine. 1119
Ebora made an Archbiſhoprike. 1002
Edict to raze townes ſtanding in the mountaines. 121
Edict to ruine the chriſtian churches. 123
Edict made by Hali Hatan againſt the chriſtians moſt cruell. 211

Edict against Commanders of places that should resist the king. 497
Edict against the Iewes. 946
Edict against the Geneuois traffiking into Spaine. 938
Edict against the Moores. 1127
Effects of immoderate choller. 886
Eglise yeelded to the Arragonois. 467
Elephants held to be common enemies. 95
Election of the Pope giuen to the Cardinals at Rome. 239
Election of Pedro de Luna to be Pope. 649
Election of worthy men to mannage great affaires. 658
Election preposterously made. 725
Election of the Master of Saint Iames in the kings power. 886 Election of Pope Pius the fifth. 1125
Emulation for honor. 55
Emerita now Merida built by the Barbarians. 117
Emerald of inestimable price. 295
Emperour Maximilian and king Fernand reconciled. 895
End of reading of histories. 2
End of Decian the persecutor. 123
End of Tirants miserable. 124
End of Count Julian, his wife and children very miserable. 155
End of the Vandales reigne in Affrike. 138
Entry of the Moores into Gaule. 172
Enuy and iealousie passions in great men. 195
Enterview of the kings of Castile Arragon and Nauarre. 387
Enuy and treachery among the Moores. 224
Enterview of the kings of Castile, Arragon and Portugal. 446
Enterview of the kings of Nauar and Castile. 540
Enterprises of king Charles of Nauarre detestable. 605
Enterview of the Emperor Sigismond and the king of Arragon. 678
Enterview of Lewis the 11. and the king of Castile. 773
Enterprise of the Master of Saint Iames. 835
Enterview of the king of Castile and the Princesse Isabel his sister. 837
Enterview of the kings of Castile and Portugal at Guadalupa. 778 Enterview of D. Iohn king of Arragon and D. Fernand his sonne. 869
Enterview of Queene Isabel and the Duchesse of Viseo touching a peace. 874
End of the Arabians Monarchy in Spaine. 941 Enterprises vpon the Africains Moores. 956
Enterview of the kings of France and Arragon. 882
Enterpise of Oran by Cardinal Ximenes. 891 Enterprise of K Fernand against the French K. 919 Enterprises of King Charles and his mother vnnecessary. 957
Enterview betwixt Elenor the Emperors sister, and D. Maria of Portugal her daughter. 1077
Enterview betwixt the French king and the Queene of Spaine his sister. 1123
Enterview of the Pope, Emp. & French king. 1000
Enemies to the Prince of Spaine. 1130
Englishmens goods arrested in Spaine. 1137
Enterprise vpon Tunes. 1173
Entry of king Philip into Lisbone. 1220
Equity of Hercules the Egiptian. 5
Equity of the king and Queene of Castile. 913
Error of Osius. 125
Estates without armes are lame. 154
Estates of Arragon make warre, peace and leagues. 363
Estates of Monson for the warre of Valencia. 368
Estate of Castile miserable. 449
Estates of Arragon, where the right of representation was put in practise. 480
Estate of Sardynia. 514
Estates in Arragon, 618. they require reformation of the kings house. 620
Estates at Burgos for a peace. 633
Estates at Toro and their remonstrances. 689 Estates of Nauarre at Tafalla. 883
Estates of Arragon sweare to Prince Iohn. 889
Estate of Ioane Queene of Castile mother to the Emperor Charles. 935 Estate of Lisbone vnder D. Antonio. 1213 Estates of Portugal held at Tamar. 1219
Eustace of Bellemarch Gouernor of Nauarre. 404
Excesse seemes light in a confusion of State. 69
Exploits of Fuluius Nobilior. 89
Exploits of Quintus Fab. Maximus. 100 Execution of Spanish prisoners. ibid.
Exploits of Brutus the Consul. 104
Execution vpon rebels. 107
Exploits in Spaine by Ca. Iul. Cæsar. 112 Exploits of Henry or Enric king of Gothes. 136
Exploits of Leonigilde the Gothe. 141
Exploits of the Arabians in Spaine. 167
Example of Coniugal loue most rare. 207
Exploits and conquests of D. Sancho Earle of Castile. 219
Extremadura and where it lies. 233
Exploits of D. Fernand king of Castile against the Moores. 237
Exploits of Cid Ruis Dias in Andalusia. 247
Excesse of Cid Ruis Dias, and his banishment out of Castile. ibid.
Expedition to the holy warre in Siria. 262
Expedition against the Mahometists. 271
Exercise of Bishops in that age. 277
Exploits of D. Alphonso the 8. against the Moores. 278
Expiations for the sinnes and vsurpations of D. Alphonso king of Castile. 283
Exploits of D. Sancho of Portugall against the Moores. 322
Exploits of Christians against the Moores. 340
Exploits of the king of Castile. 346
Expedition of Moores into Spaine. 507
Exploits of the king of Castile and Arragon. 546
Expedition of D. Henry against his brother the king of Castile, 565. his second entry into Spaine. 573

Exploits of the Caſtillians in Nauarre, 594 Exploits of the new King of Portugall. 608
Exactions vpon the Clergy, 629
Excuſes of the Queene of Nauarre, 623
Exactions cauſe of tumults in Guipuſcoa. 634
Exploits of war betwixt the Caſtilans and Moores 670
Exploits of the King of Arragon in Caſtile, 695
Exploits of the Moores in Andaluſia, 735
Exploits of warre betwixt Nauarre & Caſtile, 737 Expedition into Affricke againſt Tanger, 777 Execution at Seuile, 659
Exploits of the Earle of Lerin in Nauarre, 879
Executions of the inquiſition in Spaine, 885
Exploits of Gonſalo Hernandes of Cordoua ſurnamed the great Captaine, 954
Excuſes of the Catholike King for not maintayning a peace with France. 873 Exploits of Pedro Nauarro at Arzilla. 887
Extremities of the Spaniard at the Indies 891
Exploits of Gaſton of Foix, 901
Exploits of Vaſco Nugno of Bilbao at the Indies, 906 Exploits of King Manuell in Affrick, 922
Exactions of Pope Leo hindred by Cardinal Ximines. 946
Exceſſe comitted by the Duke of Infantaſgo. 947
Exploits of the Spaniſh army in Bearne, 973
Exceſſe of Bouguillo Prouoſt of the Court, 961 Extortions of the E. vpon the Germaines. 1035
Exceſſe of a diſordred ſoldiar, 1143
Exploits of the Marquis of Velez. ibid.

F

FActions in the ſenate of Carthage, 36
Fable of Scipios birth, 55
Facility and courteſie of Gracchus to the Barbarians, 91
Fable of Goliena, 220
Family of Toledo in Caſtile, 252
Family of Haro Lords of Biſcay, 291
Family of Aualos. 315
Factions in Caſtile. 351
Factions in Germany for the Empire, 389
Family of Henriques in Nauarre, Lords of Ablitar, 401
Family of Beaumont in Nauarre, 478
Family of Pacheco in Caſtile, 550
Farfanes Chriſtian Affricains, 625
Family of Aualos come out of Nauarre, 664
Factions in Caſtile after the Kings death, 668
Family of Eſtuniga and Suniga come out of Nauarre. 680
Factions in Guipuſcoa and Biſcay, 737 Factions of Beaumont and Gramont, 753
Factions in Biſcaie, 822
Famine in Perpignan, 847
Family of Peralta, 882
Faction of Beaumont in the Court of Nauarre. 904
Faction againſt Cardinal Ximenes, 926
Famagoſta beſeeged by the Turkes, 1159, yeelded vnto them, 1162
Fayal and the other Ilands yeelded to King Philip, 1228
Fertility of Sardinia. 22
Fertility and riches of Spaine, 25
D. Fernand Gonſales firſt Earle of Caſtile, 200, he is ſurprized in Nauarre & derayned priſoner. 205
D. Fernand King of Caſtile aſſignes portions to his children. 223
Fernand King of Leon puts away his wife, 325
Feaſt of Triumphus Crucis in Spaine after the victory of Muradal. 343
Fernand called the holy proclaimed King of Caſtile. 353
Fernand Dias de los Cameros a conculſionar and a rebell. 359
Fernand of Caſtile takes poſſeſſion of Leon. 364
D. Fernand brother to the King of Caſtile refuſeth the realme of Caſtile. 669, he pretends a title to the Crowne of Arragon, 675, hee is choſen and crowned at Saragoſſa. 677
D. Fernand of Portugall a priſoner in Barbary. 713
D. Fernand K. of Arragon promiſeth the Moores liberty of conſcience. 905. he fauours Amand of Albret againſt the French King. 929. he is hurt at Barcelona. 947, he proues vncharitable, 950, heis deſirous to get the realme of Nauarre. 962, he retyres into Arragon, 881, he enters Naples. 882. his laſt will, 882. his laſt will, reformed by the aduice of his counſell, 921, his death. 922.
Fernando Cortes voyage to the Indies, 876, hee is depriued of his gouernment of Mexico, 1006, Fernand Infant of Spaine borne, 979
Fez wonne by the Xeriffe Mahomet, 1189, hee abandons it to the Turkes, 1192
Fire from whence the Pyrenees tooke their name, 15
Fight at ſea betwixt Lelius and Aſdrubal. 72
Fire kindled in the Queene of Caſtiles haire by the Suune beames, 778
Fight at ſea betwixt the French and Genoueſes, 863
Fleet of Chriſtians at Meſſina, 1163
Flatterers cauſe. D, Sancho to rebell againſt the King his brother. 203
Force of an army ſhould be of natural ſubiects, 46
Forces againſt Sertorius in Spaine, 110
D. Fortune King of Nauarre makes him-ſelfe a Monke. 198
Foundations of Monaſteries by the Princes of Spaine, 217
Fort of Nauarret built, 328
Forces of the Knights of Saint Iames, 310
Foundation of Bilbao, 444
Forme of the King of Nauarres othe to his ſubiects 626
Fontarabie beſeeged and the ſeege raiſed, 856
Fort built by the Spaniard on the firme land at the Indies. 890.
Forts demanteled in Nauarre, 932
Forts built in Affricke, 916
Fontaraby taken by the French 966, recouered by the Spaniards. 972
Forces of the Emperor Charles at his going to Tunes. 987 Forces of Barberouſſa in Tunes, 988

Fort

Fort built at Diu by the Portugals 997. beſeeged by the Turkes. 998
Fort built by the Spaniards in the Iſland of Gerbe, 1088. beſeeged and taken by the Turkes. 1093
Fort built at Tunes taken by the Turkes. 1174
Forces ſent into Ireland by the Pope and king of Spaine. 1219
Friends farre off are ſlow to ſuccor. 38
Friend tried at need. 109
French invade Gaule. 130
French defeated in Spaine. 139
Froila murthers his brother. 174
French drawne into Spaine by the Moores diuiſions. 176
French defeated at Ronceual. 181
Fraud of the king of Nauarre ill executed. 287
French king fauors the king of Nauarre. 300
Frederic of Arragon ſeizeth vpon Sicile. 439
French defeated by the Cattelans in Greece. 456
French ſuccors frutleſſe for Caſtile. 615
Frederic Duke of Benauent a priſoner. 647
Frederic duke of Arione dies in priſon. 698
Frederic of Arragon Earle of Luna a priſoner in Caſtile. 708
French ſpoile Guipuſcoa. 856
Frederic Henriques confined into Sicile. 887
Francis Phebus entreth into Nauarre, and is poyſoned. 898
Francis Ximenes of Ciſneros Archbiſhop of Toledo, 956. hee is made a Cardinal, 884. his conſcience, foreſight and magnanimity, 892. hee is made Gouernor of Caſtile, 924. his prouidence for the peace of Spaine, ibid. his wiſdome to maintaine his Authority, 927. he is an enemy to the Genoueſes, 940. he is ambitious and impatient of iniuries, ibid. he maintaines his authority reſolutly, 944. he is poiſoned, 952. his ſpeech to the Infant D. Fernand, ibid. his death and diſpoſition. 958
Franget yeelds Fontaraby baſely to the Spaniards, and is degraded. 973
Francis the French king taken at Pauia. 974
Francis Pizarro murthered at Peru. 1027
Francis Drakes firſt voiage to the Indies. 1172
Fury of Barbariens brutiſh. 108
Funerals of Iohn king of Portugal. 706
Fulminations of Pope Iulio againſt Lewis 12. 903
French defeated at ſea by the Spaniards. 1223
Forts built at the Terceres. 1226

G

GArdines of Valencia. 27
Gaditains call the Carthag. into Spaine. 32
Gala father to Maſiniſſa. 45
Gaditains offer to yeeld vnto the Romaines. 68
Galba a victor defeated by his raſhneſſe, 98. hee is ſent to ſuppreſſe the rebels in Spaine. 119
Galicia made a kingdome. 191
Garcia Earle of Caſtile murthered. 229
Garcia king of Galicia diſpoſſeſt, 241. he is made a prey to his enemy by reaſon of his tiranies. 242
Garcia Almoranid head of a faction. 405
Gaſton Earle of Foix ſuccors the Nauarrois. 500
Gardes ſet about the Popes pallace. 664
Garcia Mendez of Badaios ſlaine at Burgos by the mutinous multitude. 802
D. Garcia de Toledo in diſgrace. 1124
Galere taken from the Moores. 1151
D. Geoffrey gouernor or Earle of Barcelona. 186
Genealogy of Ouiedo and Leon. 195
Genealogy of Caſtile. 200
Genealogy of Leon. 216
Generoſity and bounty of king Almenon to D. Alphonſo the ſixth king of Caſtile. 246 Genealogy of Caſtile and Leon. ibid.
Genealogy of Portugal. 327
Geneueſes of the Gibiline faction againſt the Arragonois in Sardynia. 501 Girone beſeeged by the French and taken. 428
Girdle inchanted. 535
Girone a principality for the eldeſt ſonne of Arragon. 542
Gijon yeelded to the king of Caſtile, and the Earle baniſhed. 654
Gibraltar taken by the Caſtillans. 771
Gibraltar ſo called of Tariffe a Moore. 154
Genoua diuided into factions. 1178
Gold and ſiluer forbidden among the antient Maiorquins. 21
God doth onely raiſe and ruine Eſtates. 50
Gouernment of Spaine giuen to two Pretors. 80
Gouernment of Spaine vnder the Emperours. 117
Gouernor ſlaine by a peaſant for his exacting. 118
Ghoſpel preached in Spaine in Tiberius time. ibid.
Gothes inuade the Romaine Empire, 126. they come out of Aſia into Europe. 127
Gothes, Getes and Gepides all one. ibid.
Gothes made Arrians by the Romains. 129
Gouernors ambitious and diſloyal. 135
Gothes defeated in Afrike by the Romains. 139
Gothes kingdome in Spaine ruined. 154
God not pleaſed with rebellion, though the Prince be a tyrant. 202
Gothike ſeruice changed in Spaine. 254
Gothike Caracters aboliſhed in Spaine. 256
Gouernors appointed in Arragon for the young kings perſon. 346
Gouernors among the Moores make themſelues abſolut Lords. 354
Gouernment of Caſtile diuided betwixt the Queene mother and the Duke of Pegnafiel. 669
Gouernment of a woman cauſe of contention. 719
Gonſalo the great captaine breakes his faith and promiſe, 996. he is made duke of Terranoua & Seſſa, 874. his is honored by king Lewis 12. 883
Gouleta taken by the Emperor, 988. taken againe by the Turkes. 1174
Gouernors made by D. Sebaſtian going into Affrike. 1200
Gouernors of Portugal after Henries death. 1207 Gretians Authors of lies. 2
Gracchus victory againſt the Celtiberians. 92

Gregory Biſhop of Oſtia Protector of Vines, 265
Grecians defeated by the Cattelans, 455
Greene croſſe the badge of the Knights of Calatraua, 676
Granado yeelded to the Kings of Caſtile, 940 Greedines of the Flemmings gouerning K. Charles 945.
Greatnes of the King of Spaines dominions, 1095
Gun-powder an ancient inuention, 8
Guadalquibir, the Spring and courſe, 16
Guipuſcoa a member of the realme of Nauarre, 201.
Guifts to Elenor of England Queene of Caſtile in fauour of her marriage, 315
Guipuſcoa yeelded to the king of Caſtile, 335
Guipuſcoans enemies to the Nauarrois, 500
Gifts of Henry the 4. king of Caſtile, 753
Gouernors draw king Philip into Portugal, 1210 they ſeeke to diſſolue the Eſtates, ibid.

H

H*Anno's* voyage along the coaſt of Affricke, 34
Hannibal ſent into Spaine. ibi. he is made Gouernor of Spaine, 36. he marcheth towards Italy, 39
Hanno defeated by Scipio, ibid. he is ſent againe into Spaine. 61
Hambroz the Moore betrayes the Toledains, 180
Hatred betwixt fiue Chriſtian kings raigning in Spaine, 326
Habit of the knights of Alcantara. 355
Haro Lord of Biſcay much honored by the king of Caſtile, 429 Hatred betwixt D. John Nugnes de Lara, and Don Alphonſo of Albuquerque, 532 Hatred among Courtiers cannot be reconciled, but with the ruine of the one partie, 701
Hatred of the Portugueſes and Caſtillans. 1210
Heſperus of whom Italy and Spaine are named, 5
Hercules defeates the Curetes, 9
Heauines in Gn. Scipio's army without apparent cauſe, 47
Hermingild a Chriſtian ſlaine by his fathers commandement, being an Arrian, 141
Henry of Lorrain the ſtemme of the houſe of Portugall, 247. he is the fitſt Earle of Portugall, 258.
D. Henry takes vpon him the title of king of Caſtile. 566. he is defeated in battell, 570. he is releeued againe by the French, 572. hee is ſetled king of Caſtile. 578. he is poyſoned. 596
D. Henry the 3. proclaymed king of Caſtile, 628
Hermite an Impoſtor. 644
D. Henry ſubdues his rebels, ibid.
D. Henry Maſter of the Order of Chriſt firſt diſcouered at ſea. 681
D. Henry Infant of Arragon depriued of his lands in Caſtile. 684
D. Henry de Guzman drowned neere to Gibraltar, 711.
Henry Prince of Caſtile wonne by the Conſtables faction. 726
Henry the fourth king of Caſtile giues his enemies meanes to make war againſt him, 783. beeing deſtitute of all humane helpe, hee hath recourſe vnto God. 784. he is degraded in effigie, and his brother declared King of Caſtile, 781. his patience. ibid. hee oppreſſeth his truſtie ſeruants, and dares not deale with his rebels, 796. hee is forſaken by his ſubiects, 800. his indiſcretion, 803. his falſe oath, 825. hee takes no cares for the ſucceſſion of the Realme, 841
Hermandades of Caſtile, 828
Hernando Alraco beheaded, 881
S. Herme at Malta taken by the Turke, 1116
D. Henry king of Portugall. 1204. his proceeding touching the ſucceſſion, 1205. his death and diſpoſition, 1207
Hypocriſie of the Infant D Sancho, 417
Hypocriſie of the Inquiſitors in Spaine, 1123
Horſes in Spaine, 27
Hope and Deſpaire breed like effects at the ſeege of Sagunt, 37
Honor and liberty animate valiant men, 66
Hoſpitality of king Almenon a Moore, 241
Houſe of Biſcay, 313
Houſes of Religion built by Alphonſo king of Portugall, being excommunicate, 391
Hoſpitaliers enriched with the ſpoyls of the Templers, 453
Houſes of ſtrength retreats for theeues, ruines in Guipuſcoa, 740
Houſe of Braganza in Portugall, 776
Houſe of Mendoza gouernes the Realme of Caſtile, 797 Hoſpitall of S. Iames built for Pilgrimes, 917
Hope of gaine makes vice remaine vnpuniſhed, 915.
Hunger in the Emperors army at Alger, 1065
Humanity of Metellus to poore innocents, 100
Huns chaſe the Gothes out of their conqueſts, 129
Humanity of the Gothes to the vanquiſht Sueues, 135.
Humanity of King Hazen to a Chriſtian his priſoner, 214
Hueſca taken and the Moores defeated, 264
Humanity and modeſty of a Mooriſh king, 417
Hugh Iudge of Arborea murthered by his ſubiects 618.
Humanity of Chriſtians to baniſhed Iewes, 947
Husbandrie of Cardinall Ximenes, 937

I

IAen deliuered to the king of Caſtile, 376
Iacobins firſt Inquiſitors in Spaine, 1120
Iberians gaue the name to Spaine, 3
Idlenes makes ſouldiers inſolent and mutinous, 68.
Idlenes and eaſe enemies to vertue, 88
S. Iames taken by the Moores, 219
S. Iames of Compoſtella made an Arch-biſhoprick, 278.

D. Iames king of Maiorca diſpoſſeſt by his Nephew. 428
D. Iames king of Maiorca ſlaine. 525
Iew Collector of the kings reuenues ſlaine in Guipuſcoa. 774
Iewels and plate taken from Churches by the king of Caſtile. 852
Iewes and conuerted Moores oppreſſed vpon ſlanderous reports. 992
Iewes conſtrained to be baptized. 958
Ignorance makes people ſubiect. 30
Ignalada ſurprized by the Prince of Arragon. 788
D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara defeated and taken priſoner. 444
D. Iohn of Caſtile brings the Moores into Spaine againſt the king his brother. 438
D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque poiſoned. 537
D. Iohn of Abendagno murthered by the Lord of Biſcay. 539
D. Iohn de la Cerde ſlaine by the king of Caſtiles commandement. 546
D. Iohn of Arragon in the king of Caſtiles preſence. 547
D. Iohn Maſter of Auiz aſpires to the gouernment of Portugal, 603. he is choſen king of Portugal, 607. he cals the Engliſh into Spaine. 613
D. Iohn de Pacheco gouerns Prince Henry of Caſtile. 717
Iohn king of Arragon pawneth Rouſſillon to Lewis the French king, 769. he is proclaimed an enemy to the country, ibid. his clemency, 830. his ſecond matriage ominous to the realme of Nauar, 862. he giues the precedence to his ſon the king of Caſtile, 864. his death. 873
Iohn king of Nauar goes into Caſtile, 962. hee is forced to retire into France. 903
Saint Iohn de Luz burnt by the Spaniards. 1006
D. Iohn de Luna flies into France. 1076
Iohn de la Valette great Maſter of Malta. 1116
Iſlands about Spaine. 3
Illiturgis beſeeged by the Carthaginians, 44. taken by Scipio. 66
Illora yeelded to king Fernand. 917
Impiety of Valens. 126
Impatiency of Thibaud Earle of Champagne to reigne. 366
Impiety of Manfroy Frederies baſtard. 389
Impriſonment and murther of D. Iohn Nugnes de Prada. 536
Impriſonment of the Maſter of Auiz. 599
Impriſonment of D Pedro Manrique. 712
Impriſonment of Charles Prince of Viana. 763 Impunity the nurſe of all diſorders. 836
Impoſitions cauſe of troubles. 1001
Imperial army landed at Alger. 1003
Iſlands of Philippina diſcouered. 1113
Imputations laied vpon the Duke of Alba. 1216
Indiſcretion and raſhneſſe of Boſtares. 41
Infidelity of the Celtiberians. 46
Integrity of Paulus Æmilius. 86
Incounter of L. Bibius vnfortunat. ibid.
Inuention of Saint Iames Sepulcher. 179
Indiſcretion of D. Guttiere Fernandes. 308
Intereſt of the French king to the crowne of Caſtile. 352
Inhabitants of Pampelona refuſe to doe homage to the king of Caſtile. 387
Iniuſtice of D. Pedro king of Arragon to his brother. 419 Inſolencies of the French in Sicile. ibid.
Inuaſion of Caſtile by the king of Granado. 442
Integrity of D. Iohn Ramires of Arteillan. 573
Integrity of Leonora Queene of Caſtile. 601
Interceſſion for D. Henry Infant of Arragon. 684
Infants of Arragon looſe all their land in Caſtile. 704
Inſolencies of the Conſtable of Caſtile made knowne vnto the king. 716
Inſolency of the commons puniſhed. 725
Ingratitude of Pope Calixtus. 755
Inſolency of the confederats in Caſtile againſt the Popes Legat. 800
Inſolency of the Maſter of Saint Iames. 829
Inquiſition in Spaine againſt Iewes and Moores, and the fruits thereof. 870
Integrity of king Fernand and Queene Iſabel. 899
Inquiſition in Arragon. 927
Iniury don to the kings Receiuers. 931
Indians gentle and tractable. 946
Inuectiue made by the Conſtable Velaſco, againſt Cardinal Ximenes. 926
Intreaty of the Infant D. Fernand to Cardinal Ximenes. 954
Inſolency againſt the kings Officers. 961 Inigo of Loyola and his family. 962
Inquiſition of Spaine attempted at Mylan. 1111
Inquiſition reiected by the Arragonois. 1120
Inquiſitors what they be. ibid.
Impriſonment of the Prince of Spaine. 1130
Inquiſitors ſharpe perſecutors of Prince Charles. 1134. they are chiefe of the councel of Spaine. 1135
Inſolency of the Spaniſh ſoldiers in Granado. 1141
Inſolency of the Spaniards makes the Moores reuolt. 1149
Ioſeph king of Granado poiſoned. 655
Ioane Queene of Nauar puniſhed by the hand of God. 764
Ioane Queene of Caſtile deliuered of a daughter vnlawfully begotten. 767
Ioane Infanta of Caſtile, newly borne, declared heire of the realme. 768
Ioane borne in Adultery the ſubiect of all the troubles in Caſtile, 778. ſhe is made ſure to the king of Portugal. 850
Ioane wife to the Archduke Philip, heire to Caſtile and Arragon, 963. toucht in her ſences. 882
D. Iohn of Auſtria oppoſite to Prince Charles, 1134 he comes to Granado againſt the Moores, 1146. his ſpeech to the army at Lepanto. 1168
Irene a chaſt Virgin. 148
Saint Iren taken from the Moores. 297
Iſmael king of Granado ſlaine by his ſubiects. 471
Iſabel Queene of Caſtile fauors the Lords againſt the Conſtable. 743

Isabella ſiſter to king Henry, reiects the title of Queene of Caſtile, 805. ſhee procures a peace in Caſtile, ibid. ſhe is declared heire of the realme, 806. ſhe marries with Fernand of Arragon, 817. her magnanimity, 852. ſhee is ſworne heire to the crowne of Caſtile, 860. ſhe is carefull to doe Iuſtice, 867. ſhe pourſueth the rebels in Eſtremadura. 875

Iulian an Earle brings the Moores into Spaine. 153

Iudges choſen in Caſtile. 196

Iuſtice and treaſor the chiefe members of an Eſtate. 846

Iuſtice eſtabliſhed in Galicia. 884

Iudgement of the Inquiſitors againſt the Prince of Spaine. 1131

D. Iohn affects to bee king of Tunes, 1174. hee is made gouernor of the Netherlands, 1180. he aſpires to the crown of Eng. ibid. his death. 1181

K

KIngs of Spaine at the firſt, what they were. 7

Kingdomes erected in Spaine by the Arabians and Chriſtians. 24

1. Kings in the battaile whereas Attila was defeated. 134

1. King forced by his children to leaue his crowne. 191

1. King diſpoſſeſt becomes his ſons Lieutenant, ibi.

2 Knights of the Lilly in Nauar. 235

1. Kings of Spaine doe not acknowledge the Emperor. 240

2. Knights Chriſtians in pay with the Moores. 247

1. Kings of Caſtile and Arragon ſpoile the heire of Nauar of his kingdome. 249

2. Knights of Calatraua firſt inſtituted. 304

1. Kings of Leon and Caſtile in quarrel. 321

1. Kings of Nauar and Leon inuade Caſtile. 330

1. King of Caſtile inuades Nauar. 335

1. King of Caſtile being young deliuered into the hands of them of Lara. 350

1. King of Leon enters Caſtile with an army againſt his owne ſonne. 354

1. King of Seuile a Moore, tributary to the king of Caſtile. 363

1. King of Arragon asketh pardon of the Pope. 370

1. King of Nauar confeſſeth himſelfe vaſſal to him of Caſtile. 387

1. Kings of Moores diſpoſſeſt and chaſed out of Spaine. 388

1. Kingdome of Tremiſſen. 408

1. King of Maroc paſſeth into Spaine. 409

King of Maiorca diſpoſſeſt by his brother. 422

King of Arragon ſet the Infants of Cerde at liberty. 434

King of Granado depoſed. 455

King of Arragon makes warre againſt the Moores of Affrike. 482

King of Caſtile inuades Portugal with an army. 505

Knights in Caſtile executed. 553

King of Nauarre ſends for his wife. 643

King of Caſtile beſeeged by his own ſubiects. 683

King of Nauarres lands in Caſtile forfeited and giuen away. 696

King of Arragon defeated and taken priſoner at ſea by the Genetois. 709

Kings of Caſtile and Nauarre viſit the Conſtable. 724

King of Caſtile puts the Conſtable to death, more through baſe feare then for the loue of Iuſtice. 745

King of Nauarre and the Lords pacified and reconciled to the new king of Caſtile. 750

King of Caſtile contemned of his ſubiects. 753

King of Caſtile makes warre againſt Nauarre. 766

King of Caſtile reproched with the adulterat birth of his ſuppoſed daughter. 781

King of Portugal abandons Zamorra, 854. his baſe courage, 864. he deſpaires. 865

King of Manicongo becomes a Chriſtian. 950

Kings of France and Arragon diuide the realme of Naples, and diſpoſſeſſe Frederic. 966

King of Nauar and his wife in factions. 885

King of Tremeſſen defeated by the Spaniards. 1009

King of Tunes taken by his ſonne. 1010

King of Tunes expelled by Vluccialy. 1160

King of Fez defeated by the Xeriffes. 1185

King of Fez and Maroc at warre. 1187

King of Fez defeated and taken, 1188. he is ſet at liberty. ibid.

Kings of Maroc elective. 1195

L

LAnguage of the Spaniards at this day. 30

Lauron taken by Sertorius in the view of Pompey. 110

Lawes of king Siſebuth. 146

Law made by the Gothes not to marry the kings widow. 151

Law of defying a towne. 246

Laurence Suarez betraies king Aben Hut, who had entertained him in his exile. 371

Lands called Beetries in Biſcay &c. 533

Lands of the crowne giuen in recompence of ſeruice. 622

Lands confiſcated being giuen away hinder the peace. 715

Lamentation of Iſabella of Caſtile. 942

Landgraue of Heſſen feared by the Emperour. 1116

Lebriſſa and the beginning. 8

Leon taken by the Chriſtians. 171

League of Chriſtian Princes and Moores in Spain againſt the French. 181

Leon the Chriſtians chiefe city taken by the Arabians. 213

League betwixt the king of Caſtile and Prince of Arragon againſt Nauar. 289

Leira taken by the Moores. 292

League againſt Nauar. 320

League againſt Caſtile, made by Arragon, Leon and Portugal. 327

League betwixt the king of Arragon and the widow Queene of Nauarre. 385

Lewis the French king quits his right to Castile. 395
League and marriage betwixt Nauar and Arragon. 491
Leonora de Guzman mistresse to the king of Castile, ill intreated by the widow, 531. she is murthered by the Queenes commandement. 532
Leagues full of Infidelity. 573
Leonora Queene of Nauar light and vnkinde, 622
League against Aluar de Lara the Constable. 690
League treated to the preiudice of the king of Castile. 643
Leonora of Arragon restrained by the king of Castile. 697
League made by the king of Nauar broken. 730
Learning cherished by D. Alphonso king of Arragon. 756
Leonora Pimentel, Counteſſe of Plaisance of a noble courage. 820
Lewis of Beaumont affects the realme of Nauarre, 861. he is made Marquis of Huesca. 954
League made against the Venetians. 879
Learning and armes vnited, make a man compleat. 1182
Legienary souldiers inuented by Card. Ximenes 928 League against the Emperor Charles. 975
Letters from king Charles to discharge Cardinall Ximenes. 957
League betwixt the Pope and Emperor. 918
Lewis Prince of Sauoy dies in Spaine. 996
League made by the Princes of Germany and the French king against the Emperor. 1035
League concluded betwixt the Pope, king of Spaine and the Venetians. 1160
Liberty deere to the Spaniards. 28
Liberty of Christians among the Moores in Spaine. 187
Limits betwixt Nauar and Arragon. 287
Lisbone taken from the Moores. 297
Limitation of the Authority of Iustice Maior of Arragon. 524
Lisbone spoiled and burnt by the king of Portugal, 585. beseeged by the Castillans. 604
Liberality of the new king of Portugal. 612
Lisbone made an Archbishoprike. 621
Liberty of religion granted to the Moores. 940
Limits of the Spaniards and Portugals nauigations made by the Pope. 950
Library gathered by Diego Colombus. 881
Lima called the city of kings. 1007
Lisbone refuseth the king of Spaines letters. 1206
it yeelds to king Philip. 1214
Loue of subiects to their Prince. 205
Loyalty and integrity of D. Pedro d' Ansures. 274
Lope de Hitero made Bishop of Cordoua. 371
Loyalty ill rewarded makes a good seruant desperate. 509
Loues of D. Pedro king of Castile. 533
Loue of the Earle of Lerin to the Prince Don Charles. 754
Loues and vanities of Henry called the Vnable, king of Castile. 760
Loose life of Ioane Queene of Castile. 801
Lords holding the party of Fernand and Isabella and their opposits. 846
Loue of a brother to his brother. 872
Loxa beseeged by the Castillans. 916
Lord of Chaux sent for a third Gouernor into Spaine. 943
Logrogne beseeged by the French and relceued by the Castillans. 965
Losse receiued by the pirats of Arger. 1129
Lussus of whom comes Lusitania. 6
Lusitanians defeated by Catinus. 86
Lucullus retires from Palenza with shame. 97
Lusitanians reuolt and defeat the Romains. 109
Lust of D. Alphonso king of Castile. 315

M

Madrid sometimes called Mantua. 11
Maiorquins expert in slings, 21
Manners of the Spaniards in general. 29
Magnanimity of the Numantins. ibid.
Masinissa a cruel Aduersary to the Romans. 46
L. Martius chosen general of the Roman army. 48
Maiesty ioyned with modesty in P. Scipio. 52
L. Martius honoured by Scipio. 57
Mandonius and Indibilis reuolt to the Romans. 58
Massina Nephew to Masinissa prisoner to the Romans. 60
Mago and Masinissa charge the Romans. 63
Masinissa practised by Sillanus. 65
Mago brother to Hannibal hopes to recour Spaine, 72. hee spoiles the Gaditans, 74. hee makes a vaine attempt vpon new Carthage. 75
Manner of the Empurians lyuing. 80
Magnanimity & clemency of Brutus to rebels. 104
Mancinus called to Rome to answer the ignominious accord made with the Numantins, 105. he is deliuered bound to the Numantins. ibid.
Martirs at Saragossa. 123
Manners of the Arabians. 161
Mahumet his birth, and country, ibid. his doctrine published in Heraclius time, ibid. his death and childre, 162. he was ignorant of all learning, 163
Magnuza a Christian seruing the Moores forceth Pelagius sister. 169
Marriage secretly made seuerely punished. 179
Martirs vnder the Moores. 211
Marriage for loue, vnfortunate. ibid.
Marriage betwixt a Christian and an Infidel reproued of God. 220
Marriage of D. Alphonso king of Castile with a Moore. 257
Marriage of the daughter of Cid Ruis Dias. 262
Maiorca taken by the Cattelans, 266
Marriage of the Counteſſe of Portugal detestable, 271
Magnanimity of king D. Alphonso. 274
Manrique de Lara slaine before Huete. 312
Marriage betwixt Lewis of France and D. Blanch of Castile. 336
Marriage of D. Henry king of Castile forced, 351 Marriage of the king D. Sancho Capello. 358

Marriage.

Marriage of the Infant of Caſtile with D. Violant of Arragon. 378
Marriage of D. Frederic of Caſtile with Blanche daughter of France. 395
Manfroy vanquiſhed and ſlaine by the French. 413
Marriage of Charles 1 king of Nauarre. 475
Mary of Naples Queene of Maiorca, vnchaſt. 502
Maiorca conquered by the king of Arragon. 520
Maſſaker of Iewes in Nauarre. 476
Mahumet king of Granado murthered by his ſubiects. 495
Marriage of D. Pedro king of Arragon with the Infanta of Portugal. 523
Marriage treated of betwixt D. Pedro king of Caſtile and Blanch of Bourbon. 533
Malandrins paſſe into Spaine. 566
Marriage vnlawful of the king of Portugal. 583
Marriage of D. Martin of Arragon, with Mary heire of Sicile. 621
Marriage betwixt the heire of Albuquerque and the king of Caſtiles brother. 628
Maiority of D. Henry king of Caſtile. 614
Marriage of D. Martin king of Sicile and Donna Blanch of Nauarre. 667
Marriage of D. Martin king of Arragon with D. Ioane of Prades. 673 Marriage betwixt D. Alphonſo of Arragon and D. Maria of Caſtile. 677
Madera diſcouered. 681
Marriage forced betwixt D. Henry of Arragon and D. Catherina of Caſtile. 683
Marſeilles ſurprized by the king of Arragon. 687
Mahumet defeated and Granado taken by Ioſeph Aben Almao. 702
Magnanimity of Alphonſo king of Arragon. 710
Marriage of the Prince of Caſtile with the Infanta of Nauar. 717
Marriage of the king of Nauarre with D. Ioane Henriques. 727
Manner of reforming Nuns in Caſtile. 754
Marquis of Villena becomes a pentioner to the French king. 773
Magnanimity of the Infanta D. Iſabella. 795
Magnanimity and Iuſtice of D. Alphonſo of Caſtile. 802
Marriage concluded betwixt Charles Duke of Guienne and D. Ioane of Caſtile. 824
Marriage of Iohn Prince of Portugal with D. Leonora of Viſeo. 829
Marſhall of Nauarre treacherouſly ſlaine. 832
Maſſacre of the new Chriſtians. 834
Marquis of Santillana ſurprizeth Carion. 839
Marquis of Villena taken priſoner by his competitor, 841. he beginnes to adhere to king Fernand and Iſabella, 854. hee is reconciled vnto them. 877
Mahumetaine hermite a murtherer. 925
Malaga yeelded to the king of Caſtile. 926
Maſterſhip of Calatraua incorporated to the crowne of Caſtile. 934
Marquis of Villena valiant and charitable. 937
Marriage betwixt the Infant D. Alphonſo of Portugal and Iſabel of Caſtile. 938
Maſterſhip of Saint Iames in the king of Caſtiles hands as Adminiſtrator. 949
Marriage of the king of Arragon with Germaine of Foix. 880
Maſtiues receiued pay among the Spaniards at the Indies. 916
Magellanes and Faliero Portugals ſerue in Caſtile. 923
Magnanimity of Cardinal Ximenes. 947
Marquis of Aguilar Gouernor to D. Fernand. 955
Maia a ſtrong fort taken by the Caſtillans. 966
Maiorquins vanquiſhed and puniſhed. 968
Maximes of the point of honor at this day. 972
Marriage of the Emperor Charles. 975
Marriage of the Duke of Sauoy with D. Beatrix of Portugal. 977
Marriage of Iohn king of Portugal with the Emperors ſiſter. 978
Marriage of Philip Prince of Spaine with the Infanta of Portugal. 1008 Marriage of Ioane heire of Nauar to Antonio duke of Vendoſme. 1025
Maiſhal of Termes defeated by the Spaniards. 1081
Marriage of the king of Spaine with Elizabeth of France. 1082
Markes of the antiquity of Spaine. 1095
Malta beſeeged by the Turkes. 1114
Manner of the Inquiſitors proceeding in Spaine. 1025
Maſſacree of Moores that were in priſon. 1146
Marc Antonio Colonna perſwads D. Iohn to fight with the Turkes. 1165
Mahomet the ſonne of Abdalla expelled by Moluc his vncle. 1197
Marriage concluded betwixt Catherine Infanta of Spaine and the Duke of Sauoy. 1229
Meſſina cauſe of the firſt Punike warre. 35
Memorable defeat of Moores. 178
Memory of D Sancho Abarca. 202
Metropolitaine of Languedoc vnder the Primat of Toledo. 255
Men of learning admitted into the councell of Caſtile. 379
Menault ſecond king of the Canaries ſels the Iſlands to them of Seuile. 680
Merzalguibir a Port in Affrike taken by the Caſtillans. 877
Mexico at the Indies taken by the Chriſtians 965
Metz beſeeged by the Emperor. 1035
Medina del Campo ſurprized by the confederats. 720
Mendoſas ſpeech to the French king, and his anſwere. 1230
Mines in Spaine. 25
Military exerciſes done by Scipio. 57
Miſeries of a place beſeeged. 108
Miſtaking the ruine of Pompey's army. 116
Mildneſſe and Chriſtian bounty of king Sizebuth. 146
Mignon of the Queene of Portugals drawes Caſtile and Portugal into armes. 600
Miſeries of ciuill warre. 629

Mildneſſe in a Prince without Iuſtice and ſeuerity, is hurtfull both to himſelfe and his Eſtate. 751
Misfortune in the king of Portugals voiage, into Affrike. 778
Miniſters of Iuſtice puniſhed exemplarly. 936
Minorca ſpoiled by Barbaroſſa. 993
Marriage of the Duke of Sauoy and the Infanta D.Catherina in Spaine. 1231
Mountaine of Idubeda. 15
Mountaines called Hanibals Ladders. 16
Moores both in Cæſar and Pompeis armies. 115
Monarchy of the Gothes in Spaine. 146
Moores defeated by D. Garcia K. of Ouiedo. 191
Moores of Barcelona tributaries to the French, 778 defeated by D.Ordogno king of Leon. 194
Moores drawne into Galicia by a Biſhops faction. 212
Moores drawne into Spaine by D. Alphonſo king of Caſtile. 257
Moores defeated by D. Alphonſo. 275
Modeſty of greater force then armes. 278
Moores ſpoile Toledo and Caſtile, 331. they inuade Portugal. 332
Moores of Seuile defeated. 361
Moores expelled out of Minorca. 431
Mother perſwads her ſonne to reuenge his fathers death. 434
Moores raiſed from the ſeege of Siles and defeated. 508
Monſter borne in Cattelonia, ſlaine by the parents and they puniſhed. 520
Moores take Algezire. 579
Modeſty of D Pedro Infant of Portugal. 706
Moores of Granado drawne by the king of Nauar into Caſtile, 735. defeated nere vnto Arcos. 742
Moores make furious ſallies vpon the Chriſtians, 897. they are defeated and their king taken by the Caſtillans. 900
Molucca's found in the Caſtillans nauigation. 950
Moores Mudeiares inforced to change their religion. 961 Moores perſecuted in Spaine. 964
Moores ſtrong and fit for the warre. 931
Moores curious and ſuperſtitious. 1009
Moores ill intreated in Spaine. 1127
Moores vnnaturall, 1145. they are thruſt out of Granado, 1149. they are defeated by D. Iohn of Auſtria, 1152. after an accord made their retract. 1153
Mutines reſolue to ſubmit them to Scipios mercy. 70
Multituds in armies not alwaies of greateſt effect. 340
Murther of Garci Laſo de la Vega. 484
Murther of the Conſtable of France by the king of Nauar. 541
Murther of D. Agnes de Caſtro. 549
Murther of D. Philip de Caſtro. 580
Murther of the Archbiſhop of Saragoſſa. 675
Murther committed by the Earle of Lerin. 884
Mutiny vnder a ſhew of religion. 918
Muley Boabdelin ſubmits himſelfe to the kings of Caſtile. 936
Mutinies at the Indies through enuy. 918
Murmuring of the Spaniards againſt Card: Ximenes. 928 Multitude of Officers in the treaſory hurtfull to the ſtate. 937
Muley Heſcen king of Tunes diſpoſſeſt by Barbaroſſa and reſtored by the Emperor, 984
Muley Buaſon demands ſuccors in Spaine. 1025
Murthers done by the Moores of Granado. 1140
Muley Molucs ſpeech of D.Sebaſtian. 1200
Mutiny at Naples. 1232

N

NAture and manners of the Spaniards. 27
Nauar and Arragon vnited. 189
Nauartois defeated, and their king Don Garcia taken priſoner by the Earle of Caſtile. 206
Nauarre vaſſal to Caſtile, 286. inuaded by the kings of Caſtile and Arragon, 316. hee ſends Ambaſſadors to Caſtile. 336
Nauarre vnder the protection of the French. 404
Nauigations and conqueſts of Spaniards in the Ocean. 870
Nauigations of the Portugals. 931
Nauarre vnited to the crowne of Caſtile. 919
Nauy ſent into Flanders for king Charles. 952.
C.Nero ſent Pretor into Spaine. 50
Negligence of captaines puniſhed ſometimes at Rome. 103
Nephew betraies his vncle through ambition. 704
Nice the firſt General councel. 124
Nicholas Ouando Gouernor at the Indies. 976
Nomination of Biſhops belonged to the kings of Spaine. 151
Noblemen of France at the ſeege of Saragoſſa. 271
Nobility of Caſtile defend their liberties. 321
Nomber of the dead at the battaile of Muradal. 341
Nomination of the Biſhop of Maiorca. 363
Noblemen murthered by the commandement of D.Pedro king of Caſtile. 532
Noblemen of Caſtile ſlaine at Aliubarota. 609
Noblemen at the king of Nauarres coronation. 627
Nobility of Caſtile defiled by their alliances with conuerted Iewes. 947
Number of the Chriſtian army going to Tripoly. 1084
Nobility of the kings of Spaine. 1095
Number of the dead at the battaile of Lepanto. 1169
Numantia attempted in vaine by Q. Pompeius 103
Numantins reduced to extremity. 108
Nugno de Lara vanquiſhed by the Moores and ſlaine. 409
Number of the French army at the Terceres. 1221

O

OBstinacy of the Barbarians. 104
Oppa Archbishop of Seuile, an Apostate. 170
Ouiedo built. 174
Ouiedo called the townes of Bishops and made an Archbishoprike. 190
Ouiedo suppresst in the kings titles. 199
D. Ordogno king of Leon puts a way his wife. 204
Offences die not vnpunished. 218
Order of the knights of Saint Sauior. 273
Orders for the nobility of Nauarre. 287
Order of Saint Iames instituted. 317
Order of Calatraua. 319
Order of the knights of Alcantara. 347
Order of preaching Friars. 355
Order of knights called de la Merced. 357 Order Seraphical of Saint Francis. ibid.
Order of the knights of Christus instituted in Portugal. 453
Obseruation in Philip the Faire and his posterity. 459
Order of Montesa in Arragon. 465
Oth reciprocall betwixt the king and his subiects. 471
Order of knights of the band. 489
Obedience of the Noblemen of Castile to their king. 499
Order betwixt Toledo and Burgos for precedence. 527
Orders for Iewes apparel. 580
Order of Saint Ieroſme in Spaine. 586
Ordonances made by D. Iohn king of Castile in his last testament. 629
Orders for the gouernment of the realme of Castile. ibid.
Order for the gouernment of Castile. 637
Orders for the giuing of spirituall liuings. 641
Officers called in question. 659
Order of the golden fleece instituted. 696
Outrage committed by a Moore in Seuile vnpunished. 776
Opinion of the Biscains concerning Bishops. 863
Orders for the quiet of the realme of Nauar. 894
Order touching the gouernment of Castile. 851
Oran in Affrike taken miraculously. 893
Order of the Nuns called the Conception. 900
Orders for the Indies. 930
Outrage committed by the Earle of Vregna. 948
Oran beseeged by the Turkes and valiantly defended. 1077
Occasion of a victory lost by the Christians. 1086.
Order of the Christians army at Gerbe. 1087
Oran beseeged againe and well defended. 1112
Obiections against the Prince of Spaine. 1130
Order of the Christians and Turkes armies at Lepanto. 1168

P

PAssion in Amilcar the ruine of his country. 35
Parle betwixt Masinissa and Scipio. 74
Palantines among the Spaniards. 106
Pampelone begun. 112
Palliardise the ruine of the Gothes kingdome. 157
Palence restored to the king of Nauarre. 230
Parricide among the Princes of Catteloniz. 254
Papacy disputed by armes. 276
Parliament at Toledo for the Moores warre. 339
Pampelona in sedition, 346. diuided into two factions. 405
Parricids committed by Conrade. 412
Pablo a Iew conuerted, a learned Doctor and of a good life. 658
Pampelona made one body. 689
Pardon granted to the confederats. 731
Parliament at Toledo. 880
Pastors being negligent cause persecutions. 946
Pampelona beseeged in vaine by king Iohn, 910. it is abandoned by the Castillans, 962. it is taken by the Lords of Asperaut. 965
Passage of king Francis a prisoner into Spaine. 974
Pardon for the Moores proclaimed. 1145
Perpenna and his confederats murther Sertorius, 111. he is punished for his treason. 112
Pelagius the first king of the Asturies, 168. he flies into the mountaines, 169. he stiles himselfe king of Ouiedo. 171
Pelagius a religious man cruelly murthered. 194
Peace betwixt Nauarre and Castile. 289
Peace betwixt Nauarre and Arragon. 303
Pero Nugnes a faithful vassal to his king. 309
D. Pedro king of Arragon slaine in France. 345
D. Pedro of Arragon drawes his brother. 401
D. Pedro Sanches of Montagu, regent of Nauarre, 402. he is murthered. 405
Peace betwixt France and Arragon. 436
Perpignan taken by the French. 427
Peace betwixt Nauarre and Castile, 501.
D. Pedro king of Castile, called the cruel, 531. hee leaues his new wife 3. daies after his marriage, 534. he marries a second wife the first beeing liuing, 536. murthers committed by him, 538. he puts his brother to death, 546 his diuilish cruelty 548. he spoiles the Venetians at sea. 551 hee murthers two other of his brethren, 552. hee murthers Queene Blanch his wife, 554. his cruelty, couetousnesse and treachery, 557. his flight out of Castile, 567 he discontents the English, 571. he is slaine by his base brother D. Hen. 575
Peace broken by the Castillan with Arragon. 556
Peace betwixt Castile and Portugal. 585
Peace betwixt Castile and Nauarre. 594
D Pedro of Portugal a great traueller. 691
D Pedro of Arragon slaine at Naples. 714
Pedro Sarmiento deliuers Toledo to Prince H. 739
Peace concluded betwixt Castile & Arragon. 768
D. Pedro of Portugal chosen king of Arragon, 775 he is crowned at Barcelona, 786. he is defeated with the Cattelans, ibid. he is poisoned. 789
Pedro de Velasco made Constable of Castile. 834
Pero Gonzales of Mendosa Cardinal of Spaine. 835

Perpignan yeelded to the French. 847
Peace betwixt France and Castile. 870
Peace betwixt Portugal and Castile. 875
Pedro of Nauarre made Earle of Albeto, 874 hee is chiefe conductor of the warre at Oran. 892
Peace betwixt France and Spaine. 879
Pegnon de Velez fortified by the Castillans. 888
Pedro Arias d Auila viceroy of the firme land at the Indies. 917
Pearles in aboundance at the Indies. 918
D. Pedro Giron raiseth new troubles. 955
Peru discouered. 981
Peace betwixt the Pope and king of Spaine. 1080
Peace betwixt France and Spaine. 1081
Persecutions in Spaine for religion. 1083
Pegnon de Velez how scituated. 1112
Pedro Aroio defeated and slaine by the Moores. 1144
Pegnon of Fregiliana taken by the great Commander. 1148
Peace betwixt the Turke and the Venetians. 1172
People of the Terceres brutish. 1218
Pedro de Baldes defeated by them of the Terceres. ibid.
Phenitiens spoile Spaine. 8
Philip Archduke of Austria and Ioane his wife driuen into England by a storme. 880
Philip Prince of Spaine, sworn future king of Spain, 1007. he goes into Flanders, 1025. his marriage with Mary Queene of England, 1039. hee is made king of Naples, 1040. he is desirous of a peace with the Pope, 1078. hee returnes into Spaine, 1083. he sends succors into France, 1094 his marriage with his Neece, 1156. he sends his gallies to assist the Venetians, 1157. his resolution to warre against the Turke, 1173. he dissuads D. Sebastien from the voiage of Affrike, 1198. his troupes march towards Portugal, 1208. he enters into Portugal, 1217. his bounty in Portugal, 1220. he is acknowledged king in Lisbone. ibid. he goes out of Portugal. 1226
Pyrenee mountaines ful of yron mines. 2
Pirenees why so called. 14
Piety of Isabel Queene of Portugal. 469
Pisans abandon the Island of Sardinia. 480
Piety of a sonne ill rewarded by D. Pedro king of Castile. 530
Pizarro abandoned by his soldiers at Peru, 1031. he defeats his enemies, 1032 he is defeated and executed. 1033
Pialy Basha hauing taken Gerbe, enters Constantinople in triumph. 1093
C. Plautius defeated by Viriatus. 99
Pleasures corrupt both minde and body. 215
Plague in Alphonso de la Cerdes campe. 441
Places vpon the frontier of Castile abandoned by bad counsel. 736 Places yeelded to the king of Castile. 930
Placentia taken from D. Aluaro d' Estuniga. 932
Places returne to the obedience of the king of Nauarre. 910
Places belonging to the Portugals in Afrike yeeld to king Philip. 1215
Portugal whence it was so called. 18
Pouerty assures the peoples liberty. 28
Policy of the Romaine and Carthag. captaines. 43
Pompey deceiues the Numantins, 103. he is sent into Spaine against Sertorius, 111. his wisdome to end the ciuil war, 112. he is made perpetual gouernor in Spaine, ibid. he gets the farther Spaine to be at his deuotion. 115
Policy of Flaccus Commissary of the victuals. 105
Popilius Lenas vnfortunat in the warre of Numantia. 104
Pompeys sonne slaine by Cæsar. 116
Power of Ballancing that of kings. 146
Pope Benedict an heretike. 151
Posterity of Mudarra Gonsales. 218
Portugal held in fee of the crowne of Leon. 258
Pope ratifies the election of the Emperour Rodolphus. 406
Pope and D. Alphonso king of Castile met at Beaucaire. 407
Pompe at the creation of the Earl of Barcellos, 551
Policy cruell and detestable of Queene Leonora Telles. 558
Pope Clement sends a Legat into Castile. 631
Portugals slaine at Aliubarota. 609
Power of the realme of Granado. 644
3. Popes at one time in the Church of Rome. 672
Pope and Councel condemne one an other. 679
Possessions of D. Iohn Infant of Arragon. 682
Portugals forced to accept of dishonorable conditions. 713
Policy of the Bishop of Segobia. 724
Pope sends a Legate into Castile to treat a peace. 799
Portugals enter into Castile with an army, 850 they are defeated. 857
Power of the Inquisitors in Spaine. 885
Portugal army defeated at Albuhera. 874
Pope giues the West Indies to the kings of Castile. 948
Prouost of the Court troubled in his charge and the fact punished. 888
Pope in despaire. 903
Policy of Cardinal Ximenes to keepe the noblemen in awe. 947
Pope Paul the 4. willing to treat of a peace. 1074
Pompe at an execution done by the Inquisitors. 1122
Porto Carrero an indiscreet Gouernor of Gouleta. 1174
Portugal wholy reduced vnder king Philip. 1215
Pope Gregory allowes of the conquest of Portugal. 1217
Prouinces out of Spaine vnder the iurisdiction thereof. 14
Preparation for yron. 29
Prisoners taken in new Carthage. 54
Practise of the Gaditains discouered & suppreſt. 72
Pretors refuse their charge in Spaine. 93
Preparations in Spaine to resist Cæsar. 113
Prescillian the heretike beheaded at Treues. 126
Primacy of the Pope. 148
Priests forbidden to marry. 174

Princes too superstitious. 177
Practise of D. Garcia king of Nauarre against his brother D. Fernand, 235 Princes of Spaine betray their fellow Christians, 249.
Priuiledges granted to Toledo, 256
Prelates of the French nation aduanced to Churches in Spaine, 261
Prouence giuen to the Earle of Barcelona, 267
Practises of the Countesse of Portugall against her sonne, 292
Primacie of Toledo confirmed, 305
Prouence returnes to the Crowne of Arragon. 317.
Processe for the Primacie of Spaine, 348
Practises of the Castillans and Arragonois against Nauarre, 418
Priests allowed to keepe Concubins, 450
Pretension of Soueraignty ouer Nauar made by the King of Castile. 452
Princes absence cause of libertie and disorder, 467
Pruna taken by the Christians, 483
Preparation of the Moores against Spaine, 550
Predictions of a Monke to the King of Castile, 552. 552
Princes in continuall iealousie, 564
Prince of Wales writes to Don Henry of Castile, 570.
Pretensions of Iohn Duke of Lancaster, to Castile, 585. his preparation against the King of Castile, 587
Profites of the Court of Rome stayd in Spain. 592
Prodigie at Ebora, 603
Pretension of Lewis duke of Aniou, 619
Pretensions of the King of Arragon to the realme of Sicily, ib.
Proceedings of the Earle of Gijon, 653
Princes pretending to the Realme of Arragon, 675
Priuiledges of the Earles of Ribadeo. 718
Prince Henry of Castile made run away, 734 Practises of Don Aluaro de Luna Constable of Castile, ibid.
Presage of the Constables end, 743
Practise against the Master of S. Iames, 803 Proceeding against the Arch-bishop of Toledo, 825.
Practises of Leonora Countesse of Foix, 832
Practises of the Marquis of Villena in Portugall, 848.
Princesse carefull of iustice, 919
Princes seruants follow for profit and not for affection, 881
Pretensions of Christian Princes against the Venetians, 889
Proceeding of the Inquisition vniust, 940
Proceedings of Cardinall Ximenes allowed by the King, 949
Practises of the Flemmish Courtiers to keepe the King from seeing the Cardinal, 956 Proceeding of Pizarro at Peru, 1007
Preiudice done to the French king at the Councel of Trent, 1097
Princes of Austria go into Spaine, 1112
Proceeding of the Inquisition to torture. 1122
Practises of the Court of Spaine, 1135
Practises of a Gold-smith to end the warre with the Moores, 1155
Priuiledges of the Inhabitants of Fez, 1191
Pretendants to the Crowne of Portugall, 1205
Punishment of mutines, 71
Publike charge affected for priuate profite, 93
Punishment of a cowardly Captaine, 104
Punishment of a trecherous Gouernor, 136
Punishment of Rebels, 149
Punishment of a rash man, 267
Poursuite for the abolishing of the Templers, 453
D. Philip the King of Spaines sonne sworne by the Estates of Portugall. 1226

Q

QValities of the mountaine Spaniards, 28
Queene of Nauar accused of adulterie, 227 her innocencie iustified, ibid.
Quarrels betwixt the Kings of Castile and Nauar, 235.
Qualities of D. Vraca Queene of Castile, 271
Queene D. Vraca vnchast, put away by her husband, 274
Queene of Portugall expelled for her Insolencies, 377.
Queene Violant of Castile vnchast, 414
Quarrels in Court, where D. Lope Dias of Haro is slaine. 433
Qualities of D. Pedro king of Arragon, 513
Quarrels touching the successor to Castile, 532
Queene mother of Castile vnchast, and slaine by her fathers commandement, 538
Queene of Nauarre refuseth to returne to her husband, 631. she is intangled in the troubles of Castile, 633. she is sent to her husband against her will, 649
Qualities and disposition of D. Henry the fourth king of Castile, 749
Queen of Castile gotte with child by D. Bertrand de la Cuena, 766
Quarrels betwixt the Earles of Beneuent and Lemos, 822
Quarrels betwixt the Earles of Haro and Treuigno, 827
Quarrels betwixt the houses of Mendoza and Pimentel, 839
Qualities of the Princes Fernand & Izabella, 845
Quarrell betwixt D. Frederick Henriques, and D. Ramir Nugnes de Guzman, 886
Qualities of king Muley Albohacen, 894
Qualities of Christopher Columbus, 918
Qualities of Manuel king of Portugal, 957
Quarrell betwixt Pedro Giron, and the Duke of Medina Sidonia, 925
Qualities of Colonell Vilalua, 933
S. Quintins taken by the Spaniards, 1080
Queene Elizabeth conducted into Spaine, 1085
Question of precedence vndecided at Rome, 1010
Quarrell betwixt the Duke of Alba and English, 1137.
Queene of England refuseth to heare the duke of Alba's Ambassador. ibid.

R

RAdages slaine, and his army of Gothes ruined, 130.
Rabatins Christians in Affricke, 166
Don Ramir put out his brothers and his mothers eyes, 200
Race of Cid Ruis Dias, 238
Raymond Berenger Earle of Prouence, father to 4. Queenes. 356
Rashnes of the Earle of Lerin, 883
Religion, a cloake for Tyrants, 7
Religion is naturally reuerenced, whatsoeuer it be, 12
Religion of the ancient Spaniards infamous, 28
Religion receiued with great affection by the Spaniards, 30
Resolution of the two Scipio's. 41
Reward of vertue must not be sought by vitious meanes. 55
Remembrance of great crimes makes men desperate. 66
Resolution of the Astapians Barbarous, 67
Retreate of two Romaines from Palentia, 105
Resolution of Rhetogines the Numantine. 107
Resignation of Bishoprickes reproued, 136
Reward of a lustfull tyrant, 140
Repentance of Leouigilde. 143
Religion the least eare of Conquerors, 168
Reuenge vppon the Toledans for their rebellion, 180.
Rebell punished, 183
Rebellion of the Gouernor of Biscay, 189
Rebellion in the realme of Leon, 205
Rebellion of the sonne against the father, 218
Rewards and punishments maintaine Estates, 223
Religious deedes of Don Sancho the great, 228
Reuenge vnworthie of a royall mind, 233
Rebellions at Toledo draw the king of Castile to beseege it, 250
Reparation of crimes by combate, 263
Reconciliation of the Kings of Castile and Leon, 347.
Realme of Nauarre affected by the Kings of Castile and Arragon, 402 Rebellion in Castile, 359
Reuenge of the death of Conrad of Suabe. 421
Reformation of the king of Arragons house belongs to the Estates, 431
Reuolt in Sardynia, 482
Reuolt in Castile, 485
Rebels of Arragon fauoured by the King of Castile, 523. they are defeated by the king of Arragon, 524 Reformation of the Iurisdiction of the Iustice Maior of Arragon, 524
Reuolt in Sardynia, 525
Reuenues of Churches taken without the Popes permission, 564
Records of Castile burnt, 594
Rebellion of the Earle of Giion. 602
Resolution for the Queene of Nauarre to returne to her husband. 643
Red crosse, the marke of the Order of Calatraua, 659.
Religious houses built by D. Nugno Aluares Pereira, Constable of Portugal, 699
Recompences giuen by the King of Castile to the Lords that followed him, 792
Renee of Aniou chosen King of Arragon, 808
Reformations in Andalusia, 367
Rebellion pacified in Castile. 936
Refusall of iustice cause of great troubles in Spain, 939.
Reconciliation of the Cardinall Ximenes, with the Duke of Infantasgo. 947 Reformation of the Infant Don Fernands house by the Cardinall Ximenes, 953
Rebels defeated in Castile. 962
Returne of the Emperor Charles into Spaine. 967
Rebellion in Maiorca, 968
Religion a cloake for tyrants, 985
Retreat of Barbarossa from Tunes, 991 Rebellion of the Gantois, 1001
Rebellion of Goulette, 1002
Returne of Prince Philip into Spaine, 1035
Resolution of Aluaro de Sands in the fort of Gerbe, 1092
Reasons of the Spaniards for their precedence, 1095, Reasons of the French for their precedence. 1098
Retreat of the Turkes army from Malta, 1118
Resolution in Spaine touching the gouernement of the Low-countries, 1126
Resolution of the Christian armie at Messina, 1163
Ricamed becomes a nurse of the Church, 143
Riches of the Church of Toledo. 252
Rights at the temple at Ierusalem, 267
Rioie and Bureua taken by the Castillans from Nauarre, 321
Richard of England chosen Emperor, 389
Rigour of Don Pedro king of Castile, 556
Rigour of the Spanish Inquisition moderated, 885
Riuer of Plata found by Iohn Dias de Solis, 907 Rights of the Seigneurie of Venice to Cipres, 1158.
Romaines seeke to get footing in Spaine, 35
Resolution of a seruant louing his master, 36
Romanes resolue to warre against the Carthaginians. 38. they are defeated by the Carthaginians 44. they procure them enemies in Affricke, 45. they beseege Auringe, 62. they ioyne with the Carthaginians in battell, 64
Romane Captaines chased out of their campe by their mutined souldiers, 69
Romane Gouernors great exactors, 70
Romanes defeated by the Spaniards, 87. they are charged by the Celtiberians in a streight, 90. they are defeated by the Lusitanians. 97
Rome taken by the Gothes, 121
Romanes assayled by the Sueues in Spaine, and by the Gothes in Gaule, 133
Royalty of the Gothes elective, 146
Roderic a vitious king of the Gothes, 153
Rhodes taken by Muhauias, 163

Romaines chaſed out of Spaine, 166
Roderigo Dias de Biuar a valiant Knight. 238
Rout and death of Don Sancho of Arragon Archbiſhop of Toledo, by the Moores. 409
Robert Sonne to Charles King of Naples put to rout by the Sicilians. 440
Rocke of two Louers, 674
Ruy d' Analos Conſtable of Caſtile charged with treaſon. 685
Roderigo Borgia a Cardinall, 833
Rout of the French army at Noyan. 965
Rome taken and ſackt. 975
Roderigo Portondo ſlaine by Pirats, 979
Rome in danger to be ſackt, 1079

S

SAgunt beſeeged, 37, taken by aſſault, 38
Saguntins reſtored to their goods, 45, they ſend Ambaſſadors to Rome, 79
Saxons and french inuade Spaine, 122
Saraſins why ſo called, 162, they inuade Languedoc, 171
Sancho Abarca King of Nauarre ſlaine by the Caſtillans, 202
Sancho Emperor of Spaine, 226
Sancho King of Caſtile ſlaine, 242
Sancho Ramires king of Arragon ſlaine at the ſeege of Hueſca, 259
Saragoſſa beſeeged and taken by D. Alphonſo 271 ſeazed on by the King of Caſtile. 285
Saluatierra taken by the Moores, 339
Sancho King of Nauarre aydes the King of Caſtile, 340
Sancho King of Portugale why called Capello, 358, he abandons his realme and retiers into Caſtile 378, he is diſpoſſeſt of his realme, 390
Sancho of Caſtile reſolues to diſpoſſeſſe his Nephews of the realme, 410, hee makes a league with the Moores to diſpoſſeſſe his father. 415, he takes vpon him the Regency and refuſeth the title of a King, 416
Saragoſſa made an Arch-biſhoprike, 461
Sardinia inuaded by the Arragonois. 467, it rebells againe, 479
Satiſfaction made by the Emperor to the Duke of Infantaſgo. 1001
Salt water made freſh by a lymbicke. 1091
Sancho d' Auila ſent againſt D. Anthony, 1215
Sarmiento fortefies the ſtraights of Magellan, 1225
Scipio ſent into Spaine, 39
Gn. Scipio and P. Scipio ſlaine and two Romaine armies defeated. 47
P. Corn. Scipio vertuous but an hipocrite, 51. he begins his charge with a greate enterpriſe, 52, hee intreates the Spaniſh hoſtages kindly, 54, hee giues thankes to the Gods for his victories and commends his ſoldiars. 55. he paceſies a great mutinie. ibid. hee ſeekes to win the Spaniards by his bounty, 56, hee incourageth his army to fight. 58, he hateth the title of a King. 59
Sytuation of new Carthage, 33
Scipio relyes not vpon mercenaries as his father had done, 62, hee deceiues Aſdruball by his pollicy, 64, hee beſeegeth Illiturgis, 65, hee rerelolues to vanquiſh or die, 66, hee falls very ſicke, 68, hee makes an inuectiue againſt the mutinous ſoldiars. 70. he prepares to go againſt Mandonius. 72, hee pardons the rebellious Spaniards and returnes to Rome. 75
Scipio Æmilianus ſent into Spaine reformes the army. 106 hee repaires Lucullus faults, 107
Schiſme among the Knights of Calatraua. 526
Schiſme in the Church, 595
Scio taken by the Turke. 1128
Sutes of Iuſtice erected in Spaine by Conſtantine the greate. 24
Seuerity in the auntient Romains commendable, 50
Sedition a miſcheife which doth import Eſtates, 71
Seuerity againſt ſoldiars hauing left their gard, 100
Sertorius warre in Spaine, 109, hee is called by the Luſitanians. 110, he defeates Manlius and kills Domitius ibid. his life is ſet to ſale, which makes him cruell. 111
Seuile yeelds the primacy to Toledo. 148
Sects in Mahomets religion, 164
Sedition in Galicia, 208
Seuile a royall ſeat of the Moores, 213
Seditions, reuolts and vſurpations amongſt the Arabian Princes, 244
Seditions and trecheries among the Moores in Spaine. 253
Sect newly ſprung vp among the Arabians of Affricke. 294
Seuile beſeeged and yeelded to King Fernand, 380
Selga a kind of tribute, 445
Sentence giuen by the King of Caſtile againg Don Diego Lopes de Haro. 448
Sedition in Granado againſt King Mahumet, 460
Sentence giuen by the Pope againſt the Templers, 453 Seals taken from the Arch of Toledo, 470
Seuerity of the King of Caſtile, makes his Knights flie vnto the Moores. 496
Sedition againſt the Iewes in Caſtile, 630
Sentence againſt the Earle of Foix. 661
Sea of Toledo voyde foure yeares, 663
Sedition at Toledo, 738
Seditions in Cattelonia. 768
Seditions rayſed by two Archiſhops vncle and Nephew. 775
Segobia deliuered to the confederate Lords, 800
Seuile ill intreated by the factions of Guzman and Ponce, 867
Seditions reuiued in Nauar, 879
Sedition in Granado. 920
Seege of Granado. 939
Seruant faithfull to King Fernand. 881
Sentence againſt the Earle of Lerin, 883
Sedition at Lisbone for religion, 688

Sedition

Sedition in Cardinall Ximenes campe cauſed by a raſcall, 892
Seditions among the Spaniards at the Weſt Indies, 897.
Sentence giuen by the Pope againſt Iohn of Albret king of Nauarre. 902 Sedition at Vailliodolit againſt Cardinall Ximenes, 929.
Sedition againſt the towne of Villafratre, 949
Secrets of Cardinall Ximenes diſcouered. 953
Seuerity of Cardinall Ximenes, 955
Sect of Ieſuites confirmed at Rome, 963
Sedition at Peru for the gouernement. 1026
Sentence inconſiderate and vniuſt, 1027
D. Sebaſtian king of Portugall goes into Affricke, 1176.
Seruice raſhly performed. 1195
Settuuall taken by the Caſtillans. 1212
Ships ſent out of Caſtile to the Moluccos, 993
Shipwracke of the Emperors fleet at Alger, 1004 Sicily why called Sicania, 6
Sicelus gaue the name to Sicily. ibid.
Singularitie of the riuer of Guadiana, 16
Simplicity of the Romaines, 38
Silence required in a great Captaine, 53
Sillanus defeates the Carthaginians. 61
Simplicitie of the Spaniards. 91
Siſenand Biſhop of Compoſtella, a turbulent man, 210.
Sicily and Naples held by the Normans, 411
Sicilian Euenſong. 420
Seigneuries and rights of the houſe of Lara. 533
Sinceritie of Gonſalo, the great Captaine, 882
Signe of Cardinall Ximenes. 957
Sienna loſeth her libertie, 1041
Shippe-wracke of the great Commanders fleet, 1148
Ships of Spaine caſt away. 1181
Skirmiſh betwixt the Chriſtians and Moores at Gerbe, 1087
Slaughter of Spaniards. 83
Slaughter of Monkes made by the Moores. 212
Snakes in an armie in the dead of Winter. 788
Soueraignes ſhould be Iudges, and not parties in their ſubiects quarrels. 481
Souldiers ſhould be alwaies in action. 81
3. Sunnes ſeene together in Spaine, 174
Sobrarbre and Ribagorſa vnited to the Crowne of Arragon, 234
Sonne diſpoſſeſſeth the father, 1009
South ſea diſcouered by Vaſco Nugnes of Balbao, 914.
Sonne of Aly Baſſa ſet at libertie by Don Iohn, 1173.
Spaine vnknowne before the Carthaginians, 2
Spaniard at the firſt groſſe and without religion, 3
Spaine why ſo called, 5
Spaine like to an Oxe hide, 13
Springs of the riuers of Ebro and Duero, 15
Spaine reduced to one gouernement, 24. it is rampared by nature, 25
Spaniards life ſimple and rude. 28
Spaniſh toung a corrupt Latin. 29
Spaine nouriſheth the hatred betwixt the Romans and Carthaginians, 35
Spaniards inconſtant. 39
Spaine fit to ſupply armes 44
Spaniards being mercenary abandon the Romanes. 46. they are defeated by Scipio and yeeld to his mercie. 73
Spaniards in old time glorious, ambitious, enuious, and trecherous. 77
Spaniards take armes againſt the Pretor. 80. they were alwaies apt to rebell. 83. they complaine of the couetouſneſſe of their Gouernors. 93
Spaine made one gouernement, 94
Spaniards opinion of S. Iames his bodie. 119
Spaine vnder Conſtantine diuided into fiue Proumces. 124
Spies in the king of Nauars Councell. 367
Speech of the King of Caſtile to his Councell. 511
Spoyle of a Iew condemned, 553
Speech of the Biſhop of Calaorra to the king, 781
Speech of the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, too audacious, 849
Spaniards firſt voyage to Guiney, 865
Spaniards defeated at ſea by the Portugals, 874
Speech of Katherine Queene of Nauar to her husband, 904
Spaniards defeated and ſlaine by the Indians, 918
Speech of the Duke of Infantaſgo, 927
Spaniards ſlaine in the riuer of Plata, 922
Speech of King Francis touching his promiſe to the Emperor, 975
Spaniards preſerue their liues generouſly againſt the Affricans. 1005
Speech of the Prince of Spaine to the Duke of Alba, 1134 Speech of Queene Izabella dying, to the King, 1136.
Spaniards of account ſlaine at Galere, 1151
Speech of Bragadino at Famagoſta, 1161
Strangers tyrannize ouer Spaine, 4
Statues ſent by the Pope into Arragon, 662
Stones very light fall from heauen, 713
Statute of Cordoua for the Nobility, 941
Store-houſes for munition in Spaine, 936
Studies of Inigo of Loyola author of the Ieſuites, 963.
Spaniſh ſouldiers deteſt the crueltie of the Marquis of Santa Cruz, 1224
Succeſſion of women in Arragon, 183
Succeſſion of the Realmes of Caſtile and Leon by women. 233
Submiſſion of Don Pedro king of Arragon to the Pope. 333
Superſtitious acknowledgement of a great victory, 512.
Submiſſion of the king of Maiorca, 521
Succeſſe of the warre of Naples, 723
Superſtitions of the Spaniards, 820
Suſpition of loue betwixt the Princeſſe of Nauarre and the Biſhop of Pampelona, 838
Suiſſes come to the warres of Granado. 901
Submiſſion of the Lantgraue to the Emperor, 1017

Suc-

Succors sent from Goa to Diu, 1022
Succors sent to Malta, 1118
Superfluitie of the Portugals going to the warre, 1200.
Succors sent to the Terceres, 1226
Sebastian, the first king of Portugall, 1197. bred vp by the Iesuites. ibid. he is vnfurnished of all things for the warre of Affricke. 1199. his army going thither. 1200. his error and resolution, 1201. his death, 1202. his bodie sent to the Portugals, 1203

T

TArget of siluer a monument of Martius his victorie. 49
Tarassona taken from the Moores. 173
Tarragona giuen in propriety to the Archb. of that place. 277
Tables Astronomical of Don Alphonso king of Castile. 392
Tariffe taken by the Castillans, 434
Tarragona yeelded to the King of Arragon. 771
Taxes vniustly leuied vpon the people, abolished, 836.
Tarassona yeelded to the king of Arragon, 553
Templers beginners of militarie Orders in Christendome. 267
Testament of Don Alphonso King of Nauarre. 281 Testimonies of the preheminence of the Kings of France. 1098
Testament of D. Henry king of Castile. 666
Theft practised by the ancients. 4
Theeues countenanced by princes in old time, 9
Thibaud Earle of Champagne obtaines the realme of *N*auar. 368. he goes into *S*yria. 373
Thibaud the second crowned king of *N*auar, 385
Theatins differ from the Iesuits. 964
Thirst neuer the like heard of in the fort at Gerbe, 1092.
Tenths of fruites the reuenues of Kings. 1184
Tirians did first people Cadiz. 12. they were great sea-men, and made profite of al things. ibid. they were descended from slaues. 32
Tyrannie of the Carthaginians aduanced the Romanes credit in *S*paine. 36
Title of Don first vsed in *S*paine. 174
Tyrannie and vsurpation iustly punished. 187
Tyrants alwayes fearefull, suspitious, and cruell, 195.
Tithes granted to Lay-men. 265
Title of the house of Portugall, 292
Titles of D. Sancho king of Castile, 426
Tiscara a strong place taken from the Moores, 463
Tyrant offended, is neuer truly reconciled, 504
Title of Prince first giuen in Castile to the kings eldest sonne, 615
Title of Earle of Eureux ceaseth in the house of Nauarre, 668
Tyrants care not to be hated, so as they be feared, 692.
Title of Princesse first vsurped by the eldest sonne of Portugall. 706
Titles of Leonora of Nauar, 838
Titles of king Fernand and Queene Izabella, 874 Testament of Xeriffe Mahomet, 1195
Townes in Sardynia, 22
Torismond king of Gothes slaine by his brothers procurement. 134
Toledo chiefe towne of the Gothes kingdome in Spaine, 137
Townes of *S*paine demantled, and the people disarmed by Vitiza, 152
Toledo reduced vnder the Moores of Cordoua, 188. yeelded to D. Alphonso king of Castil, 251
it was called the Imperiall citty. 255
Tortosa taken by the Arragonois. 296
Townes built by Don Fernand king of Leon, 313
Townes and castles taken from the Moores, 375
Townes taken by the Moores, 494
Townes in Castile which giue voyces in the Estates, 527
Townes in Castile yeeld to the King of Nauarre, 574.
Towne of Saint Vincent obtaines new priuiledges 696.
Tortosa yeelded to King Iohn of Arragon. 789
Toledo reuolted, and reduced againe to the Kings obedience, 804 Townes of the Infantasgo giuen to the Marques of Santillana. 824
Toro deliuered to the king of Portugall, 850. beseeged by King Fernand of Arragon, 851. surprzed by the Castillans, 866
Tordesillas taken by the Confederats, 961, recouered againe, 962
Truth the subiect of an Historie. 2
Treasor of Spaine casually discouered, 11
Truce betwixt the Sicilians and Carthaginians, 34 Trechery of Hanno against the *S*enate of Carthage 35.
Trecherie of a Spaniard, 41
Trecherie of the Spaniards to the Carthaginians their allyes, 64
Truth breedes hatred in the wicked. 96
Trecherie and crueltie of Ser. Galba, 98
Treatie made with Viriatus broken by Cepio, 101
Traian a *S*paniard, the third persecutour of the Church, 120
Trecherie of Stillico and defeat of the Impetial armie, 131
Traitors frustrate of their hope, 155
Tribute payed by the Arabians to the Romanes, 165.
Tribute payed by a Christian Prince to Infidels most detestable. 177
Trecherie of a Moore punished. 181
Trecherie of a seruant, 208
Treason and impietie of a Christian Knight against his owne bloud and religion, 214
Treason of a sonne against his mother, 227
Triall by fire in Clergie matters, 255
Treatie of peace betwixt Nauarre and Arragon, 287.
Troubles in the Moores Estate in Affricke by superstitious diuinations, 293

Troubles in Castile by reason of the Kings nonage, 308
Trecherie of D. Manriques de Lara against his Prince and Country, 309
Traytors iustly punished, 362
Troubles in Arragon, 400
Truce betwixt the Christians and Moores, 410
Truce betwixt the French and Arragonois, 433 Troubles raised by D. Henry of Castile, 441
Tribute imposed by the Pope vppon the Realme of Sicily, 455
Troubles and quarrels where there is much idle Nobilitie, 481
Trecherie of Don Alphonso king of Castil against his owne bloud, 483
Truce very beneficiall to the Moores, 496
Treatie of mariage betwixt D. Pedro of Arragon, and D. Maria of Nauar. 503 Troubles by the report of a woman, 508
Trechery of the king of Arragon against the Earle of Transtamara, 556
Treason of Don Roderigo of Vrris punished, 589
Trecherie of Queene Leonora Telles, 599
Treatie of mariage to the preiudice of Castile, 637 Troubles in Zamora, ibid.
Troubles in Arragon, 667
Truce with the king of Granado, 674
Truce betwixt Castile, and the kings of Arragon and Nauar, 698
Troubles in Castile by false reports, 703
Truce betwixt Granado and Castile, 757
Treason discouered but not punished, 780
Treatie of marriage betwixt Izabella of Castile, and Fernand of Arragon, 809
Trecherie of the Earle of Lerin against the Marshal of Nauar. 883
Treatie of peace betwixt France and Spaine, 972
Trecherie of mercenarie Moores, 894
Troubles raysed by the Archb. of Toledo, 825.
Tripoly in Barbary taken by Pedro Nauarro, 897
Truce betwixt France and Spaine, 912
Trauels endured with great patience by the Spaniards, 916
Treatie of Cambray, 979
Tremessen rebels against the Emperor, 1008
Tripoly beseeged by the Christians, 1082
Troubles in the Low-countries, 1126
Trechery a diuellish reuenge, 1135
Treatie of peace with the Mores of Granado, 1153
Trechery of Mustapha at Famagosta, 1162
Treasor brought by Sir Francis Drake out of the south sea, 1181
Tudele taken by the Earle of Perche, 271
Tumult at Badaios, 435
Tumults in Castile for the gouernement, 464
Tumults at Lisbone for their Kings marriage, 584
Turkes make profit of the Iewes banishment, 947
Tumult at Malaga suppreſt, 934
Tunes taken by the Emperor, 991
Turkes repulsed at Diu, 999
Turkes and Moores flie from Oran, 1077
Turkes beseege the fort at Gerbe, 1090
Turkes armie at Malta, 1116
Tumult made in Spaine by the Mores of Granado 1127.
Turkes come to succour the Moores in Spaine, 1149.
Turkes goe to beseege Fez, 1191

V

VAllia the Gothe, a friend to the Romaines, makes warre in Spaine against the Barbarians, 132
Vanity of humane greatnes. 155
Valencia taken by Cid Ruis Diaz, 261
Valour of Cid Ruis Diaz, 241
Valour of Don Alphonso, the noble, king of Castile. 342.
Vanity of the Emperour Fredericke, 375
Valentia taken by the Arragonois, 369
Valenciens mutinous and seditious, 523
Valencia subdued by the K. of Arragon, 524
Vagabond troupes spoile Cattelonia, 620
Vailliodolit submits vnto the king, 794
Vanity of the King of Portugall, 857
Viana surprized by the marshall of Nauarre, 879
Vasco de Gama sayles to Calicut, 958
Vasco Nugnes of Balbao beheaded at Darien, 919
Valette a new towne built in the Iland of Malta, 1119.
Vertue giues to euery one his due reward, 57
Vertue alwaies enuied, 110
Vertue not alwaies hereditarie, 172
Vertue reuerenced euen by enemies. 207
Vertue of Don Ramir the bastard of Nauar, 227
Vertues of king D. Alphonso the eight. 278
Vertues of D. Charles Prince of Nauar, 741
Velez Malaga beseeged by King Fernand, 921
Venetians defeated by the Spaniards, 916
Veniero the Venetian General incensed against the Spanish souldiers. 1167
Victorie of great consequence for the Romanes, 43
Vice and corruption abounds, where strangers abide. 77
Victorie gotten by the Pretor Heluius. 81
Victorie of Scipio against the Lusitanians, 85
Victorie of Ful. Flaccus against the Celtiberians, 89.
Viriatus Captaine of the Lusitanians defeates Vitellius. 98. he is defeated by Q. Fab. Max. 99. he is fauoured by the Senate of Rome. 101. he is trecherously murthered and lamented by his souldiers. ibid.
Victorie admirable and almost incredible, 143
Vitiza a vitious king, his eyes put out by Rodericke 153.
Victorie of the Christians against the Moores, 170
Vices of Princes causes of sedition, 211
Victoria in Alaua built, 323. taken by the King of Castile. 336 Victories of the christians at sea against the Mores, 515.
Victorie of the Castillans at sea, 659
Viceroy of Valencia slaine by the trecherie of his owne brother. 672

Viana beſeeged by the D. of Valentinois, 883 Victory of Rauenna vnprofitable for the French. 903.
Victory of D. Berenguela againſt the Turke, 939
Victory of the Portugals at ſea, 1024
Vices common to young Noblemen, 1122
Victorie of the Chriſtians. 1169
Vnion of Leon and Caſtile, 231
Vniuerſity of Salamanca, 375
Vnion in Arragon againſt the King for their liberties. 422
Vniuerſity of Palence, 338
Vncle bawde to his neece, 533
Vnction of the king of Nauarre. 626
Vnion of all the townes of Guipuſcoa, 636
Vnchaſtnes of Ioane the 2. Queene of Naples, 686
Vnion of the Prouinces and Commonalties in Caſtile for the adminiſtration of iuſtice, 789
Vnion of Caſtile and Arragon, 876
Vnion of Caſtile and Nauarre by conqueſt, 905
Vniuerſity of Coimbra erected, 977
Vniuerſity of Tudele erected in Nauar, 1111
Voyage of D. Ioane of Caſtile into Flanders, 955
Voyages made to the Indies. 906
Voyage of Lopes Suares de Meneſes to the Eaſt Indies, 971
Voyage of Fernand Magellanes to the Moluques, 976.
Voyage of Sebaſtian del Cano., 978 Voyage of the Caſtillans to the Moluques vntortunate, ibid.
Voyage of Sir Francis Drake into the ſouth ſea, 1180.
Vſurpations of the king of Caſtil vpon Nauar, 238
Vſurpations of D. Alphonſo king of Caſtile, 248
Vſurpations vppon the Clergie in Caſtile, 622

W

VVArre to deliuer the oppreſſed, iuſt, 4
Warre made in Sicily by the Carthaginians, 34
Warre in Spaine betwixt the Vandales and Sueues, 133.
Warre for religion betwixt the French and the Vice-Gothes, 136
War betwixt two breethren Moores, 177
Warre betwixt Nauarre and Caſtile for an iniurie done to the Ambaſſadors of Caſtile, 202
War betwixt the Moores, 212
War betwixt Nauar and Caſtile, 237
War betwixt 3. breethren, ſonnes to Don Fernand King of Caſtile, 241
War betwixt the mother and the ſonne in Portugall, 276 War betwixt Nauar and Arragon, 286
War betwixt the king of Leon and his mother-in-law, 337
War in Valencia againſt the Moores, 368
War made by Caſtile and Arragon againſt Granado, 454
War betwixt Nauar and Caſtile, 499
War made in Caſtile by the rebels, 504
War made by Portugall againſt Caſtile, 505
War made by D. Henry king of Caſtile againſt the King of Portugall, 579
War in Sardynia, 581
War betwixt Caſtile and Nauar, 593
War againſt the Earle of Giion, 648
War made by the King of Caſtile againſt Arragon and Nauarre, 694
Warrant to apprehend the Conſtable, 745
War of Vcles againſt the Marquis of Villena, 864
War betwixt the French and Spaniards, 954
War renewed by the perſecuted Moores, 964
War againſt the Conſtable of Lerin, 886
War betwixt France and Spaine, 899
War betwixt the French and the Emperor, 1005
Wiſedome of the Romanes in matters of ſtate. 85
Wiſedome neceſſary in a Prince to chooſe men of valour, 661
Wonders of the mountaine of Stella, 15
Women in Spaine warriors and valiant, 104
Workes of piety of D. Alphonſo, 188
Women Moores maſſacred, 1151
War renued with the Moores of Granado, 1154
War denounced by the Turke againſt the Venetians, 1157

X

XEriffs Kings of Marocco, and their beginning, 1182.
Xeriffe Mahumet Ben Hamet makes himſelfe Lord of Turedant, 1183 Xeriffs his ſonnes ſeize vpon Marocco by treaſon ibid.
Xeriffs breethren, in quarrell betwixt themſelues, 1185.
Xeriffe Mahomet defeates his elder brother, 1186 they are reconciled. ibid.
Xeriffe Hamet breakes the peace made with his brother, ibid.
Xeriffe Mahomets ſpeech to his brother, 1187. his ſpeech to the King of Fez, 1188. he is forced to flie out of Fez, 1191. hee recouers Fez againe, 1193. he is murthered, 1194. his teſtament, ibi.
Xeriffe Mahomet ſonne to Abdalla, beeing expelled, flies to King Philip for ſuccor, 1198. hee craues ayde from Portugall. ibid.

Z

ZAmora taken and ruined, 210. made a Biſhoppricke. 278
Zeit a Mooriſh King baptized, 368
Zamora in the power of the King of Portugal, 850
Zahara ſurprized by the Chriſtians. 902
Zeale inconſiderate in Charles Prince of Spaine, 1133.

FINIS.

Excuſe theſe groſſe miſpriſions, and for the reſt I put my ſelfe to your fauorable conſtruction. Fol. 325. lin. 48. for daughter, reade wife. f. 859 l. 21. for, ſuffered the Portugals to take it, read, ſuffered it to be taken from the Portugals. In the marg. fol. 273. for delectable, r. deteſtable. fol. 1144. r. by the Moores. f. 889. l. 13. for, her husband, read, her ſonne.